START

Microfilmed By:

NORTHEAST DOCUMENT
CONSERVATION CENTER
Andover, MA 01810

DECEMBER 1993

Camera Operator:
Kathy Wilder

MASTER NEGATIVE NUMBER:
BSO-56-007

MICROFILMED
August 1993 - April 1994

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOK MICROFILMING PROJECT

Funded in part by

THE NATIONAL ENDOWMENT FOR THE HUMANITIES

Grant No. PS-20709-93

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MICROFILMING PROJECT

A Cooperative Project Between the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives and the Boston Public Library
(August 1993 - April 1994)

The Microfilming Project incorporates two collections of scrapbooks housed in two separate repositories. The first set of scrapbooks (80 volumes) resides within the Allen A. Brown Collection of the Boston Public Library (BPL) Music Department. Their call number is M.125.5. The second set of scrapbooks (132 volumes) resides within the Press Clippings collection of the Boston Symphony Orchestra (BSO) Archives. They have the designation Pres 56.

The BPL scrapbooks begin with the founding of the BSO in 1881 and continue, through 79 seasons, to 1960. Articles consist mainly of reviews and feature stories from Boston and New York newspapers. Occasionally, magazine articles and press releases are also included. The scrapbooks cover most aspects of the BSO.

The BSO scrapbooks run from 1889, the Orchestra's 9th season, to 1973. In addition to local reviews and features, the volumes contain articles culled from national and international publications. The scrapbooks document, in detail, all aspects of the BSO: The Symphony Orchestra (including subscription concerts, tours, and trips), the Boston Pops, the Tanglewood Festival, the Tanglewood Music Center, and Symphony Hall.

The two sets of scrapbooks have been filmed as two separate entities. Researchers wanting to look at specific seasons or subjects must examine both sets of films to ensure full coverage.

The scrapbooks do not represent the complete holdings of either location on the subject of the BSO.

Requests for positive microfilm copies of individual rolls, or of film sets, should be directed to the respective repository:

Music Department
Boston Public Library
Post Office Box 286
Boston, MA 02117

Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives
Symphony Hall
Boston, MA 02115

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA SCRAPBOOKS

1889 - 1973

132 VOLUMES

Source: Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives

FINDING AID

Boston Symphony Orchestra Scrapbooks (Series 56, Sub-Series 1)

Source: Press Office (Office of the Public Relations Director)

The BSO scrapbooks comprise part of one series in the BSO Archives. Series 56, Press Clippings, is divided by format into 3 sub-series: 1) Scrapbooks, 1889-1973 (132 volumes); 2) Loose Clippings, 1931-1991 (9 record cartons); and 3) Oversize Newspapers and Journals, 1919-1979 (1 oversize box). Each sub-series is arranged chronologically.

The scrapbooks contain concert notices and reviews, record reviews, and feature articles. Early scrapbooks may also contain programs, tickets, and subscription orders. Materials are organized by concert season into the following categories: BSO (including tours); Kneisel Quartet (and later Boston Symphony Chamber Players); Boston Pops (referred to in early years as Promenade concerts); and Tanglewood (including the Tanglewood Music Center, the Tanglewood Festival, Tanglewood-on-Parade, and the Fromm Festival of Contemporary Music).

Reviews and articles cover a wide range of subjects: Founder H.L. Higginson; BSO conductors, players, trustees, and other personnel; guest artists and composers; BSO and Pops performances and recordings; U.S. and overseas tours; BSO/Cecilia Society joint performances; open rehearsals; and special events connected to anniversary celebrations and fundraising.

Feature stories document changes in the size, composition, and location of the orchestra. Topics include the hiring of women and minorities; the unionization of players; controversies (such as the internment of conductor Karl Muck during World War II); the sale of the old Music Hall; and the construction of Symphony Hall and other structures (such as the Koussevitsky Music Shed at Tanglewood).

Reproductions of the materials in the collection may not be made without permission from the Boston Symphony Orchestra Archives.

GUIDE TO CONTENTS

Institution: BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Series Name: PRESS CLIPPINGS
Series Number: 56
Series Dates: 1889-1991

Sub-series Name: SCRAPBOOKS
Sub-series Number: 1
Sub-series Dates: 1889-1973

VOLUME LISTING

VOL	TITLE	DATES
1	BSO	1889-1890
2	BSO
	Kneisel Quartet	1890-1891
3	BSO	1891-1892
4	Promenade (Pops)	1892
5	BSO
	Kneisel Quartet	1892-1893
6	BSO
	Kneisel Quartet	1893-1894
7	BSO
	Kneisel Quartet	1894-1895
8	BSO	1895-1896
9	Promenade (Pops)	1895-1896
10	BSO	1896-1897
11	BSO	1897-1898
12	Promenade (Pops)	1897-1898
13	BSO	1898-1899
14	BSO	1899-1900
15	Pops	1899-1900
16	BSO	1900-1901
17	BSO	1901-1902
18	Pops	1901-1903
19	BSO	1902-1903
20	BSO	1903-1904
21	BSO	1904-1905
22	Pops	1904-1905
23	BSO	1905-1906
24	BSO	1906-1907
25	BSO	1907-1908
26	BSO	1908-1909
27	BSO
	Pops	1909-1910
28	BSO
	Pops	1910-1911
29	BSO Advertisements	1910-1911
30	BSO
	Pops	1911-1912
31	BSO
	Pops	1912-1913
32	BSO
	Pops	1913-1914
33	BSO
	Pops	1914-1915
34	BSO
	Pops	1915-1916
35	BSO
	Pops	1916-1917
36	BSO
	Pops	1917-1918
37	Karl Muck	1918
38	BSO
	Pops	1918-1919
39	BSO
	Pops	1919-1920
40	BSO Advertisements	1919-1920
41	BSO
	Pops	1920-1921
42	BSO
	Pops	1921-1922
43	BSO
	BSO Advertisements
	Pops Advertisements	1922-1923
44	BSO
	Pops	1922-1924
45	BSO
	Pops	1924
46	BSO
	BSO Advertisements
	Pops Advertisements	1924-1926
47	BSO
	Pops	1925-1926
48	BSO Advertisements
	Pops Advertisements	1926-1927
49	BSO
	Pops	1926-1928
50	BSO	1928
51	BSO
	Pops	1928-1929
52	BSO
	Pops
	U.S. Tour	1929-1930
53	BSO	1930-1931
54	BSO
	Pops	1931-1932
55	BSO
	Pops	1932-1933
56	BSO	1933-1934
57	BSO	1934-1935
58	BSO	1935-1936
59	BSO	1936-1937

VOL	TITLE	DATES
60	Pops Tanglewood	1936-1937
61	BSO	1937
62	BSO	1937-1938
63	Pops Tanglewood	1938
64	BSO	1938-1939
65	Pops Tanglewood	1939
66	BSO	1939-1940
67	Tanglewood	1939-1941
68	BSO Pops	1940
69	BSO	1940-1941
70	Tanglewood	1940-1944
71	BSO	1941-1942
72	BSO	1942-1943
73	BSO	1943-1944
74	BSO Pops Tanglewood	1944-1945
75	BSO Pops Tanglewood	1945-1946
76	BSO Pops Tanglewood	1946-1947
77	Tanglewood	1947-1948
78	BSO	1947-1949
79	Tanglewood	1949-1950
80	BSO	1949-1951
81	Tanglewood	1950-1951
82	BSO Pops	1951-1952
83	BSO Pops	1952-1953
84	Tanglewood	1952-1953
85	BSO	1953-1955
86	Tanglewood	1953-1954
87	Tanglewood	1954-1955
88	BSO Pops	1955-1956
89	Tanglewood	1955-1956
90	Tanglewood	1955-1956
91	European Tour	1956
92	European Tour	1956-1957
93	BSO Pops	1956-1957
94	Tanglewood	1957
95	BSO	1957-1958
96	BSO Pops	1958-1959
97	BSO	1958-1959
98	Tanglewood	1958-1959
99	Tanglewood	1959
100	BSO Pops	1959-1960
101	Tanglewood	1959-1960
102	Far Eastern Tour	1959-1960
103	BSO Pops	1960-1961
104	Tanglewood	1961
105	BSO Pops	1961-1962
106	Tanglewood	1962
107	BSO Pops	1962-1963
108	Tanglewood	1963
109	BSO Pops	1963-1964
110	Tanglewood	1963-1964
111	BSO Pops	1964-1966
112	Tanglewood	1965
113	BSO 85th Anniversary	1965
114	BSO Pops	1965-1966
115	Tanglewood	1966
116	BSO Pops	1966-1967
117	Tanglewood	1967
118	BSO Pops	1967-1968
119	Tanglewood	1968-1969
120	BSO Pops	1968-1969
121	Tanglewood	1969
122	BSO Pops	1969-1970
123	Tanglewood	1970
124	BSO Pops	1970-1971
125	Tanglewood	1971
126	BSO Pops	1971-1972
127	European Tour	1970-1971
128	European Tour	1971
129	Tanglewood	1972
130	BSO Pops	1972-1973
131	Tanglewood	1973
132	BSO Pops	1973-1974

MATERIALS NOT FILMED

SUB-SERIES NUMBER	SUB-SERIES NAME	SUB-SERIES DATES
2	Loose Clippings	1931-1991
3	Oversize Newspapers and Journals	1919-1979

COPYRIGHT STATEMENT

The copyright law of the Unites States - Title 17, United States Code - concerns the making of photocopies or other reproductions of copyrighted material.

Under certain conditions specified in the law, libraries and archives are authorized to furnish a photocopy or other reproduction. One of these specified conditions is that the photocopy or other reproduction is not to be "used for any purpose other than private study, scholarship, or research." If a user makes a request for, or later uses, a photocopy or reproduction for purposes in excess of "fair use," that user may be liable for copyright infringement.

This institution reserves the right to refuse to accept a copy order if, in its judgment, fulfillment of the order would involve violation of the copyright law.

TECHNICAL DATA

IMAGE PLACEMENT: [✓ IA] IB IIA IIB

REDUCTION RATION: 12X

FILM STOCK:

Kodak
IMAGELINK™ HQ
MICROFILM
35 mm x 30.5 m · 100 ft
Sp 425
DEVELOP BEFORE 07/1995
1461-0325-012-02
CAT 840 3594
19-03

REEL 7

Volume 12-14

Promenade
1897-1898 to BSO
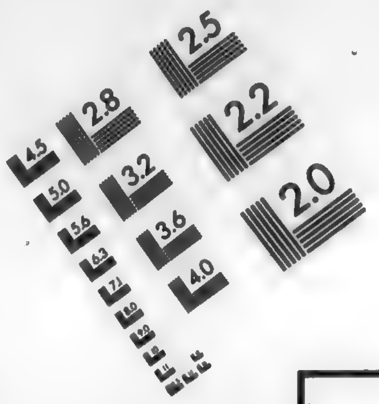
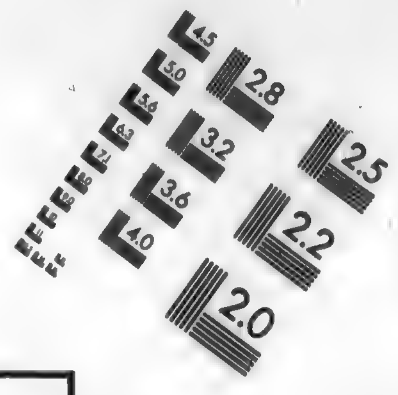
1899-1900

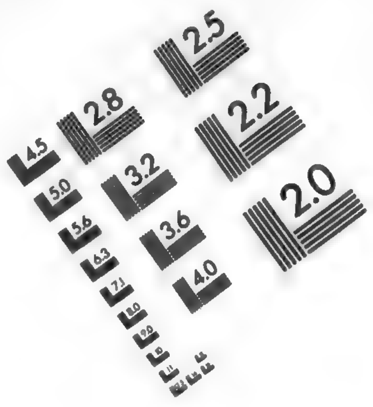
2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

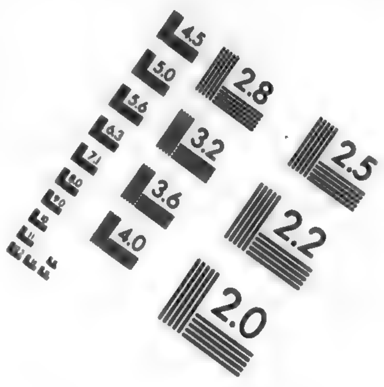
1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



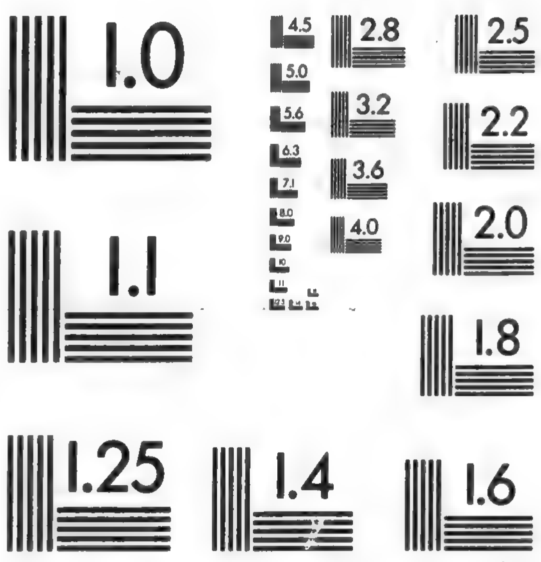






150 mm

100 mm



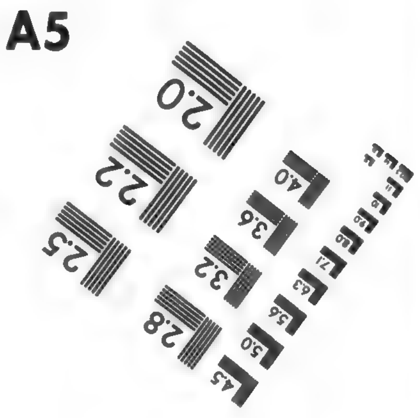
1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

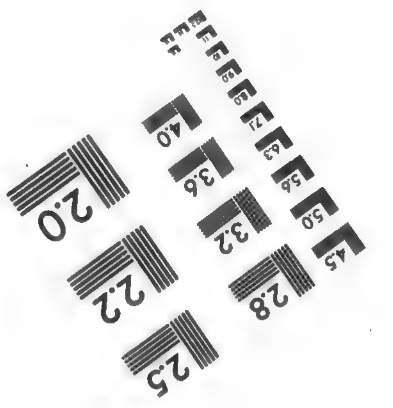
1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

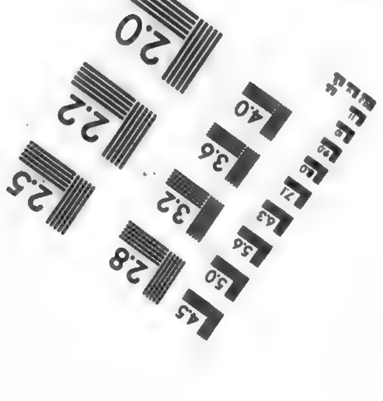
2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

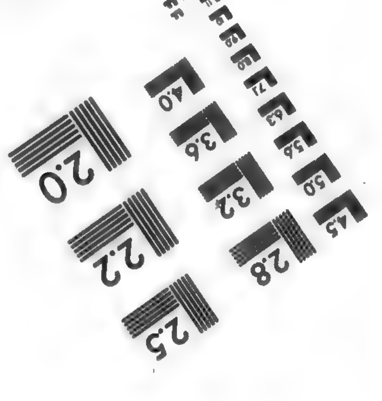
A5





A4





PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

MULTIPLE EXPOSURES
DUE TO COLOR VARIATIONS
AND OVERLAPPING MATERIAL

VOLUME 12

Promenade (Pops)

1897 - 1898

SHIPMAN'S
Invoice & Scrap
BOOK

Queen's Hall

Promenade
Programmes

1897

[2]

Boston Transcript

PROMENADES BEGIN NEXT WEEK

Two Conductors Will Divide the Leadership During the Eight Weeks' Season—Many Novelties Promised.

One week from tonight the twelfth season of Promenade Concerts will begin at Music Hall, and the opening of this series of popular entertainments will mark the beginning of the summer musical season. Mr. C. A. Ellis, the manager, sailed for Europe on Saturday on board the Umbria, accompanied by his brother, and, as usual, the [illegible] management of the concerts will be in the hands of Mr. Frederick R. Comee, than whom no better man could be found. His success in past years in giving the public such enjoyable entertainment for the early summer evenings is evidence of his full understanding of what people like best at this time of the year. A peculiar feature of the promenades is the fact that they are enjoyed by hundreds of people who do not care for classical concerts and who could not, perhaps, be induced to attend even one symphony concert. Such folk, however, enjoy to the fullest extent at the promenades the same selections by leading composers which frequently have a place on a symphony programme. Again, regular patrons of the symphony and other high-class concerts appear to have genuine pleasure in listening to selections which they have heard during the winter season, and these people also show their appreciation of the lighter class of music which is provided at the popular concerts.

It was during the season when John C. Mullaly was conductor that the bold experiment of giving what may be considered as "heavy" music, as it is understood by [illegible] people, was first tried. With some of the Wagner overtures and similar selections he created among the patrons a strong liking for that class of music, and when such numbers were given there was left no doubt as to the wisdom of the experiment. Closer attention was then paid to music of the severe order than to that of a mere frivolous character, and this respect and liking for the best compositions has been strengthened with each new season of promenades. In the class of light music, probably the favorite selections are oftener found in selections from well-known popular operas than in other pieces.

In the past seasons of these concerts there have been several conductors, among them being Ad. Neuendorff, Mr. Mullaly, Wilhelm Rietzel, E. Gruenberg, Franz Kneisel, A. de Novellis, T. Adamowski and Max Zach. All these conductors have been members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the exceptions of Mr. Neuendorff and Mr. de Novellis. This season there are to be fifty musicians, chosen from the Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Zach is to be the leader for the first four weeks of the season and Mr. Leo Schultz, who sits at the first desk of the 'cello players in the symphony ranks, is to be the conductor during the remaining four weeks.

There will be no special attempt made to decorate the hall elaborately other than the usual means of employing festoons of laurel mingled with a bit of red drapery on the fronts of the balconies. There also will be some green about the stage as a background to relieve the customary bare look in that part of the hall, and the ceiling will be treated in a simple way.

The same system of a general admission at a low price and with reserved seats and tables, and others open to all, will be in force this season as in other years. So great has grown the demand for reserved tables that Manager Comee will add a moderate number of these to the "ring," as it is popularly known. The refreshments to be served will be about on a line with the larder of other seasons.

The programme for the opening concert on May 10 is as follows:

Marche Hongroise, from "The Damnation of Faust."	Berlioz
Overture, "Le Roi l'a dit"	Delibes
(First time.)
Waltz, "Snowballs"	Ziehrer
(First time.)
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
(First time.)
Ballet music, "Feramors"	Rubinstein
I. Dance of Bayadères.
II. Candle Dance of the Brides of Kashmire.
Prelude to act III. of "The Cricket on the Hearth,"	Goldmark
(First time at these concerts.)
La Colombe	Gounod
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg,"	Wagner
Entrée Triomphale des Boyards	Halvorsen
Overture, "Pique Dame"	Suppé
Waltz, "Artists' Life"	Strauss
March, "Austria"	Zach

It will be seen that this includes four of what are called "first-time" selections. A specialty will be made of these novelties all through the season. During the opening week several other numbers will be introduced for the first time in Boston.

Equally good programmes have been arranged for all the nights of the first week. Among some of the overtures to be played in that time will be that to "Oberon," Weber; "Barber of Seville," Rossini; "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; "Martha," Flotow; "Tannhäuser," Wagner; "Fra Diavolo," Auber; "Zampa," Herold; "Mignon," A. Thomas; and "Rienzi," Wagner. These alone constitute no small undertaking, and with them there will be many other fine selections during the first evenings of the series. Some of the other good things promised are selections from "Lohengrin," "Faust," "Il Trovatore," "Queen of Sheba," "Valkyrie," "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Sylvia," "Carmen," Hungarian dances by Brahms, a polonaise by Liszt, the "Peer Gynt" suite of Grieg, Massenet's "Le Dernier Sommeil de la Vierge," Slavonic dances by Dvorak "Hymn to St. Cecilia," Gounod, and many other enjoyable numbers, including the lighter music selections from "La Fille de Madame Angot," "The Mandarin," De Koven's new opera; "La Grande Duchesse," "The Gypsy Baron," "Poor Jonathan," "El Capitan," "Robin Hood," several Strauss and Waldteufel waltzes, marches and other popular music. All these varied selections have been given places in the programmes of the first week, and a general treat is thus in store for music lovers.

Regular patrons of these concerts will be much interested in the first playing this season of the famous "Grubenlichter," the waltz by Zeller, which was the most popular number played all through last year. It will have its initial hearing this season on the first Saturday evening, and other numbers to be played that same evening include "The Wizard of the Nile," Herbert; overture to "Mignon," A. Thomas; "Espana," waltz, Waldteufel; "Robin Hood," De Koven; ballet music from "Sylvia," Delibes; "Hymn to St Cecilia," Gounod, with violin solo part; "Graceful Dance," Sullivan; overture, "Rienzi," Wagner; selections from "Carmen," Bizet. Besides these there will be one or two other numbers of less importance. A programme embracing so many enjoyable things in one evening has rarely been offered at these promenade concerts.

Herald May 2

MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Monday evening, May 10, the Music Hall promenade concerts will begin their 12th season. These concerts will be conducted upon the same general plan as in the past. The orchestra will be made up of 50 musicians, selected from the ranks of the Boston Symphony orchestra. In fact, these concerts are a natural summer sequence to the Symphony concerts, and are attended by the regular Symphony patrons, as well as by a host of others who prefer programmes of light music; performed, however, on the same high plane of excellence maintained by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

There will be two conductors, Mr. Max Zach, who will conduct the first half of the season, and Mr. Leo Schulz, who will conduct the last half. Mr. Zach will be very pleasantly remembered as the conductor of last season's concerts, establishing himself as a universal favorite. Mr. Leo Schultz, like Mr. Zach, is a member of the Boston Symphony orchestra, playing at the first desk of the 'cellists, with Mr. Alvin Schroeder. The patrons of these concerts will easily recall Mr. Shurlz as having conducted last season his own compositions, the Columbian march and Patriotic overture, on different occasions. Mr. Schulz is the seventh member of the Boston Symphony orchestra to hold the position of conductor of these concerts, and is eminently qualified to take rank with those who have preceded him.

Some novel features in decorations will be introduced. A slight increase will be made in the number of reserved tables on the floor hall, in deference to the very general demand on the part of disappointed applicants last season; but there will be the same generous provision in the shape of unreserved tables for the purchasers of the regular admission tickets. All the side seats in the first balcony will be reserved for patrons who do not care to sit at the tables, and the entire second balcony, like the unreserved tables on the floor, will be open to any one.

Mr. Zach has already made the programmes for the first week, and has shown a very commendable effort to introduce new selections, which, it is to be hoped, will prove as popular as the old-time favorites, which will, of course, be repeated. Every effort will be made to maintain the same high standard of these concerts as in the past. In the absence of Manager Charles A. Ellis in Europe, the concerts will be under the direction of Assistant Manager F. R. Comee.

It is good news to hear that the Pops at the Music Hall, under Mr. F. R. Comee's able management, will open on Monday, May 10. A new departure will be taken this year in the way of two conductors. The first half of the season the orchestra will be under the baton of Mr. Max Zach, who led last year's concerts, and Mr. Leo Schutz, the 'cellist, will conduct the other half. Mr. Schutz sits at the first desk with Mr. Schroader in the orchestra, it will be remembered, and is a thorough musician. The concerts will be on the same general plan as last year, and there is every reason to predict that they will be quite as popular and well attended.

Mr. C. A. Ellis, who formerly had the management of the Pops, sailed from New York on the Umbria May 1. He was acompanied by his brother, Mr. G. H. Ellis.

THE BOSTON
SATURDAY EVENING
Gazette

BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 9.

On Monday evening the long-expected "Pops" are to begin, which means that there will be a series of delightful promenade concerts given at Music Hall, with Mr. Max Zach as conductor. These concerts are regarded as an essential portion of our musical season, and now, as always, they will be patronized by lovers of good, light music, and who can listen to it in delightful ease and comfort. Mr. Zach's orchestra consists of 50 picked musicians.

THE BOSTON TIMES

BOSTON, SUNDAY, MAY 9, 1897.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The Twelfth Season of These Favorite Entertainments Will Begin Tomorrow.

Music hall, beginning tomorrow night, will again take on its refreshing summer atmosphere and be the scene, for the twelfth season, of that favorite entertainment known as the Promenade, or Popular concerts. As usual, these concerts will be under the management of Mr. C. A. Ellis, while Mr. Frederick R. Comee, the assistant manager, will have them in actual charge during Mr. Ellis's absence in Europe,—and Mr. Comee's success at the same post in past seasons is assurance to the public that the concerts will be a pleasure and a delight.

This season there are to be fifty musicians, chosen from the Symphony orchestra. Mr. Zach is to be the leader for the first four weeks of the season and Mr. Leo Schultz, who sits at the first desk of the 'cello players in the symphony ranks, is to be the conductor during the remaining four weeks.

There will be no special attempt made to decorate the hall elaborately other than the usual means of employing festoons of laurel mingled with a bit of red drapery on the fronts of the balconies. There also will be some green about the stage as a background to relieve the customary bare look in that part of the hall, and the ceiling will be treated in a simple way.

The same system of a general admission at a low price and with reserved seats and tables, and others open to all, will be in force this season as in other years. So great has grown the demand for reserved tables that Manager Comee will add a moderate number of these to the "ring," as it is popularly known. The refreshments to be served will be about on a line with the larder of other seasons.

The programme for the opening concert tomorrow evening is as follows:

Marche Hongroise, from "The Damnation of Faust"	Berlioz
Overture, "Le Roi l'a dit"	Delibes
(First time.)
Waltz, "Snowballs"	Ziehrer
(First time)
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
(First time)
Ballet music, "Feramors"	Rubinstein
Dance of Bayaderes.
Candle Dance of the Brides of Kashmire.
Prelude to Act III. of "The Cricket on the Hearth"	Goldmark
First time at these concerts.
La Colombe	Gounod
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg"	Wagner
Entree Triomphale des Boyards	Halvorsen
Overture, "Pique Dame"	Suppe
Waltz, "Artis s' Life"	Strauss
March, "Austria"	Zach

It will be seen that this includes four of what are called "first-time" selections. A specialty will be made of these novelties all through the season. During the opening week several other numbers will be introduced for the first time in Boston.

Equally good programmes have been arranged for all the nights of the first week. Among some of the overtures to be played in that time will be that to "Oberon," Weber; "Barber of Seville," Rossini; "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicholai; "Martha," Flotow; "Tannhauser," Wagner; "Fra Diavolo," Auber; "Zampa," Herold; "Mignon," A. Thomas, and "Rienzi," Wagner. These alone constitute no small undertaking, and with them there will be many other fine selections during the first evenings of the series.

THE BOSTON COMMERCIAL.

SATURDAY, MAY 8, 1897.

The Pop Concerts.

On Monday evening next the 12th season of the Music Hall Promenade Concerts will commence, and everything points to a successful season under the management of Assistant Manager Comee. Conducter Zach has already made the programs for the first week, and every assurance is given that the musical standard of these concerts will be maintained on the same high plane as heretofore.

The number of reserved tables on the floor of the hall will be slightly increased in answer to the very general request on the part of many patrons who were unable to secure choice places last season. There will also be the same liberal provision in the way of unreserved tables for the purchasers of regular admission tickets. All the side seats in the first balcony will be reserved for patrons who do not wish to sit at the tables, and the entire second balcony, like the unreserved tables on the floor, will be open to any one paying an admission fee.

[3]

Boston Transcript

PROMENADES BEGIN NEXT WEEK

Two Conductors Will Divide the Leadership During the Eight Weeks' Season—Many Novelties Promised.

One week from tonight the twelfth season of Promenade Concerts will begin at Music Hall, and the opening of this series of popular entertainments will mark the beginning of the summer musical season. Mr. C. A. Ellis, the manager, sailed for Europe on Saturday on board the Umbria, accompanied by his brother, and, as usual, the real management of the concerts will be in the hands of Mr. Frederick R. Comee, than whom no better man could be found. His success in past years in giving the public such enjoyable entertainment for the early summer evenings is evidence of his full understanding of what people like best at this time of the year. A peculiar feature of the promenades is the fact that they are enjoyed by hundreds of people who do not care for classical concerts and who could not, perhaps, be induced to attend even one symphony concert. Such folk, however, enjoy to the fullest extent at the promenades the same selections by leading composers which frequently have a place on a symphony programme. Again, regular patrons of the symphony and other high-class concerts appear to have genuine pleasure in listening to selections which they have heard during the winter season, and these people also show their appreciation of the lighter class of music which is provided at the popular concerts.

It was during the season when John C. Mullaly was conductor that the bold experiment of giving what may be considered as "heavy" music, as it is understood by many people, was first tried. With some of the Wagner overtures and similar selections he created among the patrons a strong liking for that class of music, and when such numbers were given there was left no doubt as to the wisdom of the experiment. Closer attention was then paid to music of the severe order than to that of a more frivolous character, and this respect and liking for the best compositions has been strengthened with each new season of promenades. In the class of light music, probably the favorite selections are oftener found in selections from well-known popular operas than in other pieces.

In the past seasons of these concerts there have been several conductors, among them being Ad. Neuendorff, Mr. Mullaly, Wilhelm Rietzel, E. Gruenberg, Franz Kneisel, A. de Novellis, T. Adamowski and Max Zach. All these conductors have been members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the exceptions of Mr. Neuendorff and Mr. de Novellis. This season there are to be fifty musicians, chosen from the Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Zach is to be the leader for the first four weeks of the season and Mr. Leo Schultz, who sits at the first desk of the 'cello players in the symphony ranks, is to be the conductor during the remaining four weeks.

There will be no special attempt made to decorate the hall elaborately other than the usual means of employing festoons of laurel mingled with a bit of red drapery on the fronts of the balconies. There also will be some green about the stage as a background to relieve the customary bare look in that part of the hall, and the ceiling will be treated in a simple way.

The same system of a general admission at a low price and with reserved seats and tables, and others open to all, will be in force this season as in other years. So great has grown the demand for reserved tables that Manager Comee will add a moderate number of these to the "ring," as it is popularly known. The refreshments to be served will be about on a line with the larder of other seasons.

The programme for the opening concert on May 10 is as follows:

Marche Hongroise, from "The Damnation of Faust,"	Berlioz
Overture, "Le Roi l'a dit"	Delibes
(First time.)
Waltz. "Snowballs"	Ziehrer
(First time.)
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
(First time.)
Ballet music, "Feramors"	Rubinstein
I. Dance of Bayadères.
II. Candle Dance of the Brides of Kashmire.
Prelude to act iii. of "The Cricket on the Hearth,"	Goldmark
(First time at these concerts.)
La Colombe	Gounod
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg,"	Wagner
Entrée Triomphale des Boyards	Halvorsen
Overture, "Pique Dame"	Suppé
Waltz, "Artists' Life"	Strauss
March, "Austria"	Zach

It will be seen that this includes four of what are called "first-time" selections. A specialty will be made of these novelties all through the season. During the opening week several other numbers will be introduced for the first time in Boston.

Equally good programmes have been arranged for all the nights of the first week. Among some of the overtures to be played in that time will be that to "Oberon," Weber; "Barber of Seville," Rossini; "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; "Martha," Flotow; "Tannhäuser," Wagner; "Fra Diavolo," Auber; "Zampa," Herold; "Mignon," A. Thomas; and "Rienzi," Wagner. These alone constitute no small undertaking, and with them there will be many other fine selections during the first evenings of the series. Some of the other good things promised are selections from "Lohengrin," "Faust," "Il Trovatore," "Queen of Sheba," "Valkyrie," "Cavalleria Rusticana," "Sylvia," "Carmen," Hungarian dances by Brahms, a polonaise by Liszt, the "Peer Gynt" suite of Grieg, Massenet's "Le Dernier Sommeil de la Vierge," Slavonic dances by Dvorak "Hymn to St. Cecilia," Gounod, and many other enjoyable numbers, including the lighter music selections from "La Fille de Madame Angot," "The Mandarin," De Koven's new opera; "La Grande Duchesse," "The Gypsy Baron," "Poor Jonathan," "El Capitan," "Robin Hood," several Strauss and Waldteufel waltzes, marches and other popular music. All these varied selections have been given places in the programmes of the first week, and a genuine treat is thus in store for music lovers.

Regular patrons of these concerts will be much interested in the first playing this season of the famous "Grubenlichter," the waltz by Zeller, which was the most popular number played all through last year. It will have its initial hearing this season on the first Saturday evening, and other numbers to be played that same evening include "The Wizard of the Nile," Herbert; overture to "Mignon," A. Thomas; "Espana," waltz, Waldteufel; "Robin Hood," De Koven; ballet music from "Sylvia," Delibes; "Hymn to St Cecilia," Gounod, with violin solo part; "Graceful Dance," Sullivan; overture, "Rienzi," Wagner; selections from "Carmen," Bizet. Besides these there will be one or two other numbers of less importance. A programme embracing so many enjoyable things in one evening has rarely been offered at these promenade concerts.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Monday evening, May 10, the Music Hall promenade concerts will begin their 12th season. These concerts will be conducted upon the same general plan as in the past. The orchestra will be made up of 50 musicians, selected from the ranks of the Boston Symphony orchestra. In fact, these concerts are a natural summer sequence to the Symphony concerts, and are attended by the regular Symphony patrons, as well as by a host of others who prefer programmes of light music; performed, however, on the same high plane of excellence maintained by the Boston Symphony orchestra.

There will be two conductors, Mr. Max Zach, who will conduct the first half of the season, and Mr. Leo Schulz, who will conduct the last half. Mr. Zach will be very pleasantly remembered as the conductor of last season's concerts, establishing himself as a universal favorite. Mr. Leo Schultz, like Mr. Zach, is a member of the Boston Symphony orchestra, playing at the first desk of the 'cellists, with Mr. Alvin Schroeder. The patrons of these concerts will easily recall Mr. Shurlz as having conducted last season his own compositions, the Columbian march and Patriotic overture, on different occasions. Mr. Schulz is the seventh member of the Boston Symphony orchestra to hold the position of conductor of these concerts, and is eminently qualified to take rank with those who have preceded him.

Some novel features in decorations will be introduced. A slight increase will be made in the number of reserved tables on the floor hall, in deference to the very general demand on the part of disappointed applicants last season; but there will be the same generous provision in the shape of unreserved tables for the purchasers of the regular admission tickets. All the side seats in the first balcony will be reserved for patrons who do not care to sit at the tables, and the entire second balcony, like the unreserved tables on the floor, will be open to any one.

Mr. Zach has already made the programmes for the first week, and has shown a very commendable effort to introduce new selections, which, it is to be hoped, will prove as popular as the old-time favorites, which will, of course, be repeated. Every effort will be made to maintain the same high standard of these concerts as in the past. In the absence of Manager Charles A. Ellis in Europe, the concerts will be under the direction of Assistant Manager F. R. Comee.

It is good news to hear that the Pops at the Music Hall, under Mr. F. R. Comee's able management, will open on Monday, May 10. A new departure will be taken this year in the way of two conductors. The first half of the season the orchestra will be under the baton of Mr. Max Zach, who led last year's concerts, and Mr. Leo Schutz, the 'cellist, will conduct the other half. Mr. Schutz sits at the first desk with Mr. Schroader in the orchestra, it will be remembered, and is a thorough musician. The concerts will be on the same general plan as last year, and there is every reason to predict that they will be quite as popular and well attended.

Mr. C. A. Ellis, who formerly had the management of the Pops, sailed from New York on the Umbria May 1. He was acompanied by his brother, Mr. G. H. Ellis.

THE BOSTON
SATURDAY EVENING
Gazette
BOSTON, SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 9.

On Monday evening the long-expected "Pops" are to begin, which means that there will be a series of delightful promenade concerts given at Music Hall, with Mr. Max Zach as conductor. These concerts are regarded as an essential portion of our musical season, and now, as always, they will, be patronized by lovers of good, light music, and who can listen to it in delightful ease and comfort. Mr. Zach's orchestra consists of 50 picked musicians.

THE BOSTON TIMES
BOSTON, SUNDAY, MAY 9, 1897.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The Twelfth Season of These Favorite Entertainments Will Begin Tomorrow.

Music hall, beginning tomorrow night, will again take on its refreshing summer atmosphere and be the scene, for the twelfth season, of that favorite entertainment known as the Promenade, or Popular concerts. As usual, these concerts will be under the management of Mr. C. A. Ellis, while Mr. Frederick R. Comee, the assistant manager, will have them in actual charge during Mr. Ellis's absence in Europe,—and Mr. Comee's success at the same post in past seasons is assurance to the public that the concerts will be a pleasure and a delight.

This season there are to be fifty musicians, chosen from the Symphony orchestra. Mr. Zach is to be the leader for the first four weeks of the season and Mr. Leo Schultz, who sits at the first desk of the 'cello players in the symphony ranks, is to be the conductor during the remaining four weeks.

There will be no special attempt made to decorate the hall elaborately other than the usual means of employing festoons of laurel mingled with a bit of red drapery on the fronts of the balconies. There also will be some green about the stage as a background to relieve the customary bare look in that part of the hall, and the ceiling will be treated in a simple way.

The same system of a general admission at a low price and with reserved seats and tables, and others open to all, will be in force this season as in other years. So great has grown the demand for reserved tables that Manager Comee will add a moderate number of these to the "ring," as it is popularly known. The refreshments to be served will be about on a line with the larder of other seasons.

The programme for the opening concert tomorrow evening is as follows:

Marche Hongroise, from "The Damnation of Faust"	Berlioz
Overture, "Le Roi l'a dit"	Delibes
(First time.)
Waltz, "Snowballs"	Ziehrer
(First time)
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
(First time)
Ballet music, "Feramors"	Rubinstein
Dance of Bayaderes.
Candle Dance of the Brides of Kashmire.
Prelude to Act III. of "The Cricket on the Hearth"	Goldmark
(First time at these concerts.
La Colombe	Gounod
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg"	Wagner
Entree Triomphale des Boyards	Halvorsen
Overture, "Pique Dame"	Suppe
Waltz, "Artis s' Life"	Strauss
March, "Austria"	Zach

It will be seen that this includes four of what are called "first-time" selections. A specialty will be made of these novelties all through the season. During the opening week several other numbers will be introduced for the first time in Boston.

Equally good programmes have been arranged for all the nights of the first week. Among some of the overtures to be played in that time will be that to "Oberon," Weber; "Barber of Seville," Rossini; "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicholai; "Martha," Flotow; "Tannhauser," Wagner; "Fra Diavolo," Auber; "Zampa," Herold; "Mignon," A. Thomas, and "Rienzi," Wagner. These alone constitute no small undertaking, and with them there will be many other fine selections during the first evenings of the series.

THE BOSTON COMMERCIAL.
SATURDAY, MAY 8, 1897.

The Pop Concert

On Monday evening next the 12th season of the Music Hall Promenade Concerts will commence, and everything points to a successful season under the management of Assistant Manager Comee. Conducter Zach has already made the programs for the first week, and every assurance is given that the musical standard of these concerts will be maintained on the same high plane as heretofore.

The number of reserved tables on the floor of the hall will be slightly increased in answer to the very general request on the part of many patrons who were unable to secure choice places last season. There will also be the same liberal provision in the way of unreserved tables for the purchasers of regular admission tickets. All the side seats in the first balcony will be reserved for patrons who do not wish to sit at the tables, and the entire second balcony, like the unreserved tables on the floor, will be open to any one paying an admission fee.

BOSTON

CUT-OUT

INCOMPLETE

Monday evening will mark the opening of the twelfth season of the popular promenade concerts and the summer musical season may be considered auspiciously under way when Conductor Max Zach lifts his baton and the strains of Berlioz's March Hongroise are wafted throughout the auditorium of Music hall.

The success of the promenade concerts in Music hall in previous seasons has given them a prestige enjoyed by no other series of musical entertainment in this city and this prestige has been achieved in a large measure by the able management of Mr. Frederick R. Comee who has directed the affairs of these summer concerts with conspicuous success in seasons past. Here Bohemia is represented on a summer evening, also the society folk who have a reserved inner circle all to themselves and the music lover who is irresistibly attracted to the promenade night after night on account of the superior excellence of the programs. By giving the people what they like best in music at this season of the year has without doubt been a large factor in contributing to the success of these concerts. The stranger in town from New York or Chicago when in doubt as to where to put in a pleasant evening will make no mistake by dropping in for a night and listening to the enjoyable music of the promenades.

A cool atmosphere is always the rule in the large hall and the decorations consisting of festoons of laurel with bits of red drapery suspended over the balconies and pieces of green upon the stage are arranged with pleasing effect.

The musical character of the programs while not classical is by no means frivolous and probably the favorite selections may be found in the light music selected from well known popular operas. For instance such music as may be selected from "The Wizard of the Nile," "Robin Hood," "El Capitan," "La Grande Duchess," "Carmen," "The Brigands," the Strauss and Waldtenful waltzes always is sure to meet with popular favor.

Mr. Max Zach is to be the leader of the concerts for the first four weeks of the season and Mr. Leo Schultz will be the conductor for the remaining four weeks. As usual the orchestra will consist of fifty musicians, selected from the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The program for the opening concert on May 10 is as follows: Marche Hongroise, from "The Damnation of Faust," Berlioz. Overture, "Le Roi l'a dit" (first time), Delibes. Waltz, "Snowballs" (first time), Ziehrer. Selection, "Wizard of the Nile" (first time), Herbert. Ballet music, "Feramors," Rubenstein; 1, Dance of Bayaderes; 2, Candle Dance of the Brides of Kashmire; Prelude to act 3 of "The Cricket on the Hearth," Goldmark (first time at these concerts). La Colombe, Gounod. Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg," Wagner. Entrée Triomphale des Boyards, Halvorsen. Overture, "Pique Dame," Suppé. Waltz, "Artists' Life," Strauss. March, "Austria," Zach. This program includes four first time selections and a specialty will be made of these musical novelties during the season.

Tonight's Promenade Concert.

The programme for the Promenade Concert tonight at Music Hall, Boston, is as follows:

1.	March, "Princess Ninetta,"	Strauss.
2.	Overture, "Oberon,"	Weber.
3.	Waltz, "Meerleuchten,"	Ziehrer.
4.	Selection, "La Fille de Madame Angot,"	Lecocq.
5.	Prelude to Act I, "Lohengrin,"	Wagner.
6.	Serenade Rococo (for string orchestra),	Meyer-Helmund.
7.	Retraite Croate,	Gabriel-Marie.
8.	Two Hungarian Dances,	Brahms.
9.	Overture, "Barber of Seville,"	Rossini.
10.	Waltz, "Kaiser,"	Strauss.
11.	Mazourka, "La Mousmé,"	Ganne.
12.	March, "Puppenfee,"	Bayer.

Whiz! Phiz! Presto! and old Music Hall rev into its annual blithesome appearance as a comp picture of German beer garden and classic music The handsome Max Zach and Herr Leo Schultz jointly conduct the concerts. All society will flock in filmy summer gowns to sip lemonade and listen to the fascinating melodies.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, MAY 8, 1897.

First Promenade Concert Next Monday Night

To inaugurate this season's series of Promenade Concerts a fine programme has been arranged for Monday evening next and already a large audience is assured. The concert will continue for the next two months, and from plans made by Frederic R. Comee, who manages these entertainments, it is learned that a succession of musical novelties will be given from week to week. The full programme for Monday night is as follows:

1. Marche Hongroise, from "The Damnation of Faust" .... Berlioz
2. Overture, "Le Roi l'a dit" .... Delibes
   (First time.)
3. Waltz, "Snowballs" .... Ziehrer
   (First time.)
4. Selection, "Wizard of the Nile" .... Herbert
   (First time.)

—

5. Ballet music, "Feramors" .... Rubinstein
   1. Dance of Bayadères.
   2. Candle Dance of the Brides of Kashmire.
6. Prelude to act III. of "The Cricket on the Hearth" .... Goldmark
   (First time at these concerts.)
7. La Colombe .... Gounod
   (The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.)
8. Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg" .... Wagner

—

9. Entrée Triomphale des Boyards .... Halvorsen
10. Overture, "Pique Dame" .... Suppé
11. Waltz, "Artists' Life" .... Strauss
12. March, "Austria" .... Zach

[4]

Globe May 9

BEGAN THE "POPS."

Successful Opening of the Twelfth Season.

Congenial Groups Gather About the Tables and Hear the Music.

Hall as Well Filled as on a Hot July Night, When People are Weary.

That regular summer institution, "the pops" was opened again for the season last evening, and the relish with which these concerts are enjoyed was shown by the large crowd that attended the first night of the 12th season.

Weather apparently has no effect upon this sort of entertainment, or else the patrons are moved by the feeling that the season is short anyway and they must needs be around early.

As it was the congenial groups that gather around the tables occupied all the chairs, while the more sedate patrons filled the balcony seats. The concerts are the same old pops, and in fact it is only required that the music shall be well selected, that the musicians interpret it well, and that the waiters be agile and around when wanted, with the proper sort of vintage. When they have furnished these things the management has done its part and this was most satisfactorily provided last evening.

Something more than usual has been attempted this year in the way of decoration. Festoons of evergreen adorn the front of the stage and balconies, while hemlock and cedar trees are placed at intervals along the balcony walls. Green is used entirely in the trimmings of the hall. Manager Ellis has added to the appearance of the stage by placing a proscenium arch with landscape scenery behind his orchestra, and has relieved the barrenness of the stage rear.

The floor space as usual is given up to tables, with the center of the hall reserved, while the balcony rear is built for the accommodation of those who prefer to libate during the concert.

Max Zach conducts the orchestra and selects the program, and he certainly received enough encouragement last evening in his effort to please. When he came upon the stage to conduct the opening number he was liberally applauded and had to bow his acknowledgments for several minutes before he was permitted to resort to his baton.

Mr Zach selected a varied assortment of music and was remarkably successful in touching the popular vein, for in several instances portions of the numbers had to be repeated.

The program included such widely diversified compositions as Wagner's prelude to the "Mastersingers of Nuremberg," Rubenstein's ballet music "Feramors," Strauss' "Artists' Life" waltzes and a selection from Victor Herbert's "Wizard of the Nile."

That Boston appreciates the only opportunity of hearing music of this class played by an orchestra of the size and ability of this one which is afforded during the year, was shown at the end of every selection, and the artists had the satisfaction of seeing that conversation and convivality were not by any means all that attracted the large crowd to the hall on a very wet night.

The desire to hear all of the orchestral effects was evident from the quiet which was preserved during the playing of Gounod's "La Colombe."

Although there was a request to this effect on the printed program the advice would have been heeded just as carefully from the moment the first strains indicated the character of the composition as if the management had not called attention to it.

As far as the orchestra is concerned manager Ellis has provided a company of musicians thoroughly competent to keep the concert up to the standard set 12 years ago and rigidly followed since.

Many familiar faces are seen on the stage.

The audience was a thoroughly characteristic one, and that society will continue to patronize the promenade concerts has again been demonstrated. Mrs John L. Gardner with a party of friends was sitting at her old table in the center of the hall when the conductor came forward for the opening selection.

Franz Zerrahn and party spent the evening at an adjoining table, while E. P. Whitney and Hugh Whitney of Milton and Miss Shattuck occupied a table.

William Apthorp had a party of friends to participate in the opening concert, and election commissioner Geo. P. Sanger was the host of a company of young people.

Others who sat at the tables on the floor of the hall were Roger Wolcott Jr, Mrs C. E. Inches and party, William Blake, Mr and Mrs James Forsaith, Isadore Braggiotti, Josef Adamowski, Robert Hooper and ex Representative Russell of ward 11.

Ex Senator Richard Sullivan had a party of friends with him, while Frederick Estabrook of Brookline entertained several guests.

All things considered, another season of the pops was most successfully launched, and there could not have been a much greater demand for the seats on a hot July evening when a cool drink and music do so much to ameliorate the condition of the sweltering city resident.

That the demand will be continuous is apparent from the fact that reserved seats for a week ahead have been taken and many of the old patrons have retained their tables for the entire season.

This evening's program will be as follows:

March, Princess Ninetta .... Straus
Overture, Oberon .... Webe
Waltz, Meerleuchten .... Ziehre
Selection, La Fille de Mme Angot .... Lecoc
Prelude to act I, Lohengrin .... Wagne
Serenade Rococo (for string orchestra)........
Meyer-Helmun

(First time)

Retraite Croate .... Gabriel-Mar
Two Hungarian Dances ....
Overture, Barber of Seville ....
[illegible]
[illegible]

BOSTON

CUT-OUT

INCOMPLETE

Monday evening will mark the opening of the twelfth season of the popular promenade concerts and the summer musical season may be considered auspiciously under way when Conductor Max Zach lifts his baton and the strains of Berlioz's March Hongroise are wafted throughout the auditorium of Music hall.

The success of the promenade concerts in Music hall in previous seasons has given them a prestige enjoyed by no other series of musical entertainment in this city and this prestige has been achieved in a large measure by the able management of Mr. Frederick R. Comee who has directed the affairs of these summer concerts with conspicuous success in seasons past. Here Bohemia is represented on a summer evening, also the society folk who have a reserved inner circle all to themselves and the music lover who is irresistibly attracted to the promenade night after night on account of the superior excellence of the programs. By giving the people what they like best in music at this season of the year has without doubt been a large factor in contributing to the success of these concerts. The stranger in town from New York or Chicago when in doubt as to where to put in a pleasant evening will make no mistake by dropping in for a night and listening to the enjoyable music of the promenades.

A cool atmosphere is always the rule in the large hall and the decorations consisting of festoons of laurel with bits of red drapery suspended over the balconies and pieces of green upon the stage are arranged with pleasing effect.

The musical character of the programs while not classical is by no means frivolous and probably the favorite selections may be found in the light music selected from well known popular operas. For instance such music as may be selected from "The Wizard of the Nile," "Robin Hood," "El Capitan," "La Grande Duchess," "Carmen," "The Brigands," the Strauss and Waldtenful waltzes always is sure to meet with popular favor.

Mr. Max Zach is to be the leader of the concerts for the first four weeks of the season and Mr. Leo Schultz will be the conductor for the remaining four weeks. As usual the orchestra will consist of fifty musicians, selected from the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The program for the opening concert on May 10 is as follows: Marche Hongroise, from "The Damnation of Faust," Berlioz. Overture, "Le Roi l'a dit" (first time), Delibes. Waltz, "Snowballs" (first time), Ziehrer. Selection, "Wizard of the Nile" (first time), Herbert. Ballet music, "Feramors," Rubenstein; 1, Dance of Bayaderes; 2, Candle Dance of the Brides of Kashmire; Prelude to act 3 of "The Cricket on the Hearth," Goldmark (first time at these concerts). La Colombe, Gounod. Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg," Wagner. Entrée Triomphale des Boyards, Halvorsen. Overture, "Pique Dame," Suppé. Waltz, "Artists' Life," Strauss. March, "Austria," Zach. This program includes four first time selections and a specialty will be made of these musical novelties during the season.

Tonight's Promenade Concert.

The programme for the Promenade Concert tonight at Music Hall, Boston, is as follows:

1. March, "Princess Ninetta," Strauss.
2. Overture, "Oberon," Weber.
3. Waltz, "Meerleuchten," Ziehrer.
4. Selection, "La Fille de Madame Angot," Lecocq.
5. Prelude to Act I, "Lohengrin," Wagner.
6. Serenade Rococo (for string orchestra), Meyer-Helmund.
7. Retraite Croate, Gabriel-Marie.
8. Two Hungarian Dances, Brahms.
9. Overture, "Barber of Seville," Rossini.
10. Waltz, "Kaiser," Strauss.
11. Mazourka, "La Mousmé," Ganné.
12. March, "Puppenfee," Bayer.

Whiz! Phiz! Presto! and old Music Hall rev into its annual blithesome appearance as a comp picture of German beer garden and classic music The handsome Max Zach and Herr Leo Schultz jointly conduct the concerts. All society will flock in filmy summer gowns to sip lemonade and listen to the fascinating melodies.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, MAY 8, 1897.

First Promenade Concert Next Monday Night.

To inaugurate this season's series of Promenade Concerts a fine programme has been arranged for Monday evening next and already a large audience is assured. The concert will continue for the next two months, and from plans made by Frederic R. Comee, who manages these entertainments, it is learned that a succession of musical novelties will be given from week to week. The full programme for Monday night is as follows:

1. Marche Hongroise, from "The Damnation of Faust" .... Berlioz
2. Overture, "Le Roi l'a dit" .... Delibes
   (First time.)
3. Waltz, "Snowballs" .... Ziehrer
   (First time.)
4. Selection, "Wizard of the Nile" .... Herbert
   (First time.)
5. Ballet music, "Feramors" .... Rubinstein
   1. Dance of Bayadères.
   2. Candle Dance of the Brides of Kashmire.
6. Prelude to act III. of "The Cricket on the Hearth" .... Goldmark
   (First time at these concerts.)
7. La Colombe .... Gounod
   (The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.)
8. Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg" .... Wagner
9. Entrée Triomphale des Boyards .... Halvorsen
10. Overture, "Pique Dame" .... Suppé
11. Waltz, "Artists' Life" .... Strauss
12. March, "Austria" .... Zach

[4]

Globe May 9

BEGAN THE "POPS."

Successful Opening of the Twelfth Season.

Congenial Groups Gather About the Tables and Hear the Music.

Hall as Well Filled as on a Hot July Night, When People are Weary.

That regular summer institution, "the pops" was opened again for the season last evening, and the relish with which these concerts are enjoyed was shown by the large crowd that attended the first night of the 12th season.

Weather apparently has no effect upon this sort of entertainment, or else the patrons are moved by the feeling that the season is short anyway and they must needs be around early.

As it was the congenial groups that gather around the tables occupied all the chairs, while the more sedate patrons filled the balcony seats. The concerts are the same old pops, and in fact it is only required that the music shall be well selected, that the musicians interpret it well, and that the waiters be agile and around when wanted, with the proper sort of vintage. When they have furnished these things the management has done its part and this was most satisfactorily provided last evening.

Something more than usual has been attempted this year in the way of decoration. Festoons of evergreen adorn the front of the stage and balconies, while hemlock and cedar trees are placed at intervals along the balcony walls. Green is used entirely in the trimmings of the hall. Manager Ellis has added to the appearance of the stage by placing a proscenium arch with landscape scenery behind his orchestra, and has relieved the barrenness of the stage rear.

The floor space as usual is given up to tables, with the center of the hall reserved, while the balcony rear is built for the accommodation of those who prefer to libate during the concert.

Max Zach conducts the orchestra and selects the program, and he certainly received enough encouragement last evening in his effort to please. When he came upon the stage to conduct the opening number he was liberally applauded and had to bow his acknowledgments for several minutes before he was permitted to resort to his baton.

Mr Zach selected a varied assortment of music and was remarkably successful in touching the popular vein, for in several instances portions of the numbers had to be repeated.

The program included such widely diversified compositions as Wagner's prelude to the "Mastersingers of Nuremberg," Rubenstein's ballet music "Feramors," Strauss' "Artists' Life" waltzes and a selection from Victor Herbert's "Wizard of the Nile."

That Boston appreciates the only opportunity of hearing music of this class played by an orchestra of the size and ability of this one which is afforded during the year, was shown at the end of every selection, and the artists had the satisfaction of seeing that conversation and convivality were not by any means all that attracted the large crowd to the hall on a very wet night.

The desire to hear all of the orchestral effects was evident from the quiet which was preserved during the playing of Gounod's "La Colombe."

Although there was a request to this effect on the printed program the advice would have been heeded just as carefully from the moment the first strains indicated the character of the composition as if the management had not called attention to it.

As far as the orchestra is concerned manager Ellis has provided a company of musicians thoroughly competent to keep the concert up to the standard set 12 years ago and rigidly followed since.

Many familiar faces are seen on the stage.

The audience was a thoroughly characteristic one, and that society will continue to patronize the promenade concerts has again been demonstrated. Mrs John L Gardner with a party of friends was sitting at her old table in the center of the hall when the conductor came forward for the opening selection.

Franz Zerrahn and party spent the evening at an adjoining table, while E. P. Whitney and Hugh Whitney of Milton and Miss Shattuck occupied a table.

William Apthorp had a party of friends to participate in the opening concert, and election commissioner Geo. P. Sanger was the host of a company of young people.

Others who sat at the tables on the floor of the hall were Roger Wolcott Jr, Mrs C. E. Inches and party, William Blake, Mr and Mrs James Forsaith, Isadore Braggiotti, Josef Adamowski, Robert Hooper and ex Representative Russell of ward 11.

Ex Senator Richard Sullivan had a party of friends with him, while Frederick Estabrook of Brookline entertained several guests.

All things considered, another season of the pops was most successfully launched, and there could not have been a much greater demand for the seats on a hot July evening when a cool drink and music do so much to ameliorate the condition of the sweltering city resident.

That the demand will be continuous is apparent from the fact that reserved seats for a week ahead have been taken and many of the old patrons have retained their tables for the entire season.

This evening's program will be as follows:

March, Princess Ninetta .... Strauss
Overture, Oberon .... Weber
Waltz, Meerleuchten .... Ziehrer
Selection, La Fille de Mme Angot .... Lecocq
Prelude to act I, Lohengrin .... Wagner
Serenade Rococo (for string orchestra) .... Meyer-Helmund
(First time)
Retraite Croate .... Gabriel-Marie
Two Hungarian dances .... Brahms
Overture, Barber of Seville .... Rossini
Waltz, Kaiser .... Strauss
Mazourka, La Mousme .... Ganne
March, Puppenfee .... Bayer

OSTON

CUT-OUT

INCOMPLETE

Monday evening will mark the opening of the twelfth season of the popular promenade concerts and the summer musical season may be considered auspiciously under way when Conductor Max Zach lifts his baton and the strains of Berlioz's March Hongroise are wafted throughout the auditorium of Music hall.

The success of the promenade concerts in Music hall in previous seasons has given them a prestige enjoyed by no other series of musical entertainment in this city and this prestige has been achieved in a large measure by the able management of Mr. Frederick R. Comee who has directed the affairs of these summer concerts with conspicuous success in seasons past. Here Bohemia is represented on a summer evening, also the society folk who have a reserved inner circle all to themselves and the music lover who is irresistibly attracted to the promenade night after night on account of the superior excellence of the programs. By giving the people what they like best in music at this season of the year has without doubt been a large factor in contributing to the success of these concerts. The stranger in town from New York or Chicago when in doubt as to where to put in a pleasant evening will make no mistake by dropping in for a night and listening to the enjoyable music of the promenades.

A cool atmosphere is always the rule in the large hall and the decorations consisting of festoons of laurel with bits of red drapery suspended over the balconies and pieces of green upon the stage are arranged with pleasing effect.

The musical character of the programs while not classical is by no means frivolous and probably the favorite selections may be found in the light music selected from well known popular operas. For instance such music as may be selected from "The Wizard of the Nile," "Robin Hood," "El Capitan," "La Grande Duchess," "Carmen," "The Brigands," the Strauss and Waldtenful waltzes always is sure to meet with popular favor.

Mr. Max Zach is to be the leader of the concerts for the first four weeks of the season and Mr. Leo Schultz will be the conductor for the remaining four weeks. As usual the orchestra will consist of fifty musicians, selected from the Boston Symphony orchestra.

The program for the opening concert on May 10 is as follows: Marche Hongroise, from "The Damnation of Faust," Berlioz. Overture, "Le Roi l'a dit" (first time), Delibes. Waltz, "Snowballs" (first time), Ziehrer. Selection, "Wizard of the Nile" (first time), Herbert. Ballet music, "Feramors," Rubenstein; 1, Dance of Bayaderes; 2, Candle Dance of the Brides of Kashmire; Prelude to act 3 of "The Cricket on the Hearth," Goldmark (first time at these concerts). La Colombe, Gouuod. Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg," Wagner. Entrée Triomphale des Boyards, Halvorsen. Overture, "Pique Dame," Suppé. Waltz, "Artists' Life," Strauss. March, "Austria," Zach. This program includes four first time selections and a specialty will be made of these musical novelties during the season.

Tonight's Promenade Concert.

The programme for the Promenade Concert tonight at Music Hall, Boston, is as follows:

1. March, "Princess Ninetta," Strauss.
2. Overture, "Oberon," Weber.
3. Waltz, "Meerleuchten," Ziehrer.
4. Selection, "La Fille de Madame Angot," Lecocq.
5. Prelude to Act I, "Lohengrin," Wagner.
6. Serenade Rococo (for string orchestra), Meyer-Helmund.
7. Retraite Croate, Gabriel-Marie.
8. Two Hungarian Dances, Brahms.
9. Overture, "Barber of Seville," Rossini.
10. Waltz, "Kaiser," Strauss.
11. Mazourka, "La Mousmé," Ganné.
12. March, "Puppenfee," Bayer.

Whiz! Phiz! Presto! and old Music Hall revolves into its annual blithesome appearance as a composite picture of German beer garden and classic music hall. The handsome Max Zach and Herr Leo Schultz will jointly conduct the concerts. All society will flock in filmy summer gowns to sip lemonade and listen to the fascinating melodies.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, MAY 8, 18[illegible]

First Promenade Concert Next Monday Night.

To inaugurate this season's series of Promenade Concerts a fine programme has been arranged for Monday evening next and already a large audience is assured. The concert will continue for the next two months, and [illegible] plans made by Frederic R. Comee, [illegible] manages these entertainments, it is learned that a succession of musical novelties will be given from week to week. The full programme for Monday night is as follows:

1. Marche Hongroise, from "The Damnation of Faust" .... Berlioz
2. Overture, "Le Roi l'a dit" .... Delibes
(First time.)
3. Waltz, "Snowballs" .... Ziehrer
(First time.)
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile" .... Herbert
(First time.)

[illegible] music, "Feramors" .... Rubinstein
[illegible] Dance of Bayadères.
[illegible]dle Dance of the Brides of Kashmire.
[illegible] act iii. of "The Cricket on [illegible]h" .... Goldmark [illegible] these concerts.)
[illegible] .... Gounod
[illegible] respectfully requested to [illegible] during the performance
[illegible]singers of Nu[illegible] .... Wagner
[illegible] des Boyards .... Halvorsen
[illegible] Dame" .... Suppe
[illegible] Life" .... Strauss
[illegible]" .... Zach

[4]

Globe May 7

BEGAN THE "[illegible]"

Successful Opening of the Twelfth Season.

Congenial Groups Gather About the Tables and Hear the Music.

Hall as Well Filled as on a Hot July Night, When People are Weary.

That regular summer institution, "the pops" was opened again for the season last evening, and the relish with which these concerts are enjoyed was shown by the large crowd that attended the first night of the 12th season.

Weather apparently has no effect upon this sort of e[illegible], or [illegible] the patrons are moved by the feeling that the season is short anyway and they must needs be around early.

As it was the congenial groups that gather around the tables occupied all the chairs, while the more sedate patrons filled the balcony seats. The concerts are the same old pops, and in fact it is only required that the music shall be well selected, that the musicians interpret it well, and that the waiters be agile and around when wanted, with the proper sort of vintage. When they have furnished these things the management has done its part and this was most satisfactorily provided last evening.

Something more than usual has been attempted this year in the way of decoration. Festoons of evergreen adorn the front of the stage and balconies, while hemlock and cedar trees are placed at intervals along the balcony walls. Green is used entirely in the trimmings of the hall. Manager Ellis has added to the appearance of the stage by placing a proscenium arch with landscape scenery behind his orchestra, and has relieved the barrenness of the stage rear.

The floor space as usual is given up to tables, with the center of the hall reserved, while the balcony rear is built for the accommodation of those who prefer to libate during the concert.

Max Zach conducts the orchestra and selects the program, and he certainly received enough encouragement last evening in his effort to please. When he came upon the stage to conduct the opening number he was liberally applauded and had to bow his acknowledgments for several minutes before he was permitted to resort to his baton.

Mr Zach selected a varied assortment of music and was remarkably successful in touching the popular vein, for in several instances portions of the numbers had to be repeated.

The program included such widely diversified compositions as Wagner's prelude to the "Mastersingers of Nuremberg," Rubenstein's ballet music "Feramors," Strauss' "Artists' Life" waltzes and a selection from Victor Herbert's "Wizard of the Nile."

That Boston appreciates the only opportunity of hearing music of this class played by an orchestra of the size and ability of this one which is afforded during the year, was shown at the end of every selection, and the artists had the satisfaction of seeing that conversation and convivality were not by any means all that attracted the large crowd to the hall on a very wet night.

The desire to hear all of the orchestral effects was evident from the quiet which was preserved during the playing of Gounod's "La Colombe."

Although there was a request to this effect on the printed program the advice would have been heeded just as carefully from the moment the first strains indicated the character of the composition as if the management had not called attention to it.

As far as the orchestra is concerned manager Ellis has provided a company of musicians thoroughly competent to keep the concert up to the standard set 12 years ago and rigidly followed since.

Many familiar faces are seen on the stage.

The audience was a thoroughly characteristic one, and that society will continue to patronize the promenade concerts has again been demonstrated. Mrs John L. Gardner with a party of friends was sitting at her old table in the center of the hall when the conductor came forward for the opening selection.

Franz Zerrahn and party spent the evening at an adjoining table, while E. P. Whitney and Hugh Whitney of Milton and Miss Shattuck occupied a table.

William Apthorp had a party of friends to participate in the opening concert, and election commissioner Geo. P. Sanger was the host of a company of young people.

Others who sat at the tables on the floor of the hall were Roger Wolcott Jr, Mrs C. E. Inches and party, William Blake, Mr and Mrs James Forsaith, Isadore Braggiotti, Josef Adamowski, Robert Hooper and ex Representative Russell of ward 11.

Ex Senator Richard Sullivan had a party of friends with him, while Frederick Estabrook of Brookline entertained several guests.

All things considered, another season of the pops was most successfully launched, and there could not have been a much greater demand for the seats on a hot July evening when a cool drink and music do so much to ameliorate the condition of the sweltering city resident.

That the demand will be continuous is apparent from the fact that reserved seats for a week ahead have been taken and many of the old patrons have retained their tables for the entire season.

This evening's program will be as follows:

March, Princess Ninetta .... Strauss
Overture, Oberon .... Weber
Waltz, Meerleuchten .... Ziehrer
Selection, La Fille de Mme Angot .... Lecocq
Prelude to act I, Lohengrin .... Wagner
Serenade Rococo (for string orchestra) .... Meyer-Helmund
(First time.)
Retraite Croate .... Gabriel-Marie
Two Hungarian Dances .... Brahms
Overture, Barber of Seville .... Rossini
[illegible]

INCOMPLETE

Journal
May 11th 97

E POPS.

As an Intelligent Foreigner Saw Them.

Impressions of M. Aristide Chose, Sociologist.

Questions That Will Admit of Many Answers.

The twelfth season of the Promenade Concerts began last evening at Music Hall under the management of Mr. Fred: R. Comee. Mr. Max Zach was the conductor. In spite of the unfavorable weather there was a large audience. The program was as follows:

Marche Hongroise from "The Damnation of Faust" .... Berlioz
Overture, "Le Roi l'a dit" .... Délibes
(First Time.)
Waltz, "Snowballs" .... Zieher
(First Time.)
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile" ...... Herbert
(First Time.)
Ballet Music, "Feramors" .... Rubinstein
I. Dance of Bayadéres.
II. Candle Dance of the Brides of Kashmire.
Prelude to Act III. of "The Cricket on the Hearth" .... Goldmark
(First time at these concerts.)
La Colombe .... Gounod
Prelude to "The Mastersingers" ...... Wagner
Entrée Triomphale des Boyards.... Halvorsen
Overture, "Pique Dame" .... Suppè
Waltz, "Artists' Life .... Strauss
March, "Austria" .... Zach

I took M. Aristide Chose, the intelligent foreigner, with me to the concert. M. Chose is an earnest student of sociology, a man interested in music and its effects on the human system. For some months he has been pursuing his studies in Boston.

He was first of all much interested in the transformation of the hall. He wondered where the scene at the back of the stage came from, and how the trees grew downward from the ceiling. Then he looked at the program. "Why," he asked, "do you in Boston insist on giving an 'e' acute to Delibes? He was a charming fellow, and I knew him well; but in his most passionate moments he never dreamed of accenting the 'e' in his name."

He listened to the music. He smoked. He drank beer. He looked observingly, but not impertinently, at the men and the women on the floor and in the galleries. After the Prelude to "the Mastersingers" he gave me the result of his experience.

"This is all very interesting, and I confess I am surprised at finding such an entertainment in Boston. You take things so seriously here. You are fond of lectures. You sit at the Symphony concerts as though you were in pews, and you read program books which I do not understand—you know I am not a professional musician—while the orchestra is playing. There is no restaurant life here, and the streets are deserted early in the evening. I repeat, I am surprised to find Bostonians drinking and eating and smoking and listening to music that is not advertised as educational.

"When I lived in Berlin I used to go to Bilse's—it was ten or fifteen years ago. The concerts were frequented by members of 'The Orchestral Knitting and Roast Veal Association.' Families would sit at tables and eat their supper. The women would knit. 'A plate of red cabbage, an adagio of Beethoven and the foot of a stocking.' The hall was a sort of matrimonial bureau. There was wooing over plates of roast veal while the orchestra played and the mothers knitted, as the women of Paris did at the foot of the guillotine during the days of the Revolution. I do not see the same family life here tonight. Are all the young women I see bent on matrimony? And, by the way, I see young women in pairs, without escort, in the galleries, and young men and girls without chaperons on the floor. You would never see that at Bilse's. Of course it is different in America; it is just as it was in Palestine, when, according to the Rabbi Yochanan, 'A young man and a young woman could walk together in the street and no harm came of it.'

"I don't understand why some of the audience should be penned in. Such distinction, it seems to me, lessens joviality. But I forget; democracy in America is simply a word in political terminology.

"And why does everybody stare at a table in the centre? I should think it would be very annoying to the lady with the young boys. And yet, she shows no signs of annoyance

"The merriment is a little corse
Don't you find it so? Perhaps it wil livelier later in the season. At p ent it seems to me that the people not lay aside their fronts—pardon if I do not express myself clearly your beautiful language. Each app a little afraid of the neighbors, though the woman at one table watching the man at the next t to see how many cigars he smoke how many bottles of beer he orde
This may be only imagination. To there is too much evening dress.
there a Committee of Inspection Examination at the door? Still, I fess, it is a surprisingly gay scene
New England. Heredity is a pow factor in life, and it is hard to s off inherited conventionalism.

"The orchestra is excellent, an like your conductor. He must Viennese. I wonder why he chose a dull waltz as 'Snowballs.' Nor care for the overture by Delibes.
opera is charming, but the overtu without distinction, and so is that lude by Goldmark. The ballet by Rubinstein and that piece
Gounod pleased me exceedingly.
glad the 'Colombe' music was repe to be sure it is not great, it is no markable, but it is so melodious, so daintily orchestrated, it is so u
takably by Gounod.

"Now at Dresden and other Ge towns concerts like this are giv the open air. At Dresden on the race I could sit and watch the on the Elbe and drink Pilsner and music and smell fresh air. Ag forget; your climate is against enjoyment. How many pretty w are here! More than I ever sa Dresden or Berlin or Munich. Bu seem so afraid of being natural.
a pity that for two or three hour
Americans cannot forget your bu your cares, your vexations, and opinions of your neighbors.

"What is the program for Tuesday? I think I shall study Boston, as I see it here; until the season is over. It is much better to be here than to try to read by the light of your water gas books by eminent Bostonians. However, I wish the beer were cheaper."

Now the program for tonight is as follows:

March, "Princess Ninetta" .... Strauss
Overture, "Oberon" .... Weber
Waltz, "Meerleuchten" .... Ziehrer
Selection, "La Fille de Madame A got".. Lecocq
Prelude to Act I., "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Serenade Rococo (for String Orchestra)... Meyer-Helmund
(First time.)
Retraite Croate .... Gabriel-Marie
Two Hungarian Dances .... Brahms
Overture "Barber of Seville" .... Rossini
Waltz, "Kaiser" .... Strauss
Mazourka, "La Mousmé" .... Ganné
March, "Puppenfee" .... Bayer

Philip Hale.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS.

A most significant indication of the continued popularity of the Music Hall promenade concerts is the early interest shown as to the opening night. Monday evening, May 10, will inaugurate the 12th season of these concerts, now an established and natural successor of the Symphony concerts. Everything will be conducted on the same general plane as in previous seasons, with a special effort to introduce something new in the way of interior decorations. The orchestra will, as usual, be made up of 50 musicians, chosen from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the musical performances will be of the same high standard of excellence as those of the Symphony Orchestra.

Two conductors have been chosen, Mr. Max Zach, who last season established himself as a favorite with the patrons of these concerts, and will conduct the first half of the series. The newcomer will be Mr. Leo Schulz, who will conduct the closing half of the series. Mr. Schulz sits at the first desk of the 'cellists in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Alwin Schroeder. It will be recalled that he conducted at these concerts his own compositions, the Patriotic Overture and Columbian March. He is the seventh member of this organization chosen to fill the position of conductor, and is in every way qualified to rank with his predecessors in this position.

At the request of many patrons who have been unable in the past to secure choice places, the number of reserved tables on the floor of the hall will be slightly increased, but there will be the same liberal provision of unreserved tables for the holders of the regular admission tickets. All the side seats in the first balcony will be reserved for patrons who do not wish to sit at the tables, and the entire second balcony, like the unreserved tables on the floor, will be open to any one.

Mr. Zach has already made the programs for the first week, with a commendable effort to introduce novelties which, it is hoped, will become as popular as some of the old-time favorites, which will naturally be repeated.

In the absence of Manager Charles A. Ellis in Europe, the concerts will be under the direction of Assistant Manager F. R. Comee.

INCOMPLETE

CUT-OUT

Marche Hongroise, from "The Damnation of Faust" .... Berlioz
Overture, "Le Roi l'a dit" .... Delibes
(First time.)
Waltz, "Snowballs" .... Ziehrer
(First time)
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile".. ..... Herbert
(First time)
Ballet music, "Feramors" .... Rubinstein
Dance of Bayaderes.
Candle Dance of the Brides of Kashmire.
Prelude to Act III. of "The Cricket on the Hearth" .... Goldmark
(First time at these concerts.
La Colombe .... Gounod
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg" .... Wagner
Entree Triomphale des Boyards..... Halvorsen
Overture, "Pique Dame" .... Suppe
Waltz, "Artis s' Life" .... Strauss
March, "Austria" .... Zach

It will be seen that this includes four of what are called "first-time" selections. A specialty will be made of these novelties all through the season. During the opening week several other numbers will be introduced for the first time in Boston.

Equally good programmes have been arranged for all the nights of the first week. Among some of the overtures to be played in that time will be that to "Oberon," Weber; "Barber of Seville," Rossini; "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicholai; "Martha," Flotow; "Tannhauser," Wagner; "Fra Diavolo," Auber; "Zampa," Herold; "Mignon," A. Thomas, and "Rienzi," Wagner. These alone constitute no small undertaking, and with them there will be many other fine selections during the first evenings of the series.

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS.

"Pop" Concert Season in Music Hall.

Will Begin Tomorrow Night With Max Zach as Director of the Orchestra.

First Performance of "Valhalla"—Plans of "The Walking Delegate"—Gossip.

The 12th season of these most popular entertainments will open tomorrow evening in Music hall. The concerts will be conducted on the same general plan as in past seasons, and the high standard of performance will be maintained by 50 musicians from the Symphony orchestra. Mr Max Zach will conduct the first half of the season, and Mr Leo Schulz, also a member of the Symphony orchestra, will conduct the last half.

The program for the opening night is as follows:

Marche Hongroise, from Damnation of Faust, Berlioz
Overture, Le Roi l'a dit .... Delibes
Waltz, Snowballs .... Ziehrer
Selection, Wizard of the Nile .... Herbert
Ballet music, Feramors .... Rubinstein
Prelude to act III of The Cricket on the Hearth .... Goldmark
La Colombe .... Gounod
Prelude to The Mastersingers .... Wagner
Entree Triomphale Des Boyards ..... Halvorsen
Overture, Pique Dame .... Suppe
Waltz, Artists' Life .... Strauss
March, Austria .... Zach

MUSICAL MATTERS.

Successful Beginning of the "Pop" Concert Season.

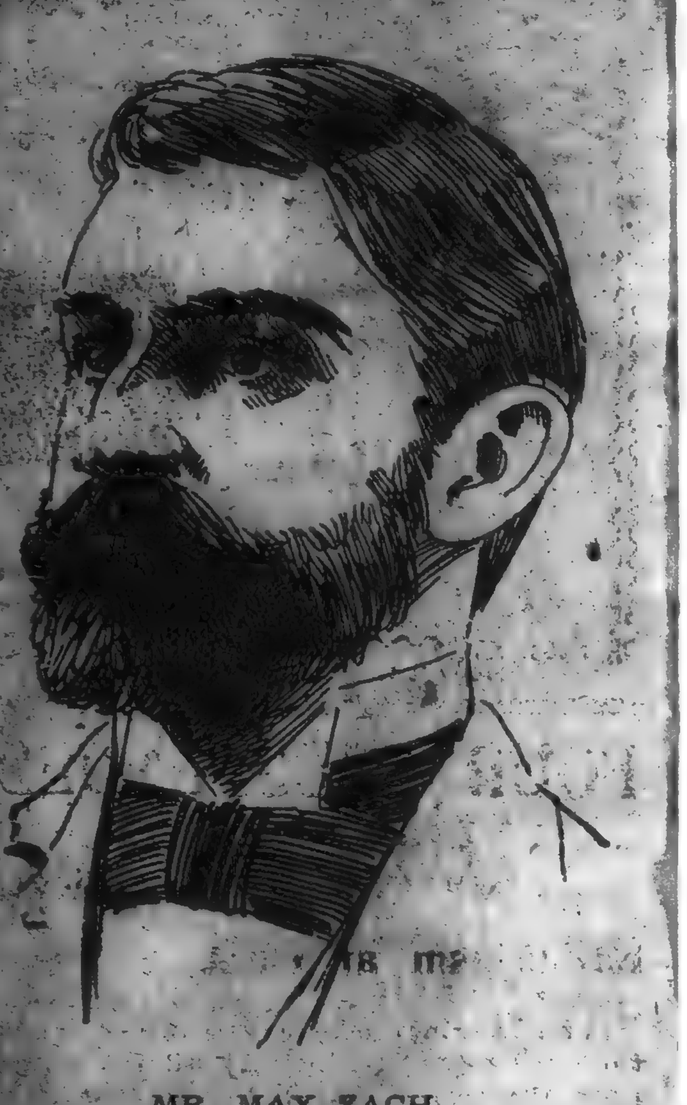
"Sumer is icumen in," and its surest advance signal is the beginning of the Popular concerts in Music Hall. After the average Bostonian has reverently listened to his allowance of Brahms, and has gone through his share of Wagner and Beethoven, he turns with something like avidity to Strauss (not the dissonant Richard), to Suppe, to Offenbach, and to all the effervescence of the sparkling style of music.

Last night Mr. Zach held back a little from making too vivid a contrast with the serious concerts of the recent past, and Strauss was present in only a single number, while Wagner, Rubinstein, Berlioz, Goldmark, Gounod and Delibes, formed the chief part of the musical feast, and Jupiter Pluvius was powerless against Gambrinus and Apollo, for the hall was crowded.

It was a more ambitious programme than one usually finds in the popular course, but it seemed to be none the less popular on that account. The audience was heartily enthusiastic and the applause was constant. It was altogether as successful a beginning of the summer season as has yet been seen in Music Hall.

Mr. Zach was cordially welcomed and proved himself a most zealous and intelligent conductor, holding the men well together and achieving a commendable ensemble in even the difficult numbers of the programme.

It was distinctly a modern list of works that was presented. The very beginning showed the tendency of the concert, for Berlioz's "Marche Hongroise" (the great Rakoczy March) from the "Damnation of Faust" was the opening number. Its great crescendo was given with splendid effect, and its fierce and warlike character was excellently preserved, recalling the account that Berlioz gives of its first performance in Hungary, when a Hungarian gentleman suggested that Berlioz kney how to cut out the tryant's heart, judging by his music. Such a truculent melody as this ought to have been the instrumental music of the Reign of Terror; it would have suited far better to the spirit of '93 than any "Ca Ira" or "Carmagnole."



MR. MAX ZACH.

After this outburst of ferocity there came grace and gentility in music as expressed in Delibes' "Le Roi l'a Dit," a composition which did not require any great amount of thinking on the part of the auditors, nor any great exertion on the part of the excellent orchestra.

Spite of the good character of the first part of the programme, it was the second part of the concert, which, as usual, contained the chief numbers in a technical and musical point of view. This part began with the delightful ballet music from Rubinstein's "Feramors." Two numbers of this were given, the "Candle Dance" and the "Dance of the Bayaderes."

Following this came the prelude to the third act of Goldmark's setting of Dickens' "Cricket on the Hearth," made familiar to Bostonians only recently by its performance at the Symphony concerts. A very pretty orchestral number by Gounod—"La Colombe" won the chief triumph of the concert and was imperatively encored. This ambitious part of the programme ended with no less a number than the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg," and its reception was sufficiently cordial to prove that the best of music will not be above appreciation at these concerts, if played as carefully and spiritedly as it was on this occasion.

The programme ended with one of Mr. Zach's own compositions.

Mr. Zach, Mr. Ellis and Mr. Comee are to be congratulated on the manner in which the summer season of music has begun.

Louis C. Elson.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, MAY 11, 1897.

Music Hall: The Pop Concerts.

The programme of the first Pop concert given in the Music Hall last evening, was:

Hungarian March from "La Damnation de Faust"	Berlioz
Overture to "Le Roi l'a dit"	Delibes
Waltz, "Snowballs"	Ziehrer
Selection from "The Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
Ballet Music from "Feramors"	Rubinstein
Prelude to Act III. of "Heimchen am Herd"	Goldmark
Selection from "La Colombe"	Gounod
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg"	Wagner
Entrée Triomphale des Boyards	Halvorsen
Overture to "Pique Dame"	Suppé
Waltz, "Artists' Life"	Strauss
March, "Austria"	Zach

An excellent programme, as such programmes go. Every season of the Pops, so far, has brought its "pianissimo favorite"—during the playing of which the audience is "requested to preserve silence"—and the dainty music from Gounod's "Colombe" bids fair to be the particular one this year. By the way, some serious-minded persons have thought this request "to preserve silence" anomalous, taking it for granted that concert audiences of every description ought to be silent anyway. Whatever the prime object of the Pops may be, if they succeed in curing such persons of even a fraction of their serious-mindedness, and in inducing them to take life a thought more jovially and light-heartedly, they will have worked a miracle that ought to fill the benevolent sociologist's soul with joy. It is just this serious-mindedness that produces the "Boston face,"—a thing known and marveled at in many parts of the world, in fact, wherever it has cast its gloom over cheerful populations. If the Pops can help us to get rid of our "Boston face," the Public Library and the High and Normal School will sink to a secondary rank as educational institutions. As yet the success leaves something to be desired; for most of the audience still persist in bringing their symphony concert faces to the Pops, and, as we have said, some of them look upon a request for monetary silence as an anomaly. But let us not despair; the Pops may in time do their beneficent work; perhaps in the next century our people may even bring their Pop faces to a symphony concert. Then will the millennium be at hand, and the "Boston face" be entrusted to the care of the Historical Society.

Our only quarrel with the Pops is that they come only during a few weeks in the spring and early summer. They ought to be given every night, Sundays included, all the year round. When Boston ceases to be a province they will be.

For the present, the occasional request on the bills for silence, and the necessity therefor, are indicative of one good thing. Most of the works of the great classic masters are de facto excluded from the programmes. The music given at the Pops must belong to one of three classes: to the "popular noisy," to the "serious noisy," or to the "sentimentally whispering." Light overtures and operatic selections, with all the brass and percussion going; waltzes, and marches, scored so as to pierce through and rise above the hum of the ball-room; heavily scored things by the great modern thunderers, and an occasional bit of rose-petal daintiness that has explicitely to crave general silence; of such things are the Pop programmes made up, and of such things they ought to be made up. The bills might shriek in the heaviest job type for silence for a movement from a Beethoven or Moozart symphony, and shriek in vain. But a sentimental little draught of muted-string rose-water will be sipped quite willingly in mum silence. This is quite right; it makes the people happy, and, if it can only make them happy enough, it may in time persuade them to look happy, too.

The orchestra played admirably last evening. Mr. Zach is far on the way to making his second violins and violas catch the true Strauss waltz-rythm—with its too early second beat—and conducts in general with fire and firm command. The performance of the "Meistersinger" overture would have done credit to any orchestra and conductor. Indeed, this first concert was a flourishing beginning, and there is no good reason why the rest should not keep up to the same standard.

It is a settled thing that Boston cannot get along without its promenades, where nobody promenades except the waiters, and they have to wriggle rather than walk. And as these delightful entertainments cannot last far into the summer, by reason of the dispersion of the players,—there are always patrons enough on hand,—the season is going to begin early this year. The first assembly will be a week from tomorrow evening, May tenth, and places will be at a premium. There are to be two conductors—Mr. Max Zach and Mr. Leo Schultz, the latter of whom has yet to demonstrate his ability.

THE POPS START.

Popular Concerts Start In With Much Eclat.

The "Pops" have begun. Last night again ushered in these enjoyable occasions for warm weather recreation, and it needed but pleasant weather to make the first of the 1897 "Pops" the equal in every way of those of other years.

In general appearance Music Hall differs but little in its interior adornment from other years. The American flag is draped under the clock, and festoons and wreaths have been placed along the balcony front. From the rosettes in the ceiling a number of evergreen trees have been suspended, giving quite a unique effect. From the stage the stoical-looking Beethoven can no longer gaze upon the sea of faces, for he is temporarily hidden from view by a large canvas representing a meadow scene, which is flanked by a thick growth of evergreens. The general effect of the stage is very pretty, lending as it does, a summer atmosphere to the place.

The programme for the opening concert was well chosen, and each and every number splendidly given, those of a more popular order invariably being redemanded. Max Zach was warmly applauded when he made his appearance on the stage, and he and all his musicians did their best to please a very large audience.

Flitting hither and thither about the hall was Mr. Fred Comee, to whom almost all the credit belongs for the general arrangement of this season's concerts, and all his friends were naturally eager to congratulate him on such an auspicious beginning.

The opening bill was notable because of four pieces which were heard here for the first time, overture to "Le Roi l'a dit," by Delibes; waltz, "Snowballs," by Ziehrer; selections from the "Wizard of the Nile," by Herbert, which was applauded long and loud, and the prelude to Act III. of "The Cricket on the Hearth," by Goldmark. Of course there was a Wagner selection—no well-chosen programme is without one. It was the overture to "Die Meistersingers," which was heartily enjoyed.

The concert tonight will include a "serenade rococo" for strings, by Meyer-Helmund, played for the first time. There will also be some of Brahms's Hungarian dances, two Strauss numbers and the prelude to Act I. of "Lohengrin."

The audience last night was a noticeably attentive one, quick at all times to appreciate the good work of the band. A good part of the house was seated before the first number was over, and among the crowd were the usual sprinkling of first nighters. The society contingent was, of course, well represented, and many of the ladies displayed charming gowns, despite the damp condition of the outside atmosphere.

Among the audience were noted the following: Mrs. John L. Gardner and party, which included Mr. Alexander Blaess and Mr. George Proctor, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Zerrahn, Miss Shattuck and Mr. Hugh Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur [illegible], Miss Olga Gardner and Dr. [illegible], Mr. Apthorp and party, Mr. and Mrs. James Forsyth, Mr. Isador Braggiotti, Mr. Joseph Adamowski and party, Mr. George C. Lee, Jr., Mr. Roger Wolcott, Jr., Mr. Thomas L. Babson, Miss Grace Atwill, Mr. William E. Blake and party, Mr. and Mrs. Channing Rust, Mr. Fred Beebe and party, Mr. Frank Sears, Mr. H. C. Spaulding and party, Mr. Dan C. Lane and party, and Mr. Albert C. Leland and party.

✓

THE POP CONCERTS.

The Pop concerts will begin the twelfth annual season in Music Hall on Monday evening, May 10. Arrangements are being prepared to make this year the most successful of any, and the hall will be decorated in an attractive manner.

As far as the programmes are concerned several novelties will be introduced, which it is expected will prove as attractive as some of the old-time favorites, which will be, of course, repeated.

Two conductors have been selected by the management, Mr. Max Zach, who will be very pleasantly remembered as a universal favorite last season and who will conduct the first half of the concerts.

Tho new comer will be Mr. Leo Schulz, who will conduct the closing half of the series. Mr. Schulz sits at the first desk of the cellists in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Alwin Schroeder, and is the seventh member of this organization chosen to fill the position of conductor. Mr. Schulz will be recalled as having conducted at these concerts his own compositions, "Patriotic Overture" and "Columbian March," and he is fully qualified to take rank with his predecessors in this important position.

The number of reserved tables on the floor of the hall will be slightly increased in answer to the very general request on the part of many patrons who were unable to secure choice places last season. There will also be the same liberal provision in the way of unreserved tables for the purchasers of the regular admission tickets.

All the side seats in the first balcony will be reserved for patrons who do not wish to sit at the tables, and the entire second balcony, like the unreserved tables on the floor, will be open to anyone.

Conductor Zach has already made the programmes for the first week, and every assurance is given that the musical standard of these concerts will be maintained on the same high plane as heretofore.

In the absence of Manager Charles A. Ellis in Europe, the concerts will be under the management of Assistant Manager F. R. Comee.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

Successful Beginning of the "Pop" Concert Season.

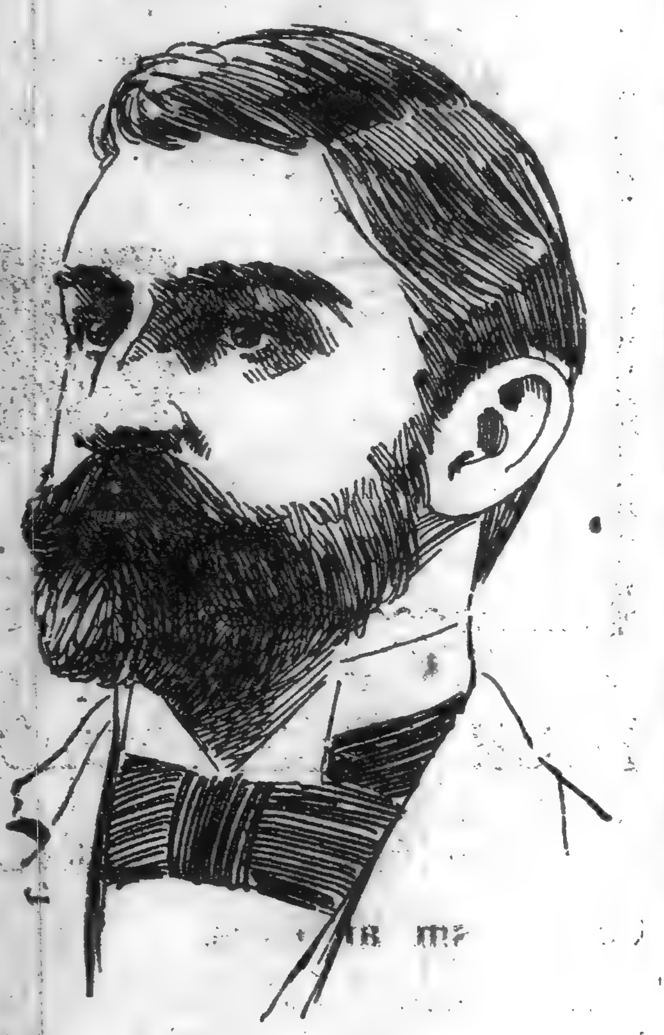
"Sumer is icumen in," and its surest advance signal is the beginning of the Popular concerts in Music Hall. After the average Bostonian has reverently listened to his allowance of Brahms, and has gone through his share of Wagner and Beethoven, he turns with something like avidity to Strauss (not the dissonant Richard), to Suppe, to Offenbach, and to all the effervescence of the sparkling style of music.

Last night Mr. Zach held back a little from making too vivid a contrast with the serious concerts of the recent past, and Strauss was present in only a single number, while Wagner, Rubinstein, Berlioz, Goldmark, Gounod and Delibes, formed the chief part of the musical feast, and Jupiter Pluvius was powerless against Gambrinus and Apollo, for the hall was crowded.

It was a more ambitious programme than one usually finds in the popular course, but it seemed to be none the less popular on that account. The audience was heartily enthusiastic and the applause was constant. It was altogether as successful a beginning of the summer season as has yet been seen in Music Hall.

Mr. Zach was cordially welcomed and proved himself a most zealous and intelligent conductor, holding the men well together and achieving a commendable ensemble in even the difficult numbers of the programme.

It was distinctly a modern list of works that was presented. The very beginning showed the tendency of the concert, for Berlioz's "Marche Hongroise" (the great Rakoczy March) from the "Damnation of Faust" was the opening number. Its great crescendo was given with splendid effect, and its fierce and warlike character was excellently preserved, recalling the account that Berlioz gives of its first performance in Hungary, when a Hungarian gentleman suggested that Berlioz kney how to cut out the tryant's heart, judging by his music. Such a truculent melody as this ought to have been the instrumental music of the Reign of Terror; it would have suited far better to the spirit of '93 than any "Ca Ira" or "Carmagnole."



MR. MAX ZACH.

After this outburst of ferocity there came grace and gentility in music as expressed in Delibes' "Le Roi l'a Dit," a composition which did not require any great amount of thinking on the part of the auditors, nor any great exertion on the part of the excellent orchestra.

Spite of the good character of the first part of the programme, it was the second part of the concert, which, as usual, contained the chief numbers in a technical and musical point of view. This part began with the delightful ballet music from Rubinstein's "Feramors." Two numbers of this were given, the "Candle Dance" and the "Dance of the Bayaderes."

Following this came the prelude to the third act of Goldmark's setting of Dickens' "Cricket on the Hearth," made familiar to Bostonians only recently by its performance at the Symphony concerts. A very pretty orchestral number by Gounod—"La Colombe" won the chief triumph of the concert and was imperatively encored. This ambitious part of the programme ended with no less a number than the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg," and its reception was sufficiently cordial to prove that the best of music will not be above appreciation at these concerts, if played as carefully and spiritedly as it was on this occasion.

The programme ended with one of Mr. Zach's own compositions.

Mr. Zach, Mr. Ellis and Mr. Comee are to be congratulated on the manner in which the summer season of music has begun.

Louis C. Elson.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, MAY 11, 1897.

Music Hall. The Pop Concerts.

The programme of the first Pop concert, given in the Music Hall last evening, was:

Hungarian March from "La Damnation de Faust"	Berlioz
Overture to "Le Roi l'a dit"	Delibes
Waltz, "Snowballs"	Ziehrer
Selection from "The Wizzard of the Nile"	Herbert
Ballet Music from "Feramors"	Rubinstein
Prelude to Act III. of "Heimchen am Herd"	Goldmark
Selection from "La Colombe"	Gounod
Prelude to "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg"	Wagner
Entrée Triomphale des Boyards	Halvorsen
Overture to "Pique Dame"	Suppé
Waltz, "Artists' Life"	Strauss
March, "Austria"	Zach

An excellent programme, as such programmes go. Every season of the Pops, so far, has brought its "pianissimo favorite"—during the playing of which the audience is "requested to preserve silence"—and the dainty music from Gounod's "Colombe" bids fair to be the particular one this year. By the way, some serious-minded persons have thought this request "to preserve silence" anomalous, taking it for granted that concert audiences of every description ought to be silent anyway. Whatever the prime object of the Pops may be, if they succeed in curing such persons of even a fraction of their serious-mindedness, and in inducing them to take life a thought more jovially and light-heartedly, they will have worked a miracle that ought to fill the benevolent sociologist's soul with joy. It is just this serious-mindedness that produces the "Boston face,"—a thing known and marveled at in many parts of the world, in fact, wherever it has cast its gloom over cheerful populations. If the Pops can help us to get rid of our "Boston face," the Public Library and the High and Normal School will sink to a secondary rank as educational institutions. As yet the success leaves something to be desired; for most of the audience still persist in bringing their symphony concert faces to the Pops, and, as we have said, some of then look upon a request for monetary silence as an anomaly. But let us not despair; the Pops may in time do their beneficent work; perhaps in the next century our people may even bring their Pop faces to a symphony concert. Then will the millennium be at hand, and the "Boston face" be entrusted to the care of the Historical Society.

Our only quarrel with the Pops is that they come only during a few weeks in the spring and early summer. They ought to be given every night, Sundays included, all the year round. When Boston ceases to be a province they will be.

For the present, the occasional request on the bills for silence, and the necessity therefor, are indicative of one good thing. Most of the works of the great classic masters are de facto excluded from the programmes. The music given at the Pops must belong to one of three classes: to the "popular noisy," to the "serious noisy," or to the "sentimentally whispering." Light overtures and operatic selections, with all the brass and percussion going; waltzes, and marches, scored so as to pierce through and rise above the hum of the ball-room; heavily scored things by the great modern thunderers, and an occasional bit of rose-petal daintiness that has explicitely to crave general silence; of such things are the Pop programmes made up, and of such things they ought to be made up. The bills might shriek in the heaviest job type for silence for a movement from a Beethoven or Moozart symphony, and shriek in vain. But a sentimental little draught of muted-string rose-water will be sipped quite willingly in mum silence. This is quite right; it makes the people happy, and, if it can only make them happy enough, it may in time persuade them to look happy, too.

The orchestra played admirably last evening. Mr. Zach is far on the way to making his second violins and violas catch the true Strauss waltz-rythm—with its too early second beat—and conducts in general with fire and firm command. The performance of the "Meistersinger" overture would have done credit to any orchestra and conductor. Indeed, this first concert was a flourishing beginning, and there is no good reason why the rest should not keep up to the same standard.

It is a settled thing that Boston cannot get along without its promenades, where nobody promenades except the waiters; and they have to wriggle rather than walk. And as these delightful entertainments cannot last far into the summer, by reason of the dispersion of the players,—there are always patrons enough on hand,—the season is going to begin early this year. The first assembly will be a week from tomorrow evening, May tenth, and places will be at a premium. There are to be two conductors—Mr. Max Zach and Mr. Leo Schultz, the latter of whom has yet to demonstrate his ability.

THE POPS START.

Popular Concerts Start In With Much Eclat.

The "Pops" have begun. Last night again ushered in these enjoyable occasions for warm weather recreation, and it needed but pleasant weather to make the first of the 1897 "Pops" the equal in every way of those of other years.

In general appearance Music Hall differs but little in its interior adornment from other years. The American flag is draped under the clock, and festoons and wreaths have been placed along the balcony front. From the rosettes in the ceiling a number of evergreen trees have been suspended, giving quite a unique effect. From the stage the stoical-looking Beethoven can no longer gaze upon the sea of faces, for he is temporarily hidden from view by a large canvas representing a meadow scene, which is flanked by a thick growth of evergreens. The general effect of the stage is very pretty, lending as it does, a summer atmosphere to the place.

The programme for the opening concert was well chosen, and each and every number splendidly given, those of a more popular order invariably being redemanded. Max Zach was warmly applauded when he made his appearance on the stage, and he and all his musicians did their best to please a very large audience.

Flitting hither and thither about the hall was Mr. Fred Comee, to whom almost all the credit belongs for the general arrangement of this season's concerts, and all his friends were naturally eager to congratulate him on such an auspicious beginning.

The opening bill was notable because of four pieces which were heard here for the first time, overture to "Le Roi l'a dit," by Delibes; waltz, "Snowballs," by Ziehrer; selections from the "Wizard of the Nile," by Herbert, which was applauded long and loud, and the prelude to Act III. of "The Cricket on the Hearth," by Goldmark. Of course there was a Wagner selection—no well-chosen programme is without one. It was the overture to "Die Meistersingers," which was heartily enjoyed.

The concert tonight will include a "serenade rococo" for strings, by Meyer-Helmund, played for the first time. There will also be some of Brahms's Hungarian dances, two Strauss numbers and the prelude to Act I. of "Lohengrin."

The audience last night was a noticeably attentive one, quick at all times to appreciate the good work of the band. A good part of the house was seated before the first number was over, and among the crowd were the usual sprinkling of first nighters. The society contingent was, of course, well represented, and many of the ladies displayed charming gowns, despite the damp condition of the outside atmosphere.

Among the audience were noted the following: Mrs. John L. Gardner and party, which included Mr. Alexander Blaess and Mr. George Proctor, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Zerrahn, Miss Shattuck and Mr. Hugh Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Miss Olga Gardner and Dr. Monks; Mr. Apthorp and party, Mr. and Mrs. James Forsyth, Mr. Isador Braggiotti, Mr. Joseph Adamowski and party, Mr. George C. Lee, Jr., Mr. Roger Wolcott, Jr., Mr. Thomas L. Babson, Miss Grace Atwill, Mr. William E. Blake and party, Mr. and Mrs. Channing Rust, Mr. Fred Beebe and party, Mr. Frank Sears, Mr. H. C. Spaulding and party, Mr. Dan C. Lane and party, and Mr. Albert C. Leland and party.

✓

THE POP CONCERTS.

The Pop concerts will begin the twelfth annual season in Music Hall on Monday evening, May 10. Arrangements are being prepared to make this year the most successful of any, and the hall will be decorated in an attractive manner.

As far as the programmes are concerned several novelties will be introduced, which it is expected will prove as attractive as some of the old-time favorites, which will be, of course, repeated.

Two conductors have been selected by the management, Mr. Max Zach, who will be very pleasantly remembered as a universal favorite last season and who will conduct the first half of the concerts.

The new comer will be Mr. Leo Schulz, who will conduct the closing half of the series. Mr. Schulz sits at the first desk of the cellists in the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with Mr. Alwin Schroeder, and is the seventh member of this organization chosen to fill the position of conductor. Mr. Schulz will be recalled as having conducted at these concerts his own compositions, "Patriotic Overture" and "Columbian March," and he is fully qualified to take rank with his predecessors in this important position.

The number of reserved tables on the floor of the hall will be slightly increased in answer to the very general request on the part of many patrons who were unable to secure choice places last season. There will also be the same liberal provision in the way of unreserved tables for the purchasers of the regular admission tickets.

All the side seats in the first balcony will be reserved for patrons who do not wish to sit at the tables, and the entire second balcony, like the unreserved tables on the floor, will be open to anyone.

Conductor Zach has already made the programmes for the first week, and every assurance is given that the musical standard of these concerts will be maintained on the same high plane as heretofore.

In the absence of Manager Charles A. Ellis in Europe, the concerts will be under the management of Assistant Manager F. R. Comee.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

Successful Beginning of the "Pop" Concert Season.

"Sumer is icumen in," and its surest advance signal is the beginning of the Popular concerts in Music Hall. After the average Bostonian has reverently listened to his allowance of Brahms, and has gone through his share of Wagner and Beethoven, he turns with something like avidity to Strauss (not the dissonant Richard), to Suppe, to Offenbach, and to all the effervescence of the sparkling style of music.

Last night Mr. Zach held back a little from making too vivid a contrast with the serious concerts of the recent past, and Strauss was present in only a single number, while Wagner, Rubinstein, Berlioz, Goldmark, Gounod and Delibes formed the chief part of the musical feast and Jupiter Pluvius was powerless against Gambrinus and Apollo, for the hall was crowded.

It was a more ambitious programme than one usually finds in the popular course, but it seemed to be none the less popular on that account. The audience was heartily enthusiastic and the applause was constant. It was altogether as successful a beginning of the summer season as has yet been seen in Music Hall.

Mr. Zach was cordially welcomed and proved himself a most zealous and intelligent conductor, holding the men well together and achieving a commendable ensemble in even the difficult numbers of the programme.

It was distinctly a modern list of works that was presented. The very beginning showed the tendency of the concert, for Berlioz's "Marche Hongroise" (the great Rakoczy March) from the "Damnation of Faust" was the opening number. Its great crescendo was given with splendid effect, and its fierce and warlike character was excellently preserved, recalling the account that Berlioz gives of its first performance in Hungary, when a Hungarian gentleman suggested that Berlioz knew how to cut out the tyrant's heart, judging by his music. Such a truculent melody as this ought to have been the instrumental music of the Reign of Terror; it would have suited far better to the spirit of '93 than any "Ca Ira" or "Carmagnole."

After this outburst of ferocity there came grace and gentility in music as expressed in Delibes' "Le Roi l'a Dit," a composition which did not require any great amount of thinking on the part of the auditors, nor any great exertion on the part of the excellent orchestra.

Spite of the good character of the first part of the programme, it was the second part of the concert, which, as usual, contained the chief numbers in a technical and musical point of view. This part began with the delightful ballet music from Rubinstein's "Feramors." Two numbers of this were given, the "Candle Dance" and the "Dance of the Bayaderes."

Following this came the prelude to the third act of Goldmark's setting of Dickens' "Cricket on the Hearth," made familiar to Bostonians only recently by its performance at the Symphony concerts. A very pretty orchestral number by Gounod—"La Colombe" won the chief triumph of the concert and was imperatively encored. This ambitious part of the programme ended with no less a number than the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg," and its reception was sufficiently cordial to prove that the best of music will not be above appreciation at these concerts, if played as carefully and spiritedly as it was on this occasion.

The programme ended with one of Mr. Zach's own compositions.

Mr. Zach, Mr. Ellis and Mr. Comee are to be congratulated on the manner in which the summer season of music has begun.

Louis C. Elson.

TWELFTH SEASON.

Commencing MONDAY,

May 10, the

MUSIC HALL

Promenade

Concerts.

Grand Orchestra of 50

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

Every Evening (Except Sunday), 8 to 11.

Tickets, with reserved seats, 50c.

ADMISSION, 25 CTS.

Sale opens tomorrow (Monday) morning at 9.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager. 1t my9

The Boston Traveler

PUBLISHED BY THE

BOSTON TRAVELER CO.

TUESDAY, MAY 11, 1897.

THE "POPS."

Brilliant Opening of Boston's Favorite Pre-Summer Entertainment.

The twelfth season of the "Pop" concerts opened at Music Hall last night with even more than the usual eclat and enthusiasm. Society folk were out in force, music lovers were not wanting and the elements and yuth, gaiety and beauty were so accurately welded that the resultant whole was a great delight. The hall had been decorated with a scenic meadow in the rear of the stage and much of its usual barrenness had vanished. Mr. Zach wielded the baton and all went as joyously as such a spring fete ought. This was the programme:

Marche Hongroise from "The Damnation of Faust" .... Berlioz
Overture, "Le Roi l'a dit" .... Delibes
(First time.)
Waltz, "Snowballs" .... Ziehrer
(First time.)
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile" .... Herbert
(First time.)
Ballet Music, "Feramors" .... Rubinstein
I. Dance of Bayaderes.
II. Candle Dance of the Brides of Kashmire.
Prelude to Act III. of "Cricket on the Hearth" .... Goldmark
(First time at these concerts.)
La Colombe .... Gounod
Prelude to "The Mastersingers" .... Wagner
Entree Triomphale des Boyards .... Halvorsen
Overture, "Pique Dame" .... Suppe
Waltz, "Artists' Life" .... Strauss
March, "Austria" .... Zach

Needless to say all these things were played to perfection. The same old enthusiasm was evoked, whether the music was old or new. There was an even quartet of novelties, and each seemed assured of a "Pop" place hereafter.

The programme for tonight is as follows:

March, "Princess Ninetta" .... Strauss
Overture, "Oberon" .... Weber
Waltz, "Meerleuchten" .... Ziehrer
Selection, "La Fille de Madame A got" .. Lecocq
Prelude to Act I., "Lohengrin" .... Wagner
Serenade Rococo, (for string orchestra) ......
Meyer-Helmund
(First time.)
Retraite Croate .... Gabriel-Marie
Two Hungarian Dances .... Brahms
Overture, "Barber of Seville" .... Rossini
Waltz, "Kaiser" .... Strauss
Mazourka, "La Mousme" .... Ganne
March, "Puppenfee" .... Bayer

Among the well known people in the audience were Mrs. John L. Gardner and party, which included Mr. Alexander Blaess and Mr. George Proctor, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Zerrahn, Miss Shattuck and Mr. Hugh Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Miss Olga Gardner and Dr. Monks, Mr. Apthorp and party, Mr. and Mrs. James Forsyth, Mr. Isador Braggiotti, Mr. Joseph Adamowski and party, Mr. George C. Lee, Jr., Mr. Roger Wolcott, Jr., Mr. Thomas L. Babson, Miss Grace Atwill, Mr. William E. Blake and party, Mr. and Mrs. Channing Rust, Mr. Fred Beebe and party, Mr. Frank Sears, Mr. H. C. Spaulding and party, Mr. Dan C. Lane and party, and Mr. Albert C. Leland and party.

Commencing Monday, May 10,

EVERY EVENING

(Except Sunday), 8 to 11.

MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

GRAND ORCHESTRA OF 50.

MR. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

Tickets, with reserved seats, 50c. On sale for any evening of season. Admission 25c.

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Mgr. C. A. ELLIS, Mgr. 19m

MUSIC HALL | PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Grand Orchestra of 50,

MR. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

Every Evening (except Sunday) 8 to 11.

Admission, 25c. Reserved Seats on Floor or in Balcony 50c.

C. A. ELLIS, Mgr.

F. R. COMEE, Asst. Mgr. 5t my11

Transcript – May 14 – 97

The programme for the Promenade Concert in Music Hall this evening is as follows:

1. March, "Feurig Blut" .... Vollstedt
2. Overture, "Zampa" .... Hérold
3. Waltz, "Arabian Nights" .... Strauss
4. Selection, "Poor Jonathan" .... Millöcker
5. Ballet music, "Queen of Sheba" .... Goldmark
('Cello obbligato, Mr. E. Loeffler.)
6. Le Dernier Sommeil de la Vierge ... Massenet
7. Two Slavonic Dances .... Dvorak
8. Ride of the Valkyries .... Wagner
9. Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana" .. Mascagni
10. Overture, "Fledermaus" .... Strauss
11. Polka, "Tyrolean" .... Zeller
12. March, "El Capitan" .... Sousa

Supplementing the musical season proper the Promenade Concerts in Music Hall are exciting general attention. Large audiences are nightly in attendance; and of the good work being done in the public's behalf by the management, Mr. Fred R. Comee, also by Conductors Max Zach and Schulz, appreciative attention will be further given next week.

Monday evening, May 12, the twelfth season of Promenade Concerts will begin at Music Hall, and the opening of this series of popular entertainments will mark the beginning of the summer musical season. Mr. C. A. Ellis, the manager, is in Europe, and, as usual, the real management of the concerts will be in the hands Mr. Frederick R. Comee. His success in past years in giving the public such enjoyable entertainment for the early summer evenings is evidence of his full understanding of what people like best at this time of the year. A pecular feature of the promenades is the fact that they are enjoyed by hundreds of people who do not care for classical concerts and who could not perhaps be induced to attend even one Symphony concert. Such folk, however, enjoy to the fullest extent at the promenades the same selections by leading composers which frequently have a place on a Symphony program. Again, regular patrons of the Symphony and other high-class concerts appear to have genuine pleasure in listening to selections which they have heard during the winter season, and these people also show their appreciation of the lighter class of music which is provided at the popular concerts. It was during the season when John C. Mullaly was conductor that the bold experiment of giving what may be considered as "heavy" music, as it is understood by many people, was first tried. With some of the Wagner overtures and similar selections he created among the patrons a strong liking for that class of music, and when such numbers were given there was left no doubt as to the wisdom of the experiment. Closer attention was then paid to music of the severe order than to that of a more frivolous character, and this respect and liking for the best compositions have been strengthened with each new season of promenades. In the class of light music probably the favorite selections are oftener found in selections from well-known popular operas than in other pieces. In the past seasons of these concerts there have been several conductors, among them being Ad. Neuendorff, Mr. Mullally, Wilhelm Rietzel, E. Gruenberg, Franz Kneisel, A. de Novellis, T. Adamowski and Max Zeach. All these conductors have been members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the exceptions of Mr. Neuendorff and Mr. de Novellis. This season there are to be fifty musicians, chosen from the Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Zach is to be the leader for the first four weeks of the season, and Mr. Leo Schultz, who sits at the first desk of the 'cello players in the Symphony ranks, is to be the conductor during the remaining four weeks.

The program of the opening concert on May 10 is as follows:

Marche Hongroise, from The Damnation of Faust .... Berlioz
Overture, Le Roi l'a Dit .... Dèlibes
(First time.)
Waltz, Snowballs .... Ziehrer
(First time.)
Selection, Wizard of the Nile .... Herbert
(First time.)
Ballet music, Feramors .... Rubinstein
Dance of Bayadères.
Candle Dance of the Brides of Kashmere.
Prelude to Act III. of The Cricket on the Hearth .... Goldmark
(First time at these concerts.)
La Colombe .... Gounod
Prelude to The Meistersingers of Nuremberg .... Wagner
Entrée Triomphale des Boyards .. .. Halvorsen
Overture, Pique Dame .... Suppé
Waltz, Artists' Life .... Strauss
March, Austria .... Zach

It will be seen that this includes four of what are called "first time" selections. A specialty will be made of these novelties all through the season. During the opening week several other numbers will be introduced for the first time in Boston

Equally good programs have been arranged for all the nights of the first week. Among some of the overtures to be played in that time will be that to Oberon, Weber; Barber of Seville, Rossini; Merry Wives of Windsor, Nicolai; Martha, Flotow; Tannhäuser, Wagner; Fra Diavolo, Auber; Zampa, Herold; Mignon, A. Thomas, and Rienzi, Wagner. These alone constitute no small undertaking, and with them there will be many other fine selections during the first evenings of the series. Some of the other good things promised are selections from Lohengrin, Faust, Il Trovatore, Queen of Sheba, Valkyrie, Cavalleria Rusticana, Sylvia, Carmen, Hungarian Dances by Brahms, a polonaise by Liszt, the Peer Gynt suite of Grieg, Massenet's Le Dernier Sommell de la Vierge, Slavonic Dances by Dvorák, Hymn to St. Cecilia, Gounod, and many other enjoyable numbers, including for lighter music selections from La Fille de Madame Angot; The Mandarin, De Koven's new opera; La Grande Duchesse, The Gypsy Baron, Poor Jonathan, El Capitan, Robin Hood, several Strauss and Waldteufel waltzes, marches and other popular music. All these varied selections have been given places in the programs of the first week, and a genuine treat is thus in store for music lovers.

Regular patrons of these concerts will be much interested in the first playing this season of the famous Grubenlichter, the waltz by Zeller, which was the most popular number played all through last year. It will have its initial hearing this season on the first Saturday evening, and other numbers to be played that same evening include The Wizard of the Nile, Herbert; overture to Mignon, A. Thomas; Espana, waltz, Waldteufel; Robin Hood, De Koven; ballet music from Sylvia, Dèlibes; Hymn to St. Cecila, Gounod, with violin solo part; Graceful Dance, Sullivan; overture, Rienzi, Wagner; selections from Carmen, Bizet. Besides these there will be one or two other numbers of less importance. A program embracing so many enjoyable things in one evening has rarely been offered at these promenade concerts.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

Successful Beginning of the "Pop" Concert Season.

"Sumer is icumen in," and its surest advance signal is the beginning of the Popular concerts in Music Hall. After the average Bostonian has reverently listened to his allowance of Brahms, and has gone through his share of Wagner and Beethoven, he turns with something like avidity to Strauss (not the dissonant Richard), to Suppe, to Offenbach, and to all the effervescence of the sparkling style of music.

Last night Mr. Zach held back a little from making too vivid a contrast with the serious concerts of the recent past, and Strauss was present in only a single number, while Wagner, Rubinstein, Berlioz, Goldmark, Gounod and Delibes, formed the chief part of the musical feast, and Jupiter Pluvius was powerless against Gambrinus and Apollo, for the hall was crowded.

It was a more ambitious programme than one usually finds in the popular course, but it seemed to be none the less popular on that account. The audience was heartily enthusiastic and the applause was constant. It was altogether as successful a beginning of the summer season as has yet been seen in Music Hall.

Mr. Zach was cordially welcomed and proved himself a most zealous and intelligent conductor, holding the men well together and achieving a commendable ensemble in even the difficult numbers of the programme.

It was distinctly a modern list of works that was presented. The very beginning showed the tendency of the concert, for Berlioz's "Marche Hongroise" (the great Rakoczy March) from the "Damnation of Faust" was the opening number. Its great crescendo was given with splendid effect, and its fierce and warlike character was excellently preserved, recalling the account that Berlioz gives of its first performance in Hungary, when a Hungarian gentleman suggested that Berlioz kney how to cut out the tryant's heart, judging by his music. Such a truculent melody as this ought to have been the instrumental music of the Reign of Terror; it would have suited far better to the spirit of '93 than any "Ca Ira" or "Carmagnole."

After this outburst of ferocity there came grace and gentility in music as expressed in Delibes' "Le Roi l'a Dit," a composition which did not require any great amount of thinking on the part of the auditors, nor any great exertion on the part of the excellent orchestra.

Spite of the good character of the first part of the programme, it was the second part of the concert, which, as usual, contained the chief numbers in a technical and musical point of view. This part began with the delightful ballet music from Rubinstein's "Feramors." Two numbers of this were given, the "Candle Dance" and the "Dance of the Bayaderes."

Following this came the prelude to the third act of Goldmark's setting of Dickens' "Cricket on the Hearth," made familiar to Bostonians only recently by its performance at the Symphony concerts. A very pretty orchestral number by Gounod—"La Colombe" won the chief triumph of the concert and was imperatively encored. This ambitious part of the programme ended with no less a number than the prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg," and its reception was sufficiently cordial to prove that the best of music will not be above appreciation at these concerts, if played as carefully and spiritedly as it was on this occasion.

The programme ended with one of Mr. Zach's own compositions.

Mr. Zach, Mr. Ellis and Mr. Comee are to be congratulated on the manner in which the summer season of music has begun.

Louis C. Elson.

TWELFTH SEASON.
Commencing MONDAY,
May 10, the
MUSIC HALL
Promenade
Concerts.
Grand Orchestra of 50
Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.
Every Evening (Except Sunday), 8 to 11.
Tickets, with reserved seats, 50c.
ADMISSION, 25 CTS.
Sale opens tomorrow (Monday) morning at 9.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Manager. 1t my2

The Boston Traveler
PUBLISHED BY THE
BOSTON TRAVELER CO.
TUESDAY, MAY 11, 1897.

THE "POPS."

Brilliant Opening of Boston's Favorite Pre-Summer Entertainment.

The twelfth season of the "Pop" concerts opened at Music Hall last night with even more than the usual eclat and enthusiasm. Society folk were out in force, music lovers were not wanting and the elements and yuth, gaiety and beauty were so accurately welded that the resultant whole was a great delight. The hall had been decorated with a scenic meadow in the rear of the stage and much of its usual barrenness had vanished. Mr. Zach wielded the baton and all went as joyously as such a spring fete ought. This was the programme:

Marche Hongroise from "The Damnation of Faust"....................Berlioz
Overture, "Le Roi 'a dit"....................Delibes
(First time.)
Waltz, "Snowballs"....................Ziehrer
(First time.)
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile"..........Herbert
(First time.)
Ballet Music, "Feramors"..........Rubinstein
I. Dance of Bayaderes.
II. Candle Dance of the Brides of Kashmire.
Prelude to Act III. of "Cricket on the "Hearth"....................Goldmark
(First time at these concerts.)
La Colombe....................Gounod
Prelude to "The Mastersingers"..........Wagner
Entree Triomphale des Boyards..........Halvorsen
Overture, "Pique Dame"....................Suppe
Waltz, "Artists' Life"....................Strauss
March, "Austria"....................Zach

Needless to say all these things were played to perfection. The same old enthusiasm was evoked, whether the music was old or new. There was an even quartet of novelties, and each seemed assured of a "Pop" place hereafter.

The programme for tonight is as follows:

March, "Princess Ninetta"....................Strauss
Overture, "Oberon"....................Weber
Waltz, "Meerleuchten"....................Ziehrer
Selection, "La Fille de Madame A got"..Lecocq
Prelude to Act I., "Lohengrin"..........Wagner
Serenade Rococo, (for string orchestra)......
Meyer-Helmund
(First time.)
Retraite Croate....................Gabriel-Marie
Two Hungarian Dances....................Brahms
Overture, "Barber of Seville"..........Rossini
Waltz, "Kaiser"....................Strauss
Mazourka, "La Mousme"....................Ganne
March, "Puppenfee"....................Bayer

Among the well known people in the audience were Mrs. John L. Gardner and party, which included Mr. Alexander Blaess and Mr. George Proctor, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Zerrahn, Miss Shattuck and Mr. Hugh Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Miss Olga Gardner and Dr. Monks, Mr. Apthorp and party, Mr. and Mrs. James Forsyth, Mr. Isador Braggiotti, Mr. Joseph Adamowski and party, Mr. George C. Lee, Jr., Mr. Roger Wolcott, Jr., Mr. Thomas L. Babson, Miss Grace Atwill, Mr. William E. Blake and party, Mr. and Mrs. Channing Rust, Mr. Fred Beebe and party, Mr. Frank Sears, Mr. H. C. Spaulding and party, Mr. Dan C. Lane and party, and Mr. Albert C. Leland and party.

Commencing Monday, May 10,
EVERY EVENING
(Except Sunday), 8 to 11.
MUSIC HALL
Promenade Concerts
GRAND ORCHESTRA OF 50.
MR. MAX ZACH, Conductor.
Tickets, with reserved seats, 50c. On sale for any evening of season. Admission 25c.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Mgr. C. A. ELLIS, Mgr. 19m

MUSIC HALL | PROMENADE CONCERTS.
Grand Orchestra of 50,
MR. MAX ZACH, Conductor.
Every Evening (except Sunday) 8 to 11.
Admission, 25c. Reserved Seats on Floor or in Balcony 50c.
C. A. ELLIS, Mgr.
F. R. COMEE, Asst. Mgr. 5t my11

Transcript - May 14 - 97

The programme for the Promenade Concert in Music Hall this evening is as follows:

1. March, "Feurig Blut"....................Vollstedt
2. Overture, "Zampa"....................Hérold
8. Waltz, "Arabian Nights"....................Strauss
4. Selection, "Poor Jonathan"..........Millöcker
5. Ballet music, "Queen of Sheba"....Goldmark
('Cello obbligato, Mr. E. Loeffler.)
6. Le Dernier Sommeil de la Vierge...Massenet
7. Two Slavonic Dances....................Dvorak
8. Ride of the Valkyries....................Wagner
9. Selection, "Cavalleria Rusticana"..Mascagni
10. Overture, "Fledermaus"....................Strauss
11. Polka, "Tyrolean"....................Zeller
12. March, "El Capitan"....................Sousa

—o—

Supplementing the musical season proper the Promenade Concerts in Music Hall are exciting general attention. Large audiences are nightly in attendance; and of the good work being done in the public's behalf by the management, Mr. Fred R. Comee, also by Conductors Max Zach and Schulz, appreciative attention will be further given next week.

Monday evening, May 12, the twelfth season of Promenade Concerts will begin at Music Hall, and the opening of this series of popular entertainments will mark the beginning of the summer musical season. Mr. C. A. Ellis, the manager, is in Europe, and, as usual, the real management of the concerts will be in the hands Mr. Frederick R. Comee. His success in past years in giving the public such enjoyable entertainment for the early summer evenings is evidence of his full understanding of what people like best at this time of the year. A pecular feature of the promenades is the fact that they are enjoyed by hundreds of people who do not care for classical concerts and who could not perhaps be induced to attend even one Symphony concert. Such folk, however, enjoy to the fullest extent at the promenades the same selections by leading composers which frequently have a place on a Symphony program. Again, regular patrons of the Symphony and other high-class concerts appear to have genuine pleasure in listening to selections which they have heard during the winter season, and these people also show their appreciation of the lighter class of music which is provided at the popular concerts. It was during the season when John C. Mullaly was conductor that the bold experiment of giving what may be considered as "heavy" music, as it is understood by many people, was first tried. With some of the Wagner overtures and similar selections he created among the patrons a strong liking for that class of music, and when such numbers were given there was left no doubt as to the wisdom of the experiment. Closer attention was then paid to music of the severe order than to that of a more frivolous character, and this respect and liking for the best compositions have been strengthened with each new season of promenades. In the class of light music probably the favorite selections are oftener found in selections from well-known popular operas than in other pieces. In the past seasons of these concerts there have been several conductors, among them being Ad. Neuendorff, Mr. Mullally, Wilhelm Rietzel, E. Gruenberg, Franz Kneisel, A. de Novellis, T. Adamowski and Max Zeach. All these conductors have been members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, with the exceptions of Mr. Neuendorff and Mr. de Novellis. This season there are to be fifty musicians, chosen from the Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Zach is to be the leader for the first four weeks of the season, and Mr. Leo Schultz, who sits at the first desk of the 'cello players in the Symphony ranks, is to be the conductor during the remaining four weeks.

The program of the opening concert on May 10 is as follows:

Marche Hongroise, from The Damnation of Faust............Berlioz
Overture, Le Roi l'a Dit....................Dèlibes
(First time.)
Waltz, Snowballs....................Ziehrer
(First time.)
Selection, Wizard of the Nile....................Herbert
(First time.)
Ballet music, Feramors....................Rubinstein
Dance of Bayadères.
Candle Dance of the Brides of Kashmere.
Prelude to Act III. of The Cricket on the Hearth..........Goldmark
(First time at these concerts.)
La Colombe....................Gounod
Prelude to The Meistersingers of Nuremberg..........Wagner
Entrée Triomphale des Boyards..........Halvorsen
Overture, Pique Dame....................Suppé
Waltz, Artists' Life....................Strauss
March, Austria....................Zach

It will be seen that this includes four of what are called "first time" selections. A specialty will be made of these novelties all through the season. During the opening week several other numbers will be introduced for the first time in Boston

Equally good programs have been arranged for all the nights of the first week. Among some of the overtures to be played in that time will be that to Oberon, Weber; Barber of Seville, Rossini; Merry Wives of Windsor, Nicolai; Martha, Flotow; Tannhäuser, Wagner; Fra Diavolo, Auber; Zampa, Herold; Mignon, A. Thomas, and Rienzi, Wagner. These alone constitute no small undertaking, and with them there will be many other fine selections during the first evenings of the series. Some of the other good things promised are selections from Lohengrin, Faust, Il Trovatore, Queen of Sheba, Valkyrie, Cavalleria Rusticana, Sylvia, Carmen, Hungarian Dances by Brahms, a polonaise by Liszt, the Peer Gynt suite of Grieg, Massenet's Le Dernier Sommell de la Vierge, Slavonic Dances by Dvorák, Hymn to St. Cecilia, Gounod, and many other enjoyable numbers, including for lighter music selections from La Fille de Madame Angot; The Mandarin, De Koven's new opera; La Grande Duchesse, The Gypsy Baron, Poor Jonathan, El Capitan, Robin Hood, several Strauss and Waldteufel waltzes, marches and other popular music. All these varied selections have been given places in the programs of the first week, and a genuine treat is thus in store for music lovers.

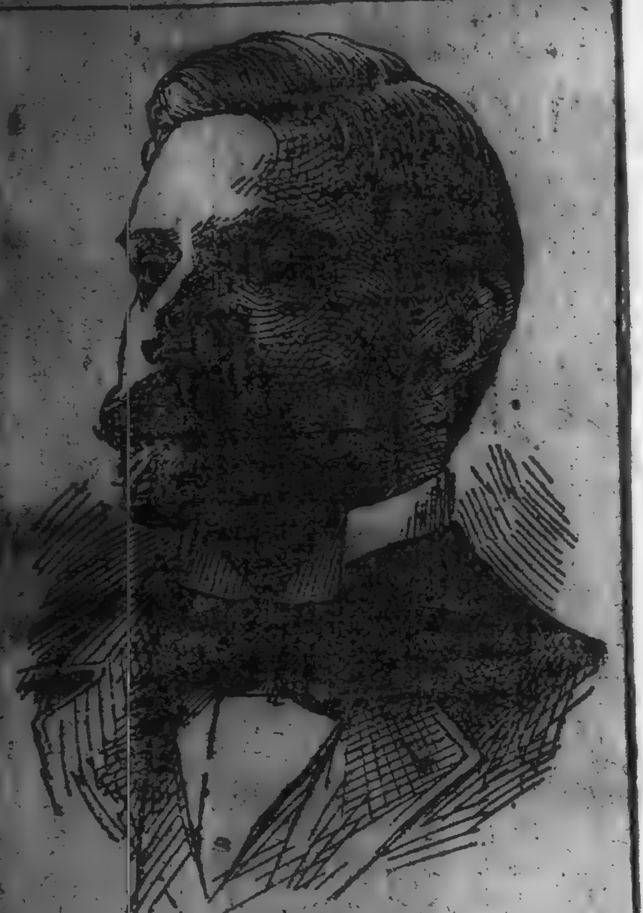
Regular patrons of these concerts will be much interested in the first playing this season of the famous Grubenlichter, the waltz by Zeller, which was the most popular number played all through last year. It will have its initial hearing this season on the first Saturday evening, and other numbers to be played that same evening include The Wizard of the Nile, Herbert; overture to Mignon, A. Thomas; Espana, waltz, Waldteufel; Robin Hood, De Koven; ballet music from Sylvia, Dèlibes; Hymn to St. Cecila, Gounod, with violin solo part; Graceful Dance, Sullivan; overture, Rienzi, Wagner; selections from Carmen, Bizet. Besides these there will be one or two other numbers of less importance. A program embracing so many enjoyable things in one evening has rarely been offered at these promenade concerts.

Boston Globe
May 2-"97

Music Hall "Pop" Concerts.

The 13th season of the Music hall promenade concerts will open Monday evening, May 10. Ever since the inauguration of these deservedly popular entertainments in 1885 each season has been a repetition of its predecessor in crowded houses and continued success.

No sooner is the symphony season finished than the lovers of light music, interspersed with an occasional refreshment of the inner man, begin to ask, "When do the pops open?" The above announcement will be a welcome reply to the inevitable question. The details of these entertainments will be practically the same as in past seasons, except that an effort will be made to introduce some novelties in the way of interior decorations.

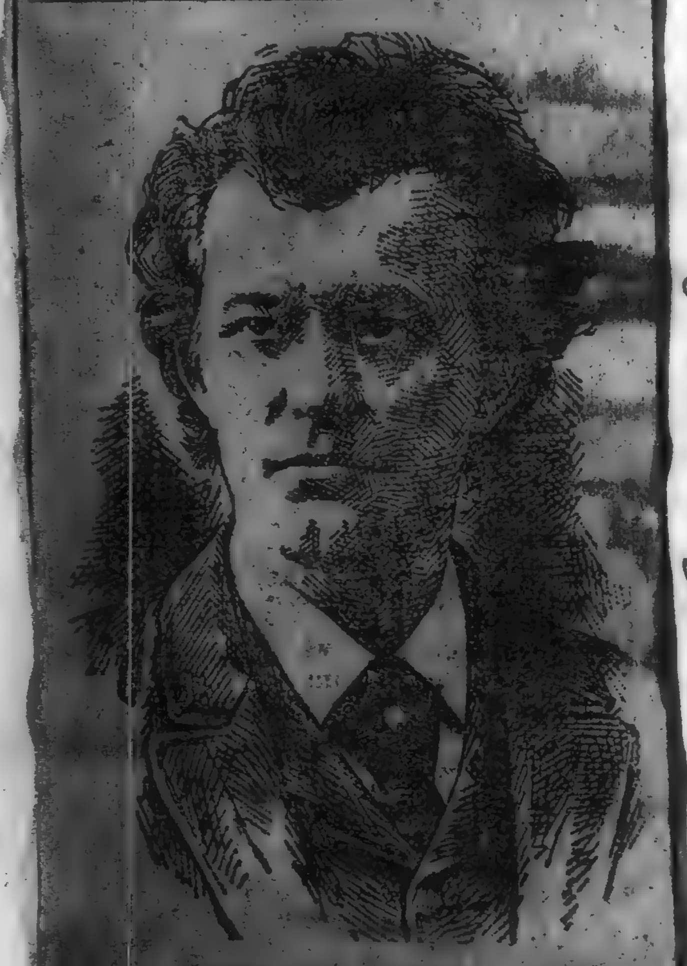


MR MAX ZACH.

As far as the programs are concerned, several novelties will be introduced which it is expected will prove as attractive as some of the old-time favorites, which will be, of course, repeated.

Two conductors have been selected by the management, Mr Max Zach, who will be very pleasantly remembered as a universal favorite last season and who will conduct the first half of the concerts.

The new comer will be Mr Leo Schulz, who will conduct the closing half of the series. Mr Schulz sits at the first desk of the cellists in the Boston symphony orchestra, with Mr Alwin Schroeder, and is the seventh member of this organization chosen to fill the position of conductor. Mr Schulz will be recalled as having conducted at these concerts his own compositions, "Patriotic Overture" and "Columbian March," and he is fully qualified to take rank with his predecessors in this important position.



MR LEO SCHULZ.

The number of reserved tables on the floor of the hall will be slightly increased in answer to the very general request on the part of many patrons who were unable to secure choice places last season. There will also be the same liberal provision in the way of unreserved tables for the purchasers of the regular admission tickets. All the side seats in the first balcony will be reserved for patrons who do not wish to sit at the tables, and the entire second balcony, like the unreserved tables on the floor, will be open to any one.

Conductor Zach has already made the programs for the first week, and every assurance is given that the musical standard of these concerts will be maintained on the same high plane as heretofore.

In the absence of manager Charles A. Ellis in Europe, the concerts wil be under the management of assistant manager F. R. Comee.

Boston Journal May 2-'97

MR. MAX ZACH. MR. LEO SCHULZ.

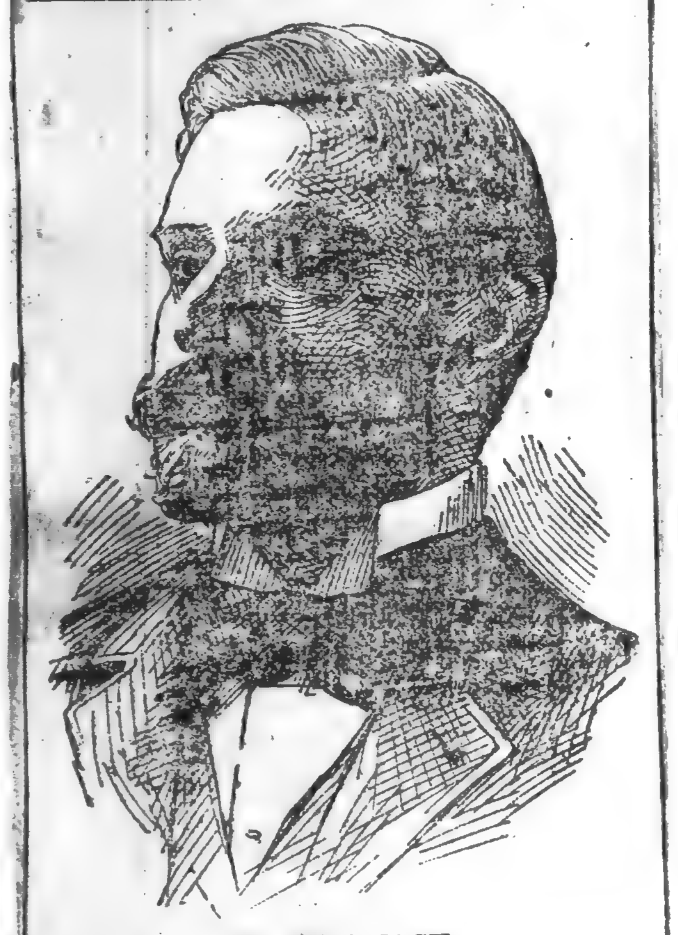
THE TWO CONDUCTORS OF THE COMING "POP" CONCERTS AT MUSIC HALL. SEE PAGE 10.

Boston Globe
May 2 - '97

Music Hall "Pop" Concerts.

The 12th season of the Music hall promenade concerts will open Monday evening, May 10. Ever since the inauguration of these deservedly popular entertainments in 1885 each season has been a repetition of its predecessor in crowded houses and continued success.

No sooner is the symphony season finished than the lovers of light music, interspersed with an occasional refreshment of the inner man, begin to ask, "When do the pops open?" The above announcement will be a welcome reply to the inevitable question. The details of these entertainments will be practically the same as in past seasons, except that an effort will be made to introduce some novelties in the way of interior decorations.

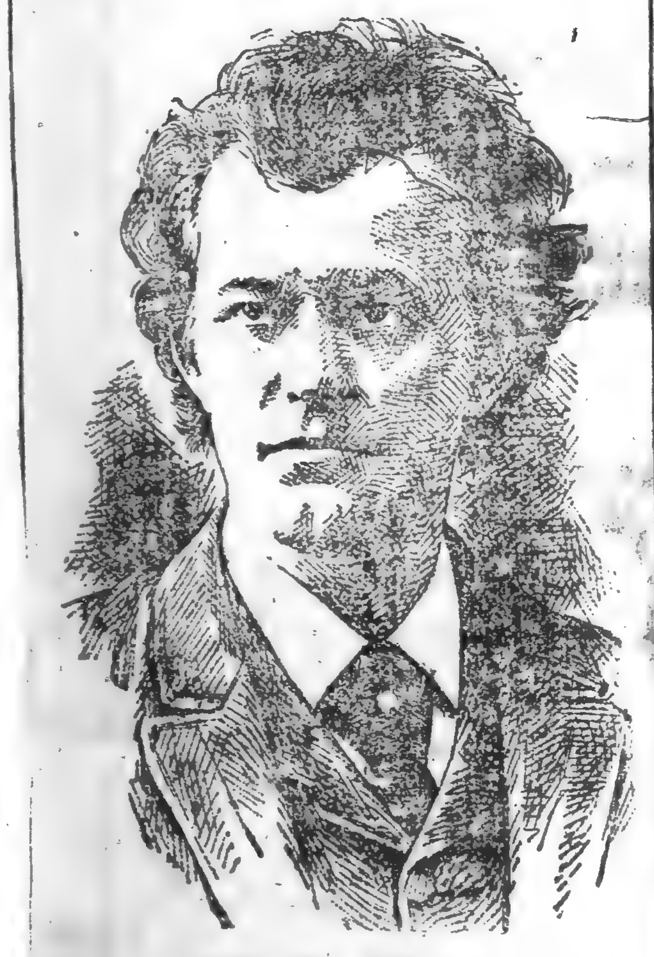


MR MAX ZACH.

As far as the programs are concerned, several novelties will be introduced which it is expected will prove as attractive as some of the old-time favorites, which will be, of course, repeated.

Two conductors have been selected by the management, Mr Max Zach, who will be very pleasantly remembered as a universal favorite last season and who will conduct the first half of the concerts.

The new comer will be Mr Leo Schulz, who will conduct the closing half of the series. Mr Schulz sits at the first desk of the cellists in the Boston symphony orchestra, with Mr Alwin Schroeder, and is the seventh member of this organization chosen to fill the position of conductor. Mr Schulz will be recalled as having conducted at these concerts his own compositions, "Patriotic Overture" and "Columbian March," and he is fully qualified to take rank with his predecessors in this important position.



MR LEO SCHULZ.

The number of reserved tables on the floor of the hall will be slightly increased in answer to the very general request on the part of many patrons who were unable to secure choice places last season. There will also be the same liberal provision in the way of unreserved tables for the purchasers of the regular admission tickets. All the side seats in the first balcony will be reserved for patrons who do not wish to sit at the tables, and the entire second balcony, like the unreserved tables on the floor, will be open to any one.

Conductor Zach has already made the programs for the first week, and every assurance is given that the musical standard of these concerts will be maintained on the same high plane as heretofore.

In the absence of manager Charles A. Ellis in Europe, the concerts will be under the management of assistant manager F. R. Comee.

Boston Journal May 2 '97

MR. LEO SCHULZ.

MR. MAX ZACH.

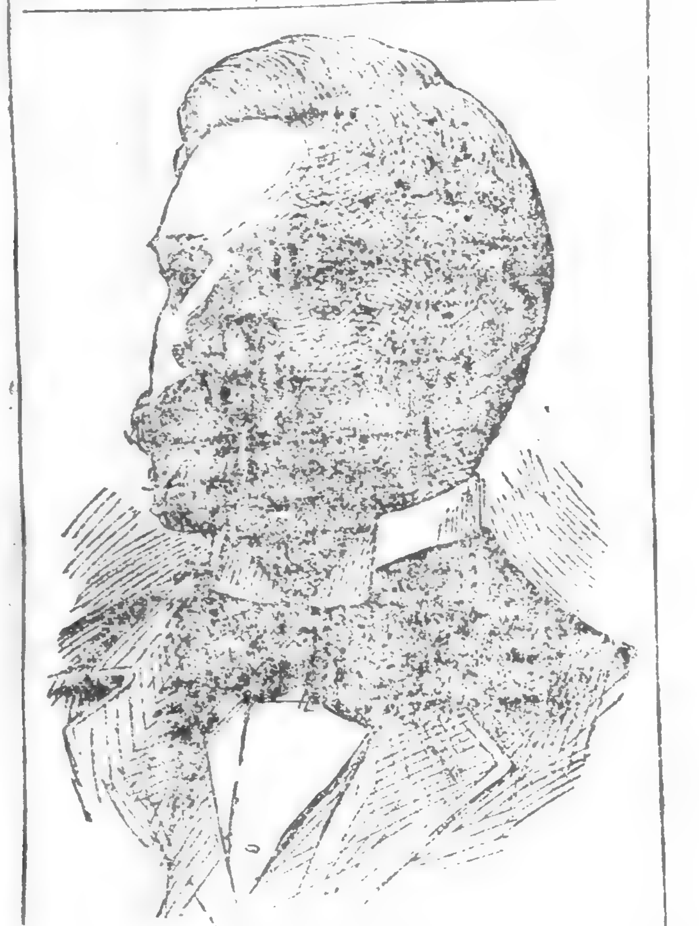
THE TWO CONDUCTORS OF THE COMING "POP" CONCERTS AT MUSIC HALL. SEE PAGE 10.

Boston Globe
May 2 – '97

Music Hall "Pop" Concerts.

The 12th season of the Music hall promenade concerts will open Monday evening, May 10. Ever since the inauguration of these deservedly popular entertainments in 1885 each season has been a repetition of its predecessor in crowded houses and continued success.

No sooner is the symphony season finished than the lovers of light music, interspersed with an occasional refreshment of the inner man, begin to ask, "When do the pops open?" The above announcement will be a welcome reply to the inevitable question. The details of these entertainments will be practically the same as in past seasons, except that an effort will be made to introduce some novelties in the way of interior decorations.

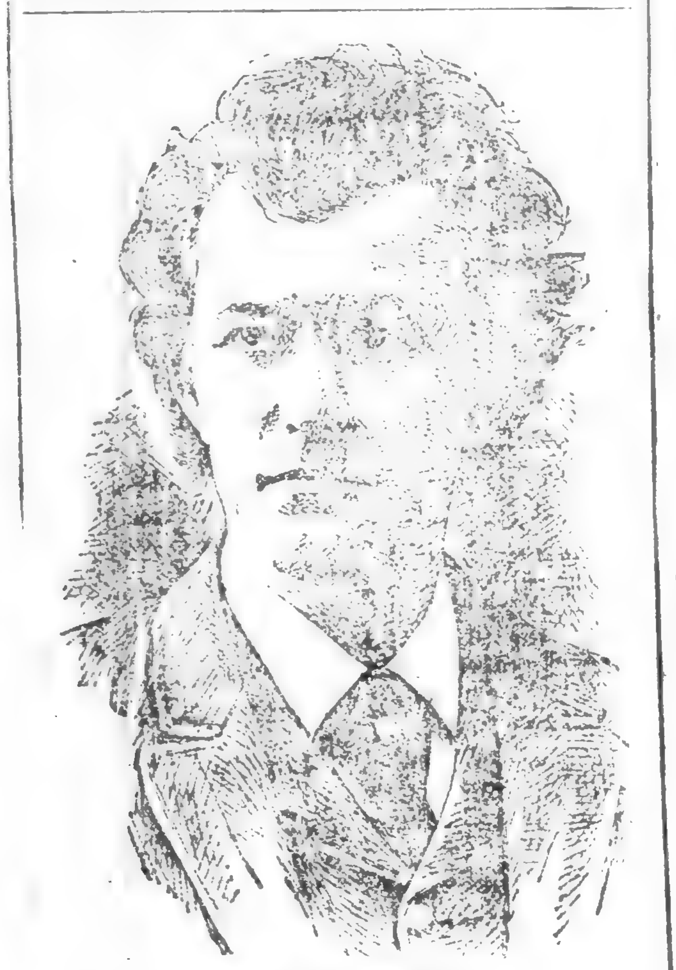


MR MAX ZACH.

As far as the programs are concerned, several novelties will be introduced which it is expected will prove as attractive as some of the old-time favorites, which will be, of course, repeated.

Two conductors have been selected by the management, Mr Max Zach, who will be very pleasantly remembered as a universal favorite last season and who will conduct the first half of the concerts.

The new comer will be Mr Leo Schulz, who will conduct the closing half of the series. Mr Schulz sits at the first desk of the cellists in the Boston symphony orchestra, with Mr Alwin Schroeder, and is the seventh member of this organization chosen to fill the position of conductor. Mr Schulz will be recalled as having conducted at these concerts his own compositions, "Patriotic Overture" and "Columbian March," and he is fully qualified to take rank with his predecessors in this important position.



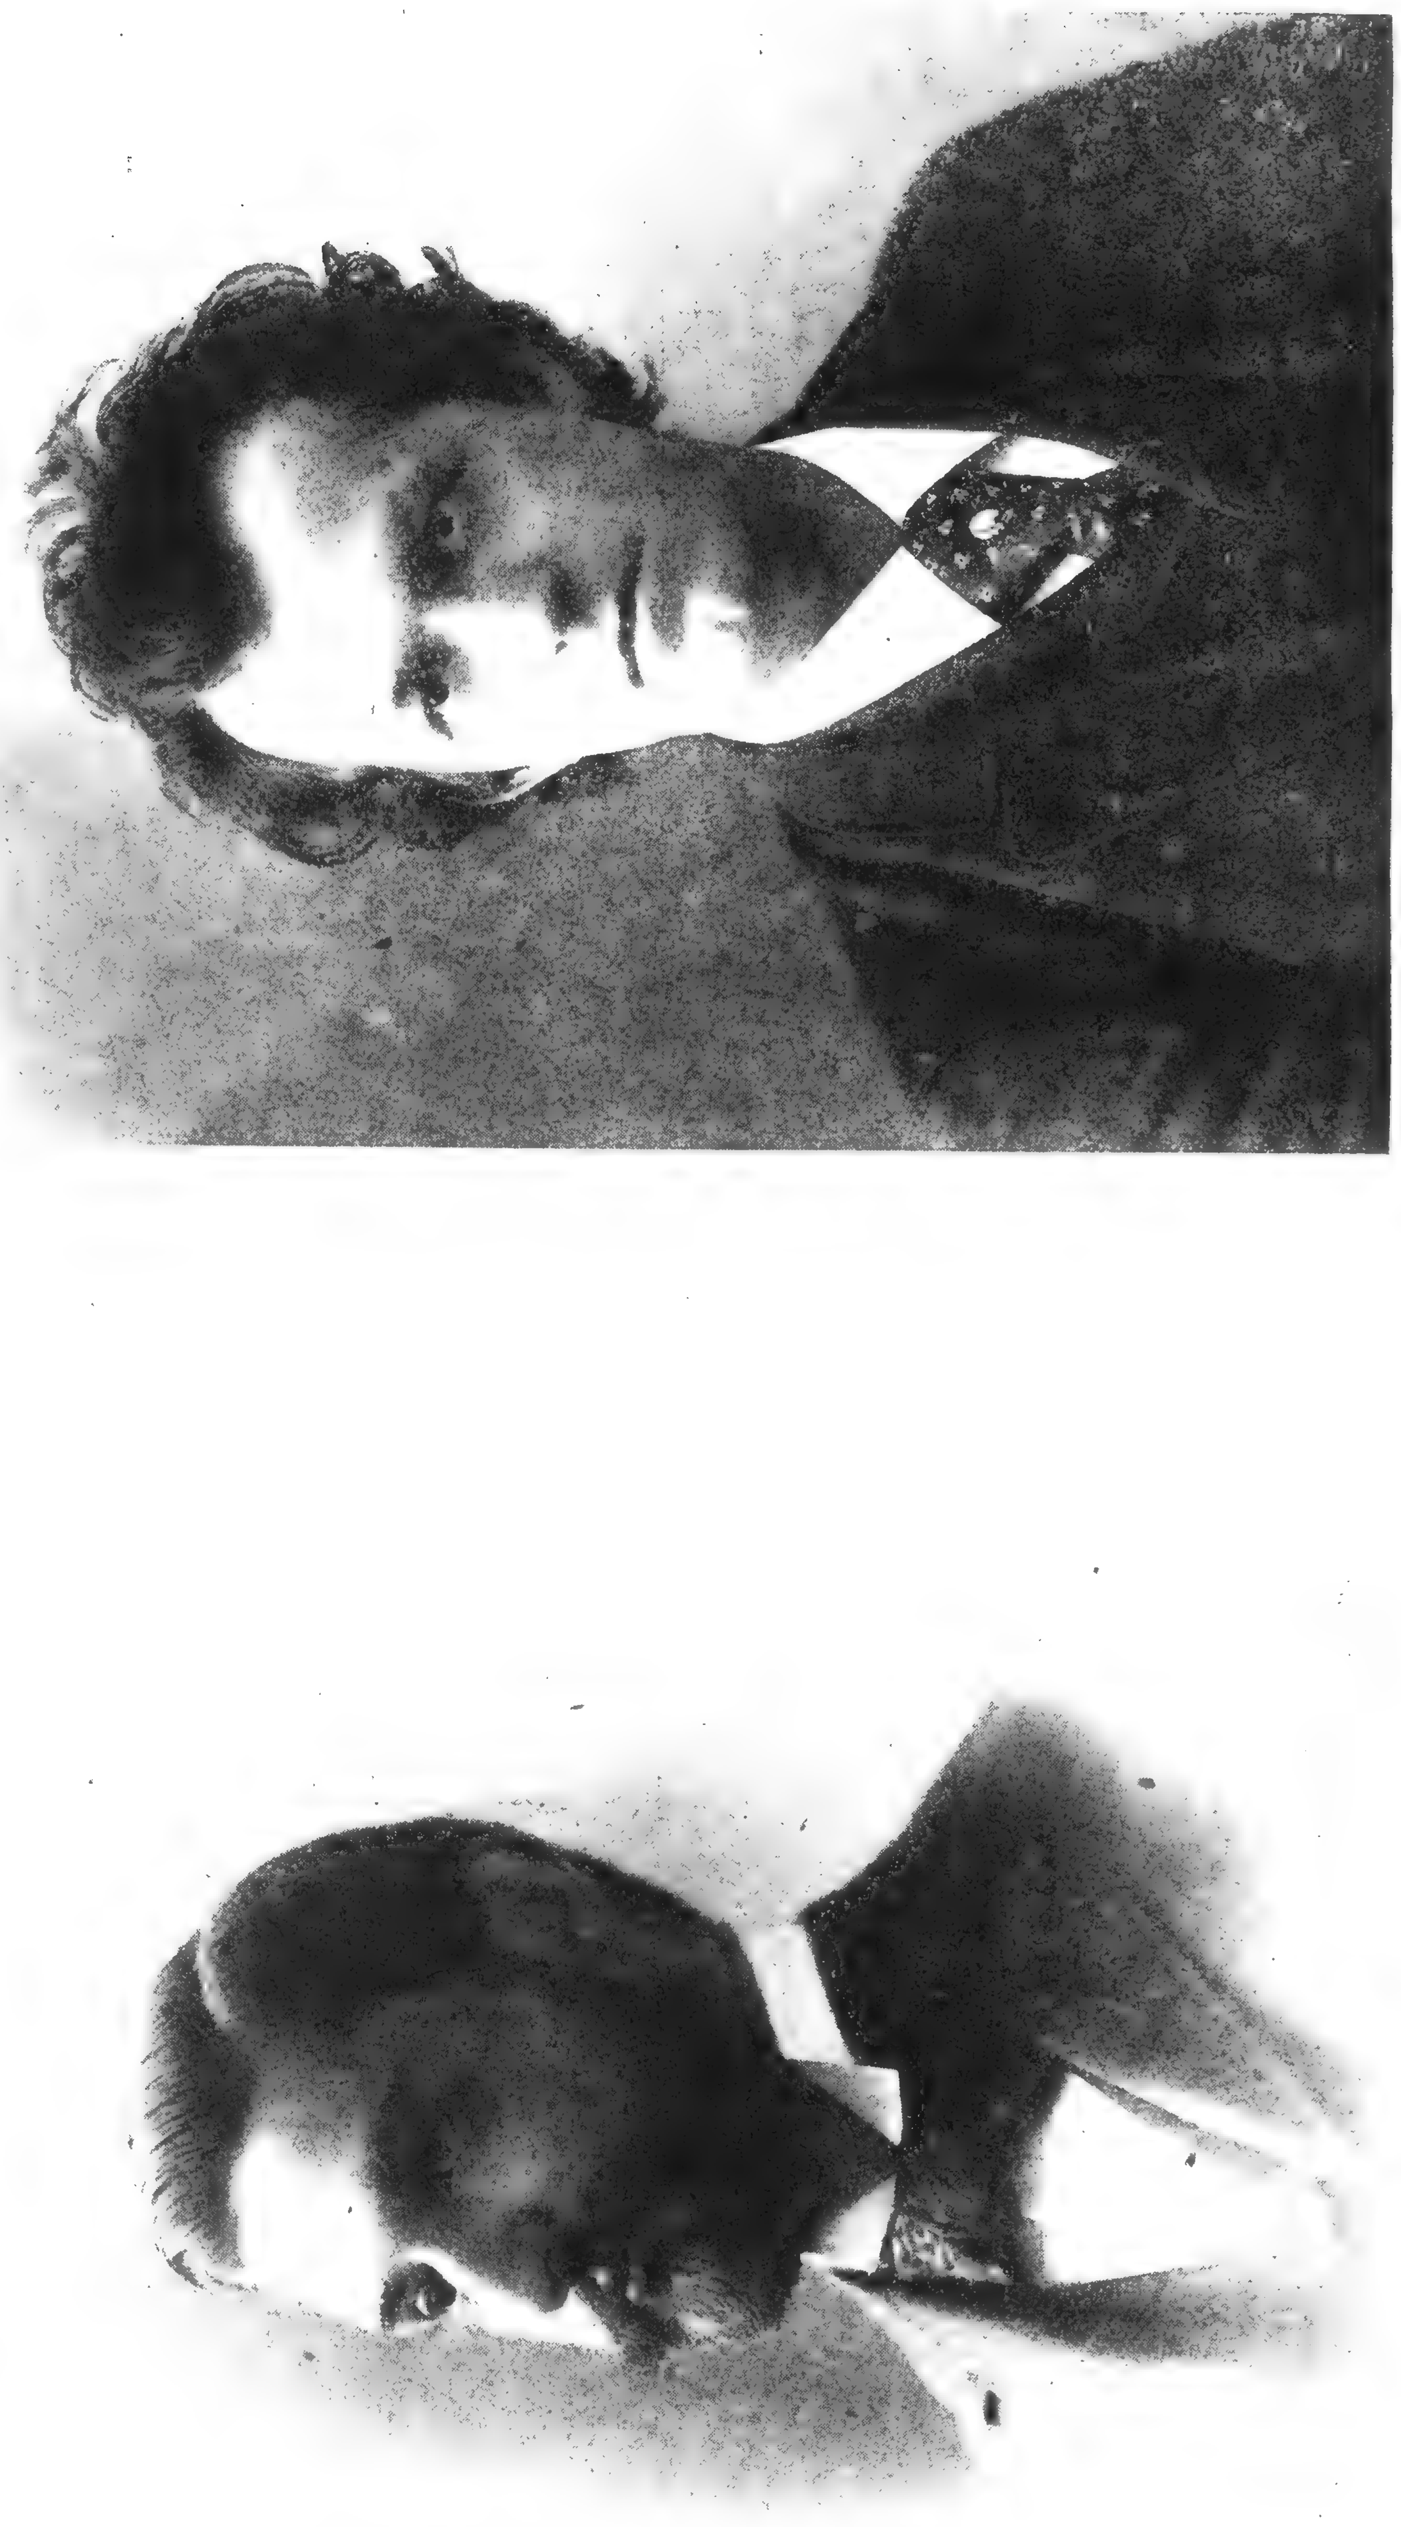
MR LEO SCHULZ.

The number of reserved tables on the floor of the hall will be slightly increased in answer to the very general request on the part of many patrons who were unable to secure choice places last season. There will also be the same liberal provision in the way of unreserved tables for the purchasers of the regular admission tickets. All the side seats in the first balcony will be reserved for patrons who do not wish to sit at the tables, and the entire second balcony, like the unreserved tables on the floor, will be open to any one.

Conductor Zach has already made the programs for the first week, and every assurance is given that the musical standard of these concerts will be maintained on the same high plane as heretofore.

In the absence of manager Charles A. Ellis in Europe, the concerts wil be under the management of assistant manager F. R. Comee.

Boston Journal May 2 '97



MR. MAX ZACH.

MR. LEO SCHULZ.

THE TWO CONDUCTORS OF THE COMING "POP" CONCERTS AT MUSIC HALL. SEE PAGE 10.

Fall River Bulletin

Boston Music Hall,

EVERY EVENING

(Except Sunday), 8 to 11.

Music Hall | Promenade Concerts...

GRAND ORCHESTRA OF 50.

MR. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

Tickets, with reserved seats, 50c. On sale for any evening of season. Admission 25c.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager, F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

Music Hall Promenade Concerts.

The 12th season of the promenade concerts at Music Hall opened most auspiciously on Monday evening last, and the audiences both on that evening and the following ones of the week have been notable for the fashionable contingent present, "Society" being well represented at every concert. These entertainments are always most welcome at this season of the year and they form a fitting close to a season of attractions of a more serious nature. The music, mostly of a light order, is admirably performed by a well selected orchestra. Conductor Max Zach has been greeted with considerable applause and has renewed the favor with which he was received last year; his programmes are always selected with the greatest of care and always give satisfaction. The service at the tables is all that could be desired and the decorations are both pleasing and effective. All in all, there is every evidence that the popularity of these concerts will be greater, if anything, than in any past year, and the management is well deserving of its success, for nothing is left undone for both the convenience and amusement of patrons.

MUSIC HALL | PROMENADE CONCERTS

50 Grand Orchestra 50

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

POPULAR MUSIC

EVERY EVENING

(Except Sunday) 8 to 11.

ADMISSION - - 25c.

Reserved Seats on floor or in Balcony 50c.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Ass't Mgr.

---

gelan.

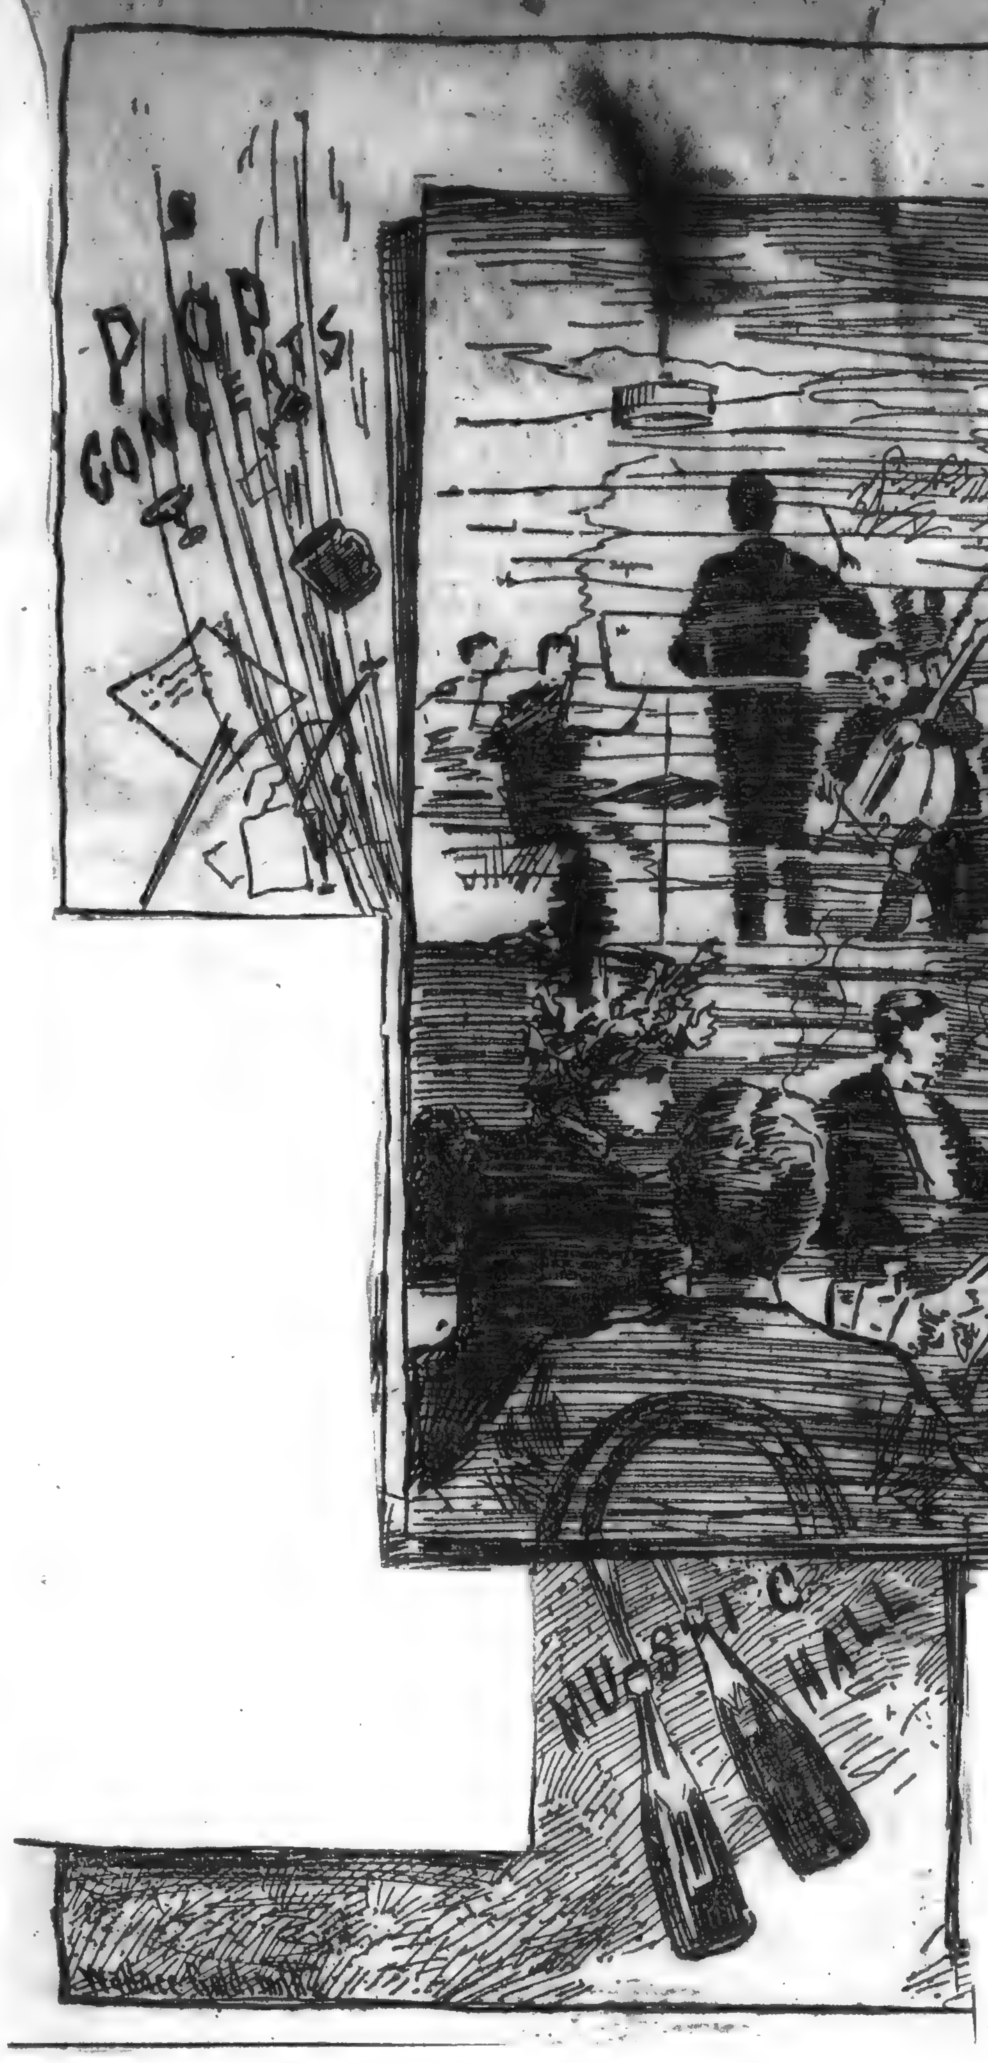
THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The first week of the twelfth season of these popular entertainments began last Monday evening as successful as ever. The threatening weather during the week did not materially affect the attendance, as every reserved seat at the tables was sold for each evening. The orchestra, under the leadership of Max Zach, never played better. The programmes have had an unusual attractiveness, including a number of novelties, and Mr. Zach promises many more, together with the most popular selections of past seasons.

The programme for tomorrow evening is:

March, "Parapluie," Bayer; Overture, "Light Cavalry," Suppe; waltz, "Les Patineurs," Waldteufel; selection, "Beggar Student," Milloecker; (a) sevillana, Massenet; (b) serenata, Moszkowski; Hungarian rhapsody in F, Liszt; Traeumeri, Schumann; ballet music from "Samson and Dalila," Saint-Saens; (a) dance of the priestesses, (b) Bacchanale (first time); overture, "Masaniello," Auber; waltz, "O Schoner Mai," Strauss; polka, "Sanger- [illegible]

THE BOSTON TRAVELER, SATURDAY, MAY 15, 1897.



THE POP CONCERTS.

The weather clerk has tried very hard all the past week to discourage the attendance at these popular entertainments, but even this formidable opposition has been overcome. Every night the same good-natured crowd of society folk, business men, statesmen and students have filled the floor, inside the reserved rail and outside. The twelfth season has opened most auspiciously. Conductor Zach has renewed the pleasant impression of last year, there is a welcome variety in the decorations, and the "Pops" are a stronger feature of Boston's amusement season than ever. Appended is the program for tomorrow night:

March, "Parapluie" .... Bayer
Overture, "Light Cavalry" .... Suppe
Waltz, "Les Patineurs" .... Waldteufel
Selection, "Beggar Student" .... Milloecker
Sevillana .... Massenet
Serenata .... Moskowski
Hungarian Rhapsody in F .... Liszt
Traeumerei .... Schumann
Ballet music from "Samson and Dalila" .... Saint-Saens
(First time.)
Overture "Masaniello" .... Auber
Waltz, "O Schoner Mai" .... Strauss
Polka, "Sangerlust" .... Strauss
March, "Boccaccio" .... Suppe

The number of people who have already left for their summer homes is large, and the season promises to be earlier than usual, but for those who have stayed in town the "Pops" have proved, as usual, a source of great delight, and the fashionable audiences which have been noted there have been as large as usual. On the opening night among those noted were Mrs. John L. Gardner and party, which included Mr. Alexander Blaess and Mr. George Proctor, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Zerrahn, Miss Shattuck and Mr. Hugh Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Miss Olga Gardner and Dr. Monks, Mr. Apthorp and party, Mr. and Mrs. James Forsyth, Mr. Isadore Braggiotti, Mr. Joseph Adamowski and party, Mr. George C. Lee, Jr., Mr. Roger Wolcott, Jr., Mr. Thomas L. Babson, Miss Grace Atwill, Mr. William E. Blake and party, Mr. and Mrs. Channing Rust, Mr. Fred Beebe and party, Mr. Frank Sears, Mr. H. C. Spaulding and party, Mr. Dan C. Lane and party, and Mr. Albert C. Leland and party.

—A notable figure at the Promenade concert Tuesday evening was Mr. George Fred Williams with Congressman McCall. Mr. George Merriam of the Somerset Club entertained a large party, Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] had eight guests, Mrs. John L. Gardner entertained Miss Olga Gardner, Mr. Proctor and [illegible]. Others present were Commodore Perkins and Miss Isabel Perkins with friends, Mr. Charles Hayden and guests, Dr. and Mrs. L. B. Fenderson and party, Rev. and Mrs. A. A. Berle and Mr. Clayton Johns.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Society has availed itself all the week of the opportunity which the "pops" are offering for amusement now that the wheel of divertisements is at its lowest ebb. Max Zach has prepared just such programmes as are a desirable accompaniment to gossip and beer, and Manager Comee's guiding spirit has been felt in the excellent arrangements for the personal comfort and enjoyment of those who have attended. Perhaps the most brilliant audience of the week was that of Monday evening. Among those noticed were Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mr. Franz Zerrahn, Mr. E. P. Whitney and Hugh Whitney of Milton and Miss Shattuck, Mr. William Apthorp, Roger Wolcott, jr., Mrs. C. E. Inches, William Blake, Mr. and Mrs. James Forsaith, Isadore Braggiotti, Josef Adamowski, Robert Hooper, Ex-Represetative Russell, Ex Senator Richard Sullivan, Mr. Alexander Blaess, Mr. George Proctor, Mr and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Miss Olga Gardner, Dr. Monks, Mr. and Mrs. James Forsyth, Mr. George C. Lee, jr., Mr. Thomas L. Babson, Miss Grace Atwell, Mr. William E Blake, Mr. and Mrs. Channing Rust, Mr. Fred Beebe, Mr. Frank Sears, Mr. H. C. Spaulding Mr. Dan C. Laue and Mr. Albert C. Leland.

Musical Courier

The twelfth season of the Pop concerts, or promenade concerts, began May 10 at Music Hall under the management of Mr. Fred R. Comee. Mr. Max Zach was the conductor. In spite of the disagreeable weather throughout the past week, there has been a good attendance.

The most striking feature of these concerts is the deliberate endeavor of many within the pen built on the floor for the pleasure of those who are anxious to pay more than is required of those without, is the deliberate endeavor, I say, to be gay and reckless. Climate and heredity have chastened the spirits of the New Englander. He has been taught that it is wrong to drink beer or wine in the face of a public; that music, with beer or wine, is of itself immoral. And although men and women whose names are kept standing in type for the convenience of the society editor honor these concerts by their patronage and drink or smoke in a genteel and easy fashion, the humble imitators are evidently uneasy. Perhaps they expect the lightning to stab offenders or Satan to arise through the platform, snatch the baton from Mr. Zach, and lead a waltz by his forest cousin or Strauss.

I regret to say that many don evening dress for these concerts. I do not refer to the man who contracted the clawhammer at an early age. There are males who invariably wear evening dress at dinner. For such to appear at a Pop concert in day dress would be an affectation. Nor are they often taken for waiters.

Informality is the essence of enjoyment at a Pop. Not that it is necessary for a man to go so far as to sit in his shirt sleeves, put his weary feet on a table, or ask strange women within the gates whether they know a sure remedy for eczema, which is a nervous disease, excited by mental activity. Thus if a triolet is accompanied by a trace of eczema, an epic poem would blaze its way from hip to neck. In other words, the cube of thought varies directly with the square of eczema.

But the sight of a man conscious of his dress, looking occasionally at his patent leathers to see if he was thorough in removing the protecting vaseline, is a kill-joy. And when the name of the man is Legion, the atmosphere is charged with formality.

Germans are never weary of saying that the American is not naturally gemüthlich. There is a gemüthlichkeit in Southern Germany dear to the aufbold of the Fliegende Blätter. This hitting a stranger on the back so as to make him feel at home is by some known as gemüthlichkeit; but it will be long before the native American understands the true meaning of the word. It is hard for a Bostonian to unbend in public. That his joints are gradually becoming looser—thanks to such educating influences as the Pops—is recognized by the enlightened press of the city with pleasure not unmixed with wonderment and awe.

PHILIP HALE.

Fall River Bulletin

Boston Music Hall,

EVERY EVENING

(Except Sunday), 8 to 11.

Music Hall | Promenade Concerts...

GRAND ORCHESTRA OF 50.

MR. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

Tickets, with reserved seats, 50c. On sale for any evening of season. Admission 25c.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager, F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

Music Hall Promenade Concerts.

The 12th season of the promenade concerts at Music Hall opened most auspiciously on Monday evening last, and the audiences both on that evening and the following ones of the week have been notable for the fashionable contingent present, "Society" being well represented at every concert. These entertainments are always most welcome at this season of the year and they form a fitting close to a season of attractions of a more serious nature. The music, mostly of a light order, is admirably performed by a well selected orchestra. Conductor Max Zach has been greeted with considerable applause and has renewed the favor with which he was received last year; his programmes are always selected with the greatest of care and always give satisfaction. The service at the tables is all that could be desired and the decorations are both pleasing and effective. All in all, there is every evidence that the popularity of these concerts will be greater, if anything, than in any past year, and the management is well deserving of its success, for nothing is left undone for both the convenience and amusement of patrons.

MUSIC HALL | PROMENADE CONCERTS

50 Grand Orchestra 50

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

POPULAR MUSIC

EVERY EVENING

(Except Sunday) 8 to 11.

ADMISSION - - 25c.

Reserved Seats on floor or in Balcony 50c.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Ass't Mgr.

gician.

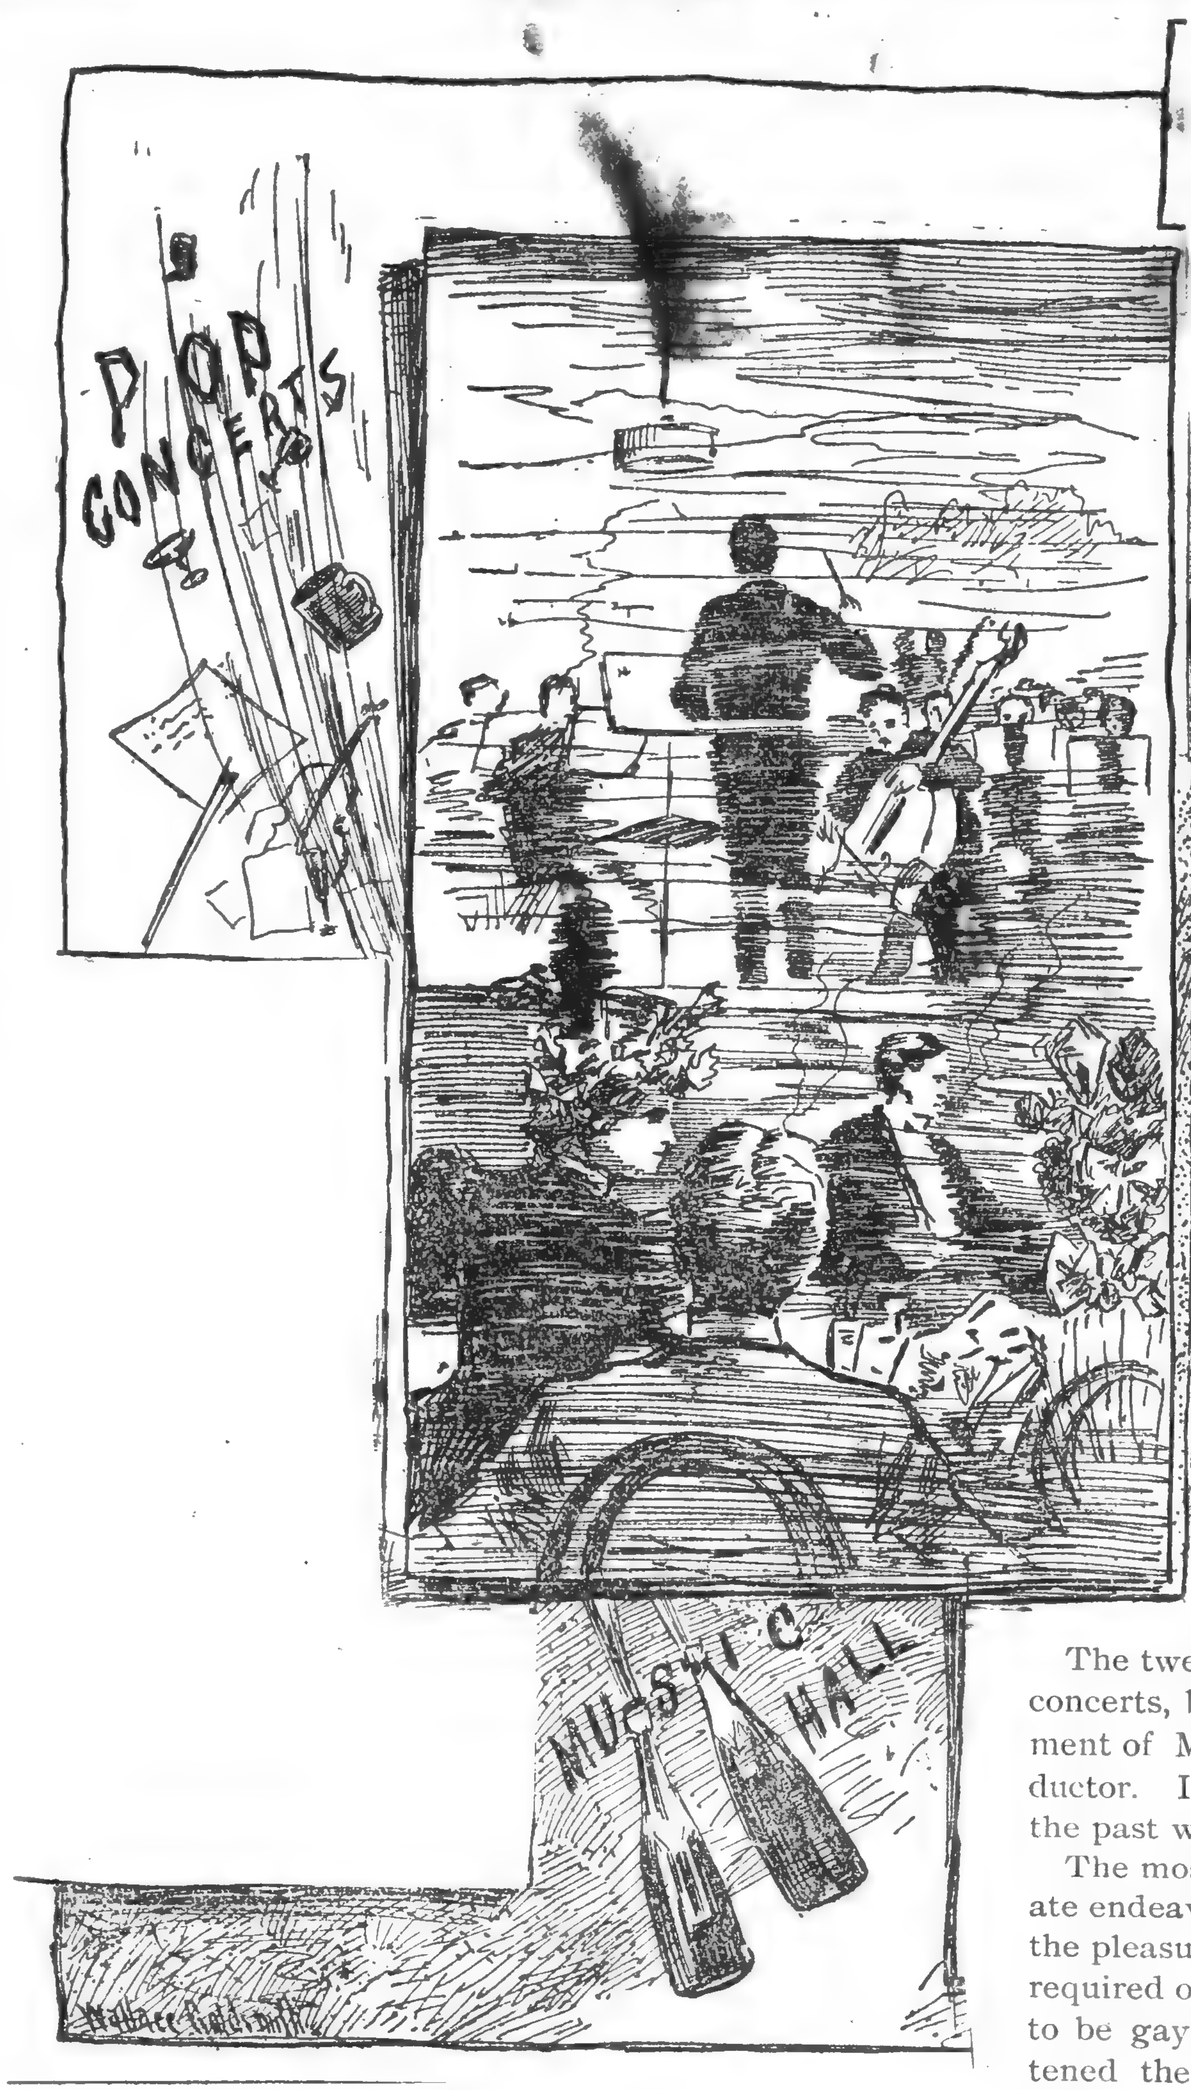
THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The first week of the twelfth season of these popular entertainments began last Monday evening as successful as ever. The threatening weather during the week did not materially affect the attendance, as every reserved seat at the tables was sold for each evening. The orchestra, under the leadership of Max Zach, never played better. The programmes have had an unusual attractiveness, including a number of novelties, and Mr. Zach promises many more, together with the most popular selections of past seasons.

The programme for tomorrow evening is:

March, "Paraplule," Bayer; Overture, "Light Cavalry," Suppe; waltz, "Les Patineurs," Waldteufel; selection, "Beggar Student," Milloecker; (a) sevillana, Massenet; (b) serenata, Moszkowski; Hungarian rhapsody in F, Liszt; Traeumeri, Schumann; ballet music from "Samson and Dalila," Saint-Saens; (a) dance of the priestesses, (b) Bacchanale (first time); overture, "Masaniello," Auber; waltz, "O Schoner Mai," Strauss; polka, "Sangerlust," Strauss; march, "Boccaccio," Suppe.

THE BOSTON TRAVELER, SATURDAY, MAY 15, 1897.



THE POP CONCERTS.

The weather clerk has tried very hard all the past week to discourage the attendance at these popular entertainments, but even this formidable opposition has been overcome. Every night the same good-natured crowd of society folk, business men, statesmen and students have filled the floor, inside the reserved rail and outside. The twelfth season has opened most auspiciously. Conductor Zach has renewed the pleasant impression of last year, there is a welcome variety in the decorations, and the "Pops" are a stronger feature of Boston's amusement season than ever. Appended is the program for tomorrow night:

March, "Parapluie"	Bayer
Overture, "Light Cavalry"	Suppe
Waltz, "Les Patineurs"	Waldteufel
Selection, "Beggar Student"	Milloecker
Sevillana	Massenet
Serenata	Moskowski
Hungarian Rhapsody in F	Liszt
Traeumerei	Schumann
Ballet music from "Samson and Dalila" (First time.)	Saint-Saens
Overture "Masaniello"	Auber
Waltz, "O Schoner Mai"	Strauss
Polka, "Sangerlust"	Strauss
March, "Boccaccio"	Suppe

[illegible]

The number of people who have already left for their summer homes is large, and the season promises to be earlier than usual, but for those who have stayed in town the "Pops" have proved, as usual, a source of great delight, and the fashionable audiences which have been noted there have been as large as usual. On the opening night among those noted were Mrs. John L. Gardner and party, which included Mr. Alexander Blaess and Mr. George Proctor, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Zerrahn, Miss Shattuck and Mr. Hugh Whitney, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Miss Olga Gardner and Dr. Monks, Mr. Apthorp and party, Mr. and Mrs. James Forsyth, Mr. Isadore Braggiotti, Mr. Joseph Adamowski and party, Mr. George C. Lee, Jr., Mr. Roger Wolcott, Jr., Mr. Thomas L. Babson, Miss Grace Atwill, Mr. William E. Blake and party, Mr. and Mrs. Channing Rust, Mr. Fred Beebe and party, Mr. Frank Sears, Mr. H. C. Spaulding and party, Mr. Dan C. Lane and party, and Mr. Albert C. Leland and party.

—A notable figure at the Promenade concert Tuesday evening was Mr. George Fred Williams with Congressman McCall. Mr. George Merriam of the Somerset Club entertained a large party, Mr. and Mrs. Neal Rantoul had eight guests, Mrs. John L. Gardner entertained Miss Olga Gardner, Mr. Proctor and Mr. Blaess. Others present were Commodore Perkins and Miss Isabel Perkins with friends, Mr. Charles Hayden and guests, Dr. and Mrs. L. B. Fenderson and party, Rev. and Mrs. A. A. Berle and Mr. Clayton Johns.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Society has availed itself all the week of the opportunity which the "pops" are offering for amusement now that the wheel of divertisements is at its lowest ebb. Max Zach has prepared just such programmes as are a desirable accompaniment to gossip and beer, and Manager Comee's guiding spirit has been felt in the excellent arrangements for the personal comfort and enjoyment of those who have attended. Perhaps the most brilliant audience of the week was that of Monday evening. Among those noticed were Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mr. Franz Zerrahn, Mr. E. P. Whitney and Hugh Whitney of Milton and Miss Shattuck, Mr. William Apthorp, Roger Wolcott, jr., Mrs. C. E. Inches, William Blake, Mr. and Mrs. James Forsaith, Isadore Braggiotti, Josef Adamowski, Robert Hooper, Ex-Represetative Russell, Ex Senator Richard Sullivan, Mr. Alexander Blaess, Mr. George Proctor, Mr and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Miss Olga Gardner, Dr. Monks, Mr. and Mrs. James Forsyth, Mr. George C. Lee, jr., Mr. Thomas L. Babson, Miss Grace Atwell, Mr. William E Blake, Mr. and Mrs. Channing Rust, Mr. Fred Beebe, Mr. Frank Sears, Mr. H. C. Spaulding Mr. Dan C. Laue and Mr. Albert C. Leland.

Musical Courier

* *

The twelfth season of the Pop concerts, or promenade concerts, began May 10 at Music Hall under the management of Mr. Fred R. Comee. Mr. Max Zach was the conductor. In spite of the disagreeable weather throughout the past week, there has been a good attendance.

The most striking feature of these concerts is the deliberate endeavor of many within the pen built on the floor for the pleasure of those who are anxious to pay more than is required of those without, is the deliberate endeavor, I say, to be gay and reckless. Climate and heredity have chastened the spirits of the New Englander. He has been taught that it is wrong to drink beer or wine in the face of a public; that music, with beer or wine, is of itself immoral. And although men and women whose names are kept standing in type for the convenience of the society editor honor these concerts by their patronage and drink or smoke in a genteel and easy fashion, the humble imitators are evidently uneasy. Perhaps they expect the lightning to stab offenders or Satan to arise through the platform, snatch the baton from Mr. Zach, and lead a waltz by his forest cousin or Strauss.

I regret to say that many don evening dress for these concerts. I do not refer to the man who contracted the clawhammer at an early age. There are males who invariably wear evening dress at dinner. For such to appear at a Pop concert in day dress would be an affectation. Nor are they often taken for waiters.

Informality is the essence of enjoyment at a Pop. Not that it is necessary for a man to go so far as to sit in his shirt sleeves, put his weary feet on a table, or ask strange women within the gates whether they know a sure remedy for eczema, which is a nervous disease, excited by mental activity. Thus if a triolet is accompanied by a trace of eczema, an epic poem would blaze its way from hip to neck. In other words, the cube of thought varies directly with the square of eczema.

But the sight of a man conscious of his dress, looking occasionally at his patent leathers to see if he was thorough in removing the protecting vaseline, is a kill-joy. And when the name of the man is Legion, the atmosphere is charged with formality.

Germans are never weary of saying that the American is not naturally gemüthlich. There is a gemüthlichkeit in Southern Germany dear to the Raufbold of the Fliegende Blätter. This hitting a stranger on the back so as to make him feel at home is by some known as gemüthlichkeit; but it will be long before the native American understands the true meaning of the word. It is hard for a Bostonian to unbend in public. That his joints are gradually becoming looser—thanks to such educating influences as the Pops—is recognized by the enlightened press of the city with pleasure not unmixed with wonderment and awe.

PHILIP HALE.

remain abroad about two months.

—Mr. and Mrs. William Hooper, Mrs. Caroline Hall Washburn and guests, Miss Amory and party, Colonel Boutwell, Dr. Frederick L. Jack, Dr. Galloupe, Mr. Joshua L. Holden and the Misses Holden, Mr. Harold Going and Mrs. Max Zach were among the well known people at the Promenade Concert Thursday evening.

—Mrs. A. L. Mason, noticeably handsome in a black and white toilette, entertained a group of young people at the "Pop" concert Wednesday evening including Miss Marion Mason in a black gown with large pink hat, Miss Chadwick in black, Mr. Braggiotti and many others. Mrs. Fred Whitwell also chaperoned the son and daughter of Mr. Amory Lawrence. Others present were the Misses Stackpole, Miss Eleanor Shattuck, Mr. Hugh Whitney, Mr. Gaugengigl and guests, Mrs. John L. Gardner with Mr. George Proctor and other guests.

"TIME and the HOUR"

MUSIC.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The flesh is willing, but the spirit is weak.—PERVERSION.

FOR the twelfth season the Boston Symphony Orchestra has exchanged evening dress, serious music, analytical programmes, and a director, for short coats, gay tunes, four to the hour, and a "conductor." There was a large audience on the opening night, late in arrival, for the rain was heavy and unusually wet, but enthusiastic in crescendo.

This summer's decorations of evergreen include a forest of trees, of which some twenty-five hang, mirabile dictu, from the bosses of the ceiling, head downward, giving the entering guest an uncanny impression that another world is about to descend upon our own. Fantastic indeed will be the emotions nightly aroused in the minds of the merry tablers, during the last third of the programme, by this topsy-turvy wood. It is to be hoped that the trees are secured in their places by fastenings stronger than the single hair of the sword of Damocles. Whether the effect is in good taste — cela depend.

The playing of the orchestra is adequate and delightful, although during the opening numbers of the first night there was a heaviness which disappeared as the players drove out the dampness of the storm with their usual copious draughts of the many beers provided for the active and passive worshippers of the muse. Mr. Zach has won a well-deserved reputation as a maker of attractive programmes, and renders them to the satisfaction of his critical patrons, trained by twelve consecutive seasons into the proper appre[illegible] of the nightly dozen or half a dozen of selections; which is to say, to listen attentively for the first hour, to converse earnestly during the second, to preserve silence while the pianissimo number is rendered, and thereafter to enter into an often successful vocal competition with the brass and percussion band, to whom the last third of the concert is given over.

We do this thing well enough nowadays, we Bostonese, and take our beer and our music with the nonchalance of our long training, without apparent qualms of conscience. True, anxious faces of newcomers, anticipating they know not what of horror, are seen from time to time in the balcony sides, but the clouds of smoke soon hide the tables under the clock and the "happy" faces of the Harvard habitués, and they depart in sufficient peace of mind, wondering why these entertainments are called "promenade concerts" when there is no opportunity given to promenade. Several nights after, the bolder and wiser of these visitors may be seen at the tables over the clock, partaking, with an exemplary moderation, of lemonade, the straws of which they handle with awe and respect, as instruments of dissipation. The next step involves a seat at a reserved table on the floor and the rose of a claret punch; also the courage to protest with the waiter in the matter of a leaky straw. And at last a seat on the floor secured by arrival at 7.30, and beer by the whole bottle, paid for without present tip, but with a reassuring "see you later in the evening" to the man in the black coat.

Mr. Zach certainly gives ideal readings of waltzes and mazurkas; he has a proper and sympathetic feeling for all pieces in rhythms of three,— round rhythms,— but his beat is sometimes heavy in common time, which are taken at tempi far too slow for these concerts. Rapid tempi and brilliant renderings are sine qua non at "pop" concerts, and the playing of such is a bagatelle to an orchestra of such virtuosity as his.

The coming programmes are unusually attractive, and "first performances at these concerts" are to be many and of interest. Wagner and Strauss, De Koven and Brahms, Bach and Offenbach, are to vie with one another, as well as with brewer and vintner, for our good will. If only it might be for all summer!

—Notwithstanding the heavy downpour of Monday evening, Music Hall was crowded with an enthusiastic audience, on the opening night of the twelfth season of promenade concerts. Festoons of laurel, and a quantity of foliage combined to decorate the hall, while from the high ceiling depended a number of fir trees of uniform size. Society was out in full force, and a number of pretty toilettes heightened the gay scene. Mrs. J. L. Gardner in a becoming gown of soft grey and a large hat laden with black plumes, entertained Mr. Alexander Blaess, Mr. George Proctor, Miss Olga Gardner and Dr. Monks; Mr. W. G. Apthorp with friends occupied another table, Miss Eleanor Shattuck, looking extremely pretty, was attended by her fiance, Mr. Hugh Whitney, and Mr. E. P. Whitney. Mr. A. Paul Keith entertained a party of gentlemen, and Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Risteen and guests were at another table. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Russell (Miss Parks) were the host and hostess of an attractive party, and among other well known people at the concert were Mr. and Mrs. Hollon C. Spaulding, Mr. Lewis Andrews Hayden, Mrs. Webster Dorr, Miss Mabel Going, Mr. and Mrs. Atherton Brownell, Mrs. Corinne W. Smith, Miss May L. Greenleaf, Mr. Thos. S. Wood, Mr. F. Estabrook and guests, Mr. and Mrs. Franz Zerrahn, Mr. George P. Sanger, Miss Grace Atwell, Mrs. Charles E. Inches and guests, Mr. Roger Wolcott, jr., Miss Marion H. Brazier, Mr. William Blake, Mr. and Mrs. James Forsaith, Mr. Robert Hooper, Mr. Isadore Braggiotte, Mr. Josef Adamowski, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Mr. George C. Lee, jr., Mr. Fred Beebe and party, Mr. Frank Sears, Mr. Daniel C. Lane and guests, and Mr. and Mrs. Channing Rust. Mr. Fred L. Comee, who so ably managed last year's concerts, bids fair to repeat his success this summer, and is warmly congratulated upon the auspicious opening of the season's concerts.

Music Hall Promenade Concerts.

The 12th season of the promenade concerts at Music Hall opened most auspiciously on Monday evening last, and the audiences both on that evening and the following ones of the week have been notable for the fashionable contingent present, "Society" being well represented at every concert. These entertainments are always most welcome at this season of the year and they form a fitting close to a season of attractions of a more serious nature. The music, mostly of a light order, is admirably performed by a well selected orchestra. Conductor Max Zach has been greeted with considerable applause and has renewed the favor with which he was received last year; his programmes are always selected with the greatest of care and always give satisfaction. The service at the tables is all that could be desired and the decorations are both pleasing and effective. All in all, there is every evidence that the popularity of these concerts will be greater, if anything, than in any past year, and the management is well deserving of its success, for nothing is left undone for both the convenience and amusement of patrons.

"The 'Pop' concerts, like the symphonies, are absorbing in a way. Boston loves them. They are democratic. Here is the clerk, business man, professional man, student, the various gradations of society, men and women alike. Everybody goes, smokes and drinks a little, and feels agreeably relaxed by observing his neighbors as well as hearing the tuneful music. To the right and left in the balconies are the conservative spectators who have come partly to hear the music and partly to see 'Bohemia.'" The above from the "Boston Herald" accurately describes what is one of the regular institutions of this city.

The "Mill" selection played last Saturday night evidently was placed on the programme as a delicate attention to the many treasurers and agents of New England leading corporations who were present and find it so convenient to take the last train home Saturday nights.

Music Notes.

The promenade concerts that began last Monday night in Music Hall, have proved a great and deserved success. The orchestra of fifty skilled musicians, under the guidance of Mr. Max Zach, interpret the selections with rare skill, while the programmes, in quality and quantity, could hardly be bettered. To listen to good music at one's ease is a luxury, and the luxury may be luxuriously enjoyed at these concerts, which are the very best of their kind. The programme for Monday evening is: March, "Paraplule," Bayer; overture, "Light Cavalry," Suppe; waltz, "Les Patineurs," Waldteufel; selection, "Beggar Student," Milloecker; (a) "Sevillana," Massenet; (b) "Serenata," Moszkowski; Hungarian rhapsody in F, Liszt; "Traeumerei," Schumann; ballet music from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; overture, "Masaniello," Auber; waltz, "O, Schoner Mai," Strauss; polka, "Sangerlust," Strauss; march, "Boccaccio," Suppe.

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY [illegible]

VOL. CI., NO. 136.

SUNDAY, MAY 16, 1897.

THE "POP" CONCERT.

The first week of the 12th season of "Pop" concerts at Music Hall ended last night with much enthusiasm for Mr. Zach, the conductor, and the [illegible] picked musicians who constitute the orchestra. The weather during the week was not favorable to large audiences, but this has not affected these popular entertainments, as every reserved seat at the tables has been sold for each evening. Mr. Max Zach, who made so many friends by his able leadership last season, is adding steadily to their number. The programmes have been very attractive, including novelties played at these concerts, together with the most popular selections of past seasons.

The programme for tomorrow evening is:

March, "Paraplule"	Bayer
Overture, "Light Cavalry"	Suppe
Waltz, "Les Patineurs"	Waldteufel
Selection, "Beggar Student"	Milloecker
Sevillana	Massenet
Serenata	Moszkowski
Hungarian rhapsody in F	Liszt
Traeumerei	Schumann
Ballet music from "Samson and Dalila"	Saint-Saens
Overture, "Masaniello"	Auber
Waltz, "O Schoner Mai"	Strauss
Polka, "Sangerlust"	Strauss
March, "Boccaccio"	Suppe

The first week of the Pop concerts "opened [illegible]iously," to use the expression of one of the smart set who was there Monday night, and no wonder Mr. Comee moved about looking very smiling and happy, for every table was engaged beforehand, and each night since it has been impossible to secure one after 8 o'clock. This year's scarlet and green decorations lend a particularly cheerful and attractive atmosphere to the old hall, and the background of evergreens, looking quite like a miniature forest and felicitously hiding the marks of wear and tear to the good old place, give a decidedly picturesque effect. The playing of the orchestra under Mr. Zach was delightful, and that it was thought so by the large band of listeners was proven conclusively by the attention paid, for talking went on less briskly than usual, and encores were frequent and imperative.

On Monday night at the various tables were noticed Mr. and Mrs. Franz Zerrahn, who came in from Milton, and had with them, among others, Mr. Hugh Whitney and his fiancee, Miss Eleanor Shattuck; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, the latter easily one of the prettiest women there of the society set; Miss Olga Gardner and Dr. George Monks, with a party; Mr. George C. Lee, Roger Wolcott, Jr., Mr. Isidore Braggiotti, Mr. William P. Blake, Mr. and Mrs. William Hooper with friends, Mr. Arthur Devens, Mrs. P. V. R. Ely, Mrs. J. L. Gardner, at the table she has engaged for the season, and which, we believe, is the same that she sat at last year, who had with her the two young musicians, Mr. George Proctor and Mr. Alexander Blaess; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Adamowski, Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Beebe and friends, Mr. Henry T. Spaulding, Mr. George P. Sanger, Mr. Thomas L. Babson, Mr. A. H. Higginson, Mr. W. F. Apthorp and party, Mr. Daniel C. Lane, Mr. Albert Leland, Mr. and Mrs. Channing Rust.

Tuesday night Mr. and Mrs. William Hooper were there again, also Mrs. Gardner and Miss Olga Gardner, and the Hon. George Fred Williams, Lieut. and Mrs. George H. Perkins, U. S. N., and Miss Isabel Perkins, Mr. Edward Gray, Mr. Pierson Beebe, Mr. Clayton Johns, Mr. and Mrs. James Forsyth, Mr. Pierre La Rose of Harvard College, Dr. and Mrs. L. B. Fenderson, with friends, Mr. J. V. R. Gilliat, Mr. Clarence Hollander and Mr. Louis Benton, Mr. Walter De Land Came with party of four, Mr. Louis Whiting, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Baker, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Nichols, Mr. Addison Aldrich, and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Pierce.

Thursday night at the Pop concert the Hon. George Lawrence, president of the Massachusetts Senate, the Hon. A. E. Pillsbury, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Dr. Jack, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Gay and party, Miss Madeleine Mixter, Mr. Frank Beebe, Dr. and Mrs. F. L. Emerson, who with Judge William Carruth, Mrs. Pickering of Portsmouth and Mr. E. N. Allen, made a party. Mr. and Mrs. William Hooper, Miss Lucy Fay and Dr. Gillette were noted among the crowd at the tables and in the balconies.

Mr. Rollins Morse had a party at the Pops Wednesday night, including Dr. and Mrs. Lawrence Mason and Miss Marion Mason, and there were also at the tables Mr. Isidore Braggiotti, Mrs. Gardner, with the young artist, Mr. Andersen, Mr. and Mrs. Donald White, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Bennett, Mr. John C. Abbott, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Underwood, and Mr. George Whitcomb.

remain abroad about two months.

—Mr. and Mrs. William Hooper, Mrs. Caroline Hall Washburn and guests, Miss Amory and party, Colonel Boutwell, Dr. Frederick L. Jack, Dr. Galloupe, Mr Joshua L. Holden and the Misses Holden, Mr. Harold Going and Mrs. Max Zach were among the well known people at the Promenade Concert Thursday evening.

—Mrs. A. L. Mason, noticeably handsome in a black and white toilette, entertained a group of young people at the "Pop" concert Wednesday evening including Miss Marion Mason in a black gown with large pink hat, Miss Chadwick in black, Mr. Braggiotti and many others. Mrs. Fred Whitwell also chaperoned the son and daughter of Mr. Amory Lawrence. Others present were the Misses Stackpole, Miss Eleanor Shattuck, Mr. Hugh Whitney, Mr. Gaugengigl and guests, Mrs. John L. Gardner with Mr. George Proctor and other guests.

"TIME and the HOUR"

MUSIC.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The flesh is willing, but the spirit is weak.—PERVERSION.

FOR the twelfth season the Boston Symphony Orchestra has exchanged evening dress, serious music, analytical programmes, and a director, for short coats, gay tunes, four to the hour, and a "conductor." There was a large audience on the opening night, late in arrival, for the rain was heavy and unusually wet, but enthusiastic in crescendo.

This summer's decorations of evergreen include a forest of trees, of which some twenty-five hang, mirabile dictu, from the bosses of the ceiling, head downward, giving the entering guest an uncanny impression that another world is about to descend upon our own. Fantastic indeed will be the emotions nightly aroused in the minds of the merry tablers, during the last third of the programme, by this topsy-turvy wood. It is to be hoped that the trees are secured in their places by fastenings stronger than the single hair of the sword of Damocles. Whether the effect is in good taste — cela depend.

The playing of the orchestra is adequate and delightful, although during the opening numbers of the first night there was a heaviness which disappeared as the players drove out the dampness of the storm with their usual copious draughts of the many beers provided for the active and passive worshippers of the muse. Mr. Zach has won a well-deserved reputation as a maker of attractive programmes, and renders them to the satisfaction of his critical patrons, trained by twelve consecutive seasons into the proper appreciation of the nightly dozen or baker's dozen of selections; which is to say, to listen attentively for the first hour, to converse earnestly during the second, to preserve silence while the pianissimo number is rendered, and thereafter to enter into an often successful vocal competition with the brass and percussion band, to whom the last third of the concert is given over.

We do this thing well enough nowadays, we Bostonese, and take our beer and our music with the nonchalance of our long training, without apparent qualms of conscience. True, anxious faces of newcomers, anticipating they know not what of horror, are seen from time to time in the balcony sides, but the clouds of smoke soon hide the tables under the clock and the "happy" faces of the Harvard habitués, and they depart in sufficient peace of mind, wondering why these entertainments are called "promenade concerts" when there is no opportunity given to promenade. Several nights after, the bolder and wiser of these visitors may be seen at the tables over the clock, partaking, with an exemplary moderation, of lemonade, the straws of which they handle with awe and respect, as instruments of dissipation. The next step involves a seat at a reserved table on the floor and the rose of a claret punch; also the courage to protest with the waiter in the matter of a leaky straw. And at last a seat on the floor secured by arrival at 7.30, and beer by the whole bottle, paid for without present tip, but with a reassuring "see you later in the evening" to the man in the black coat.

Mr. Zach certainly gives ideal readings of waltzes and mazurkas; he has a proper and sympathetic feeling for all pieces in rhythms of three,— round rhythms,— but his beat is sometimes heavy in common time, which are taken at tempi far too slow for these concerts. Rapid tempi and brilliant renderings are sine qua non at "pop" concerts, and the playing of such is a bagatelle to an orchestra of such virtuosity as his.

The coming programmes are unusually attractive, and "first performances at these concerts" are to be many and of interest. Wagner and Strauss, De Koven and Brahms, Bach and Offenbach, are to vie with one another, as well as with brewer and vintner, for our good will. If only it might be for all summer!

—Notwithstanding the heavy downpour of Monday evening, Music Hall was crowded with an enthusiastic audience, on the opening night of the twelfth season of promenade concerts. Festoons of laurel, and a quantity of foliage combined to decorate the hall, while from the high ceiling depended a number of fir trees of uniform size. Society was out in full force, and a number of pretty toilettes heightened the gay scene. Mrs. J. L. Gardner in a becoming gown of soft grey and a large hat laden with black plumes, entertained Mr. Alexander Blaess, Mr. George Proctor, Miss Olga Gardner and Dr. Monks; Mr. W. G. Apthorp with friends occupied another table, Miss Eleanor Shattuck, looking extremely pretty, was attended by her fiance, Mr. Hugh Whitney, and Mr. E. P. Whitney. Mr. A. Paul Keith entertained a party of gentlemen, and Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Risteen and guests were at another table. Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Russell (Miss Parks) were the host and hostess of an attractive party, and among other well known people at the concert were Mr. and Mrs. Hollon C. Spaulding, Mr. Lewis Andrews Hayden, Mrs. Webster Dorr, Miss Mabel Going, Mr. and Mrs. Atherton Brownell, Mrs. Corinne W. Smith, Miss May L. Greenleaf, Mr. Thos. S. Wood, Mr. F. Estabrook and guests, Mr. and Mrs. Franz Zerrahn, Mr. George P. Sanger, Miss Grace Atwell, Mrs. Charles E. Inches and guests, Mr. Roger Wolcott, jr., Miss Marion H. Brazier, Mr. William Blake, Mr. and Mrs. James Forsaith, Mr. Robert Hooper, Mr. Isadore Braggiotte, Mr. Josef Adamowski, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Mr. George C. Lee, jr., Mr. Fred Beebe and party, Mr. Frank Sears, Mr. Daniel C. Lane and guests, and Mr. and Mrs. Channing Rust. Mr. Fred L. Comee, who so ably managed last year's concerts, bids fair to repeat his success this summer, and is warmly congratulated upon the auspicious opening of the season's concerts.

"The 'Pop' concerts, like the symphonies, are absorbing in a way. Boston loves them. They are democratic. Here is the clerk, business man, professional man, student, the various gradations of society, men and women alike. Everybody goes, smokes and drinks a little, and feels agreeably relaxed by observing his neighbors as well as hearing the tuneful music. To the right and left in the balconies are the conservative spectators who have come partly to hear the music and partly to see 'Bohemia.'" The above from the "Boston Herald" accurately describes what is one of the regular institutions of this city.

The "Mill" selection played last Saturday night evidently was placed on the programme as a delicate attention to the many treasurers and agents of New England leading corporations who were present and find it so convenient to take the last train home Saturday nights.

Music Hall Promenade Concerts.

The 12th season of the promenade concerts at Music Hall opened most auspiciously on Monday evening last, and the audiences both on that evening and the following ones of the week have been notable for the fashionable contingent present, "Society" being well represented at every concert. These entertainments are always most welcome at this season of the year and they form a fitting close to a season of attractions of a more serious nature. The music, mostly of a light order, is admirably performed by a well selected orchestra. Conductor Max Zach has been greeted with considerable applause and has renewed the favor with which he was received last year; his programmes are always selected with the greatest of care and always give satisfaction. The service at the tables is all that could be desired and the decorations are both pleasing and effective. All in all, there is every evidence that the popularity of these concerts will be greater, if anything, than in any past year, and the management is well deserving of its success, for nothing is left undone for both the convenience and amusement of patrons.

Music Notes.

The promenade concerts that began last Monday night in Music Hall, have proved a great and deserved success. The orchestra of fifty skilled musicians, under the guidance of Mr. Max Zach, interpret the selections with rare skill, while the programmes, in quality and quantity, could hardly be bettered. To listen to good music at one's ease is a luxury, and the luxury may be luxuriously enjoyed at these concerts, which are the very best of their kind. The programme for Monday evening is: March, "Parapluie," Bayer; overture, "Light Cavalry," Suppe; waltz, "Les Patineurs," Waldteufel; selection, "Beggar Student," Milloecker; (a) "Sevillana," Massenet; (b) "Serenata," Moszkowski; Hungarian rhapsody in F, Liszt; "Traeumerei," Schumann; ballet music from "Samson and Delilah," Saint-Saens; overture, "Masaniello," Auber; waltz, "O, Schoner Mai," Strauss; polka, "Sangerlust," Strauss; march, "Boccaccio," Suppe.

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CI. NO. 136.

SUNDAY, MAY 16, 1897.

THE "POP" CONCERT.

The first week of the 12th season of "Pop" concerts at Music Hall ended last night with much enthusiasm for Mr. Zach, the conductor, and the [illegible] picked musicians who constitute the orchestra. The weather during the week was not favorable to large audiences, but this has not affected these popular entertainments, as every reserved seat at the tables has been sold for each evening. Mr. Max Zach, who made so many friends by his able leadership last season, is adding steadily to their number. The programmes have been very attractive, including novelties played at these concerts, together with the most popular selections of past seasons.

The programme for tomorrow evening is:

March, "Parapluie"	Bayer
Overture, "Light Cavalry"	Suppe
Waltz, "Les Patineurs"	Waldteufel
Selection, "Beggar Student"	Milloecker
Sevillana	Massenet
Serenata	Moszkowski
Hungarian rhapsody in F	Liszt
Traeumerei	Schumann
Ballet music from "Samson and Dalila"	Saint-Saens
Overture, "Masaniello"	Auber
Waltz, "O Schoner Mai"	Strauss
Polka, "Sangerlust"	Strauss
March, "Boccaccio"	Suppe

The first week of the Pop concerts "opened gloriously," to use the expression of one of the smart set who was there Monday night, and no wonder Mr. Comee moved about looking very smiling and happy, for every table was engaged beforehand, and each night since it has been impossible to secure one after 8 o'clock. This year's scarlet and green decorations lend a particularly cheerful and attractive atmosphere to the old hall, and the background of evergreens, looking quite like a miniature forest and felicitously hiding the marks of wear and tear in the good old place, give a decidedly picturesque effect. The playing of the orchestra under Mr. Zach was delightful, and that it was thought so by the large band of listeners was proven conclusively by the attention paid, for talking went on less briskly than usual, and encores were frequent and imperative.

On Monday night at the various tables were noticed Mr. and Mrs. Franz Zerrahn, who came in from Milton, and had with them, among others, Mr. Hugh Whitney and his fiancee, Miss Eleanor Shattuck; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, the latter easily one of the prettiest women there of the society set; Miss Olga Gardner and Dr. George Monks, with a party; Mr. George C. Lee, Roger Wolcott, Jr., Mr. Isidore Braggiotti, Mr. William P. Blake, Mr. and Mrs. William Hooper with friends, Mr. Arthur Devens, Mrs. P. V. R. Ely, Mrs. J. L. Gardner, at the table she has engaged for the season, and which, we believe, is the same that she sat at last year, who had with her the two young musicians, Mr. George Proctor and Mr. Alexander Blaess; Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Adamowski, Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Beebe and friends, Mr. Henry T. Spaulding, Mr. George P. Sanger, Mr. Thomas L. Babson, Mr. A. H. Higginson, Mr. W. F. Apthorp and party, Mr. Daniel C. Lane, Mr. Albert Leland, Mr. and Mrs. Channing Rust.

Tuesday night Mr. and Mrs. William Hooper were there again, also Mrs. Gardner and Miss Olga Gardner, and the Hon. George Fred Williams, Lieut. and Mrs. George H. Perkins, U. S. N., and Miss Isabel Perkins, Mr. Edward Gray, Mr. Pierson Beebe, Mr. Clayton Johns, Mr. and Mrs. James Forsyth, Mr. Pierre La Rose of Harvard College, Dr. and Mrs. L. B. Fenderson, with friends, Mr. J. V. R. Gilliat, Mr. Clarence Hollander and Mr. Louis Benton, Mr. Walter De Land Came with party of four, Mr. Louis Whiting, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Baker, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Nichols, Mr. Addison Aldrich, and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Pierce.

Thursday night at the Pop concert the Hon. George Lawrence, president of the Massachusetts Senate, the Hon. A. E. Pillsbury, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Dr. Jack, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Gay and party, Miss Madeleine Mixter, Mr. Frank Beebe, Dr. and Mrs. F. L. Emerson, who with Judge William Carruth, Mrs. Pickering of Portsmouth and Mr. E. N. Allen, made a party. Mr. and Mrs. William Hooper, Miss Lucy Fay and Dr. Gillette were noted among the crowd at the tables and in the balconies.

Mr. Rollins Morse had a party at the Pops Wednesday night, including Dr. and Mrs. Lawrence Mason and Miss Marion Mason, and there were also at the tables Mr. Isidore Braggiotti, Mrs. Gardner, with the young artist, Mr. Andersen, Mr. and Mrs. Donald White, Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Bennett, Mr. John C. Abbott, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Underwood, and Mr. George Whitcomb.

INCOMPLETE

1897

FASHION AT THE "POPS."

Seen in Smartest Attire.

Pretty Taffeta Frocks.

Chic Affairs forSummer.

The "Pops" are in full swing, and it is to be quite out of it not to be an enthusiastic attendant at least to the extent of one or two evenings a week. They are unlike any other promenade concerts the world over, but their strictly Bostonese atmosphere delights our strictly Bostonese hearts. Our best bibs and tuckers, our Tuxedos or frocks, and our Saturday evening Symphony frame of mind are none too ceremonious for this short season of—not light, but lighter music, Bohemianized by a cigar and a glass of beer or a pink lemonade.

Monday night, in spite of the rain, half of the smart set was snugly ensconced in Music Hall. There was a great deal of attention paid to the music and very little to each other, the men even facing the orchestras most attentively, instead of turning their backs upon it with the European's nonchalance to scan the pretty faces and frocks about the hall.

And there were a great many charming women—perhaps there seemed more than usual because of their being bunched together so intimately after the vast auditorium of Mechanics' building, where Boston's collected beauty was last en evidence.

Such an impulsive little gypsy sat near the stage, as rapturously en rapport with Mr. Zach's baton as though it was interpreting Wagner instead of Strauss. Her wavy brown hair was topped by a neat little turban of black tulle and satin braid, loops of the straw forming the aigrette with a standing red rose, while a jaunty navy blue Eton suit with seams braided a la militaire was finished by a very blousey waist of white lace with a white satin stock tied in a soft bow on one side of the chin.

It is curious the chic that can be got by placing a bow or a buckle in an unaccustomed place. This bunch of loops on one side of the choker, instead of at the back or at the front, is very fetching, and quite the thing now, and the belt buckle or bow twisted about to the back of the waist is another little touch that marks a woman who is smart in [illegible] sense of the [illegible], that scolloped over a cadet blue velvet petticoat, the small sleeves had broad scolloped cuffs, turning up over the wrists, and the blouse was a finely accordion plaited one of burnt orange silk, girdled with white moire—the silk reaching below the belt, to form a short plaited basque about the hips, with very taking effect.

A toque of that beautiful straw-like cloth of gold was fetching with this, a few knots of white silk nestling in the crushed folds of the straw, and a bunch of very dark red velvet roses trimming one side richly.

A young woman in a red foulard gown was very fitly topped by a round hat of natural colored manilla, twists of ecru fish net and choux of French blue velvet trimming the crown heavily in an even mass. Cornflowers in a thick bunch were mounted en aigrette on one side with plenty of green leaves and grassy spikes.

The mistake of wearing a red gown with a red hat or vice versa is bound to occur when red is so fashionable, but I have not yet seen it, even on the streets where the fashionably bright colors are running riot. Perhaps we will be spared this misuse of the gorgeous color, although one can never tell what will happen as soon as the public eye gets fully used to it.

At present in the country red jackets are worn almost exclusively on the golf links, and awheel or in carts from clubhouse to home. Red capes are smart, too, over sporting clothes or driving tailor suits, nad a long box coat of red flannel, with stitched seams and white pearl buttons, was too smart for anything one day last week driving about the roads of Hamilton.

Next to red, green is the color of the season. Green parasols are very stunning, and are carried with any gown. Of taffeta, with tiny frills and ruchings inside, they are very saucy—there is something infinitely fetching about taffeta in its very shape. Frocks and wraps and dainty shoes, parasols and hats and long cloaks are all built of it, with excellent effect. It is charming trimmed with tiny tucks, with cordings, with narrow frills and with ruchings of itself, and lines of velvet ribbon, silk fringes, quillings of lace are all most suitable on it.

lingerie tucks was a great success, as simple effects are apt to be when handled cleverly. The skirt was tucked vertically all about the hips, and was trimmed down each side of the front breadths, and about the hem with bias folds of the silk. The bodice was a blouse tucked vertically about the yoke, and with bias bands up each side as though continuations of those up the front of the skirt, other bands outlining the square yoke effect. The sleeves were small gigots with square tucked epaulettes, bias bands of the silk following the seam up the inside of the arm. The choker was a folded one of the silk (which was a beautifully shaded green and gold), while the girdle was of white satin knotted on one side, and giving the only touch of a different material or color to the frock. It would be hard to decide whether a toque of red roses, or a black feather hat, or perhaps a small turban of cloth of gold straw, with a white tip would harmonize best with this creation.

I vote for the black hat set at the latest angle back on the head, and with a fichu-like wrap of black taffeta trimmed with tiny taffeta frills. This wrap is round and cape-shaped behind, reaching just to the waistline. In front it has long slender ends that cross over the bust, and knot at the back of the waist, the ends hanging to the hem of the skirt. The whole thing is edged with three frills of black set closely together and headed with lines of black velvet ribbon. The wrap is unlined, and has no collar, showing that of the green frock beneath.

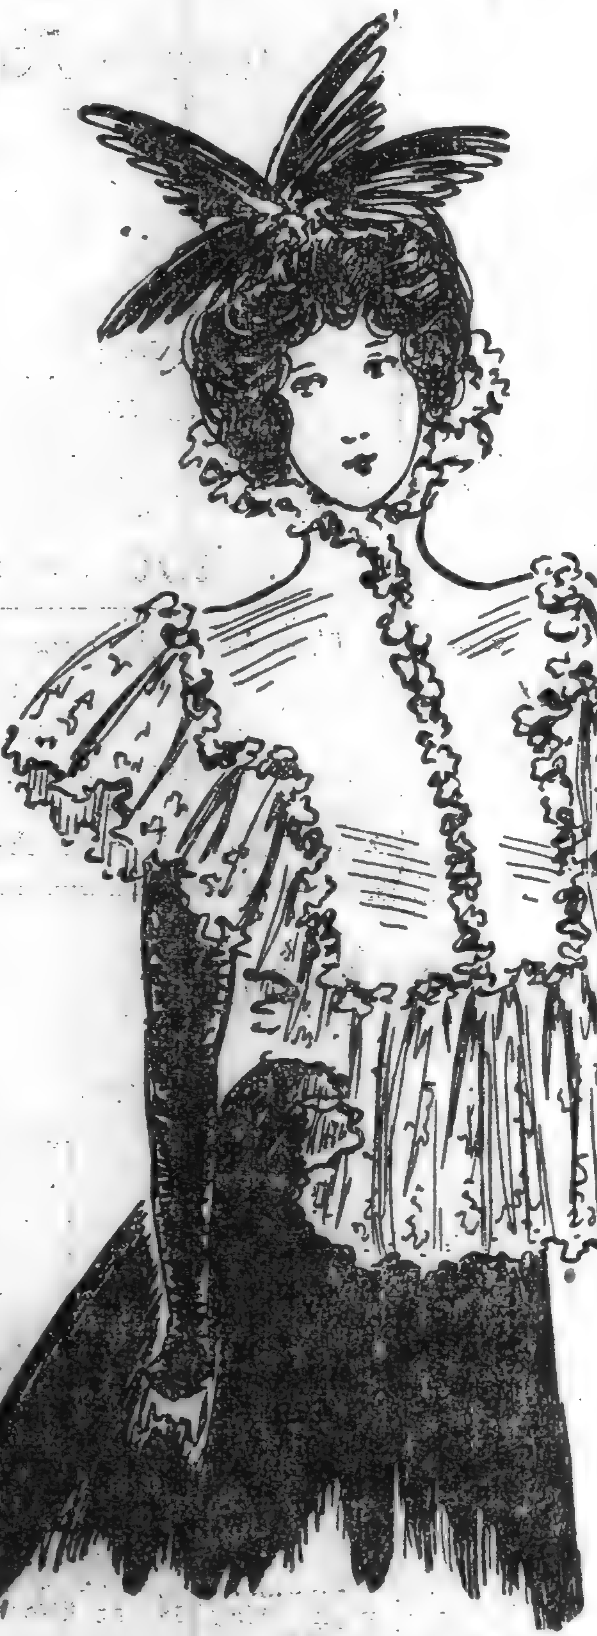
A hat built of taffeta is novel, and usually distinguished. The straw turbans with taffeta crowns a la Mme. de Stael are very modish, and a round straw with a crown built of an upstanding frill of taffeta is fetching, a second frill lying flat upon the brim. A lace scarf is twisted about the crown, and an upstanding cluster of roses completes this conceit.

A black taffeta gown is quaintly trimmed with no end of black velvet from which ang pendants of jet, these placed down one side of the front to fasten the tucked bodice, and continuing down the side of the skirt to the knees. A sash of green taffeta edged with baby black velvet ribbon is crushed about the waist, the ends being gathered into a point and finished with jets.

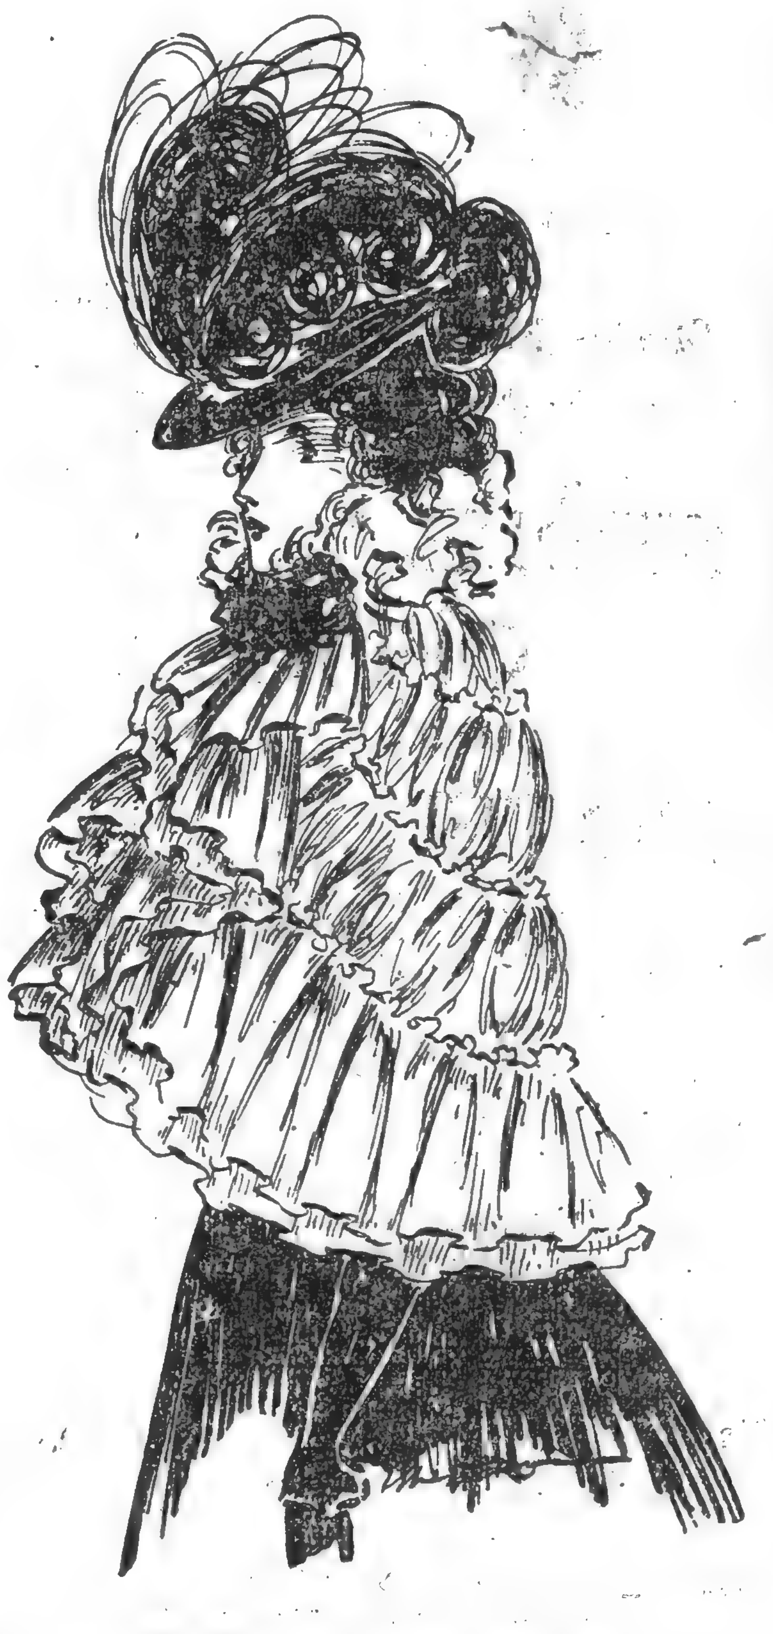
A Grecian border of narrow black velvet lines trimmed a cashmere frock prettily up each side of the front from the hips to the throat, the vest between being of white muslin in a blouse. A black satin girdle and choker, the last finished with a jabot of cream lace gave the gown its final touches.

Nothing can be more Frenchy than these ultra simple frocks of cashmere, with a bit of trimming here and there, and just the right touch at waist and throat.

A checked taffeta frock the other night at the promenade concerts was in mauve and yellow, and was trimmed with a heart shaped yoke of cream lace, out-



COL OF TAFFETA AND LACE.



VICTORIAN CAPE OF CHIFFON.

Two dainty sisters sat at different tables with parties of friends, one in a white lace blouse over white satin, butter colored lace banding waist and throat, and a broad round hat of rose colored straw laden with nodding red and pink roses. A black satin skirt and a very neat jacket of black satin, stitched tailor fashion, fitted her slender figure to perfection when she left the hall at 10 o'clock.

The other young girl was in a simple dark blue cashmere frock, with a deep yoke of white satin in lingerie tucks, the choker being of the same and with no frill or bow—as indeed many of the smartest women are wearing them. Her hat was a girlish one of coarsely-braided straw in mixed colors, a broad light blue satin ribbon striped with silver being twisted about the crown and laid over the brim, great loops trimming it without a single blossom or bit of lace to distract from its youthfulness.

A vivacious matron at a table on the balcony wore a cafe au lait frock of draped satin, a full white chiffon vest and a white lace stock trimming it simply. Her hat was a black walking hat, set well over her face, with a thick fence of black French quills on each side and a cache peigne of red roses behind.

A blue and white foulard was charming, trimmed across the skirt with a line of broad white silk fringe simulating an apron, knee deep in front, shortening toward the back till the fringes met at the waistline behind. The bodice was laid in soft folds round and about the body, the opening being down one side under a ruche of the silk and a band of white fringe. The choker was of plain blue silk in a sort of stock, with a flaring cuff standing up from the top about the head and chin, while the waist was tightly nipped by a twist of white satin fastened with a chou at the back.

A hat of red tulle was worn with this, the gauzy stuff being laid in thick rolls about the head like a turban, a fan of tulle and a cluster of poppies forming the aigrette across the back.

One of the smartest gowns there showed the fashionable pointed basque effect, a fashion that is of tomorrow rather than of today. The frock was built of French blue cashmere, the skirt set upon the pointed and tight-fitting bodice with many gathers all about, giving the hips a well-rounded effect and the waist a corresponding slimness. A fold of black ribbon outlined the bodice, the bow being on the hip. The top of the gown was built with two overlapping yokes, one a deal longer than the other, and both edged with a frill of white muslin. The tight sleeves had caps built to match and apparent continuations of the yokes, while a white muslin ruffle was oddly set upon the hem of the skirt above a frill of blue silk. Narrow lines of bias black satin further trimmed the frock, and the ribbon choker fastened under the ear on the opposite side from the knotted girdle.

The hat was a turban of coarsely braided white satin straw, set well back on the pompadour and trimmed with a puffed crown of yellow taffeta silk. Choux of black velvet and a black mephisto tip completed this Frenchy affair, the tip slanting off to one side at a killing angle.

The rain of the opening night obliged a number of women to wear their jacket gowns with bright bodices—a fashion that has not yet been worn out. One pretty top was of violet silk swathed about the figure in flat folds which fastened invisibly under the arm. The top of the bodice was covered with frills of chiffon of the same shade, four in number dipping low over the bust, narrowing toward the sides where choux of violet velvet caught them next the arms, the ruffles deepening again over the shoulders to form epaulettes over the tight sleeves.

Another top of chiffon bloused over a satin girdle, two deep flounces edged with ruches of mull trimming the top, one reaching from the choker to the bust, one hanging beneath it a bit longer. The backs of these two bodices were plain and flat, as is usually best for the symmetry of the figure.

A sailor blouse gown of cardinal drap de satin was trimmed uniquely with thick biases of ecru bengaline, set on in Vandykes about the hips, and about the bust, the bodice tucking inside a girdle of cardinal taffeta buckling behind. The choker was of the ecru silk with a knot under the chin, and the small gigot sleeves were quite untrimmed, as is the preference of late on the best models.

The hat to this frock was a dear little mass of cardinal silk petals, like a huge Jack rose, an osprey of ecru being its only aigrette. While a great tan colored cloak of ladies' cloth enveloped the dainty figure for the ride home.

One of the many jacket suits worn there was of hunter's green cloth, the sleeves and the very short Eton jacket trimmed with lines of black soutache. The jacket crossed over the front and fastened on one side with two black olives, the neck being cut down to show the ecru guipure blouse beneath, and there was a stock and flaring collar of white satin. The belt was of black satin, and the green skirt untrimmed.

A jacket suit of purple cloth was very smartly fastened over a vest of cream lace set smoothly over white silk, a stock of black satin having a bow under the chin. Another jacket was worn over a blouse of tucked ecru fish net, baby ribbons being run through the tops of the tuckings and drawn up to make ruffles of them. The ribbons were black, the lining was blue, and black satin banded throat and waist.

There were two frocks having sleeves of different materials from the rest of the gown—one a blue cashmere with a corded hip yoke, and a tucked bodice, the sleeves being of Roman silk stripes in blue and gold and cardinal. A broad black satin ribbon was arranged most smartly upon the gown, as the only other trimming. It reached in a band from the shoulder to the waist down one side of the bodice, and from the waist to the hem down the opposite side of the skirt, both bands broken half-way by large up-and-down bows. The belt was of black satin fastened invisibly.

The second frock with contrasting sleeves was of violet cashmere, with sleeves of violet and light blue silk in broad stripes that encircled the arm obliquely. The bodice was a corselet of cream lace over light blue, violet velvet girdling the waist and forming the yoke-like plastron.

[11]

[illegible] whole wardrobe of taffeta, and yet hardly lack variety. A [illegible] of taffeta rounded to fit the shoulders and shirred over four encircling cords is a dainty beginning, the edge trimmed with a double flounce of taffeta, one longer than the other. In leaf green, with the lower flounce, as well as the lining, of changeable green and pink taffeta, the edges of the flounces pinked quaintly, and a thick pinked ruche of the green intermixed with cream lace for a tour de cou, the effect is delicious. This wrap is short in front, the cords rounding up to the throat, the flounces following suit, and the back reaching well below the waistline. The flounces about the edge form a sort of jabot up the front, black velvet choux fixing the wrap under the chin. This is carried out in chiffon very effectively, white being set over mauve or green, with a white taffeta lining.

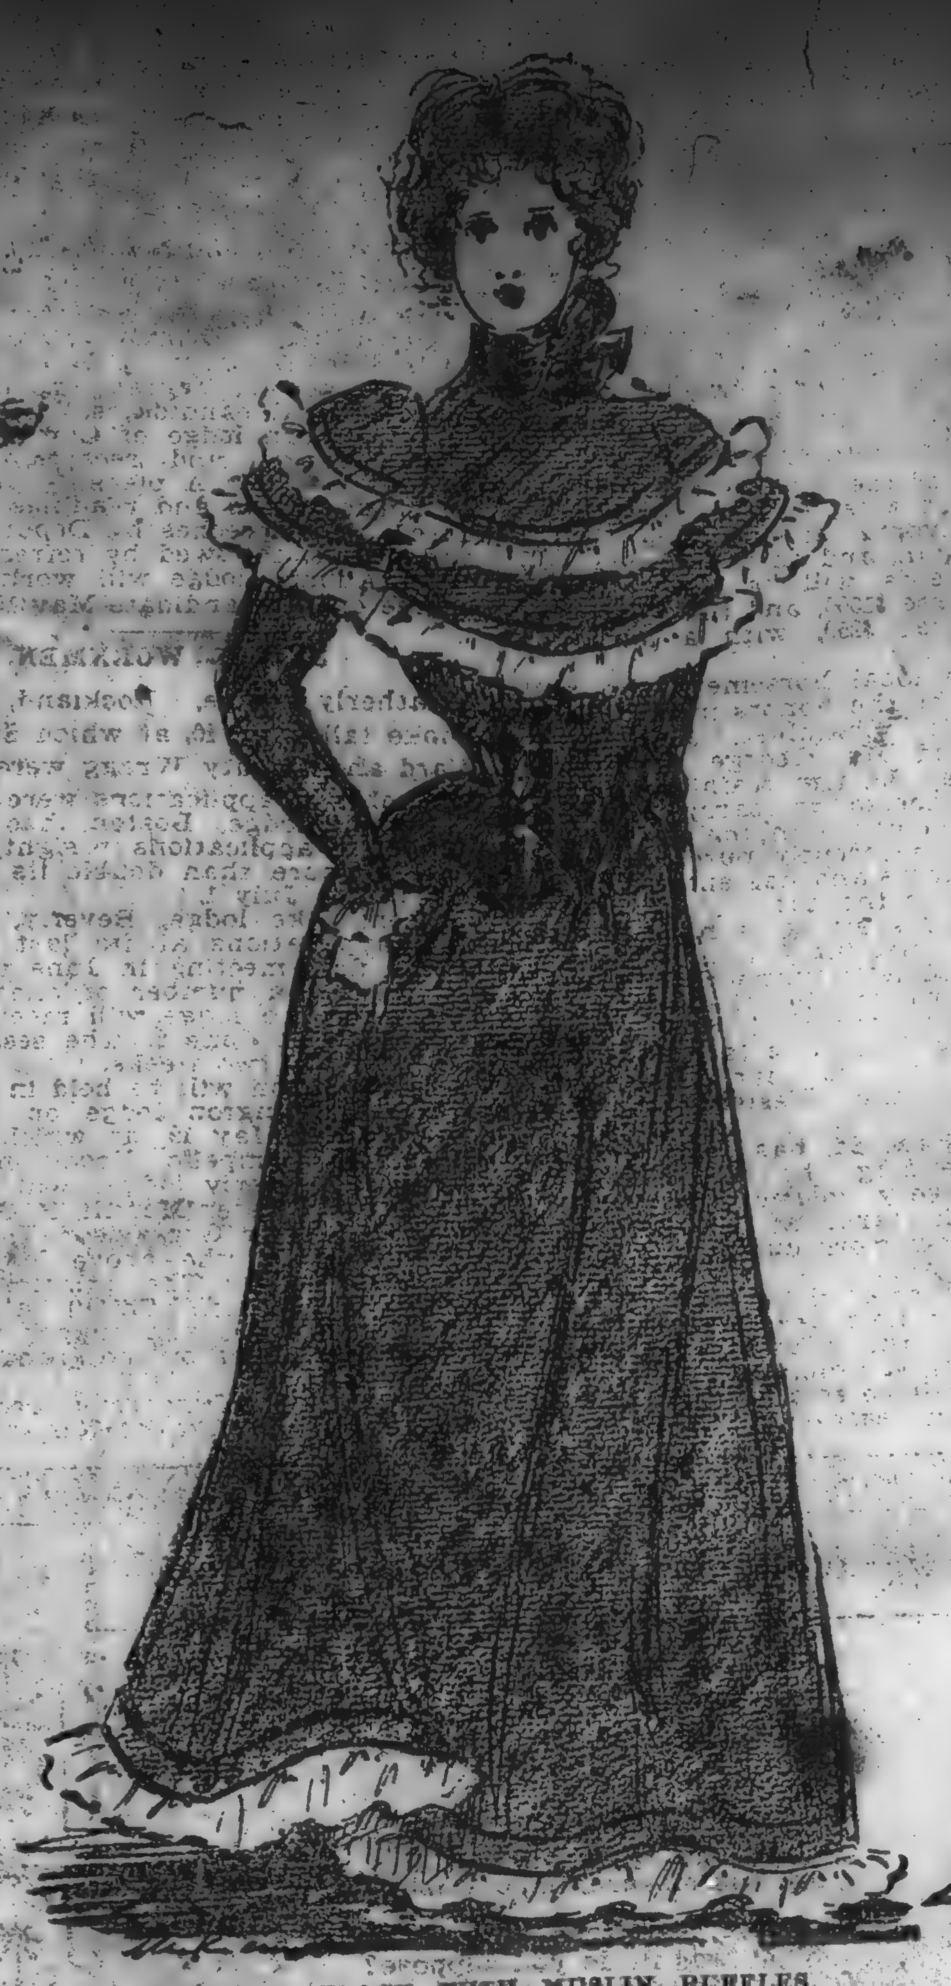
Another charming wrap of taffeta is in melon red, the shape being that of a deep yoke, with square epaulettes and long, square tabs in front. It is edged with a ruching of black lace, and with a very deep black lace flounce, the high collar being filled with lace. A toque oddly built of jet wings, with choux of gray velvet behind, was worn with this wrap one night at the Pops, the gown being of gray barege over white taffeta. White fringe trimmed this frock in a very odd fashion, the overskirt being edged with a deep variety, while the underskirt of white silk was covered with narrow white fringes set on the lower edge of broad gray velvet hoops. The overskirt reached to the feet in front, and canted up considerably toward the back, leaving the back breadths of the underskirt exposed, these dipping a bit after the present fashion. The bodice was a pouchy Russian blouse, the belt being of white kid, the one broad shawl rever being faced with gray velvet, a somewhat darker shade than the gray of the barege. The sleeves were hooped the whole length with gray velvet bands, and a chemisette of black tulle and jet gave an odd touch to the toilet that was well accented by the jet toque spoken of above.

To return to the divers taffeta garments possible this spring; a cloak of glace lime green has just been built that is a very smart affair. It has a fitted bodice, pointed in front, from which the skirts are set on with gathers all about, a quilling of the silk trimming the hem smartly. A girdle of gold and green stones follows the line of the bodice at the waist, the front pouching over this and fastening with a gold and jewelled ornament on one side of the bust. Soft revers of cream lace laid flatly about the shoulders are crossed over the bust very charmingly, a stock of white satin filling in the opening. The sleeves are fitted gigots with funnel cuffs edged with quillings and lined with lace.

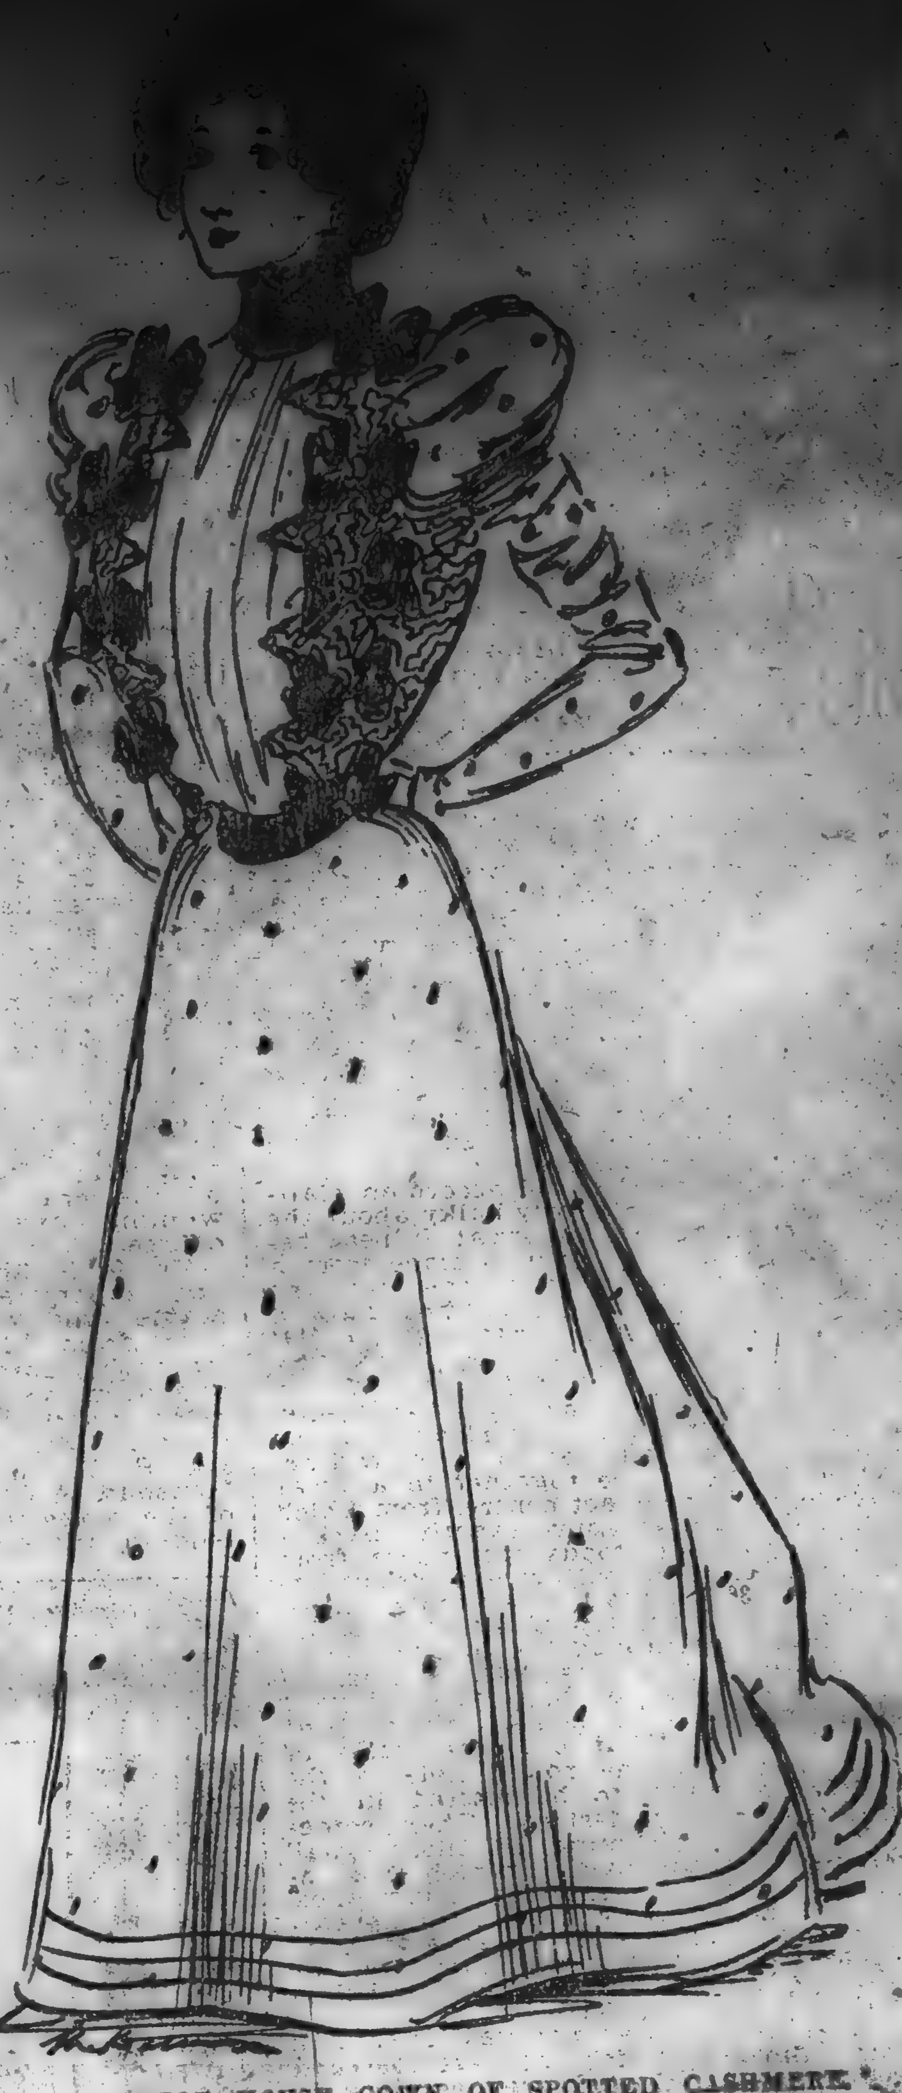
A soft leghorn hat of cream trimmed with emerald green plumes, laid across the front from a jewelled buckle to droop over each brim, above the ears, would accompany this delightfully for carriage wear at a watering place, the crown being built of lime green tulle, and the back twisted up with red carnations.

One of the prettiest taffeta frocks I have seen was worn by a Boston girl the past week in Music Hall, bright turquoise blue being the color. The skirt was set upon the waist low about the hips, and was shirred thickly about a cord. Two tiny frills of the silk trimmed the hem at some distance from each other, and a blouse of ecru lace over white satin was worn above the folded belt of blue taffeta, which reached somewhat below the actual waistline.

The Eton jacket topping this was a very short one, and was cut with a square shaped low neck, the whole edged with three narrow flat frills of the blue silk set on with a blue piping as a heading. The sleeves were of the blue silk, corded all about from shoulders to wrists, where lace frills trimmed them. Imagine a stock of yellow taffeta, and a large hat of tan colored chip laden with black plumes, and you will have the picture this pretty maid presented from the floor.



VICTORIAN FROCK WITH MUSLIN RUFFLES.



SIMPLE HOUSE GOWN OF SPOTTED CASHMERE.

A taffeta frock trimmed solely with lined with a lace ruche, another ruche trimming the hem of the skirt, a jabot fluffing over one shoulder from the lace stock. The perfectly plain sleeves were very elegant, and the soft folds of the bebe bodice were girded with white satin knotted at the back.

Another was of spotted delaine in china blue and white, the skirt full and soft and trimmed with three hair lines of black velvet about the hem. The bodice was of guipure, ecru over cardinal, the series of points down each side of the red silk vest being separated by square black velvet bows. Simple wool sleeves, and a black girdle and choker were all, and yet the gown had the distinctive cachet of a smart couturiere.

It is noticeable that the best dressed women have almost entirely abandoned the ruffles and puffs that formerly trimmed their chokers and wrists. The simple band about the throat knotted at the side or in front, is considered sufficient for most frocks, and the sleeves, while very long and snug, are untrimmed save for perhaps a narrow frill.

Perhaps the prettiest braided gown there—and there were so many that one has reason for believing that it will soon cease to be smart, if it has not already done so, and by smart is meant ultra-fashionable—was of military blue face cloth, the skirt trimmed with six rows of black braid set on in deep undulations, the points uppermost, the curved part of each loop downward. These festoons were set low about the front of the skirt, but behind trimmed it nearly to the waistline. The tight little jacket was encircled all about with rows of black braid set rather closely together, each ending with a brass button in front. It was belted down with black kid buckled with gold in front, and the opening was a straight up-and-down one from a high military choker trimmed with braid and buttons. The slender vest seen between the fronts was of plaited ecru muslin laid flat and smooth. A natty straw equestrienne of dark blue was worn with this, two black plumes trimming the sides and a yellow cockade of satin straw standing en aigrette.

Mr. Max Zach rapped his baton twice as a signal for attention to his orchestra and in perfect unison fifty skilled musicians responded, playing the opening strains of Berlioz's Marche Hongroise from the "Damnation of Faust." It was the first night of the popular promenade concerts in Music Hall. A large and enthusiastic audience was present and the floor of the big auditorium presented an animated appearance indeed with its groups of reserved tables surrounded by music lovers and members of gay Bohemia. The reserved seats were nearly all taken early in the evening and in the first balcony the reserved tables there were also well patronized. The decorations gave a festive appearance to the hall. On the sides of the balcony were festoons of laurel intermingled with bits of red bunting, while overhead little green fir trees were suspended with their tops hanging downward. The pieces of green on the stage were also arranged with artistic effect. The program rendered Monday night was as follows:

Marche Hongroise from "The Damnation of Faust"	Berlioz
Overture, "Le Roi l'a dit"	Delibes
(First Time).
Waltz, "Snowballs	Ziehrer
(First Time).
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
(First Time).
Ballet Music, "Feramors"	Rubinstein
1. Dance of the Bayaderes.
11. Candle Dance of the Brides of Kashmire.
Prelude to Act III of "The Cricket on the Hearth"	Goldmark
(First time at these concerts).
La Colombe	Gounod
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg"	Wagner
Entree Triumphales Des Boyards	Halvorsen
Overture, "Pique Dame"	Suppe
Waltz, "Artists' Life"	Srauss
March, "Austria"	Zach

The first selection to receive an encore was the waltz, "Snowballs" by Ziehrer and exquisitely rendered for the first time here by Mr. Zach and orchestra. Another first time selection for the promenades was number four from Victor Herbert's "Wizard of the Nile." This selection was heartily applauded and the demand for an encore was imperative. The prelude to "The Cricket on the Hearth" was an enjoyable selection and the overture to "Die Meistersingers" was beautifully rendered.

Tuesday night the Rococo Serenade for string orchestra by Meyer-Helmund was performed by the orchestra for the first time. Other numbers which aroused enthusiasm included the waltz, "Meerleuchten" by Zieher which was accorded a hearty encore. A selection from "La Fille de Madame Angot" was brilliantly rendered and with a snap and dash in orchestration which was most enjoyable. A beautiful rendition of the prelude to the first act of "Lohengrin" followed and Conductor Zach was compelled to bow to the applause again and again.

Wednesday evening De Koven's Waltz from "The Mandarin" was given its first Promenade rendition.

Thursday night's program included a selection from "Il Trovatore," the suite "Peer Gynt" by Grieg, overture to Tannhauser and "Jolly Fellows" waltz by Vollsted played for the first time here. Manager Frederick P. Comee received many congratulations from his friends on the auspicious opening of the first night and Conductor Max Zach was warmly welcomed.

THE "Pop" concerts, Boston's pet diversion in spring and early summer, have started off with all of their accustomed spirit. In the absence of "Charley" Ellis, Melba's good-looking and faultlessly-clad manager, whom she has just summoned to Paris, "Fred" Comer, his able co-associate at the Music Hall, is master of ceremonies, and presides over the rather solemn gayeties of the "Pops" to the satisfaction of all patrons, from the notoriously eccentric lady who has taken a table for the season, and who haunts the place every night, to the humblest gallery-god who looks down upon her and her satellites. "Tim" Adamowski, the blond and beautiful, who wielded the "Pop" baton two years ago, has sailed off to bask in Melba's smiles ere he goes on to his Polish home, so Max Zach, another of the first violins, is in the leader's stand. He is married, however, and not in any sense the "masher" dear Tim is. He doesn't go down between the acts to chat with the smart crowd at their various tables and drink beer with them. That excitement of watching whose table "Tim" would honor by his presence is no more a feature, alack! However, that other potent "ad"—Mrs. "Jack"—and her "gang" still hold their sway, and the "Pops" are saved.

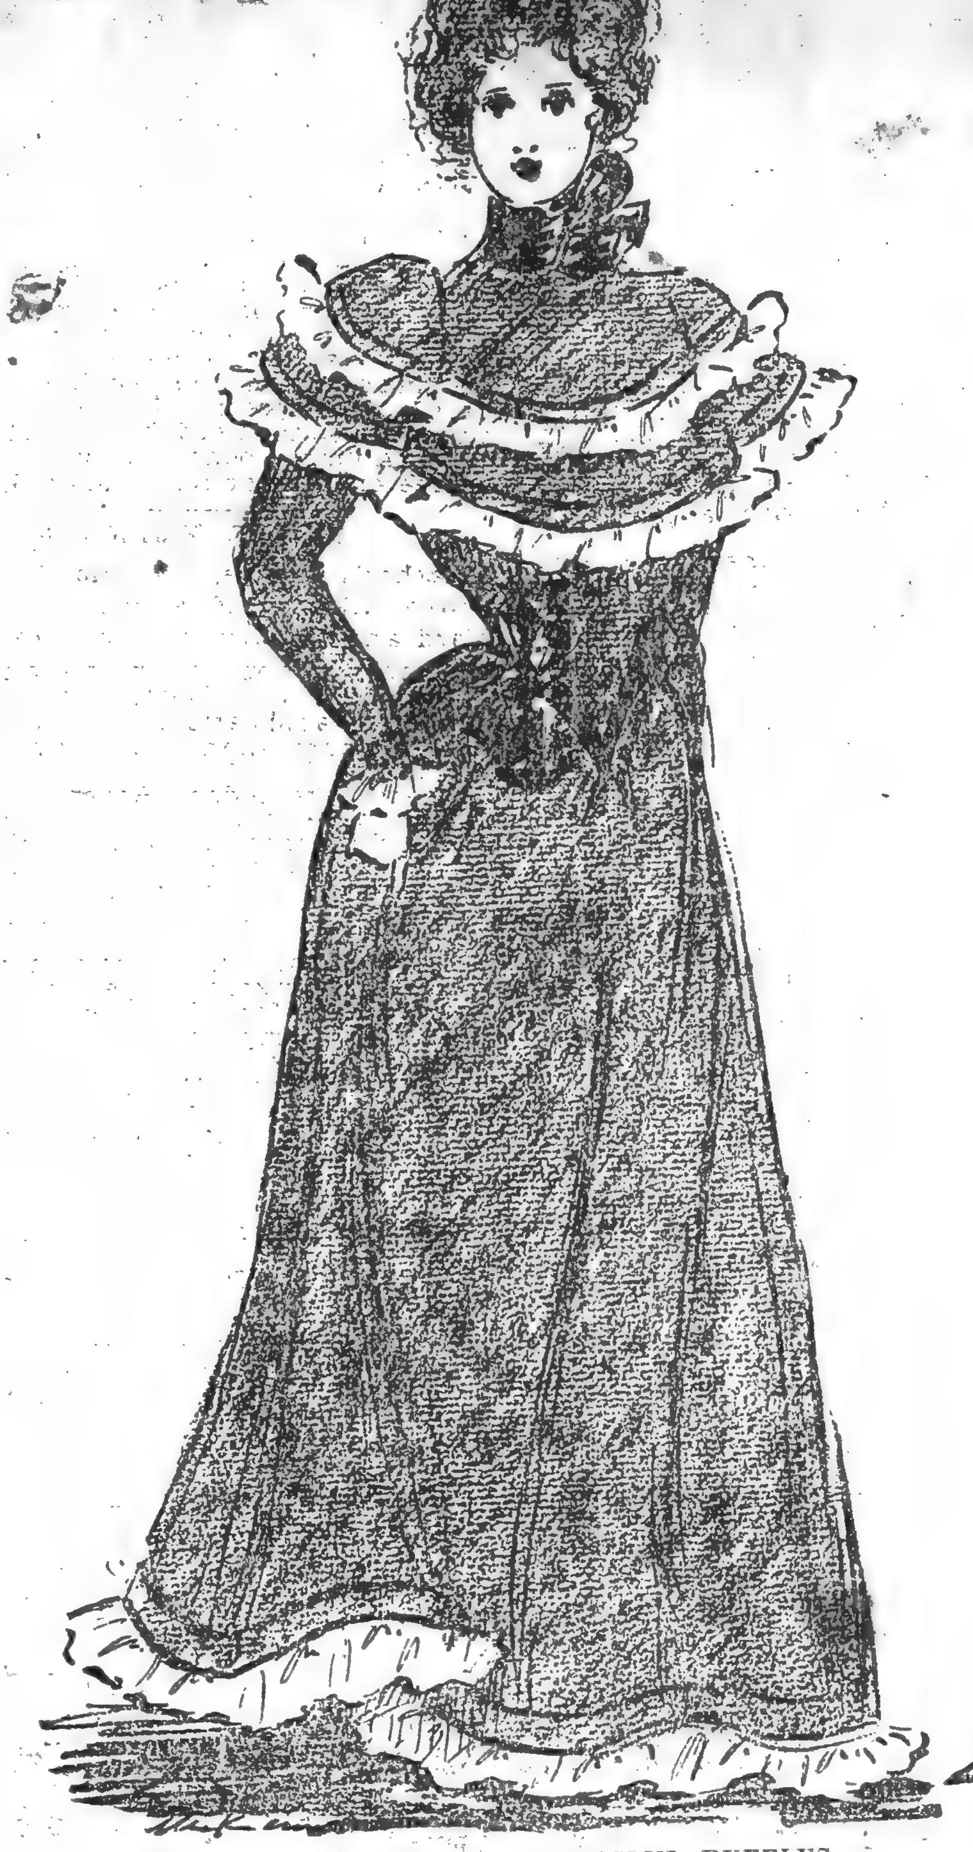
Noted at the Promenade concert Thursday evening were Mrs. T. J. Coolidge, jr. and party, Miss Nellie Eldridge and Miss Cushing of New York with friends, Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Gray Otis, Mrs. Alice Kent Robertson, Mr. and Mrs. I. A. Ratshesky, Miss Helen Leah Read, Mrs. J. L. Gardner, Miss Amory and Mr. George Proctor.

—An unusually attractive military program is announced for the promenade concert of Monday evening, May 31, when the "New York Seventh Regiment March" will be played, and selections from various Cadet Productions including "Simple Simon" will be rendered. Then too, Herbert's "American Fantasy," Ganne's "Waltz Militaire" and the inspiring "Tabasco" overture are among the popular numbers to be given, which cannot fail to combine in forming one of the most delightful programs ever offered in the history of "pop" concerts.

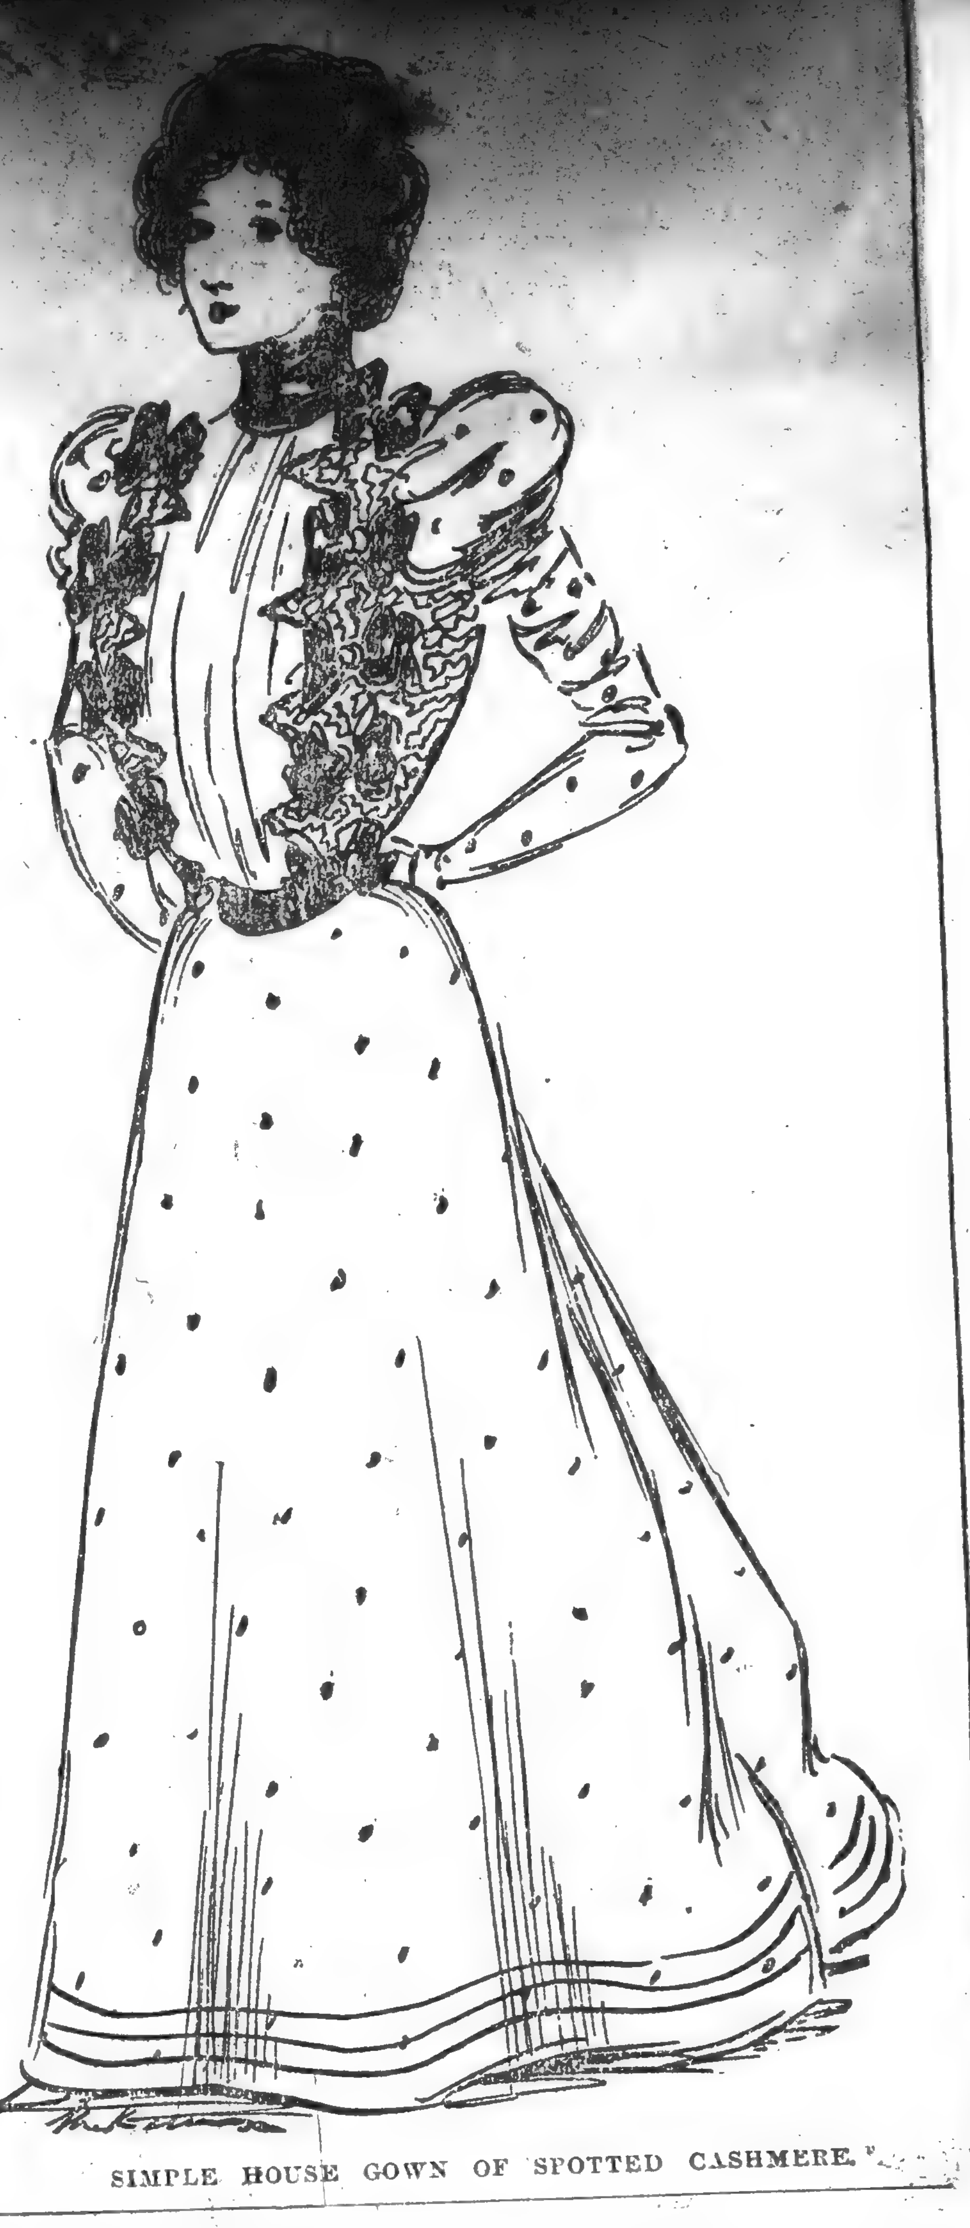
Music Notes.

The promenade concerts are now in the full swing of their glory, and large and delighted audiences are the rule. The programme for Monday night is: "Tabasco March," Chadwick; overture, "Mireille," Gounod (first time); waltz, "Snowballs," Ziehrer; selection, "Aida," Verdi; ballet music, "Faust," Gounod; (a) "Serenade" (first time), Stange; (b) "Menuet" (first time), Bolzoni; overture, "Semiramide," Rossini; excerpts from "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; selection, "The Geisha," Jones (first time); waltz, "Longchamps Fleuri," Waldteufel (first time); polka, "Hunters' Yarns," Komzak (first time); march, "La Victorieuse," Ganne (first time).

—The "Pop" concerts are quite as popular as ever, and the same faces are seen almost nightly at the tables. Mrs. Gardner, Mrs. William Hooper, the Masons, Zerahns, Whitwells, Normans, and most of the rest of that set who are still left in town.



VICTORIAN FROCK WITH MUSLIN RUFFLES.



SIMPLE HOUSE GOWN OF SPOTTED CASHMERE.

[illegible] have a whole wardrobe of taffeta, and yet hardly lack variety. A short cape of taffeta rounded to fit the shoulders and shirred over four encircling cords is a dainty beginning, the edge trimmed with a double flounce of taffeta, one longer than the other. In leaf green, with the lower flounce, as well as the lining, of changeable green and pink taffeta, the edges of the flounces pinked quaintly, and a thick pinked ruche of the green intermixed with cream lace for a tour de cou, the effect is delicious. This wrap is short in front, the cords rounding up to the throat, the flounces following suit, and the back reaching well below the waistline. The flounces about the edge form a sort of jabot up the front, black velvet choux fixing the wrap under the chin. This is carried out in chiffon very effectively, white being set over mauve or green, with a white taffeta lining.

Another charming wrap of taffeta is in melon red, the shape being that of a deep yoke, with square epaulettes and long, square tabs in front. It is edged with a ruching of black lace, and with a very deep black lace flounce, the high collar being filled with lace. A toque oddly built of jet wings, with choux of gray velvet behind, was worn with this wrap one night at the Pops, the gown being of gray barege over white taffeta. White fringe trimmed this frock in a very odd fashion, the overskirt being edged with a deep variety, while the underskirt of white silk was covered with narrow white fringes set on the lower edge of broad gray velvet hoops. The overskirt reached to the feet in front, and canted up considerably toward the back, leaving the back breadths of the underskirt exposed, these dipping a bit after the present fashion. The bodice was a pouchy Russian blouse, the belt being of white kid, the one broad shawl rever being faced with gray velvet, a somewhat darker shade than the gray of the barege. The sleeves were hooped the whole length with gray velvet bands, and a chemisette of black tulle and jet gave an odd touch to the toilet that was well accented by the jet toque spoken of above.

To return to the divers taffeta garments possible this spring; a cloak of glace lime green has just been built that is a very smart affair. It has a fitted bodice, pointed in front, from which the skirts are set on with gathers all about, a quilling of the silk trimming the hem smartly. A girdle of gold and green stones follows the line of the bodice at the waist, the front pouching over this and fastening with a gold and jewelled ornament on one side of the bust. Soft revers of cream lace laid flatly about the shoulders are crossed over the bust very charmingly, a stock of white satin filling in the opening. The sleeves are fitted gigots with funnel cuffs edged with quillings and lined with lace.

A soft leghorn hat of cream trimmed with emerald green plumes, laid across the front from a jewelled buckle to droop over each brim, above the ears, would accompany this delightfully for carriage wear at a watering place, the crown being built of lime green tulle, and the back twisted up with red carnations.

One of the prettiest taffeta frocks I have seen was worn by a Boston girl the past week in Music Hall, bright turquoise blue being the color. The skirt was set upon the waist low about the hips, and was shirred thickly about a cord. Two tiny frills of the silk trimmed the hem at some distance from each other, and a blouse of ecru lace over white satin was worn above the folded belt of blue taffeta, which reached somewhat below the actual waistline.

The Eton jacket topping this was a very short one, and was cut with a square shaped low neck, the whole edged with three narrow flat frills of the blue silk set on with a blue piping as a heading. The sleeves were of the blue silk, corded all about from shoulders to wrists, where lace frills trimmed them. Imagine a stock of yellow taffeta, and a large hat of tan colored chip laden with black plumes, and you will have the picture this pretty maid presented from the floor.

A taffeta frock trimmed solely with lined with a lace ruche, another ruche trimming the hem of the skirt, a jabot fluffing over one shoulder from the lace stock. The perfectly plain sleeves were very elegant, and the soft folds of the bebe bodice were girded with white satin knotted at the back.

Another was of spotted delaine in china blue and white, the skirt full and soft and trimmed with three hair lines of black velvet about the hem. The bodice was of guipure, ecru over cardinal, the series of points down each side of the red silk vest being separated by square black velvet bows. Simple wool sleeves, and a black girdle and choker were all, and yet the gown had the distinctive cachet of a smart couturiere.

It is noticeable that the best dressed women have almost entirely abandoned the ruffles and puffs that formerly trimmed their chokers and wrists. The simple band about the throat knotted at the side or in front, is considered sufficient for most frocks, and the sleeves, while very long and snug, are untrimmed save for perhaps a narrow frill.

Perhaps the prettiest braided gown there—and there were so many that one has reason for believing that it will soon cease to be smart, if it has not already done so, and by smart is meant ultra-fashionable—was of military blue face cloth, the skirt trimmed with six rows of black braid set on in deep undulations, the points uppermost, the curved part of each loop downward. These festoons were set low about the front of the skirt, but behind trimmed it nearly to the waistline. The tight little jacket was encircled all about with rows of black braid set rather closely together, each ending with a brass button in front. It was belted down with black kid buckled with gold in front, and the opening was a straight up-and-down one from a high military choker trimmed with braid and buttons. The slender vest seen between the fronts was of plaited ecru muslin laid flat and smooth. A natty straw equestrienne of dark blue was worn with this, two black plumes trimming the sides and a yellow cockade of satin straw standing en aigrette.

Mr. Max Zach rapped his baton twice as a signal for attention to his orchestra and in perfect unison fifty skilled musicians responded, playing the opening strains of Berlioz's Marche Hongroise from the "Damnation of Faust." It was the first night of the popular promenade concerts in Music Hall. A large and enthusiastic audience was present and the floor of the big auditorium presented an animated appearance indeed with its groups of reserved tables surrounded by music lovers and members of gay Bohemia. The reserved seats were nearly all taken early in the evening and in the first balcony the reserved tables there were also well patronized. The decorations gave a festive appearance to the hall. On the sides of the balcony were festoons of laurel intermingled with bits of red bunting, while overhead little green fir trees were suspended with their tops hanging downward. The pieces of green on the stage were also arranged with artistic effect. The program rendered Monday night was as follows:

Marche Hongroise from "The Damnation of Faust"	Berlioz
Overture, "Le Roi l'a dit" (First Time).	Delibes
Waltz, "Snowballs (First Time).	Ziehrer
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile" (First Time).	Herbert
Ballet Music, "Feramors" 1. Dance of the Bayaderes. 11. Candle Dance of the Brides of Kasimire.	Rubinstein
Prelude to Act III of "The Cricket on the Hearth" (First time at these concerts).	Goldmark
La Colombe	Gounod
Prelude to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg"	Wagner
Entree Triumphales Des Boyards	Halvorsen
Overture, "Pique Dame"	Suppe
Waltz, "Artists' Life"	Srauss
March, "Austria"	Zach

The first selection to receive an encore was the waltz, "Snowballs" by Ziehrer and exquisitely rendered for the first time here by Mr. Zach and orchestra. Another first time selection for the promenades was number four from Victor Herbert's "Wizard of the Nile." This selection was heartily applauded and the demand for an encore was imperative. The prelude to "The Cricket on the Hearth" was an enjoyable selection and the overture to "Die Meistersingers" was beautifully rendered.

Tuesday night the Rococo Serenade for string orchestra by Meyer-Helmund was performed by the orchestra for the first time. Other numbers which aroused enthusiasm included the waltz, "Meerleuchten" by Zieher which was accorded a hearty encore. A selection from "La Fille de Madame Angot" was brilliantly rendered and with a snap and dash in orchestration which was most enjoyable. A beautiful rendition of the prelude to the first act of "Lohengrin" followed and Conductor Zach was compelled to bow to the applause again and again.

Wednesday evening De Koven's Waltz from "The Mandarin" was given its first Promenade rendition.

Thursday night's program included a selection from "Il Trovatore," the suite "Peer Gynt" by Grieg, overture to Tannhauser and "Jolly Fellows" waltz by Vollsted played for the first time here. Manager Frederick P. Comee received many congratulations from his friends on the auspicious opening of the first night and Conductor Max Zach was warmly welcomed.

THE "Pop" concerts, Boston's pet diversion in spring and early summer, have started off with all of their accustomed spirit. In the absence of "Charley" Ellis, Melba's good-looking and faultlessly-clad manager, whom she has just summoned to Paris, "Fred" Comer, his able co-associate at the Music Hall, is master of ceremonies, and presides over the rather solemn gayeties of the "Pops" to the satisfaction of all patrons, from the notoriously eccentric lady who has taken a table for the season, and who haunts the place every night, to the humblest gallery-god who looks down upon her and her satellites. "Tim" Adamowski, the blond and beautiful, who wielded the "Pop" baton two years ago, has sailed off to bask in Melba's smiles ere he goes on to his Polish home, so Max Zach, another of the first violins, is in the leader's stand. He is married, however, and not in any sense the "masher" dear Tim is. He doesn't go down between the acts to chat with the smart crowd at their various tables and drink beer with them. That excitement of watching whose table "Tim" would honor by his presence is no more a feature, alack! However, that other potent "ad"—Mrs. "Jack"—and her "gang" still hold their sway, and the "Pops" are saved.

Noted at the Promenade concert Thursday evening were Mrs. T. J. Coolidge, jr. and party, Miss Nellie Eldridge and Miss Cushing of New York with friends, Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Gray Otis, Mrs. Alice Kent Robertson, Mr. and Mrs. I. A. Ratshesky, Miss Helen Leah Read, Mrs. J. L. Gardner, Miss Amory and Mr. George Proctor.

—An unusually attractive military program is announced for the promenade concert of Monday evening, May 31, when the "New York Seventh Regiment March" will be played, and selections from various Cadet Productions including "Simple Simon" will be rendered. Then too, Herbert's "American Fantasy," Ganne's "Waltz Militaire" and the inspiring "Tabasco" overture are among the popular numbers to be given, which cannot fail to combine in forming one of the most delightful programs ever offered in the history of "pop" concerts.

Music Notes.

The promenade concerts are now in the full swing of their glory, and large and delighted audiences are the rule. The programme for Monday night is: "Tabasco March," Chadwick; overture, "Mireille," Gounod (first time); waltz, "Snowballs," Ziehrer; selection, "Aida," Verdi; ballet music, "Faust," Gounod; (a) "Serenade" (first time), Stange; (b) "Menuet" (first time), Bolzoni; overture, "Semiramide," Rossini; excerpts from "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; selection, "The Geisha," Jones (first time); waltz, "Longchamps Fleuri," Waldteufel (first time); polka, "Hunters' Yarns," Komzak (first time); march, "La Victorieuse," Ganne (first time).

—The "Pop" concerts are quite as popular as ever, and the same faces are seen almost nightly at the tables. Mrs. Gardner, Mrs. William Hooper, the Masons, Zerahns, Whitwells, Normans, and most of the rest of that set who are still left in town.

Promenade Concerts

The promenade concerts in Music hall have attracted the regular large attendance of former seasons, and the first week, despite the cool weather, has demonstrated the great popularity of this form of entertainment. Conductor Zach has an excellent corps of musicians and the programs have been admirably interpreted.

Tomorrow evening the selections will be as follows:

March, Parapluie ....Bayer
Overture, Light Cavalry ....Suppe
Waltz, Les Patineurs ....Waldteufel
Selection, Beggar Student ....Milloecker
Sevillana ....Massenet
Serenata ....Moszkowski
Hungarian rhapsody in F........................Liszt
Traeumerei ....Schumann
Ballet music from Samson and Dalila
Saint-Saens
Overture, Masaniello ....Auber
Waltz, O Schoner Mai ....Strauss
Polka, Sangerlust ....Strauss
March, Boccaccio ....Suppe

—Music hall has seldom presented a more brilliant scene than on Monday night at the opening of the promenade concerts, when, despite the inclemency of the weather, the tables were filled. Mrs John L. Gardner, in a gown of linen, with satin stripes, and wearing a huge black hat with plumes, had her usual table in the center of the enclosure, where her guests were Mr Alexander Blaess, Mr G. W. Proctor and Miss Olga Gardner. At the next table sat Miss Eleanor Shattuck, in a dark gown, with effective cream lace yoke and a large ecru straw hat, with huge blue bows. Her fiance, Mr Hugh Whitney, and her sister, Miss Shattuck, the latter in a large red flower hat and fawn silk waist, sat at the same table. Mr Isidore Braggiotti, with Mr A. H. Wainwright, had a party of friends in the same corner of the hall. Mr S. Hooper-Hooper and Mr Dacore Bush were with friends at tables further back. Mr T. C. Hollander, Mr L. C. Benton, Mr H. M. Leland, Mr and Mrs J. J. Souther, Mr Walter De Land Came, Mr Charles Dennie, Mr and Mrs Edgar L. Pierce, Mr and Mrs Robert Baker, Mrs Fred Brooks and party, Mrs Charles E. Inches and friends, Col Hastings and Dr Otis E. Newell were at the tables with friends. In the center balcony were Mr and Mrs William Hooper, the latter in ecru silk, with white satin and silver vest, with which she wore a large picture hat with black trimmings. In the large audience were noticed Mr Stephen Codman, Dr Charles W. Galloupe, Mr and Mrs James B. Forsythe, Mr Frank Shepard, Mr Lewis Hayden, Mr Paul Keith, Mr Geo. Frederick Munn, Miss Sears, Mr Blake, Miss Hollander, Mr John Hayes, Mr Hamilton Hill, Mr Lehmann, Mr Roger Wolcott Jr, Mrs Curtis Guild Jr, in a party which included several friends, Mr Josef Adamowski, Mr Franz Zerrahn, with party; Mr and Mrs Arthur Richmond, Mr and Mrs John Dana Shepard, Mr and Mrs Jesse G. Swift, Mr George H. Monks, Mr Karl Breneman, Mrs E. R. Comee, Mrs P. V. R. Ely and party, Mr Arthur Spring and Mr Leo Mielsiger, with large party.

—At the Pops Tuesday night were Com Perkins and Miss Isabelle Perkins, the latter gowned in a gray china crepe, with white lace garniture, and a toque of the now fashionable red, in silk and roses. Not until 9 o'clock were the tables all occupied. Mrs John L. Gardner was accompanied by Miss Olga Gardner, Mr Alex Blaess and Mr George Proctor. Mrs Gardner furnished the brightest bit of color in the ring, with her bodice of bright china pink, touched up with white lace. Her niece was in pale blue and large black hat. Nearer the stage sat Mr and Mrs Neil Rantoul and party. The first straw sailor hat of the Pop season made its appearance, and adorned the head of a pretty girl near the table occupied by Dr and Mrs L. B. Fenderson and party, and not far from a large party of Somerset club men, guests of Mr Merriam. In the balcony Rev and Mrs A. A. Berle enjoyed the scene, as did Mrs [illegible] E. Potter and Mrs Max [illegible]

—Mrs John L. Gardner was a missing figure at the Pops Wednesday until after 10, when she arrived with Mr Proctor, attracting more than the usual amount of attention because of appearing in a big green hat profusely garlanded with pink roses and minus the veil, worn usually on all occasions. Her gown was a gray silk, the short jacket opening over a white chiffon blouse. Next to the Gardner table were two tables placed together, occupied by Miss Marion Mason, Mr Braggiotti, Miss Bessie Chadwick and others. The party of eight was chaperoned by Mrs A. L. Mason, who was gowned in a black net, appliqued with white lace and glittering toque. Miss Mason wore a hat of pink silk and soft pink roses; Miss Chadwick was somberly attired in black, relieved by white. Elsewhere in the ring were noted Mr I. M. Gaugengigl, with party, Mr Wheelwright, who had several guests, and Mr John C. Abbott, who was congratulated on his convalescence after a serious illness.

[illegible] every week day [illegible] Music hall taxed by the large crowds who attend.

Mr. Max Zach is furnishing just such programmes as charm the public and Mr. F. R. Comee's management is beyond criticism.

Owing to long-standing engagements of Music hall, there will be no concerts on the evenings of Wednesday and Thursday, May 26 and 27. The concerts will be continued every evening except Sunday, begining Friday, May 28.

Tomorrow evening's programme will be:

Tobasco March........................Chadwick
Overture............"Mirelle"..........Gounod
(First time).
Waltz............"Snowballs"..........Ziehrer
Selection............"Aida"..........Verdi
Ballet Music..........."Faust"..........Gounod
Serenade...........(First time)...........Stange
Menuet........................Bolzoni
(For string orchestra).
Overture..........."Semiramide"..........Rossini
Excerpts from "The Flying Dutchman"....
........................Wagner
Selection..........."The Geisha"..........Jones
(First time).
Waltz...."Longchamps Fleuri"....Waldteufel
(First time)
Polka ...."Hunters' Yarns"..........Komzak
(First time).
Morch.........."La Victorieuse"..........Ganné
(First time).

The second week of the Pops opened Monday night with the same fine audience and good music, and the number of people in the balconies was larger than on the first week. A few noted there in the throng around the tables were Mr. Francis Dumaresq and party, Mr. Lawrence Curtis, Mr. A. H. Higginson, Miss Anna Lyman, with friends, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Whiting, Mrs. John L. Gardner with Miss Olga Gardner and Mr. Proctor, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Barnet, Mr. C. H. Richardson and party and Mr. Clayton Johns.

Tuesday night Mrs. James Jackson chaperoned a small party of young people, including Miss Madeline Jackson and Miss Mary Higginson. Mrs. Jackson was in black, the bodice opening over black and yellow, and a hat of violets and tea roses, very chic. Her daughter wore a light tinted bodice with a black tulle hat. Another of the party wore a most effective scarlet blouse, with scarlet hat and black wings. Mrs. J. B. Forsyth brought a party that night. Mrs. Forsyth was smart in a mauve velvet Empire coat, with hat of green straw with wings and red roses. Miss Campbell, one of that party, wore a violet accordion pleated blouse, with hat of black wings and violets. Mrs. Phineas Adams, who was with friends, wore a handsome gown of black moire velour, the front of the bodice of violet chiffon edged with lace. Her hat was of black lace, with flowers from shades of lavender to deep purple.

Others there were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. George C. Lee, Mr. and Mrs. S. Parkman Blake and Miss Blake, Mr. Carteret Fenno and party, Miss Pauline Shaw, Miss Isabel Perkins, Mr. Parkman Dexter, Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Field, Mr. Lehmann with a party, Mr. J. B. Chamberlain, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Pierce and Dr and Mrs. Henry Morse.

THE PROMENADES.

The large audiences the past week fully attest the continued popularity of these bright summer evening entertainments. Conductor Max Zach has shown excellent judgment in the arrangement of his programs. The audiences have been of the usual high standard, and demonstrations of enthusiasm were especially noticeable on Friday and Saturday evenings. On Wednesday and Thursday evenings of the coming week there will be no concerts, owing to long standing engagements of Music Hall. The concerts will begin again Friday evening, May 28, and continue each evening except Sunday until the close of the season, July 3.

Monday evening, May 31, will be "Military Night," when the "New York Seventh Regiment March" will be played; also selections from "Simple Simon" and other productions of the Cadets. The program will also include the "American Fantasy" by Herbert, the "Waltz Militaire" by Ganne, the "1812" and "Tabasco" overtures, and other appropriate selections.

The program in full for tomorrow evening will be as follows:

Tabasco March........................Chadwick
Overture, "Mireille"........................Gounod
(First Time.)
Waltz, "Snowballs"........................Ziehrer
Selection, "Aida"........................Verdi
Ballet music, "Faust"........................Gounod
a. Serenade (First Time........................Strange
b. Menuet........................Bolzoni
Overture, "Semiramide"........................Rossini
Excerpts from "The Flying Dutchman"........................Wagner
Selection, "The Geisha"........................Jones
(First Time.)
Waltz, "Longchamps Fleuri"........Waldteufel
(First Time.)
Polka, "Hunters' Yarns"........................Komzak
(First Time.)
March, "La Victorieuse"........................Ganne
(First Time.)

The Promenade Concerts.

At Music Hall the promenade concerts continue to attract large and brilliant audiences. Mr. Zach's orchestra of skilled musicians interpret all the selections with rare skill and are generously applauded. These concerts are a very enjoyable form of entertainment and where one may listen to good music with such ease and comfort it is no wonder that they are so well patronized.

THE POP CONCERTS.

The second week of Boston's popular summer entertainments, the Music Hall promenade concerts, ended last night. The programme was a popular one, and the audience the largest of the season. Conductor Zach is to be congratulated on the excellent programme he offers nightly. On Wednesday and Thursday of the coming week, owing to long-standing engagements of Music Hall, there will be no concerts, but the programmes will be continued every evening except Sunday, beginning Friday, May 28.

The first of the special nights will be on Monday evening, May 31, which will be Military Night, when the "New York Seventh Regiment March" will be played, also selections from "Simple Simon" and other productions of the Cadets. The programme will also include the "American Fantasy" by Herbert, the "Waltz Militaire" by Ganne, the "1812" and "Tabasco" overtures, and other appropriate selections.

The programme in full for tomorrow (Monday) evening is: "Tabasco March," Chadwick; overture, "Mireille," Gounod; waltz, "Snowballs," Ziehrer; selection, "Aida," Verdi; ballet music, "Faust," Gounod; a, serenade (first time), for string orchestra, Stange; b. menuet, for string orchestra, Bolzoni; overture, "Semiramide," Rossini; excerpts from "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; selection, "The Geisha," Jones; waltz, "Longchamps Fleuri," Waldteufel; polka, "Hunters' Yarns," Komzak; march, "La Victorieuse," Ganne.

THE MUSIC HALL "POPS."

The programe at the promenade concert at Music Hall this evening is:

March, "Queen of Sheba"........Gounod
Overture, "Tannhauser" ....Wagner
Waltz, "Artist's Lift" ....Strauss
Selection, "Faust" ....Gounod
Two Movements from Suite, "Peer Gynt" Grieg
a. Anitra's Dance.
b. In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains. The Imps are chasing Peer Gynt.
Entree Triomphale Des Boyards ..
Halversen
Love's Dream After the Ball ...Czibulka
Polonaise ....Liszt
Huldigungsmarch ....Wagner
Largo ....Handel
Solo Violin, Mr. J. Hoffmann.
Waltz, "Meerleuchten" ....Ziehrer
Marsh, "Manhattan Beach" ......Sousa

THE HARVARD CRIMSON.

Tonight's Promenade Concert.

The programme for the Promenade Concert tonight at Music Hall, Boston, is as follows:

1. Tabasco March, Chadwick.
2. Overture, "Mireille," Gounod.
3. Waltz, "Snowballs," Ziehrer.
4. Selection, "Aida," Verdi.
5. Entr'acte, "Philemon and Baucis," Gounod.
6. a. Serenade, Stange.
   b. Menuet, Bolzoni.
   (For string orchestra.)
7. Overture, "Semiramide," Rossini.
8. Excerpts from "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner.
9. Selection, "The Geisha," Jones.
10. Waltz, "Longchamps Fleuri," Waldteufel.
11. Polka, "Hunters' Yarns," Komzak.
12. March, "La Victorieuse," Ganne.

Music Hall "Pops."

One of the most satisfactory indications of the continued popularity of the Music hall promenade concerts is the large attendance the past week, in face of unfavorable weather. Society has turned out as usual in goodly numbers, and the audiences generally have been, like the music, first class. The very best order has prevailed throughout the week.

But four concerts will be given this week, the hall being engaged for other purposes Wednesday and Thursday evenings. The program for tomorrow night will be as follows:

Tabasco march........................Chadwick
Overture, Mireille ....Gounod
Waltz, Snowballs ....Ziehrer
Selection, Aida ....Verdi
Ballet music, Faust ....Gounod
Serenade ....Stange
Menuet ....Bolzoni
Overture, Semiramide ....Rossini
Excerpts from The Flying Dutchman...Wagner
Selection, The Geisha ....Jones
Waltz, Longchamps Fleuri ....Waldteufel
Polka, Hunters' Yarns ....Komzak
March, La Victorieuse ....Ganne

On Friday night at the Pops there was perhaps the largest company of the week. Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Luce had a young party, and Police Commissioner Robert F. Clark also. Miss Eleanor Shattuck, looking exceedingly pretty, was there with her fiance, Mr. Hugh Whitney and party, and so was Miss Sally Fairchild. Mrs. Gardner had her usual attendant, Mr. Proctor, the pianist, and Mr. Pierson Beebe, Mr. Higginson, Mr. Leon Brugniere and party, and Mr. Charles Taylor and [illegible] from Baltimore were [illegible] tables.

...s Daly, E. R. McAdams, Martha and Grace Edgar.

Promenade Concerts.

The promenade concerts in Music hall have attracted the regular large attendance of former seasons, and the first week, despite the cool weather, has demonstrated the great popularity of this form of entertainment. Conductor Zach has an excellent corps of musicians and the programs have been admirably interpreted.

Tomorrow evening the selections will be as follows:

March, Parapluie	Bayer
Overture, Light Cavalry	Suppe
Waltz, Les Patineurs	Waldteufel
Selection, Beggar Student	Milloecker
Sevillana	Massenet
Serenata	Moszkowski
Hungarian rhapsody in F	Liszt
Traeumerei	Schumann
Ballet music from Samson and Dalila	Saint-Saens
Overture, Masaniello	Auber
Waltz, O Schoner Mai	Strauss
Polka, Sangerlust	Strauss
March, Boccaccio	Suppe

——Music hall has seldom presented a more brilliant scene than on Monday night at the opening of the promenade concerts, when, despite the inclemency of the weather, the tables were filled. Mrs John L. Gardner, in a gown of linen, with satin stripes, and wearing a huge black hat with plumes, had her usual table in the center of the enclosure, where her guests were Mr Alexander Blaess, Mr G. W. Proctor and Miss Olga Gardner. At the next table sat Miss Eleanor Shattuck, in a dark gown, with effective cream lace yoke and a large ecru straw hat, with huge blue bows. Her fiance, Mr Hugh Whitney, and her sister, Miss Shattuck, the latter in a large red flower hat and fawn silk waist, sat at the same table. Mr Isidore Braggiotti, with Mr A. H. Wainwright, had a party of friends in the same corner of the hall. Mr S. Hooper-Hooper and Mr Dacore Bush were with friends at tables further back. Mr T. C. Hollander, Mr L. C. Benton, Mr H. M. Leland, Mr and Mrs J. J. Souther, Mr Walter De Land Came, Mr Charles Dennie, Mr and Mrs Edgar L. Pierce, Mr and Mrs Robert Baker, Mrs Fred Brooks and party, Mrs Charles E. Inches and friends, Col Hastings and Dr Otis E. Newell were at the tables with friends. In the center balcony were Mr and Mrs William Hooper, the latter in ecru silk, with white satin and silver vest, with which she wore a large picture hat with black trimmings. In the large audience were noticed Mr Stephen Codman, Dr Charles W. Galloupe, Mr and Mrs James B. Forsythe, Mr Frank Shepard, Mr Lewis Hayden, Mr Paul Keith, Mr Geo. Frederick Munn, Miss Sears, Mr Blake, Miss Hollander, Mr John Hayes, Mr Hamilton Hill, Mr Lehmann, Mr Roger Wolcott Jr, Mrs Curtis Guild Jr, in a party which included several friends, Mr Josef Adamowski, Mr Franz Zerrahn, with party; Mr and Mrs Arthur Richmond, Mr and Mrs John Dana Shepard, Mr and Mrs Jesse G. Swift, Mr George H. Monks, Mr Karl Breneman, Mrs F. R. Comee, Mrs P. V. R. Ely and party, Mr Arthur Spring and Mr Leo Mielsiger, with large party.

——At the Pops Tuesday night were Com Perkins and Miss Isabelle Perkins, the latter gowned in a gray china crepe, with white lace garniture, and a toque of the now fashionable red, in silk and roses. Not until 9 o'clock were the tables all occupied. Mrs John L. Gardner was accompanied by Miss Olga Gardner, Mr Alex Blaess and Mr George Proctor. Mrs Gardner furnished the brightest bit of color in the ring, with her bodice of bright china pink, touched up with white lace. Her niece was in pale blue and large black hat. Nearer the stage sat Mr and Mrs Neil Rantoul and party. The first straw sailor hat of the Pop season made its appearance, and adorned the head of a pretty girl near the table occupied by Dr and Mrs L. B. Fenderson and party, and not far from a large party of Somerset club men, guests of Mr Merriam. In the balcony Rev and Mrs A. A. Berle enjoyed the scene, as did Mrs Flora E. Potter and Mrs Max Zach.

——Mrs John L. Gardner was a missing figure at the Pops Wednesday until after 10, when she arrived with Mr Proctor, attracting more than the usual amount of attention because of appearing in a big green hat profusely garlanded with pink roses and minus the veil, worn usually on all occasions. Her gown was a gray silk, the short jacket opening over a white chiffon blouse. Next to the Gardner table were two tables placed together, occupied by Miss Marion Mason, Mr Braggiotti, Miss Bessie Chadwick and others. The party of eight was chaperoned by Mrs A. L. Mason, who was gowned [illegible] a black net, appliqued with white lace and glittering toque. Miss Mason wore a hat of pink silk and soft pink roses; Miss Chadwick was somberly attired in black, relieved by white. Elsewhere in the ring were noted Mr I. M. Gaugengigl, with party, Mr Wheelwright, who had several guests, and Mr John C. Abbott, who was congratulated on his convalescence after a serious illness.

——Mrs Frederick Warren opened her

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The pop concerts still continue their delightfully merry way, and every week day evening finds Music hall taxed by the large crowds who attend.

Mr. Max Zach is furnishing just such programmes as charm the public and Mr. F. R. Comee's management is beyond criticism.

Owing to long-standing engagements of Music hall, there will be no concerts on the evenings of Wednesday and Thursday, May 26 and 27. The concerts will be continued every evening except Sunday, begining Friday, May 28.

Tomorrow evening's programme will be:

Tobasco March		Chadwick
Overture	"Mirelle"	Gounod
	(First time).
Waltz	"Snowballs"	Ziehrer
Selection	"Aida"	Verdi
Ballet Music	"Faust"	Gounod
Serenade	(First time)	Stange
Menuet		Bolzoni
	(For string orchestra).
Overture	"Semiramide"	Rossini
Excerpts from "The Flying Dutchman"		Wagner
Selection	"The Geisha"	Jones
	(First time).
Waltz	"Longchamps Fleuri"	Waldteufel
	(First time)
Polka	"Hunters' Yarns"	Komzak
	(First time).
Morch	"La Victorieuse"	Ganne
	(First time).

The second week of the Pops opened Monday night with the same fine audience and good music, and the number of people in the balconies was larger than on the first week. A few noted there in the throng around the tables were Mr. Francis Dumaresq and party, Mr. Lawrence Curtis, Mr. A. H. Higginson, Miss Anna Lyman, with friends, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Whiting, Mrs. John L. Gardner with Miss Olga Gardner and Mr. Proctor, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Barnet, Mr. C. H. Richardson and party and Mr. Clayton Johns.

Tuesday night Mrs. James Jackson chaperoned a small party of young people, including Miss Madeline Jackson and Miss Mary Higginson. Mrs. Jackson was in black, the bodice opening over black and yellow, and a hat of violets and tea roses, very chic. Her daughter wore a light tinted bodice with a black tulle hat. Another of the party wore a most effective scarlet blouse, with scarlet hat and black wings. Mrs. J. B. Forsyth brought a party that night. Mrs. Forsyth was smart in a mauve velvet Empire coat, with hat of green straw with wings and red roses. Miss Campbell, one of that party, wore a violet accordion pleated blouse, with hat of black wings and violets. Mrs. Phineas Adams, who was with friends, wore a handsome gown of black moire velour, the front of the bodice of violet chiffon edged with lace. Her hat was of black lace, with flowers from shades of lavender to deep purple.

Others there were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. George C. Lee, Mr. and Mrs. S. Parkman Blake and Miss Blake, Mr. Carteret Fenno and party, Miss Pauline Shaw, Miss Isabel Perkins, Mr. Parkman Dexter, Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Field, Mr. Lehmann with a party, Mr. J. B. Chamberlain, Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Pierce and Dr and Mrs. Henry Morse.

THE PROMENADES.

The large audiences the past week fully attest the continued popularity of these bright summer evening entertainments. Conductor Max Zach has shown excellent judgment in the arrangement of his programs. The audiences have been of the usual high standard, and demonstrations of enthusiasm were especially noticeable on Friday and Saturday evenings. On Wednesday and Thursday evenings of the coming week there will be no concerts, owing to long standing engagements of Music Hall. The concerts will begin again Friday evening, May 28, and continue each evening except Sunday until the close of the season, July 3.

Monday evening, May 31, will be "Military Night," when the "New York Seventh Regiment March" will be played; also selections from "Simpla Simon" and other productions of the Cadets. The program will also include the "American Fantasy" by Herbert, the "Waltz Militaire" by Ganne, the "1812" and "Tabasco" overtures, and other appropriate selections.

The program in full for tomorrow evening will be as follows:

Tabasco March	Chadwick
Overture, "Mireille" (First Time.)	Gounod
Waltz, "Snowballs"	Ziehrer
Selection, "Aida"	Verdi
Ballet music, "Faust"	Gounod
a. Serenade (First Time	Strange
b. Menuet	Bolzoni
Overture, "Semiramide"	Rossini
Excerpts from "The Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
Selection, "The Geisha" (First Time.)	Jones
Waltz, "Longchamps Fleuri" (First Time.)	Waldteufel
Polka, "Hunters' Yarns" (First Time.)	Komzak
March, "La Victorieuse" (First Time.)	Ganne

The Promenade Concerts.

At Music Hall the promenade concerts continue to attract large and brilliant audiences. Mr. Zach's orchestra of skilled musicians interpret all the selections with rare skill and are generously applauded. These concerts are a very enjoyable form of entertainment and where one may listen to good music with such ease and comfort it is no wonder that they are so well patronized.

THE POP CONCERTS.

The second week of Boston's popular summer entertainments, the Music Hall promenade concerts, ended last night. The programme was a popular one, and the audience the largest of the season. Conductor Zach is to be congratulated on the excellent programme he offers nightly. On Wednesday and Thursday of the coming week, owing to long-standing engagements of Music Hall, there will be no concerts, but the programmes will be continued every evening except Sunday, beginning Friday, May 28.

The first of the special nights will be on Monday evening, May 31, which will be Military Night, when the "New York Seventh Regiment March" will be played, also selections from "Simple Simon" and other productions of the Cadets. The programme will also include the "American Fantasy" by Herbert, the "Waltz Militaire" by Ganne, the "1812" and "Tabasco" overtures, and other appropriate selections.

The programme in full for tomorrow (Monday) evening is: "Tabasco March," Chadwick; overture, "Mireille," Gounod; waltz, "Snowballs," Ziehrer; selection, "Aida," Verdi; ballet music, "Faust," Gounod; a. serenade (first time), for string orchestra, Stange; b. menuet, for string orchestra, Bolzoni; overture, "Semiramide," Rossini; excerpts from "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; selection, "The Geisha," Jones; waltz, "Longchamps Fleuri," Waldteufel; polka, "Hunters' Yarns," Komzak; march, "La Victorieuse," Ganne.

THE MUSIC HALL "POPS."

The programe at the promenade concert at Music Hall this evening is:

March, "Queen of Sheba"	Gounod
Overture, "Tannhauser"	Wagner
Waltz, "Artist's Lift"	Strauss
Selection, "Faust"	Gounod
Two Movements from Suite, "Peer Gynt" a. Anitra's Dance. b. In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains. The Imps are chasing Peer Gynt.	Grieg
Entree Triomphale Des Boyards	Halvorsen
Love's Dream After the Ball	Czibulka
Polonaise	Liszt
Huldigungsmarch	Wagner
Largo Solo Violin, Mr. J. Hoffmann.	Handel
Waltz, "Meerleuchten"	Ziehrer
Marsh, "Manhattan Beach"	Sousa

THE HARVARD CRIMSON.

Tonight's Promenade Concert.

The programme for the Promenade Concert tonight at Music Hall, Boston, is as follows:

1.	Tabasco March,	Chadwick.
2.	Overture, "Mireille,"	Gounod.
3.	Waltz, "Snowballs,"	Ziehrer.
4.	Selection, "Aida,"	Verdi.
5.	Entr'acte, "Philemon and Baucis,"	Gounod.
6.	a. Serenade,	Stange.
	b. Menuet, (For string orchestra.)	Bolzoni.
7.	Overture, "Semiramide,"	Rossini.
8.	Excerpts from "The Flying Dutchman,"	Wagner.
9.	Selection, "The Geisha,"	Jones.
10.	Waltz, "Longchamps Fleuri,"	Waldteufel.
11.	Polka, "Hunters' Yarns,"	Komzak.
12.	March, "La Victorieuse,"	Ganne.

Music Hall "Pops."

One of the most satisfactory indications of the continued popularity of the Music hall promenade concerts is the large attendance the past week, in face of unfavorable weather. Society has turned out as usual in goodly numbers, and the audiences generally have been, like the music, first class. The very best order has prevailed throughout the week.

But four concerts will be given this week, the hall being engaged for other purposes Wednesday and Thursday evenings. The program for tomorrow night will be as follows:

Tabasco march	Chadwick
Overture, Mireille	Gounod
Waltz, Snowballs	Ziehrer
Selection, Aida	Verdi
Ballet music, Faust	Gounod
Serenade	Stange
Menuet	Bolzoni
Overture, Semiramide	Rossini
Excerpts from The Flying Dutchman	Wagner
Selection, The Geisha	Jones
Waltz, Longchamps Fleuri	Waldteufel
Polka, Hunters' Yarns	Komzak
March, La Victorieuse	Ganne

On Friday night at the Pops there was perhaps the largest company of the week. Mr. and Mrs. Matthew Luce had a young party, and Police Commissioner Robert F. Clark also. Miss Eleanor Shattuck, looking exceedingly pretty, was there with her fiance, Mr. Hugh Whitney and party, and so was Miss Sally Fairchild. Mrs. Gardner had her usual attendant, Mr. Proctor, the pianist, and Mr. Pierson Beebe, Mr. Higginson, Mr. Leon Bruguiere and party, and Mr. Charles Taylor and friends from Baltimore were others around the tables.

[illegible] Mr G. [illegible] tor, Mr Clayton [illegible], Mr Frank Dumaresq, Miss Anna Lyman, Mr A. H. Higginson and Mr Lawrence Curtis were at tables near the center.

—Mr and Mrs Channing Rust of the Berkeley will summer at point Allerton.

—Dr and Mrs J. Foster Bush and Mrs Bush occupied a table at the Pop concert Wednesday evening. At other tables were noticed Mr and Mrs Stephen Bennett and friends, Mr Samuel Hobbs and party, Dr Charles W. Galloupe, Mrs William Carleton, Mrs Edward C. North, Mr Edward F. Albee, Mr Charles North, Miss Florence V. Robinson, Mr Amory, Mr George Frederick Munn, Miss Sears, Miss Eliot and others.

THE Promenades prosper, for they are not really promenade affairs, but just cosy, popular concerts where people drink beer and smoke and, above all, find room for their legs, hearing cheerful music and enjoying a faint sense of impropriety meanwhile. As to the legs, I know many Boston people who have an indelible association of cramps in their calves and classical music, such as the greedy little girl had of ice-cream and a pain between the eyebrows. But at the Pops there is no pain, only freedom and good fellowship and good hearing, and the season's hats make the floor uncommonly cheerful and gay.

EVERY EVENING, 8 to 11.
(Except Sunday.)

Music Hall { Promenade Concerts.

GRAND ORCHESTRA OF FIFTY.

MR. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

Tickets, with reserved seats, 50c. On sale for any evening of season. Admission, 25c.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Promenade Concerts.

The "Pop" concert season at Music Hall, has already begun, and judging from the attendance thus far, this season promises to be even better than last. The program for tonight is as follows: Teufels March, Suppe; overture, "Stradella," Flotow; Waltz, "Meerleuchten," Ziehrer; selection, "Wizard of the Nile," Herbert; nocturne and wedding march from "Midsummer Night's Dream," Mendelssohn; "Blissful Dream," Meyer-Helmund; introduction to Act III., "Lohengrin," Wagner; selection, "Fatinitza," Suppe; waltz, "Estudiantine," Waldteufel; overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; "Love's Dream After the Ball," Czibulka; march, "In Darkest Africa," Metz.

Monday evening will be "Military Night," when the "New York Seventh Regiment March" will be played, also selections from "Simple Simon" and other productions of the Cadets. The program will also include the "American Fantasy," by Herbert; the "Waltz Militaire" by Ganne; the "1812" and "Tabasco" overtures, and other appropriate selections.

Music Notes.

The "Pops" are still continuing their triumphant course, and there can be no better evening amusement than listening to the excellent selections of music interpreted in a most artistic manner; and this year the selections have been particularly good and varied. The programme for Monday night is: New York Seventh Regiment March, overture, "Light Cavalry," Suppe; waltz from "Jack and the Beanstalk," Sloane; selection, "Robin Hood," De Koven; two movements from ballet music, "Sylvia," Delibes; Retraite Croate, Gabriel-Marie; waltz from "Simple Simon," Sloane; overture, "1812," Tschaikowsky; overture, "Tabasco," Chadwick; American Fantasy, Bendix; Waltz Militaire, "La Housarde," Ganne; march, "Simple Simon," Sloane. Next Saturday evening Mr. Max Zach retires from the conductor's stand, and his place will be taken by Mr. Leo Schulz.

THE POP CONCERTS.

A View of Boston's Ascent To Bohemia.

He That Finds Most Pleasure Is the Brave Man.

The Times May Change, but the Pops Do Not.

It is doubtful if the "Pop" concerts will ever change. This is writing generally. They were the same in the beginning as they are now and as they ever shall be while the generosity of the chief supporter and the good favor of this bluish-blooded population last. The conductors have changed; the style of program has changed; the people have changed in person; in short, each season has been a new view of this indoor series of festivities. But there is a similarity that, succeeding itself like the seasons, challenges new ideas and new opinions. To use a newspaper figure, the same cut that portrayed the scenes in Music Hall years ago is as useful as ever.

The old truth that the times change and that men change with them could not have been written of the Promenade concerts. There is no homogeneity about them; perhaps that is the reason of their unchangeableness. The audience might be likened to to a florid island surrounded by a sea of troubles. Once inside the select quadrangle, jocundity seems to bottle itself; once outside, it gushes forth with a pop. The Pops are the best specimen of the jocoserious institutions of Boston. There the stranger may study history.

There is no denying the existence of these two elements, the jocose and the serious. Each is as palpable as the other. Boston can never be Bohemia.

Probably the fairest average of a Pop concert audience attended the opening, on a Monday night. It was the fairest because it was the largest. Society came in and stowed itself away in corners, frigifying the environment. The people who lack only a name to be prominent—people who wear the togs and manners of the topmost station—came in and mixed themselves up with society. Then the social gallimaufry was complete. Then the people who don't care who they are or how they are came in and filled what was left of the floor. The inclosure in the balcony was jammed by a similar operation. The out-and-out disinterested yet watchful spectators crowded into the sides of the balcony. What goes on in the upper balcony, and how the folk up there are affected by the distant spectacle in the pit, the manager alone knows. It is possible that the zealous students of sociology mount to these eyries, there to take copious notes of others taking copious draughts.

But now for closer observation.

The most conspicuous, not the most important, ingredient of this spectacle is society. It is chiefly through the conspicuity of society that the Pops remain unchanged. The plebs supply the divers delicious liquids; society supplies the ice. Society inlays the audience with little deserts, into which no ordinary cit dares to step. There are are a few cases of what, by a full stretch of the word and the observation, might be called Bohemians.

You see these happy-go-lucky ones under the first balcony, in the rear of the floor, where the lights are as brilliant and as numerous as the rays of the aurora borealis, and where conversation may buzz even after the audience has been "respectfully requested to preserve silence." This seems to be the most cordial spot in the hall. Here, if anywhere, seats should be at a premium. Nightly there is a coterie back against the rearmost wall that is made up of students that ought to be grinding in their crimson-flagged rooms at Harvard, but who, mindful of what they learned in one of the Italian courses, agree with de Medici that a man should be happy while be may; that the uncertainty of tomorrow is not to be thought of. They preserve a sort of subdued hilarity. Their quips and jokes keep time with the music, whether that be "Ronde d'Amour" or a Strauss waltz, their laugh is as interminable as a recitative by Siegfried. They have a merriment that possesses all the elements of contagion, yet few catch it. They are so walled in by non-conductors, disciples of the orthodoxy of science, that all the most yearning sympathizer can do is to admire them distantly.

"The [illegible] time," [illegible] "They will give in. W[illegible] have that again." The more indolent rattle glasses. The instigators hold up their hands and clap energetically, exhaustingly. That is the opposite of thumbs down. It signifies overmastering favor. Then the conductor gives in.

Prof. James, the distinguished psychologist, should be on hand when, just before an intermission, the players, one foot in front of them and the other moving toward the steps, are held in their chairs by greedy applauders. He would behold the variegated shadows of the mind reflected distinctly upon plastic countenances.

To revert to the old theme, the changing of the times has little effect upon the too short season of the promenade concerts. To be sure, there are hints of a change. For instance, the rear of the platform this spring is a strange landscape; and trees grow downward on the ceiling. But these are details. The happy man should be above details.

The Pops afford the best opportunity for the readjustment of social democracy. At them independence is a virtue. At them the brave man finds real pleasure. None but the brave deserve this pleasure, which brightens the dull day, lightens the head of domestic problems, and tinctures existence with a triple-distilled essence of gayety.

The Pops have partly achieved the impossible. They have created some genuine delight in blue-veined Boston.

There are others, too. The true spirit of the Pops is not confined to that remote squad of devil-may-care students. You can pick up a thread here and a thread there; but you never could pursue a continuous way through the labyrinth of this all-sorts-and-conditions gathering. The spirit of the Pops is an intrepid independence. It is a forgetfulness that social forms exist; that the fences which separate class from class bristle with chevaux-de-frise; that one neighbor sees through his eyes frostily and another benignly, inviting friendship on the spot.

The proof of the spirit is to drink a glass of beer without being once distracted by the swishing entrance of a procession of social lions and lionesses.

There is another proof, lesser, and easier to perform. It is to abstain from high-flown praise of the orchestra.

The purpose of the Pop concerts, as advertised many times, is to please. So long as a piece pleases—that is, actually does what it is advertised to do—it is of small account whether that piece be "magnificent" or only "beautiful." There still remain in the well-drained glass of the last season of education a few dregs of fine discrimination. Satisfactorily to sit out a Pop concert, it should be possible to forget that most of the players are members of the Symphony Orchestra; that they are as familiar with Beethoven as with Suppé, and that only their extraordinary generosity prompts them to condescend to a waltz that is made up mostly of sleigh bells and snare drums. It is a mistake to pity the players, because they cannot wear a dress suit every night and play compositions that are divided into parts A, B, C, D, E and F, and that require for their suitable performance the conformity of an audience reading commentaries.

The fact is, the players are glad to get out of the reach of the classics. It is a common sight at the Pops to see the first violins smile across at the second violins, and the steel-armed drummer wink at the double-basses. They are the one body of people that never forgets that the concerts are popular in more than name. Their only regret is that the intermissions are not longer, or, possibly, that the concerts are not over in time for them to go uptown and drink a few glasses of Wurzburger Hoffbrau on draught.

Now and then there are loud signs that the concerts are genuinely popular. The other night a medley from "Il Trovatore" was repeated by applausive request. It excited almost as much applause as the "Tannhaüser" overture. There are nights when it is obvious that many in the hall wish to hear two performances of all the numbers. They insist with their thwacking hands. When Mr. Zach bows once they feel that they have broken the ice. When he bows twice they know that he is in doubt, and they double their seductive noise.

—A noticeable figure at the Pops Monday was Mrs Fred Prince in a distinctly Parisian gown of gray cloth, trimmed with gray satin shingles put on in wave effect. A huge gray hat, laden with plumes, was worn coquettishly well over the eyes. Mrs Prince was Mrs Gardner's guest.

—On Monday witnesses of the parade were attracted by a group of girls in a balcony over the entrance to one of Beacon st's old residences. They were seemingly oblivious to the elements, and were demonstrative to a high degree. Miss Marion Mason was all in scarlet, Miss Gertrude Parker and Miss Bessie Chadwick wore in more somber hues.

Promenade Concerts.

The "Pop" concert season at Music Hall has already begun, and judging from the attendance thus far, this season promises to be even better than last. The program for tonight is as follows: Teufels March, Suppe; overture, "Stradella," Flotow; Waltz, "Meerleuchten," Ziehrer; selection, "Wizard of the Nile," Herbert; nocturne and wedding march from "Midsummer Night's Dream," Mendelssohn; "Blissful Dream," Meyer-Helmund; introduction to Act III., "Lohengrin," Wagner; selection, "Fatinitza," Suppe; waltz, "Estudiantine," Waldteufel; overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; "Love's Dream After the Ball," Czibulka; march, "In Darkest Africa," Metz.

Monday evening will be "Military Night," when the "New York Seventh Regiment March" will be played, also selections from "Simple Simon" and other productions of the Cadets. The program will also include the "American Fantasy," by Herbert; the "Waltz Militaire" by Ganne; the "1812" and "Tabasco" overtures, and other appropriate selections.

---

and Mrs [illegible]

—Saturday night last at the Pops may well be called "college night," with Harvard, Tufts and Princeton men grouped here and there, enlivening the pauses with their "yells." Conductor Zach courteously responded to the Princeton call for "Fair Harvard," when the entire audience joined the orchestra in singing the words. Every table was occupied. Noted among many familiar faces were Mr and Mrs William Hooper, with party of six; Miss Martha Dana, Col Thomas L. Livermore, Mr and Mrs George Lee, Mr Charles Hayden, Mr Walter DeLand Came, Mr and Mrs W. H. Bowker, Mr Lipsiger and Mrs Alice E. Cram.

Music Hall | Promenade Concerts.

Grand Orchestra of 50.

MR. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

Every Evening (Except Sunday) 8 to 11.

POPULAR MUSIC.

Admission 25c. Reserved Seats on Floor or in Balcony 50c.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Music Hall Promenades.

Mr Max Zach made his farewell appearance as conductor of the Music hall concerts last evening. The first half of the "pops" have ended and for the past four weeks the attractive programs arranged by Mr Zach have given pleasure to thousands of patrons who have testified by liberal applause to their hearty enjoyment of the selections interpreted by the able conductor and his men.

For the rest of the season Mr Leo Schulz will act as director, beginning his duties tomororw evening. The well known cellist of the symphony orchestra is a musician of great ability, combining the skill of a performer of high rank with that of a composer. Many of his works are familiar to concert attendants, and as a soloist he has long since been prominent, notably at the symphony concerts.

The program tomorrow evening will be as follows:

Coronation march	Meyerbeer
Overture, Fra Diavolo	Auber
Selection, Prince Ananias	Herbert
Waltz, Wiener Blut	Strauss
Overture, Benvenuto Cellini	Berlioz
Evening Rest	Loeschhorn
For String Orchestra and Harp
Kujawiak	Wieniawski
Arranged by L. Schulz.
Finale, Act I, Lohengrin	Wagner
Overture, Light Cavalry	Suppe
Selection, La Grande Duchesse	Offenbach
Polka, Arabella	Knecht
March, Tabasco	Chadwick

The Promenade Concerts.

One of the best places to spend an evening is at the Music Hall, where the "Pop" concerts continue to attract large audiences. The selections given by the well-trained orchestra are particularly good this season, and so varied that all tastes are satisfied. The management is providing the best of service at the tables, and everything is done that can be done for the comfort of the patrons. After this evening Conductor Zach retires from the leadership of the orchestra and Mr. Leo Schulz will take his place.

[illegible] John [illegible] Gardner was accompanied at the Pop concert Monday by Miss Olga Gardner and Mr G. W. Proctor, Mr Clayton Johns, Mr Frank Dumaresq, Miss Anna Lyman, Mr A. H. Higginson and Mr Lawrence Curtis were at tables near the center.

—Mr and Mrs Channing Rust of the Berkeley will summer at point Allerton.

—Dr and Mrs J. Foster Bush and Mrs Bush occupied a table at the Pop concert Wednesday evening. At other tables were noticed Mr and Mrs Stephen Bennett and friends, Mr Samuel Hobbs and party, Dr Charles W. Galloupe, Mrs William Carleton, Mrs Edward C. North, Mr Edward F. Albee, Mr Charles North, Miss Florence V. Robinson, Mr Amory, Mr George Frederick Munn, Miss Sears, Miss Eliot and others.

THE Promenades prosper, for they are not really promenade affairs, but just cosy, popular concerts where people drink beer and smoke and, above all, find room for their legs, hearing cheerful music and enjoying a faint sense of impropriety meanwhile. As to the legs, I know many Boston people who have an indelible association of cramps in their calves and classical music, such as the greedy little girl had of ice-cream and a pain between the eyebrows. But at the Pops there is no pain, only freedom and good fellowship and good hearing, and the season's hats make the floor uncommonly cheerful and gay.

EVERY EVENING, 8 to 11.
(Except Sunday.)

Music Hall | Promenade Concerts.

GRAND ORCHESTRA OF FIFTY.
MR. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

Tickets, with reserved seats, 50c. On sale for any evening of season. Admission, 25c.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Promenade Concerts.

The "Pop" concert season at Music Hall, has already begun, and judging from the attendance thus far, this season promises to be even better than last. The program for tonight is as follows: Teufels March, Suppe; overture, "Stradella," Flotow; Waltz, "Meerleuchten," Ziehrer; selection, "Wizard of the Nile," Herbert; nocturne and wedding march from "Midsummer Night's Dream," Mendelssohn; "Blissful Dream," Meyer-Helmund; introduction to Act III., "Lohengrin," Wagner; selection, "Fatinitza," Suppe; waltz, "Estudiantine," Waldteufel; overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; "Love's Dream After the Ball," Czibulka; march, "In Darkest Africa," Metz.

Monday evening will be "Military Night," when the "New York Seventh Regiment March" will be played, also selections from "Simple Simon" and other productions of the Cadets. The program will also include the "American Fantasy," by Herbert; the "Waltz Militaire" by Ganne; the "1812" and "Tabasco" overtures, and other appropriate selections.

Music Notes.

The "Pops" are still continuing their triumphant course, and there can be no better evening amusement than listening to the excellent selections of music interpreted in a most artistic manner; and this year the selections have been particularly good and varied. The programme for Monday night is: New York Seventh Regiment March, overture, "Light Cavalry," Suppe; waltz from "Jack and the Beanstalk," Sloane; selection, "Robin Hood," De Koven; two movements from ballet music, "Sylvia," Delibes; Retraite Croate, Gabriel-Marie; waltz from "Simple Simon," Sloane; overture, "1812," Tschaikowsky; overture, "Tabasco," Chadwick; American Fantasy, Bendix; Waltz Militaire, "La Housarde," Ganne; march, "Simple Simon," Sloane. Next Saturday evening Mr. Max Zach retires from the conductor's stand, and his place will be taken by Mr. Leo Schulz.

THE POP CONCERTS.

A View of Boston's Ascent To Bohemia.

He That Finds Most Pleasure Is the Brave Man.

The Times May Change, but the Pops Do Not.

It is doubtful if the "Pop" concerts will ever change. This is writing generally. They were the same in the beginning as they are now and as they ever shall be while the generosity of the chief supporter and the good favor of this bluish-blooded population last. The conductors have changed; the style of program has changed; the people have changed in person; in short, each season has been a new view of this indoor series of festivities. But there is a similarity that, succeeding itself like the seasons, challenges new ideas and new opinions. To use a newspaper figure, the same cut that portrayed the scenes in Music Hall years ago is as useful as ever.

The old truth that the times change and that men change with them could not have been written of the Promenade concerts. There is no homogeneity about them; perhaps that is the reason of their unchangeableness. The audience might be likened to to a florid island surrounded by a sea of troubles. Once inside the select quadrangle, jocundity seems to bottle itself; once outside, it gushes forth with a pop. The Pops are the best specimen of the jocoserious institutions of Boston. There the stranger may study history.

There is no denying the existence of these two elements, the jocose and the serious. Each is as palpable as the other. Boston can never be Bohemia.

Probably the fairest average of a Pop concert audience attended the opening, on a Monday night. It was the fairest because it was the largest. Society came in and stowed itself away in corners, frigifying the environment. The people who lack only a name to be prominent—people who wear the togs and manners of the topmost station—came in and mixed themselves up with society. Then the social gallimaufry was complete. Then the people who don't care who they are or how they are came in and filled what was left of the floor. The inclosure in the balcony was jammed by a similar operation. The out-and-out disinterested yet watchful spectators crowded into the sides of the balcony. What goes on in the upper balcony, and how the folk up there are affected by the distant spectacle in the pit, the manager alone knows. It is possible that the zealous students of sociology mount to these eyries, there to take copious notes of others taking copious draughts.

But now for closer observation.

The most conspicuous, not the most important, ingredient of this spectacle is society. It is chiefly through the conspicuity of society that the Pops remain unchanged. The plebs supply the divers delicious liquids; society supplies the ice. Society inlays the audience with little deserts, into which no ordinary cit dares to step. There are are a few cases of what, by a full stretch of the word and the observation, might be called Bohemians.

You see these happy-go-lucky ones under the first balcony, in the rear of the floor, where the lights are as brilliant and as numerous as the rays of the aurora borealis, and where conversation may buzz even after the audience has been "respectfully requested to preserve silence." This seems to be the most cordial spot in the hall. Here, if anywhere, seats should be at a premium. Nightly there is a coterie back against the rearmost wall that is made up of students that ought to be grinding in their crimson-flagged rooms at Harvard, but who, mindful of what they learned in one of the Italian courses, agree with de Medici that a man should be happy while be may; that the uncertainty of tomorrow is not to be thought of. They preserve a sort of subdued hilarity. Their quips and jokes keep time with the music, whether that be "Ronde d'Amour" or a Strauss waltz, their laugh is as interminable as a recitative by Siegfried. They have a merriment that possesses all the elements of contagion, yet few catch it. They are so walled in by non-conductors, disciples of the orthodoxy of science, that all the most yearning sympathizer can do is to admire them distantly.

"The third time," they say "he will give in. We must have that again." The more indolent rattle glasses. The instigators hold up their hands and clap energetically, exhaustingly. That is the opposite of thumbs down. It signifies overmastering favor. Then the conductor gives in.

Prof. James, the distinguished psychologist, should be on hand when, just before an intermission, the players, one foot in front of them and the other moving toward the steps, are held in their chairs by greedy applauders. He would behold the variegated shadows of the mind reflected distinctly upon plastic countenances.

To revert to the old theme, the changing of the times has little effect upon the too short season of the promenade concerts. To be sure, there are hints of a change. For instance, the rear of the platform this spring is a strange landscape; and trees grow downward on the ceiling. But these are details. The happy man should be above details.

The Pops afford the best opportunity for the readjustment of social democracy. At them independence is a virtue. At them the brave man finds real pleasure. None but the brave deserve this pleasure, which brightens the dull day, lightens the head of domestic problems, and tinctures existence with a triple-distilled essence of gayety.

The Pops have partly achieved the impossible. They have created some genuine delight in blue-veined Boston.

There are others, too. The true spirit of the Pops is not confined to that remote squad of devil-may-care students. You can pick up a thread here and a thread there; but you never could pursue a continuous way through the labyrinth of this all-sorts-and-conditions gathering. The spirit of the Pops is an intrepid independence. It is a forgetfulness that social forms exist; that the fences which separate class from class bristle with chevaux-de-frise; that one neighbor sees through his eyes frostily and another benignly, inviting friendship on the spot.

The proof of the spirit is to drink a glass of beer without being once distracted by the swishing entrance of a procession of social lions and lionesses.

There is another proof, lesser, and easier to perform. It is to abstain from high-flown praise of the orchestra.

The purpose of the Pop concerts, as advertised many times, is to please. So long as a piece pleases—that is, actually does what it is advertised to do—it is of small account whether that piece be "magnificent" or only "beautiful." There still remain in the well-drained glass of the last season of education a few dregs of fine discrimination. Satisfactorily to sit out a Pop concert, it should be possible to forget that most of the players are members of the Symphony Orchestra; that they are as familiar with Beethoven as with Suppé, and that only their extraordinary generosity prompts them to condescend to a waltz that is made up mostly of sleigh bells and snare drums. It is a mistake to pity the players, because they cannot wear a dress suit every night and play compositions that are divided into parts A, B, C, D, E and F, and that require for their suitable performance the conformity of an audience reading commentaries.

The fact is, the players are glad to get out of the reach of the classics. It is a common sight at the Pops to see the first violins smile across at the second violins, and the steel-armed drummer wink at the double-basses. They are the one body of people that never forgets that the concerts are popular in more than name. Their only regret is that the intermissions are not longer, or, possibly, that the concerts are not over in time for them to go uptown and drink a few glasses of Wurzburger Hoffbräu on draught.

Now and then there are loud signs that the concerts are genuinely popular. The other night a medley from "Il Trovatore" was repeated by applausive request. It excited almost as much applause as the "Tannhaüser" overture. There are nights when it is obvious that many in the hall wish to hear two performances of all the numbers. They insist with their thwacking hands. When Mr. Zach bows once they feel that they have broken the ice. When he bows twice they know that he is in doubt, and they double their seductive noise.

—A noticeable figure at the Pops Monday was Mrs Fred Prince in a distinctly Parisian gown of gray cloth, trimmed with gray satin shingles put on in wave effect. A huge gray hat, laden with plumes, was worn coquettishly well over the eyes. Mrs Prince was Mrs Gardner's guest.

—On Monday witnesses of the parade were attracted by a group of girls in a balcony over the entrance to one of Beacon st's old residences. They were seemingly oblivious to the elements, and were demonstrative to a high degree. Miss Marion Mason was all in scarlet, Miss Gertrude Parker and Miss Bessie Chadwick were in more somber hues.

Promenade Concerts.

The "Pop" concert season at Music Hall, has already begun, and judging from the attendance thus far, this season promises to be even better than last. The program for tonight is as follows: Teufels March, Suppe; overture, "Stradella," Flotow; Waltz, "Meerleuchten," Ziehrer; selection, "Wizard of the Nile," Herbert; nocturne and wedding march from "Midsummer Night's Dream," Mendelssohn; "Blissful Dream," Meyer-Helmund; introduction to Act III., "Lohengrin," Wagner; selection, "Fatinitza," Suppe; waltz, "Estudiantine," Waldteufel; overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; "Love's Dream After the Ball," Czibulka; march, "In Darkest Africa," Metz.

Monday evening will be "Military Night," when the "New York Seventh Regiment March" will be played, also selections from "Simple Simon" and other productions of the Cadets. The program will also include the "American Fantasy," by Herbert; the "Waltz Militaire" by Ganne; the "1812" and "Tabasco" overtures, and other appropriate selections.

---

and Mrs Edith [illegible]

—Saturday night last at the Pops may well be called "college night," with Harvard, Tufts and Princeton men grouped here and there, enlivening the pauses with their "yells." Conductor Zach courteously responded to the Princeton call for "Fair Harvard," when the entire audience joined the orchestra in singing the words. Every table was occupied. Noted among many familiar faces were Mr and Mrs William Hooper, with party of six; Miss Martha Dana, Col Thomas L. Livermore, Mr and Mrs George Lee, Mr Charles Hayden, Mr Walter DeLand Came, Mr and Mrs W. H. Bowker, Mr Lipsiger and Mrs Alice E. Cram.

Music Hall | Promenade Concerts.

Grand Orchestra of 50.
MR. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.
Every Evening (Except Sunday) 8 to 11.

POPULAR MUSIC.

Admission 25c. Reserved Seats on Floor or in Balcony 50c.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.
F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Music Hall Promenades.

Mr Max Zach made his farewell appearance as conductor of the Music hall concerts last evening. The first half of the "pops" have ended and for the past four weeks the attractive programs arranged by Mr Zach have given pleasure to thousands of patrons who have testified by liberal applause to their hearty enjoyment of the selections interpreted by the able conductor and his men.

For the rest of the season Mr Leo Schulz will act as director, beginning his duties tomororw evening. The well known cellist of the symphony orchestra is a musician of great ability, combining the skill of a performer of high rank with that of a composer. Many of his works are familiar to concert attendants, and as a soloist he has long since been prominent, notably at the symphony concerts.

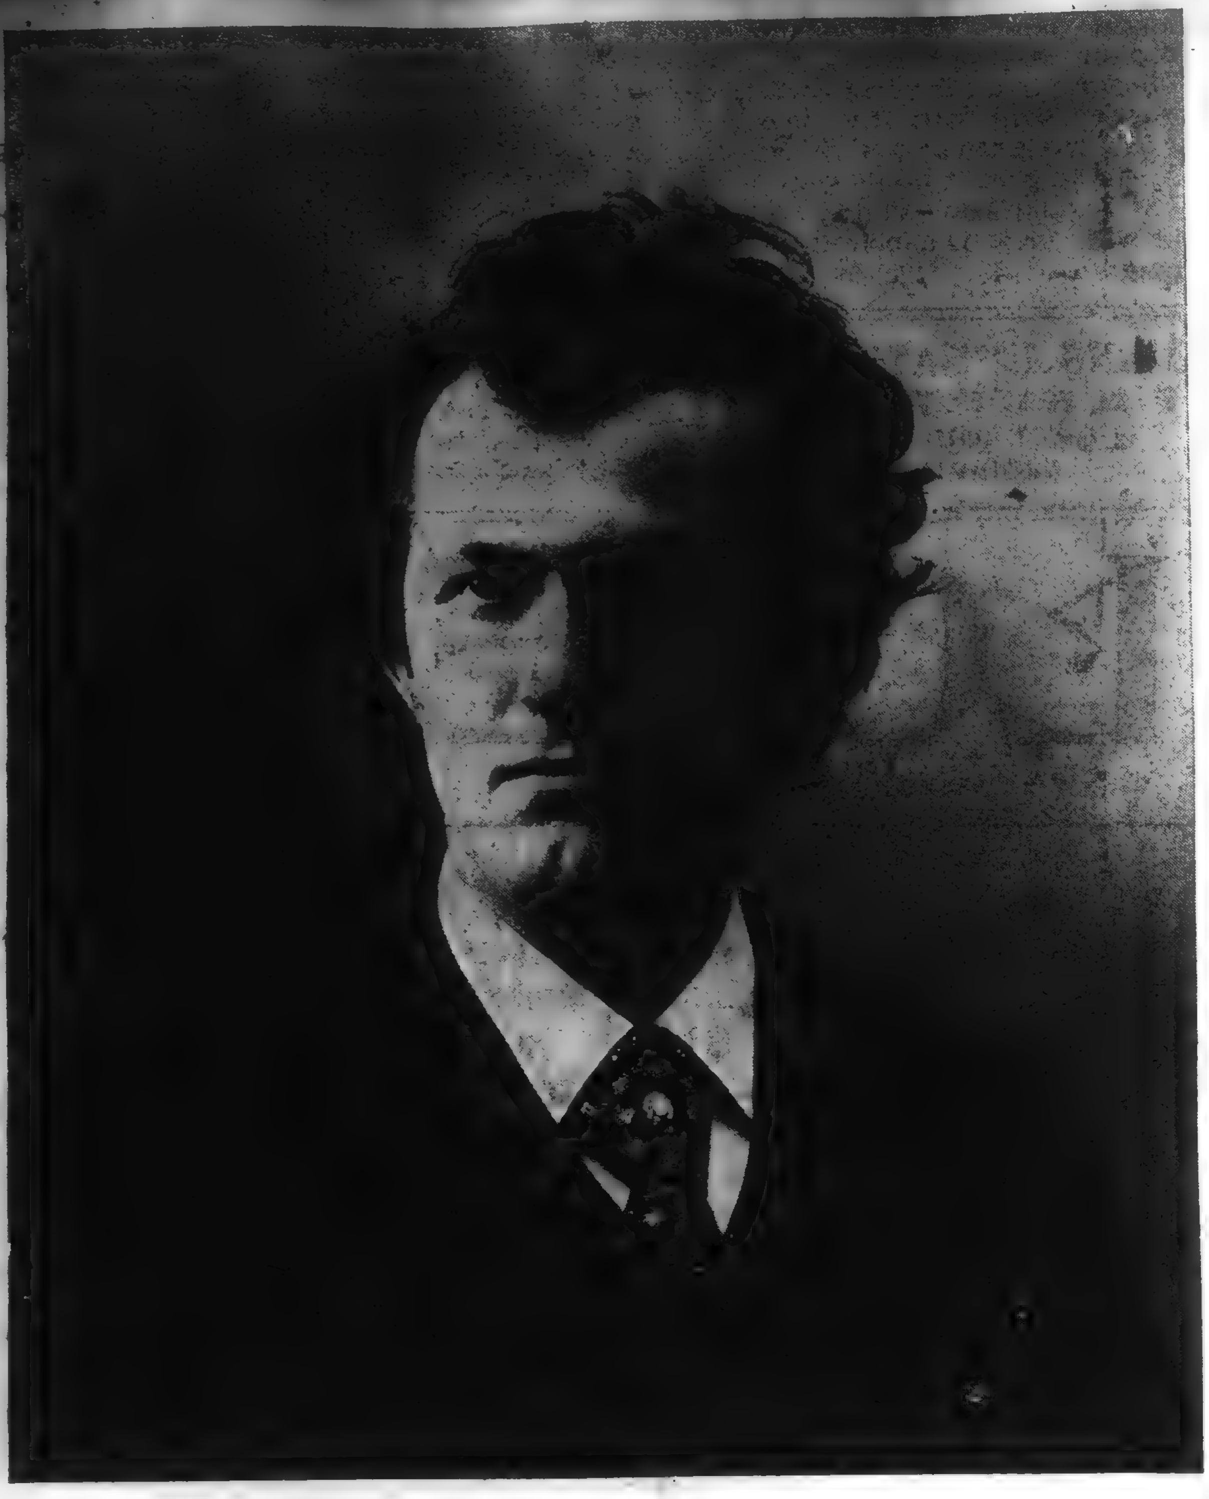
The program tomorrow evening will be as follows:

Coronation march	Meyerbeer
Overture, Fra Diavolo	Auber
Selection, Prince Ananias	Herbert
Waltz, Wiener Blut	Strauss
Overture, Benvenuto Cellini	Berlioz
Evening Rest For String Orchestra and Harp	Loeschborn
Kujawiak Arranged by L. Schulz.	Wieniawski
Finale, Act I, Lohengrin	Wagner
Overture, Light Cavalry	Suppe
Selection, La Grande Duchesse	Offenbach
Polka, Arabella	Knecht
March, Tabasco	Chadwick

The Promenade Concerts.

One of the best places to spend an evening is at the Music Hall, where the "Pop" concerts continue to attract large audiences. The selections given by the well-trained orchestra are particularly good this season, and so varied that all tastes are satisfied. The management is providing the best of service at the tables, and everything is done that can be done for the comfort of the patrons. After this evening Conductor Zach retires from the leadership of the orchestra and Mr. Leo Schulz will take his place.

Beacon · June 5



Les Schulz, Conductor Promenade Concerts.

Eighty tables have been engaged at Music Hall for Wednesday evening's pop concert, which will be occupied by the visiting hotel men. With their customary forethought the managers of the concerts have arranged the following program which is complimentary to the Hotel Men's Mutual Benefit Association.

Hoch Habsburg March . . . . . Kral
Oberon overture . . . . Weber
Thousand and One Nights Waltz . Strauss
Erminie selection . . . . Jacobowski
Lohengrin Finale, Act I. . . . Wagner

Manfred Entr'acte . . . . . Reinecke
Espana . . . . Waldteufel
Nabucodonosor overture . . . . Verdi
Sylvia Ballet Music . . . . . . Delibes
  a. Les Chasseuresses.
  b. Introduction and Valse Lente.
  c. Pizzicato Polka.
  d. Bacchanale.

Mikado selection . . . . . Sullivan
Bella-Bocca Polka . . . . . Waldteufel
Austria March . . . . . . Zach

THE POPS.

Mr. Zach laid down the baton, as conductor of the Promenade Concerts at Music Hall last evening, having given much satisfaction to the large audiences of the past week by the variety of his programs and the spirit of his leading.

Mr. Leo Schulz will make his first appearance Monday evening as conductor at these concerts. His thorough musicianship is well known to Boston lovers of music, and his début here will be welcomed by all frequenters of these delightful concerts. The program will be as follows:

Coronation March ....Meyerbeer
Overture, "Fra Diavolo" ....Auber
Selection, "Prince Ananias" ....Herbert
Waltz, "Wiener Blut" ....Strauss
Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini" ....Berlioz
Evening Rest ....Loeschhorn
For string orchestra and harp.
First time.
Kujawiak ....Wieniawski
Aranged by L. Schulz.
First time.
Finale, Act I., "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
Overture, "Light Cavalry" ....Suppe
Selection, "La Grande Duchesse"..Offenbach
Polka, "Arabella" ....Knecht
First time.
March, "Tabasco" ....Chadwick

CONDUCTOR SCHULZ.

Mr. Leo Schulz, who makes his début at the Promenade Concerts Monday night, was born in Posen, Prussia, in 1865. He made his first public appearance when 9 years of age, and at 15 was commanded to play before the royal family. His teacher was Joachim. When Arthur Nikisch came to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Schulz was solo 'cellist of the Gewandhaus Orchestra in Leipsic, and was persuaded to come to Boston by Mr. Nikisch. Mr. Schulz is not only known as a musician, but as the composer of choral works, trios, quartets and orchestral works. His friends speak of his ability in the highest praise.

——A most interesting program will be presented at the "Pop" concert tomorrow evening, where Mr. Leo Schulz makes his first appearance as conductor. The following selections will be given: Coronation March, by Meyerbeer; Overture, "Fra Diavolo" by Auber; Selection, "Prince Ananias" by Herbert; Waltz, "Wiener Blut" by Strouss; Overture, Benvenuto Cellini" by Berlioz; Evening Rest by Loeschhorn, For String Orchestra and Harp; Kujawiak, by Wieniawski, Arranged by L. Schulz; Finale, Act I., "Lohengrin" by Wagner; Overture, "Light Cavalry" by Suppe; Selection, "La Grande Duchesse" by Offenbach; Polka, "Arabella" by Knecht; March, "Tobasco" by Chadwick.

Monday night will mark the first appearance of Conductor Leo Schulz and an excellent program has been arranged. Among the numbers are "Coronation March," by Meyerbeer, "Prince Ananias," Herbert (first time), Finale Act I., Lohengrin, Overture "Light Cavalry," Suppe, La Grande Duchesse, Offenbach, the "Tobasco" March by Chadwick and other popular selections.

Conductor Max Zach made his farewell appearance as musical director of the popular concerts in Music Hall Saturday evening. The program was of special excellence and Conductor Zach was compelled many times to bow acknowledgments to the music-loving audience.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Last evening Mr. Max Zach made his farewell appearance as conductor of the Music Hall Promenade orchestra, amid protestations of delight at the success he has achieved during the season.

Tomorrow night Mr. Leo Schulz will make his first appearance and an especially interesting programme will mark the occasion.

It will be:

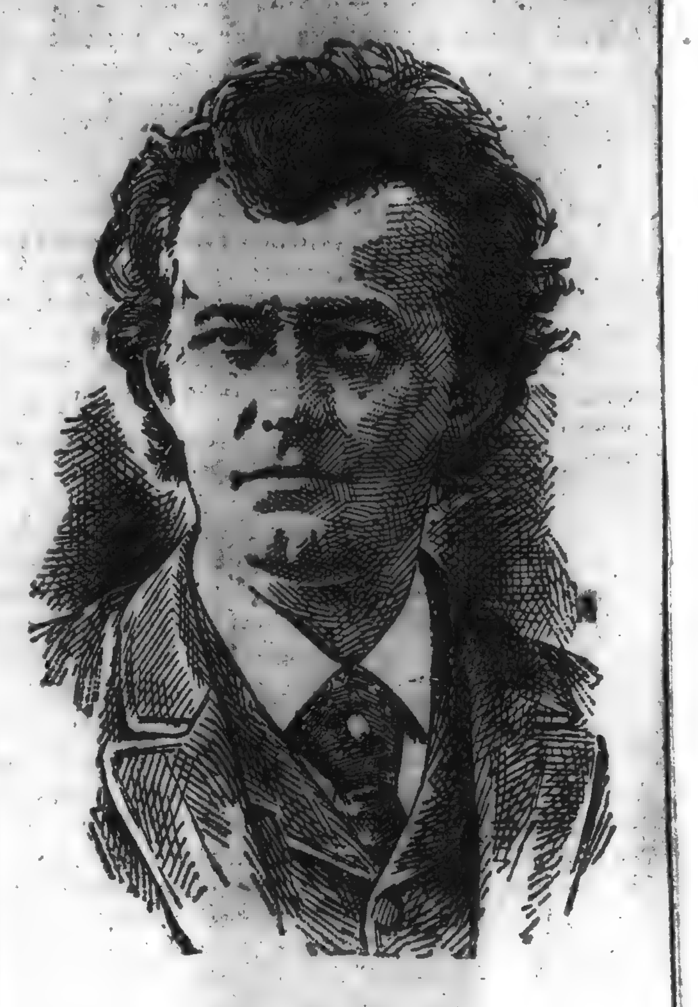
Coronation March ....Meyerbeer
Overture, "Fra Diavolo" ....Auber
Selection, "Prince Ananias" ....Herbert
(First Time.)
Waltz, "Wiener Blut" ....Strauss
Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini" ....Berlioz
Evening Rest ....Loeschhorn
For String Orchestra and Harp.
(First Time.)
Kujawiak ....Wieniawski
Arranged by L. Schulz.
(First Time)
Finale, Act I, "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
Overture, "Light Cavalry" ....Suppé
Selection, "La Grande Duchesse" ...Offenbach
Polka, "Arabella" ....Knecht
(First Time)
March, "Tabasco" ....Chadwick

Every evening except Sunday, from 8 to 11, Music Hall and the "pop" concerts attract large numbers of people. The music is a splendid "background" for conversation, and these unique entertainments, so "Bostonian" in character, continue to live up to their "popular" nickname.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

The first half of these summer evening entertainments of music and a touch of life in Bohemia ended with the concert last evening. Max Zach, who so successfully directed the orchestra last season and the first four weeks of the present, made his farewell appearance. During his service as conductor, Mr. Zach has deservedly won the high favor in which he is now held by the musical public through his conscientious work and skill as a programme maker.

These concerts will continue only four weeks more. Leo Schulz will be the conductor. Mr. Schulz was born in 1865 in Posen, Prussia, and at nine years of age played successfully in public. At the age of twelve, in consequence of his unusual talent, he was accepted at the Royal Academy of Music in Berlin, where, under the instruction of Joachim Kiel and Hansmann, his progress was very marked. At fifteen years he had acquired such proficiency as to be invited to play before the royal family.



LEO SCHULZ.

From 1880-83 he concertized very successfully through Germany, Austria and Russia. After that he filled the position as conductor of light opera at the People's Theatre, Posen. He held this position until 1885, when he was chosen solo 'cellist of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra. Shortly afterwards he was invited to take the position as solo 'cellist of the Gervandhans Orchestra in Leipsig.

When Mr. Nikisch came to America he prevailed upon Mr. Schulz to come also, since which time he has been a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and has appeared as soloist with this organization with great success in New York, Washington, St. Louis, Brooklyn and other large cities. He is well known by all symphony patrons as sitting at the first stand of the 'cello players. Mr. Schulz is also well known as a composer of trios, quartets and orchestral work.

Wednesday exening next there will be a special programme complimentary to the Hotel News Mutual Benefit Association, 400 of whom have signified their intention of attending in a body.

Mr. Schulz has selected the following numbers for his opening programme tomorrow evening: Coronation march, Meyerbeer; overture, "FraDiavolo," Auber; selection, "Prince Ananias," Herbert (first time); waltz, "Wiener Blut," Strauss; overture, "Benvenuto Cellini," Berlioz; evening rest, Loeschhorn, for string orchestra and harp (first time); Kujawiak, Wieniawski, arranged by L. Schulz (first time); finale, Act 1, "Lohengrin," Wagner; overture, "Light Cavalry," Suppe; selection, "La Grande Duchesse," Offenbach; polka, "Arabella," Knecht (first time); march, "Tabasco," Chadwick.

Next Wednesday evening will be Hotel Men's night at the promenade concerts, when a special program will be rendered.

The Promenade Concerts.

Another successful week of the "Pop" Concerts is just closing at Music Hall. Large audiences have again been present all the week and listened most attentively to the high class music which Conductor Zach and his well trained orchestra have offered. Although the social season is about closed and many have left the city for the summer, these concerts are of so attractive a nature that they draw immense houses, a large contingent of the fashionables coming in town specially to attend them. On Monday next, Memorial Day, a very interesting programme will be given, and there has already been a large advance sale of tickets.

Music Notes.

The "Pop" concerts continue gaily on their course, and very large and very delighted audiences have been the rule. Those wishing to enjoy the pleasure of a "table" seat should not delay their application to the last minute, as the demands are many. On Monday evening Mr. Leo Schulz makes his first appearance as conductor at these concerts and he will give the following admirable programme:

Coronation March......................Meyerbeer
Overture, "Fra Diavolo" ....Auber
Selection, "Prince Ananias" ....Herbert
Waltz, "Wiener Blut" ....Strauss
Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini" ....Berlioz
"Evening Rest" ....Loeschhorn
For String Orchestra and Harp.
(First Time.)
"Kujawiak" .... Wieniawski
Arranged by L. Schulz.
(First Time.)
Finale, Act I., "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
Overture, "Light Cavalry" ....Suppe
Selection, "La Grande Duchesse"..Offenbach
Polka, "Arabella" ....Knecht
(First Time.)
March, "Tabasco" ....Chadwick

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

The first half of these summer evening entertainments ended with the concert last evening, at which Mr. Max Zach, who so successfully directed the orchestra last season and during the first four weeks of the present, made his farewell appearance. During his term as conductor Mr. Zach has fairly won the high favor in which he is held by the patrons of these concerts. They will continue for four weeks only. Mr. Leo Schulz will be the conductor. Mr. Schulz was born in 1865 in Posen, Prussia, and at 9 years of age played successfully in public. At the age of 12, in consequence of his unusual talent, he was accepted at the Royal Academy of Music in Berlin, where, under the instruction of Joachim, Kiel and Hausmann, his progress was very marked. At 15 years he had acquired such proficiency as to be invited to play before the royal family. From 1880 to 1883 he concertized very successfully through Germany, Austria and Russia. After that he filled the position as conductor of light opera at the People's Theatre, Posen. He held this position until 1885, when he was chosen solo 'cellist of the Berlin Philharmonic orchestra. Shortly afterward he was invited to take the position as solo 'cellist of the Gewandhaus orchestra in Leipsic. When Mr. Nikisch came to America he prevailed upon Mr. Schulz to come also, since which time he has been a member of the Boston symphony orchestra, and has appeared as soloist with that organization with success. Mr. Schulz has composed several trios, quartets and orchestral works. On Wednesday evening next there will be a special programme complimentary to the Hotel Men's Mutual Benefit Association, 400 of whom have signified their intention of attending in a body. Mr. Schulz has selected the following music for tomorrow evening:

Coronation march.........................Meyerbeer
Overture, "Fra Diavolo" ....Auber
Selection, "Prince Ananias" ....Herbert
Waltz, "Wiener Blut" ....Strauss
Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini" ....Berlioz
"Evening Rest" ....Loeschhorn
"Kujawiak" ....Wieniawski
Finale, act 1, "Lohengrin" ....Wagner
Overture, "Light Cavalry" ....Suppe
Selection, "La Grande Duchesse" ...Offenbach
Polka, "Arabella" ....Knecht
March, "Tabasco" ....Chadwick

Tonight's Promenade Concert.

The programme for the promenade concert tonight at Music Hall, Boston, is as follows:

1. "Coronation March," Meyerbeer.
2. Overture, "Fra Diavolo," Auber.
3. Selection, "Prince Ananias," Herbert.
4. Waltz, "Wiener Blut," Strauss.
5. Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini," Berlioz.
6. "Evening Rest," Loeschhorn. For String Orchestra and Harp.
7. "Kujawiak,," Wieniawski. Arranged by L. Schulz.

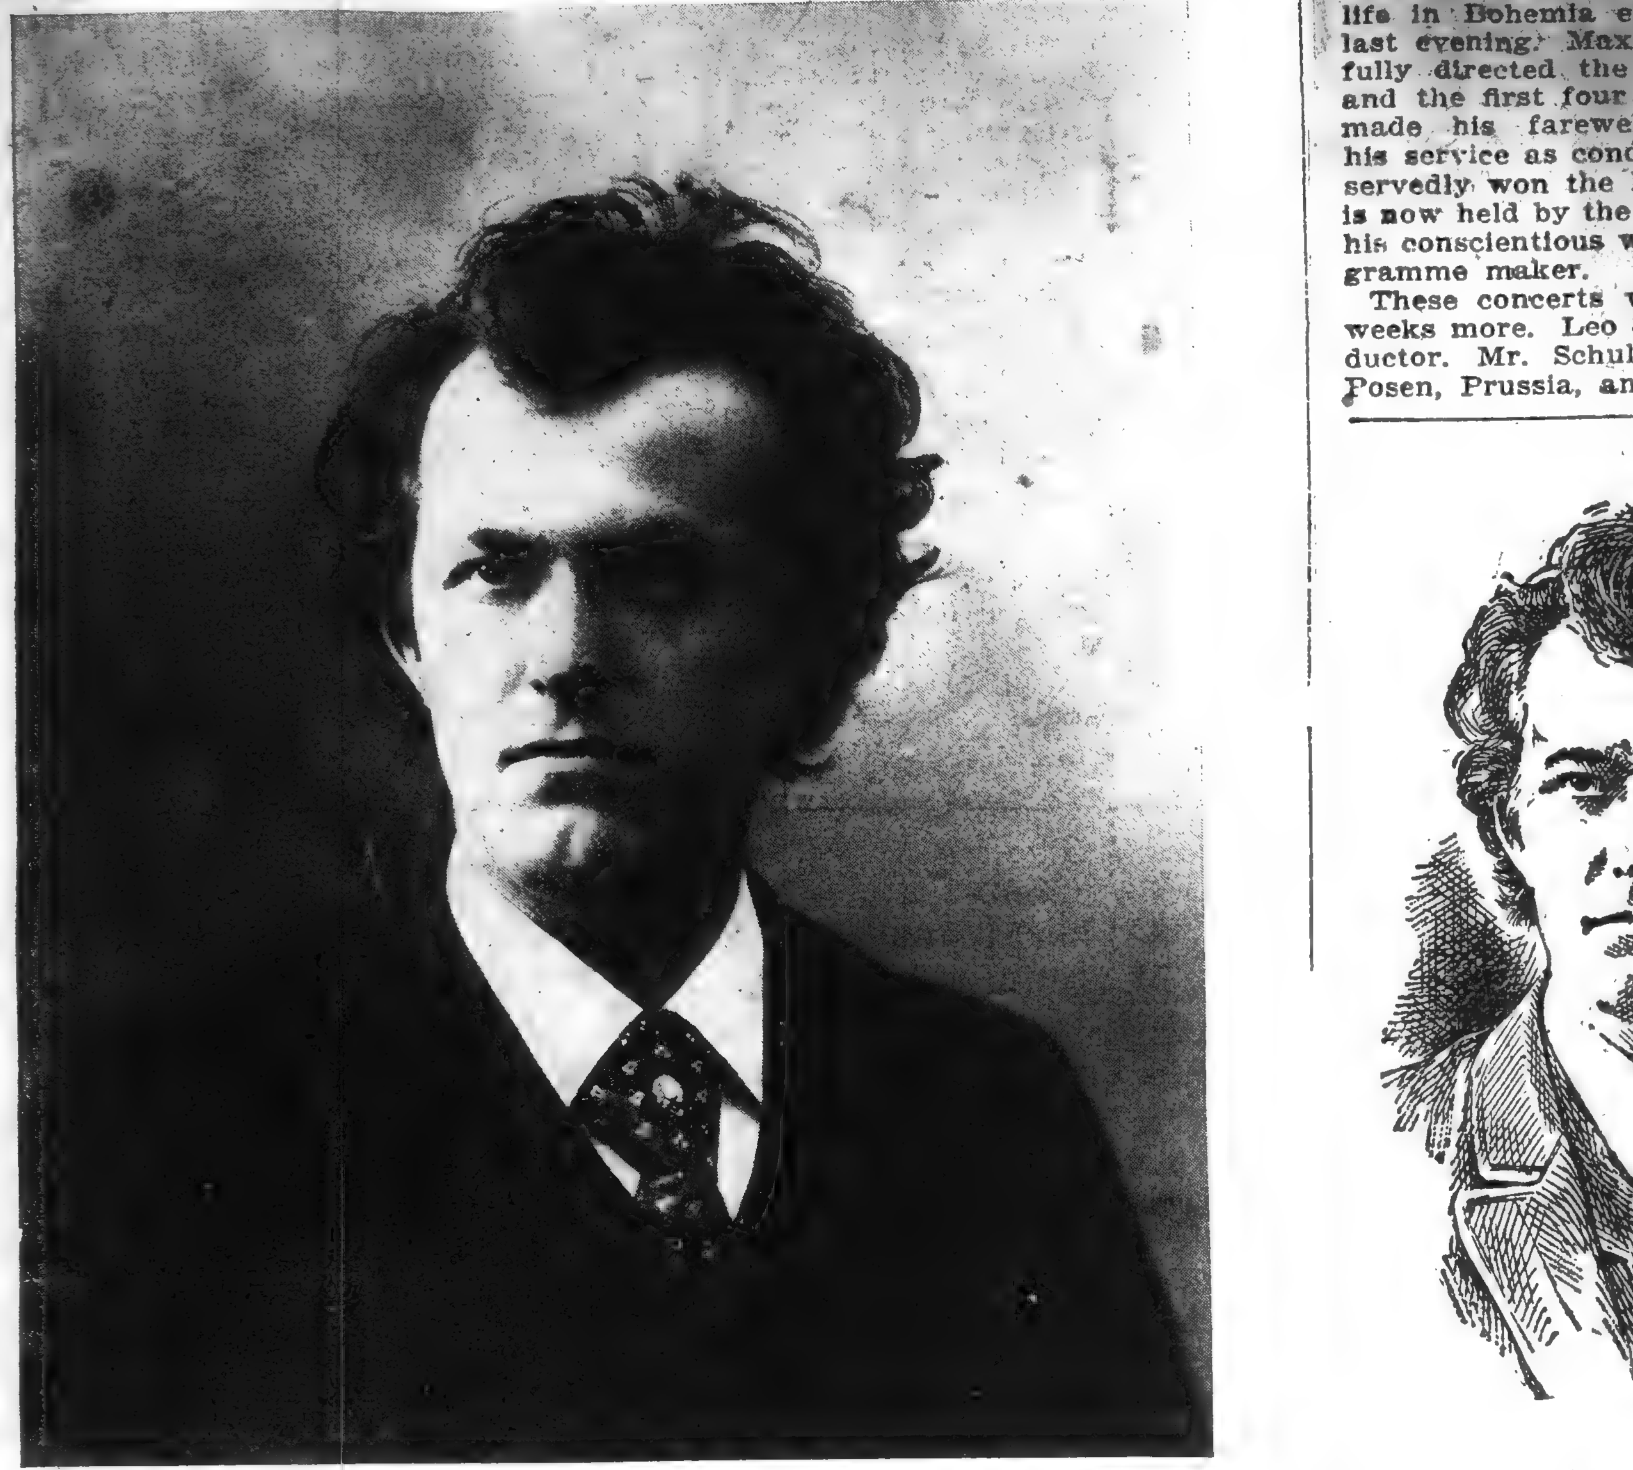
THE MUSIC HALL "POPS."

Farewell Appearance of Conductor Max Zach.

The program at the promenade concert at Music hall this evening is:

March, "Austria ....Zach
Overture, "William Tell" ....Rossini
Waltz, "Arabian Nights" ....Strauss
Harp solo. a. "Chant d'Exiles..Godefroid
b. Mazourka.......Schuecker
Soloist, Mr. Heinrich Schuecker.
Selection from "The Geisha........
Sydney Jones
Violin solo, Faust Fantasie........
Wieniawski
Soloist, Mr. Jacques Hoffman.
Polish dance.....................Scharwenka
Overture, "Rienzi" ....Wagner
Waltz, "Grubenlichter" ....Zeller
American Fantasy....................Bendix
By request.
Polka, "Bella-Bocca" ....Waldteufel
March, "Up the Street" ....Morse

Beacon. June 5



Les Schuız, Concuctor Promenade Concerts.

Eighty tables have been engaged at Music Hall for Wednesday evening's pop concert, which will be occupied by the visiting hotel men. With their customary forethought the managers of the concerts have arranged the following program which is complimentary to the Hotel Men's Mutual Benefit Association.

Hoch Habsburg March . . . . . Kral
Oberon overture . . . . Weber
Thousand and One Nights Waltz . Strauss
Erminie selection . . . . . Jacobowski
Lohengrin Finale, Act I. . . . . Wagner
Manfred Entr'acte . . . . . Reinecke
Espana . . . . Waldtenfel
Nabucodonosor overture . . . . Verdi
Sylvia Ballet Music . . . . . . Delibes
  a. Les Chasseuresses.
  b. Introduction and Valse Lente.
  c. Pizzicato Polka.
  d. Bacchanale.
Mikado selection . . . . . Suliivan
Bella-Bocca Polka . . . . . Waldteufel
Austria March . . . . . . Zach

THE POPS.

Mr. Zach laid down the baton, as conductor of the Promenade Concerts at Music Hall last evening, having given much satisfaction to the large audiences of the past week by the variety of his programs and the spirit of his leading.

Mr. Leo Schulz will make his first appearance Monday evening as conductor at these concerts. His thorough musicianship is well known to Boston lovers of music, and his début here will be welcomed by all frequenters of these delightful concerts. The program will be as follows:

Coronation March ....Meyerbeer
Overture, "Fra Diavolo"..................Auber
Selection, "Prince Ananias"..........Herbert
Waltz, "Wiener Blut"......................Strauss
Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini"..........Berlioz
Evening Rest ....Loeschhorn
For string orchestra and harp.
First time.
Kujawiak ....Wieniawski
Arranged by L. Schulz.
First time.
Finale, Act I., "Lohengrin"..........Wagner
Overture, "Light Cavalry" ....Suppe
Selection, "La Grande Duchesse"..Offenbach
Polka, "Arabella" ....Knecht
First time.
March, "Tabasco" ....Chadwick

CONDUCTOR SCHULZ.

Mr. Leo Schulz, who makes his début at the Promenade Concerts Monday night, was born in Posen, Prussia, in 1865. He made his first public appearance when 9 years of age, and at 15 was commanded to play before the royal family. His teacher was Joachim. When Arthur Nikisch came to America to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Schulz was solo 'cellist of the Gewandhaus Orchestra in Leipsic, and was persuaded to come to Boston by Mr. Nikisch. Mr. Schulz is not only known as a musician, but as the composer of choral works, trios, quartets and orchestral works. His friends speak of his ability in the highest praise.

---

both tasteful and artistic.

——A most interesting program will be presented at the "Pop" concert tomorrow ev ening, where Mr. Leo Schulz makes his first appearance as conductor. The following selections will be given: Coronation March, by Meyerbeer; Overture, "Fra Diavolo" by Auber; Selection, "Prince Ananias" by Herbert; Waltz, "Wiener Blut" by Strouss; Overture, Benvenuto Cellini" by Berlioz; Evening Rest by Loeschhorn, For String Orchestra and Harp; Kujawiak, by Wieniawski, Arranged by L. Schulz; Finale, Act I., "Lohengrin" by Wagner; Overture, "Light Cavalry" by Suppe; Selection, "La Grande Duchesse" by Offenbach; Polka, "Arabella" by Knecht; March, "Tobasco" by Chadwick.

Monday night will mark the first appearance of Conductor Leo Schulz and an excellent program has been arranged. Among the numbers are "Coronation March," by Meyerbeer, "Prince Ananias," Herbert (first time), Finale Act I., Lohengrin, Overture "Light Cavalry," Suppe, La Grande Duchesse, Offenbach, the "Tobasco" March by Chadwick and other popular selections.

Conductor Max Zach made his farewell appearance as musical director of the popular concerts in Music Hall Saturday evening. The program was of special excellence and Conductor Zach was compelled many times to bow acknowledgments to the music-loving audience.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Last evening Mr. Max Zach made his farewell appearance as conductor of the Music Hall Promenade orchestra, amid protestations of delight at the success he has achieved during the season.

Tomorrow night Mr. Leo Schulz will make his first appearance and an especially interesting programme will mark the occasion.

It will be:

Coronation March.........................Meyerbeer
Overture, "Fra Diavolo"....................Auber
Selection, "Prince Ananias" ....Herbert
(First Time.)
Waltz, "Wiener Blut".........................Strauss
Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini"...........Berlioz
Evening Rest.............................Loeschhorn
For String Orchestra and Harp.
(First Time.)
Kujawiak...................... .... Wieniawski
Arranged by L. Schulz.
(First Time)
Finale, Act I, "Lohengrin".............Wagner
Overture, "Light Cavalry"............ ...Suppé
Selection, "La Grande Duchesse". ..Offenbach
Polka, "Arabella"................. ...Knecht
(First Time)
March, "Tabasco"........................Chadwick

Every evening except Sunday, from 8 to 11, Music Hall and the "pop" concerts attract large numbers of people. The music is a splendid "background" for conversation, and these unique entertainments, so "Bostonian" in character, continue to live up to their "popular" nickname.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

The first half of these summer evening entertainments of music and a touch of life in Bohemia ended with the concert last evening. Max Zach, who so successfully directed the orchestra last season and the first four weeks of the present, made his farewell appearance. During his service as conductor, Mr. Zach has deservedly won the high favor in which he is now held by the musical public through his conscientious work and skill as a programme maker.

These concerts will continue only four weeks more. Leo Schulz will be the conductor. Mr. Schulz was born in 1865 in Posen, Prussia, and at nine years of age played successfully in public. At the age of twelve, in consequence of his unusual talent, he was accepted at the Royal Academy of Music in Berlin, where, under the instruction of Joachim Kiel and Hansmann, his progress was very marked. At fifteen years he had acquired such proficiency as to be invited to play before the royal family.

LEO SCHULZ.

From 1880-83 he concertized very successfully through Germany, Austria and Russia. After that he filled the position as conductor of light opera at the People's Theatre, Posen. He held this position until 1885, when he was chosen solo 'cellist of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra. Shortly afterwards he was invited to take the position as solo 'cellist of the Gervandhans Orchestra in Leipsig.

When Mr. Nikisch came to America he prevailed upon Mr. Schulz to come also, since which time he has been a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and has appeared as soloist with this organization with great success in New York, Washington, St. Louis, Brooklyn and other large cities. He is well known by all symphony patrons as sitting at the first stand of the 'cello players. Mr. Schulz is also well known as a composer of trios, quartets and orchestral work.

Wednesday exening next there will be a special programme complimentary to the Hotel News Mutual Benefit Association, 400 of whom have signified their intention of attending in a body.

Mr. Schulz has selected the following numbers for his opening programme tomorrow evening: Coronation march, Meyerbeer; overture, "FraDiavolo," Auber; selection, "Prince Ananias," Herbert (first time); waltz, "Wiener Blut," Strauss; overture, "Benvenuto Cellini," Berlioz; evening rest, Loeschhorn, for string orchestra and harp (first time); Kujawiak, Wieniawski, arranged by L. Schulz (first time); finale, Act 1, "Lohengrin," Wagner; overture, "Light Cavalry," Suppe; selection, "La Grande Duchesse," Offenbach; polka, "Arabella," Knecht (first time); march, "Tabasco," Chadwick.

Next Wednesday evening will be Hotel Men's night at the promenade concerts, when a special program will be rendered.

The Promenade Concerts.

Another successful week of the "Pop" Concerts is just closing at Music Hall. Large audiences have again been present all the week and listened most attentively to the high class music which Conductor Zach and his well trained orchestra have offered. Although the social season is about closed and many have left the city for the summer, these concerts are of so attractive a nature that they draw immense houses, a large contingent of the fashionables coming in town specially to attend them. On Monday next, Memorial Day, a very interesting programme will be given, and there has already been a large advance sale of tickets.

Music Notes.

The "Pop" concerts continue gaily on their course, and very large and very delighted audiences have been the rule. Those wishing to enjoy the pleasure of a "table" seat should not delay their application to the last minute, as the demands are many. On Monday evening Mr. Leo Schulz makes his first appearance as conductor at these concerts and he will give the following admirable programme:

Coronation March...................Meyerbeer
Overture, "Fra Diavolo"................Auber
Selection, "Prince Ananias"..........Herbert
Waltz, "Wiener Blut".................Strauss
Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini"........Berlioz
"Evening Rest"...................Loeschhorn
For String Orchestra and Harp.
(First Time.)
"Kujawiak" .... Wieniawski
Arranged by L. Schulz.
(First Time.)
Finale, Act I., "Lohengrin"..........Wagner
Overture, "Light Cavalry".............Suppe
Selection, "La Grande Duchesse"..Offenbach
Polka, "Arabella"......................Knecht
(First Time.)
March, "Tabasco"......... ....Chadwick

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

The first half of these summer evening entertainments ended with the concert last evening, at which Mr. Max Zach, who so successfully directed the orchestra last season and during the first four weeks of the present, made his farewell appearance. During his term as conductor Mr. Zach has fairly won the high favor in which he is held by the patrons of these concerts. They will continue for four weeks only. Mr. Leo Schulz will be the conductor. Mr. Schulz was born in 1865 in Posen, Prussia, and at 9 years of age played successfully in public. At the age of 12, in consequence of his unusual talent, he was accepted at the Royal Academy of Music in Berlin, where, under the instruction of Joachim, Kiel and Hausmann, his progress was very marked. At 15 years he had acquired such proficiency as to be invited to play before the royal family. From 1880 to 1883 he concertized very successfully through Germany, Austria and Russia. After that he filled the position as conductor of light opera at the People's Theatre, Posen. He held this position until 1885, when he was chosen solo 'cellist of the Berlin Philharmonic orchestra. Shortly afterward he was invited to take the position as solo 'cellist of the Gewandhaus orchestra in Leipsic. When Mr. Nikisch came to America he prevailed upon Mr. Schulz to come also, since which time he has been a member of the Boston symphony orchestra, and has appeared as soloist with that organization with success. Mr. Schulz has composed several trios, quartets and orchestral works. On Wednesday evening next there will be a special programme complimentary to the Hotel Men's Mutual Benefit Association, 400 of whom have signified their intention of attending in a body. Mr. Schulz has selected the following music for tomorrow evening:

Coronation march...................Meyerbeer
Overture, "Fra Diavolo"...............Auber
Selection, "Prince Ananias"...........Herbert
Waltz, "Wiener Blut"..................Strauss
Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini"........Berlioz
"Evening Rest"..................Loeschhorn
"Kujawiak".......................Wieniawski
Finale, act 1, "Lohengrin"...........Wagner
Overture, "Light Cavalry"............Suppe
Selection, "La Grande Duchesse"....Offenbach
Polka, "Arabella"......................Knecht
March, "Tabasco"....................Chadwick

Tonight's Promenade Concert.

The programme for the promenade concert tonight at Music Hall, Boston, is as follows:

1. "Coronation March," Meyerbeer.
2. Overture, "Fra Diavolo," Auber.
3. Selection, "Prince Ananias," Herbert.
4. Waltz, "Wiener Blut," Strauss.
5. Overture, "Benvenuto Cellini," Berlioz.
6. "Evening Rest," Loeschhorn.
   For String Orchestra and Harp.
7. "Kujawiak,," Wieniawski.
   Arranged by L. Schulz.

THE MUSIC HALL "POPS."

Farewell Appearance of Conductor Max Zach.

The program at the promenade concert at Music hall this evening is:

March, "Austria.........................Zach
Overture, "William Tell"........Rossini
Waltz, "Arabian Nights"........Strauss
Harp solo. a. "Chant d'Exiles..Godefroid
b. Mazourka.......Schuecker
Soloist, Mr. Heinrich Schuecker.
Selection from "The Geisha........
Sydney Jones
Violin solo, Faust Fantasie........
Wieniawski
Soloist, Mr. Jacques Hoffman.
Polish dance..................Scharwenka
Overture, "Rienzi"...............Wagner
Waltz, "Grubenlichter"............Zeller
American Fantasy................Bendix
By request.
Polka, "Bella-Bocca"........Waldteufel
March, "Up the Street"............Morse

Monday night, at the Pops, which was designated military night on the programmes, brought out easily the largest and most brilliant company since the concerts began. The splendid decorations which had been put up for the Shaw Memorial exercises in the morning were all there for the evening, adding immensely to the picturesque surroundings. It was really thrilling when at the close of the "American Fantasy" the orchestra played the "Star Spangled Banner" and the house rose in a body, as by common impulse, and cheered. A lot of Cadets, who were celebrating their release from duty, made things merry when "Simple Simon" and "Jack and the Bean Stalk" selections were played. Another unique feature in the way of adornment was the electric sign on Hamilton place, so arranged that the letters were in red, white and blue, making a brilliant as well as a patriotic effect.

In the crowd around the tables were Col. Henry L. Higginson, in his uniform of major of cavalry, which he had worn during the memorial exercises that day, with Mrs. Higginson; his son, Mr. A. H. Higginson, and his nieces, Mrs. H. P. McKean, Jr., and Miss Pauline Shaw. Near by were Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Prince, who brought most of their coaching party of the afternoon, eight in all. Mrs. Gardner came in just before 10 o'clock, with Mr. and Mrs. St. Gaudens.

Others there were the Hon. George P. Lawrence, president of the Senate; the Hon. James G. Phillips, ex-Secretary Olney, the Hon. Robert F. Clark and party, Lieut.-Gov. Crane, Mrs. Curtis Guild, Jr., the Hon. and Mrs. Henry Cabot Lodge and Miss Lodge, Miss Gretchen Welch, with her fiance, J. S. Fay, 3d, and party; Mr. Philip Sears, Mr. and Mrs. George Lee, Mrs. James Jackson and Miss Madeleine Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. James Gardiner White, and too many more for space to mention.

Mrs. F. Gordon Dexter was a conspicuous and handsome figure in the balcony at the "Pop" Wednesday night. Mr. Alexander H. Higginson had a table party, and Judge Dewey and his brother, Mr. Frank Dewey, were with ladies at one near by. Mrs. Gardner came in late with Mr. Proctor. She was in pale blue, with white lace bodice, over the elbow sleeves of which were drawn long white gloves, and her black hat had black plumes. Mr. Lincoln Crosby, Mr. Johnson Morton, Prof. and Mrs. Leo Lewis of Tufts College and Mrs. Lewis and Mr. Walter Friend were also there.

Tomorrow night the reign of Mr. Schutz begins, Mr. Zach giving up his baton to him for the last half of the series. The new leader is a thorough musician, and has a lot of friends, who mean to give him a jolly good send off for his first night. Mr. Comee is having all sorts of pleasant things said to him of the success of the "Pops" under his management this year. It has certainly been more marked than ever before.

Mrs. F. Gordon Dexter brought a large table party to the "Pops" on Friday night, and Mrs. Gardner had another of like dimensions. Mrs. Dexter on Wednesday, when she sat in the balcony, looked unusually handsome and distinguished in black, with black velvet bolero edged with white lace opening over a burnt orange blouse. Her small toque was of purple and white.

The Promenade Concerts.

Mr. Leo Schulz made his first appearance last night as a conductor of the Promenade Concerts at Music Hall. He was greeted warmly as he stepped forward to lead the opening piece, Meyberbeer's "Coronation March," and there was hearty applause throughout the evening from the large audience. Mr. Schulz has been known here since the season of '89-'90 as a 'cellist of commanding talent, a composer of serious aims and technical ability, an admirable all round musician. Last night he showed his understanding and authority as a conductor. Larger experience may bring more physical grace in the outward manifestation of his wishes, but the spirit and the musical feeling shown by him are indisputable.

The program included overtures by Auber, Berlioz and Suppé, a waltz by Strauss, selections from operas by Oppenbach and Wagner, the march from "Tabasco," and these novelties: "Arabella" Polka by Knecht, Wieniawski's "Kujawiak," arranged by Mr. Schulz; Loeschhorn's "Evening Rest" for strings and harp, and a pot-pourri on airs from "Prince Ananias."

Mr. Schulz proposes to set apart an evening in the week for soloists. Thus Thursday night Messrs. Ondricek, Schulz, Jacquet Hackebarth and Schuecker will appear. Wednesday evening a special program has been arranged for the Hotel Men's Mutual Benefit Association. The program this evening will be as follows:

Wedding march	Mendelssohn
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor."	Nicolai
Gavotte Cirkus	Fliege
Selection, "Carmen"	Bizet
Overture, "Ivane soussanine" (First time.)	Glinka
Prelude, Janie (First time.)	Dalcrose
Ride of the Hussars (First time.)	Spindler
Slavonic Rhapsody, No. 2	Dvorak
Overture, "Martha"	Flotow
Waltz, "Vienna Beauties" (First time.)	Ziehrer
Selection, "Mikado"	Sullivan
March, "Washington Post"	Sousa

Mr Schulz Conducts the "Pops."

Mr Leo Schulz made his first appearance as conductor of the promenade concerts in Music hall last evening. He will conduct the concerts during the four weeks that they are to continue, and judging by the heartiness of the applause which rewarded his efforts last evening it may be confidently predicted that he will become a great favorite with the patrons of the "Pops."

Mr Schulz has for several years been a prominent and highly esteemed member of the Symphony orchestra. As a solo cellist he has earned an enviable reputation, and he has also gained recognition as a composer. The honors due a well equipped conductor must now be given him.

It would not be in good taste to compare Mr Schulz' work with that of his predecessor. Mr Zach is an able musician and he gave thorough satisfaction during the time that he had charge of the orchestra, and it is high praise to say that Mr Schulz deserves to become quite as popular. He conducted last evening with excellent judgment and with constant evidence of artistic instinct. He also showed appreciation of the demands likely to be made by a popular gathering. It is light, tuneful and lively music that is most desired at a concert in which conversation and liquid refreshments are prominent features, and it was this kind of music that Mr Schulz provided last evening . .

The following attractive program will be played this evening:

Wedding march	Mendelssohn
Overture, Merry Wives of Windsor	Nicolai
Waltz, Vienna Beauties (First time)	Ziehrer
Selection, Carmen	Bizet
Overture Ivane soussanine (First time)	Glinka
Prelude, Janie (First time)	Dalcrose
Ride of the Hussars (First time)	Spindler
Slavonic Rhapsody, No 2	Dvorak
Overture, Martha	Flotow
Gavotte Cirkus	Fliege
Selection, Mikado	Sullivan
March, Washington Post	Sousa

Tomorrow evening Mr Schulz' program will be arranged in anagram form, complimentary to the hotel men's mutual benefit association, several hundred of whom have announced their intention of attending the concert. The program will be as follows:

Hoch Habsburg march	Kral
Oberon Overture	Weber
Thousand and One Nights waltz	Strauss
Erminie selection	Jacobowski
Lohengrin Finale, act I	Wagner
Manfred entr'acte	Reinecke
Espana	Waldteufel
Nabucodonosor overture	Verdi
Sylvia ballet music	Delibes
Mikado selection	Sullivan
Bella-Bocca polka	Waldteufel
Austrian march	Zach

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

The fifth week of the promenade concerts in Music Hall began last evening. The occasion had a special interest in the first appearance of Mr. Leo Schulz as conductor of the orchestra for the rest of the season for these entertainments. Mr. Schulz was welcomed with great cordiality, and his efforts met with hearty applause through the whole performance. His programme was attractive in every way, and presented an ample share of bright and pleasing novelties. He conducts with easy freedom and authority, and in a thoroughly musicianly spirit, holding his orchestra firmly in hand. Among the selections that were most enthusiastically applauded was the "Benvenuto Cellini" overture by Berlioz, which was read and played so effectively that the audience recalled Mr. Schulz some four or five times, and for a moment seemed bent on an encore. One of the novelties that was imperatively redemanded was an arrangement for string orchestra and harp of "Evening Rest," and another was Wieniawski's "Kujawiak," cleverly and tastefully arranged by Mr. Schulz. Both selections were admirably played. The new conductor was a complete success, and at once won the favor of his public in the position. The programme for tonight is: Wedding march, Mendelssohn; overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; Gavotte Cirkus, Fliege; selection, "Carmen," Bizet; overture, "Ivane soussanine" (first time), Glinka; prelude, Janie (first time), Dalcrose; "Ride of the Hussars" (first time), Spindler; Slavonic rhapsody, No. 2, Dvorak; overture, "Martha," Flotow; waltz, "Vienna Beauties" (first time), Ziehrer; selection, "Mikado," Sullivan; march, "Washington Post," Sousa.

NOTES.

"The Hotel Men's Mutual Benefit Association will go to the Promenade Concert tomorrow night." It should be an easy task to arrange a complimentary and satisfactory program. The concert might begin with the overture to "The Portuguese Inn" by Cherubini or "The Hostess of Lyons" by Bousquet. There should be selections from Dufresne's "Hôtel de la poste," Prévost's "Hotel des Princes" and Arquier's "Hôtellerie de Sarzanno." Some one should sing or play the Rondo of the Pie from "Geneviève de Brabant," "the Roast Beef of old England," the air from Diaz's "Coupe du roi de Thulé," Schubert's "Trout," the Cider song from "The Chimes of Normandy." Nor should "The Isle of Champagne" be overlooked.

——Monday was the "banner night" at the Pops, and essentially military as well as patriotic in the makeup of the program. There was a notable audience, in size and quality unexcelled this season. Lieut Gov Crane, Hon George P. Lawrence, Hon James D. Phillips, Hon Richard Olney, Mr Robert F. Clark, Mr and Mrs Henry L. Higginson, Mrs John L. Gardner, who drove in from the Country club with her guests, who included Mr Augustus St Gaudens, Miss Pauline Shaw, Mrs McKean, Mrs James Jackson, who chaperoned a party of 12, Mr George C. Lee, Mr Philip Sears, Hon Henry Cabot Lodge, Mrs A. P. Gardner, Mrs Curtis Guild Jr and Miss Mary Jackson were present.

M[illegible] MATTERS.

The "Pop" Concerts—Mr. Leo Schulz a Success as Conductor.

"A change of pasture makes fat calves," and a change of conductors makes interesting "Pops." Midseason in the Music Hall popular concert course was celebrated last night by the entrance of Mr. Leo Schulz upon the duties of conductor of the orchestra. This was in accordance of the plan made at the beginning of the season, and was not in any degree an aspersion of the merits of Mr. Zach in the same post.

The large audience which on Saturday sped the parting, returned on Monday night to welcome the coming guest, and Mr. Schulz received hearty applause on his appearance, and still more after he had shown of what excellent musical material he is made.

If one were drawing a parallel between the two conductors, in the Plutarchian manner, one would comment on the fact that one conductor began and the other ended with the last of the alphabet; that one was elegant in pose and graceful in manner while the other was like a little Beethoven in appearance and in energy; but the parallels would come together at the close, for both are good musicians and are entitled to the summer guests' (if this be summer) gratitude.

Mr. Schulz began the second part of the concert ambitiously enough with Berlioz's "Benvenuto Cellini" overture, a severe test for any orchestra; and this was given in a manner that told at once that there will be good musical interpretation during the Schulz regime.

The entire second part of the programme was of high character, for evidently this leader does not believe that good orchestral work goes out of season, like oysters. He held the men finely together during this brilliant work and the ensemble was worthy of a quieter audience than any smoking-concerts can furnish. This very intricate overture won about half-a-dozen recalls for the conductor, a triumph of which any leader might be very proud.

A "Kujawiak" by Wieniowski, arranged by Mr. Schulz, won almost as emphatic approval and proved the new conductor an adept at orchestral scoring.

A pretty piece for harp and string orchestra displayed graceful melody and careful shading, and also allowed Mr. Schuecker to give some graceful execution on his instrument, while the Glockenspiel added plenty of sugar to the sweet compound.

It is scarcely necessary to speak of the numbers in detail; thus much was evident—the new conductor is a great success; he reads the scores with much more of artistic effect than is generally obtained in a light and popular concert; he is improving the programmes not only by choosing new and interesting works, but by adding good solos and making the central part of the concert (from 9 to 10 each evening) of a higher standard than it has ever been before.

We note the usual historic error in the programmes for Thursday evening; the "air by Louis XIII." (often called "Amaryllis") arranged by Ghys, is announced; Louis XIII. is quite innocent of this melody; it is a pretty Gavotte, played originally in a ballet by Baltazarini and called "Le Clochette," because a little bell sounded the dominant note all through the chief theme.

When will this odd blunder, perpetuated even by Theodore Thomas, be set right?

The odd part of it all is that Louis XIII. did write a passionate love-song to Madame d'Hauteville, which he called "Amaryllis," but some musical bungler has "mixed those children up, and no one ever knew it."

Louis C. Elson.

——Mrs Phinehas Adams gave a table party at the Pops Monday for Dr and Mrs John Howard Payne, Miss Houghton and Messrs Charles and A. D. Curran.

——A noticeable figure at the Pops Monday was Mrs Fred Prince in a distinctly Parisian gown of gray cloth, trimmed with gray satin shingles put on in wave effect. A huge gray hat, laden with plumes, was worn coquettishly well over the eyes. Mrs Prince was Mrs Gardner's guest.

On Monday witnesses of the parade

——Saturday night last at the Pops may well be called "college night," with Harvard, Tufts and Princeton men grouped here and there, enlivening the pauses with their "yells." Conductor Zach courteously responded to the Princeton call for "Fair Harvard," when the entire audience joined the orchestra in singing the words. Every table was occupied. Noted among many familiar faces were Mr and Mrs William Hooper, with party of six; Miss Martha Dana, Col Thomas L. Livermore, Mr and Mrs George Lee, Mr Charles Hayden, Mr Walter DeLand Came, Mr and Mrs W. H. Bowker, Mr Lipsiger and Mrs Alice E. Cram.

SUMMER MUSIC.

The following most attractive programme has been arranged by Conductor Zach for the Promenade Concert at Music Hall this evening:—

Teufels March	Suppe
Overture, "Stradella"	Flotow
Waltz, "Meerleuchten"	Ziehrer
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
Nocturne and Wedding March from "Midsummer Night's Dream"	Mendelssohn
Blissful Dream	Meyer-Helmund
Introduction to Act III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Selection, "Fatinitza"	Suppe
Waltz, "Estudiantina"	Waldteufel
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Love's Dream After the Ball	Czibulka
March, "In Darkest Africa"	Metz

Monday evening, May 31, will be "Military Night," when the "New York Seventh Regiment March" will be played, also selections from "Simple Simon" and other productions of the Cadets. The programme will also include the "American Fantasy" by Bendix, the "Waltz Militaire" by [illegible] and "Tabasco" overture [illegible] selections.

[illegible] notable [illegible] when a conductor [illegible] a compliment to one of his [illegible] in giving among his numbers a [illegible] march, the work of Mr Hadley, the [illegible] son of Mr Henry Hadley, super[illegible] of music in Somerville. Many [illegible] were showered upon the [illegible], who was in attendance, ac[illegible] by Mr Lucius Hosmer, the [illegible] of the "Walking Delegate." [illegible] Hadley has recently returned from [illegible], where he pursued his studies with the best masters. In attendance Tuesday were Miss Bessie Chadwick, Mrs James Jackson, with party of eight; Mr Philip H. Wynne, Mr John C. Abbott, Mr and Mrs Hanson, Mr and Mrs Henry Hadley and party, Hon Albert E. Pillsbury, Mr and Mrs Franz Zerrahn, Hon E. Rollins Morse, Miss Marion Mason, Miss Amory, who is a constant attendant and on this occasion wore a gown of gray cloth, Mr and Mrs Randolph Coolidge with party, Mr John S. Clarke, Mrs Alice Kent Robertson, Dr Sargent, Mrs and Miss Smith, Mr Arthur L. Spring, Col Frank B. Stevens, Col James Lake and Col Boutwell.

—Mrs Fred R. Comee of the Berkeley is entertaining her mother, Mrs Frederick Galloupe of New Bedford, and was at Keith's theater Tuesday evening.

THE POP CONCERTS.

Last evening there was a change of leaders at the pop concerts in Music Hall, Leo Schulz assuming the baton in place of Max Zach, who has conducted thus far this season. Mr. Schulz is well known as the leading 'cello player of the Symphony Orchestra, but while he has led musical organizations in other cities, this is his first appearance here in that capacity.

His methods of conducting are certainly original, but effective, and he read the different numbers in a pleasing and artistic manner, which apparently suited the audience, judging from the liberality of the applause. The programme was varied, among the most popular numbers being Mr. Schulz's own arrangement of Wieniawski's "Kujawiak," Suppe's overture "Light Cavalry" and selections from "La Grande Duchesse." Mr. Schulz will conduct the concerts for the remainder of the season, which will close Saturday evening, July 3.

Tonight will be played for the first time at these concerts "Ivan e Soussanine," prelude "Janie," "Ride of the Hussars" and the waltz "Vienna Beauties."

The Promenade concerts at Music Hall continue to be the popular summer attraction, as in former years. As announced earlier in the season, there were to be two conductors, Mr. Max Zach and Mr. Leo Schultz. Mr. Zach concludes his engagement one week from tonight, and for the remaining evenings has arranged some of the most delightful programmes yet offered. Monday evening, May 31, will be "military night," when the "New York Seventh Regiment March" will be played; also selections from "Simple Simon" and other productions of the Cadets. The programme will also includes the "American Fantasy" by Bendix, the "Waltz Militaire" by Ganne, the "1812" and "Tabasco" overtures and other appropriate selections. The programme this evening is:

Teufels March	Suppé
Overture, "Stradella"	Flotow
Waltz, "Meerlenchten"	Ziehrer
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
Nocturne and Wedding March, from "Midsummer Night's Dream"	Mendelssohn
Blissful Dream	Meyer-Helmund
Introduction to Act III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Selection, "Fatinitza"	Suppé
Waltz, "Estudiantina"	Waldteufel
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Love's Dream After The Ball	Czibulka
March, "In Darkest Africa"	Metz

HOTEL MEN'S WEEK OF PLEASURE.

Rain Interfered with Yesterday's Plans, Yet a Good Time Was Enjoyed.

The visitors attended the Promenade Concert last evening. Over the Hamilton place entrance to Music Hall there were big letters of electric lights forming the words "Hotel Men's Concert." Eighty tables and many first balcony seats were reserved for the party and all appeared to have a happy time. The order of the programme was arranged as an acrostic—"H.O.T.E.L. M.E.N.S. M. B. A." On the programme Manager Comee had in colors a reproduction of the badge which all members are wearing, as well as the crest of the association. Today

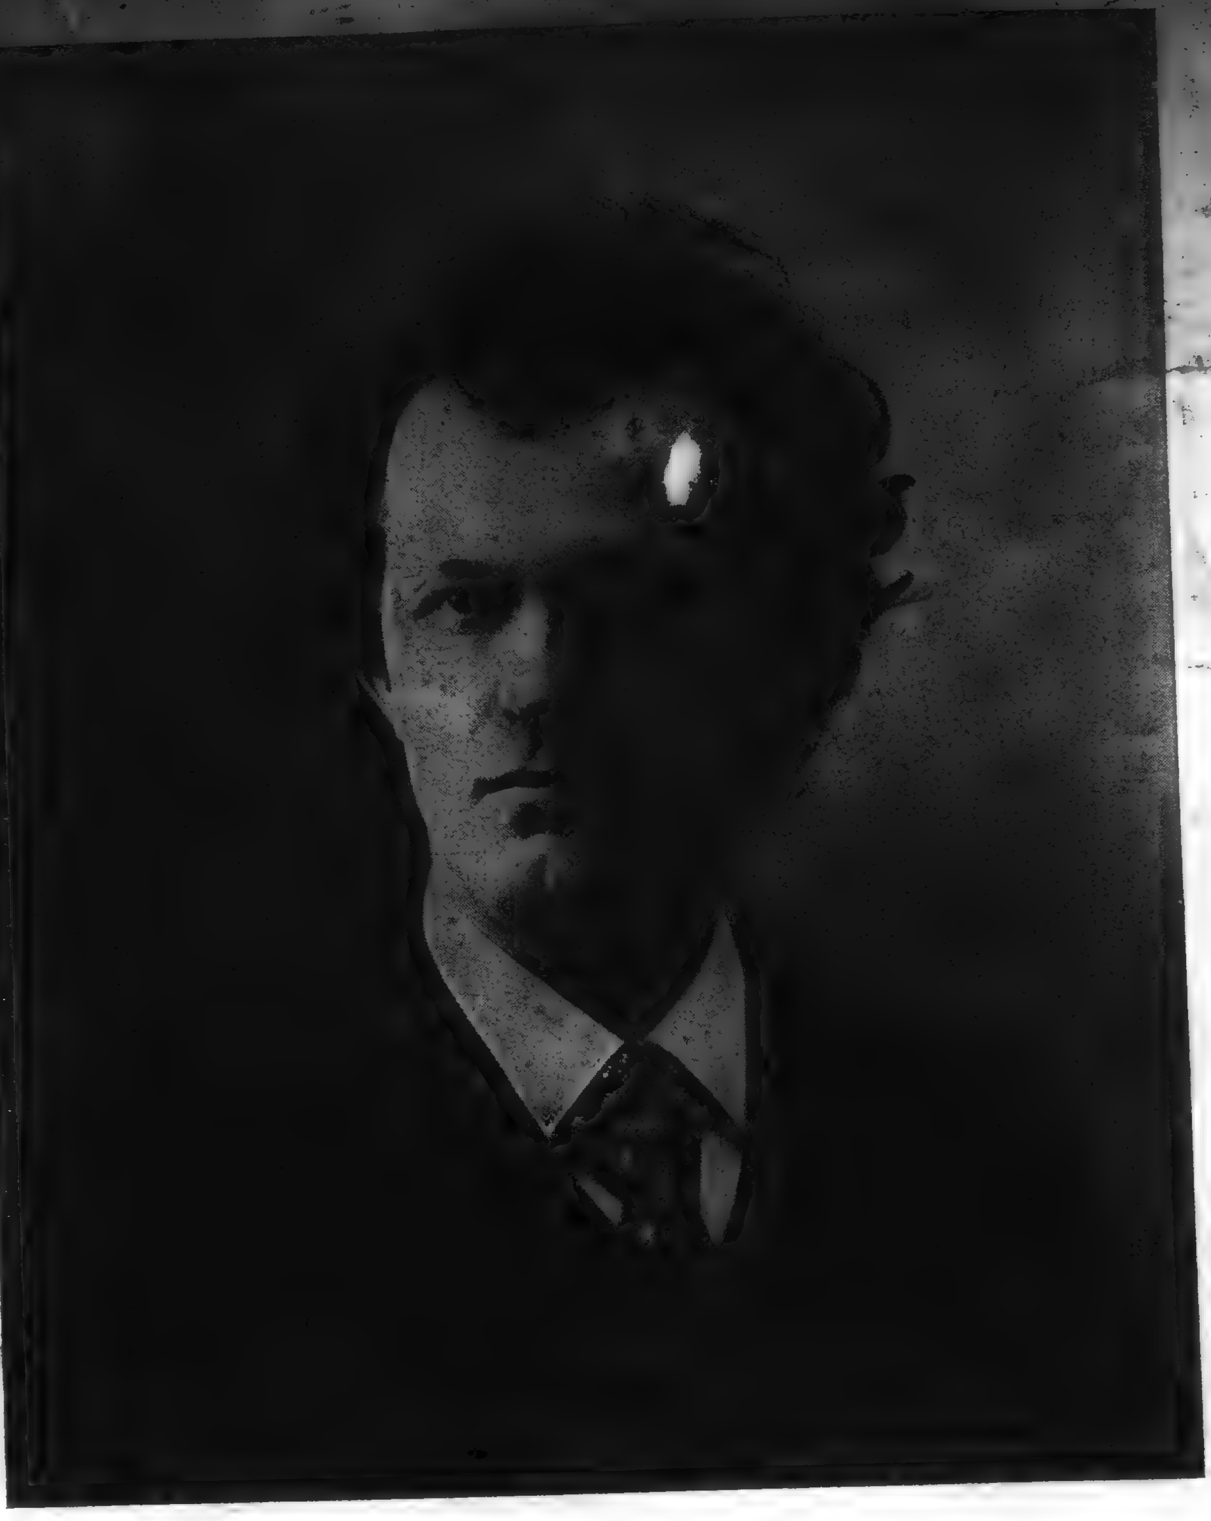
---

—Mrs Alan Mackintosh and Mrs H. Phinney of Brookline chaperoned a large party at the Pops Friday night, which included Mrs Mackintosh's family of four sons and two daughters, Mr Rogers, the fiance of Miss Mackintosh, Miss Phinney, Miss Britton and Mr Er-

---

—At the promenade concert Monday evening, the attendance was both large and brilliant. Especially noted were Mr. and Mrs. William F. Apthorp, with Mr. Pierre LeRose, Mrs. Wirt Dexter, who chaperoned a party of young people, including her young daughter and Miss Simpkins of Washington, D. C., who is the guest of the Dexters; Mrs. Thomas Nowell entertained a party of ten, Mrs. Phinehas Adams, Colonel James Lake, Colonel Stevens of the Governor's Staff, Mr and Mrs Elmer Chickering, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Gilman and Mrs. D. Henry Cram, were among the well known people present.

A special programme will be rendered "Harvard Night" at the Music Hall promenade concert on Tuesday, June 22, the night before the Yale game. Seats are now on sale at Music Hall.



LEO SCHULZ, CONDUCTOR PROMENADE CONCERTS.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

The Music Hall promenade concerts entered upon the sixth and last week but two of the present season with the performance of last evening. The programme rendered included the selection played at these concerts for the first time, Meyerbeer's "Robert le Diable" being received with great favor. As the season draws to a close, "special" nights will begin to be frequent. Next Wednesday will be "Wagner night" and Thursday the numbers will be patriotic. Harvard night will be on Tuesday, June 22.

The programme for this evening is:

Persian march	Strauss
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppe
Waltz, "The Kiss"	Strauss
Selection, "Robin Hood"	De Koven
Overture, "Rienzi"	Wagner
Chanson triste (for string orchestra)	Tschaikowsky
(First time.)
Selection, "Traviata"	Verdi
Waltz, "A Toi"	Waldteufel
Danse Macabre	Saint-Saens
Selection, "Prince Ananias"	Herbert
Spanish serenade	Metra
Teuffels march	Suppe

—Col Henry Hastings and party, Mr Charles Hayden, Mr George Brooks, Mr G. Dexter, Miss Hastings, Mr and Mrs Jack Shepard, Dr and Mrs George McPherson with a party, Mr George Hall and Mr and Mrs Bentley Warren, were among the large audience at the "Pop" concert last Saturday evening.

Music Notes.

The Promenade Concerts, with Mr. Leo Schulz in the conductor's stand, have lost none of their popularity. Mr. Schulz is a thorough musician and he has inspired his orchestra with a rare enthusiasm. He makes a most admirable conductor, and his interpretation of the more serious works in the programme is of high art value that deserves the appreciation it receives. The programmes are varied and effective and judging by the favor with which they are received, Mr. Schulz has hit the ppy medium. The programme for Monday n at is: March, Joachim; overture, "Chant des Belges," Litolff; waltz, "Rose Leaves," Waldteufel; selection, "The Geisha," Sydney Jones; overture, "Astorga," Abert; ballet music, "Laurin," (a) Night, (b) Bacchanale, Moszkowski; waltz, "Donauweibschen," Strauss; Kukuska, Russian Dances, Lehar; selection, "Robert le Diable," Meyerbeer; Charme D'Amour, Ronsard; Ride

---

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The limited season of the Promenade concerts at Music hall is drawing to a close, and the large crowds which are nightly in attendance attest to the prevalent desire to enjoy these delightful affairs while yet there is time.

Tomorrow night's programme will be:

*March	Joachim
*Overture, "Chant des Belges"	Litolff
*Waltz, "Rose Leaves"	Waldteufel
Selection, "The Geisha"	Sidney Jones
*Overture, "Astorga"	Abert
*Ballet Music, "Laurian" a Night. b Bacchanale.	Moszkowski
*Waltz, "Donaweibschen"	Strauss
*Kukuska, Russian Dances	Lehar
*Selection, "Robert le Diable"	Meyerbeer
*[illegible]	Ronsard
Ride [illegible]	Spindler
*March, "Cotton K[illegible]"	Sousa

*[illegible]

Promenade Concerts.

That the popularity of the "Pops" continue undiminished is evinced by the attendance this week. Mr. Leo Schulz, as conductor, has made a decidedly favorable impression upon all who have attended. Tonight's program is as follows:

March, "Liberty Bell,"	Sousa
Overture, "Struensee,"	Meyerbeer
Waltz, "Les Patineurs,"	Waldteufel
Selection, "Carmen,"	Bizet
Overture, "Tannhauser,"	Wagner
Melody, "Old Folks at Home,"	Bush
For String Orchestra. (First Time.)
Waltz, "Kaiser,"	Strauss
Columbian March,	Schulz
Two Hungarian Dances,	Brahms
Selection, "Tabasco,"	Chadwick
Waltz, "Vienna Beauties,"	Ziehrer
Radetzky March,	Strauss

Tonight's Promenade Concert.

The programme for the promenade concert tonight at Music Hall, Boston, is as follows:

1. March, "Liberty Bell," Sousa.
2. Overture, "Struensee," Meyerbeer.
3. Waltz, "Les Patineurs," Waldteufel.
4. Selection, "Carmen," Bizet.
5. Overture, "Tannhäuser," Wagner.
6. Melody, "Old Folks at Home," Bush.

(For string orchestra.)

7. Waltz, "Kaiser," Strauss.
8. Columbian March, Schulz.
9. Two Hungarian Dances, Brahms.
10. Selection, "Tabasco," Chadwick.
11. Waltz, "Vienna Beauties," Ziehrer.
12. Radetzky March, Strauss.

For the evening, the "Pop" concert management had engaged the H. M. M. B. A. as their guests. Eighty tables were reserved for the latter in the centre of the big hall and the scene presented was a brilliant one, for gathered round were elegantly dressed women and conventionally dressed men. The orchestra, under the efficient leadership of Leo Schulz, seemed to play with extra vim, and their performances were every one of them encored. The programme was of a novel character, forming an acrostic of the Hotel Men's Mutual Benefit Association, as follows:

Hoch Habsburg March	Kral
Oberon overture	Weber
Thousand and One Nights Waltz	Strauss
Erminie selection	Jacobowski
Lohengrin Finale, Act I.	Wagner
Manfred Entr'acte	Reinecke
Espana	Waldteufel
Nabucodonosor overture	Verdi
Sylvia Ballet Music a. Les Chasseuresses. b. Introduction and Valse Lente. c. Pizzicato Polka. d. Bacchanale.	Delibes
Mikado selection	Sullivan
Bella-Bocca Polka	Waldteufel
Austria March	Zach

Thursday

Monday evening, at the Pops, when Mr. Leo Schulz made his first appearance as conductor, there was a fine programme, a full house and life and enthusiasm galore. All the parties around the tables seemed to be having a particularly good time and to look especially jolly. There were more bright colors in the costumes of the women than had been noticed the fore, which gave a finishing touch to the generally gala atmosphere.

At one of the tables near the stage were Mr. and Mrs. William Apthorp, with the young French lecturer, M. Deslouis, and Mr. Pierre La Rose of Harvard. Mrs. Apthorp was looking unusually well in black, with bodice of apple green and white lace, and a small toque of violets and black plumes. At Mrs. Gardner's table, the lady herself being absent, were Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond and Miss Anna Lyman.

Mrs. Wirt Dexter, looking distinguished in black, and Mrs. G. H. Windeler. Both had parties, and so did Mrs. Thomas Nowell, who was handsome in black and yellow and a large black hat, with plumes. Mr. and Mrs. I. R. Clark were with a large party, including Mr. A. P. Browne, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Austin, Miss Maynadier and Mr. Howard Maynadier of Cambridge. Mrs. Clark was beautifully gowned in dark grenadine over cerise, with jewelled passementerie and lace on the bodice.

Others there were Miss Marie Hoffendahl, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Goodwin, Mrs. Richard Arnold, Mr. Atherton, Mr. and Mrs. Lander Beuve, Mr. Presby Palmer and party, Mr. Zach, the former leader, who was in the front row of the balcony with his wife; Dr. Dixon, Mrs. Phineas Adams, Mr. James Lake, Mr. Walter De Land Came, Mr. Joseph T. Whitney, Mr. C. F. Stratton, Mr. W. R. Thayer, Mr. Von Raalte and many more.

The Promenade Concerts.

Mr. Leo Schulz, the new conducto of the "Pop" concerts, has given some admirable programmes during this, the first week of his leadership of the orchestra, and the delighted audiences have shown their appreciation of his efforts by bestowing most generous applause upon most of the numbers presented. The concerts continue to draw very large audiences, and no doubt will until the end of the season, for they are a most enjoyable entertainment at this time of the year.

THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

Conductor Leo Schulz, who assu the direction of the orchestra last M day, has, during his first week as rector, made many new friends, and programmes have been unusually in esting from the fact that he has in duced in them so many solo numbe On Wednesday evening next the p gramme will consist of music by W ner. Thursday evening, the 17th, be given up to patriotic music. For morrow evening the programme will c sist almost wholly of novelties, as f lows:

March	Joac
Overture, "Chant des Belges"	Li
Waltz, "Rose Leaves"	Waldte
Selection, "The Geisha"	Sydney J
Overture, "Astorga"	A
Ballet music, "Laurin" a. Night. b. Bacchanale.	Moszkow
Waltz, "Donauweibschen"	Str
Kukuska, Russian dances	Le
Selection, "Robert le Diable"	Meyer
Charme D'Amour	Rons
"Ride of the Hussars"	Spin
March, "Cotton King"	So

—Tuesday night called out a notable audience at Music hall, when conductor Zach paid a compliment to one of his auditors in giving among his numbers a new march, the work of Mr Hadley, the young son of Mr Henry Hadley, supervisor of music in Somerville. Many compliments were showered upon the composer, who was in attendance, accompanied by Mr Lucius Hosmer, the composer of the "Walking Delegate." Mr Hadley has recently returned from Vienna, where he pursued his studies with the best masters. In attendance Tuesday were Miss Bessie Chadwick, Mrs James Jackson, with party of eight; Mr Philip H. Wynne, Mr John C. Abbott, Mr and Mrs Hanson, Mr and Mrs Henry Hadley and party, Hon Albert E. Pillsbury, Mr and Mrs Franz Zerrahn, Hon E. Rollins Morse, Miss Marion Mason, Miss Amory, who is a constant attendant and on this occasion wore a gown of gray cloth, Mr and Mrs Randolph Coolidge with party, Mr John S. Clarke, Mrs Alice Kent Robertson, Dr Sargent, Mrs and Miss Smith, Mr Arthur L. Spring, Col Frank B. Stevens, Col James Lake and Col Boutwell.

—Mrs Fred R. Comee of the Berkeley is entertaining her mother, Mrs Frederick Galloupe of New Bedford, and was at Keith's theater Tuesday evening.

THE POP CONCERTS.

Last evening there was a change of leaders at the pop concerts in Music Hall, Leo Schulz assuming the baton in place of Max Zach, who has conducted thus far this season. Mr. Schulz is well known as the leading 'cello player of the Symphony Orchestra, but while he has led musical organizations in other cities, this is his first appearance here in that capacity.

His methods of conducting are certainly original, but effective, and he read the different numbers in a pleasing and artistic manner, which apparently suited the audience, judging from the liberality of the applause. The programme was varied, among the most popular numbers being Mr. Schulz's own arrangement of Wieniawski's "Kujawiak," Suppe's overture "Light Cavalry" and selections from "La Grande Duchesse." Mr. Schulz will conduct the concerts for the remainder of the season, which will close Saturday evening, July 3.

Tonight will be played for the first time at these concerts "Ivan e Soussanine," prelude "Janie," "Ride of the Hussars" and the waltz "Vienna Beauties."

The Promenade concerts at Music Hall continue to be the popular summer attraction, as in former years. As announced earlier in the season, there were to be two conductors, Mr. Max Zach and Mr. Leo Schultz. Mr. Zach concludes his engagement one week from tonight, and for the remaining evenings has arranged some of the most delightful programmes yet offered. Monday evening, May 31, will be "military night," when the "New York Seventh Regiment March" will be played; also selections from "Simple Simon" and other productions of the Cadets. The programme will also includes the "American Fantasy" by Bendix, the "Waltz Militaire" by Ganne, the "1812" and "Tabasco" overtures and other appropriate selections. The programme this evening is:

Teufels March	Suppé
Overture, "Stradella"	Flotow
Waltz, "Meerlenchten"	Ziehrer
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
Nocturne and Wedding March, from "Midsummer Night's Dream"	Mendelssohn
Blissful Dream	Meyer-Helmund
Introduction to Act III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Selection, "Fatinitza"	Suppé
Waltz, "Estudiantina"	Waldteufel
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Love's Dream After The Ball	Czibulka
March, "In Darkest Africa"	Metz

HOTEL MEN'S WEEK OF PLEASURE.

Rain Interfered with Yesterday's Plans, Yet a Good Time Was Enjoyed.

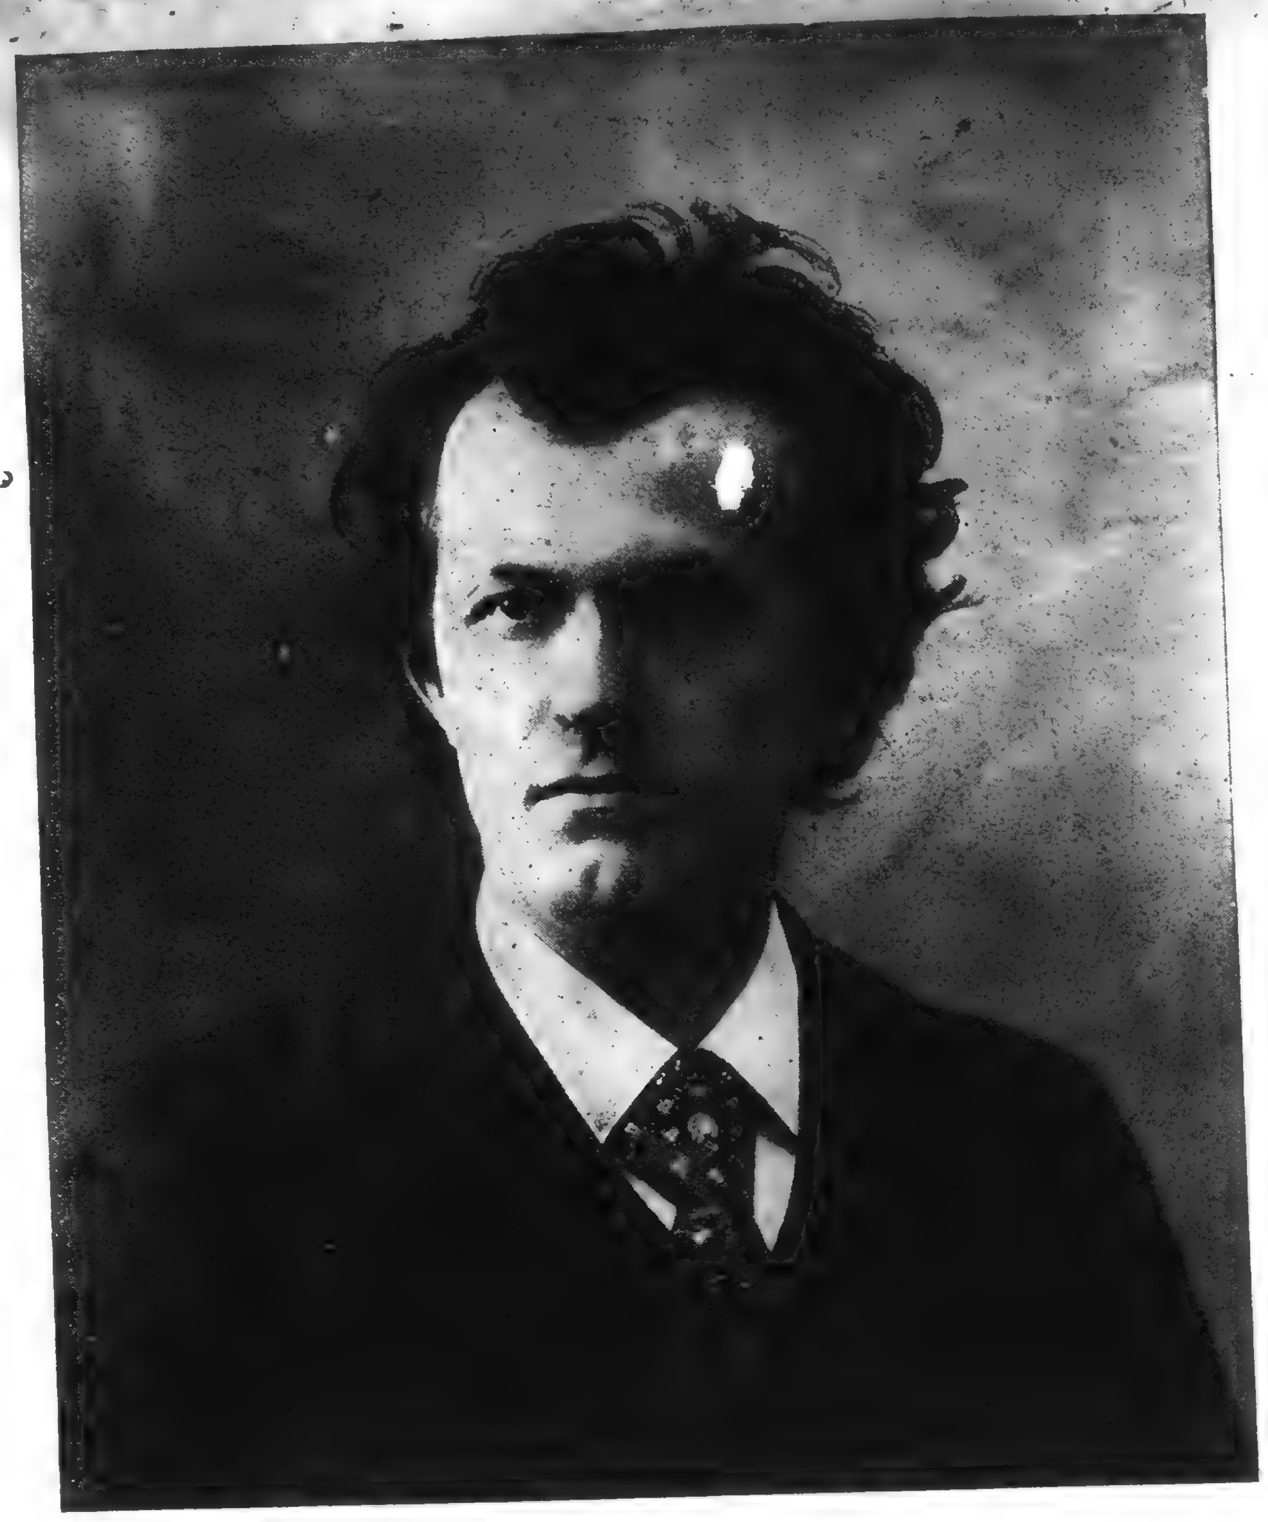
The visitors attended the Promenade Concert last evening. Over the Hamilton place entrance to Music Hall there were big letters of electric lights forming the words "Hotel Men's Concert." Eighty tables and many first balcony seats were reserved for the party and all appeared to have a happy time. The order of the programme was arranged as an acrostic—"H.O.T.E.L. M.E.N.S. M. B. A." On the programme Manager Comee had in colors a reproduction of the badge which all members are wearing, as well as the crest of the association. Today

---

—Mrs Alan Mackintosh and Mrs H. Phinney of Brookline chaperoned a large party at the Pops Friday night, which included Mrs Mackintosh's family of four sons and two daughters, Mr Rogers, the fiance of Miss Mackintosh, Miss Phinney, Miss Britton and Mr Ernest Fales.

—At the promenade concert Monday evening, the attendance was both large and brilliant. Especially noted were Mr. and Mrs. William F. Apthorp, with Mr. Pierre LeRose, Mrs. Wirt Dexter, who chaperoned a party of young people, including her young daughter and Miss Simpkins of Washington, D. C., who is the guest of the Dexters; Mrs. Thomas Nowell entertained a party of ten, Mrs. Phinehas Adamas, Colonel James Lake, Colonel Stevens of the Governor's Staff, Mr and Mrs Elmer Chickering, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Gilman and Mrs. D. Henry Cram, were among the well known people present.

A special programme will be rendered "Harvard Night" at the Music Hall promenade concert on Tuesday, June 22, the night before the Yale game. Seats are now on sale at Music Hall.



LEO SCHULZ, CONDUCTOR PROMENADE CONCERTS.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

The Music Hall promenade concerts entered upon the sixth and last week but two of the present season with the performance of last evening. The programme rendered included the selection played at these concerts for the first time, Meyerbeer's "Robert le Diable" being received with great favor. As the season draws to a close, "special" nights will begin to be frequent. Next Wednesday will be "Wagner night" and Thursday the numbers will be patriotic. Harvard night will be on Tuesday, June 22.

The programme for this evening is:

Persian march	Strauss
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppe
Waltz, "The Kiss"	Strauss
Selection, "Robin Hood"	De Koven
Overture, "Rienzi"	Wagner
Chanson triste (for string orchestra)	Tschaikowsky
(First time.)
Selection, "Traviata"	Verdi
Waltz, "A Toi"	Waldteufel
Danse Macabre	Saint-Saens
Selection, "Prince Ananias"	Herbert
Spanish serenade	Metra
Teuffels march	Suppe

—Col Henry Hastings and party, Mr Charles Hayden, Mr George Brooks, Mr G. Dexter, Miss Hastings, Mr and Mrs Jack Shepard, Dr and Mrs George McPherson with a party, Mr George Hall and Mr and Mrs Bentley Warren, were among the large audience at the "Pop" concert last Saturday evening.

Music Notes.

The Promenade Concerts, with Mr. Leo Schulz in the conductor's stand, have lost none of their popularity. Mr. Schulz is a thorough musician and he has inspired his orchestra with a rare enthusiasm. He makes a most admirable conductor, and his interpretation of the more serious works in the programme is of high art value that deserves the appreciation it receives. The programmes are varied and effective and judging by the favor with which they are received, Mr. Schulz has hit the happy medium. The programme for Monday night is: March, Joachim; overture, "Chant des Belges," Litolff; waltz, "Rose Leaves," Waldteufel; selection, "The Geisha," Sydney Jones; overture, "Astorga," Abert; ballet music, "Laurin," (a) Night, (b) Bacchanale, Moszkowski; waltz, "Donauweibschen," Strauss; Kukuska, Russian Dances, Lehar; selection, "Robert le Diable," Meyerbeer; Charme D'Amour, Ronsard; Ride

---

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The limited season of the Promenade concerts at Music hall is drawing to a close, and the large crowds which are nightly in attendance attest to the prevalent desire to enjoy these delightful affairs while yet there is time.

Tomorrow night's programme will be:

*March	Joachim
*Overture, "Chant des Belges"	Litolff
*Waltz, "Rose Leaves"	Waldteufel
Selection, "The Geisha"	Sidney Jones
*Overture, "Astorga"	Abert
*Ballet Music, "Laurian" a Night. b Bacchanale.	Moszkowski
*Waltz, "Donaweibschen"	Strauss
*Kukuska, Russian Dances	Lehar
*Selection "Robert le Diable"	Meyerbeer
*Charme D'Amour	Ronsard
Ride of the Hussars	Spindler
*March, "Cotton King"	Sousa

*First Time.

Promenade Concerts.

That the popularity of the "Pops" continue undiminished is evinced by the attendance this week. Mr. Leo Schulz, as conductor, has made a decidedly favorable impression upon all who have attended. Tonight's program is as follows:

March, "Liberty Bell,"	Sousa
Overture, "Struensee,"	Meyerbeer
Waltz, "Les Patineurs,"	Waldteufel
Selection, "Carmen,"	Bizet
Overture, "Tannhauser,"	Wagner
Melody, "Old Folks at Home."	Bush
For String Orchestra. (First Time.)
Waltz, "Kaiser,"	Strauss
Columbian March,	Schulz
Two Hungarian Dances,	Brahms
Selection, "Tabasco,"	Chadwick
Waltz, "Vienna Beauties,"	Ziehrer
Radetzky March,	Strauss

Tonight's Promenade Concert.

The programme for the promenade concert tonight at Music Hall, Boston, is as follows:

1.	March, "Liberty Bell,"	Sousa.
2.	Overture, "Struensee,"	Meyerbeer.
3.	Waltz, "Les Patineurs,"	Waldteufel.
4.	Selection, "Carmen,"	Bizet.
5.	Overture, "Tannhäuser,"	Wagner.
6.	Melody, "Old Folks at Home," (For string orchestra.)	Bush.
7.	Waltz, "Kaiser,"	Strauss.
8.	Columbian March,	Schulz.
9.	Two Hungarian Dances,	Brahms.
10.	Selection, "Tabasco,"	Chadwick.
11.	Waltz, "Vienna Beauties,"	Ziehrer.
12.	Radetzky March,	Strauss.

For the evening, the "Pop" concert management had engaged the H. M. M. B. A. as their guests. Eighty tables were reserved for the latter in the centre of the big hall and the scene presented was a brilliant one, for gathered round were elegantly dressed women and conventionally dressed men. The orchestra, under the efficient leadership of Leo Schulz, seemed to play with extra vim, and their performances were every one of them encored. The programme was of a novel character, forming an acrostic of the Hotel Men's Mutual Benefit Association, as follows:

Hoch Habsburg March	Kral
Oberon overture	Weber
Thousand and One Nights Waltz	Strauss
Erminie selection	Jacobowski
Lohengrin Finale, Act I.	Wagner
Manfred Entr'acte	Reinecke
Espana	Waldteufel
Nabucodonosor overture	Verdi
Sylvia Ballet Music a. Les Chasseuresses. b. Introduction and Valse Lente. c. Pizzicato Polka. d. Bacchanale.	Delibes
Mikado selection	Suliivan
Bella-Bocca Polka	Waldteufel
Austria March	Zach

Monday evening, at the Pops, when Mr. Leo Schuts made his first appearance as conductor, there was a fine programme, a full house and life and enthusiasm galore. All the parties around the tables seemed to be having a particularly good time and to look especially jolly. There were more bright colors in the costumes of the women than had been noticed the fore, which gave a finishing touch to the generally gala atmosphere.

At one of the tables near the stage were Mr. and Mrs. William Apthorp, with the young French lecturer, M. Deslouis, and Mr. Pierre La Rose of Harvard. Mrs. Apthorp was looking unusually well in black, with bodice of apple green and white lace, and a small toque of violets and black plumes. At Mrs. Gardner's table, the lady herself being absent, were Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond and Miss Anna Lyman.

Mrs. Wirt Dexter, looking distinguished in black, and Mrs. G. H. Windeler. Both had parties, and so did Mrs. Thomas Nowell, who was handsome in black and yellow and a large black hat, with plumes. Mr. and Mrs. I. R. Clark were with a large party, including Mr. A. P. Browne, Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Austin, Miss Maynadier and Mr. Howard Maynadier of Cambridge. Mrs. Clark was beautifully gowned in dark grenadine over cerise, with jewelled passementerie and lace on the bodice.

Others there were Miss Marie Hoffendahl, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Goodwin, Mrs. Richard Arnold, Mr. Atherton, Mr. and Mrs. Lander Bouvè, Mr. Presby Palmer and party, Mr. Zach, the former leader, who was in the front row of the balcony with his wife; Dr. Dixon, Mrs. Phineas Adams, Mr. James Lake, Mr. Walter De Land Came, Mr. Joseph T. Whitney, Mr. C. F. Stratton, Mr. W. R. Thayer, Mr. Von Raalte and many more.

The Promenade Concerts.

Mr. Leo Schulz, the new conducto of the "Pop" concerts, has given some admirable programmes during this, the first week of his leadership of the orchestra, and the delighted audiences have shown their appreciation of his efforts by bestowing most generous applause upon most of the numbers presented. The concerts continue to draw very large audiences, and no doubt will until the end of the season, for they are a most enjoyable entertainment at this time of the year.

THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

Conductor Leo Schulz, who assu the direction of the orchestra last M day, has, during his first week as rector, made many new friends, and programmes have been unusually in esting from the fact that he has in duced in them so many solo numb On Wednesday evening next the p gramme will consist of music by W ner. Thursday evening, the 17th, be given up to patriotic music. For morrow evening the programme will c sist almost wholly of novelties, as f lows:

March	Joach
Overture, "Chant des Belges"	Lit
Waltz, "Rose Leaves"	Waldteu
Selection, "The Geisha"	Sydney J
Overture, "Astorga"	A
Ballet music, "Laurin" a. Night. b. Bacchanale.	Moszkow
Waltz, "Donauweibschen"	Str
Kukuska, Russian dances	Le
Selection, "Robert le Diable"	Meyer
Charme D'Amour	Rons
"Ride of the Hussars"	Spin
March, "Cotton King"	So

THE MUSIC HALL "POPS."

The past week has been a gay and festive one at the Promenade Concerts, the cold and rainy weather keeping people away from the seashore resorts, to the benefit of Music Hall. Enchanting music has kept time to the clink of the beer glass and every evening has witnessed a brilliant and fashionable crowd, Wednesday night being the gala night of the week when four hundred hotel men accompanied by their lady friends honored the "Pops" with their presence. With the warm June days now upon us the coming week at Music Hall will be more attractive than ever, for it is always delightfully cool even in the warmest weather. The following programme has been arranged for tomorrow night.

March	Joachim
Overture, "Chant des Belges"	Litolff
Waltz, "Rose Leaves"	Waldteufel
Selection, "The Geisha"	Sydney Jones
Overture, "Astorga"	Abert
Ballet Music, "Laurin"	Moszkowski
a. Night.
b. Bacchanale.
Waltz, "Donauweibschen"	Strauss
Kukuska. Russian Dances	Lehar
Selection, "Robert le Diable"	Meyerbeer
Charme D'Amour	Ronsard
Ride of the Hussars	Spindler
March, "Cotton King"	Sousa

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

Conductor Leo Schulz, who assumed the direction of the orchestra last Monday, has during his first week made many new friends. He conducts in an authoritative as well as musicianly manner, and his programmes have been unusually interesting from the fact that he has introduced so many solo numbers.

The threatening weather has not apparently kept people away, for each evening has seen a large audience. On Wednesday evening next the programme will consist of music by Wagner, Thursday evening, the 17th, will be patriotic music. For tomorrow (Monday) evening a programme of novelties will be given as follows:

March, Joachim; overture, "Chant des Belges," Litolff; waltz, "Rose Leaves," Waldteufel; selection, "The Geisha," Sydney Jones; overture, "Astorga," Abert; ballet music, "Laurin," Moszkowski (a) night, (b) bacchanale; waltz, "Donauweibschen," Strauss; Kukuska, Russian dances, Lehar; selection, "Robert le Diable," Meyerbeer; Charme D'Amour, Ronsard; ride of the hussars, Spindler; march, "Cotton King," Sousa.

—The Pop concerts opened brilliantly Monday night, with an unusual number in attendance, to give a cordial greeting to the new leader, Mr Leo Schulz. Mrs Thomas Nowell of Commonwealth av chaperoned a large party of young people, which included her daughter. Mrs Nowell wore a bodice of buttercup yellow, adorned with lace and jewels, and a becoming bonnet of black and white touched up with jet. Adjoining their tables was one occupied by Mr and Mrs Apthorp, the latter in a blue flowered silk and a toque of violets and foliage. They had many callers during the evening. Near the Hamilton pl entrance was a party chaperoned by Mrs Wirt Dexter of Raleigh st, in a rich black gown, heavily studded with jet, her hair topped off with a butterfly bonnet of jetted lace. Opposite Mrs Dexter was her daughter, in black, relieved by a pearl colored vest, covered with jetted tulle and a small toque, in which white prevailed. Miss Simpkins, who is their guest at present, was in the party, and several young men. Elsewhere were noted: Col Stevens, Mrs Phinehas Adams, Mr James H. Lake, Mr and Mrs Arthur Richmond, Mr and Mrs John D. Gilman, Mrs Alice E. Cram, Mr Pierre L. Rose, Mr Walter Deland Came and Mr Henry Daniels.

—Dr and Mrs Galvin, Miss Laura Wood, Miss Mary Lugrin, Mr Max Zach, Mr Cartaret Fenno, Mr Matthew Luce, with Miss Pauline Shaw, Mrs Irene C. Inman, Mr Frederick St J. Keeler, Mr Clement I. Walker and Mr Thomas C. Bell of New York, and Mr George W. Proctor were in attendance at the Pop concert Tuesday evening.

THE MUSIC HALL "POPS."

The past week has been a gay and festive one at the Promenade Concerts, the cold and rainy weather keeping people away from the seashore resorts, to the benefit of Music Hall. Enchanting music has kept time to the clink of the beer glass and every evening has witnessed a brilliant and fashionable crowd, Wednesday night being the gala night of the week when four hundred hotel men accompanied by their lady friends honored the "Pops" with their presence. With the warm June days now upon us the coming week at Music Hall will be more attractive than ever, for it is always delightfully cool even in the warmest weather. The following programme has been arranged for tomorrow night.

March	Joachim
Overture, "Chant des Belges"	Litolff
Waltz, "Rose Leaves"	Waldteufel
Selection, "The Geisha"	Sydney Jones
Overture, "Astorga"	Abert
Ballet Music, "Laurin"	Moszkowski
a. Night.
b. Bacchanale.
Waltz, "Donauweibschen"	Strauss
Kukuska. Russian Dances	Lehar
Selection, "Robert le Diable"	Meyerbeer
Charme D'Amour	Ronsard
Ride of the Hussars	Spindler
March, "Cotton King"	Sousa

[illegible] hall [illegible] continues to evidence the popularity of these enjoyable musical evenings which have become so great a factor in amusements in this [illegible] Schulz has arranged admirable programmes and as the season draws to a [illegible] "special" nights will begin to be [illegible]. Next Wednesday evening Wagner's compositions will make up the selections, and Thursday the numbers will be patriotic and [illegible] with Bunker Hill day.

Tomorrow evening 10 selections will be played for the first times at the concerts. The program is arranged as follows:

March	Joachim
Overture, Chant des Belges	Litolff
Waltz, Rose Leaves	Waldteufel
Selection, The Geisha	Sydney Jones
Overture, Astorga	Abert
Ballet music, Laurin	Moszkowski
Waltz, Donauweibschen	Strauss
Kukuska, Russian dances	Lehar
Selection, Robert le Diable	Meyerbeer
Charme d'Amour	Ronsard
Ride of the Hussars	Spindler
March, Cotton King	Sousa

The programmes at the Pops this week have been specially appreciated by the large number attending, and it is gratifying to see what a success Mr. Schutz is making. He is very magnetic, and everything moves with a swing and go which is inspiring. Thursday night Mr. Schutz played a solo on the 'cello accompanied by Mr. Schuecker on the harp, which aroused the enthusiasm of the audience to a wild pitch. One could have heard a pin drop all over the house while the playing went on. Not a cork popped nor a match scratched, and even the waiters seemed to stand spellbound in the aisles. That was the best triumph of all!

At the Pops Friday evening a notable figure with a party at the tables was ex-Secretary Olney. Miss Pauline Shaw had a number of young people with a chaperone, and Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Dixey, Police Commissioner Robert F. Clark, Mr. Charles Sampson, Matthew Luce, Jr., all with more or less guests, Mr. Joseph Bigelow, Mr. Frank Chase, Mr. Pierson Beebe, and Miss Dupee and party were also there.

Music Hall Promenades.

The sixth and last week but two of the promenade concerts began in Music hall last evening with a "novelty" program. The season will close July 3, and up to that time conductor Schulz will make a feature of special programs, the next one being tomorrow evening, when Wagner's compositions will comprise the principal part of the selections. This evening's program will be as follows:

Persian march	Strauss
Overture, Poet and Peasant	Suppe
Waltz, The Kiss	Strauss
Selection, Robin Hood	De Koven
Overture, Rienzi	Wagner
Chanson Triste (For string orchestra)	Tschaikowsky
Selection, Traviata	Verdi
Waltz, A Toi	Waldteufel
Danse Macabre	Saint-Saens
Selection, Prince Ananias	Herbert
Spanish serenade	Metra
Teufels march	Suppe

Thursday, Bunker Hill day, the program will comprise "patriotic" selections and "Harvard night" will be appropriately celebrated Tuesday, June 22.

Promenade Concerts.

That the popularity of the "Pops" continue undiminished is evinced by the attendance this week. Mr. Leo Schulz, as conductor, has made a decidedly favorable impression upon all who have attended. Tonight's program is as follows:

March, "Liberty Bell,"	Sous.
Overture, "Struensee,"	Meyerbeer
Waltz, "Les Patineurs,"	Waldteufel
Selection, "Carmen,"	Bizet
Overture, "Tannhauser,"	Wagner
Melody, "Old Folks at Home,"	Bush
For String Orchestra. (First Time.)
Waltz, "Kaiser,"	Strauss
Columbian March,	Schulz
Two Hungarian Dances,	Brahms
Selection, "Tabasco,"	Chadwick
Waltz, "Vienna Beauties,"	Ziehrer
Radetzky March,	Strauss

—Hon Richard Olney and party, Dr and Mrs Henry H. Haskell, Miss Pauline Shaw and friends, Mr Haughton and party, Miss Florence V. Robinson, Mr and Mrs Elisha James, Mr Franklin Snow and Mr Wardwell and friends were among those at the Pop concert Friday evening.

Wednesday night at the Pops over 400 members of the Hotel Members' Association were entertained. They expressed themselves more than pleased with their evening. The seal of the society was reproduced on the programmes with the badge worn at this year's convention, a very pretty attention of Manager Comee's.

Great Crowd of [illegible]

Their Friends in [illegible]

Last night was the [illegible] son at the pops—Harvard [illegible] all Manager Comee, Conductor Leo Schulz, 400 or 500 students, any number of people not students, but in perfect sympathy with the occasion, and a brilliant display of colors everywhere could make it.

Music Hall could not quite rid itself of its staid and dignified habit, but gorgeous red lights, Harvard flags and the colors the people wore, went a long way toward making the place look positively gay.

"Harvard Night" was written in glowing red light over the entrance doors in Hamilton place. At the back of the stage "Harvard" was spelled in great crimson letters on a field of white, and the familiar crimson flags with the white H in the centre were hung everywhere around the hall. At 9 o'clock every reserved seat at the tables and in the balcony had been sold, and nearly every seat was occupied; and the hall in every part was massed with colors.

The students all displayed the crimson somehow, but the greatest show of it was made by the women in the audience. The red hats of the earlier season were worn by many and there were red waists, red fans, red scarfs and handkerchiefs in nearly every group. Not a few of the women wore dresses all of red. Of these, the most effective was the gown of a girl who sat at a table near the balcony rail, near neighbor to a girl in Yale blue.

The glee club was at the Pop, of course, and tables were reserved for the members of the Crimson editorial board. Many of the clubs and societies at Harvard also had tables of their own. But Harvard men of today were not the only ones inside the rail. Many old-time Harvard men were there, and they were as enthusiastic as any of the others. There were several Harvard names on the programme, and an excellent programme it was. From the Bruguiere march, "University," with which the concert opened, every number was encored. The "Hamlet" selection, composed by Atherton, a Harvard man, and given by the Hasty Pudding Club in 1893, was demanded over and over again.

When the American fantasy was concluded with the "Star Spangled Banner" there was quite an exciting scene. As if by prearrangement, there was a general uprising, and the audience, standing, joined with the Harvard glee club in singing the chorus, which was followed by cheer after cheer. A waltz, "Bacchante," was the next number, and as Mr. Morse, the composer, is a Harvard man, it was received with cheers, which, however, were cut short, for "Fair Harvard" was to follow it, and everybody wanted to sing "Fair Harvard."

With the members of the glee club leading the way, there was a grand rush for the stage. In a few moments all that could be seen of the conductor was the hand that held the baton. And so "Fair Harvard" was sung.

The cheers that followed shook the building. There was another demonstration when "America" was rendered by the orchestra.

HARVARD NIGHT.

Everything Was Crimson at Music Hall Pop.

SIX COMPOSERS ALUMNI.

Glee Club Climbed Upon the Platform and Sang With the Orchestra—Programme of Black and Red—Great Enthusiasm.

"Fair Harvard" was sung by hundreds of voices with great enthusiasm at the Pops last night. It was Harvard night, and everything had been done to make the boys feel at home. "Harvard Night" was inscribed over the Hamilton place entrance in burning red, a red light welcomed the collegians on the Winter street entrance, the waiters wore pinks of crimson hue, Harvard flags were distributed around Music Hall, and last but not least, the programme was printed black on red.

Mr. Schulz also had remembered his guests, and six of the twelve composers whose works were played last night, are Harvard men, not counting "Fair Harvard," the composer of which is not known, but who, presumably, was also a fair son of Harvard.

The attendance was very large. Every seat on the floor was taken, and people stood up in every nook and corner. The galleries were equally well filled and the greatest enthusiasm prevailed, reaching its climax when members of the Glee Club climbed the platform and accompanied by the orchestra, the strains of "Fair Harvard" rang out. The boys nearly shouted themselves hoarse, and were it not for the law requiring the hall to be closed at 11 o'clock, they would be there yet, singing "Fair Harvard."

Those of the Glee Club present, as well as the editors of the Harvard Crimson, were guests of Mr. Fred R. Comee, the assistant manager, who was a busy man last night, flitting to and fro. Mr. Ellis is away in Europe, and so the whole arrangements and the management of the affair rested upon the shoulders of Mr. Comee, who acquitted himself to the satisfaction of everybody, and Harvard [illegible] to his efforts [illegible]

College Refrain.

A lurid hue pervaded [illegible] Music hall, last evening, when [illegible] ular annual "Pop" Harvard [illegible] given, with an attendance that [illegible] jammed the place to suffocation.

Everywhere fiery red met the eye of the spectator, from the paper on which the programs were printed, the shirt bosoms of some of the students, and the waists and hats of the pretty young women, to the banners bearing Harvard's initials that hung all about the walls, and even the little "petticoats" that adorned the half dozen chandeliers that hang about the stage. Even the electric light globes were of rosy hue, and outside, on the Hamilton pl side of the building, the word "Harvard" was displayed in letters of ruddy fire.

Mr Comee, who in the absence abroad of manager Ellis, has had the entire direction of the "pops" this season, really spread himself for the occasion, and the success that rewarded his efforts appeared in the enthusiastic spirit that prevailed all the evening.

Harvard was in the van from first to last. About 200 of the boys were on hand when the doors were opened, in order to have first pick of the tables, and they continued to come in droves up to 8.

This was the program:

March, University	Bruguiere
College overture	Moses
Waltz, Espana	Waldteufel
Selection, Sphinx	Thomson
Academic overture	Brahms
Theme and variations	Haydn
Selection, Hamlet	Atherton-Abbott
(Produced by the Hasty Pudding club, 1893)
Waltz, Blue Danube	Strauss
American fantasy	Bendix
Waltz, Bacchante	Morse
Fair Harvard
March, Casino	Belisle

There were cheers after nearly every one of the numbers, the climax being reached when the orchestra struck the first strains of "The Star Spangled Banner." Almost as one man, the students jumped to their feet, followed by the remainder of the audience, while waving hats and handkerchiefs, keeping time to the air, testified to the emotion that swayed the entire assemblage.

An uproarious demonstration followed, which was intensified after the orchestra gave for an encore "Up the Street" march. Again and again the spirited march was given in response to irresistible encores, interspersed with Harvard yells and cheers.

When the time came for the singing of "Fair Harvard," the limited available space on the stage was quickly filled by members of the Harvard glee club, who led in the refrain, which was joined in by the larger part of the audience.

For the last selection "America" was given, nearly everybody singing with great gusto and bringing to a close what proved to be not only "Harvard night," but a notably patriotic night as well.

Mr Schulz, the new conductor, was palpably a great favorite with the audience, and the happy smiles that overspread his face during the evening were fully justified.

A CRIMSON RETREAT.

Direful Calamity That Befell 200 Young Men Who, by Chance, After a Charge, Became Separated From Their Voices.

It was 10.40 o'clock by the sober-faced timepiece that leans against the first balcony in Music Hall. There were people everywhere, from the feet of the orchestra down stairs to the feet of Apollo, who presides over the second balcony. Most of the women were adorned with a bit of crimson. Some, even, wore all crimson—dresses and blushes. Most of the men had a bit of crimson, too—a hat-band or a necktie. All this color seemed to reflect itself upon the oratorio-saturated walls.

Here and there was a flag with a big H staring out from it. The electric lamps over the orchestra wore crimson riding hoods. The musicians were smiling expectantly, like men listening to a good joke.

All at once the band began to play that many-named tune that is known across the Charles as "Fair Harvard." Simultaneously two flying wedges of students started toward the conductor, one from either side of the stage. That was all right. It was a part of the program. But it was not written that all the enemies of the Fogg Art Museum and all the worshipers of Charles Eliot Norton should follow after. They did, writing or no writing. They made for the stand as they will make for the tree tomorrow afternoon, impetuously, eagerly, irresistibly. The second violins protested. They were swept into Charybdis. The first violins strove to escape the rout. They were swallowed by Scylla. Some of the volunteers had obviously been visiting; others had been practising to down Yale this afternoon. They shoved along boldly, just as though they were rushing to or from chapel. When they faced the audience, however, their spirits fell down, ran away, quit. It was time to begin. Where were the bold voices of the quondam bold students? Gone?

Mr. Schulz swung his heavyweight right arm as though he were competing in a 16-pound hammer contest. The musicians poised their art on a chord. This was the cue. Out rolled the words, "Fair Harvard, thy sons," and so forth—out from the audience [illegible] wouldn't have [illegible] modern Grecian [illegible] were members of the [illegible] Club. The two hun[illegible] their mouths convul[illegible] their fingers.

It was a retreat [illegible] far. And [illegible]

THE MUSIC HALL "POPS."

The past week has been a gay and festive one at the Promenade Concerts, the cold and rainy weather keeping people away from the seashore resorts, to the benefit of Music Hall. Enchanting music has kept time to the clink of the beer glass and every evening has witnessed a brilliant and fashionable crowd, Wednesday night being the gala night of the week when four hundred hotel men accompanied by their lady friends honored the "Pops" with their presence. With the warm June days now upon us the coming week at Music Hall will be more attractive than ever, for it is always delightfully cool even in the warmest weather. The following programme has been arranged for tomorrow night.

March	Joachim
Overture, "Chant des Belges"	Litolff
Waltz, "Rose Leaves"	Waldteufel
Selection, "The Geisha"	Sydney Jones
Overture, "Astorga"	Abert
Ballet Music, "Laurin"	Moszkowski
a. Night.
b. Bacchanale.
Waltz, "Donauweibschen"	Strauss
Kukuska. Russian Dances	Lehar
Selection, "Robert le Diable"	Meyerbeer
Charme D'Amour	Ronsard
Ride of the Hussars	Spindler
March, "Cotton King"	Sousa

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

Conductor Leo Schulz, who assumed the direction of the orchestra last Monday, has during his first week made many new friends. He conducts in an authoritative as well as musicianly manner. and his programmes have been unusually interesting from the fact that he has introduced so many solo numbers.

The threatening weather has not apparently kept people away, for each evening has seen a large audience. On Wednesday evening next the programme will consist of music by Wagner, Thursday evening, the 17th, will be patriotic music. For tomorrow (Monday) evening a programme of novelties will be given as follows:

March, Joachim; overture, "Chant des Belges," Litolff; waltz, "Rose Leaves," Waldteufel; selection, "The Geisha," Sydney Jones; overture, "Astorga," Abert; ballet music, "Laurin," Moszkowski (a) night, (b) bacchanale; waltz, "Donauweibschen," Strauss; kukuska, Russian dances, Lehar; selection, "Robert le Diable," Meyerbeer; Charme D'Amour, Ronsard; ride of the hussars, Spindler; march, "Cotton King," Sousa.

—The Pop concerts opened brilliantly Monday night, with an unusual number in attendance, to give a cordial greeting to the new leader, Mr Leo Schulz. Mrs Thomas Nowell of Commonwealth av chaperoned a large party of young people, which included her daughter. Mrs Nowell wore a bodice of buttercup yellow, adorned with lace and jewels, and a becoming bonnet of black and white touched up with jet. Adjoining their tables was one occupied by Mr and Mrs Apthorp, the latter in a blue flowered silk and a toque of violets and foliage. They had many callers during the evening. Near the Hamilton pl entrance was a party chaperoned by Mrs Wirt Dexter of Raleigh st, in a rich black gown, heavily studded with jet, her hair topped off with a butterfly bonnet of jetted lace. Opposite Mrs Dexter was her daughter, in black, relieved by a pearl colored vest, covered with jetted tulle and a small toque, in which white prevailed. Miss Simpkins, who is their guest at present, was in the party, and several young men. Elsewhere were noted: Col Stevens, Mrs Phinehas Adams, Mr James H. Lake, Mr and Mrs Arthur Richmond, Mr and Mrs John D. Gilman, Mrs Alice E. Cram, Mr Pierre L. Rose, Mr Walter Deland Came and Mr Henry Daniels.

—Dr and Mrs Galvin, Miss Laura Wood, Miss Mary Lugrin, Mr Max Zach, Mr Cartaret Fenno, Mr Matthew Luce, with Miss Pauline Shaw, Mrs Irene C. Inman, Mr Frederick St J. Keeler, Mr Clement I. Walker and Mr Thomas C. Bell of New York, and Mr George W. Proctor were in attendance at the Pop concert Tuesday evening.

THE MUSIC HALL "POPS."

The past week has been a gay and festive one at the Promenade Concerts, the cold and rainy weather keeping people away from the seashore resorts, to the benefit of Music Hall. Enchanting music has kept time to the clink of the beer glass and every evening has witnessed a brilliant and fashionable crowd, Wednesday night being the gala night of the week when four hundred hotel men accompanied by their lady friends honored the "Pops" with their presence. With the warm June days now upon us the coming week at Music Hall will be more attractive than ever, for it is always delightfully cool even in the warmest weather. The following programme has been arranged for tomorrow night.

March	Joachim
Overture, "Chant des Belges"	Litolff
Waltz, "Rose Leaves"	Waldteufel
Selection, "The Geisha"	Sydney Jones
Overture, "Astorga"	Abert
Ballet Music, "Laurin"	Moszkowski
a. Night.
b. Bacchanale.
Waltz, "Donauweibschen"	Strauss
Kukuska. Russian Dances	Lehar
Selection, "Robert le Diable"	Meyerbeer
Charme D'Amour	Ronsard
Ride of the Hussars	Spindler
March, "Cotton King"	Sousa

Music Hall Promenades.

The attendance at the Music hall promenade concerts continues to evidence the popularity of these enjoyable musical evenings which have become so great a factor in summer amusements in this city. Mr Schulz has arranged admirable programs, and as the season draws to a close "special" nights will begin to be frequent. Next Wednesday evening Wagner's compositions will make up the selections, and Thursday the numbers will be patriotic and [illegible] with Bunker Hill day.

Tomorrow evening 10 selections will be played for the first times at the concerts. The program is arranged as follows:

March	Joach
Overture, Chant des Belges	Lit
Waltz, Rose Leaves	Waldteu
Selection, The Geisha	Sydney Jones
Overture, Astorga	Abert
Ballet music, Laurin	Moszkowski
Waltz, Donauweibschen	Strauss
Kukuska, Russian dances	Lehar
Selection, Robert le Diable	Meyerbeer
Charme d'Amour	Ronsard
Ride of the Hussars	Spindler
March, Cotton King	Sousa

The programmes at the Pops this week have been specially appreciated by the large number attending, and it is gratifying to see what a success Mr. Schutz is making. He is very magnetic, and everything moves with a swing and go which is inspiring. Thursday night Mr. Schutz played a solo on the 'cello accompanied by Mr. Schuecker on the harp, which aroused the enthusiasm of the audience to a wild pitch. One could have heard a pin drop all over the house while the playing went on. Not a cork popped nor a match scratched, and even the waiters seemed to stand spellbound in the aisles. That was the best triumph of all!

At the Pops Friday evening a notable figure with a party at the tables was ex-Secretary Olney. Miss Pauline Shaw had a number of young people with a chaperone, and Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Dixey, Police Commissioner Robert F. Clark, Mr. Charles Sampson, Matthew Luce, Jr., all with more or less guests, Mr. Joseph Bigelow, Mr. Frank Chase, Mr. Pierson Beebe, and Miss Dupee and party were also there.

Music Hall Promenades.

The sixth and last week but two of the promenade concerts began in Music hall last evening with a "novelty" program. The season will close July 3, and up to that time conductor Schulz will make a feature of special programs, the next one being tomorrow evening, when Wagner's compositions will comprise the principal part of the selections. This evening's program will be as follows:

Persian march	Strauss
Overture, Poet and Peasant	Suppe
Waltz, The Kiss	Strauss
Selection, Robin Hood	De Koven
Overture, Rienzi	Wagner
Chanson Triste (For string orchestra)	Tschaikowsky
Selection, Traviata	Verdi
Waltz, A Toi	Waldteufel
Danse Macabre	Saint-Saens
Selection, Prince Ananias	Herbert
Spanish serenade	Metra
Teufels march	Suppe

Thursday, Bunker Hill day, the program will comprise "patriotic" selections and "Harvard night" will be appropriately celebrated Tuesday, June 22.

Promenade Concerts.

That the popularity of the "Pops" continue undiminished is evinced by the attendance this week. Mr. Leo Schulz, as conductor, has made a decidedly favorable impression upon all who have attended. Tonight's program is as follows:

March, "Liberty Bell,"	Sous.
Overture, "Struensee,"	Meyerbeer
Waltz, "Les Patineurs,"	Waldteufel
Selection, "Carmen,"	Bizet
Overture, "Tannhauser,"	Wagner
Melody, "Old Folks at Home."	Bush
For String Orchestra. (First Time.)
Waltz, "Kaiser,"	Strauss
Columbian March,	Schulz
Two Hungarian Dances,	Brahms
Selection, "Tabasco,"	Chadwick
Waltz, "Vienna Beauties,"	Ziehrer
Radetzky March,	Strauss

—Hon Richard Olney and party, Dr and Mrs Henry H. Haskell, Miss Pauline Shaw and friends, Mr Haughton and party, Miss Florence V. Robinson, Mr and Mrs Elisha James, Mr Franklin Snow and Mr Wardwell and friends were among those at the Pop concert Friday evening.

Wednesday night at the Pops over 400 members of the Hotel Members' Association were entertained. They expressed themselves more than pleased with their evening. The seal of the society was reproduced on the programmes with the badge worn at this year's convention, a very pretty attention of Manager Comee's.

"HARVARD NIGHT" AT THE Great Crowd of Enthusiastic Students and Their Friends in Music Hall.

Last night was the night of the crimson at the pops—Harvard night, for all Manager Comee, Conductor Leo Schulz, 400 or 500 students, any number of people not students, but in perfect sympathy with the occasion, and a brilliant display of colors everywhere could make it.

Music Hall could not quite rid itself of its staid and dignified habit, but gorgeous red lights, Harvard flags and the colors the people wore, went a long way toward making the place look positively gay.

"Harvard Night" was written in glowing red light over the entrance doors in Hamilton place. At the back of the stage "Harvard" was spelled in great crimson letters on a field of white, and the familiar crimson flags with the white H in the centre were hung everywhere around the hall. At 9 o'clock every reserved seat at the tables and in the balcony had been sold, and nearly every seat was occupied; and the hall in every part was massed with colors.

The students all displayed the crimson somehow, but the greatest show of it was made by the women in the audience. The red hats of the earlier season were worn by many. and there were red waists, red fans, red scarfs and handkerchiefs in nearly every group. Not a few of the women wore dresses all of red. Of these, the most effective was the gown of a girl who sat at a table near the balcony rail, near neighbor to a girl in Yale blue.

The glee club was at the Pop, of course, and tables were reserved for the members of the Crimson editorial board. Many of the clubs and societies at Harvard also had tables of their own. But Harvard men of today were not the only ones inside the rail. Many old-time Harvard men were there, and they were as enthusiastic as any of the others. There were several Harvard names on the programme, and an excellent programme it was. From the Bruguiere march, "University," with which the concert opened, every number was encored. The "Hamlet" selection, composed by Atherton, a Harvard man, and given by the Hasty Pudding Club in 1893, was demanded over and over again.

When the American fantasy was concluded with the "Star Spangled Banner" there was quite an exciting scene. As if by prearrangement, there was a general uprising, and the audience, standing, joined with the Harvard glee club in singing the chorus, which was followed by cheer after cheer. A waltz, "Bacchante," was the next number, and as Mr. Morse, the composer, is a Harvard man, it was received with cheers, which, however, were cut short, for "Fair Harvard" was to follow it, and everybody wanted to sing "Fair Harvard."

With the members of the glee club leading the way, there was a grand rush for the stage. In a few moments all that could be seen of the conductor was the hand that held the baton. And so "Fair Harvard" was sung.

The cheers that followed shook the building. There was another demonstration when "America" was rendered by the orchestra.

HARVARD NIGHT.

Everything Was Crimson at Music Hall Pop.

SIX COMPOSERS ALUMNI.

Glee Club Climbed Upon the Platform and Sang With the Orchestra—Programme of Black and Red—Great Enthusiasm.

"Fair Harvard" was sung by hundreds of voices with great enthusiasm at the Pops last night. It was Harvard night, and everything had been done to make the boys feel at home. "Harvard Night" was inscribed over the Hamilton place entrance in burning red, a red light welcomed the collegians on the Winter street entrance, the waiters wore pinks of crimson hue, Harvard flags were distributed around Music Hall, and last but not least, the programme was printed black on red.

Mr. Schulz also had remembered his guests, and six of the twelve composers whose works were played last night, are Harvard men, not counting "Fair Harvard," the composer of which is not known, but who, presumably, was also a fair son of Harvard.

The attendance was very large. Every seat on the floor was taken, and people stood up in every nook and corner. The galleries were equally well filled and the greatest enthusiasm prevailed, reaching its climax when members of the Glee Club climbed the platform and accompanied by the orchestra, the strains of "Fair Harvard" rang out. The boys nearly shouted themselves hoarse, and were it not for the law requiring the hall to be closed at 11 o'clock, they would be there yet, singing "Fair Harvard."

Those of the Glee Club present, as well as the editors of the Harvard Crimson, were guests of Mr. Fred R. Comee, the assistant manager, who was a busy man last night, flitting to and fro. Mr. Ellis is away in Europe, and so the whole arrangements and the management of the affair rested upon the shoulders of Mr. Comee, who acquitted himself to the satisfaction of everybody, and Harvard Night, thanks to his efforts, was a pronounced success.

HARVARD NIGHT AT TH

Atmosphere Was Lurid and Vast [illegible] Most Patriotic, All Joining in [illegible] College Refrain.

A lurid hue pervaded the interior of Music hall, last evening, where the regular annual "Pop" Harvard night was given, with an attendance that fairly jammed the place to suffocation.

Everywhere fiery red met the eye of the spectator, from the paper on which the programs were printed, the shirt bosoms of some of the students, and the waists and hats of the pretty young women, to the banners bearing Harvard's initials that hung all about the walls, and even the little "petticoats" that adorned the half dozen chandeliers that hang about the stage. Even the electric light globes were of rosy hue, and outside, on the Hamilton pl side of the building, the word "Harvard" was displayed in letters of ruddy fire.

Mr Comee, who in the absence abroad of manager Ellis, has had the entire direction of the "pops" this season, really spread himself for the occasion, and the success that rewarded his efforts appeared in the enthusiastic spirit that prevailed all the evening.

Harvard was in the van from first to last. About 200 of the boys were on hand when the doors were opened, in order to have first pick of the tables, and they continued to come in droves up to 8.

This was the program:

March, University	Bruguiere
College overture	Moses
Waltz, Espana	Waldteufel
Selection, Sphinx	Thomson
Academic overture	Brahms
Theme and variations	Haydn
Selection, Hamlet	Atherton-Abbott
(Produced by the Hasty Pudding club, 1893)
Waltz, Blue Danube	Strauss
American fantasy	Bendix
Waltz, Bacchante	Morse
Fair Harvard
March, Casino	Belisle

There were cheers after nearly every one of the numbers, the climax being reached when the orchestra struck the first strains of "The Star Spangled Banner." Almost as one man, the students jumped to their feet, followed by the remainder of the audience, while waving hats and handkerchiefs, keeping time to the air, testified to the emotion that swayed the entire assemblage.

An uproarious demonstration followed, which was intensified after the orchestra gave for an encore "Up the Street" march. Again and again the spirited march was given in response to irresistible encores, interspersed with Harvard yells and cheers.

When the time came for the singing of "Fair Harvard," the limited available space on the stage was quickly filled by members of the Harvard glee club, who led in the refrain, which was joined in by the larger part of the audience.

For the last selection "America" was given, nearly everybody singing with great gusto and bringing to a close what proved to be not only "Harvard night," but a notably patriotic night as well.

Mr Schulz, the new conductor, was palpably a great favorite with the audience, and the happy smiles that overspread his face during the evening were fully justified.

A CRIMSON RETREAT.

Direful Calamity That Befell 200 Young Men Who, by Chance, After a Charge, Became Separated From Their Voices.

It was 10.40 o'clock by the sober-faced timepiece that leans against the first balcony in Music Hall. There were people everywhere, from the feet of the orchestra down stairs to the feet of Apollo, who presides over the second balcony. Most of the women were adorned with a bit of crimson. Some, even, wore all crimson—dresses and blushes. Most of the men had a bit of crimson, too—a hat-band or a necktie. All this color seemed to reflect itself upon the oratorio-saturated walls.

Here and there was a flag with a big H staring out from it. The electric lamps over the orchestra wore crimson riding hoods. The musicians were smiling expectantly, like men listening to a good joke.

All at once the band began to play that many-named tune that is known across the Charles as "Fair Harvard." Simultaneously two flying wedges of students started toward the conductor, one from either side of the stage. That was all right. It was a part of the program. But it was not written that all the enemies of the Fogg Art Museum and all the worshipers of Charles Eliot Norton should follow after. They did, writing or no writing. They made for the stand as they will make for the tree tomorrow afternoon, impetuously, eagerly, irresistibly. The second violins protested. They were swept into Charybdis. The first violins strove to escape the rout. They were swallowed by Scylla. Some of the volunteers had obviously been visiting; others had been practising to down Yale this afternoon. They shoved along boldly, just as though they were rushing to or from chapel. When they faced the audience, however, their spirits fell down, ran away, quit. It was time to begin. Where were the bold voices of the quondam bold students? Gone?

Mr. Schulz swung his heavyweight right arm as though he were competing in a 16-pound hammer contest. The musicians poised their art on a chord. This was the cue. Out rolled the words, "Fair Harvard, thy sons," and so forth—out from the audience. The men who sang from the platform wouldn't have made up a company of modern Grecian heroes. These men were members of the Harvard Glee Club. The two hundred others opened their mouths convulsively and twitched their fingers.

It was a retreat, a bold, ignominious retreat. And it was Harvard Night at the Pops, too!

Boston Transcript
WEDNESDAY, JUNE 23, 1897

FAIR HARVARD AT MUSIC HALL.

Last Night's Pop Concert a Special Compliment to College Men and Their Friends.

All about Music Hall, indoors and out, was fairly bathed in a glowing red light last evening, when the "Pop" concert was arranged especially in compliment to the students who form so large a part of the audiences throughout the season. Over the entrance in Hamilton place large letters in red electric lights shone out with especial brilliancy, displaying "Harvard Night" to advantage because the usual white lights there were turned off to heighten the effect of the red ones. Inside, everything was in keeping with the spirit of compliment to Harvard. Manager F. R. Comee, who is himself a Harvard man, had the programmes printed on a heavy crimson paper, and red globes inside the hall, crimson silk skirts on the "ballet" lights over the heads of the musicians, a large field of white with "Harvard" in crimson letters, and quantities of flags of a similar color, with the familiar "H" in white, placed all about the hall, added to the general warm effect. Scattered through the hall and in the two balconies, all parts of which were crowded with people, were scores of gowns, pretty hats and the like in the college color, the wearers of which had shown this compliment to their friends among the students. Nearly every student, and there were several hundreds of them, wore his college color in his scarf, his hat band, or in a boutonnière. All the students brought their class yells with them, and the rest of the audience encouraged them in giving these ear-piercing cries.

Five of the twelve numbers on the programme were by Harvard composers, and, when played, they were given a great reception. One of the striking features of the evening was the playing of the "American Fantasy" by Bendix. The old familiar airs and darky melodies so cleverly interwoven brought forth rounds of applause, and when the "Star-Spangled Banner" was reached, with one impulse of patriotic feeling the immense audience stood up and had a share in the hymn, amid the cheering of those who could not sing. After this, "Up the Street" was given as an encore, and every Harvard man present, as well as hundreds of others, whistled this through as the musicians played it. It is a piece which, with the fantasy, vies in popularity this season with the famous waltz, "Grubenlichter." One of the closing numbers was "Fair Harvard," and, by invitation of Mr. Comee, the Harvard Glee Club and the other students crowed on and about the stage and sang with a right good will the favorite old song. Another enthusiastic call from all parts of the hall for "Up the Street" again was graciously responded to by Mr. Schulz, the conductor. "America" was the last number of the evening, and almost everyone of the big audience joined in singing this hymn as people began to leave. No small part of the success of the evening was due to the courtesy of the conductor responding to the demand for encores, and the calmness with which he led his men through the music, while cheers and enthusiasm were rivalling the efforts of the musicans.

Tuesday, June 29, will also be a big Harvard night at the promenade concert of that evening. So many college men will be in the city for commencement that many renewals of friendships will be made at Music Hall. Several classes which do not dine this year have planned to spend the evening at the concert. The class of '87 has engaged twenty tables, and the class of '90 has secured seventeen, with numbers of tables to be reserved for smaller parties of Harvard men in classes or otherwise. A specially arranged programme in their honor will be given.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The closing week of the "Pops" will be a memorable tone. Unqualified is the praise which the series as a whole reflects upon Mr. F. R. Comee, under whose immediate supervision their management has been.

Tomorrow night Conductor Leo Schulz has arranged a programme composed of selections from the operas produced by the Cadets; Tuesday will be Harvard graduates' night, and Wednesday Wagner night, with the first appearance of Master Willie Troupe, violinist.

The selections for tomorrow night are:

March, "Excelsior, Jr."	Tracey
Overture, "Tabasco"	Chadwick
Waltz, "Jack and the Beanstalk"	Sloane
Selection, "Simple Simon"	Tracey
Overture, "Light Cavalry"	Suppe
Negro Episode	Gilbert
Waltz, "Artist's Dream"	Liebig
Selection, "1492"	Pflueger
Overture, "Felsenmühle"	Reissiger
Waltz, "1492"	Pflueger
"Ride of the Hussars"	Spindler
March, "Tabasco"	Chadwick

Prof. and Mrs. Carl Baermann were prominent among those about the tables at the "Pops" Tuesday night. Mr. Vernon Hall, Miss Sears, Mr. Bertram Lord, Mr. Albert Lord, Mr. T. S. Wood, Mr. Harry Nichols, Miss May Greenleaf and Mr. Robert Chester were also there with parties more or less large.

—The enthusiasm of Tuesday evening, Harvard night at the promenade concert in Music hall, far surpassed that of any similar occasion since the concerts began. Mr F. R. Comee, assistant manager, himself a graduate of Harvard, class of 75, entered into the spirit of the evening con amore, and it was due to his taste, skill and untiring energy that the hall was so beautifully decorated with the Harvard color, and that the tout ensemble was so complimentary to his alma mater. The singing of the "Star Spangled Banner" and "America" by the vast audience, which filled every seat in the balconies and on the floor, was inspiring to a degree, but the climax was reached when by the invitation of Mr Comee the students occupied every available inch of the platform and sang "Fair Harvard," accompanied by the orchestra. The pennants hanging from the balconies, "Harvard" in crimson letters back of the musicians, crimson silk skirts around the lights above the stage, the programs on heavy crimson paper, and many of the hats and toilets of the ladies in the same color, all added to the general beautiful effect. Noticed on the floor were Mrs Henry L. Higginson, with a party of 12 young people occupying two tables. The young ladies were daintily gowned, and all wore clusters of crimson roses at the corsage, the gentlemen wearing boutonnieres of the same color; Mr Morton Plant with friends, Dr Bush with another party, Mr and Mrs George W. Simmons and Miss Marion Simmons, who have only recently returned from a year abroad, Mr Pelham Dodd and Mrs John L. Gardner, having Mr Clayton Johns at her table and wearing a pretty summer toilet of pale blue, with bertha of white lace, and white straw hat with white lace trimmings.

—Tuesday will be a big Harvard night at the Pop concert. So many college men will be in the city for commencement that many renewals of friendships will be made at Music hall. Several classes which do not dine this year have planned to spend the evening at the concert. The class of 87 has engaged 20 tables, and the class of 90 has secured 17, with numbers of tables to be reserved for smaller parties of Harvard men in classes or otherwise. A specially arranged program in their honor will be given.

Music Hall

Promenade Concerts.

Grand Orchestra of 50.

MR. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

LAST WEEK.

Every Evening (except Sunday), 8 to 11.

POPULAR MUSIC.

ADMISSION 25c.

Reserved Seats on Floor or in Balcony, 50c.

F. R. COMEE, Ass't Mg'r. C. A. ELLIS, Mg'r.

Music Hall Promenades.

The closing nights of the popular entertainment at Music hall are now at hand, and this week will be the last of the series. Conductor Schulz has shown marked ability as a leader, and rare good judgment in his program selections. Monday's selections will be from the comic operas produced by the Cadets; Tuesday, "Harvard" night; Wednesday, Wagner selections; Thursday, "request" program; Friday, soloists' night, when Mr Schulz will again appear, other soloists to be announced. Saturday, the closing night, the selections which have received the most favor during the present season will be performed.

The program in full for tomorrow evening is:

March, Excelsior Jr	Tracey
Overture, Tabasco	Chadwick
Waltz, Jack and the Beanstalk	Sloane
Selection, Simple Simon	Tracey
Overture, Light Cavalry	Suppe
Negro episode	Gilbert
Waltz, Artist's Dream	Liebig
Selection, 1492	Pflueger
Overture, Felsenmuhle	Reissiger
Waltz, 1492	Pflueger
Ride of the Hussars	Spindler
March, Tabasco	Chadwick

For twelve giddy summers the "Pops" have been Boston's great amusement spree, and everybody is pretty familiar with the features peculiar to them. At least we all know the distinctions betwen floor tables, balcony tables, side balcony seats and those who sit within or without the railing that separates the real from the make-believe Bohemia. For patrons who desire to sit among the elect enter this citadel of light and leading, while conservatives choose those tables in the balcony, where the confusion is less confounded, or the ultra staid resort to the side balconies, having no suspicion of beer about them. But a few nights ago, there came a party, evidently strangers to these subtle manners of Music Hall, for a few moments after seating themselves at a balcony table they asked for two glasses of water. The waiter recovered from this shock in time to fill their order, but he was completely paralyzed when, soon after consuming the icy draughts, the party requested him to remove the table, as it was in the way!

Mrs. Harry Pratt McKean, Jr., and her sister, Miss Pauline Shaw, with the Messrs. Haughton and Matthew Luce, Jr., made a smart and attractive table party at the "Pops" Wednesday night. Mrs. McKean looked refreshingly cool and girlish in a simply-made pale green lawn, with red hat and black feathers. Miss Shaw was dainty in ecru batiste, with belt and stock of cerise, and large black hat. Mrs. Gardner, who was all in white, including hat, veil and gloves, had with her Miss Haughton, Mr. Robert Atkinson, and the usual Mr. Proctor, who, by the way, has been visiting her at Brookline for some weeks.

Others there were Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Chase, Mr. Henry L. Higginson, his son, Mr. A. Henry Higginson, and party, Prof. and Mrs. Barret Wendell, with quite a number of guests; Miss Anna Lyman, Dr. Roland Whitridge, Miss Kimball, Dr. Jackson, Dr. Bullard, Miss Alice Cole, Mr. Alexander P. Browne, Mr. Everett Chadwick and Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Burditt.

That Wednesday evening was nearly as gay and festive as Harvard night proper. The hall was packed, and such was the enterprise of Mr. Comee that, although the base ball game of the afternoon was scarcely over, the audience was greeted with a large painted decoration over the stage, "Harvard 7," in large crimson type, and "Yale 5," in small and palid blue letters. There were, of course, an enormous number of Harvard boys and their friends there, while modestly, in one corner, were a group of Yale men, including Messrs. McMillan, Letton, Greenway, Thomson and young Garfield, the son of the late ex-President. During the intermissions, Yale and Harvard cheering was in order. The crowd asked for what music they wanted, and in every case Mr. Schulz gave it to them with utmost good nature.

LAST WEEK OF THE PROMENADES.

With the performance of tomorrow night the Music Hall Promenade Concerts will enter upon the last week of the present season. Conductor Schulz has made himself very popular with the patrons of these entertainments through his ability as a conductor and his excellent judgment in the selection of his programmes. Mr. Knecht, a member of the orchestra, is receiving warm words of praise on the production of his new waltz, "Schlaraffenleben," which he recently conducted, by courtesy of Mr. Schulz. For the closing performances, tomorrow will include selections from the comic operas produced by the "Cadets"; Tuesday will be Harvard graduates night; Wednesday is to be devoted to Wagner music, an the first appearance as soloist of Master Willie Traupe, violinist; Thursday will be a "request" programme; Friday is soloists' night, when Mr. Schulz will again appear, with others to be announced, and for Saturday, the closing night, selections which have received the most favor during the present season will be repeated. The programme in full for tomorrow is:

March, "Excelsior, Jr."	Tracey
Overture, "Tabasco"	Chadwick
Waltz, "Jack and the Beanstalk"	Sloane
Selection, "Simple Simon"	Tracey
Overture, "Light Cavalry"	Suppe
Negro episode	Gilbert
Waltz, "Artist's Dream"	Liebig
Selection, "1492"	Pflueger
Overture, "Felsenmuhle"	Reissiger
Waltz, "1492"	Pflueger
"Ride of the Hussars"	Spindler
March, "Tabasco"	Chadwick

LAST WEEK OF THE PROMENADES.

Beginning tomorrow night, the Music Hall promenade concerts enter upon the last week of the present season. Conductor Schulz has made himself very popular with the patrons of these concerts through his ability as a conductor and excellent judgment in the make-up of his programmes.

Mr. Knecht, a member of the orchestra is receiving congratulations on his new waltz, "Schlaraffenleben," which was played here and conducted by himself at a recent concert.

For the closing performances Monday will include selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets; Tuesday, Harvard graduates' night; Wednesday, Wagner music and the first appearance of Master Willie Traupe, violinist, in solo selections; Thursday, request programme; Friday, soloists' night, when Mr. Schulz will again appear with others to be announced, and for Saturday, the closing night, the selections which have received the most favor during the present season.

The programme in full for Monday night is: March, "Excelsior, Jr.," Tracey; overture, "Tabasco," Chadwick waltz, "Jack and the Beanstalk," Sloane; selection, "Simple Simon," Tracey; overture, "Light Cavalry," Suppe; negro episode (first time), Gilbert; waltz, "Artist's Dream," Liebig; selection, "1492," Pflueger; overture, "Felsenmuhle," Reissiger; waltz, "1492," Pflueger; Ride of the Hussars, Spindler; march, "Tabasco," Chadwick.

At the "Pops" Tuesday night Mrs. F. Gordon Dexter, looking unusually distinguished, brought quite a party, Miss Anna Lyman was with friends, Postmaster Thomas had a table full of guests, Mr. Philip Sears was there, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Taft and the Hon. A. E. Pillsbury. On Friday night Mr. E. D. Jordan and Mr. Braggiotti were there with friends and Mr. and Mrs. Oakes Ames had a party.

[illegible] PROMENADES.

[illegible] these most popu-[illegible] are now at hand. [illegible] be the last. Conductor [illegible] shown ability as a leader [illegible] judgment in his programs. For [illegible] nights, Monday will include selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets; Tuesday, Harvard graduates' night; Wednesday, Wagner selections; Thursday, request program; Friday, soloists' night, and for Saturday, the closing evening, the selections which have received the most favor during the present season. The program for tomorrow evening is as follows:

March, "Excelsior, Jr."........Tracey
Overture, "Tabasco"........Chadwick
Waltz, "Jack and the Beanstalk"....Sloane
Selection, "Simple Simon"........Tracey
Overture, "Light Cavalry"........Suppe
Negro Episode (first time)........Gilbert
Waltz, "Artist's Dream"........Liebig
Selection, "1492"........Pflueger
Overture, "Felsenmuhle"........Reissiger
Waltz, "1492"........Pflueger
Ride of the Hussars........Spindler
March, "Tabasco"........Chadwick

MUSIC.

The Promenade Concerts.

The last week of the promenade concerts is at hand and lovers of music should make a note of the fact. The programmes for the farewell concerts are most attractive. On Monday evening, June 28, he following programme will be given:

March, "Excelsior, Jr."........Tracey
Overture, "Tabasco"........Chadwick
Waltz, "Jack and the Beanstalk"....Sloane
Selection, "Simple Simon"........Tracey
Overture, "Light Cavalry"........Suppe
Negro Episode........Gilbert
(First Time.)
Waltz, "Artist's Dream"........Liebig
Selection, "1492"........Pflueger
Overture, "Felsenmuhle"........Reissiger
Waltz, "1492"........Pflueger
"Ride of the Hussars"........Spindler
March, "Tabasco"........Chadwick

Tuesday night is the "Harvard Graduates' Night," the class of '87 having engaged twenty tables and the class of '90 seventeen tables. Wednesday evening is "Wagner Night"; Thursday evening, July 1, "Special Request Night"; Friday, July 2, "Last Soloists' Night." Those who wish for seats at tables should purchase tickets early.

Music Hall Promenades.

The Music hall promenade concerts continue on the high wave of popularity that marked the earlier weeks of the season. As there are only two weeks more of these entertainments, conductor Schulz is arranging special programs for the remaining evenings. Tomorrow will be "American Composers night," Tuesday "Harvard night," Wednesday selections by Offenbach, and Friday "Soloists night."

The program for tomorrow night will be as follows:

March, The Belle of Philadelphia......Fulton
Overture, The Walking Delegate......Hosmer
Oriental serenade........Atherton
Prelude, act III, Lohengrin........Wagner
Overture, Leonore, No. 3........Beethoven
Serenade, Remembrance......Mrs H. Carmichael
Selection, Fencing Master........De Koven
Scherzo........Cutter
Concert overture........Crasser
Entr'acte, Nymphea........Tracey
Waltz, Obispah........Knight
March, On Dress Parade........Knecht

MUSIC HALL POPS.

These popular concerts are fast nearing an end, as there remain only two weeks more. The past week in point of attendance and enthusiasm was fully equal to the opening night. Conductor Schulz has offered programmes which have won for him warm words of praise.

Especially marked was the enthusiasm on Friday night, when the Boston Symphony Horn Quartet, composed of Messrs. Hackebarth, Hein, Lorbeer and Schumann, made their first appearance. Mr. Fiumara, also of the orchestra, received an encore on his singing of the baritone aria from Gounod's "Faust," and Conductor Schulz was wildly applauded for his playing of several solo numbers on the 'cello. For the coming week, Monday will be devoted to compositions by American composers; Tuesday, Harvard night; Wednesday, Offenbach selections, and Friday, soloists' night.

The programme in full for tomorrow night is as follows: March, "The Belle of Philadelphia," Fulton; overture, "The Walking Delegate" (first time), Hosmer; oriental serenade (first time), Atherton; prelude, Act III., "Lohengrin" (by request), Wagner; overture, "Leonore," No. 3 (by request), Beethoven; serenade, "Remembrance," Mrs. H. Carmichael; selection, "Fencing Master," De Koven; scherzo (first time), Cutter; Concert Overture (first time), Crasser; Entr'acte, "Nymphea" (first time), Tracey; waltz, "Obispah," Knight; march, "On Dress Parade," Knecht.

THE GAY PROMENADES.

Delicious music and cool refreshing liquid delights have made life most pleasant during the past week at Music Hall, which has been crowded every evening with wealth and fashion. Tomorrow evening is American composer's night, when the following brilliant programme will be performed:

March, "The Belle of Philadelphia" . . . Fulton
Overture, "The Walking Delegate" . . . Hosmer
Oriental Serenade . . . . . Atherton
Prelude, Act III, "Lohengrin," . . . Wagner
Overture, "Leonore," No. 3 . . . Beethoven
Serenade, "Remembrance" . Mrs. H. Carmichael
Selection, "Fencing Master" . . . De Koven
Scherzo . . . . . Cutter
Concert Overture . . . . . Crasser
Entr'acte, "Nymphea" . . . . . Tracey
Waltz, "Opispah" . . . . . Knight
March, "On Dress Parade" . . . Knecht

MUSIC.

Promenade Concerts.

The present is the last week but one of the promenade concerts, and those who are fond of good, light music should remember this fact. Monday night is the "American Composers' Night," and the programme is:

March, "The Belle of Philadelphia"..Fulton
Overture, "The Walking Delegate....Hosmer
(First Time.)
Oriental Serenade........Atherton
(First Time.)
Prelude, Act III., "Lohengrin"......Wagner
(By Request.)

Overture, "Leonore," No. 3........Beethoven
(By Request.)
Serenade, "Remembrance"........
—Mrs. H. Carmichael
Selection, "Fencing Master".......De Koven
Scherzo........Cutter
(First Time.)

Concert Overture........Crasser
(First Time.)
Entr'acte, "Nymphea"........Tracey
(First time at these concerts.)
Waltz, "Obispah"........Knight
March, "On Dress Parade"........Knecht

Tuesday night is "Harvard Night," and the programme contains six compositions by Harvard musicians.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Tomorrow night's "pop" concert will be devoted to American composers, with the exception of two request numbers.

Conductor Leo Schulz has been preparing excellent programmes of late and stands in high favor with the large audiences who have enjoyed them.

Tuesday will be "Harvard night."

Tomorrow night's programme has been arranged as follows:

March, "The Belle of Philadelphia"....Fulton
Overture, "The Walking Delegate"....Hosmer
(First time.)
"Oriental Serenade"........Atherton
(First time.)
Prelude, Act III, "Lohengrin"........Wagner
(By request.)
Overture, "Leonore," No. 3........Beethoven
(By request.)
Serenade, "Remembrance"........
........Mrs. H. Carmichael
Selection, "Fencing Master"........De Koven
Scherzo........Cutter
(First time.)
Concert Overture........Crasser
(First time.)
Entr'acte, "Nymphea"........Tracey
(First time at these concerts.)
Waltz, "Obispah"........Knight
March, "On Dress Parade"........Knecht

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The closing week of the "Pops" will be a memorable tone. Unqualified is the praise which the series as a whole reflects upon Mr. F. R. Comee, under whose immediate supervision their management has been.

Tomorrow night Conductor Leo Schulz has arranged a programme composed of selections from the operas produced by the Cadets; Tuesday will be Harvard graduates' night, and Wednesday Wagner night, with the first appearance of Master Willie Troupe, violinist.

The selections for tomorrow night are:

March, "Excelsior, Jr."........Tracey
Overture, "Tabasco"........Chadwick
Waltz, "Jack and the Beanstalk".......Sloane
Selection, "Simple Simon"........Tracey
Overture, "Light Cavalry"........Suppe
Negro Episode........Gilbert
Waltz, "Artist's Dream"........Liebig
Selection, "1492"........Pflueger
Overture, "Felsenmühle"........Reissiger
Waltz, "1492"........Pflueger
"Ride of the Hussars"........Spindler
March, "Tabasco"........Chadwick

HARVARD CELEBRATES DECOROUSLY

Her Joy Manifests Itself in Cheering at Cambridge and at the Pop Concert.

The announcement that the Harvard nine had won its game against Yale, and therefore the series, was received with a tumult of cheering at Harvard square, where the college Crimson posted bulletins of the game.

In Memorial Hall, at dinner, some one hung out the score from the gallery, and the act was greeted with an ovation of enthusiastic cheers. Then Farmer Scott, '97, rose in his seat and led the students in three ringing, long Harvard cheers and three times three.

In the evening an attempt was made to get up a celebration, but there were not enough students about to make it a success.

The night was a great night at the "Pop" concert, and only a person both blind and deaf could help knowing that there was a distinct Harvard celebration in Music Hall. The incandescent lights over the entrance in Hamilton place were crimson, the balconies within were decorated with Harvard flags, and on the stage back of the orchestra was an immense sign bearing this legend in crimson letters: "Harvard—10 to 8."

The classes of '90 and '87 sat at 20 and 17 reserved tables, respectively. Three hundred members of other classes, representing as many as 15 commencements, were scattered in little groups at tables within and without the rail.

The orchestra played "Fair Harvard" twice during the evening, and the enthusiasm reached a high pitch. There was a good deal of cheering in every section of the crowd, the classes taking up their respective yells in continual response to one another.

[illegible]

Roof of Music Hall is in a Critical Condition Owing to the Enthusiasm of Those at Crimson's Concert.

The "pop" concert at Music hall last evening was dedicated to the Harvard boys, and the Harvard boys "didn't do a thing" to the "pop" concert—they owned that concert and they just about ran things in that hall last night. They were in evidence from start to finish, and the finish was a good one.

There was a huge poster hung over the stage with the word "Harvard" in big crimson letters on a white ground, and underneath was a large "10;" then in small, blue letters underneath the "10" were the words: "Yale 8."

This poster was very conspicuous, and the arrangement of the figures seemed to "catch" the boys. Then there were Harvard flags pendent from the chandeliers of the second balcony all round the hall, and the programs were crimson, and all this "redness" combined with the other decorations and the electric lights and the brilliant costumes of the women and the music and the—well, it was no wonder the Harvard boys were enthusiastic. They "rahed" and cheered and cheered and "rahed" at every musical intermission. They cheered each other, the ball nine, the crew and they gave Mr Lehmann a cheer that would have made his heart jump had he heard it.

The boys were in a cheering mood and they did not let one opportunity get away from them; they were in evidence from start to finish and the finish was a corker of a cheer.

Those figures over the stage pleased the boys and there were just enough of the "old boys" present to make the new boys wonder where they were at. Several of the old classes sat in the body of the hall. 87 and 90 being particularly conspicuous and perhaps these two classes didn't throw bouquets at each other—in the shape of cheers—and at everything and everybody as far as that is concerned. They weren't a bit rusty.

The hall was crowded, including both the balconies. The costumes of the women were resplendent, and take it all in all the scene was a gay one and the musical program was thoroughly enjoyed. There were repeated demands through the evening for "Fair Harvard" and when finally it was played at the end of a medley of college tunes the "boys" all stood up and the old song rolled through the hall in a manner that aroused the balance of the audience to a great pitch of enthusiasm.

If there had been a few good, rousing, college songs on that program last evening there is no knowing how much damage would have been done to the roof—it certainly would have been "raised" a few inches, instead of being merely strained as it undoubtedly was.

Following is the program of the evening:

March, University [illegible]........Bruguiere
Overture, [illegible]........Auber
Waltz, [illegible], from Fool's Gold........Loud
Pi Eta Burlesque of 1897.
(First time.)
Selection, Pirates of Penzance........Sullivan
Overture, Martha........Flotow
Theme and variations, for string orchestra
Schubert
(First time at these concerts.)
Waltz, Grubenlichter........Zeller
College overture........Moses
Selection, Prince Pro Tem........Thompson
(a) Oriental serenade........Atherton
(b) Love song, Andante from Suite........Farwell
American fantasy........Bendix
March, Up the Street........Morse

At the conclusion of the third number, which was excellently rendered, there was a cry from the end of the hall: "We want the 'Sphinx!'"

This was repeated several times by a chorus of voices, when suddenly one class shouted:

"We want 'Fair Harvard!'"

This was a popular cry and it quickly drowned out the other, but conductor Schulz took no particular notice of the "want"—he gave them a selection from the "Pirates of Penzance" as scheduled.

Then there was an orchestral intermission of five minutes, and perhaps the different classes didn't make things lively in that hall with cheering. After the overture from "Martha" had been played there was another demand made for "Fair Harvard." Several classes in unison shouted: "We want 'Fair Harvard.'" Then they varied it by crying, "We must have 'Fair Harvard.'" The former was in the nature of a request, this was in the nature of a command, but the orchestra played a "Theme with Variations" from Schubert instead, then a waltz, and then the "college overture," with "Fair Harvard," and everybody was satisfied and happy, and there was more cheering, for there was another orchestral intermission, and it was cheering with a vengeance—Lehmann, Goodrich, Goodwin and others were cheered during the entire five minutes.

And so it went to the end of the program, and the end came with a cheer long and loud.

[illegible] evening [illegible] June [illegible] will [illegible] as is [illegible] of the post-graduates [illegible] that time, but some of [illegible] hering to that custom this year [illegible] dently are intending, instead, to [illegible] at the Music Hall Pops, for the '87 [illegible] have already engaged 20 tables for the night we refer to, and the '90 men 17 tables. Mr. Comee, the manager of the "Pops," who is himself a Harvard graduate, is especially interested in having this evening a very large one.

MUSIC HALL "POPS."

These popular concerts are fast nearing an end, as there remain only two weeks more before the season closes. The past week, in point of attendance, was fully equal to the opening nights. Conductor Schulz has offered programmes which have won for him warm and deserved words of praise. Especially marked was the enthusiasm on Friday night, when the Boston Symphony Horn quartet, composed of Messrs. Hackebarth, Hein, Lorbeer and Schumann, made its first appearance. Mr. Fiumara, also of the orchestra, received an encore for his singing of "Dio Possente," from Gounod's "Faust," and Conductor Schulz was wildly applauded for his playing of several solo selections for the cello. For this week, tomorrow night will be devoted to music by American composers; Tuesday will be Harvard night; Wednesday's programme will consist of Offenbach selections, and Friday is the soloist's night. The programme in full for tomorrow night is:

March, "The Belle of Philadelphia"......Fulton
Overture, "The Walking Delegate".....Hosmer
Oriental Serenade........Atherton
Prelude, Act III., "Lohengrin"........Wagner
Overture, "Leonore," No. 3........Beethoven
Serenade, "Remembrance"..Mrs. H. Carmichael
Selection, "Fencing Master"........De Koven
Scherzo........Cutter
Concert Overture........Crasser
Entr'acte, "Nymphea"........Tracey
Waltz, "Obispah"........Knight
March, "On Dress Parade"........Knecht

SOCIAL LIFE.

THE PROMENADES.

The closing nights of these most popular entertainments are now at hand. Next week will be the last. Conductor Schulz has shown ability as a leader and good judgment in his programs. For the closing nights, Monday will include selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets; Tuesday, Harvard graduates' night; Wednesday, Wagner selections; Thursday, request program; Friday, soloists' night, and for Saturday, the closing evening, the selections which have received the most favor during the present season. The program for tomorrow evening is as follows:

March, "Excelsior, Jr."	Tracey
Overture, "Tabasco"	Chadwick
Waltz, "Jack and the Beanstalk"	Sloane
Selection, "Simple Simon"	Tracey
Overture, "Light Cavalry"	Suppe
Negro Episode (first time)	Gilbert
Waltz, "Artist's Dream"	Liebig
Selection, "1492"	Pflueger
Overture, "Felsenmuhle"	Reissiger
Waltz, "1492"	Pflueger
Ride of the Hussars	Spindler
March, "Tabasco"	Chadwick

MUSIC.

The Promenade Concerts.

The last week of the promenade concerts is at hand and lovers of music should make a note of the fact. The programmes for the farewell concerts are most attractive. On Monday evening, June 28, he following programme will be given:

March, "Excelsior, Jr."	Tracey
Overture, "Tabasco"	Chadwick
Waltz, "Jack and the Beanstalk"	Sloane
Selection, "Simple Simon"	Tracey
Overture, "Light Cavalry"	Suppe
Negro Episode (First Time.)	Gilbert
Waltz, "Artist's Dream"	Liebig
Selection, "1492"	Pflueger
Overture, "Felsenmuhle"	Reissiger
Waltz, "1492"	Pflueger
"Ride of the Hussars"	Spindler
March, "Tabasco"	Chadwick

Tuesday night is the "Harvard Graduates' Night," the class of '87 having engaged twenty tables and the class of '90 seventeen tables. Wednesday evening is "Wagner Night"; Thursday evening, July 1, "Special Request Night"; Friday, July 2, "Last Soloists' Night." Those who wish for seats at tables should purchase tickets early.

Music Hall Promenades.

The Music hall promenade concerts continue on the high wave of popularity that marked the earlier weeks of the season. As there are only two weeks more of these entertainments, conductor Schulz is arranging special programs for the remaining evenings. Tomorrow will be "American Composers night," Tuesday "Harvard night," Wednesday selections by Offenbach, and Friday "Soloists night."

The program for tomorrow night will be as follows:

March, The Belle of Philadelphia	Fulton
Overture, The Walking Delegate	Hosmer
Oriental serenade	Atherton
Prelude, act III, Lohengrin	Wagner
Overture, Leonore, No 3	Beethoven
Serenade, Remembrance	Mrs H. Carmichael
Selection, Fencing Master	De Koven
Scherzo	Cutter
Concert overture	Crasser
Entr'acte, Nymphea	Tracey
Waltz, Obispah	Knight
March, On Dress Parade	Knecht

MUSIC HALL POPS.

These popular concerts are fast nearing an end, as there remain only two weeks more. The past week in point of attendance and enthusiasm was fully equal to the opening night. Conductor Schulz has offered programmes which have won for him warm words of praise.

Especially marked was the enthusiasm on Friday night, when the Boston Symphony Horn Quartet, composed of Messrs. Hackebarth, Hein, Lorbeer and Schumann, made their first appearance. Mr. Fiumara, also of the orchestra, received an encore on his singing of the baritone aria from Gounod's "Faust," and Conductor Schulz was wildly applauded for his playing of several solo numbers on the 'cello. For the coming week, Monday will be devoted to compositions by American composers; Tuesday, Harvard night; Wednesday, Offenbach selections, and Friday, soloists' night.

The programme in full for tomorrow night is as follows: March, "The Belle of Philadelphia," Fulton; overture, "The Walking Delegate" (first time), Hosmer; oriental serenade (first time), Atherton; prelude, Act III., "Lohengrin" (by request), Wagner; overture, "Leonore," No. 3 (by request), Beethoven; serenade, "Remembrance," Mrs. H. Carmichael; selection, "Fencing Master," De Koven; scherzo (first time), Cutter; Concert Overture (first time), Crasser; Entr'acte, "Nymphea" (first time), Tracey; waltz, "Obispah," Knight; march, "On Dress Parade," Knecht.

THE GAY PROMENADES.

Delicious music and cool refreshing liquid delights have made life most pleasant during the past week at Music Hall, which has been crowded every evening with wealth and fashion. Tomorrow evening is American composer's night, when the following brilliant programme will be performed:

March, "The Belle of Philadelphia"	Fulton
Overture, "The Walking Delegate"	Hosmer
Oriental Sereuade	Atherton
Prelude, Act III, "Lohengrin,"	Wagner
Overture, "Leonore," No. 3	Beethoven
Serenade, "Remembrance"	Mrs. H. Carmichael
Selection, "Fencing Master"	De Koven
Scherzo	Cutter
Concert Overture	Crasser
Entr'acte, "Nymphea"	Tracey
Waltz, "Opispah"	Knight
March, "On Dress Parade"	Knecht

MUSIC.

Promenade Concerts.

The present is the last week but one of the promenade concerts, and those who are fond of good, light music should remember this fact. Monday night is the "American Composers' Night," and the programme is:

March, "The Belle of Philadelphia"	Fulton
Overture, "The Walking Delegate (First Time.)	Hosmer
Oriental Serenade (First Time.)	Atherton
Prelude, Act III., "Lohengrin" (By Request.)	Wagner
Overture, "Leonore," No. 3 (By Request.)	Beethoven
Serenade, "Remembrance"	—Mrs. H. Carmichael
Selection, "Fencing Master"	De Koven
Scherzo (First Time.)	Cutter
Concert Overture (First Time.)	Crasser
Entr'acte, "Nymphea" (First time at these concerts.)	Tracey
Waltz, "Obispah"	Knight
March, "On Dress Parade"	Knecht

Tuesday night is "Harvard Night," and the programme contains six compositions by Harvard musicians.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Tomorrow night's "pop" concert will be devoted to American composers, with the exception of two request numbers.

Conductor Leo Schulz has been preparing excellent programmes of late and stands in high favor with the large audiences who have enjoyed them.

Tuesday will be "Harvard night."

Tomorrow night's programme has been arranged as follows:

March, "The Belle of Philadelphia"	Fulton
Overture, "The Walking Delegate" (First time)	Hosmer
"Oriental Serenade" (First time)	Atherton
Prelude, Act III, "Lohengrin" (By request)	Wagner
Overture, "Leonore," No. 3 (By request.)	Beethoven
Serenade, "Remembrance"	Mrs. H. Carmichael
Selection, "Fencing Master"	De Koven
Scherzo (First time)	Cutter
Concert Overture (First time.)	Crasser
Entr'acte, "Nymphea" (First time at these concerts)	Tracey
Waltz, "Obispah"	Knight
March, "On Dress Parade"	Knecht

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The closing week of the "Pops" will be a memorable tone. Unqualified is the praise which the series as a whole reflects upon Mr. F. R. Comee, under whose immediate supervision their management has been.

Tomorrow night Conductor Leo Schulz has arranged a programme composed of selections from the operas produced by the Cadets; Tuesday will be Harvard graduates' night, and Wednesday Wagner night, with the first appearance of Master Willie Troupe, violinist.

The selections for tomorrow night are:

March, "Excelsior, Jr."	Tracey
Overture, "Tabasco"	Chadwick
Waltz, "Jack and the Beanstalk"	Sloane
Selection, "Simple Simon"	Tracey
Overture, "Light Cavalry"	Suppe
Negro Episode	Gilbert
Waltz, "Artist's Dream"	Liebig
Selection, "1492"	Pflueger
Overture, "Felsenmühle"	Reissiger
Waltz, "1492"	Pflueger
"Ride of the Hussars"	Spindler
March, "Tabasco"	Chadwick

HARVARD CELEBRATES DECOROUSLY

Her Joy Manifests Itself in Cheering at Cambridge and at the Pop Concert.

The announcement that the Harvard nine had won its game against Yale, and therefore the series, was received with a tumult of cheering at Harvard square, where the college Crimson posted bulletins of the game.

In Memorial Hall, at dinner, some one hung out the score from the gallery, and the act was greeted with an ovation of enthusiastic cheers. Then Farmer Scott, '97, rose in his seat and led the students in three ringing, long Harvard cheers and three times three.

In the evening an attempt was made to get up a celebration, but there were not enough students about to make it a success.

The night was a great night at the "Pop" concert, and only a person both blind and deaf could help knowing that there was a distinct Harvard celebration in Music Hall. The incandescent lights over the entrance in Hamilton place were crimson, the balconies within were decorated with Harvard flags, and on the stage back of the orchestra was an immense sign bearing this legend in crimson letters: "Harvard—10 to 8."

The classes of '90 and '87 sat at 20 and 17 reserved tables, respectively. Three hundred members of other classes, representing as many as 15 commencements, were scattered in little groups at tables within and without the rail.

The orchestra played "Fair Harvard" twice during the evening, and the enthusiasm reached a high pitch. There was a good deal of cheering in every section of the crowd, the classes taking up their respective yells in continual response to one another.

SUCH CHEERS FOR HARVARD.

Roof of Music Hall is in a Critical Condition Owing to the Enthusiasm of Those at Crimson's Concert.

The "pop" concert at Music hall last evening was dedicated to the Harvard boys, and the Harvard boys "didn't do a thing" to the "pop" concert—they owned that concert and they just about ran things in that hall last night. They were in evidence from start to finish, and the finish was a good one.

There was a huge poster hung over the stage with the word "Harvard" in big crimson letters on a white ground, and underneath was a large "10;" then in small, blue letters underneath the "10" were the words: "Yale 8."

This poster was very conspicuous, and the arrangement of the figures seemed to "catch" the boys. Then there were Harvard flags pendent from the chandeliers of the second balcony all round the hall, and the programs were crimson, and all this "redness" combined with the other decorations and the electric lights and the brilliant costumes of the women and the music and the—well, it was no wonder the Harvard boys were enthusiastic. They "rahed" and cheered and cheered and "rahed" at every musical intermission. They cheered each other, the ball nine, the crew and they gave Mr Lehmann a cheer that would have made his heart jump had he heard it.

The boys were in a cheering mood and they did not let one opportunity get away from them; they were in evidence from start to finish and the finish was a corker of a cheer.

Those figures over the stage pleased the boys and there were just enough of the "old boys" present to make the new boys wonder where they were at. Several of the old classes sat in the body of the hall. 87 and 90 being particularly conspicuous and perhaps these two classes didn't throw bouquets at each other—in the shape of cheers—and at everything and everybody as far as that is concerned. They weren't a bit rusty.

The hall was crowded, including both the balconies. The costumes of the women were resplendent, and take it all in all the scene was a gay one and the musical program was thoroughly enjoyed. There were repeated demands through the evening for "Fair Harvard" and when finally it was played at the end of a medley of college tunes the "boys" all stood up and the old song rolled through the hall in a manner that aroused the balance of the audience to a great pitch of enthusiasm.

If there had been a few good, rousing, college songs on that program last evening there is no knowing how much damage would have been done to the roof—it certainly would have been "raised" a few inches, instead of being merely strained as it undoubtedly was.

Following is the program of the evening:

March, University	Bruguiere
Overture, Carlo Broschi	Auber
Waltz, Amorello, from Fool's Gold Pi Eta Burlesque of 1897. (First time.)	Loud
Selection, Pirates of Penzance	Sullivan
Overture, Martha	Flotow
Theme and variations, for string orchestra (First time at these concerts.)	Schubert
Waltz, Grubenlichter	Zeller
College overture	Moses
Selection, Prince Pro Tem	Thompson
(a) Oriental serenade	Atherton
(b) Love song, Andante from Suite	Farwell
American fantasy	Bendix
March, Up the Street	Morse

At the conclusion of the third number, which was excellently rendered, there was a cry from the end of the hall: "We want the 'Sphinx!'"

This was repeated several times by a chorus of voices, when suddenly one class shouted:

"We want 'Fair Harvard!'"

This was a popular cry and it quickly drowned out the other, but conductor Schulz took no particular notice of the "want"—he gave them a selection from the "Pirates of Penzance" as scheduled.

Then there was an orchestral intermission of five minutes, and perhaps the different classes didn't make things lively in that hall with cheering. After the overture from "Martha" had been played there was another demand made for "Fair Harvard." Several classes in unison shouted: "We want 'Fair Harvard.'" Then they varied it by crying, "We must have 'Fair Harvard.'" The former was in the nature of a request, this was in the nature of a command, but the orchestra played a "Theme with Variations" from Schubert instead; then a waltz, and then the "college overture," with "Fair Harvard," and everybody was satisfied and happy, and there was more cheering, for there was another orchestral intermission, and it was cheering with a vengeance—Lehmann, Goodrich, Goodwin and others were cheered during the entire five minutes.

And so it went to the end of the program, and the end came with a cheer long and loud.

---

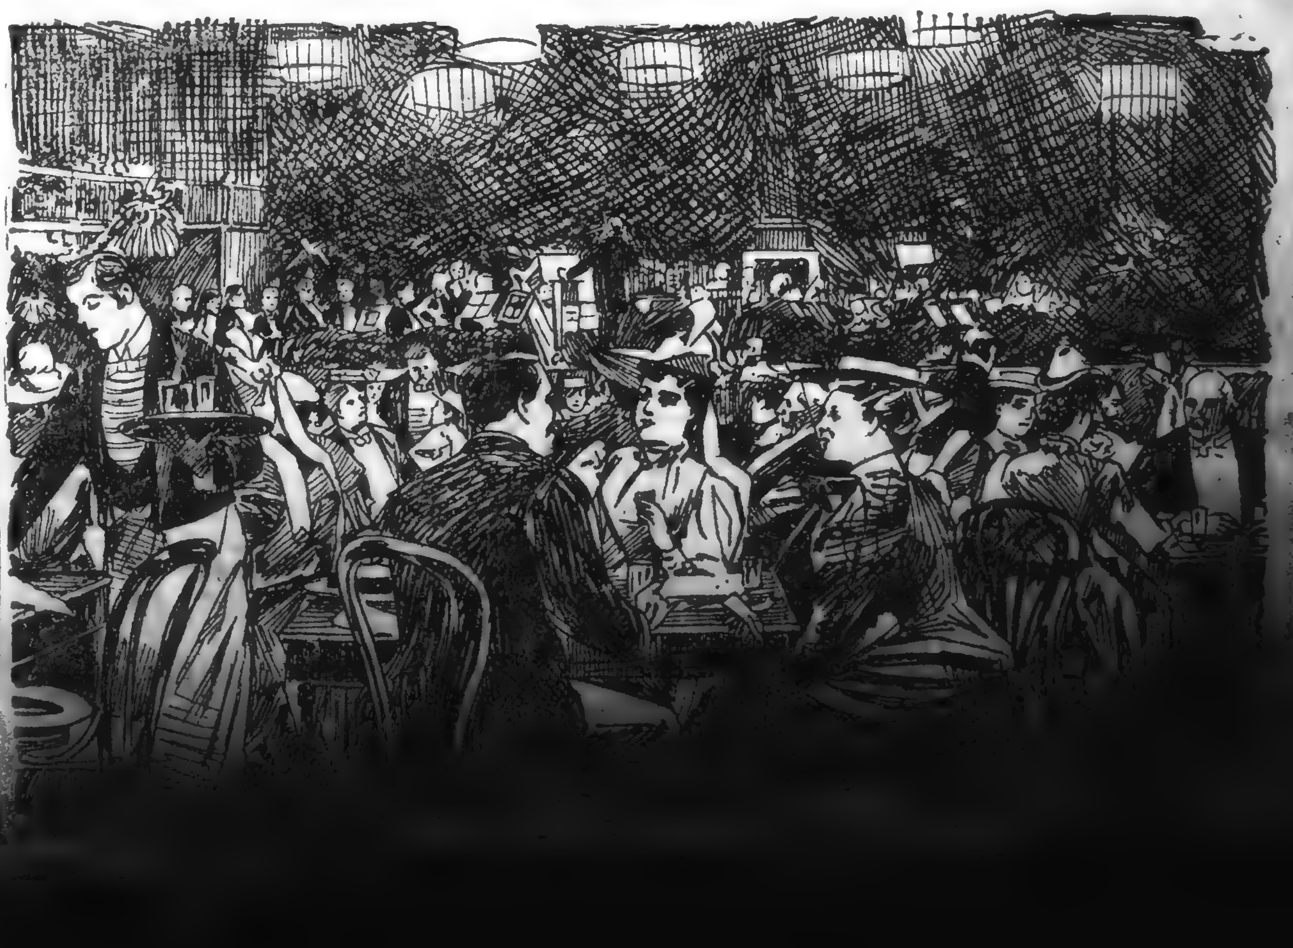
a great one [illegible] night is on Tu[illegible] will be its usual [illegible] evening before comm[illegible] June 29, will be a very [illegible] is usual, as is well known, for [illegible] of the post-graduates to give [illegible] at that time, but some of them are not adhering to that custom this year, and evidently are intending, instead, to celebrate at the Music Hall Pops, for the '87 men have already engaged 20 tables for the night we refer to, and the '90 men 17 tables. Mr. Comee, the manager of the "Pops," who is himself a Harvard graduate, is especially interested in having this evening a very large one.

MUSIC HALL "POPS."

These popular concerts are fast nearing an end, as there remain only two weeks more before the season closes. The past week, in point of attendance, was fully equal to the opening nights. Conductor Schulz has offered programmes which have won for him warm and deserved words of praise. Especially marked was the enthusiasm on Friday night, when the Boston Symphony Horn quartet, composed of Messrs. Hackebarth, Hein, Lorbeer and Schumann, made its first appearance. Mr. Fiumara, also of the orchestra, received an encore for his singing of "Dio Possente," from Gounod's "Faust," and Conductor Schulz was wildly applauded for his playing of several solo selections for the cello. For this week, tomorrow night will be devoted to music by American composers; Tuesday will be Harvard night; Wednesday's programme will consist of Offenbach selections, and Friday is the soloist's night. The programme in full for tomorrow night is:

March, "The Belle of Philadelphia"	Fulton
Overture, "The Walking Delegate"	Hosmer
Oriental Serenade	Atherton
Prelude, Act III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Overture, "Leonore," No. 3	Beethoven
Serenade, "Remembrance"	Mrs. H. Carmichael
Selection, "Fencing Master"	De Koven
Scherzo	Cutter
Concert Overture	Crasser
Entr'acte, "Nymphea"	Tracey
Waltz, "Obispah"	Knight
March, "On Dress Parade"	Knecht

SOCIAL LIFE.



BLANK PAGE

MUSIC.

THE Promenade Concerts of Monday and Tuesday were respectively "American Composers' Night" and "Harvard Night." Mr. Hosmer's "Overture to The Walking Delegate" had an adequate rendering and was good to hear, but the score gains nothing from the large orchestra; the carefully studied reading of Mr. Mullaly at the Tremont Theatre shows the composition to better advantage.

The serenade, "Remembrance," by Mrs. H. Carmichael, is well named, for it recalls much that has been heard before. The harmonic sequence of the first theme has been often employed in classic works: by Beethoven, for example, in the Sonata, Opus 109 by Chopin in the G Flat Major Étude, Op 25, No. 9, and by Mascagni in the "Intermezzo" from "Cavalleria Rusticana." However, the piece is well scored, strings and harp predominating, and the broad and flowing melody made a favorable impression upon the audience.

An "Oriental Serenade," by Percy Lee Atherton, won a hearty and well-deserved encore. It is a true nocturne, dreamy, passionate, senseful. The music is rather of the tropics than of the Orient, suggesting moonlight splendors, exotic perfumes, and senses enthralled yet keenly awake. In form and style it is classic, original, and beautiful.

All Harvard was in Music Hall on Tuesday night, and the programme included many selections inspired by that now famous school of lighter composition, the Hasty Pudding Society. There was also the "Academic Overture" of Brahms. Also the march, "On the Street," given as an "extra" and vociferously redemanded by the Cambridge men, who associate it with certain recent victories of the crimson. The singing of "Fair Harvard" at the end of the concert proves that there is sad need of a special course at Cambridge in the words of this grand old song, even as the majority of Americans need instruction in all verses but the first of the so-called "national hymn."

HARVARD HURRAH

Took Possession of the Pop Concert Last Night.

DEMANDED FAVORITE SONG.

Joined in the Chorus With Great Glee.

'TWAS A GREAT NIGHT.

It was Harvard graduates' night at the Pop Concert in Music Hall last evening, and in addition to a goodly company of regular patrons there were representatives from classes for the past ten years. The illuminated sign in Hamilton place was of a crimson hue, and there were Harvard flags and red programmes in the hall.

The boys kept comparatively quiet for the first hour, confining their enthusiasm to loudly cheering the different selections, but as their spirits arose they began to be more noisy. A '97 class yell started the ball a-rolling, and it was taken up by the different classes all over the auditorium.

A coterie of men near the clock suddenly called out in unison: "We-want-to-sing!" This expression of musical desire was repeated a number of times, until the remarks were changed to: "We-want-'Fair-Harvard.'"

Mr. Schulz took no notice of the request, although the vehemence increased with every shout. Finally there came a tremendous chorus:

"We-must-have-'Fair-Harvard'!"

So, at the close of the "College Overture," the conductor gave the signal to his musicians, and at the first note of the familiar song everyone in the audience who had ever been a member of the university, rose to his feet and joined in the chorus.

From that time on there was noise enough. After each number the different class yells were given with voluminous effect, and so interested did the boys become in their own celebration that Mr. Schulz had some difficulty in playing. The selection from "Prince Pro Tem" added fuel to the flames, and the hilarity was kept up after the concert was finished and the audience had adjourned to the street.

This evening will be Wagner night, and will be characterized by the first appearance of Master Willie Traupe, the boy violinist.

MUSIC.

THIS week brings the Promenade Concert season to a close. Under the management of Mr. Comee and the leadership of Mr. Zach and Mr. Schulz, the concerts of '97 have surpassed all that have gone before. Mr. Schulz is especially to be complimented. He has shown himself to be a skilful and artistic conductor, and his tact and bonhomie seem unlimited. He is by far the best maker and director of light programmes that we have had at these concerts, and it is to be hoped that he will have charge of the orchestra next summer. Hoch Schulz! Prost! Auf Wiedersehen!

LAST OF THE POP CONCERTS.

Audience Made a Picture Bright with Color—Fine Programme.

The last of the Pop concerts for the season of 1897 was given last night, and what was perhaps the most successful series in the history of the enterprise was brought to a close.

For many things the final concert was notable. For one, the 1500 people present formed a genuinely congenial company. There were few outsiders at the tables on the floor. Nearly everybody present had attended other concerts of this season, though all may not have been regular patrons of the Pops. The regular patrons, however, were there in large number, and so the faces had a familiar look, and everybody felt at ease, as was apparent from the fact that there was noticeable a decided unbending on the part of staid and dignified people—enough to lead them to take part in jolly conversations—and there was little or none of the constraint under which strangers to the Pops have sometimes labored.

Everybody remembered that this was the closing concert, and all seemed determined to make the best of it. Unusual attention was paid to the music, and between the numbers there was much merry chatter and some visiting from table to table; and there was more color in the picture the audience made than heretofore. As if by prearrangement, the women wore brighter costumes than on other occasions and the red of hats and waists, and even skirts in some few instances, stood out prominently on the floor, in the balcony—everywhere throughout the hall—which, in consequence, lost much of its customary dinginess.

And there were other features of the occasion which made it exceptional. The orchestra was in a remarkably fine mood, and, in addition, Mr. Schulz played Chopin's nocturne for the 'cello to Mr. Schuecker's harp accompaniment. The audience only stopped applauding when Mr. Schulz, having repeated the finale, raised his baton as conductor and the orchestra began the playing of "Narcissus."

A still higher compliment was paid Mr. Schulz, for hardly a dozen persons left the hall until the programme was ended and the "Star-Spangled Banner" given. Then the whole audience stood, and, standing, applauded and cheered until the musicians hustled off the stage. And so the series of popular concerts which Mr. F. R. Comee has steered through a notable season, with wonderful success, was closed.

THE CLOSING "POP."

The promenade concerts closed in a blaze of glory last evening. Old Music hall was crowded to its utmust with an audience including well known musicians and society people, and enthusiasm was rampant. Every number was encored, and the walls resounded with cheers, for the clapping of hands was inadequate to express the delight of it all.

The programme was a popular one, opening with Mendelssohn's "Wedding March," and closing with "Liberty Bell" march and "The Star Spangled Banner."

Mr. H. C. Barnabee of the Bostonians entertained a party of well known professional people, and Miss Marie Jansen also had a party of friends there.

The season which has just closed has been the most successful in the history of Boston's promenade concerts, and the person to whom the honors of the success are due is Mr. F. R. Comee, assistant manager of Music hall, for they have been under his direct supervision.

The "pops" will be missed and there will be a hearty welcome awaiting their coming another year.

At the Pops Monday night, when the Cadet music was in order, there was a large and enthusiastic company. Prominent among the table people was Mrs. F. Gordon Dexter, who had a party of young people about her, in whose company she seems to be especially happy, and certainly she makes a most gracious chaperon. Her gray and white organdie, with bands of black velvet across the blouse, and broad girdle and stock of black, was fit and elegant. A tiny black toque was worn so as to show the abundant gray hair which was rolled off the forehead. Miss Ethel Gibson and Miss Alice Lovering, both looking extremely well, were of the young girls with Mrs. Dexter, and Mr. Wadsworth Longfellow was also of her party. The Henry Wainwrights brought in some of the Milton set, and Mr. B. P. Cheney, Dr. Galloupe, Prof. and Mrs. Hadley and Miss Harriet Paine were also there.

LAST OF TH[illegible]

The Bohemians Celebrate With Red, White and Blue Enthusiasm.

The pops ended last night. The band got a hatful of applause, the Director, Mr. Schulz, two hatfuls, and the Bohemians went off congratulating themselves that they had outlived another season of drefful dissipation.

It was a warm time in the old hall last night and the Bohemians in the balcony were delighted with the program. There was the wedding march from the "Midsummer Night's Dream," the Fourth of July overture, "Rienzi," by Wagner, and a lovely nocturne for 'cello, with harp accompaniment, by Chopin, which Mr. Schulz and Mr. Schuecker played. Those were for the Bohemians in the balcony, the Bohemians with the lorgnettes, as was said before.

But the 33d degree folks downstairs also had some fun. If the glasses didn't rattle when Goldmark's "Sakuntala" was played, they certainly boomed the waltzes and the marches. Among the waltzes were the long-lost favorites, "Blue Danube" and "Grubenlichter," which is beautiful, notwithstanding its name.

Of course the audience was huge. Applause flowed as freely as—as anything else that flowed, and the east wind was plentiful. The "Star Spangled Banner" was played to the accompaniment of song and cheers, and red, white and blue enthusiasm. And then, after a reasonable intermission, the lights went out on the Promenades of '97.

Although the weather most of the season was anything but thirst-making, yet Mr. Comee, the acting manager, told a Journal reporter that this was the most successful season of all the 12. It isn't the east wind that blows no one good.

The twelfth season of the Pops closed last night after eight of the most successful weeks ever known in the history of these concerts. Every night was made a special one. Tuesday was Harvard Graduates' night in honor of the classes of '87 and '90, which together occupied some 40 tables on the floor. The Hamilton place electric sign, the menus and the programmes were printed in crimson ink, and when '87 was not cheering, '90 was, so it was all the evening long, jolly and enlivening.

Wednesday was Wagner night, with again a packed house, and for that matter every table seat was taken every night. Thursday was the last "request night," Friday was last "soloists' night," and last evening, for the finishing touch, the house was packed in every quarter, even before a holiday. Mr. Barnabee, with a large party, had two tables Friday and Saturday night, and Marie Jansen was with a party on the closing night. At a conservative estimate, 75,000 people have enjoyed these concerts this season, and it is worthy of comment that not one serious disturbance has marred the enjoyment of the patrons. All praise to Mr. Comee for his most felicitous management.

CLOSE OF THE POPS.

The Pop concerts closed the season in Music Hall last evening, after the most successful series ever given. A number of advantageous circumstances, aided and abetted by the skilful managerial ability of Mr. Fred R. Comee, have brought large public patronage, and the entertainments have been spoken of in the highest terms. For the first four weeks Max Zach led the orchestra, and for the last four Leo Schulz filled the same position.

The programmes have been varied and interesting, combining both popular and classic selections, and there has not been a number but which has met with approval. The introduction of special nights has been a happy idea, and yielded big profit. Soloists' nights have been especially attractive, and will probably be continued next summer.

1898

Fall River Line Journal.

A WEEKLY PUBLICATION,

Boston Music Hall,

EVERY EVENING

(Except Sunday), 8 to 11.

Music Hall Promenade Concerts...

GRAND ORCHESTRA OF 50.

MR. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

Tickets, with reserved seats, 50c. On sale for any evening of season. Admission 25c.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

SUNDAY HERALD — BOSTON, MAY 1, 1898

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The closing of the Symphony season always brings to mind the opening of the Promenade concerts, and with the usual interval of a week these popular entertainments will begin on Monday, May 9, the date identical with the beginning in the past four years. It has come to be an accepted fact that Boston cannot get along without these concerts, which retain not only many of the Symphony patrons, but also attract a much larger following of those who look upon a Symphony concert as something too heavy for their edification. A general admission of 25 cents admits the public to a goodly number of unreserved tables on the floor and to the seats in the second balcony, while an extra quarter is charged for secured places at reserved tables either on the floor or in the balcony, and for seats in the first balcony on the sides. Everything will be conducted on the same general plan as in the past. The orchestra of 50 musicians from the ranks of the Symphony cannot be excelled in its performance, not only of classical, but of the more popular light music of the day. The request for silence which occasionally appears upon the programme is only as a matter of form and by way of caution, for when the great majority of the audience earnestly desire to listen to any selection they can be counted on to maintain the silence necessary to its full enjoyment. Mr. Zach will again conduct, after two very successful seasons, and it will be his earnest endeavor to satisfy all tastes. It goes without saying that the prevailing spirit of today will receive recognition in the performance of our national music. An effort will be made in the direction of variety and attractiveness in the interior decorations of the hall. Most of the special features of last season will be duplicated, and it seems safe to assume that the same success will attend the coming season which has obtained in the past 12 years. As in the past three seasons, the business management will be under the direction of Assistant Manager F. R. Comee. The sale of tickets will open at Music Hall on Monday morning, May 2, at 9 o'clock.

SUNDAY POST, MAY 1, 189

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The thirteenth season of the Music Hall promenade concerts will open on Monday evening, May 9. It is worthy of note that the impression always prevails among the public, when the first announcement is made of these concerts, that the opening date is earlier than usual, when, as a matter of fact, the concerts have begun on the corresponding date for the past four years. Everything will be conducted on the same general basis as in past seasons. There will be the usual reserved tables on the floor and in the balcony for the convenience of those who wish to secure their seats in advance, with an equal number of tables outside the enclosures "first come, first served" to the holders of 25-cent admission tickets. An additional charge of 25 cents each will be made for reserved seats, either at the tables or in the side balconies.

Max Zach, for the past two years conductor of these concerts, will again lead the orchestra. In recognition of the prevailing spirit of the times, due consideration will be given our national music. Throughout the season the usual special nights, request programmes, Harvard night, graduates' night, at about the time of commencement at Harvard University, and other features will prevail.

The entire second balcony, as usual, will be open to the holders of admission tickets.

As for the past three seasons, the business management will be under the direction of Assistant Manager F. R. Comee.

The sale of tickets opens at Music Hall on Monday, May 2, at 9 o'clock.

BOSTON JOURNAL SUNDAY, MAY 1, 1898

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The 13th season of the Music Hall promenade concerts will begin Monday evening, May 9. It is worthy of note that the impression always prevails among the public, when the first announcement is made of these concerts, that the opening date is earlier than usual, when, as a matter of fact, the concerts have begun on the corresponding date for the past four years. Everything will be conducted on the same general basis as in past seasons. There will be the usual reserved tables on the floor and in the balcony for the convenience of those who wish to secure their seats in advance, with an equal number of tables outside the enclosures "first come, first served" to the holders of 25-cent admission tickets. An additional charge of 25 cents each will be made for reserved seats, either at the tables or in the side balconies. Some striking novelties in the way of decorations will be used.

Mr. Max Zach, for the past two years conductor of these concerts, will again lead the orchestra of 50 musicians from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In recognition of the prevailing spirit of the times, due consideration will be given our national music. Throughout the season the usual special nights, request programs, Harvard Night, Graduates' Night, at about the time of Commencement at Harvard University, and other features, will prevail.

Conductor Zach has already shown by the programs of the earlier concerts a desire to cater to all tastes, and especially in the direction of repeating established favorites of past seasons. It is a gratifying feature of these concerts that the music ranges from the best known classics to the popular music of the day, thus attracting both the Symphony patrons and those who find greater pleasure in lighter selections.

The entire second balcony, as usual, will be open to the holders of admission tickets.

No better brief description of these concerts has yet come to light than the following excerpt from one of our leading dailies some five years ago: "The 'Pops,' like the Symphonies, are absorbing in a way. Boston loves them. They are democratic. Here is the clerk, business man, professional man, student, the various gradations of society, men and women alike. Everybody goes, smokes and drinks a little, and feels agreeably relaxed by observing his neighbors as well as hearing the tuneful music. To the right and left in the balconies are the conservative spectators who have come partly to hear the music and partly to see 'Bohemia.' "

As for the past three seasons, the business management will be under the direction of Assistant Manager F. R. Comee.

The sale of tickets will open at Music Hall on Monday, May 2, at 9 o'clock.

SUNDAY GLOBE MAY 1, 1898

Promenade Concerts.

For 12 seasons, at the close of the annual series of concerts by the Boston symphony orchestra, not only the patrons of these concerts and many others whose tastes run more to lighter music, watch with interest for the announcement of the Music hall promenade concerts. Monday night, May 9, the 13th season of these popular entertainments will begin. The interval between the close of the symphony concerts and the departure to their summer homes of many of their patrons is admirably filled by these established and attractive illustrations of genteel Bohemia.

There will be no radical change in the conduct of these concerts from past seasons. There will be the usual reserved tables on the floor and in the balcony for the convenience of those wishing to secure their seats in advance, with an equal number of tables outside the enclosures, "first come, first served," to the holders of 25-cent admission tickets. An additional charge of 25 cents will be made for these reserved seats, either at the tables or in the first balcony on the side.

The custom which has grown of late to select a conductor from the ranks of the Boston symphony orchestra will be adhered to, and Mr Max Zach, who for the past two seasons has made many friends, will again lead the orchestra of 50 musicians from the ranks of the same organization. Due consideration of the prevailing spirit of the times will be shown by a proper recognition of our national music. The usual special nights and all the attractive features of past seasons will be repeated. As for the past three seasons, the business management will be under the direction of assistant manager F. R. Comee. The sale of tickets will open at Music hall tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock.

THE BOSTON TIMES

(ESTABLISHED 1864.)

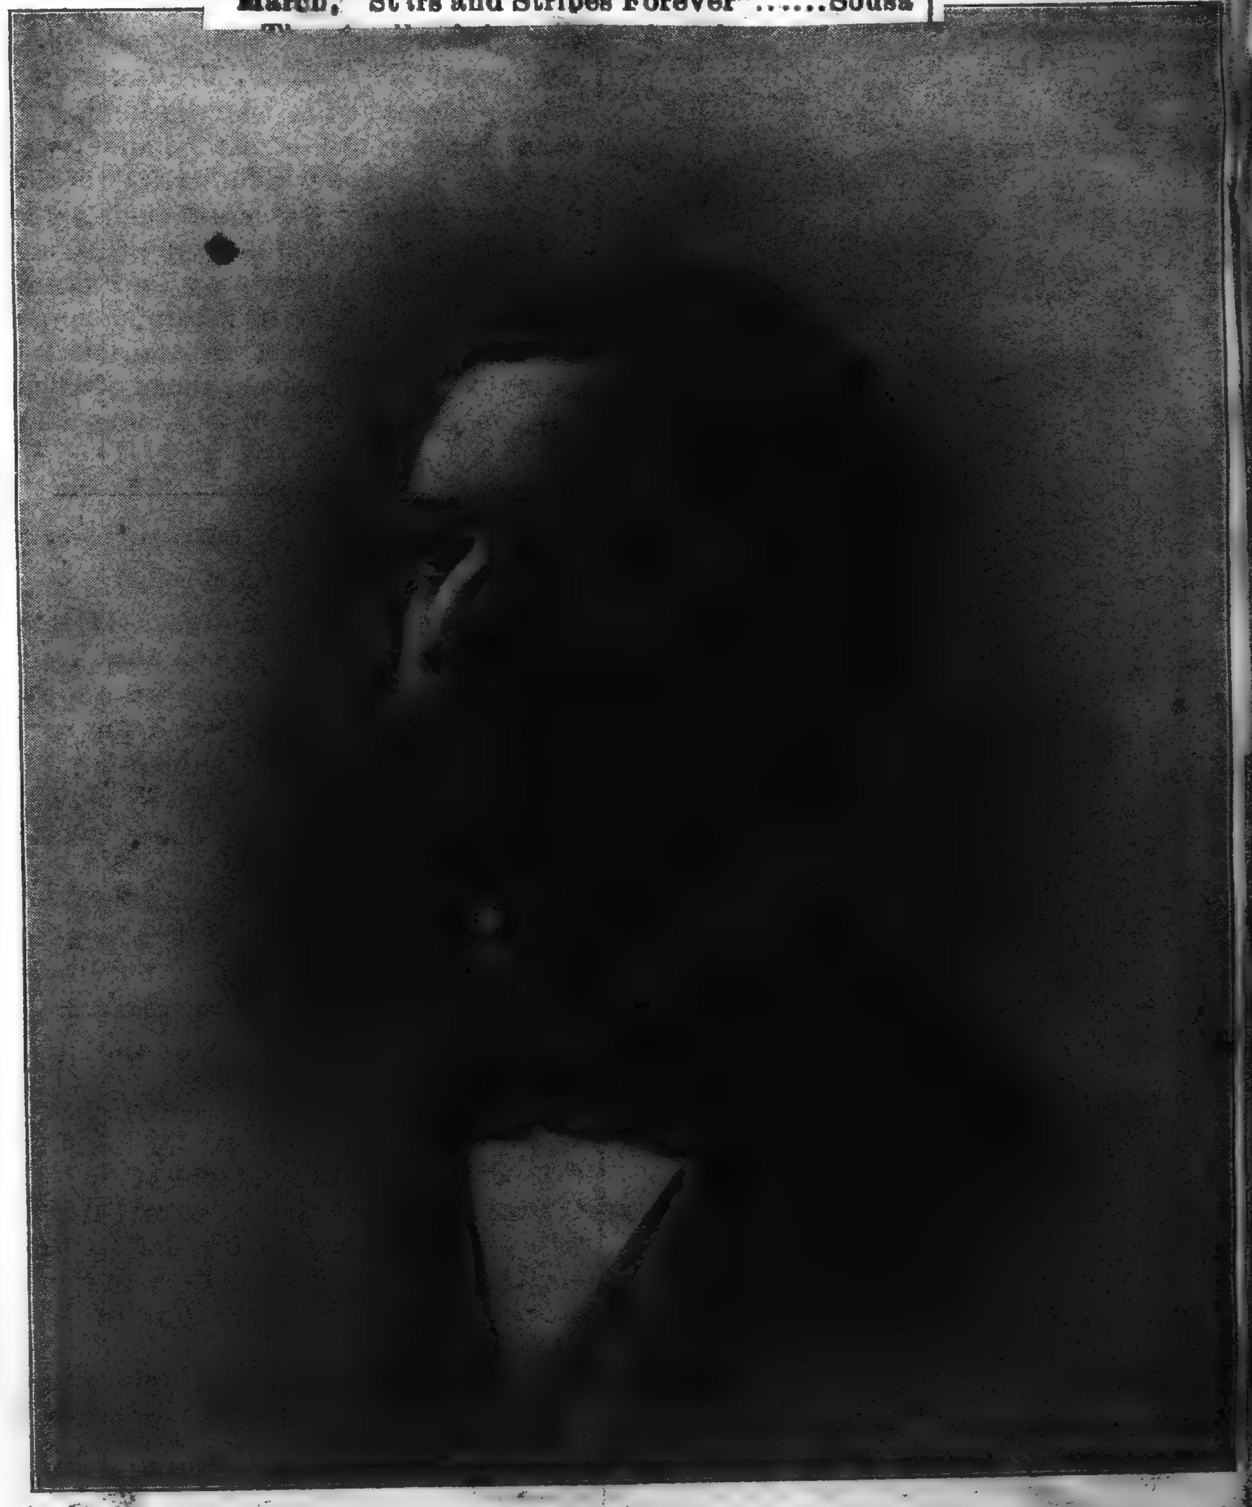
EVERY SUNDAY,

AT 20 HAWLEY STREET.

Music

THE OPENING of the "Pop" concerts in Music hall tomorrow night, to continue every night for the next two months' is a jolly prospect for music loving Bostonians. Max Zach will be the conductor, and the musicians will be from the ranks of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Mr. F. R. Comee, assistant manager of Music hall, is the manager of these thoroughly Bostonese entertainments, which is an assurance of their being as popular and of as great musical worth as heretofore. That's all we want. Mr. Comee has hit on the ideal musical entertainment for the unoccupied evenings between seasons, and if he keeps them just as they have been, it is all we want. There will be request night programmes at intervals and special programmes to mark particular events from time to time. The programme arranged for tomorrow night is:

American March (First time.)	Ganne
Overture, "Domino Noir"	Auber
Waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage"	Zach
Selection, "Madame Angot"	Lecocq
Ballet Music from "The Queen of Sheba"	Goldmark
Two entr'actes from "Carmen" The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.	Bizet
Waltz, "Kaiser"	Strauss
Introduction to Act I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Potpourri, "Offenbachiana"	Conradi
Mazourka, "La Mousme"	Ganne
American Fantasy	Bendix
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa



MAX ZACH, Conductor of the "Pop" Concerts, Opening at Music Hall Tomorrow Night.

Fall River Line Journal.
A WEEKLY PUBLICATION,

Boston Music Hall,
EVERY EVENING
(Except Sunday), 8 to 11.
Music Hall | Promenade Concerts...
GRAND ORCHESTRA OF 50.
MR. MAX ZACH, Conductor.
Tickets, with reserved seats, 50c. On sale for any evening of season. Admission 25c.
C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

SUNDAY HERALD—
BOSTON, MAY 1, 1898

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The closing of the Symphony season always brings to mind the opening of the Promenade concerts, and with the usual interval of a week these popular entertainments will begin on Monday, May 9, the date identical with the beginning in the past four years. It has come to be an accepted fact that Boston cannot get along without these concerts, which retain not only many of the Symphony patrons, but also attract a much larger following of those who look upon a Symphony concert as something too heavy for their edification. A general admission of 25 cents admits the public to a goodly number of unreserved tables on the floor and to the seats in the second balcony, while an extra quarter is charged for secured places at reserved tables either on the floor or in the balcony, and for seats in the first balcony on the sides. Everything will be conducted on the same general plan as in the past. The orchestra of 50 musicians from the ranks of the Symphony cannot be excelled in its performance, not only of classical, but of the more popular light music of the day. The request for silence which occasionally appears upon the programme is only as a matter of form and by way of caution, for when the great majority of the audience earnestly desire to listen to any selection they can be counted on to maintain the silence necessary to its full enjoyment. Mr. Zach will again conduct, after two very successful seasons, and it will be his earnest endeavor to satisfy all tastes. It goes without saying that the prevailing spirit of today will receive recognition in the performance of our national music. An effort will be made in the direction of variety and attractiveness in the interior decorations of the hall. Most of the special features of last season will be duplicated, and it seems safe to assume that the same success will attend the coming season which has obtained in the past 12 years. As in the past three seasons, the business management will be under the direction of Assistant Manager F. R. Comee. The sale of tickets will open at Music Hall on Monday morning, May 2, at 9 o'clock.

SUNDAY POST,
MAY 1, 189

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The thirteenth season of the Music Hall promenade concerts will open on Monday evening, May 9. It is worthy of note that the impression always prevails among the public, when the first announcement is made of these concerts, that the opening date is earlier than usual, when, as a matter of fact, the concerts have begun on the corresponding date for the past four years. Everything will be conducted on the same general basis as in past seasons. There will be the usual reserved tables on the floor and in the balcony for the convenience of those who wish to secure their seats in advance, with an equal number of tables outside the enclosures "first come, first served" to the holders of 25-cent admission tickets. An additional charge of 25 cents each will be made for reserved seats, either at the tables or in the side balconies.

Max Zach, for the past two years conductor of these concerts, will again lead the orchestra. In recognition of the prevailing spirit of the times, due consideration will be given our national music. Throughout the season the usual special nights, request programmes, Harvard night, graduates' night, at about the time of commencement at Harvard University, and other features will prevail.

The entire second balcony, as usual, will be open to the holders of admission tickets.

As for the past three seasons, the business management will be under the direction of Assistant Manager F. R. Comee.

The sale of tickets opens at Music Hall on Monday, May 9, at 9 o'clock.

BOSTON JOURNAL
SUNDAY, MAY 1, 1898

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The 13th season of the Music Hall promenade concerts will begin Monday evening, May 9. It is worthy of note that the impression always prevails among the public, when the first announcement is made of these concerts, that the opening date is earlier than usual, when, as a matter of fact, the concerts have begun on the corresponding date for the past four years. Everything will be conducted on the same general basis as in past seasons. There will be the usual reserved tables on the floor and in the balcony for the convenience of those who wish to secure their seats in advance, with an equal number of tables outside the enclosures "first come, first served" to the holders of 25-cent admission tickets. An additional charge of 25 cents each will be made for reserved seats, either at the tables or in the side balconies. Some striking novelties in the way of decorations will be used.

Mr. Max Zach, for the past two years conductor of these concerts, will again lead the orchestra of 50 musicians from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In recognition of the prevailing spirit of the times, due consideration will be given our national music. Throughout the season the usual special nights, request programs, Harvard Night, Graduates' Night, at about the time of Commencement at Harvard University, and other features, will prevail.

Conductor Zach has already shown by the programs of the earlier concerts a desire to cater to all tastes, and especially in the direction of repeating established favorites of past seasons. It is a gratifying feature of these concerts that the music ranges from the best known classics to the popular music of the day, thus attracting both the Symphony patrons and those who find greater pleasure in lighter selections.

The entire second balcony, as usual, will be open to the holders of admission tickets.

No better brief description of these concerts has yet come to light than the following excerpt from one of our leading dailies some five years ago: "The 'Pops,' like the Symphonies, are absorbing in a way. Boston loves them. They are democratic. Here is the clerk, business man, professional man, student, the various gradations of society, men and women alike. Everybody goes, smokes and drinks a little, and feels agreeably relaxed by observing his neighbors as well as hearing the tuneful music. To the right and left in the balconies are the conservative spectators who have come partly to hear the music and partly to see 'Bohemia.'"

As for the past three seasons, the business management will be under the direction of Assistant Manager F. R. Comee.

The sale of tickets will open at Music Hall on Monday, May 2, at 9 o'clock.

SUNDAY GLOBE
MAY 1, 1898

Promenade Concerts.

For 12 seasons, at the close of the annual series of concerts by the Boston symphony orchestra, not only the patrons of these concerts and many others whose tastes run more to lighter music, watch with interest for the announcement of the Music hall promenade concerts. Monday night, May 9, the 13th season of these popular entertainments will begin. The interval between the close of the symphony concerts and the departure to their summer homes of many of their patrons is admirably filled by these established and attractive illustrations of genteel Bohemia.

There will be no radical change in the conduct of these concerts from past seasons. There will be the usual reserved tables on the floor and in the balcony for the convenience of those wishing to secure their seats in advance, with an equal number of tables outside the enclosures, "first come, first served," to the holders of 25-cent admission tickets. An additional charge of 25 cents will be made for these reserved seats, either at the tables or in the first balcony on the side.

The custom which has grown of late to select a conductor from the ranks of the Boston symphony orchestra will be adhered to, and Mr Max Zach, who for the past two seasons has made many friends, will again lead the orchestra of 50 musicians from the ranks of the same organization. Due consideration of the prevailing spirit of the times will be shown by a proper recognition of our national music. The usual special nights and all the attractive features of past seasons will be repeated. As for the past three seasons, the business management will be under the direction of assistant manager F. R. Comee. The sale of tickets will open at Music hall tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock.

THE BOSTON TIMES
(Established 1864.)
EVERY SUNDAY,
At 20 HAWLEY STREET.

Music

THE OPENING of the "Pop" concerts in Music hall tomorrow night, to continue every night for the next two months' is a jolly prospect for music loving Bostonians. Max Zach will be the conductor, and the musicians will be from the ranks of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Mr. F. R. Comee, assistant manager of Music hall, is the manager of these thoroughly Bostonese entertainments, which is an assurance of their being as popular and of as great musical worth as heretofore. That's all we want. Mr. Comee has hit on the ideal musical entertainment for the unoccupied evenings between seasons, and if he keeps them just as they have been, it is all we want. There will be request night programmes at intervals and special programmes to mark particular events from time to time. The programme arranged for tomorrow night is:

American March (First time.)	Ganne
Overture, "Domino Noir"	Auber
Waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage"	Zach
Selection, "Madame Angot"	Lecocq
Ballet Music from "The Queen of Sheba"	Goldmark
Two entr'actes from "Carmen"	Bizet
The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
Waltz, "Kaiser"	Strauss
Introduction to Act I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Potpourri, "Offenbachiana"	Conradi
Mazourka, "La Mousme"	Ganne
American Fantasy	Bendix
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

MAX ZACH, Conductor of the "Pop" Concerts, Opening at Music Hall Tomorrow Night.

[24]

Fall River Line Journal.
A WEEKLY PUBLICATION.

Boston Music Hall,

EVERY EVENING

(Except Sunday), 8 to 11.

Music Hall | Promenade Concerts...

GRAND ORCHESTRA OF 50.

MR. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

Ti[illegible] reserved seats, 50c. On sale for any evening of season. Admission 25c.

[illegible] Manager. F. R. COMEE, Ass't Manager.

SUNDAY HERALD — BOSTON, MAY 1, 1898

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The closing of the Symphony season always brings to mind the opening of the Promenade concerts, and with the usual interval of a week these popular entertainments will begin on Monday, May 9, a date identical with the beginning in the past four years. It has come to be an accepted fact that Boston cannot get along without these concerts, which retain not only many of the Symphony patrons, but also attract a much larger following of those who look upon a Symphony concert as something too heavy for their [illegible]. A general admission of 25 cents admits the public to a goodly number of unreserved tables on the floor and to the seats in the second balcony, while a [illegible] quarter is charged for reserved places at reserved tables either on the floor or in the balcony, and for seats in the first balcony on the sides. Everything will be conducted on the same general plan as in the past. The orchestra of 50 musicians from the ranks of the Symphony can not be excelled in its [illegible] not only of [illegible], but of the more popular [illegible] of the day. The request for silence which occasionally appears upon the programme is [illegible] of [illegible] way of [illegible], for when [illegible] [illegible] be [illegible] necess[illegible] [illegible] successful season [illegible] earnest [illegible] It goes without saying that the prevailing spirit of today will [illegible] the nation[illegible] [illegible] effort will be made [illegible] variety [illegible] the interior decorations of the [illegible] Most of the special features [illegible] will be duplicated, and [illegible] to assume that the [illegible] attend the coming season [illegible] in the past 12 years. As [illegible] past three seasons, the business management will be under the direction of Assistant Manager F. R. Comee. The sale of tickets will open at Music Hall on Monday morning, May 2, at 9 o'clock.

SUNDAY POST, MAY 1, 189

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The thirteenth season of the Music Hall promenade concerts will open on Monday evening, May 9. It is worthy of note that the impression always prevails among the public, when the first announcement is made of these concerts, that the opening date is earlier than usual, when, as a matter of fact, the concerts have begun on the corresponding date for the past four years. Everything will be conducted on the same general basis as in past seasons. There will be the usual reserved tables on the floor and in the balcony for the convenience of those who wish to secure their seats in advance, with an equal number of tables outside the enclosures "first come, first served" to the holders of 25-cent admission tickets. An additional charge of 25 cents each will be made for reserved seats, either at the tables or in the side balconies.

Max Zach, for the past two years conductor of these concerts, will again lead the orchestra. In recognition of the prevailing spirit of the times, due consideration will be given our national music. Throughout the season the usual special nights, request programmes, Harvard night, graduates' night, at about the time of commencement at Harvard University, and other features will prevail.

The entire second balcony, as usual, will be open to the holders of admission tickets.

As for the past three seasons, the business management will be under the direction of Assistant Manager F. R. Comee.

The sale of tickets opens at Music Hall on Monday, May 9, at 9 o'clock.

BOSTON JOURNAL
SUNDAY, MAY 1, 1898

PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The 13th season of the Music Hall promenade concerts will begin Monday evening, May 9. It is worthy of note that the impression always prevails among the public, when the first announcement is made of these concerts, that the opening date is earlier than usual, when, as a matter of fact, the concerts have begun on the corresponding date for the past four years. Everything will be conducted on the same general basis as in past seasons. There will be the usual reserved tables on the floor and in the balcony for the convenience of those who wish to secure their seats in advance, with an equal number of tables outside the enclosures "first come, first served" to the holders of 25-cent admission tickets. An additional charge of 25 cents each will be made for reserved seats, either at the tables or in the side balconies. [illegible] striking novelties in the way of decorations will be used.

Mr. Max Zach, for the past two years conductor of these concerts, will again lead the orchestra of 50 musicians from the ranks of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. In recognition of the prevailing spirit of the times, due consideration will be given our national airs. Throughout the season the usual special nights, request programmes, Harvard Night, Graduates' Night, at about the time of Commencement at Harvard University, and other features will prevail.

Conductor Zach has already [illegible] the programmes of the [illegible] to cater to all tastes [illegible] in the selection of [illegible] favorites [illegible] gratifying feature of these concerts [illegible]

The entire second balcony, as usual, will be open to the holders of admission tickets.

No better brief description of these concerts has yet come to light than the following excerpt [illegible] some five years ago. "The [illegible] like the Symphonies, are absolutely [illegible] in a way. Boston loves them. They are democratic. [illegible]"

As for the past three seasons the business management will be under the direction of Assistant Manager F. R. Comee.

The sale of tickets will open at Music Hall on Monday, May 2, at 9 o'clock.

SUNDAY GLOBE
MAY 1, 1898

Promenade Concerts.

For 12 seasons [illegible]

[illegible] the Boston Symphony orchestra will be [illegible] and Mr. Max Zach, who for the past two seasons has made many friends, will again lead the orchestra of 50 musicians from the ranks of the same organization. Due consideration of the prevailing spirit of the times will be [illegible] national airs. The usual special nights and all the attractive features of past seasons will be repeated. As for the past three seasons, the business management will be under the direction of Assistant Manager F. R. Comee. The sale of tickets will open at Music Hall tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock.

THE BOSTON TIMES
(ESTABLISHED 1864.)
EVERY SUNDAY,
At 20 HAWLEY STREET.

Music

THE OPENING of the "Pop" concerts in Music hall tomorrow night, to continue every night for the next two months' is a jolly prospect for music loving Bostonians. Max Zach will be the conductor, and the musicians will be from the ranks of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Mr. F. R. Comee, assistant manager of Music hall, is the manager of these thoroughly Bostonese entertainments, which is an assurance of their being as popular and of as great musical worth as heretofore. That's all we want. Mr. Comee has hit on the ideal musical entertainment for the unoccupied evenings between seasons, and if he keeps them just as they have been, it is all we want. There will be request night programmes at intervals and special programmes to mark particular events from time to time. The programme arranged for tomorrow night is:

American March (First time.)	Ganne
Overture, "Domino Noir"	Auber
Waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage"	Zach
Selection, "Madame Angot"	Lecocq
Ballet Music from "The Queen of Sheba"	Goldmark
Two entr'actes from "Carmen"	Bizet
The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
Waltz, "Kaiser"	Strauss
Introduction to Act I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Potpourri, "Offenbachiana"	Conradi
Mazourka, "La Mousme"	Ganne
American Fantasy	Bendix
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

MAX ZACH, Conductor of the "Pop" Concerts, Opening at Music Hall Tomorrow Night.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

DEWEY CHEERED.

His Name in Electric Lights at the Old Pop Opening.

As Conductor Zach stepped to the front last evening, facing a large and fashionable audience, in Music Hall, the name of "Dewey," done in electric lights, was lowered over the heads of the orchestra amid loud and prolonged applause. While all remained standing the orchestra played the "Star Spangled Banner," many taking up the refrain in song. The spirit of the hour was thus shown in opening the series of Pop concerts, to be continued several weeks, with incidental patriotic features nightly.

During the evening a bulletin was shown announcing the passage by Congress of an act creating another rear admiralship for Dewey's benefit.

A programme of unusual excellence was presented by the orchestra (composed of Symphony men), and many encore numbers were given. It opened with the American march and ended with "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Among the prominent society folks and well-known persons in attendance were Mr. and Mrs. John L. Gardner and party, Mr. and Colonel Gordon Dexter, Mrs. J. Montgomery Sears, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Seabury, Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson, Mr. Henry Higginson, Jr., and his fiancee, Miss Rosamond Tudor, Mr. and Mrs. Eben Jordan, Mr. and Mrs. Apthorp, Miss C. Mabel Beaman, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dennee, Mr. T. Clarence Hollander and party, Mrs. F. R. Comee, Miss Gertrude Edmands, Mr. Arthur Gilmore, Mrs. Phinehas Adams, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Barnet, Mr. Walter Hawkins and party, Mrs. Robbins and Miss Anna Robbins, Miss Helen Fogler, Mrs. Philip Hale, the Hon. and Mrs. Joshua Holden and large party, Mr. H. Peabody Flagg, Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Bennett, Mr. and Mrs. Fiske Warren, Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Metcalf, Commissioner and Mrs. Clark, Mr. T. Dennie Boardman, Mr. George Sedgwick, Captain and Mrs. W. H. Alline, Mrs. T. O. Rogers, Mrs. Flora Potter, the Misses Hecht, Mr. J. C. Abbott, Mr. Wallace Goodrich, Dr. William Galloupe, Mr. and Mrs. James Houston, Mr. Ernest Houston, Mr. W. P. Blake, Mr. Lipsiger, Mr. Frank and party, Miss Clara Ticknor, Dr. Harry O'Brien, Mr. E. Rollins Morse, Mrs. Franz Zerrahn, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Robinson, Mr. Arthur Peck, Miss Norcross and Mr. John Thompson.

Last evening Boston's mild dissipation, the Pop concerts, opened in Music Hall. The only unusual circumstance associated with the event was the wild enthusiasm at every patriotic air. Well, it's a good thing to have this sentiment aroused, especially in Boston, where it is none too apparent.

* * *

Boston Journal.
SUNDAY, MAY 15, 1898.

SUMMER PROMENADES.

The first week of the regular season of "pop concerts" ended with the performance at Music Hall last night before a very large audience. The attendance during the week has been all that the management could desire. The orchestra is composed of good material and is directed by Mr. Max Zach, whose fine musicianly qualities, thorough knowledge of his public, excellent taste in arranging programs and careful preparation, produce performances which may be accepted as models for popular concerts. The program for tomorrow (Monday) evening is as follows:

March, "Merry Soldiers."............Sabathil
(First time.)
Overture, "Zampa"....................Herold
Waltz, "Morgenblatter"................Strauss
Potpourri of Meyerbeer's operas....Schreiner
(First time.)
Ballet music from "Faust"...........Gounod
Babbie Waltzes from "The Little Minister,"................................ Fuerst
(First time.)
a. Berceuse................................Johns
b. Serenata........................Moszkowski
Rhapsody in C..............................Liszt
Overture, "Freischutz"....................Weber
Narcissus ....Nevin
Ride of the Hussars....................Spindler
Tabasco March........................Chadwick

THE BOSTON COMMERCIAL.
Published Every Saturday Evening.

Music Hall Promenade Concerts.

The first week of the 13th season of the concerts at Music Hall closes tonight. There have been large and very enthusiastic audiences present at each concert, and the management may well feel proud of such an auspicious opening of the season. The programmes have all been well selected, and the orchestra, under the skillful leadership of Mr. Max Zach, have shown that they have been well drilled, their work receiving generous and appreciative applause. The decorations of the hall this year are exceedingly bright and effective and the service at the tables is of the best.

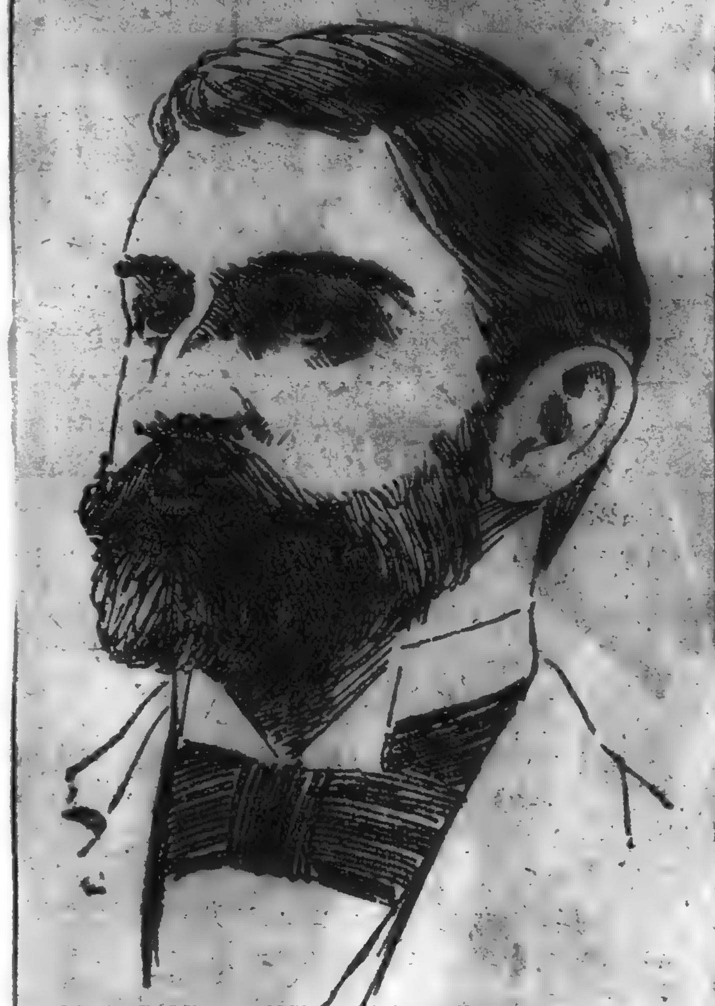
"This Country, with its Institutions, Belongs to the People who Inhabit it."
BOSTON EVENING RECORD.

"POP" CONCERTS.

Open With a Timely Display of Patriotism.

With the closing of the Symphony concerts "the pop concerts" have begun—begun with the added brilliancy and enthusiasm lent by stirring times and the temper of a public under the strain of suspense and glad to cheer and shout and sing with the frailest excuse.

Music Hall, tastefully decorted, was well filled long before Max Zach, the popular conductor of last year's concerts, mounted the stand and gave a preparatory rap on his music stand.



MAX ZACH.

Mr. Comee had prepared a little surprise, and its reception left no doubt of its success. The first number on the programme was a lively march, but it was the opening bars of the Star Spangled Banner that brought the audience to its feet and evoked a long, wild cheer. Just at the right instant an electric sign bearing the name "Dewey," lowered from the flies, was the signal for a renewed burst of cheering and hand-clapping. Everyone remained standing while the national air was being played.

At the first intermission a bulletin, to the effect that the gallant commodore had been made a rear admiral, was put out, and for a third time the cheering set the draperies overhead all of a flutter.

And so it was throughout the concert. The next to the last number, a medley of essentially American airs, brought a fresh burst of enthusiasm each time there was a change of tune. "My Maryland" and "Dixie" shared honors with "Yankee Doodle" and the distinctively northern songs. Sousa's stirring march, "Stars and Stripes Forever" was a fitting finale for an eminently patriotic programme.

Barring the enthusiasm noted and the prevalance of the Stars and Stripes, the concert was much like those which Bostonians have attended every summer for the past 13 years. It was all the same—the little tables and palm-leaf fans; the hurrying waiters and pretty women in spring finery; the beer and smoke; the quiet tete-a-tetes and the nodding to passing friends—all the same, and yet no less pleasing or welcome on that account.

Society was well represented by the Myopia set, the Cadets and their cousins and their aunts, Harvard College, the Gardners, the Apthorps, the Peabodies and those less susceptible to accurate classification.

Last evening was the opening night of the 13th season. The concerts are under the direction of their old manager, Mr. Comee, who has done so much to make them enjoyable. The hall is elaborately decorated with streamers of nile green radiating from an American flag placed parallel to the ceiling, an elaborate stage setting with real Cochituate water falls and a pastoral hanging above the rest balcony.

SATURDAY, MAY 21, 1898.

Music Hall Concerts.

The "Pop" concerts close another successful week at Music Hall tonight. Every evening the tables and balconies are filled with interested listeners, who give Conductor Zach and his excellent orchestra generous applause, all the programmes being made up of popular selections. At this season of the year there cannot be found a more enjoyable place to pass an evening than at Music Hall, a fact which many have already found out, and which many more should take advantage of in the weeks to come.

Boston Journal.
TUESDAY, MAY 10, 1898.

POP CONCERTS.

Opening of the 13th Season With Mr. Comee as Manager and Mr. Zach as Conductor.

The 13th season of the Promenade Concerts, popularly and properly known as "Pops," (because the audience does not promenade and the sound of popping of corks is borne upon the night air) opened last night in Music Hall. Mr. Comee is the manager and Mr. Max Zach is the conductor. The hall was crowded. The program was as follows:

American March..............................Ganne
(First time.)
Overture, "Domino Noir"..................Auber
Waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage"...............Zach
Selection, "Madame Angot"...............Lecocq
Ballet music from "The Queen of Sheba"
Goldmark
Solo 'cello, Mr. E. Loeffler.
Two entr'actes from "Carmen"............Bizet
Waltz, "Kaiser".........................Strauss
Introduction to Act I., "Lohengrin....Wagner
Potpourri, "Offenbachiana"..............Conradi
Mazourka, "La Mousme"..................Ganne
American fantasy..........................Bendix
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"....Sousa

A year ago I took the Intelligent Foreigner to the first of the Pop concerts, and he practically wrote the article for the Journal, for I put into print his impressions. Yesterday afternoon I invited him to accompany me, but he declined, and his manner was brusque to the point of rudeness. "No," he said, "once is enough. I see it all—the same people—men in evening dress that seems incongruous—people within the pen trying to be jolly, and people without the pen trying to look as though they could have been within the discriminating railing—everybody watching his or her neighbor—all of them self-conscious—a sad endeavor to be Bohemian. I prefer to read the evening papers and note the contradiction of news published at morning."

I fear that the weather, which has been tetric and discouraging, has affected the internal machinery of our estimable friend. He surely would have enjoyed himself last night. There were pretty women and there were brave men. All of them applauded the electric name of Dewey, and when the "Star-Spangled Banner" was played at the beginning of the concert the men were apparently anxious for a speedy draft.

The hall was decorated and embellished with running vines and a real waterfall and a huge flag, and at the rear of the hall was a landscape that afforded pleasant guessing. Was it a scene in the White Mountains, or the Holyoke-Tom range, as seen from Mt. Warner, or the harbor of Manila?

Mr. Zach had prepared an interesting, well-contrasted program, and he led gracefully and intelligently. His own waltz was encored, as were the waltz by Strauss and the second entr'acte from "Carmen," and the ballet music by Goldmark (in which Mr. Loeffler played sympathetically the Bee dance), and no doubt the patriotic music at the end, for I left after the mad merriment of Offenbach.

And the audience is more and more accustomed to the intimate relation between beer and music. There is no doubt that it enjoyed itself thoroughly and honestly. The Intelligent Foreignor himself would have testified to the improvement. And possibly the night may come when beer will be 5 cents a glass at these concerts, which run too quickly to their end.

The program this evening will be as follows:

March from "The Serenade".........Herbert
Overture, "Mignon"....................Thomas
Waltz, "Meerleuchten"..................Ziehrer
Selection, "Trovatore"......................Verdi
Waltz and Pizzicato from "Sylvia"..Delibes
Sailors' Chorus from "The Flying Dutchman"..............................Wagner
Gavotte for String Orchestra..............Bach
Invitation to Dance........................Weber
Overture, "Pique Dame"................Suppé
Waltz, "Landeskinder"..................Strauss
(First time.)
Polka, "Tic-Tac"..............................Strobl
March, "Under the Double Eagle"....Wagner

Philip Hale.

Boston Journal.
SUNDAY, MAY 22, 1898.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

Every available seat and standing room was at a premium at the Music Hall Promenade Concert last evening. Music lovers have much to interest them at these popular concerts, now under full way. The music is all of a first-class, popular order, and rendered by an efficient orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Max Zach. Patrons are reminded that there will be no concert on Thursday evening next, owing to a long-standing engagement of the hall. With this exception, the concerts will continue every week-day evening until July 1. The following program has been selected by Conductor Zach for tomorrow (Monday) evening:

March, "King Cotton"....................Sousa
Overture, "Le Pre aux Clercs"........Herold
Waltz, "Artist's Life"...................Strauss
Selection, "Carmen".........................Bizet
Baritone solo, Prologue from "Pagliacci"
Leoncavallo
Mr. Placido Fiumara.
March from Symphony, "Leonore"......Raff
Overture, "Pique Dame"..................Suppe
Valse Caprice.........................Rubinstein
Andante for string orchestra..Tschaikowsky
Waltz, "Pomone"....................Waldteufel
Polka Mazourka, "Unparteische Kritik"
[illegible]
Persian March..............................[illegible]

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

THE POP CONCERTS.

With the coming of warmer weather the attendance at the promenade concerts at Music Hall has grown in numbers until every evening finds the auditorium well filled with a brilliant and enthusiastic audience. Conductor Zach shows excellent judgment in the selection of music precisely suited to the tastes of his listeners, and from the beginning has shown a marked recognition of the spirit of the times by introducing national music at various intervals through the programme.

It seems a glorious thing to see the entire audience rise to its feet whenever the orchestra plays any of our patriotic music, a custom which for years has prevailed in England, and which should obtain in this country, as it now bids fair to do. It is not an infrequent thing for the entire house to join in singing, and singing well, either "America" or the "Star Spangled Banner."

Friday evening was decidedly enlivened, first by the presence of a party of students from each of the three institutions, Harvard, Yale and Technology, who exchanged courtesies by complimentary cheering each of the other. About [illegible] o'clock the entrance of a party of ten American sailors was made the occasion of a tremendous ovation in the shape of cheers and applause.

Next Monday evening the programme will be varied by a baritone solo, the prologue from "Pagliacci," sung by Mr. Placido Fiumara, a member of the orchestra and a pupil of Campanari. The first Saturday night of the season broke the record for attendance in the past five years.

The orchestra cannot be surpassed in this country, and possibly not in Europe; the admission fee is very reasonable; the very best social element in Boston is represented every night, and everything points to a season as successful as any in the history of these concerts. Patrons are reminded that there will be no concert on Thursday evening next. With this exception the concerts will continue every week day evening until about July 4.

Boston Daily Globe.
TUESDAY, MAY 10, 1898.

FIRST OF THE "POPS."

Music Hall Promenade Concert Season Opens—Conductor Max Zach Led Off With "The Star Spangled Banner."

The season of Music hall promenade concerts opened last evening, under the same auspicious circumstances which alone seem to belong to this thoroughly local institution. It was the same large, enthusiastic audience, the same old "pop" concert, delightfully mellowed perhaps with years, with just this exception. It opened and closed with a patriotic demonstration that has not been a feature of previous affairs, but the public rose to this occasion.

Just as conductor Max Zach took his place upon the director's stand the lights were dimmed, and over the stage was emblazoned this word, "Dewey." The illuminated name thrilled the audience, who arose from their places at the tables and cheered lustily, while Mr Zach waved his baton and the 50 instruments joined in "The Star Spangled Banner." The entire audience remained standing while the air was being played, and as the last chords died away tumultuous applause and cheering demanded a repetition of this national song. Again the orchestra played, and once more the house stood during the rendition.

This over, the house was ready to listen to the well-poised program that the conductor had arranged.

Music hall is a place which it is extremely difficult to beautify, but the dark interior was lightened by the plentiful use of light streamers and festoons of evergreen. A mammoth American flag was caught at each corner from the ceiling in the center of the hall, while scores of pale green streamers stretched from the national banner to the walls. A mountain landscape setting was used for the stage, and the scenic brook through the canvas valley terminated in a tumbling stream of running water.

Faces familiar at this annual event were there last evening, and Mr and Mrs John L. Gardner and a party occupied their customary table. Mr Ellerton P. Whitney, Mr Zerrahn, Mr John T. Linzee of Milton and several friends were seated nearby, while Mr T. Dennie Boardman and a party were in the audience.

Hardly a number was permitted to pass without an encore, and Mr Zach was obliging and responded graciously with a repetition in each instance. The program was:

American march.............................Ganne
Overture, Domino Noir......................Auber
Waltz, Harlequin's Voyage..................Zach
Selection, Mme Angot.....................Lecocq
Ballet music from The Queen of Sheba
Goldmark
Two entr'actes from Carmen...............Bizet
Waltz, Kaiser..............................Strauss
Introduction to Act I, Lohengrin.........Wagner
Potpourri, Offenbachiana................Conradi
Mazurka, La Mousme.......................Ganne
American fantasy.........................Bendix
March, Stars and Stripes Forever.........Sousa

Sousa's closing march brought out as much cheering and hurrahs for the flag as did the equally pertinent opening number and as the closing chords were played men and women stood up cheering until the conductor waved his baton in obedience to the demand for an encore.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

DEWEY CHEERED.

His Name in Electric Lights at the Old Pop Opening.

As Conductor Zach stepped to the front last evening, facing a large and fashionable audience, in Music Hall, the name of "Dewey," done in electric lights, was lowered over the heads of the orchestra amid loud and prolonged applause. While all remained standing the orchestra played the "Star Spangled Banner," many taking up the refrain in song. The spirit of the hour was thus shown in opening the series of Pop concerts, to be continued several weeks, with incidental patriotic features nightly.

During the evening a bulletin was shown announcing the passage by Congress of an act creating another rear admiralship for Dewey's benefit.

A programme of unusual excellence was presented by the orchestra (composed of Symphony men), and many encore numbers were given. It opened with the American march and ended with "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Among the prominent society folks and well-known persons in attendance were Mr. and Mrs. John L. Gardner and party, Mr. and Colonel Gordon Dexter, Mrs. J. Montgomery Sears, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Seabury, Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson, Mr. Henry Higginson, Jr., and his fiancee, Miss Rosamond Tudor, Mr. and Mrs. Eben Jordan, Mr. and Mrs. Apthorp, Miss C. Mabel Beaman, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dennee, Mr. T. Clarence Hollander and party, Mrs. F. R. Comee, Miss Gertrude Edmands, Mr. Arthur Gilmore, Mrs. Phinehas Adams, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Barnet, Mr. Walter Hawkins and party, Mrs. Robbins and Miss Anna Robbins, Miss Helen Fogler, Mrs. Philip Hale, the Hon. and Mrs. Joshua Holden and large party, Mr. H. Peabody Flagg, Mr. and Mrs. S. H. Bennett, Mr. and Mrs. Fiske Warren, Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Metcalf, Commissioner and Mrs. Clark, Mr. T. Dennie Boardman, Mr. George Sedgwick, Captain and Mrs. W. H. Alline, Mrs. T. O. Rogers, Mrs. Flora Potter, the Misses Hecht, Mr. J. C. Abbott, Mr. Wallace Goodrich, Dr. William Galloupe, Mr. and Mrs. James Houston, Mr. Ernest Houston, Mr. W. P. Blake, Mr. Lipsiger, Mr. Frank and party, Miss Clara Ticknor, Dr. Harry O'Brien, Mr. E. Rollins Morse, Mrs. Franz Zerrahn, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Robinson, Mr. Arthur Peck, Miss Norcross and Mr. John Thompson.

Last evening Boston's mild dissipation, the Pop concerts, opened in Music Hall. The only unusual circumstance associated with the event was the wild enthusiasm at every patriotic air. Well, it's a good thing to have this sentiment aroused, especially in Boston, where it is none too apparent.

* * *

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, MAY 15, 1898.

SUMMER PROMENADES.

The first week of the regular season of "pop concerts" ended with the performance at Music Hall last night before a very large audience. The attendance during the week has been all that the management could desire. The orchestra is composed of good material and is directed by Mr. Max Zach, whose fine musicianly qualities, thorough knowledge of his public, excellent taste in arranging programs and careful preparation, produce performances which may be accepted as models for popular concerts. The program for tomorrow (Monday) evening is as follows:

March, "Merry Soldiers." (First time.)	Sabathil
Overture, "Zampa"	Herold
Waltz, "Morgenblatter"	Strauss
Potpourri of Meyerbeer's operas (First time.)	Schreiner
Ballet music from "Faust"	Gounod
Babbie Waltzes from "The Little Minister," (First time.)	Fuerst
a. Berceuse	Johns
b. Serenata	Moszkowski
Rhapsody in C	Liszt
Overture, "Freischutz"	Weber
Narcissus	Nevin
Ride of the Hussars	Spindler
Tabasco March	Chadwick

THE BOSTON COMMERCIAL.

Published Every Saturday Evening.

Music Hall Promenade Concerts.

The first week of the 13th season of the concerts at Music Hall closes tonight. There have been large and very enthusiastic audiences present at each concert, and the management may well feel proud of such an auspicious opening of the season. The programmes have all been well selected, and the orchestra, under the skillful leadership of Mr. Max Zach, have shown that they have been well drilled, their work receiving generous and appreciative applause. The decorations of the hall this year are exceedingly bright and effective and the service at the tables is of the best.

"This Country, with its Institutions, Belongs to the People who Inhabit it."

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.

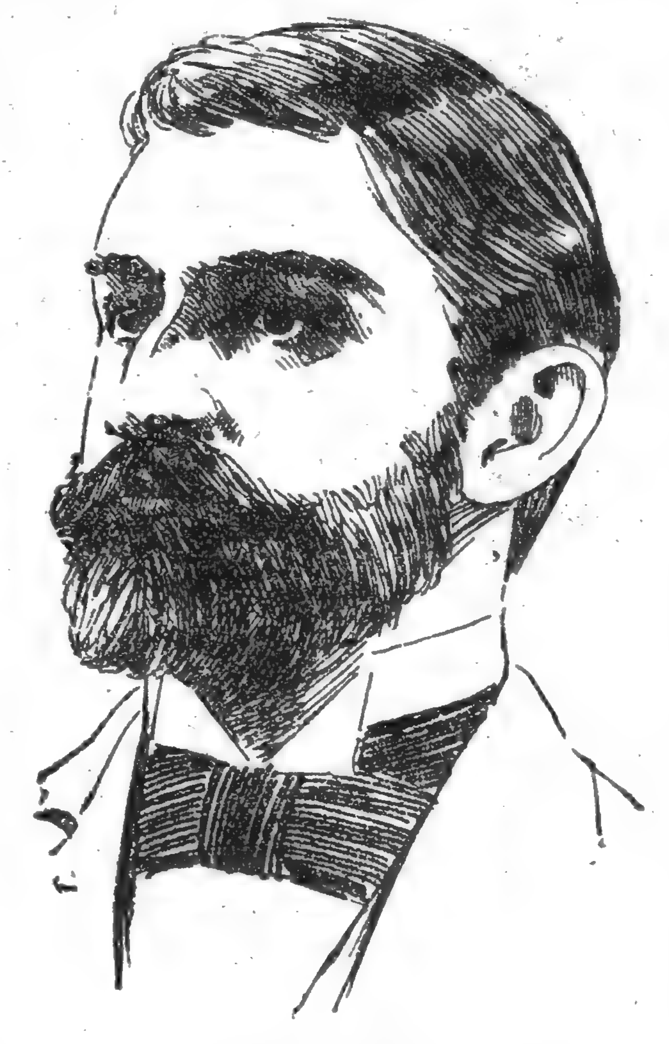
"POP" CONCERTS

Open With a Timely Display of Patriotism.

With the closing of the Symphony concerts "the pop concerts" have begun—begun with the added brilliancy and enthusiasm lent by stirring times and the temper of a public under the strain of suspense and glad to cheer and shout and sing with the frailest excuse.

Music Hall, tastefully decorted, was well filled long before Max Zach, the popular conductor of last year's concerts, mounted the stand and gave a preparatory rap on his music stand.

Mr. Comee had prepared a little surprise, and its reception left no doubt of its success. The first number on the programme was a lively march, but it was the opening bars of the Star Spangled Banner that brought the audience to its feet and evoked a long, wild cheer. Just at the right instant an electric sign bearing the name "Dewey," lowered from the flies, was the signal for a renewed burst of cheering and hand-clapping. Everyone remained standing while the national air was being played.



MAX ZACH.

At the first intermission a bulletin, to the effect that the gallant commodore had been made a rear admiral, was put out, and for a third time the cheering set the draperies overhead all of a flutter.

And so it was throughout the concert. The next to the last number, a medley of essentially American airs, brought a fresh burst of enthusiasm each time there was a change of tune. "My Maryland" and "Dixie" shared honors with "Yankee Doodle" and the distinctively northern songs. Sousa's stirring march, "Stars and Stripes Forever" was a fitting finale for an eminently patriotic programme.

Barring the enthusiasm noted and the prevalance of the Stars and Stripes, the concert was much like those which Bostonians have attended every summer for the past 13 years. It was all the same—the little tables and palm-leaf fans; the hurrying waiters and pretty women in spring finery; the beer and smoke; the quiet tete-a-tetes and the nodding to passing friends—all the same, and yet no less pleasing or welcome on that account.

Society was well represented by the Myopia set, the Cadets and their cousins and their aunts, Harvard College, the Gardners, the Apthorps, the Peabodies and those less susceptible to accurate classification.

Last evening was the opening night of the 13th season. The concerts are under the direction of their old manager, Mr. Comee, who has done so much to make them enjoyable. The hall is elaborately decorated with streamers of nile green radiating from an American flag placed parallel to the ceiling, an elaborate stage setting with real Cochituate water falls and a pastoral hanging above the rest balcony.

SATURDAY, MAY 21, 1898.

Music Hall Concerts.

The "Pop" concerts close another successful week at Music Hall tonight. Every evening the tables and balconies are filled with interested listeners, who give Conductor Zach and his excellent orchestra generous applause, all the programmes being made up of popular selections. At this season of the year there cannot be found a more enjoyable place to pass an evening than at Music Hall, a fact which many have already found out, and which many more should take advantage of in the weeks to come.

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY, MAY 10, 1898.

POP CONCERTS.

Opening of the 13th Season With Mr. Comee as Manager and Mr. Zach as Conductor.

The 13th season of the Promenade Concerts, popularly and properly known as "Pops," (because the audience does not promenade and the sound of popping of corks is borne upon the night air) opened last night in Music Hall. Mr. Comee is the manager and Mr. Max Zach is the conductor. The hall was crowded. The program was as follows:

American March (First time.)	Ganne
Overture, "Domino Noir"	Auber
Waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage"	Zach
Selection, "Madame Angot"	Lecocq
Ballet music from "The Queen of Sheba" (Solo 'cello, Mr. E. Loeffler.)	Goldmark
Two entr'actes from "Carmen"	Bizet
Waltz, "Kaiser"	Strauss
Introduction to Act I., "Lohengrin	Wagner
Potpourri, "Offenbachiana"	Conradi
Mazourka, "La Mousine"	Ganne
American fantasy	Bendix
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

A year ago I took the Intelligent Foreigner to the first of the Pop concerts, and he practically wrote the article for the Journal, for I put into print his impressions. Yesterday afternoon I invited him to accompany me, but he declined, and his manner was brusque to the point of rudeness. "No," he said, "once is enough. I see it all—the same people—men in evening dress that seems incongruous—people within the pen trying to be jolly, and people without the pen trying to look as though they could have been within the discriminating railing—everybody watching his or her neighbor—all of them self-conscious—a sad endeavor to be Bohemian. I prefer to read the evening papers and note the contradiction of news published at morning."

I fear that the weather, which has been tetric and discouraging, has affected the internal machinery of our estimable friend. He surely would have enjoyed himself last night. There were pretty women and there were brave men. All of them applauded the electric name of Dewey, and when the "Star-Spangled Banner" was played at the beginning of the concert the men were apparently anxious for a speedy draft.

The hall was decorated and embellished with running vines and a real waterfall and a huge flag, and at the rear of the hall was a landscape that afforded pleasant guessing. Was it a scene in the White Mountains, or the Holyoke-Tom range, as seen from Mt. Warner, or the harbor of Manila?

Mr. Zach had prepared an interesting, well-contrasted program, and he led gracefully and intelligently. His own waltz was encored, as were the waltz by Strauss and the second entr'acte from "Carmen," and the ballet music by Goldmark (in which Mr. Loeffler played sympathetically the Bee dance), and no doubt the patriotic music at the end, for I left after the mad merriment of Offenbach.

And the audience is more and more accustomed to the intimate relation between beer and music. There is no doubt that it enjoyed itself thoroughly and honestly. The Intelligent Foreigner himself would have testified to the improvement. And possibly the night may come when beer will be 5 cents a glass at these concerts, which run too quickly to their end.

The program this evening will be as follows:

March from "The Serenade"	Herbert
Overture, "Mignon"	Thomas
Waltz, "Meerleuchten"	Ziehrer
Selection, "Trovatore"	Verdi
Waltz and Pizzicato from "Sylvia"	Delibes
Sailors' Chorus from "The Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
Gavotte for String Orchestra	Bach
Invitation to Dance	Weber
Overture, "Pique Dame"	Suppé
Waltz, "Landeskinder" (First time.)	Strauss
Polka, "Tic-Tac"	Strobl
March, "Under the Double Eagle"	Wagner

Philip Hale.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, MAY 22, 1898.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

Every available seat and standing room was at a premium at the Music Hall Promenade Concert last evening. Music lovers have much to interest them at these popular concerts, now under full way. The music is all of a first-class, popular order, and rendered by an efficient orchestra, under the direction of Mr. Max Zach. Patrons are reminded that there will be no concert on Thursday evening next, owing to a long-standing engagement of the hall. With this exception, the concerts will continue every week-day evening until July 1. The following program has been selected by Conductor Zach for tomorrow (Monday) evening:

March, "King Cotton"	Sousa
Overture, "Le Pre aux Clercs"	Herold
Waltz, "Artist's Life"	Strauss
Selection, "Carmen"	Bizet
Baritone solo, Prologue from "Pagliacci" (Mr. Placido Fiumara.)	Leoncavallo
March from Symphony, "Leonore"	Raff
Overture, "Pique Dame"	Suppe
Valse Caprice	Rubinstein
Andante for string orchestra	Tschaikowsky
Waltz, "Pomone"	Waldteufel
Polka Mazourka, "Unparteische Kritik"	Strauss
Persian March	Strauss

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

THE POP CONCERTS.

With the coming of warmer weather the attendance at the promenade concerts at Music Hall has grown in numbers until every evening finds the auditorium well filled with a brilliant and enthusiastic audience. Conductor Zach shows excellent judgment in the selection of music precisely suited to the tastes of his listeners, and from the beginning has shown a marked recognition of the spirit of the times by introducing national music at various intervals through the programme.

It seems a glorious thing to see the entire audience rise to its feet whenever the orchestra plays any of our patriotic music, a custom which for years has prevailed in England, and which should obtain in this country, as it now bids fair to do. It is not an infrequent thing for the entire house to join in singing, and singing well, either "America" or the "Star Spangled Banner."

Friday evening was decidedly enlivened, first by the presence of a party of students from each of the three institutions, Harvard, Yale and Technology, who exchanged courtesies by complimentary cheering each of the other. About 9 o'clock the entrance of a party of ten American sailors was made the occasion of a tremendous ovation in the shape of cheers and applause.

Next Monday evening the programme will be varied by a baritone solo, the prologue from "Pagliacci," sung by Mr. Placido Fiumara, a member of the orchestra and a pupil of Campanari. The first Saturday night of the season broke the record for attendance in the past five years.

The orchestra cannot be surpassed in this country, and possibly not in Europe; the admission fee is very reasonable; the very best social element in Boston is represented every night, and everything points to a season as successful as any in the history of these concerts. Patrons are reminded that there will be no concert on Thursday evening next. With this exception the concerts will continue every week day evening until about July 4.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, MAY 10, 1898.

FIRST OF THE "POPS."

Music Hall Promenade Concert Season Opens—Conductor Max Zach Led Off With "The Star Spangled Banner."

The season of Music hall promenade concerts opened last evening, under the same auspicious circumstances which alone seem to belong to this thoroughly local institution. It was the same large, enthusiastic audience, the same old "pop" concert, delightfully mellowed perhaps with years, with just this exception. It opened and closed with a patriotic demonstration that has not been a feature of previous affairs, but the public rose to this occasion.

Just as conductor Max Zach took his place upon the director's stand the lights were dimmed, and over the stage was emblazoned this word, "Dewey." The illuminated name thrilled the audience, who arose from their places at the tables and cheered lustily, while Mr Zach waved his baton and the 50 instruments joined in "The Star Spangled Banner." The entire audience remained standing while the air was being played, and as the last chords died away tumultuous applause and cheering demanded a repetition of this national song. Again the orchestra played, and once more the house stood during the rendition.

This over, the house was ready to listen to the well-poised program that the conductor had arranged.

Music hall is a place which it is extremely difficult to beautify, but the dark interior was lightened by the plentiful use of light streamers and festoons of evergreen. A mammoth American flag was caught at each corner from the ceiling in the center of the hall, while scores of pale green streamers stretched from the national banner to the walls. A mountain landscape setting was used for the stage, and the scenic brook through the canvas valley terminated in a tumbling stream of running water.

Faces familiar at this annual event were there last evening, and Mr and Mrs John L. Gardner and a party occupied their customary table. Mr Ellerton P. Whitney, Mr Zerrahn, Mr John T. Linzee of Milton and several friends were seated nearby, while Mr T. Dennie Boardman and a party were in the audience.

Hardly a number was permitted to pass without an encore, and Mr Zach was obliging and responded graciously with a repetition in each instance. The program was:

American march	Ganne
Overture, Domino Noir	Auber
Waltz, Harlequin's Voyage	Zach
Selection, Mme Angot	Lecocq
Ballet music from The Queen of Sheba	Goldmark
Two entr'actes from Carmen	Bizet
Waltz, Kaiser	Strauss
Introduction to Act I, Lohengrin	Wagner
Potpourri, Offenbachiana	Conradi
Mazurka, La Mousme	Ganne
American fantasy	Bendix
March, Stars and Stripes Forever	Sousa

Sousa's closing march brought out as much cheering and hurrahs for the flag as did the equally pertinent opening number and as the closing chords were played men and women stood up cheering until the conductor waved his baton in obedience to the demand for an encore.

BOSTON POST.
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

The regular season of summer promenade concerts in Music Hall will open tomorrow (Monday) evening. Mr. Max Zach will again be the conductor, and the same general arrangements as in past seasons will be in force.

The programme for the first night is as follows:

American march (first time), Ganne; overture, "Domino Noir," Auber; waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage," Zach; selection, "Madame Angot," Lecocq; ballet music from "The Queen of Sheba," Goldmark; solo violoncello, Mr. E. Loeffler; two entr'actes from "Carmen," Bizet. The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number. Waltz, "Kaiser," Strauss; introduction to Act I., "Lohengrin," Wagner; potpourri, "Offenbachiana," Conradi; mazourka, "La Mousme," Ganne; American fantasy, Bendix; march, "Stars and Stripes Forever," Sousa.

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, MAY 22, 1898.

Music Hall Promenades.

The popularity of the promenade concerts at Music hall continues, and Max Zach's admirable orchestra is, as usual, an important factor in furnishing amusement for thousands of music lovers. The program for tomorrow evening has been arranged as follows:

March, King Cotton	Sousa
Overture, Le Pre aux Clercs	Herold
Waltz, Artist's Life	Strauss
Selection, Carmen	Bizet
Baritone solo, prologue from Pagliacci,	Leoncavallo
Mr Placido Fiumara.
March from symphony, Leonore	Raff
Overture, Pique Dame	Suppe
Valse caprice	Rubinstein
Andante for string orchestra	Tschaikowsky
Waltz, Pomone	Waldteufel
Polka mazourka, Unparteische Kritik	Strauss
Persian march	Strauss

Boston Sunday Globe.
FORTY-FOUR PAGES.
SUNDAY, MAY 8, 1898.

Summer Promenade Concerts.

There is every indication of a large and brilliant audience at the opening of the Music hall promenade concerts tomorrow evening. These concerts are unlike any other entertainment given in Boston during the year. A peculiar feature is the fact that they are enjoyed by hundreds of people who do not care for classical concerts, and who perhaps could not be induced to attend even one symphony concert.

Mr Max Zach will again be the conductor, which is a guarantee that the program will be all that the patrons could ask. The same general arrangements as in past will be in force. The program for the first concert is as follows:

American March	Ganne
Overture, Domino Noir	Auber
Waltz, Harlequin's Voyage	Zach
Selection, Madame Angot	Lecocq
Ballet music from The Queen of Sheba	Goldmark
Solo violoncello, Mr E. Loeffler.
Two entr' actes from Carmen	Bizet
Waltz, Kaiser	Strauss
Introduction to act I, Lohengrin	Wagner
Potpourri, Offenbachiana	Conradi
Mazourka, La Mousme	Ganne
American Fantasy	Bendix
March, Stars and Stripes Forever	Sousa

——The Music hall promenade concerts will open tomorrow evening. As has been the custom for several seasons past, the conductor will again be selected from the ranks of the Boston symphony orchestra, and the announcement will be received with pleasure that Mr Max Zach, who for the past three seasons has won many friends, will again conduct. Mr Zach has shown a very commendable intention to gratify all tastes, as evidenced by the earlier programs already in preparation. The business management will be under the direction of assistant manager F. R. Comee.

The Beacon.
BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 14, 1898.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

Monday evening the thirteenth season of the Music Hall promenade concerts opened with great éclat. These entertainments have steadily grown in popularity, and are now looked upon with almost as much interest as attaches to the Symphony concerts themselves. The light music they provide is heartily welcomed after a season devoted so largely to music of a wholly serious character, and the attendance at the first week's performances is sufficient indication that the favor with which these entertainments have met in the past is to be continued without abatement. Mr. F. R. Comee again manages the concerts, and the orchestra of 50 is under the direction of Mr. Max Zach, who has so ably directed during the past two seasons. There is the same general arrangement of reserved seats at tables for those who desire to be served with refreshments; also reserved seats in the balcony for others who go to enjoy the music and to catch a glimpse of Boston bohemianism.

Boston Courier.
SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 15, 1898.

MUSIC.

THE PROMENADES, ETC.

The new season of the Promenade Concerts at Music Hall has begun more auspiciously than ever under the direction of Mr. F. R. Comee, who has evolved some capital ideas for the decoration of the room and has succeeded in "going far with little." For the general conditions are such that not much space can be allowed for ornament, when about every inch is needed for the placing of the musicians and the audience. The title "Promenades" has gradually developed into a massive joke; for the ever-increasing demand for seats and tables has so restricted the aisles and passages that one needs to be almost as supple and sinuous as a snake and as insinuating as a bunko-steerer to get to his chair unbruising and unbruised, after the business of the evening has begun and the bulk of the crowd has established itself. So Mr. Comee has left the audience to do the decoration of the floor and balconies—and what with the extraordinary hats of the season, the irrelevant specimens of evening dress, the fair women and brave men, the lucent glasses of beer and the prim paleness of the lemonade, those parts of the room are all right. But he has caused a pleasant stretch of summer landscape to be hung before Apollo's niche and has had the stage mounted with an agreeably restful out-of-door set, the imaginary waterfall in whose back-cloth vista looks rather painty and make-believe-y in contrast to the miniature cascades of real trickling Cochituate which flank it.

The music—to which people pay more attention than a chance visitor might think—is first-rate, of course. How could it be else with a full band of fifty Symphony men, and with Mr. Zach to arrange and conduct the programmes? The disposition of each of the three hour' sections is about the same as heretofore, each including one solid, serious number, along with an operatic pot-pouri and a march, a ballabile or an overture. The usual variety of mild nourishments and inoffensive liquids is to be had, quickly and politely served and at the standard satisfactory prices. If one could only keep these evenings on all through the summer and in some accommodating place!

——Boston has rarely witnessed a more brilliant and enthusiastic audience than that which assembled in Music Hall Monday night to enjoy the first promenade concert of the season. For weeks in advance every table was engaged, and even the balcony seats went at a high premium. The hall looked extremely well with hundreds of yards of laurel festooned against a red background across the stage and balconies. At either end there was scenery representing tropical sections of the country, while a huge American flag, with a wide border of Nile green bunting, studded at intervals with electric lights, was stretched under the ceiling, forming a brilliant canopy, from which dozens of streamers of bunting were draped to the walls on all sides. At eight o'clock, as Conductor Zach stepped upon the stage, the word "Dewey" in electric lights was lowered from above over the orchestra, and simultaneously the musicians played "The Star Spangled Banner," while everyone in the hall arose and the applause was deafening. The floor and balconies were a mass of color, owing to the bizarre millinery so much in vogue at present, and to the gay clothes worn by many of the ladies. It may be observed, however, that four of Boston's most elegant women, Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mrs. Montgomery Sears, Mrs. Frank Seabury and Mrs. Eben Jordan, were attired in black gowns, elaborately jetted. A few of the many well known people present were Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson with Mr. Henry L. Higginson, jr., and his fiancee Miss Rosamond Tudor, Mr. and Mrs. James Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. William F. Apthorp, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dennie, Mr. and Mrs. Bennett, Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery Sears, Mr. Wallace Goodrich, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Seabury, Mr. T. Clarence Hollander and party, Mr. John C. Abbott, Mr and Mrs. Eben Jordan, Mr. W. H. Davis, Miss Hecht, Mr. Arthur K. Peck, Mrs. Phinehas Adams, Mr. Arthur Gilman, Miss Gertrude Edmunds, Miss C. Mabel Beaman, Miss Brazier, Mr. Walter S. Hawkins, Mrs. Charles Clarke, Mrs. S. B. Field, Mrs. Fred R Comee and party, Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Barnet, Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Holden and Miss Holden, Commissioner and Mrs. Robert Clark, Mr. and Miss Ticknor, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Robinson, Mr Ernest Houston, Mr. William Houston, and Mrs. Houston, Capt. and Mrs. William H. Alline, Mr. and Mrs. S. Peabody Flagg, Dr. Galloupe, Mr. and Mrs. Fiske Warren, Mr. T. Dennie Boardman, Colonel Gordon Dexter, Mr. Walter De Land Came, Mrs. George Sedgwick, Mrs. T. O. Rogers, Mr. E. Rollins Morse, Mrs. Franz Zerrahn, Dr. Harry Clinton O'Brien, Mr. and Mrs. Hollen C. Spaulding and Mr. and Mrs. Leo Melzinger.

The Beacon.
BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 21, 1898.

THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

Music Hall is at its gayest just now, and the best new clothes, as well as the prettiest girls in town, may be seen there any evening.

The second week of the thirteenth season of promenade concerts ends tonight with much enthusiasm for Mr. Zach, the conductor, and the orchestra. The attendance during the week has been equal to that of past seasons, and demonstrations of enthusiasm have been especially noticeable when the orchestra has played patriotic and national airs. To listen to good music at one's ease is a luxury enjoyed at these concerts, which are also the very best in their kind.

Nobody should miss the "Pops."

The [illegible]
OF [illegible]AND.
SUNDAY [illegible]
(Copyright 18[illegible])

THE PROMENA[illegible]

The attendance during the past week at the Music Hall promenade concerts has been very large and fully attests the continued popularity of these entertainments. Much enthusiasm has been shown whatever the orchestra has played our national airs. Mr. Zach is very highly praised for the able way in which he leads the orchestra.

Tomorrow evening the programme will be as follows: March, "Merry Soldiers," (first time) Sabathil; overture, "Zampa," Herold; waltz, "Morgenblatter," Strauss; potpourri of Meyerbeer's operas, (first time), Schreiner; ballet music from "Faust," Gounod; babbie waltzes from "The Little Minister" (first time), Fuerst; berceuse, Clayton Johns; serenata, Moszkowski; Rhapsody in C, Liszt; overture, "Freischutz," Weber; Narcissus, Nevin; Ride of the Hussars, Spindler; Tabasco march, Chadwick.

As usual, the Pop concerts opened brilliantly on Monday evening, and proved an agreeable diversion from the excitement of the streets incident to the war. With commendable patriotism, Manager Comee introduced a feature in the way of a surprise that brought the entire audience to its feet simultaneously. The magic word "Dewey," suspended over the musicians' heads and in electric lights, was a happy thought, indeed. Most natural, too, for Conductor Zach to present as his opening number "The Star Spangled Banner," and, by the way, this most popular of all airs now is played each evening in opening the programme, and is always applauded to the echo.

The audiences throughout the week have been large, enthusiastic and fashionable—that is, nearly all the society folks in town (more than the usual number this week) have attended. Monday's gathering was notable in that respect. Rarely has there been such a pleasing sight presented to the balcony occupants as on this night, the millinery and gay gowns of the ladies making a kaleidoscope of blending colors, relieved by a number of rich black gowns, four of which were worn by leading society women.

Mr. and Mrs. Gardner arrived early with a party of friends, which included stately Miss Robinson of New York. Mrs. Gardner has rarely appeared to better advantage than on this night, gowned in black silk, the bodice glistening with cut jet. She wore a dark hat, with a cluster of dull blue feathers and red roses. Miss Robinson was in white taffeta silk, trimmed with bands of black lace insertion, and on her head was a large hat of black straw, with many plumes. Near the Gardner table was that of Colonel Henry L. Higginson and his son, Alexander Higginson, with Miss Rosamond Tudor as their fair guest.

Noted elsewhere in the ring were Mr. and Mrs. J. Montgomery Sears, Mrs. Sears also in black with jet trimmings and a small toque with white feather pompon. She looked very distingue. Mrs. Franz Zerrahn, Mr. E. Rollins Morse and large party from Milton were on hand, as were Mr. and Mrs. Eben Jordan, Mrs. Jordan in black with touches of white about the bodice.

Mrs. William Apthorp, Mr. T. Dennie Boardman, with the Jordans, Mr. George Sedgwick, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Seabury—the latter the most distinguished appearing woman present, all in black and vastly becoming to her Junoesque type of beauty; Mr. Walter Goodrich, Mr. and Mrs. Bennett (with the Seaburys), Mr. William P. Blake, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. James Houston, Mr. Ernest Houston, Dr. Galloupe, Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Holden, with large party of young folks; Mr. and Mrs. Fiske Warren, Mrs. F. R. Comee, Miss Gertrude Edmands, Mrs. Phinehas Adams, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Barnet, with friends; Mr. Walter Hawkins, Mrs. Philip Hale, Mr. Arthur Gilmore, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dennee, Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Metcalf, Mr. T. Clarence Hollander, with party, were especially noted. In the balcony were Commissioner and Mrs. Clark, Miss C. Mabel Beaman, the violinist; Miss Helen M. Fogler, Mrs. Thomas O. Rogers, Captain and Mrs. W. H. Alline, Mrs. Flora S. Potter, Mrs. Robbins and daughter, Miss Anna Robbins. Ex-Secretary Richard Olney was an interested auditor last evening.

Monday's programme will introduce three new numbers and is as follows:

March, "Merry Soldiers"	Sabathil
(First time.)
Overture, "Zampa"	Herold
Waltz, "Morgenblatter"	Strauss
Potpourii of Meyerbeer's Operas	Schreiner
(First time.)
Ballet Music from "Faust"	Gounod
Babbie Waltzes from "The Little Minister"	Fuerst
(First time.)
Berceuse	Clayton Johns
Serenata	Moskowski
Rhapsody in C	Liszt
Overture, "Freischutz"	Weber
Narcissus	Nevin
Ride of the Hussars	Spindler
Tabasco March	Chadwick

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Tomorrow evening the 13th season of the Music Hall promenade concerts will begin. These entertainments have steadily grown in popularity, and are now looked for with almost as much interest as attaches to the Symphony concerts themselves. The light music they provide is heartily welcomed after a season devoted so largely to music of a wholly serious character, and the eager demand for seats for the first week's performances is sufficient indication that the favor with which these entertainments have met in the past is to be continued without abatement. Mr. F. R. Comee will again manage the concerts, and the orchestra of 50 will be under the direction of Mr. Max Zach, who has so ably directed during the past two seasons. There will be the same general arrangement of reserved seats at tables for those who desire to be served with refreshments; also reserved seats in the balcony for others who go to enjoy the music and to catch a glimpse of Boston bohemianism. Mr. Zach has selected the following numbers for the opening programme:

American March	Ganne
(First time.)
Overture, "Domino Noir"	Auber
Waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage"	Zach
Selection, "Mme. Angot"	Lecocq
Ballet music from "The Queen of Sheba"	Goldmark
Two entr'actes from "Carmen"	Bizet
Waltz, "Kaiser"	Strauss
Introduction to act I, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Potpourri, "Offenbachiana"	Conradi
Mazourka, "La Mousme"	Ganne
American fantasy	Bendix
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

Every table seat is sold already for the opening of the season tomorrow night. Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery Sears, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mr. Alexander Higginson, who will entertain his fiancee, Miss Rosamond Tudor, with a chaperon and young party, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Mr. and Mrs. Franz Zerrahn, who will bring in friends from Milton; Mr. and Mrs. Apthorp, Dr. and Mrs. S. J. Mixter, and many more have secured tables.

THE BOSTON TIMES
(ESTABLISHED 1864.)
EVERY SUNDAY,
At 20 HAWLEY STREET.

POP CONCERTS UNDER WAY

Society Out Every Evening for a Sight of Bohemia.

Max Zach Given a Hearty Welcome Monday Night—Not Certain that Mr. Gericke is Coming Across the Water—Mr. Walter Damrosch on the New York Musical Atmosphere—Sousa and His Band Coming.

THE DEAR OLD Pop concerts have been welcomed by crowds of thoroughly Bostonese people at Music hall all the week. To be sure, the temperature has not reached a degree when people can be most refreshed by the cooling beverages which are served there, and can langorously enjoy in the most exquisite sense the music, the tobacco fumes, and the staccato of popping bottles which accompanies it all, but perhaps the more bracing weather of the past week has made the habitués of the "pops" more keenly alive to the social enjoyment which they offer, and the pleasure of the music has been more discriminately impressive than it will be later on.

Max Zach was heartily welcomed Monday night when he stepped to the conductor's stand and has proven himself the right man for the place nightly during the week. Mr. F. R. Comee never makes any ostentation in conducting the affairs which he manages but the firm influence of his rule is felt in the good order, ready response of the attendants, and everything else which goes to make these affairs so popular and so enjoyable.

Vive! the Pop!

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS in Music hall are, as ever, just the sort of amusement that music loving Boston wants at this between-season time. Max Zach's programmes are wisely chosen, with just enough serious music to make the bulk of it which is frivolous, the more fascinating in contrast. "The Star Spangled Banner," "America," "Marching Through Georgia," and other martial airs always touch a responsive chord. The patriotic electrical contrivance was a happy thought of Manager Comee's, and this year's stage setting is the prettiest we have ever had at the "Pops."

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

The regular season of summer promenade concerts in Music Hall will open tomorrow (Monday) evening. Mr. Max Zach will again be the conductor, and the same general arrangements as in past seasons will be in force.

The programme for the first night is as follows:

American march (first time), Ganne; overture, "Domino Noir," Auber; waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage," Zach; selection, "Madame Angot," Lecocq; ballet music from "The Queen of Sheba," Goldmark; solo violoncello, Mr. E. Loeffler; two entr'actes from "Carmen," Bizet. The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number. Waltz, "Kaiser," Strauss; introduction to Act I., "Lohengrin," Wagner; potpourri, "Offenbachiana," Conradi; mazourka, "La Mousme," Ganne; American fantasy, Bendix; march, "Stars and Stripes Forever," Sousa.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, MAY 22, 1898.

Music Hall Promenades.

The popularity of the promenade concerts at Music hall continues, and Max Zach's admirable orchestra is, as usual, an important factor in furnishing amusement for thousands of music lovers. The program for tomorrow evening has been arranged as follows:

March, King Cotton ....Sousa
Overture, Le Pre aux Clercs ....Herold
Waltz, Artist's Life ....Strauss
Selection, Carmen ....Bizet
Baritone solo, prologue from Pagliacci,
Leoncavallo

Mr Placido Fiumara.

March from symphony, Leonore ....Raff
Overture, Pique Dame ....Suppe
Valse caprice ....Rubinstein
Andante for string orchestra .....Tschaikowsky
Waltz, Pomone ....Waldteufel
Polka mazourka, Unparteische Kritik ...Strauss
Persian march ....Strauss

Boston Sunday Globe.

FORTY-FOUR PAGES.

SUNDAY, MAY 8, 1898.

Summer Promenade Concerts.

There is every indication of a large and brilliant audience at the opening of the Music hall promenade concerts tomorrow evening. These concerts are unlike any other entertainment given in Boston during the year. A peculiar feature is the fact that they are enjoyed by hundreds of people who do not care for classical concerts, and who perhaps could not be induced to attend even one symphony concert.

Mr Max Zach will again be the conductor, which is a guarantee that the program will be all that the patrons could ask. The same general arrangements as in past will be in force. The program for the first concert is as follows:

American March ....Ganne
Overture, Domino Noir......................Auber
Waltz, Harlequin's Voyage...................Zach
Selection, Madame Angot...................Lecocq
Ballet music from The Queen of Sheba.Goldmark
Solo violoncello, Mr E. Loeffler.
Two entr' actes from Carmen ....Bizet
Waltz, Kaiser ....Strauss
Introduction to act I, Lohengrin.........Wagner
Potpourri, Offenbachiana ....Conradi
Mazourka, La Mousme........................Ganne
American Fantasy ....Bendix
March, Stars and Stripes Forever..........Sousa

——The Music hall promenade concerts will open tomorrow evening. As has been the custom for several seasons past, the conductor will again be selected from the ranks of the Boston symphony orchestra, and the announcement will be received with pleasure that Mr Max Zach, who for the past three seasons has won many friends, will again conduct. Mr Zach has shown a very commendable intention to gratify all tastes, as evidenced by the earlier programs already in preparation. The business management will be under the direction of assistant manager F. R. Comee.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 14, 1898.

THE "POP" CONCERTS.

Monday evening the thirteenth season of the Music Hall promenade concerts opened with great éclat. These entertainments have steadily grown in popularity, and are now looked upon with almost as much interest as attaches to the Symphony concerts themselves. The light music they provide is heartily welcomed after a season devoted so largely to music of a wholly serious character, and the attendance at the first week's performances is sufficient indication that the favor with which these entertainments have met in the past is to be continued without abatement. Mr. F. R. Comee again manages the concerts, and the orchestra of 50 is under the direction of Mr. Max Zach, who has so ably directed during the past two seasons. There is the same general arrangement of reserved seats at tables for those who desire to be served with refreshments; also reserved seats in the balcony for others who go to enjoy the music and to catch a glimpse of Boston bohemianism.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 15, 1898.

MUSIC.

THE PROMENADES, ETC.

The new season of the Promenade Concerts at Music Hall has begun more auspiciously than ever under the direction of Mr. F. R. Comee, who has evolved some capital ideas for the decoration of the room and has succeeded in "going far with little." For the general conditions are such that not much space can be allowed for ornament, when about every inch is needed for the placing of the musicians and the audience. The title "Promenades" has gradually developed into a massive joke; for the ever-increasing demand for seats and tables has so restricted the aisles and passages that one needs to be almost as supple and sinuous as a snake and as insinuating as a bunko-steerer to get to his chair unbruising and unbruised, after the business of the evening has begun and the bulk of the crowd has established itself. So Mr. Comee has left the audience to do the decoration of the floor and balconies—and what with the extraordinary hats of the season, the irrelevant specimens of evening dress, the fair women and brave men, the lucent glasses of beer and the prim paleness of the lemonade, those parts of the room are all right. But he has caused a pleasant stretch of summer landscape to be hung before Apollo's niche and has had the stage mounted with an agreeably restful out-of-door set, the imaginary waterfall in whose back-cloth vista looks rather painty and make-believe-y in contrast to the miniature cascades of real trickling Cochituate which flank it.

The music—to which people pay more attention than a chance visitor might think—is first-rate, of course. How could it be else with a full band of fifty Symphony men, and with Mr. Zach to arrange and condnct the programmes? The disposition of each of the three hour' sections is about the same as heretofore, each including one solid, serious number, along with an operatic pot-pouri and a march, a ballabile or an overture. The usual variety of mild nourishments and inoffensive liquids is to be had, quickly and politely served and at the standard satisfactory prices. If one could only keep these evenings on all through the summer and in some accommodating place!

——Boston has rarely witnessed a more brillian and enthusiastic audience than that which assembled in Music Hall Monday night to enjoy the first promenade concert of the season. For weeks in advance every table was engaged, and even the balcony seats went at a high premium. The hall looked extremely well with hundreds of yards of laurel festooned against a red background across the stage and balconies. At either end there was scenery representing tropical sections of the country, while a huge American flag, with a wide border of Nile green bunting, studded at intervals with electric lights, was stretched under the ceiling, forming a brilliant canopy, from which dozens of streamers of bunting were draped to the walls on all sides. At eight o'clock, as Conductor Zach stepped upon the stage, the word "Dewey" in electric lights was lowered from above over the orchestra, and simultaneously the musicians played "The Star Spangled Banner," while everyone in the hall arose and the applause was deafening. The floor and balconies were a mass of color, owing to the bizarre millinery so much in vogue at present, and to the gay clothes worn by many of the ladies. It may be observed, however, that four of Boston's most elegant women, Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mrs. Montgomery Sears, Mrs. Frank Seabury and Mrs. Eben Jordan, were attired in black gowns, elaborately jetted. A few of the many well known people present were Mr and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson with Mr. Henry L. Higginson, jr., and his fiancee Miss Rosamond Tudor, Mr. and Mrs. James Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. William F. Apthorp, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dennie, Mr. and Mrs. Bennett, Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery Sears, Mr. Wallace Goodrich, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Seabury, Mr. T. Clarence Hollander and party, Mr. John C. Abbott, Mr and Mrs. Eben Jordan, Mr. W. H. Davis, Miss Hecht, Mr. Arthur K. Peck, Mrs. Phinehas Adams, Mr. Arthur Gilman, Miss Gertrude Edmunds, Miss C. Mabel Beaman, Miss Brazier, Mr. Walter S. Hawkins, Mrs. Charles Clarke, Mrs. S. B. Field, Mrs. Fred R Comee and party, Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Barnet, Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Holden and Miss Holden, Commissioner and Mrs. Robert Clark, Mr. and Miss Ticknor, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Robinson, Mr Ernest Houston, Mr. William Houston, and Mrs. Houston, Capt. and Mrs. William H. Alline, Mr. and Mrs. S. Peabody Flagg, Dr. Galloupe, Mr. and Mrs. Fiske Warren, Mr. T. Dennie Boardman, Colonel Gordon Dexter, Mr. Walter De Land Came, Mrs. George Sedgwick, Mrs. T. O. Rogers, Mr. E. Rollins Morse, Mrs. Franz Zerrahn, Dr. Harry Clinton O'Brien, Mr. and Mrs. Hollen C. Spaulding and Mr. and Mrs. Leo Melzinger.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 21, 1898.

THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

Music Hall is at its gayest just now, and the best new clothes, as well as the prettiest girls in town, may be seen there any evening.

The second week of the thirteenth season of promenade concerts ends tonight with much enthusiasm for Mr. Zach, the conductor, and the orchestra. The attendance during the week has been equal to that of past seasons, and demonstrations of enthusiasm have been especially noticeable when the orchestra has played patriotic and national airs. To listen to good music at one's ease is a luxury enjoyed at these concerts, which are also the very best in their kind.

Nobody should miss the "Pops."

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 15, 1898.

(Copyright 1898 Post Publishing Company.)

THE PROMENADES.

The attendance during the past week at the Music Hall promenade concerts has been very large and fully attests the continued popularity of these entertainments. Much enthusiasm has been shown whatever the orchestra has played our national airs. Mr. Zach is very highly praised for the able way in which he leads the orchestra.

Tomorrow evening the programme will be as follows: March, "Merry Soldiers," (first time) Sabathil; overture, "Zampa," Herold; waltz, "Morgenblatter," Strauss; potpourri of Meyerbeer's operas, (first time), Schreiner; ballet music from "Faust," Gounod; babbie waltzes from "The Little Minister" (first time), Fuerst; berceuse, Clayton Johns; serenata, Moszkowski; Rhapsody in C, Liszt; overture, "Freischutz," Weber; Narcissus, Nevin; Ride of the Hussars, Spindler; Tabasco march, Chadwick.

As usual, the Pop concerts opened brilliantly on Monday evening, and proved an agreeable diversion from the excitement of the streets incident to the war. With commendable patriotism, Manager Comee introduced a feature in the way of a surprise that brought the entire audience to its feet simultaneously. The magic word "Dewey," suspended over the musicians' heads and in electric lights, was a happy thought, indeed. Most natural, too, for Conductor Zach to present as his opening number "The Star Spangled Banner," and, by the way, this most popular of all airs now is played each evening in opening the programme, and is always applauded to the echo.

The audiences throughout the week have been large, enthusiastic and fashionable—that is, nearly all the society folks in town (more than the usual number this week) have attended. Monday's gathering was notable in that respect. Rarely has there been such a pleasing sight presented to the balcony occupants as on this night, the millinery and gay gowns of the ladies making a kaleidoscope of blending colors, relieved by a number of rich black gowns, four of which were worn by leading society women.

Mr. and Mrs. Gardner arrived early with a party of friends, which included stately Miss Robinson of New York. Mrs. Gardner has rarely appeared to better advantage than on this night, gowned in black silk, the bodice glistening with cut jet. She wore a dark hat, with a cluster of dull blue feathers and red roses. Miss Robinson was in white taffeta silk, trimmed with bands of black lace insertion, and on her head was a large hat of black straw, with many plumes. Near the Gardner table was that of Colonel Henry L. Higginson and his son, Alexander Higginson, with Miss Rosamond Tudor as their fair guest.

Noted elsewhere in the ring were Mr. and Mrs. J. Montgomery Sears, Mrs. Sears also in black with jet trimmings and a small toque with white feather pompon. She looked very distingue. Mrs. Franz Zerrahn, Mr. E. Rollins Morse and large party from Milton were on hand, as were Mr. and Mrs. Eben Jordan, Mrs. Jordan in black with touches of white about the bodice.

Mrs. William Apthorp, Mr. T. Dennie Boardman, with the Jordans, Mr. George Sedgwick, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Seabury—the latter the most distinguished appearing woman present, all in black and vastly becoming to her Junoesque type of beauty; Mr. Walter Goodrich, Mr. and Mrs. Bennett (with the Seaburys), Mr. William P. Blake, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. James Houston, Mr. Ernest Houston, Dr. Galloupe, Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Holden, with large party of young folks; Mr. and Mrs. Fiske Warren, Mrs. F. R. Comee, Miss Gertrude Edmands, Mrs. Phinehas Adams, Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Barnet, with friends; Mr. Walter Hawkins, Mrs. Philip Hale, Mr. Arthur Gilmore, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dennee, Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Metcalf, Mr. T. Clarence Hollander, with party, were especially noted. In the balcony were Commissioner and Mrs. Clark, Miss C. Mabel Beaman, the violinist; Miss Helen M. Fogler, Mrs. Thomas O. Rogers, Captain and Mrs. W. H. Alline, Mrs. Flora S. Potter, Mrs. Robbins and daughter, Miss Anna Robbins. Ex-Secretary Richard Olney was an interested auditor last evening.

Monday's programme will introduce three new numbers and is as follows:

March, "Merry Soldiers"........Sabathil
(First time.)
Overture, "Zampa"....................Herold
Waltz, "Morgenblatter"............Strauss
Potpourii of Meyerbeer's Operas.Schreiner
(First time.)
Ballet Music from "Faust"........Gounod
Babbie Waltzes from "The Little Minister" ....Fuerst
(First time.)
Berceuse.........................Clayton Johns
Serenata ....Moskowski
Rhapsody in C................................Liszt
Overture, "Freischutz"...................Weber
Narcissus ....Nevin
Ride of the Hussars................Spindler
Tabasco March.....................Chadwick

• • • • • • • •

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIII., NO. 129.

MONDAY, MAY 9, 1898.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Tomorrow evening the 13th season of the Music Hall promenade concerts will begin. These entertainments have steadily grown in popularity, and are now looked for with almost as much interest as attaches to the Symphony concerts themselves. The light music they provide is heartily welcomed after a season devoted so largely to music of a wholly serious character, and the eager demand for seats for the first week's performances is sufficient indication that the favor with which these entertainments have met in the past is to be continued without abatement. Mr. F. R. Comee will again manage the concerts, and the orchestra of 50 will be under the direction of Mr. Max Zach, who has so ably directed during the past two seasons. There will be the same general arrangement of reserved seats at tables for those who desire to be served with refreshments; also reserved seats in the balcony for others who go to enjoy the music and to catch a glimpse of Boston bohemianism. Mr. Zach has selected the following numbers for the opening programme:

American March..............................Ganne
(First time.)
Overture, "Domino Noir"......................Auber
Waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage"...................Zach
Selection, "Mme. Angot"....................Lecocq
Ballet music from "The Queen of Sheba"
Goldmark
Two entr'actes from "Carmen"..........Bizet
Waltz, "Kaiser".............................Strauss
Introduction to act 1, "Lohengrin"....Wagner
Potpourri, "Offenbachiana"...........Conradi
Mazourka, "La Mousme"....................Ganne
American fantasy...........................Bendix
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"....Sousa

Every table seat is sold already for the opening of the season tomorrow night. Mr. and Mrs. Montgomery Sears, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mr. Alexander Higginson, who will entertain his fiancee, Miss Rosamond Tudor, with a chaperon and young party, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Mr. and Mrs. Franz Zerrahn, who will bring in friends from Milton; Mr. and Mrs. Apthorp, Dr. and Mrs. S. J. Mixter, and many more have secured tables.

THE BOSTON TIMES
(ESTABLISHED 1864.)
EVERY SUNDAY,
AT 20 HAWLEY STREET.

POP CONCERTS UNDER WAY

Society Out Every Evening for a Sight of Bohemia.

Max Zach Given a Hearty Welcome Monday Night—Not Certain that Mr. Gericke is Coming Across the Water—Mr. Walter Damrosch on the New York Musical Atmosphere—Sousa and His Band Coming.

THE DEAR OLD Pop concerts have been welcomed by crowds of thoroughly Bostonese people at Music hall all the week. To be sure, the temperature has not reached a degree when people can be most refreshed by the cooling beverages which are served there, and can langorously enjoy in the most exquisite sense the music, the tobacco fumes, and the staccato of popping bottles which accompanies it all, but perhaps the more bracing weather of the past week has made the habitués of the "pops" more keenly alive to the social enjoyment which they offer, and the pleasure of the music has been more discriminately impressive than it will be later on.

Max Zach was heartily welcomed Monday night when he stepped to the conductor's stand and has proven himself the right man for the place nightly during the week. Mr. F. R. Comee never makes any ostentation in conducting the affairs which he manages but the firm influence of his rule is felt in the good order, ready response of the attendants, and everything else which goes to make these affairs so popular and so enjoyable.

Vive! the Pop!

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS in Music hall are, as ever, just the sort of amusement that music loving Boston wants at this between—season time. Max Zach's programmes are wisely chosen, with just enough serious music to make the bulk of it which is frivolous, the more fascinating in contrast. "The Star Spangled Banner," "America," "Marching Through Georgia," and other martial airs always touch a responsive chord. The patriotic electrical contrivance was a happy thought of Manager Comee's, and this year's stage setting is the prettiest we have ever had at the "Pops."

[26]

SUNDAY HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIII., NO. 142.
SUNDAY, MAY 22, 1898.

THE PROMENADES.

With the coming of warmer weather the Promenade concert audiences at Music Hall have grown in size until every evening finds the auditorium well filled. Conductor Zach shows excellent judgment in the selection of music suited to the tastes of his listeners, and from the beginning has shown a marked recognition of the spirit of the times by introducing national music at various intervals through the programme. It is inspiriting to see the entire audience rise to its feet whenever the orchestra plays our patriotic airs, and it is not infrequent for the entire house to join in singing either "America" or "The Star Spangled Banner." Friday evening was decidedly enlivened, first by the presence of parties of students from Harvard, Yale and Technology, who exchanged courtesies by complimentary cheering each of the other. About nine o'clock the entrance of a group of 10 American sailors was made the occasion of a tremendous ovation in the shape of cheers and applause. Tomorrow evening the programme will be varied by a baritone solo, the prologue from "Pagliacci," sung by Placido Fiumara, a member of the orchestra and a pupil of Campanari. The first Saturday night of the season broke the record for attendance in the past five years. Patrons are reminded that owing to a long-standing engagement of the hall there will be no concert Thursday evening, May 26. With this exception the concerts will continue every week day evening until about July 4. The programme for tomorrow evening is:

March, "King Cotton"	Sousa
Overture, "Le Pre aux Clercs"	Herold
Waltz, "Artist's Life"	Strauss
Selection, "Carmen"	Bizet
Baritone solo, prologue from "Pagliacci."	Leoncavallo
March from Symphony, "Leonore"	Raff
Overture, "Pique Dame"	Suppe
Valse Caprice	Rubinstein
Andante for string orchestra	Tschaikowsky
Waltz, "Pomone"	Waldteufel
Polka Mazourka	Strauss
Persian March	Strauss

The second week of the Pops has been quite as successful as the preceding one, and nightly Music Hall has been filled with smart and appreciative audiences, without the slightest diminution of enthusiasm. Monday night Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond had a party and Col. Gordon Dexter also. On Tuesday night Mr. Alexander Higginson entertained his fiancee, Miss Tudor, and her friends, at one of the larger tables. Miss Gertrude Edmands had a party, and so did Mr. Leighton Beal and Mr. Walter Winslow. Mrs. Henry L. Higginson brought a party on Wednesday night, also Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Steinert and Dr. Galloupe, Matthew Luce, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Gay, Col. Hastings, Mr. Harleston Parker, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Claflin and party and Mr. Saltonstall were others.

At the Pops Thursday night there was an especially brilliant audience, and the various table parties of young people were very attractive. Mrs. Edward N. Fenno chaperoned a smart party, in which were Miss Lena Stevenson, in a quiet costume of navy blue, with hat of blue and white straw, lace and flowers; Miss Mollie Sargent, Miss Marion Fenno, in pale blue bodice, hat of rough straw to match; Mr. Philip Dalton and several more. Another party at a floor table was Mr. Johnson Morton's, which was made up of Miss Robinson of New York, in a superb Driscoll costume of black and white silk, and an enormous round hat, worn on the back of the head, of black straw, with black and white feathers; Miss Robinson's brother, Mr. Moncure Robinson; Mrs. Fiske Warren and Mr. Lawrence Butler.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

The regular season of summer promenade concerts in Music Hall will open tomorrow (Monday) evening. Mr. Max Zach will again be the conductor, and the same general arrangements as in past seasons will be in force.

The programme for the first night is as follows:

American march (first time), Ganne; overture, "Domino Noir," Auber; waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage," Zach; selection, "Madame Angot," Lecocq; ballet music from "The Queen of Sheba," Goldmark; solo violoncello, Mr. E. Loeffler; two entr'actes from "Carmen," Bizet. The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number. Waltz, "Kaiser," Strauss; introduction to Act I., "Lohengrin," Wagner; potpourri, "Offenbachiana," Conradi; mazourka, "La Mousme," Ganne; American fantasy, Bendix; march, "Stars and Stripes Forever," Sousa.

[illegible]
MONDAY, MAY 9, 1898

PROMENADE CONCERTS TONIGHT

Music Hall Especially Decorated for These Popular Entertainments—Novel Features and an Excellent Programme for the Opening

Again has the big electric sign "Promenade Concert" been placed in position across the Hamilton-place entrance to Music Hall, to announce the opening concert of the season tonight. When the people who have been fortunate enough to secure a table or balcony seats for the concerts enter the hall this evening they will find that unusual preparation has been made for the season's concerts.

Mr. Frederic R. Comee, upon whom, in the absence of manager C. A. Ellis, falls the actual management of these concerts, has had carried out under his direction much in the way of decoration to relieve the hall of its wonted severe look. In the centre of the hall, stretched tight on a frame hanging some feet below the ceiling, is a fine American flag 20 by 30 feet. Fastened to this, depending from its edges, are many little electric lights. From the frame on which the flag is stretched, broad streamers of apple-green bunting radiate; thirty-six of these streamers are arranged like the spokes of a wheel of which the flag forms a rectangular hub. The other ends of the streamers are fastened to the intersection of the ceiling and walls of the hall.

In the rear of the second balcony a painted canvas, representing a pastoral scene, hides from view the large statue of Apollo. On the stage a large set scene is placed with wings and sky drop. It represents a tropical scene, with mountains forming the background. From the high rocks two cascades have been cleverly constructed, and running water will add to the effect, as it rushes down to a bank concealed by palms and tropical verdure. The balcony fronts are backed by red bunting and festoons of laurel adorn the front of the balconies. Pine trees here and there add to the "summery" appearance of the place.

The platforms for the orchestra have been arranged to resemble grass-covered terraces. There will be fifty musicians, conducted by Max Zach. Familiar faces will be found in the ranks, some of the players having been identified with these concerts ever since they were inaugurated. Tonight's concert marks the opening of the thirteenth season, and it will be the 656th performance of a promenade concert under this management. Seats for this evening were all disposed of a week or more ago, and a large audience is assured. Following the old custom, the main part of the hall will be fenced off, and inside the "ring," as patrons call the enclosure, and in the rear of the first balcony, the tables will be reserved, as will seats on the sides of the first balcony. All other tables and seats in the different parts of the hall are available on simple admission tickets.

Manager Comee has planned some special features for tonight, and these are sure to be well received. He is to have the latest war news announced on a blackboard bulletin to be placed on the stage during the regular intermissions. Conductor Zach has arranged this programme for the opening of the season:

1.	American March. (First Time).	Gannet
2.	Overture, "Domino Noir"	Auber
3.	Waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage"	Zach
4.	Selection, "Madame Angot"	Lecocq
5.	Ballet Music from "The Queen of Sheba"	Goldmark
	Solo Violoncello, Mr. E. Loeffler.
6.	Two Entr'actes from "Carmen"	Bizet
7.	Waltz, "Kaiser"	Strauss
8.	Introduction to Act I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
9.	Potpourri. "Offenbachiana"	Conradi
10.	Mazourka, "La Monsmé"	Ganne
11.	American Fantasy	Bendix
12.	March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

The Beacon.
BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1898.

THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

Large and fashionable audiences fill Music Hall every night nowadays, so popular are the Promenade concerts under the efficient management of Messrs. Ellis and Comee. Conductor Zach shows excellent judgment in the selection of music suited to the tastes of his listeners, and from the beginning has shown a marked recognition of the spirit of the times by introducing national music at various intervals through the program. It is inspiriting to see the entire audience rise to its feet whenever the orchestra plays our patriotic airs, and it is not infrequent for the entire house to join in singing either "America" or "The Star Spangled Banner."

Monday evening the program was varied by a baritone solo, the prologue from "Pagliacci," sung by Placido Fiumara, a member of the orchestra and a pupil of Campanari, and every night this week an equally good program has been offered. The concerts will continue every week day evening until about July 4.

SUNDAY HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIII., NO. 135.
SUNDAY, MAY 15, 1898.

THE PROMENADES.

The first week of the 13th season of promenade concerts at Music Hall ended last night with much enthusiasm for Mr. Zach, the conductor, and the orchestra. The attendance during the week has been equal to that of past seasons, and demonstrations of enthusiasm have been especially noticeable when the orchestra has played patriotic and national airs. To listen to good music at one's ease is a luxury that may be enjoyed at these concerts, which are also the very best in their kind.

Mr. Zach has arranged the following programme for Monday evening:

March, "Merry Soldiers"	Sabathil
Overture, "Zampa"	Herold
Waltz, "Morgenblatter"	Strauss
Potpourri of Meyerbeer's operas	Schreiner
Ballet music from "Faust"	Gounod
Babbie waltzes from "The Little Minister"	Fuerst
Berceuse	Clayton Johns
Serenata	Moszkowski
Rhapsody in C	Liszt
Overture, "Freischutz"	Weber
Narcissus	Nevin
Ride of the Hussars	Spindler
Tabasco March	Chadwick

We do not remember to have seen a larger, smarter, more attractive or a better dressed company ever assembled at the Music Hall for the popular Pops on any night of past seasons than that which assisted at the inauguration of the present one Monday night. No wonder Manager Comee's face was wreathed in smiles, for from the opening number until the last note there was enthusiasm galore, and everybody seemed to be in just the right touch with the patriotic surroundings. The decorations were in perfect keeping with the atmosphere, and when Mr. Comee's surprise in the shape of the word "Dewey," suspended in huge electric letters over the platform, blazed upon the scene, there was a pandemonium of applause. The mountain landscape setting, which fills in the back of the stage, with its tumbling streams of real water, was a happy inspiration, restful and pleasant to the eye, and a relief to the usual painful bareness.

Among those specially noted gathered around the tables that night were Mr. Rollins Morse, who was with Mr. and Mrs. John T. Linzee and Mrs. Zerrahn. Mrs. Linzee looking especially well in a smart black and white costume, the coat bodice opening over white lace and chiffon, and a picture hat. Mr. and Mrs. Eben Jordan, whose guests at their table were Miss Helen Balderston and Mr. Dennie Boardman. Mrs. Jordan, handsome in a superb black Parisian costume, the embroidered coat opening over pleated white chiffon with much lace. Her picture hat was of chiffon, jet and plumes. Mr. and Mrs. Fiske Warren had at their table Mr. W. P. Blake, among others. Mrs. Warren wore her favorite black, with stock of cerise, and a round hat, with crown in shades of pink. Col. and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson were with their son and his fiancee, Miss Rosamond Tudor. Mr. F. H. Beebe brought a party of nine, including Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Beebe. Mr. and Mrs. James Jackson were with a party, Mrs. Jackson looking distinctly elegant in black and white. Mrs. Gardner had a number of young people at her table, which is near the centre of the hall and well up to the front, and which she has secured for the season. Mr. Gardner was in her party, and two pretty young women were her guests, both in white blouses, a bolero of jet lace worn over one of them. Mrs. Gardner was very inconspicuously gowned in black, with jetted bodice, and wore a round black hat, with dark green feathers, her only ornament a large turquoise and diamond brooch, which fastened her stock. Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Hecht had a large party, filling two tables. Mrs. Hecht was in plum color, with a small bonnet in shades of plum and mauve. Miss Hecht was exquisitely gowned in pink, with much white lace, and wore a round black toque, with white quills and jetted chiffon. Capt. and Mrs. Aline were of those who had balcony tables. Mr. Arthur Dakin had a floor table, at which were Miss Virginia Haughton and Mrs. Phinehas Adams, among others. Mr. Walter Came was with a party of men at one of the central tables.

Others there in the balcony and on the floor was the Hon. Robert F. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Apthorp, Miss Gertrude Edmands, Mr. and Mrs. F. T. Moore, Mr. Phineas Sprague, Mr. George Smith, Miss Alice Stevens, Mr. Josiah Holden and family, Mr. Charles Hayden, Miss Florence Seavey, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Trainer, Mr. and Mrs. George Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. Dana Bartlett, Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Payne, Dr. F. L. Emerson and Mr. Walter Fox.

Society folk who are available have done full justice to the Pops every night, so that, if the first week is indicative of the season, it is already a huge success. In the crowd of well-known people seen around the tables various nights, after Monday, were Mr. and Mrs. Boylston Beal, Mrs. J. Randolph Coolidge with a party, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Peabody, Miss Lowell, Mrs. Francis Skinner, Mr. Ingersoll Amory, Alfred Rodman, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. George H. Windeler, Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Emmons, Mr. Hamilton Hill, Mrs. Hobart Ames, Mr. Robert Batcheller, Mr. Charles P. Searle, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph White, Mrs. John Osborn, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Canterbury and party, Mr. Herbert L. Harding, Mr. F. M. Montgomery, Mr. Edward A. Clark, Miss Hecht, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Raymond, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Johnson, Mr. A. G. Porter, Mr. L. C. Whiting and Mr. S. K. Pitman.

On Friday night, at the Pops, Miss Constance Tippett had a large party at two tables. The young hostess looked exceedingly pretty in light blue silk, with bodice of white lace and one of the fashionable fancy braid straw hats with cornflowers. Miss Emily Beebe of Miss Tippett's party wore a costume of dark olive and blue, with hat to match, and Mrs. Lombard Williams, at the same table, was in black and white, with scarlet on her toque. Mr. Williams, Mr. Phillips, Mr. Archibald Thacher, Mr. S. W. Sleeper and Mr. Henry Sleeper were others of that party. Another tableful near the platform was chaperoned by Mrs. George M. Endicott. Others there were Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Briggs, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Brooks and family, Mr. Charles Sturgis, Mr. Alexander P. Browne, Miss Alice Cole, Miss Lucy Fay, and Causten Browne, Jr. There were some military men in uniform in the hall, which added to the picturesqueness. The enthusiasm was intense, especially when the audience standing sang "The Star-Spangled Banner," which brought tears to many an eye.

THE BOSTON
SATURDAY EVENING
Gazette
ESTABLISHED 1813.

Music Notes.

On Monday evening the Music Hall Promenade concerts will begin their thirteenth season under the management of Mr. F. R. Comee. The orchestra, as in the past, will be composed from the Boston Symphony players, and will be fifty in number. Mr. Max Zach, who has already established himself as a universal favorite at these concerts, will again be the conductor. As in past seasons, there will be the usual number of reserved seats at tables on the floor and in the balcony, and for those who do not care to enjoy the refreshments served at the tables, reserved seats can be had in the balcony. The same system of a general admission will be in force this year as in past seasons. Mr. Zach has made the following selections for the first programme:

American March	Ganne
Overture, "Domino Noir"	Auber
Waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage"	Zach
Selection, "Madame Angot"	Lecocq
Ballet Music from "The Queen of Sheba"	Goldmark
Two entr'Actes from "Carmen"	Bizet
Waltz, "Kaiser"	Strauss
Introduction to Act I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Potpourri, "Offenbachiana"	Conradi
Mazourka, "La Mousme"	Ganne
American Fantasy	Bendix
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

THE BOSTON TIMES

The Promenade concerts continue the only important musical events which are being offered; but they are quite enough. There is such variety to the programmes that one can go night after night and be interested, and the Bohemian environments are conducive to the most supreme summer musical enjoyment. Tomorrow night's programme will be: March, "King Cotton," Sousa; overture, "Le Pre aux Clercs," Herold; waltz, "Artist's Life," Strauss; selection, "Carmen," Bizet; baritone solo, "Prologue from "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo, Mr. Placido Fiumara; March from Symphony "Lenore," Raff; overture, "Pique Dame," Suppe; Valse Caprice, Rubinstein; Andante for string orchestra, Tschaikowsky; waltz, "Pomone," Waldteufel; polka mazourka, "Unparteische Kritik," and Persian March, Strauss.

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIII., NO. 142.

SUNDAY, MAY 22, 1898.

THE PROMENADES.

With the coming of warmer weather the Promenade concert audiences at Music Hall have grown in size until every evening finds the auditorium well filled. Conductor Zach shows excellent judgment in the selection of music suited to the tastes of his listeners, and from the beginning has shown a marked recognition of the spirit of the times by introducing national music at various intervals through the programme. It is inspiriting to see the entire audience rise to its feet whenever the orchestra plays our patriotic airs, and it is not infrequent for the entire house to join in singing either "America" or "The Star Spangled Banner." Friday evening was decidedly enlivened, first by the presence of parties of students from Harvard, Yale and Technology, who exchanged courtesies by complimentary cheering each of the other. About nine o'clock the entrance of a group of 10 American sailors was made the occasion of a tremendous ovation in the shape of cheers and applause. Tomorrow evening the programme will be varied by a baritone solo, the prologue from "Pagliacci," sung by Placido Fiumara, a member of the orchestra and a pupil of Campanari. The first Saturday night of the season broke the record for attendance in the past five years. Patrons are reminded that owing to a long-standing engagement of the hall there will be no concert Thursday evening, May 26. With this exception the concerts will continue every week day evening until about July 4. The programme for tomorrow evening is:

March, "King Cotton"	Sousa
Overture, "Le Pre aux Clercs"	Herold
Waltz, "Artist's Life"	Strauss
Selection, "Carmen"	Bizet
Baritone solo, prologue from "Pagliacci."	Leoncavallo
March from Symphony, "Leonore"	Raff
Overture, "Pique Dame"	Suppe
Valse Caprice	Rubinstein
Andante for string orchestra	Tschaikowsky
Waltz, "Pomone"	Waldteufel
Polka Mazourka	Strauss
Persian March	Strauss

The second week at the Pops has been quite as successful as the preceding one, and nightly Music Hall has been filled with smart and appreciative audiences, without the slightest diminution of enthusiasm. Monday night Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond had a party and Col. Gordon Dexter also. On Tuesday night Mr. Alexander Higginson entertained his fiancee, Miss Tudor, and her friends, at one of the larger tables. Miss Gertrude Edmands had a party, and so did Mr. Leighton Beal and Mr. Walter Winslow. Mrs. Henry L. Higginson brought a party on Wednesday night, also Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Steinert and Dr. Galloupe. Matthew Luce, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Gay, Col. Hastings, Mr. Harleston Parker, Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Claflin and party and Mr. Saltonstall were others

At the Pops Thursday night there was an especially brilliant audience, and the various table parties of young people were very attractive. Mrs. Edward N. Fenno chaperoned a smart party, in which were Miss Lena Stevenson, in a quiet costume of navy blue, with hat of blue and white straw, lace and flowers; Miss Mollie Sargent, Miss Marion Fenno, in pale blue bodice, hat of rough straw to match; Mr. Philip Dalton and several more. Another party at a floor table was Mr. Johnson Morton's, which was made up of Miss Robinson of New York, in a superb Driscoll costume of black and white silk, and an enormous round hat, worn on the back of the head, of black straw, with black and white feathers; Miss Robinson's brother, Mr. Moncure Robinson; Mrs. Fiske Warren and Mr. Lawrence Butler.

BOSTON POST,

The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

The regular season of summer promenade concerts in Music Hall will open tomorrow (Monday) evening. Mr. Max Zach will again be the conductor, and the same general arrangements as in past seasons will be in force.

The programme for the first night is as follows:

American march (first time), Ganne; overture, "Domino Noir," Auber; waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage," Zach; selection, "Madame Angot," Lecocq; ballet music from "The Queen of Sheba," Goldmark; solo violoncello, Mr. E. Loeffler; two entr'actes from "Carmen," Bizet. The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number. Waltz, "Kaiser," Strauss; introduction to Act I., "Lohengrin," Wagner; potpourri, "Offenbachiana," Conradi; masourka, "La Mousme," Ganne; American fantasy, Bendix; march, "Stars and Stripes Forever," Sousa.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, MAY 9, 1898

PROMENADE CONCERTS TONIGHT

Music Hall Especially Decorated for These Popular Entertainments—Novel Features and an Excellent Programme for the Opening

Again has the big electric sign "Promenade Concert" been placed in position across the Hamilton-place entrance to Music Hall, to announce the opening concert of the season tonight. When the people who have been fortunate enough to secure a table or balcony seats for the concerts enter the hall this evening they will find that unusual preparation has been made for the season's concerts.

Mr. Frederic R. Comee, upon whom, in the absence of manager C. A. Ellis, falls the actual management of these concerts, has had carried out under his direction much in the way of decoration to relieve the hall of its wonted severe look. In the centre of the hall, stretched tight on a frame hanging some feet below the ceiling, is a fine American flag 20 by 30 feet. Fastened to this, depending from its edges, are many little electric lights. From the frame on which the flag is stretched, broad streamers of apple-green bunting radiate; thirty-six of these streamers are arranged like the spokes of a wheel of which the flag forms a rectangular hub. The other ends of the streamers are fastened to the intersection of the ceiling and walls of the hall.

In the rear of the second balcony a painted canvas, representing a pastoral scene, hides from view the large statue of Apollo. On the stage a large set scene is placed with wings and sky drop. It represents a tropical scene, with mountains forming the background. From the high rocks two cascades have been cleverly constructed, and running water will add to the effect, as it rushes down to a bank concealed by palms and tropical verdure. The balcony fronts are backed by red bunting and festoons of laurel adorn the front of the balconies. Pine trees here and there add to the "summery" appearance of the place.

The platforms for the orchestra have been arranged to resemble grass-covered terraces. There will be fifty musicians, conducted by Max Zach. Familiar faces will be found in the ranks, some of the players having been identified with these concerts ever since they were inaugurated. Tonight's concert marks the opening of the thirteenth season, and it will be the 656th performance of a promenade concert under this management. Seats for this evening were all disposed of a week or more ago, and a large audience is assured. Following the old custom, the main part of the hall will be fenced off, and inside the "ring," as patrons call the enclosure, and in the rear of the first balcony, the tables will be reserved, as will seats on the sides of the first balcony. All other tables and seats in the different parts of the hall are available on simple admission tickets.

Manager Comee has planned some special features for tonight, and these are sure to be well received. He is to have the latest war news announced on a blackboard bulletin to be placed on the stage during the regular intermissions. Conductor Zach has arranged this programme for the opening of the season:

1.	American March (First Time).	Gannet
2.	Overture, "Domino Noir"	Auber
3.	Waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage"	Zach
4.	Selection, "Madame Angot"	Lococq
5.	Ballet Music from "The Queen of Sheba" Solo Violoncello, Mr. E. Loeffler.	Goldmark
6.	Two Entr'actes from "Carmen"	Bizet
7.	Waltz, "Kaiser"	Strauss
8.	Introduction to Act I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
9.	Potpourri, "Offenbachiana"	Conradi
10.	Mazourka, "La Mousmé"	Ganne
11.	American Fantasy	Bendix
12.	March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1898.

THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

Large and fashionable audiences fill Music Hall every night nowadays, so popular are the Promenade concerts under the efficient management of Messrs. Ellis and Comee. Conductor Zach shows excellent judgment in the selection of music suited to the tastes of his listeners, and from the beginning has shown a marked recognition of the spirit of the times by introducing national music at various intervals through the program. It is inspiriting to see the entire audience rise to its feet whenever the orchestra plays our patriotic airs, and it is not infrequent for the entire house to join in singing either "America" or "The Star Spangled Banner."

Monday evening the program was varied by a baritone solo, the prologue from "Pagliacci," sung by Placido Fiumara, a member of the orchestra and a pupil of Campanari, and every night this week an equally good program has been offered. The concerts will continue every week day evening until about July 4.

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIII., NO. 135.

SUNDAY, MAY 15, 1898.

THE PROMENADES.

The first week of the 13th season of promenade concerts at Music Hall ended last night with much enthusiasm for Mr. Zach, the conductor, and the orchestra. The attendance during the week has been equal to that of past seasons, and demonstrations of enthusiasm have been especially noticeable when the orchestra has played patriotic and national airs. To listen to good music at one's ease is a luxury that may be enjoyed at these concerts, which are also the very best in their kind.

Mr. Zach has arranged the following programme for Monday evening:

March, "Merry Soldiers"	Sabathil
Overture, "Zampa"	Herold
Waltz, "Morgenblatter"	Strauss
Potpourri of Meyerbeer's operas	Schreiner
Ballet music from "Faust"	Gounod
Babbie waltzes from "The Little Minister"	Fuerst
Berceuse	Clayton Johns
Serenata	Moszkowski
Rhapsody in C	Liszt
Overture, "Freischutz"	Weber
Narcissus	Nevin
Ride of the Hussars	Spindler
Tabasco March	Chadwick

We do not remember to have seen a larger, smarter, more attractive or a better dressed company ever assembled at the Music Hall for the popular Pops on any night of past seasons than that which assisted at the inauguration of the present one Monday night. No wonder Manager Comee's face was wreathed in smiles, for from the opening number until the last note there was enthusiasm galore, and everybody seemed to be in just the right touch with the patriotic surroundings. The decorations were in perfect keeping with the atmosphere, and when Mr. Comee's surprise in the shape of the word "Dewey," suspended in huge electric letters over the platform, blazed upon the scene, there was a pandemonium of applause. The mountain landscape setting, which fills in the back of the stage, with its tumbling streams of real water, was a happy inspiration, restful and pleasant to the eye, and a relief to the usual painful bareness.

Among those specially noted gathered around the tables that night were Mr. Rollins Morse, who was with Mr. and Mrs. John T. Linzee and Mrs. Zerrahn. Mrs. Linzee looking especially well in a smart black and white costume, the coat bodice opening over white lace and chiffon, and a picture hat. Mr. and Mrs. Eben Jordan, whose guests at their table were Miss Helen Balderston and Mr. Dennie Boardman. Mrs. Jordan, handsome in a superb black Parisian costume, the embroidered coat opening over pleated white chiffon with much lace. Her picture hat was of chiffon, jet and plumes. Mr. and Mrs. Fiske Warren had at their table Mr. W. P. Blake, among others. Mrs. Warren wore her favorite black, with stock of cerise, and a round hat, with crown in shades of pink. Col. and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson were with their son and his fiancee, Miss Rosamond Tudor. Mr. F. H. Beebe brought a party of nine, including Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Beebe. Mr. and Mrs. James Jackson were with a party, Mrs. Jackson looking distinctly elegant in black and white. Mrs. Gardner had a number of young people at her table, which is near the centre of the hall and well up to the front, and which she has secured for the season. Mr. Gardner was in her party, and two pretty young women were her guests, both in white blouses, a bolero of jet lace worn over one of them. Mrs. Gardner was very inconspicuously gowned in black, with jetted bodice, and wore a round black hat, with dark green feathers, her only ornament a large turquoise and diamond brooch, which fastened her stock. Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Hecht had a large party, filling two tables. Mrs. Hecht was in plum color, with a small bonnet in shades of plum and mauve. Miss Hecht was exquisitely gowned in pink, with much white lace, and wore a round black toque, with white quills and jetted chiffon. Capt. and Mrs. Aline were of those who had balcony tables. Mr. Arthur Dakin had a floor table, at which were Miss Virginia Haughton and Mrs. Phinehas Adams, among others. Mr. Walter Came was with a party of men at one of the central tables.

Others there in the balcony and on the floor was the Hon. Robert F. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Apthorp, Miss Gertrude Edmands, Mr. and Mrs. F. T. Moore, Mr. Phineas Sprague, Mr. George Smith, Miss Alice Stevens, Mr. Josiah Holden and family, Mr. Charles Hayden, Miss Florence Seavey, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Trainer, Mr. and Mrs. George Stevens, Mr. and Mrs. Dana Bartlett, Dr. and Mrs. J. H. Payne, Dr. F. L. Emerson and Mr. Walter Fox.

Society folk who are available have done full justice to the Pops every night, so that, if the first week is indicative of the season, it is already a huge success. In the crowd of well-known people seen around the tables various nights, after Monday, were Mr. and Mrs. Boylston Beal, Mrs. J. Randolph Coolidge with a party, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Peabody, Miss Lowell, Mrs. Francis Skinner, Mr. Ingersoll Amory, Alfred Rodman, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. George H. Windeler, Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Emmons, Mr. Hamilton Hill, Mrs. Hobart Ames, Mr. Robert Batcheller, Mr. Charles P. Searle, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph White, Mrs. John Osborn, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Canterbury and party, Mr. Herbert L. Harding, Mr. F. M. Montgomery, Mr. Edward A. Clark, Miss Hecht, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Raymond, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Johnson, Mr. A. G. Porter, Mr. L. C. Whiting and Mr. S. K. Pitman.

On Friday night, at the Pops, Miss Constance Tippett had a large party at two tables. The young hostess looked exceedingly pretty in light blue silk, with bodice of white lace and one of the fashionable fancy braid straw hats with cornflowers. Miss Emily Beebe of Miss Tippett's party wore a costume of dark olive and blue, with hat to match, and Mrs. Lombard Williams, at the same table, was in black and white, with scarlet on her toque. Mr. Williams, Mr. Phillips, Mr. Archibald Thacher, Mr. S. W. Sleeper and Mr. Henry Sleeper were others of that party. Another tableful near the platform was chaperoned by Mrs. George M. Endicott. Others there were Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Briggs, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Brooks and family, Mr. Charles Sturgis, Mr. Alexander P. Browne, Miss Alice Cole, Miss Lucy Fay, and Causten Browne, Jr. There were some military men in uniform in the hall, which added to the picturesqueness. The enthusiasm was intense, especially when the audience standing sang "The Star-Spangled Banner," which brought tears to many an eye.

THE BOSTON SATURDAY EVENING Gazette

ESTABLISHED 1813.

Music Notes.

On Monday evening the Music Hall Promenade concerts will begin their thirteenth season under the management of Mr. F. R. Comee. The orchestra, as in the past, will be composed from the Boston Symphony players, and will be fifty in number. Mr. Max Zach, who has already established himself as a universal favorite at these concerts, will again be the conductor. As in past seasons, there will be the usual number of reserved seats at tables on the floor and in the balcony, and for those who do not care to enjoy the refreshments served at the tables, reserved seats can be had in the balcony. The same system of a general admission will be in force this year as in past seasons. Mr. Zach has made the following selections for the first programme:

American March	Gannet
Overture, "Domino Noir"	Auber
Waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage"	Zach
Selection, "Madame Angot"	Lecocq
Ballet Music from "The Queen of Sheba"	Goldmark
Two entr'Actes from "Carmen"	Bizet
Waltz, "Kaiser"	Strauss
Introduction to Act I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Potpourri, "Offenbachiana"	Conradi
Mazourka, "La Mousme"	Ganne
American Fantasy	Bendix
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

THE BOSTON TIMES

The Promenade concerts continue the only important musical events which are being offered; but they are quite enough. There is such variety to the programmes that one can go night after night and be interested, and the Bohemian environments are conducive to the most supreme summer musical enjoyment. Tomorrow night's programme will be: March, "King Cotton," Sousa; overture, "Le Pre aux Clercs," Herold; waltz, "Artist's Life," Strauss; selection, "Carmen," Bizet; baritone solo, "Prologue from "Pagliacci," Leoncavallo, Mr. Placido Fiumara; March from Symphony, "Leonore," Raff; overture, "Pique Dame," Suppe; Valse Caprice, Rubinstein; Andante for string orchestra, Tschaikowsky; waltz, "Pomone," Waldteufel; polka mazourka, "Unparteische Kritik," and Persian March, Strauss.

[illegible]

Music Hall: Promenade Concert

The first promenade concert of the thirteenth season was held in Music Hall last evening, the programme being as follows:

American March	Ganne
Overture, "Domino Noir"	Auber
Waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage"	Zach
Selection, "Madame Angot"	Lecocq
Ballet music from "The Queen of Sheba"	Goldmark
Two Entr'actes from "Carmen"	Bizet
Waltz, "Kaiser"	Strauss
Introduction to Act I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Potpourri, "Offenbachiana"	Conradi
Mazourka, "La Mousme"	Ganne
American Fantasy	Bendix
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

The hall was appropriately decorated with flags, bunting and flowers, and at the back of the upper balcony there was a painting presumably intended to represent a Manila landscape. The programme was selected with due regard to the "patriotic" spirit of the times, and the audience was not at all backward in giving vent to its pent-up enthusiasm. Mr. Max Zach, who lead the orchestra, contributed a waltz of his own, which was heartily and deservedly applauded. Mr. Loeffler's playing of the 'cello solo in the Goldmark ballet music was warmly appreciated, and the concert ended with a stirring rendering of Sousa's march, "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

The programme for tonight's concert is:

March from "The Serenade"	Herbert
Overture, "Mignon"	Thomas
Waltz, "Meerleuchten"	Ziehrer
Selection, "Trovatore"	Verdi
Waltz and Pizzicato from "Sylvia"	Delibes
Sailors' Chorus from "The Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
Gavotte for String Orchestra	Bach
Invitation to Dance	Weber
Overture, "Pique Dame"	Suppé
Waltz, "Laadeskinder"	Strauss
Polka, "Tic-Tac"	Strobl
March, "Under the Double Eagle"	Wagner

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIII., NO. 130.

TUESDAY, MAY 10, 1898.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The 13th season of the promenade concerts at Music Hall opened last evening with great success. The audience was very large, all the tables on the floor and in the first balcony being occupied. and the remaining seats in both galleries were nearly all filled. The decorations were novel and effective. A large American flag was spread across the ceiling, and from it radiated in every direction festoons of blue. The fronts of the balconies were draped with laurel. At the back of the stage was a tropical scene, and real water fell in miniature cascades on either side. The proscenium depicted forest trees, whose branches and foliage arched overhead. Against the wall at the back of the upper balcony was a landscape, showing a bit of Manila scenery. All these things gave a bright aspect to the auditorium and were exceedingly effective.

Before the first number announced on the programme was performed there was lowered from above the orchestra the name "Dewey," formed of electric lights, at the sight of which the audience burst into a tremendous peal of plaudits, which was intensified when the orchestra struck up "The Star Spangled Banner," the audience rising spontaneously to its feet and greeting the patriotic air with immense enthusiasm which was not allayed until the melody was repeated. A similar exciting scene took place later in the evening, when a blackboard was brought on the stage announcing that Congress had made the victor at Manila a rear admiral. For the rest there is little to say, except that the company assembled enjoyed itself after the fashion that has prevailed for so many years, with edibles, bibibles, cigars and cigarettes; listened to the music or chatted, as best pleased them; was generous and appreciative in its applause of the music and exacting in regard to encores. The selections were:

American March	Ganne
Overture, "Domino Noir"	Auber
Waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage"	Zach
Selection, "Madame Angot"	Lecocq
Ballet music from "The Queen of Sheba"	Goldmark
Two Entr'actes from "Carmen"	Bizet
Waltz, "Kaiser"	Strauss
Introduction to Act I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Potpourri, "Offenbachiana"	Conradi
Mazourka, "La Mousme"	Ganne
American Fantasy	Bendix
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

That the music was finely played may go without saying, when it is remembered that the performers were of the Symphony orchestra, fresh from their discipline of the season just ended. Particular favor was shown Mr. Zach's brilliant and tuneful waltz, which was so heartily applauded that the coda was repeated. Mr. F. Loeffler's graceful and expressive playing of the 'cello solo in the Goldmark ballet music was similarly appreciated. It was pleasing to listen to the "Mme. Angot" selections, and to the medley of Offenbach melodies, played as they were. In fact, the programme was admirably arranged and rendered, and provided a welcome relief to those who have religiously taken in their due share of the more serious music of the season, and could feel that they were safely out of school. Mr. Zach was warmly welcomed on his first appearance, and by the spirit of his conducting and the skill with which he held his forces in hand repeated his successes in the past. The season opened auspiciously, and its prosperity seems assured.

The programme for tonight: March from "The Serenade," Herbert; overture, "Mignon," Thomas; waltz, "Meerleuchten," Ziehrer; selection, "Trovatore," Verdi; [illegible] ballet music, [illegible]

THE BOSTON TIMES

(ESTABLISHED 1864.)

EVERY SUNDAY,

At 20 HAWLEY STREET.

THERE IS ABSOLUTELY nothing going on in a musical way with the exception of the Promenade concerts, and a few pupils' recitals, which the friends of the teachers and young students feel in honor bound to attend. As a rule, pupils' recitals are the bane of the critics' existence and a bore to every one who attends them. It is true that they have their place in the evolution of events, a place which cannot be sacrificed even for the pleasure of those who are called upon to hear them. From these recitals one can anticipate in a degree what the future in music will have in store for us in the way of performers. It is surprising to see how few really gifted or promising musicians are devoting their time and talents to study, and how many years, sometimes a lifetime, it takes the majority of them to find out that no amount of time, nor money, and no method of instruction, be it ever so superior, could have made them musicians. But these public recitals give the young performers the confidence and command of their art, which they must have to accomplish anything, and it can be obtained in no other way.

Tomorrow will be Sousa night at the Pops, and from the "Washington Post" march, which opens the programme, to "The Stars and Stripes Forever," which closes it, the air will ring with Sousa's familiar martial strains. These selections are well suited to honor the holiday which they mark, and to keep alive the spirit of patriotism and respect for the bravery and military glory of the dead heroes in remembrance of whom it is set aside. Aside from the selections just mentioned, the other Sousa numbers of the programme will be selections from "El Capitan," "King Cotton" march, "Manhattan Beach" march and "Bride Elect" march. The other numbers will be: Overture, "Mignon," A. Thomas; waltz, "O schoner Mai," Strauss; entr'acte, "Forget me not," McBeth; waltz, "Soldiers' Songs," Gungl; "Narcissus," Nevin; overture, "Rienzi," Wagner; overture, "Martha," Flotow, "The Darkey's Dream," Lansing; waltz; "Arabian Nights," Strauss.

Half the season of the Promenade concerts at Music hall is about completed. and the stay-at-homes have a feeling of deep regret in their hearts that the end is so nearly in sight. They are just the sort of amusement which people want. The business man finds in them respite from the cares of the day, and society women, too, enjoy their Bohemian atmosphere, and if for nothing else go because their sister rivals for lionizing go too.

They are not without their offensive element, however. 'Twas ever thus in any large gathering where the use of intoxicating liquors is indulged, but the excellent management prevents this element from gaining undue prominence.

The patronage this year has been very large. There was no concert Thursday evening and that caused a great rush for tickets for the last two evenings of the week. Tuesday morning there was not a table to be had for Saturday night.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 29, 1898.

MUSIC.

THE PROMENADES, MRS. MORRILL'S RECITAL, ETC.

When "the rain it raineth every day"—and every evening and every night too—it is scarcely to be expected that great, glad and gay crowds should hie them forth under inclemently drenching clouds to assemble in Music Hall. For the only really anniversary feature about the Promenades is their regular omission on one evening of this celebrational week, when the hall is claimed and occupied on account of a denominational festival. But the concerts have gone on with all their accustomed style and spirit. Mr. Zach has made just as entertaining programmes, and the band have played almost as if they thought a little extra interest and animation on their part were fairly due to the good creatures who took the trouble to attend on such stormy and discouraging nights. And the beer, lemonade, pretzels and sandwiches have done their duty nobly too, and made themselves as appetizing as possible, although they knew that thus they were only inviting their own speedier destruction. There was a new wrinkle in the singing of Mr. Fiumara, who laid down his fiddle while he showed how dramatically barytonical he could be in the "Pagliacci" prologue. But won't the hall be crowded, though, when the rains cease and the moon gets her chance!

SUNDAY, MAY 29, 18[illegible]

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

Special Attractions at the Promenade Concerts.

Sousa Programme to Be Given Tomorrow Evening at Music Hall—Third Week of "The Chorus Girl" at the Boston Museum—Piano Virtuosos as Composers of Opera.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Bad weather seems to have a favorable, rather than a depressing, effect upon the attendance at the Promenade concerts, as the large audiences of the week attest. This week has for special attractions a Sousa programme tomorrow night, when five of the most popular military marches will be played in recognition of Decoration day. Thursday evening will be Technology night, with special features complimentary to this favorite New England institution. Saturday night will have a special importance, as it will mark the farewell appearance of Conductor Max Zach, who, in accordance with a custom that has been in vogue for the past few seasons, retires, to make way for Conductor Gustav Strube, also a member of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and who will assume the position of director of these concerts on Monday evening, June 6.

Gustave Strube was born at Ballenstedt, a small town in Anhalt, on March 3, 1867. His father was town musician in his native place, and it was from him that he got his first musical instruction. Strube afterwards studied for four years at the Conservatorium in Leipsic: the violin under Adolf Brodsky, the pianoforte under Alois Reckendorf, and composition under Karl Reinecke and Salomol Jadassohn. After leaving the institution, he went to Mannheim, where he was engaged as teacher at the conservatory. In 1891 he came to this country to join the Boston Symphony orchestra, in which he has been one of the first violins ever since. Mr. Strube has taken high rank as a composer. On Feb. 16, 1895, his overture in F major to Schiller's "Jungfrau von Orleans," was brought out in Boston by the Symphony orchestra, and very favorably received by public and press. This was followed by a symphony in C minor, which was performed by the same organization on April 4, 1896, and likewise extremely well received. The work has also been given in Germany. His violin concerto in G major, opus 12, was first played in public by Mr. Franz Kneisel at one of the concerts of the Worcester (Mass.), festival of last September, and again at one of the New York concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra this season. Mr. Strube's remarkable versatility as a musician has often been put to the test at the concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra, when the sudden illness of various members of the organization has made it impossible to provide a substitute. In such cases as this, no matter what the instrument played by the indisposed performer, Mr. Strube was always able to fill the gap, and very acceptably. He has conducted his own works when played by the Boston Symphony orchestra, and the success made by his predecessors from the ranks of this organization will undoubtedly be repeated in his case.

The third week of the promenade concerts, with its increased attendance in spite of the unfavorable weather, shows the stronghold which these entertainments have upon our musical and social public. Tuesday evening in recognition of the 80th birthday of Queen Victoria, and with the especial friendly feeling at present existing between this country and England, Manager Comee arranged in front of the electric design over the stage an English and an American flag side by side, and the orchestra played as an introductory number the "Star Spangled Banner" and "God Save the Queen." The entire audience rose and cheered this compliment to the Queen and the English nation. Among others present there were Mr. Harleston Parker, Matthew Luce, Jr., Miss Anna Lyman, Mr. C. H. Gibson, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Mr. and Mrs. Gerard Bement and party, Mr. Eben Dorr, Mr. R. F. Clark and party, J. Otis Wardwell and friends, Mr. Alexander Henry Higginson and his fiancee, Miss Rosamund Tudor, with a party. Wednesday night Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mr. Grafton Cushing, Mrs. A. Lawrence Mason and party, and Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester Breed were there. At the Friday evening pop among others were noticed Mr. and Mrs. Philip Sears, George C. Lee, Jr., and his fiancee, Miss Madeleine Jackson, and party, Mr. B. J. Lang and party, Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Morse and Miss Morse, Clinton Stuart (Walsingham) and Dr. W. S. Bigelow.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The popularity of the Promenade Concerts at Music Hall has been maintained throughout the season and the audiences have shown full appreciation of the programs given under the direction of Mr. Max Zach, as well as of the attention given to the comfort of patrons by Mr. Fred R. Comee, the acting manager. The coming week will be the last in which the direction of the orchestra will be in the hands of Mr. Zach. The arrangement at the beginning of the season was to divide the direction of the orchestra between Mr. Zach and Mr. Gustav Strube, who is also a prominent member of the Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Zach has shown his usual catholicity of taste in the programs of the season thus far, and Mr. Strube will undoubtedly prove an acceptable successor at the conductor's desk to the thousands of patrons who enjoy these delightful summer night entertainments. The concerts will be continued every week day evening until July Fourth. For tomorrow evening the program selected will give prominence to the compositions of Sousa.

March, "Washington Post"	Sousa
Overture, "Mignon"	A. Thomas
Waltz, "O schoener Mai"	Strauss
Selection from "El Capitan" (First Time.)	Sousa
Entr'acte, "Forget me not"	McBeth
March, "King Cotton"	Sousa
Waltz, "Soldiers' Songs"	Gungl
Narcissus	Nevin
March, "Manhattan Beach"	Sousa
Overture, "Rienzi"	Wagner
Overture, "Martha"	Flotow
"The Darkey's Dream"	Lansing
March from "Bride Elect"	Sousa
Waltz, "Arabian Nights	Strauss
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

THE BOSTON TIMES

(ESTABLISHED 1864.)

EVERY SUNDAY,

At 20 HAWLEY STREET.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS have taken a new lease of life. I would not intimate that there has been any lack of life or any lack of patronage for even a single night since they first opened over a month ago, but the new electrical arrangement above the platform and the new conductor have given the concerts an atmosphere of novelty which has imbued every one who has attended during the week with the spirit which something entirely new awakens. Mr. Comee is nothing if not up to date and these concerts nightly attest to the policy of his plan, in the enjoyment which they afford and the financial success which the crowded hall signifies. The portraits of five heroes have this week looked down on the revellers from their bright electric light frames, McKinley in the place of honor beneath the golden eagle, at his right Dewey and Long and at the left Sampson and Schley. But that wasn't all. The two flags which heretofore parted as "The Star Spangled Banner" struck up to show Dewey's electric name, now reveal the name of the latest naval hero, Hobson.

Gustave Strube, the new director, has been giving the patrons their music in heavier doses than his predecessor, and those who have stopped at all to think about it, do not like it as well. People who go the Pop concerts are not prepared to let the music, even though it be given by their pet Symphony players, absorb all their mind. They want something light and frivolous, jingling and fantastic, as an accompaniment to their chatter and beer, but always subservient to it in importance.

Tomorrow night will be Wagner night. The selections from this great composer are: March "Under the Double Eagle," overture, "Rienzi," overture, "Tannhauser," "The Evening Star," trombone solo, by Mr. Carl Hampe; "Procession of the Women," from "Lohengrin;" Introduction to Act III., "Lohengrin"; "Ride of the Valkyries" and other numbers will be Waltz, 'Lagunen" Strauss; Selection, "The Serenade" Herbert; Selection, "La Fille de Madame Angot" Lecocq; Selection, "Brigands" Offenbach; "Baby Polka" Bayer; March "Tobasco" Chadwick.

Well known people have been noted in the audiences all the week. Among them Tuesday night were Hon. A. E. Pilsbury, Ex-Alderman and Mrs. Viles, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. Harry M. Frost, Mrs. J. G. Cuthbertson, Mr. John A. Melvin.

[28]

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, MAY 10, 1898

Music Hall: Promenade Concert

The first promenade concert of the thirteenth season was held in Music Hall last evening, the programme being as follows:

American March	Ganne
Overture, "Domino Noir"	Auber
Waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage"	Zach
Selection, "Madame Angot"	Lecocq
Ballet music from "The Queen of Sheba"	Goldmark
Two Entr'actes from "Carmen"	Bizet
Waltz, "Kaiser"	Strauss
Introduction to Act I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Potpourri, "Offenbachiana"	Conradi
Mazourka, "La Mousme"	Ganne
American Fantasy	Bendix
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

The hall was appropriately decorated with flags, bunting and flowers, and at the back of the upper balcony there was a painting presumably intended to represent a Manila landscape. The programme was selected with due regard to the "patriotic" spirit of the times, and the audience was not at all backward in giving vent to its pent-up enthusiasm. Mr. Max Zach, who lead the orchestra, contributed a waltz of his own, which was heartily and deservedly applauded. Mr. Loeffler's playing of the 'cello solo in the Goldmark ballet music was warmly appreciated, and the concert ended with a stirring rendering of Sousa's march, "The Stars and Stripes Forever."

The programme for tonight's concert is:

March from "The Serenade"	Herbert
Overture, "Mignon"	Thomas
Waltz, "Meerleuchten"	Ziehrer
Selection, "Trovatore"	Verdi
Waltz and Pizzicato from "Sylvia"	Delibes
Sailors' Chorus from "The Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
Gavotte for String Orchestra	Bach
Invitation to Dance	Weber
Overture, "Pique Dame"	Suppé
Waltz, "Landeskinder"	Strauss
Polka, "Tic-Tac"	Strobl
March, "Under the Double Eagle"	Wagner

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIII., NO. 130.

TUESDAY, MAY 10, 1898.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The 13th season of the promenade concerts at Music Hall opened last evening with great success. The audience was very large, all the tables on the floor and in the first balcony being occupied. and the remaining seats in both galleries were nearly all filled. The decorations were novel and effective. A large American flag was spread across the ceiling, and from it radiated in every direction festoons of blue. The fronts of the balconies were draped with laurel. At the back of the stage was a tropical scene, and real water fell in miniature cascades on either side. The proscenium depicted forest trees, whose branches and foliage arched overhead. Against the wall at the back of the upper balcony was a landscape, showing a bit of Manila scenery. All these things gave a bright aspect to the auditorium and were exceedingly effective.

Before the first number announced on the programme was performed there was lowered from above the orchestra the name "Dewey," formed of electric lights, at the sight of which the audience burst into a tremendous peal of plaudits, which was intensified when the orchestra struck up "The Star Spangled Banner," the audience rising spontaneously to its feet and greeting the patriotic air with immense enthusiasm which was not allayed until the melody was repeated. A similar exciting scene took place later in the evening, when a blackboard was brought on the stage announcing that Congress had made the victor at Manila a rear admiral. For the rest there is little to say, except that the company assembled enjoyed itself after the fashion that has prevailed for so many years, with edibles, bibibles, cigars and cigarettes; listened to the music or chatted, as best pleased them; was generous and appreciative in its applause of the music and exacting in regard to encores. The selections were:

American March	Ganne
Overture, "Domino Noir"	Auber
Waltz, "Harlequin's Voyage"	Zach
Selection, "Madame Angot"	Lecocq
Ballet music from "The Queen of Sheba"	Goldmark
Two Entr'actes from "Carmen"	Bizet
Waltz, "Kaiser"	Strauss
Introduction to Act I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Potpourri, "Offenbachiana"	Conradi
Mazourka, "La Mousme"	Ganne
American Fantasy	Bendix
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

That the music was finely played may go without saying, when it is remembered that the performers were of the Symphony orchestra, fresh from their discipline of the season just ended. Particular favor was shown Mr. Zach's brilliant and tuneful waltz, which was so heartily applauded that the coda was repeated. Mr. F. Loeffler's graceful and expressive playing of the 'cello solo in the Goldmark ballet music was similarly appreciated. It was pleasing to listen to the "Mme. Angot" selections, and to the medley of Offenbach melodies, played as they were. In fact, the programme was admirably arranged and rendered, and provided a welcome relief to those who have religiously taken in their due share of the more serious music of the season, and could feel that they were safely out of school. Mr. Zach was warmly welcomed on his first appearance, and by the spirit of his conducting and the skill with which he held his forces in hand repeated his successes in the past. The season opened auspiciously, and its prosperity seems assured.

The programme for tonight: March, from "The Serenade," Herbert; overture, "Mignon," Thomas; waltz, "Meerleuchten," Ziehrer; selection, "Trovatore," Verdi; waltz and pizzicato from ballet music, "Sylvia," Delibes; sailors' chorus, from "The Flying Dutchman," Wagner; gavotte for string orchestra, Bach; invitation to dance, Weber; overture, "Pique Dame," Suppe; waltz, "Landeskinder," Strauss (first time); polka "Tic-Tac," Strobl; march, "Under the Double Eagle," Wagner.

THE BOSTON TIMES

(Established 1864.)

EVERY SUNDAY,

At 20 HAWLEY STREET.

THERE IS ABSOLUTELY nothing going on in a musical way with the exception of the Promenade concerts, and a few pupils' recitals, which the friends of the teachers and young students feel in honor bound to attend. As a rule, pupils' recitals are the bane of the critics' existence and a bore to every one who attends them. It is true that they have their place in the evolution of events, a place which cannot be sacrificed even for the pleasure of those who are called upon to hear them. From these recitals one can anticipate in a degree what the future in music will have in store for us in the way of performers. It is surprising to see how few really gifted or promising musicians are devoting their time and talents to study, and how many years, sometimes a lifetime, it takes the majority of them to find out that no amount of time, nor money, and no method of instruction, be it ever so superior, could have made them musicians. But these public recitals give the young performers the confidence and command of their art, which they must have to accomplish anything, and it can be obtained in no other way.

Tomorrow will be Sousa night at the Pops, and from the "Washington Post" march, which opens the programme, to "The Stars and Stripes Forever," which closes it, the air will ring with Sousa's familiar martial strains. These selections are well suited to honor the holiday which they mark, and to keep alive the spirit of patriotism and respect for the bravery and military glory of the dead heroes in remembrance of whom it is set aside. Aside from the selections just mentioned, the other Sousa numbers of the programme will be selections from "El Capitan," "King Cotton" march, "Manhattan Beach" march and "Bride Elect" march. The other numbers will be: Overture, "Mignon," A. Thomas; waltz, "O schoner Mai," Strauss; entr'acte, "Forget me not," McBeth; waltz, "Soldiers' Songs," Gungl; "Narcissus," Nevin; overture, "Rienzi," Wagner; overture, "Martha," Flotow, "The Darkey's Dream," Lansing; waltz "Arabian Nights," Strauss.

Half the season of the Promenade concerts at Music hall is about completed. and the stay-at-homes have a feeling of deep regret in their hearts that the end is so nearly in sight. They are just the sort of amusement which people want. The business man finds in them respite from the cares of the day, and society women, too, enjoy their Bohemian atmosphere, and if for nothing else go because their sister rivals for lionizing go too.

They are not without their offensive element, however. 'Twas ever thus in any large gathering where the use of intoxicating liquors is indulged, but the excellent management prevents this element from gaining undue prominence.

The patronage this year has been very large. There was no concert Thursday evening and that caused a great rush for tickets for the last two evenings of the week. Tuesday morning there was not a table to be had for Saturday night.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, MAY 29, 1898.

MUSIC.

THE PROMENADES, MRS. MORRILL'S RECITAL, ETC.

When "the rain it raineth every day"—and every evening and every night too—it is scarcely to be expected that great, glad and gay crowds should hie them forth under inclemently drenching clouds to assemble in Music Hall. For the only really anniversary feature about the Promenades is their regular omission on one evening of this celebrational week, when the hall is claimed and occupied on account of a denominational festival. But the concerts have gone on with all their accustomed style and spirit. Mr. Zach has made just as entertaining programmes, and the band have played almost as if they thought a little extra interest and animation on their part were fairly due to the good creatures who took the trouble to attend on such stormy and discouraging nights. And the beer, lemonade, pretzels and sandwiches have done their duty nobly too, and made themselves as appetizing as possible, although they knew that thus they were only inviting their own speedier destruction. There was a new wrinkle in the singing of Mr. Fiumara, who laid down his fiddle while he showed how dramatically barytonical he could be in the "Pagliacci" prologue. But won't the hall be crowded, though, when the rains cease and the moon gets her chance!

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIII., NO. 149.

SUNDAY, MAY 29, 1898.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

Special Attractions at the Promenade Concerts.

Sousa Programme to Be Given Tomorrow Evening at Music Hall—Third Week of "The Chorus Girl" at the Boston Museum—Piano Virtuosos as Composers of Opera.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Bad weather seems to have a favorable, rather than a depressing, effect upon the attendance at the Promenade concerts, as the large audiences of the week attest. This week has for special attractions a Sousa programme tomorrow night, when five of the most popular military marches will be played in recognition of Decoration day. Thursday evening will be Technology night, with special features complimentary to this favorite New England institution. Saturday night will have a special importance, as it will mark the farewell appearance of Conductor Max Zach, who, in accordance with a custom that has been in vogue for the past few seasons, retires, to make way for Conductor Gustav Strube, also a member of the Boston Symphony orchestra, and who will assume the position of director of these concerts on Monday evening, June 6.

Gustave Strube was born at Ballenstedt, a small town in Anhalt, on March 3, 1867. His father was town musician in his native place, and it was from him that he got his first musical instruction. Strube afterwards studied for four years at the Conservatorium in Leipsic: the violin under Adolf Brodsky, the pianoforte under Alois Kechendorf, and composition under Karl Reinicke and Salomol Jadassohn. After leaving the institution, he went to Mannheim, where he was engaged as teacher at the conservatory. In 1891 he came to this country to join the Boston Symphony orchestra, in which he has been one of the first violins ever since. Mr. Strube has taken high rank as a composer. On Feb. 16, 1895, his overture in F major to Schiller's "Jungfrau von Orleans," was brought out in Boston by the Symphony orchestra, and very favorably received by public and press. This was followed by a symphony in C minor, which was performed by the same organization on April 4, 1896, and likewise extremely well received. The work has also been given in Germany. His violin concerto in G major, opus 13, was first played in public by Mr. Franz Kneisel at one of the concerts of the Worcester (Mass.), festival of last September, and again at one of the New York concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra this season. Mr. Strube's remarkable versatility as a musician has often been put to the test at the concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra, when the sudden illness of various members of the organization has made it impossible to provide a substitute. In such cases as this, no matter what the instrument played by the indisposed performer, Mr. Strube was always able to fill the gap, and very acceptably. He has conducted his own works when played by the Boston Symphony orchestra, and the success made by his predecessors from the ranks of this organization will undoubtedly be repeated in his case.

The third week of the promenade concerts, with its increased attendance in spite of the unfavorable weather, shows the stronghold which these entertainments have upon our musical and social public. Tuesday evening in recognition of the 80th birthday of Queen Victoria, and with the especial friendly feeling at present existing between this country and England, Manager Comee arranged in front of the electric design over the stage an English and an American flag side by side, and the orchestra played as an introductory number the "Star Spangled Banner" and "God Save the Queen." The entire audience rose and cheered this compliment to the Queen and the English nation. Among others present there were Mr. Harleston Parker, Matthew Luce, Jr., Miss Anna Lyman, Mr. C. H. Gibson, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Richmond, Mr. and Mrs. Gerard Bement and party, Mr. Eben Dorr, Mr. R. F. Clark and party, J. Otis Wardwell and friends, Mr. Alexander Henry Higginson and his fiancee, Miss Rosamund Tudor, with a party. Wednesday night Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mr. Grafton Cushing, Mrs. A. Lawrence Mason and party, and Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester Breed were there. At the Friday evening pop among others were noticed Mr. and Mrs. Philip Sears, George C. Lee, Jr., and his fiancee, Miss Madeleine Jackson, and party, Mr. B. J. Lang and party, Mr. and Mrs. Robert M. Morse and Miss Morse, Clinton Stuart (Walsingham) and Dr. W. S. Bigelow.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, MAY 29, 1898.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The popularity of the Promenade Concerts at Music Hall has been maintained throughout the season and the audiences have shown full appreciation of the programs given under the direction of Mr. Max Zach, as well as of the attention given to the comfort of patrons by Mr. Fred R. Comee, the acting manager. The coming week will be the last in which the direction of the orchestra will be in the hands of Mr. Zach. The arrangement at the beginning of the season was to divide the direction of the orchestra between Mr. Zach and Mr. Gustav Strube, who is also a prominent member of the Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Zach has shown his usual catholicity of taste in the programs of the season thus far, and Mr. Strube will undoubtedly prove an acceptable successor at the conductor's desk to the thousands of patrons who enjoy these delightful summer night entertainments. The concerts will be continued every week day evening until July Fourth. For tomorrow evening the program selected will give prominence to the compositions of Sousa.

March, "Washington Post"	Sousa
Overture, "Mignon"	A. Thomas
Waltz, "O schoener Mai"	Strauss
Selection from "El Capitan" (First Time.)	Sousa
Entr'acte, "Forget me not"	McBeth
March, "King Cotton"	Sousa
Waltz, "Soldiers' Songs"	Gungl
Narcissus	Nevin
March, "Manhattan Beach"	Sousa
Overture, "Rienzi"	Wagner
Overture, "Martha"	Flotow
"The Darkey's Dream"	Lansing
March from "Bride Elect"	Sousa
Waltz, "Arabian Nights	Strauss
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

THE BOSTON TIMES

(Established 1864.)

EVERY SUNDAY,

At 20 HAWLEY STREET.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS have taken a new lease of life. I would not intimate that there has been any lack of life or any lack of patronage for even a single night since they first opened over a month ago, but the new electrical arrangement above the platform and the new conductor have given the concerts an atmosphere of novelty which has imbued every one who has attended during the week with the spirit which something entirely new awakens. Mr. Comee is nothing if not up to date and these concerts nightly attest to the policy of his plan, in the enjoyment which they afford and the financial success which the crowded hall signifies. The portraits of five heroes have this week looked down on the revellers from their bright electric light frames, McKinley in the place of honor beneath the golden eagle, at his right Dewey and Long and at the left Sampson and Schley. But that wasn't all. The two flags which heretofore parted as "The Star Spangled Banner" struck up to show Dewey's electric name, now reveal the name of the latest naval hero, Hobson

Gustave Strube, the new director, has been giving the patrons their music in heavier doses than his predecessor, and those who have stopped at all to think about it, do not like it as well. People who go the Pop concerts are not prepared to let the music, even though it be given by their pet Symphony players, absorb all their mind. They want something light and frivolous, jingling and fantastic, as an accompaniment to their chatter and beer, but always subservient to it in importance.

Tomorrow night will be Wagner night. The selections from this great composer are: March 'Under the Double Eagle;" overture, "Rienzi," overture, "Tannhauser," "The Evening Star," trombone solo, by Mr. Carl Hampe; "Procession of the Women," from 'Lohengrin;" Introduction to Act III., "Lohengrin"; "Ride of the Valkyries" and other numbers will be Waltz, 'Lagunen" Strauss; Selection. "The Serenade" Herbert; Selection, "La Fille de Madame Angot" Lecocq; Selection, "Brigands" Offenbach; "Baby Polka" Bayer; March "Tobasco" Chadwick.

Well known people have been noted in the audiences all the week. Among them Tuesday night were Hon. A. E. Pilsbury, Ex-Alderman and Mrs. Viles, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mr. and Mrs. Harry M. Frost, Mrs. J. G. Cuthbertson, Mr. John A. Melvin.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JUNE 5, 1898.

Music Hall Concerts.

This evening Gustav Strube will appear as the conductor of the promenade concerts in Music hall. The program will be as follows:

Marche Hongroise from The Damnation of Faust	Berlioz
Overture, Merry Wives of Windsor	Nicolai
Waltz, Les Patineurs	Waldteufel
Selection, Wizard of the Nile	Herbert
Overture, La Dame Blanche	Boieldieu
Melody	Rubinstein
Serenade	Moszkowski
Polonaise	Chopin
Prelude to The Cricket on the Hearth	Goldmark
Overture, Poet and Peasant	Suppe
Gavotte, Stephanie	Czibulka
Polka, Sangerlust	Strauss
March, Home, Sweet Home	Strube

THE BOSTON TIMES

(ESTABLISHED 1864.)

EVERY SUNDAY,

AT 20 HAWLEY STREET.

IT WAS Boston which set the example for New York in the giving of "Pop" concerts. The plan of our dear old Music hall promenades, which for so many summers have alleviated the discomfiture of the torrid evenings for society lions, followers of Bohemia, and the common herd as well, has been taken up in New York city at the Lenox lyceum and under the direction of Rudolph Aronson, the Banda Rossa, which has had such a checkered career since they landed on these shores six months ago, are giving concerts which a contemporary says "have made a great impression on the New York public."

Our own "Pop" concerts continue in the full flush of their popularity. Tomorrow will be "Harvard night" and the college boys will own the place.

THE BOSTON COMMERCIAL.

Music Hall Concerts.

Mr. Gustav Strube and his excellent orchestra have delighted thousands at the Music Hall this week with the series of fine concerts they have given. The orchestra never has played better, and has received generous applause every night. As the season advances the interest in this pleasant mode of entertainment increases, and as a consequence there is a very large attendance. In order to secure good seats an early application at the box office is necessary.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, JUNE 5, 1898.

THE POPS.

Mr. Max Zach conducted the Promenade Concerts Saturday night for the last time this season. His taste in selecting programs, his courtesy in yielding to the wishes of audiences, and his skill in conducting the admirable orchestra were acknowledged and appreciated as of old.

Monday evening Mr. Gustav Strube, the well-known composer, and a member of the Symphony Orchestra, will conduct, and from then on till the end of the season. That the programs will be carefully made up to suit all tastes is evident from that of Monday night.

Marche Hongroise from "The Damnation of Faust"	Berlioz
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Waltz, "Les Patineurs"	Waldteufel
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
Overture, "La Dame Blanche"	Boieldieu
Melody	Rubinstein
Serenade	Moszkowski
Polonaise	Chopin
Prelude to "The Cricket on the Hearth"	Goldmark
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppe
Gavotte, "Stephanie"	Czibulka
Polka, "Sangerlust"	Strauss
March, "Home, Sweet Home"	Strube

BOSTON POST,

The Representative Democratic Paper

OF NEW ENGLAND.

MUSIC HALL CONCERTS.

The promenade concerts at Music Hall, now on the last half of the summer season, have attracted unusually large audiences the past week, it being difficult to secure seats unless getting them early. Tomorrow night will be given to Wagner, with the following programme:

March, "Under the Double Eagle," Wagner; overture, "Rienzi," Wagner; waltz, "Lagunen," Strauss; selection, "The Serenade," Herbert; overture, "Tannhauser," Wagner; "The Evening Star," Wagner, trombone solo, by Mr. Carl Hampe; selection, "La Fille de Madame Angot," Lecocq; (a) Procession of the Women, from "Lohengrin," Wagner (first time) [illegible] to Act III., "Lohengrin," [illegible] selection, "Brigands," Offen[illegible] "[illegible] of the Valkyries," Wagner [illegible] "Tabasco," [illegible]

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, JUNE 7, 1898.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

Mr Strube Now Conductor of the "Pops."

"An Enemy to the King," Played by the Castle Sq Company.

"Around the Town" — "The Telephone Girl"—Other Attractions.

The second half of this season's series of promenade concerts in Music hall began last evening, when Mr Gustav Strube succeeded Mr Max Zach as conductor. Mr Strube will direct the orchestra during the four weeks that these very popular concerts are to continue, and the cordial applause bestowed upon his efforts last evening gave pleasant assurance that he will be no less a favorite than his predecessors.

Mr Strube has for several years been a prominent and highly esteemed member of the Boston symphony orchestra. He ordinarily fills the position of a first violin, but he has often been called upon to serve as substitute for absent players of other instruments, and his versatility as a musician is such that he has invariably discharged his duties to the satisfaction of the most exacting. He has also earned distinguished recognition as a composer, and several of his works, including a symphony and an overture, have been played by the Symphony orchestra.

Mr Strube is a musician of scholarly attainments and he directs with authority and excellent judgment. It was evident from last evening's program that he has more liking for "musicianly" music than for the tuneful numbers so dear to the hearts of a "popular" assemblage, but he will no doubt be willing to hereafter subordinate his own wishes to those of his patrons.

Selections for these summer concerts can scarcely be too light or too melodious and the spirit of the public is at present such that patriotic marches cannot be too often repeated. In the few numbers of this latter character played last evening there was no lack of brilliancy, and the audience expressed appreciation in the most enthusiastic manner possible. Mr Strube will probably prove no less versatile as a conductor than as a performer.

Mr F. R. Comee, manager of the concerts, gave evidence of his patriotic sentiments by notable additions to the stage settings. Above the realistic scene of refreshing sylvan delights, so long admired, were portraits of Pres McKinley, Sec Long, Admiral Dewey, Admiral Sampson and Com Schley, all draped with American flags. Later the name "Hobson" appeared in letters of incandescent electric lights, and while the orchestra played "Dixie" the audience cheered lustily.

The program this evening will be as follows:

March, El Capitan	Sousa
Overture, Pique Dame	Suppe
Waltz, Morgenblatter	Strauss
Selection, Cavalleria Rusticana	Mascagni
Overture, Mignon	A Thomas
Menuet	Bulzoni
Bal costume	Rubinstein
Finale, Lohengrin	Wagner
Overture, Orpheus aux Enfers	Offenbach
Intermezzo, Naila	Delibes
Paraphrase on Loreley	Nesvadba
Oriental march	Zach

Tomorrow evening will be "patriotic night" and the program acrostic will be "Sampson and Schley."

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY, JUNE 7, 1898.

The Pops.

Last night saw the first appearance of Mr. Gustav Strube at Music Hall as conductor of the Promenade Concerts. He was welcomed heartily when he raised his stick for the opening number, the Marche Hongroise, by Berlioz, and he was applauded frequently in the course of the program. Mr. Strube is an excellent musician and his tastes are pure and elevated. Let us hope that he will bear constantly in mind that these concerts are designed for the thoughtless pleasure of the audience rather than for any educational purpose. The program for the following nights of this week are more jovial than that of last night, which was too respectable—and therefore not wholly free from the charge of dullness. Boieldieu's "Dame Blanche" overture should be allowed to sleep quietly on the shelf; and Goldmark's prelude to "The Cricket on the Hearth" is not worth the voyage across the Atlantic. A little more animation, Mr. Strube! A little more biff! It takes a good deal to arouse a Boston audience to undisguised enjoyment.

The piece that awakened true enthusiasm last night were interpolated patriotic airs and a Sousa march. Portraits of the President, the Secretary of the Navy, Dewey, Sampson and Schley were cheered, and there was long continued and uproarious applause when the name Hobson appeared to the music of Dixie. It was good to hear both the tribute paid the brave Alabamian and the tune that led his father into battle.

The program tonight will include pieces by Sousa, Suppé, Strauss, Mascagni, Thomas, Bulzoni, Rubinstein, Wagner, Offenbach, Delibes, Nesvadba, Zach.

A special patriotic program will be [illegible] Wednesday night, and the [illegible] letters of this [illegible] spell [illegible] Schley." [illegible]

The Official Paper of the State

The Official Paper of the City.

TUESDAY MORNING, JUNE 7, 1898.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

The Music Hall "Pops," Mr. Gustav Strube, Conductor.

There is an old maxim which declares it to be bad policy to trade horses while crossing a stream; nevertheless, Manager Comee has hitherto found it to be a successful plan to change his conductor at mid-season of the promenade concerts. Variatio delectat!

Last night, therefore, found Mr. Zach's reign ended and the regime of Mr. Gustav Strube begun. "The king is dead, long live the king," was exemplified in the cordial welcome extended to the newcomer, who justified it, not only by a firm leadership, but by a judiciously selected programme. He began his march to victory with Berlioz, and the great Hungarian march, the "Rackoczy," was quite as well given as it was at the regular symphony concerts a few weeks ago.

There was no attempt at extreme classicism, for which we were grateful (since we prefer our salads and ice cream served on different plates) and the central division of the programme, which is always the most ambitious part of these concerts, did not go beyond popular selections from Boieldieu, Rubinstein, Moszkowski, Mendelssohn (as an encore), Chopin and Goldmark.

The occasion, every moment of which was enjoyable, was not one for ponderous criticism; it is sufficient to say that the hall was crowded, the new conductor was applauded, the music was charmingly varied, the interpretation was creditable alike to conductor and orchestra, and everybody seemed in a pleasant state of mind. This combination of music, refreshments and ease, is not a new invention, for the present writer possesses a quaint album of a singing club, dated 1560, which gives a description of very similar concerts, stating (in faulty Latin), among other regulations, that,—"Pretor cerevisia et mustellas nihil apponitor." And what was enjoyed in 1560 seems quite as enjoyable in 1898.

It was gratifying to notice that patriotic enthusiasm had by no means abated at these concerts; "The Star Spangled Banner" and "God Save the Queen" caused the majority of the audience to rise, but when "Dixie" was played in honor of our newest hero, and when the name of the valiant Southerner—"Hobson"—was displayed in electric lights, the audience abandoned all reserve and gave both tune and name the warmest kind of a reception—all of which may not belong to the province of musical criticism, but is pleasant to record nevertheless.

Louis C. Elson.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.

CIII, NO. 158.

TUESDAY, JUNE 7, 1898.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The fifth week of the promenade concerts at Music Hall began last evening in the presence of one of the largest audiences of the season. The occasion had a special interest in the first appearance of Mr. Gustav Strube as conductor of the entertainment. He was received with marked cordiality, and was frequently and heartily applauded through the concert. Quite a number of the selections were encored, and there was a tremendous enthusiasm over the patriotic music, of which there was an ample share, especially in response to demands for repetitions. Among the features in harmony with the spirit of the time were numerous portraits of prominent characters of the day. During the performance of "The Star Spangled Banner" a likeness of President McKinley was unveiled. Later was lowered a line of portraits of Secretary of the Navy Long, Admiral Dewey, Admiral Sampson and Commodore Schley to the anthem "America," and still later the name "Hobson," formed of electric lights, which was greeted by the playing of "Dixie" by the orchestra. There were tempests of plaudits on each occasion, but the most stirring and prolonged recognition was accorded the name of the hero of the sinking of the Merrimac. Mr. Strube, it may be added, placed himself at once in the favor of his public. The programme for tonight includes selections from Sousa, Suppe, Strauss, Mascagni, Offenbach, Delibes, Wagner, Rubinstein and Zach.

The ever popular promenade concerts have attracted more people than usual to Music Hall the past week, on account of warm weather. To sit enjoying dolce far niente while listening to sweet music is exactly the amusement for languid evenings. The new leader has won deserved encomiums by his exhibits of ability, and the grand orchestra of fifty is heard with special delight in the spirited renditions of that patriotic music now so popular. There will be concerts every evening of the coming week, with well-arranged programmes giving just the right proportion of "popular" and classic music.

BOSTON POST,

The Representative Democratic Paper

OF NEW ENGLAND.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Last evening inaugurated the second half of the season of promenade concerts in Music Hall, and also the first appearance at these entertainments as leader of Gustav Strube, who is well known here as a member of the Symphony Orchestra and a composer of merit. It was a novel position for the musician, and it took him some time to note the popular desire, but when once he ascertained the wishes of his audience he was not slow in gratifying them.

There were several very pretty features introduced. At the beginning of the concert the orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner," and at the same time an American flag was displayed on the stage, draping a portrait of President McKinley. Later came "America," when pictures of Admiral Dewey, Admiral Sampson, Commodore Schley and Secretary Long were shown. Lastly the band struck "Dixey," and an electric sign was lowered bearing the name "Hobson." It is needless to state that each feature, especially the last, created a perfect furore.

A fine programme has been arranged for this evening. Wednesday will be "patriotic night," and Monday, June 13, "Wagner night." The season will continue until Saturday evening, July 3.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, JUNE 12, 1898.

THE PROMENADES.

That the flight of the weeks is swift, even with their wings sodden with rain, was made manifest at Music Hall on Monday evening, when the beginning of the second half of the Promenade concerts was intimated by the appearance of Mr. Gustave Strube at the conductor's desk and that of Mr. Zach in a commanding balcony seat. It is good that two such excellent conductors can be had for the asking from the ranks of the orchestra, and we doubt not that yet others would be promptly forthcoming if they were needed. Mr. Strube is less known as a director than Mr. Zach, but he shares equally in the sympathy of the audience, because he allows no comparison to be drawn, but devotes himself like his brother in the work to the simple task of making the best possible programmes and eliciting the best possible performances of them. The selections for his first week were admirable, graced with pleasant novelty, enforced with some patriotic spicery and capitally arranged. The pleasant evenings have brought out hosts of people and the late comers have had small chance to get desirable table places.

HOWARD MALCOM TICKNOR.

THE BOSTON TIMES

(ESTABLISHED 1864.)

EVERY SUNDAY,

AT 20 HAWLEY STREET.

LAST NIGHT was a red letter one at the "Pops." It was Max Zach's farewell appearance as conductor, and the old hall rang with applause and cheers as a testimony of the good will which the demonstrative patrons have for him. An innovation in the programme was a baritone solo by Mr. Placido Fiumara. Mr. Zach has shown himself a most accommodating conductor in the making up of his programmes, and in his response to encores and the calls for certain numbers, which has come to be a regular thing now at the Pops. A week ago last night "We—want—'Up—the—Street,'" was the persistent yell from two or three groups of young men after every number, and "So—do—we" was the echo from the balcony. And they got it. Tomorrow night Mr. Gustav Strube will take up the baton at these concerts and continue as leader of the orchestra until the close of the season, July 4. Mr. Strube is a prominent member of the Symphony orchestra, who seems well fitted to the position he is about to occupy. The programme which he has arranged for tomorrow night is: Marche Hongroise from "The Damnation of Faust," Berlioz; overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; waltz, "Les Patineurs," Waldteufel; selection, "Wizard of the Nile," Herbert; overture, "La Dame Blanche," Boieldieu; Melody, Rubinstein; Serenade, Moszkowski; Polonaise, Chopin; Prelude to "The Cricket on the Hearth," Goldmark; overture, "Poet and Peasant," Suppé; gavotte, "Stephanie," Czibulka; polka, "Sangerlust," Strauss; march, "Home, Sweet Home," Strube.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JUNE 5, 1898.

Music Hall Concerts.

This evening Gustav Strube will appear as the conductor of the promenade concerts in Music hall. The program will be as follows:

Marche Hongroise from The Damnation of Faust	Berlioz
Overture, Merry Wives of Windsor	Nicolai
Waltz, Les Patineurs	Waldteufel
Selection, Wizard of the Nile	Herbert
Overture, La Dame Blanche	Boieldieu
Melody	Rubinstein
Serenade	Moszkowski
Polonaise	Chopin
Prelude to The Cricket on the Hearth	Goldmark
Overture, Poet and Peasant	Suppe
Gavotte, Stephanie	Czibulka
Polka, Sangerlust	Strauss
March, Home, Sweet Home	Strube

THE BOSTON TIMES

(ESTABLISHED 1864.)

EVERY SUNDAY,

At 20 HAWLEY STREET.

IT WAS Boston which set the example for New York in the giving of "Pop" concerts. The plan of our dear old Music hall promenades, which for so many summers have alleviated the discomfiture of the torrid evenings for society lions, followers of Bohemia, and the common herd as well, has been taken up in New York city at the Lenox lyceum and under the direction of Rudolph Aronson, the Banda Rossa, which has had such a checkered career since they landed on these shores six months ago, are giving concerts which a contemporary says "have made a great impression on the New York public."

Our own "Pop" concerts continue in the full flush of their popularity. Tomorrow will be "Harvard night" and the college boys will own the place.

THE BOSTON COMMERCIAL.

Music Hall Concerts.

Mr. Gustav Strube and his excellent orchestra have delighted thousands at the Music Hall this week with the series of fine concerts they have given. The orchestra never has played better, and has received generous applause every night. As the season advances the interest in this pleasant mode of entertainment increases, and as a consequence there is a very large attendance. In order to secure good seats an early application at the box office is necessary.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, JUNE 5, 1898.

THE POPS.

Mr. Max Zach conducted the Promenade Concerts Saturday night for the last time this season. His taste in selecting programs, his courtesy in yielding to the wishes of audiences, and his skill in conducting the admirable orchestra were acknowledged and appreciated as of old.

Monday evening Mr. Gustav Strube, the well-known composer, and a member of the Symphony Orchestra, will conduct, and from then on till the end of the season. That the programs will be carefully made up to suit all tastes is evident from that of Monday night.

Marche Hongroise from "The Damnation of Faust"	Berlioz
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Waltz, "Les Patineurs"	Waldteufel
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
Overture, "La Dame Blanche"	Boieldieu
Melody	Rubinstein
Serenade	Moszkowski
Polonaise	Chopin
Prelude to "The Cricket on the Hearth"	Goldmark
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppe
Gavotte, "Stephanie"	Czibulka
Polka, "Sangerlust"	Strauss
March, "Home, Sweet Home"	Strube

BOSTON POST,

The Representative Democratic Paper OF NEW ENGLAND.

MUSIC HALL CONCERTS.

The promenade concerts at Music Hall, now on the last half of the summer season, have attracted unusually large audiences the past week, it being difficult to secure seats unless getting them early. Tomorrow night will be given to Wagner, with the following programme:

March, "Under the Double Eagle," Wagner; overture, "Rienzi," Wagner; waltz, "Lagunen," Strauss; selection, "The Serenade," Herbert; overture, "Tannhauser," Wagner; "The Evening Star," Wagner, trombone solo, by Mr. Carl Hampe; selection, "La Fille de Madame Angot," Lecocq; (a) Procession of the Women, from "Lohengrin," Wagner (first time); (b) introduction to Act III., "Lohengrin," Wagner; selection, "Brigands," Offenbach; "Ride of the Valkyries," Wagner; "Baby Polka," Bayer; march, "Tabasco," Chadwick.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, JUNE 7, 1898.

MUSIC AND DRAMA.

Mr Strube Now Conductor of the "Pops."

"An Enemy to the King," Played by the Castle Sq Company.

"Around the Town" — "The Telephone Girl"—Other Attractions.

The second half of this season's series of promenade concerts in Music hall began last evening, when Mr Gustav Strube succeeded Mr Max Zach as conductor. Mr Strube will direct the orchestra during the four weeks that these very popular concerts are to continue, and the cordial applause bestowed upon his efforts last evening gave pleasant assurance that he will be no less a favorite than his predecessors.

Mr Strube has for several years been a prominent and highly esteemed member of the Boston symphony orchestra. He ordinarily fills the position of a first violin, but he has often been called upon to serve as substitute for absent players of other instruments, and his versatility as a musician is such that he has invariably discharged his duties to the satisfaction of the most exacting. He has also earned distinguished recognition as a composer, and several of his works, including a symphony and an overture, have been played by the Symphony orchestra.

Mr Strube is a musician of scholarly attainments and he directs with authority and excellent judgment. It was evident from last evening's program that he has more liking for "musicianly" music than for the tuneful numbers so dear to the hearts of a "popular" assemblage, but he will no doubt be willing to hereafter subordinate his own wishes to those of his patrons.

Selections for these summer concerts can scarcely be too light or too melodious and the spirit of the public is at present such that patriotic marches cannot be too often repeated. In the few numbers of this latter character played last evening there was no lack of brilliancy, and the audience expressed appreciation in the most enthusiastic manner possible. Mr Strube will probably prove no less versatile as a conductor than as a performer.

Mr F. R. Comee, manager of the concerts, gave evidence of his patriotic sentiments by notable additions to the stage settings. Above the realistic scene of refreshing sylvan delights, so long admired, were portraits of Pres McKinley, Sec Long, Admiral Dewey, Admiral Sampson and Com Schley, all draped with American flags. Later the name "Hobson" appeared in letters of incandescent electric lights, and while the orchestra played "Dixie" the audience cheered lustily.

The program this evening will be as follows:

March, El Captain	Sousa
Overture, Pique Dame	Suppe
Waltz, Morgenblatter	Strauss
Selection, Cavalleria Rusticana	Mascagni
Overture, Mignon	A Thomas
Menuet	Bulzoni
Bal costume	Rubinstein
Finale, Lohengrin	Wagner
Overture, Orpheus aux Enfers	Offenbach
Intermezzo, Naila	Delibes
Paraphrase on Loreley	Nesvadba
Oriental march	Zach

Tomorrow evening will be "patriotic night" and the program acrostic will be "Sampson and Schley."

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY, JUNE 7, 1898.

The Pops.

Last night saw the first appearance of Mr. Gustav Strube at Music Hall as conductor of the Promenade Concerts. He was welcomed heartily when he raised his stick for the opening number, the Marche Hongroise, by Berlioz, and he was applauded frequently in the course of the program. Mr. Strube is an excellent musician and his tastes are pure and elevated. Let us hope that he will bear constantly in mind that these concerts are designed for the thoughtless pleasure of the audience rather than for any educational purpose. The program for the following nights of this week are more jovial than that of last night, which was too respectable—and therefore not wholly free from the charge of dullness. Boieldieu's "Dame Blanche" overture should be allowed to sleep quietly on the shelf; and Goldmark's prelude to "The Cricket on the Hearth" is not worth the voyage across the Atlantic. A little more animation, Mr. Strube! A little more biff! It takes a good deal to arouse a Boston audience to undisguised enjoyment.

The piece that awakened true enthusiasm last night were interpolated patriotic airs and a Sousa march. Portraits of the President, the Secretary of the Navy, Dewey, Sampson and Schley were cheered, and there was long continued and uproarious applause when the name Hobson appeared to the music of Dixie. It was good to hear both the tribute paid the brave Alabamian and the tune that led his father into battle.

The program tonight will include pieces by Sousa, Suppé, Strauss, Mascagni, Thomas, Bulzoni, Rubinstein, Wagner, Offenbach, Delibes, Nesvadba, Zach.

A special patriotic program will be [illegible]nted Wednesday night, and the [illegible] letters of this program spell "[illegible]mpson-Schley." Next Monday night will be devoted to works of Wagner.

BOSTON DAILY ADVE[illegible]

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State

The Official Paper of the City.

TUESDAY MORNING, JUNE 7, 1898.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

The Music Hall "Pops," Mr. Gustav Strube, Conductor.

There is an old maxim which declares it to be bad policy to trade horses while crossing a stream; nevertheless, Manager Comee has hitherto found it to be a successful plan to change his conductor at mid-season of the promenade concerts. Variatio delectat!

Last night, therefore, found Mr. Zach's reign ended and the regime of Mr. Gustav Strube begun. "The king is dead, long live the king," was exemplified in the cordial welcome extended to the newcomer, who justified it, not only by a firm leadership, but by a judiciously selected programme. He began his march to victory with Berlioz, and the great Hungarian march, the "Rackoczy," was quite as well given as it was at the regular symphony concerts a few weeks ago.

There was no attempt at extreme classicism, for which we were grateful (since we prefer our salads and ice cream served on different plates) and the central division of the programme, which is always the most ambitious part of these concerts, did not go beyond popular selections from Boieldieu, Rubinstein, Moszkowski, Mendelssohn (as an encore), Chopin and Goldmark.

The occasion, every moment of which was enjoyable, was not one for ponderous criticism; it is sufficient to say that the hall was crowded, the new conductor was applauded, the music was charmingly varied, the interpretation was creditable alike to conductor and orchestra, and everybody seemed in a pleasant state of mind. This combination of music, refreshments and ease, is not a new invention, for the present writer possesses a quaint album of a singing club, dated 1560, which gives a description of very similar concerts, stating (in faulty Latin), among other regulations, that,—"Pretor cerevisia et mustellas nihil apponitor." And what was enjoyed in 1560 seems quite as enjoyable in 1898.

It was gratifying to notice that patriotic enthusiasm had by no means abated at these concerts: "The Star Spangled Banner" and "God Save the Queen" caused the majority of the audience to rise, but when "Dixie" was played in honor of our newest hero, and when the name of the valiant Southerner—"Hobson"—was displayed in electric lights, the audience abandoned all reserve and gave both tune and name the warmest kind of a reception—all of which may not belong to the province of musical criticism, but is pleasant to record nevertheless.

Louis C. Elson.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
CIII., NO. 158.

TUESDAY, JUNE 7, 1898.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The fifth week of the promenade concerts at Music Hall began last evening in the presence of one of the largest audiences of the season. The occasion had a special interest in the first appearance of Mr. Gustav Strube as conductor of the entertainment. He was received with marked cordiality, and was frequently and heartily applauded through the concert. Quite a number of the selections were encored, and there was a tremendous enthusiasm over the patriotic music, of which there was an ample share, especially in response to demands for repetitions. Among the features in harmony with the spirit of the time were numerous portraits of prominent characters of the day. During the performance of "The Star Spangled Banner" a likeness of President McKinley was unveiled. Later was lowered a line of portraits of Secretary of the Navy Long, Admiral Dewey, Admiral Sampson and Commodore Schley to the anthem "America," and still later the name "Hobson," formed of electric lights, which was greeted by the playing of "Dixie" by the orchestra. There were tempests of plaudits on each occasion, but the most stirring and prolonged recognition was accorded the name of the hero of the sinking of the Merrimac. Mr. Strube, it may be added, placed himself at once in the favor of his public. The programme for tonight includes selections from Sousa, Suppe, Strauss, Mascagni, Offenbach, Delibes, Wagner, Rubinstein and Zach.

BOSTON POST,

The Representative Democratic Paper OF NEW ENGLAND.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Last evening inaugurated the second half of the season of promenade concerts in Music Hall, and [illegible] the first appearance at these entertainments as leader of Gustav Strube, who is well known here as a member of the Symphony Orchestra and a composer of merit. It was a novel position for the musician, and it took him some time to note the popular desire, but when once he ascertained the wishes of his audience he was not slow in gratifying them.

There were several very pretty features introduced. At the beginning of the concert the orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner," and at the same time an American flag was displayed on the stage, draping a portrait of President McKinley. Later came "America," when pictures of Admiral Dewey, Admiral Sampson, Commodore Schley and Secretary Long were shown. Lastly the band struck "Dixey," and an electric sign was lowered bearing the name "Hobson." It is needless to state that each feature, especially the last, created a perfect furore.

A fine programme has been arranged for this evening. Wednesday will be "patriotic night," and Monday, June 13, "Wagner night." The season will continue until Saturday evening, July 3.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, JUNE 12, 1898.

THE PROMENADES.

That the flight of the weeks is swift, even with their wings sodden with rain, was made manifest at Music Hall on Monday evening, when the beginning of the second half of the Promenade concerts was intimated by the appearance of Mr. Gustave Strube at the conductor's desk and that of Mr. Zach in a commanding balcony seat. It is good that two such excellent conductors can be had for the asking from the ranks of the orchestra, and we doubt not that yet others would be promptly forthcoming if they were needed. Mr. Strube is less known as a director than Mr. Zach, but he shares equally in the sympathy of the audience, because he allows no comparison to be drawn, but devotes himself like his brother in the work to the simple task of making the best possible programmes and eliciting the best possible performances of them. The selections for his first week were admirable, graced with pleasant novelty, enforced with some patriotic spicery and capitally arranged. The pleasant evenings have brought out hosts of people and the late comers have had small chance to get desirable table places.

HOWARD MALCOM TICKNOR.

THE BOSTON TIMES

(ESTABLISHED 1864.)

EVERY SUNDAY,

At 20 HAWLEY STREET.

LAST NIGHT was a red letter one at the "Pops." It was Max Zach's farewell appearance as conductor, and the old hall rang with applause and cheers as a testimony of the good will which the demonstrative patrons have for him. An innovation in the programme was a baritone solo by Mr. Placido Fiumara. Mr. Zach has shown himself a most accommodating conductor in the making up of his programmes, and in his response to encores and the calls for certain numbers, which has come to be a regular thing now at the Pops. A week ago last night "We—want—'Up—the—Street,'" was the persistent yell from two or three groups of young men after every number, and "So—do—we" was the echo from the balcony. And they got it. Tomorrow night Mr. Gustav Strube will take up the baton at these concerts and continue as leader of the orchestra until the close of the season, July 4. Mr. Strube is a prominent member of the Symphony orchestra, who seems well fitted to the position he is about to occupy. The programme which he has arranged for tomorrow night is: Marche Hongroise from "The Damnation of Faust," Berlioz; overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; waltz, "Les Patineurs," Waldteufel; selection, "Wizard of the Nile," Herbert; overture, "La Dame Blanche," Boieldieu; Melody, Rubinstein; Serenade, Moszkowski; Polonaise, Chopin; Prelude to "The Cricket on the Hearth," Goldmark; overture, "Poet and Peasant," Suppé; gavotte, "Stephanie," Czibulka; polka, "Sangerlust," Strauss; march, "Home, Sweet Home," Strube.

The ever popular promenade concerts have attracted more people than usual to Music Hall the past week, on account of warm weather. To sit enjoying dolce far niente while listening to sweet music is exactly the amusement for languid evenings. The new leader has won deserved encomiums by his exhibits of ability, and the grand orchestra of fifty is heard with special delight in the spirited renditions of that patriotic music now so popular. There will be concerts every evening of the coming week with well-arranged programmes giving just the right proportion of "popular" and classic music.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JUNE 12, 1898.

Music Hall Promenades.

One strong factor in the continued success of the Music hall concerts is the change in the program each evening. Mr Strube, the conductor, is to be commended for the excellence of his programs, also his willingness to perform a large number of the patriotic selections of the day.

Special attractions already announced are, for tomorrow evening, Wagner night; Wednesday, soloists night; Friday, Bunker hill night; Monday, June 20, Harvard night; Monday, June 27, graduates' night. Of late years it has become quite popular for the different Harvard classes to have a reunion at the pops, and for the evening of June 27 nearly the entire reserved section on the floor has been reserved for the classes of 88, 89, 92 and 95.

The program for tomorrow evening is as follows:

March, Under the Double Eagle	Wagner
Overtrure, Rienzi	Wagner
Waltz, Lagunen	Strauss
Selection, The Serenade	Herbert
Overture, Tannhauser	Wagner
The Evening Star Trombone solo by Mr Carl Hampe.	Wagner
Selection, La Fille de Mme Angot	Lecocq
Procession of the Women, from Lohengrin	Wagner
Introduction to Act III, Lohengrin	Wagner
Selection, Brigands	Offenbach
Ride of the Valkyries	Wagner
Baby Polka	Bayer
March, Tabasco	Chadwick

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State

The Official Paper of the City.

TUESDAY MORNING, JUNE 7, 1898.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

The Music Hall "Pops," Mr. Gustav Strube, Conductor.

There is an old maxim which declares it to be bad policy to trade horses while crossing a stream; nevertheless, Manager Comee has hitherto found it to be a successful plan to change his conductor at mid-season of the promenade concerts. Variatio delectat!

Last night, therefore, found Mr. Zach's reign ended and the regime of Mr. Gustav Strube begun. "The king is dead, long live the king," was exemplified in the cordial welcome extended to the newcomer, who justified it, not only by a firm leadership, but by a judiciously selected programme. He began his march to victory with Berlioz, and the great Hungarian march, the "Rackoczy," was quite as well given as it was at the regular symphony concerts a few weeks ago.

There was no attempt at extreme classicism, for which we were grateful (since we prefer our salads and ice cream served on different plates) and the central division of the programme, which is always the most ambitious part of these concerts, did not go beyond popular selections from Boieldieu, Rubinstein, Moszkowski, Mendelssohn (as an encore), Chopin and Goldmark.

The occasion, every moment of which was enjoyable, was not one for ponderous criticism; it is sufficient to say that the hall was crowded, the new conductor was applauded, the music was charmingly varied, the interpretation was creditable alike to conductor and orchestra, and everybody seemed in a pleasant state of mind. This combination of music, refreshments and ease, is not a new invention, for the present writer possesses a quaint album of a singing club, dated 1560, which gives a description of very similar concerts, stating (in faulty Latin), among other regulations, that,—"Preter cerevisia et mustellas nihil apponitor." And what was enjoyed in 1560 seems quite as enjoyable in 1898.

It was gratifying to notice that patriotic enthusiasm had by no means abated at these concerts: "The Star Spangled Banner" and "God Save the Queen" caused the majority of the audience to rise, but when "Dixie" was played in honor of our newest hero, and when the name of the valiant Southerner—"Hobson"—was displayed in electric lights, the audience abandoned all reserve and gave both tune and name the warmest kind of a reception—all of which may not belong to the province of musical criticism, but is pleasant to record nevertheless.

Louis C. Elson.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1898.

THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

The popularity of the Promenade concerts at Music Hall is more fully demonstrated than ever these warm June evenings. The hall is well filled every night, and both the sociability and the music are most enjoyable.

Monday evening Mr. Gustav Strube, the well-known composer, and a member of the Symphony orchestra, began his season as conductor from then on till the end of the season. That the programs will be carefully made up to suit all tastes is evident from those of this week, which have all been of a sort to please everybody.

SUNDAY, JUNE 12, 1898.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC

Wagner Selections at Music Hall Monday Night.

Patriotic Programme for the Promenade Concert the Evening of the Seventeenth—Continued Success of "Around the Town" at the Tremont—Notes.

The season of the Promenade concerts at Music Hall is fast nearing the end. There will be only three more weeks, as the entertainments close positively on Saturday, July 2. The past week was an exceptionally brilliant one, as attested by the large crowd around the tables and in the side balconies.

Mr. Strube has fully realized the hopes of his friends. His programmes have been of a high standard of popular music and his conducting shows admirable skill. The following special nights have thus far been appointed: Tomorrow, a Wagner programme; Wednesday, soloists' night; Friday, Bunker Hill night; Monday, June 20, Harvard night; Monday, June 27, graduates' night. On the last named occasion nearly the entire reserved section on the floor will be occupied by the Harvard classes of '88, '89, '92 and '95. This feature of a reunion during the "Pop" season is becoming more in favor every year. The selections for tomorrow evening are:

March, "Under the Double Eagle"	Wagner
Overture, "Rienzi"	Wagner
Waltz, "Lagunen"	Strauss
Selection, "The Serenade"	Herbert
Overture, "Tannhauser"	Wagner
"The Evening Star"	Wagner
Selection, "La Fille de Mme. Angot"	Lecocq
Procession of the Women, from "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Introduction to Act III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Selection, "Brigands"	Offenbach
"Ride of the Valkyries"	Wagner
"Baby Polka"	Bayer
March, "Tabasco"	Chadwick

Thursday evening Mr. A. R. Sargent had a party, which was conducted by Mrs. Charles Sargent, Dr. and Mrs. Wesselhoeft, at one of the centre tables. Mr. H. W. Daniels had a party at another table. Others present were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parkman, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Weld, Miss Alice Cole, Mr. F. H. Beebe, Mr. Maymabrie Browne, Mr. Alexander P. Browne, Mr. Mathew Luce, Jr., Miss Clara Munger, Mr. Moses Parker, Miss Priscilla White, Mr. Richard Bullard, Mrs. Gardner and Mr. George Proctor.

There was a large and brilliant audience at the "Pop" concert on Monday night. Mr. Strube made his first appearance as leader, which served as an added attraction no doubt. Mr. Comee's fertile brain, never weary of devising pleasant surprises, had arranged more patriotic features, and the appearance of the name of "Hobson" in letters of light was the signal for tremendous applause and cheers. In the audience were noted a large party of 12, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Hollis Hunnewell, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Stedman, Jr., Miss Stedman, and Mr. Robert Stedman occupied a table on the floor. Mr. and Mrs. Phinehas Adams chaperoned a party of young people at a centre table.

Others noticed were Mr. Hugh Codman, Mr. Walter Deland Came, Mr. Charles Elliott, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Clement, Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Carleton, and Mr. and Mrs. James Means.

On Friday night Mr. Pierson Beebe, with his sister, Miss Emily Beebe, entertained a large party at one of the floor tables. Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Higginson, Miss Lucy Fay, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Moseley, Mr. Harry Woodruff and Mr. Boynton were among others noticed in the brilliant throng of well known people.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Steinert, who occupied the Gardner cottage last season, left town the latter part of the

---

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1898

Programmes of unusual excellence have been offered the numerous patrons of the promenade concerts at Music Hall this week by Mr. Strube. As usual there was considerable variety in the selections, and the listeners have shown considerable enthusiasm. The present season will close with the concert two weeks from tonight. Next Monday will be "Harvard Night;" Wednesday, June 22, "Light-Opera Night;" June 27, "Graduate Night"; June 28, "Military Night," when selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets will be played. The programme in full for Monday is:

March, "Through the Yard"	Terhune
Overture, "Jolly Students"	Suppé
Waltz, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
Selection from "The Alcayde"	Barry
March, "The Cruiser Harvard"	Strube
Waltz, "Estudiantina"	Waldteufel
[illegible] "[illegible] Brink"	Carpenter
Selection, "[illegible]"	[illegible]
[illegible] "The [illegible] Squadron"	Clark
[illegible] "[illegible]"	[illegible]

OF NEW ENGLAND.

If Lieutenant Hobson, the brave young Southerner who sank the Merrimac in Santiago Harbor amidst the [illegible] of shells from the guns of the Spaniards, had been at the "Pop" concert in Music Hall the other evening, I have but little doubt he would feel that his bravery was rewarded, let alone the notices he has received in the editorial columns of the great dailies. While the band was playing a popular air, electric lights attached to pieces of wood and spelling "Hobson" were let down from amid the scenes on the stage. No sooner did it show into view than the great crowd that filled the floor and galleries applauded frantically. Their cheers lasted for several moments. It was an outburst that came from the hearts of everyone present, and showed how bravery is thought of by Americans.

* * *

THE BOSTON COMMERCIAL.

Published Every Saturday Evening.

Music Hall Concerts.

The season of concerts at Music Hall continues under the most auspicious circumstances, the hall being filled every night with delighted audiences. With tonight's concert Prof. Zach retires from the leadership of the orchestra, and the occasion will be made an interesting one for all present. The gentleman has made himself very popular with the public, the programmes he has offered always meeting with their hearty approval. Under the new leader, the concerts will continue throughout the month and will remain one of the leading attractions of the season.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1898

The promenade concert season at Music Hall continues to give great pleasure to the lovers of the lighter class of orchestral selections and the liberal patronage bestowed upon them gives ample evidence of the good judgment shown in their direction by Acting Manager Fred R. Comee. The programmes arranged and played under the direction of Mr. Max Zach are admirably chosen and the men of the orchestra have never done better work than during the present season. Arrangements were made at the beginning of the present season to divide the duties of conductor between Mr. Max Zach and Mr. Gustav Strube, and the coming week will be the last of Mr. Zach's portion of the season. Mr. Strube is also a member of the Symphony Orchestra, and is well fitted in every way to please the patrons of the promenades. The concerts will be continued every week day evening until July 2. Next Monday evening the programme will give prominence to the compositions of John Philip Sousa, the selections being as follows:

March, "Washington Post"	Sousa
Overture, "Mignon"	A. Thomas
Waltz, "O schöner Mai"	Strauss
Selection from "El Capitan"	Sousa
Entr'acte, "Forget me not"	McBeth
March, "King Cotton"	Sousa
Waltz, "Soldier's Songs"	Gungl
Narcissus	Nevin
March, "Manhattan Beach"	Sousa
Overture, "Rienzi"	Wagner
Overture, "Martha"	Flotow
"The Darkey's Dream"	Lansing
March from "Bride Elect"	Sousa
Waltz, "Arabian Nights"	Strauss
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, JUNE 12, 1898.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

One strong factor in the continued success of these concerts is the change in the program each evening. Mr. Strube, the conductor, is to be commended for the excellence of his programs, also his willingness to perform a large number of the patriotic selections of the day. Special attractions thus far announced are tomorrow (Monday) evening, Wagner program; Wednesday, June 15, Soloists' Night; Friday, June 17, Bunker Hill Night; Monday, June 20, Harvard Night; Monday, June 27, Graduates' Night.

Of late years it has become quite popular for the different classes of Harvard to have a reunion at the Pops, and on the 27th nearly the entire reserved section on the floor has been reserved for the classes of '88, '89, '92 and '95. The program in full for tomorrow evening is:

March, "Under the Double Eagle"	Wagner
Overture, "Rienzi"	Wagner
Waltz, "Bagunen"	Strauss
Selection, "The Serenade"	Herbert
Overture, "Tannhauser"	Wagner
"The Evening Star" Trombone solo, by Mr. Carl Hampe.	Wagner
Selection, "La Fille de Madame Angot"	Lecocq
a. Procession of the Women, from "Lohengrin" (First time)	Wagner
b. Introduction to Act III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Selection, "Brigands"	Offenbach
Ride of the Valkyries	Wagner
[illegible] Polka	[illegible]
[illegible]	Chadwick

MUSIC [illegible]

Bad [illegible] rather [illegible] attendance at the [illegible] in Music Hall, as [illegible] during this last week [illegible] week has for special attractions [illegible] programme on Monday night, when [illegible] of the most popular military marches will be played in recognition of Decoration Day. Thursday evening, June 2, will be Technology night, with special features complimentary to this favorite New England institution. Saturday night will have a special importance, as it will mark the farewell appearance of Conductor Max Zach, who, in accordance with a custom which has been in vogue for the past few seasons, retires after a most successful season, to make way for Conductor Gustav Strube, like Mr. Zach, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and who will assume the position of director of these concerts on Monday evening, June 6.

Gustav Strube was born at Ballenstedt, a small town in Anhalt, on March 3, 1867. His father was town musician in his native place, and it was from him that he got his first musical instruction. Strube afterwards studied for four years at the Conservatorium in Leipzig—the violin under Adolf Brodsky, the pianoforte under Alois Kechendorf and composition under Karl Reinicke and Salomon Jadassohn. After leaving the institution, he went to Mannheim, where he was engaged as teacher at the Conservatorium. In 1891 he came to this country to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in which he has been one of the first violins ever since.

Strube has taken high rank as a composer. On February 16, 1895, his overture in F major to Schiller's "Jungfrau von Orleans," Opus 8, was brought out in Boston by the Symphony Orchestra, and very favorably received by public and press. This was followed by a symphony in C minor, Opus 11, which was brought out by the same organization on April 4, 1896, and also extremely well received. The work has also been given in Germany. His violin concerto in G major, Opus [illegible], was first played in public by Franz Kneisel at one of the concerts of the Worcester festival of last September and again at one of the New York concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season.

Mr. Strube's remarkable versatility as a musician has often been put to the test at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when the sudden illness of various members of the organization have made it impossible to provide for a substitute. In such cases as this, no matter what the instrument played by the indisposed performer, Mr. Strube was always able to fill the gap, and very acceptably. He has conducted his own works when played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the success made by his predecessors from the ranks of this organization will undoubtedly be repeated in this case.

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY, JUNE 7, 1898.

The Pops.

Last night saw the first appearance of Mr. Gustav Strube at Music Hall as conductor of the Promenade Concerts. He was welcomed heartily when he raised his stick for the opening number, the Marche Hongroise, by Berlioz, and he was applauded frequently in the course of the program. Mr. Strube is an excellent musician and his tastes are pure and elevated. Let us hope that he will bear constantly in mind that these concerts are designed for the thoughtless pleasure of the audience rather than for any educational purpose. The program for the following nights of this week are more jovial than that of last night, which was too respectable—and therefore not wholly free from the charge of dullness. Boieldieu's "Dame Blanche" overture should be allowed to sleep quietly on the shelf; and Goldmark's prelude to "The Cricket on the Hearth" is not worth the voyage across the Atlantic. A little more animation, Mr. Strube! A little more biff! It takes a good deal to arouse a Boston audience to undisguised enjoyment.

The piece that awakened true enthusiasm last night were interpolated patriotic airs and a Sousa march. Portraits of the President, the Secretary of the Navy, Dewey, Sampson and Schley were cheered, and there was long continued and uproarious applause when the name Hobson appeared to the music of Dixie. It was good to hear both the tribute paid the brave Alabamian and the tune that led his father into battle.

The program tonight will include pieces by Sousa, Suppé, Strauss, Mascagni, Thomas, Bulzoni, Rubinstein, Wagner, Offenbach, Delibes, Nesvadba, Zach.

A special patriotic program will be presented Wednesday night and [illegible] first letters of this [illegible] "Sampson-Schley." Next [illegible] will be devoted to [illegible]

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JUNE 12, 1898.

Music Hall Promenades.

One strong factor in the continued success of the Music hall concerts is the change in the program each evening. Mr Strube, the conductor, is to be commended for the excellence of his programs, also his willingness to perform a large number of the patriotic selections of the day.

Special attractions already announced are, for tomorrow evening, Wagner night; Wednesday, soloists night; Friday, Bunker hill night; Monday, June 20, Harvard night; Monday, June 27, graduates' night. Of late years it has become quite popular for the different Harvard classes to have a reunion at the pops, and for the evening of June 27 nearly the entire reserved section on the floor has been reserved for the classes of 88, 89, 92 and 95.

The program for tomorrow evening is as follows:

March, Under the Double Eagle	Wagner
Overtrure, Rienzi	Wagner
Waltz, Lagumen	Strauss
Selection, The Senenade	Herbert
Overture, Tannhauser	Wagner
The Evening Star Trombone solo by Mr Carl Hampe.	Wagner
Selection, La Fille de Mme Angot	Lecocq
Procession of the Women, from Lohengrin..	Wagner
Introduction to Act III, Lohengrin	Wagner
Selection, Brigands	Offenbach
Ride of the Valkyries	Wagner
Baby Polka	Bayer
March, Tabasco	Chadwick

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State

The Official Paper of the City.

TUESDAY MORNING, JUNE 7, 1898.

MUSICAL MATTERS.

The Music Hall "Pops," Mr. Gustav Strube, Conductor.

There is an old maxim which declares it to be bad policy to trade horses while crossing a stream; nevertheless, Manager Comee has hitherto found it to be a successful plan to change his conductor at mid-season of the promenade concerts. Variatio delectat!

Last night, therefore, found Mr. Zach's reign ended and the regime of Mr. Gustav Strube begun. "The king is dead, long live the king," was exemplified in the cordial welcome extended to the newcomer, who justified it, not only by a firm leadership, but by a judiciously selected programme. He began his march to victory with Berlioz, and the great Hungarian march, the "Rackoczy," was quite as well given as it was at the regular symphony concerts a few weeks ago.

There was no attempt at extreme classicism, for which we were grateful (since we prefer our salads and ice cream served on different plates) and the central division of the programme, which is always the most ambitious part of these concerts, did not go beyond popular selections from Boieldieu, Rubinstein, Moszkowski, Mendelssohn (as an encore), Chopin and Goldmark.

The occasion, every moment of which was enjoyable, was not one for ponderous criticism; it is sufficient to say that the hall was crowded, the new conductor was applauded, the music was charmingly varied, the interpretation was creditable alike to conductor and orchestra, and everybody seemed in a pleasant state of mind. This combination of music, refreshments and ease, is not a new invention, for the present writer possesses a quaint album of a singing club, dated 1560, which gives a description of very similar concerts, stating (in faulty Latin), among other regulations, that,—"Pretor cerevisia et mustellas nihil apponitor." And what was enjoyed in 1560 seems quite as enjoyable in 1898.

It was gratifying to notice that patriotic enthusiasm had by no means abated at these concerts: "The Star Spangled Banner" and "God Save the Queen" caused the majority of the audience to rise, but when "Dixie" was played in honor of our newest hero, and when the name of the valiant Southerner—"Hobson"—was displayed in electric lights, the audience abandoned all reserve and gave both tune and name the warmest kind of a reception—all of which may not belong to the province of musical criticism, but is pleasant to record nevertheless.

Louis C. Elson.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1898.

THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

The popularity of the Promenade concerts in Music Hall is more fully demonstrated than ever these warm June evenings. The hall is well filled every night, and both the sociability and the music are most enjoyable.

Monday evening Mr. Gustav Strube, the well-known composer, and a member of the Symphony orchestra, began his season as conductor from then on till the end of the season. That the programs will be carefully made up to suit all tastes is evident from those of this week, which have all been of a sort to please everybody.

[illegible]ERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIII., NO. 163.

SUNDAY, JUNE 12, 1898.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

Wagner Selections at Music Hall Monday Night.

Patriotic Programme for the Promenade Concert the Evening of the Seventeenth—Continued Success of "Around the Town" at the Tremont—Notes.

The season of the Promenade concerts at Music Hall is fast nearing the end. There will be only three more weeks, as the entertainments close positively on Saturday, July 2. The past week was an exceptionally brilliant one, as attested by the large crowd around the tables and in the side balconies.

Mr. Strube has fully realized the hopes of his friends. His programmes have been of a high standard of popular music and his conducting shows admirable skill. The following special nights have thus far been appointed: Tomorrow, a Wagner programme; Wednesday, soloists' night; Friday, Bunker Hill night; Monday, June 20, Harvard night; Monday, June 27, graduates' night. On the last named occasion nearly the entire reserved section on the floor will be occupied by the Harvard classes of '88, '89, '92 and '95. This feature of a reunion during the "Pop" season is becoming more in favor every year. The selections for tomorrow evening are:

March, "Under the Double Eagle"	Wagner
Overture, "Rienzi"	Wagner
Waltz, "Lagunen"	Strauss
Selection, "The Serenade"	Herbert
Overture, "Tannhauser"	Wagner
"The Evening Star"	Wagner
Selection, "La Fille de Mme. Angot"	Lecocq
Procession of the Women, from "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Introduction to Act III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Selection, "Brigands"	Offenbach
"Ride of the Valkyries"	Wagner
"Baby Polka"	Bayer
March, "Tabasco"	Chadwick

Thursday evening Mr. A. R. Sargent had a party, which was conducted by Mrs. Charles Sargent, Dr. and Mrs. Wesselhoeft, at one of the centre tables. Mr. H. W. Daniels had a party at another table. Others present were Mr. and Mrs. Henry Parkman, Mr. and Mrs. William E. Weld, Miss Alice Cole, Mr. F. H. Beebe, Mr. Maymabrie Browne, Mr. Alexander P. Browne, Mr. Mathew Luce, Jr., Miss Clara Munger, Mr. Moses Parker, Miss Priscilla White, Mr. Richard Bullard, Mrs. Gardner and Mr. George Proctor.

There was a large and brilliant audience at the "Pop" concert on Monday night. Mr. Strube made his first appearance as leader, which served as an added attraction no doubt. Mr. Comee's fertile brain, never weary of devising pleasant surprises, had arranged more patriotic features, and the appearance of the name of "Hobson" in letters of light was the signal for tremendous applause and cheers. In the audience were noted a large party of 12, the guests of Mr. and Mrs. Hollis Hunnewell, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. D. B. Stedman, Jr., Miss Stedman, and Mr. Robert Stedman occupied a table on the floor. Mr. and Mrs. Phinehas Adams chaperoned a party of young people at a centre table.

Others noticed were Mr. Hugh Codman, Mr. Walter Deland Came, Mr. Charles Elliott, Mr. and Mrs. E. H. Clement, Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Carleton, and Mr. and Mrs. James Means.

On Friday night Mr. Pierson Beebe, with his sister, Miss Emily Beebe, entertained a large party at one of the floor tables. Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Higginson, Miss Lucy Fay, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Moseley, Mr. Harry Woodruff and Mr. Boynton were among others noticed in the brilliant throng of well known people.

Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Steinert, who occupied the Gardner cottage last season, left town the latter part of the

---

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1898

Programmes of unusual excellence have been offered the numerous patrons of the promenade concerts at Music Hall this week by Mr. Strube. As usual there was considerable variety in the selections, and the listeners have shown considerable enthusiasm. The present season will close with the concert two weeks from tonight. Next Monday will be "Harvard Night;" Wednesday, June 22, "Light Opera Night;" June 27, "Graduate Night"; June 28, "Military Night," when selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets will be played. The programme in full for Monday is:

March, "Through the Yard"	Terhune
Overture, "Jolly Students"	Suppé
Waltz, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
Selection from "The Alcayde"	Barry
March, "The Cruiser Harvard"	Strube
Waltz, "Estudiantina"	Waldteufel
Pot-Pourri, "Brangle-Brink"	Carpenter
Selection, "Spontania"	Loud
March, "The Flying Squadron"	Clark
Selection, "Boscabello"	Rand
Fair Harvard.
March, "Up the Street"	Morse

BOSTON POST.

The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

* * *

If Lieutenant Hobson, the brave young Southerner who sank the Merrimac in Santiago Harbor amidst the shower of shells from the guns of the Spaniards, had been at the "Pop" concert in Music Hall the other evening, I have but little doubt he would feel that his bravery was rewarded, let alone the notices he has received in the editorial columns of the great dailies. While the band was playing a popular air, electric lights attached to pieces of wood and spelling "Hobson" were let down from amid the scenes on the stage. No sooner did it show into view than the great crowd that filled the floor and galleries applauded frantically. Their cheers lasted for several moments. It was an outburst that came from the hearts of everyone present, and showed how bravery is thought of by Americans.

* * *

THE BOSTON COMMERCIAL.

Published Every Saturday Evening.

Music Hall Concerts.

The season of concerts at Music Hall continues under the most auspicious circumstances, the hall being filled every night with delighted audiences. With tonight's concert Prof. Zach retires from the leadership of the orchestra, and the occasion will be made an interesting one for all present. The gentleman has made himself very popular with the public, the programmes he has offered always meeting with their hearty approval. Under the new leader, the concerts will continue throughout the month and will remain one of the leading attractions of the season.

Boston Transcript

SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1898

The promenade concert season at Music Hall continues to give great pleasure to the lovers of the lighter class of orchestral selections and the liberal patronage bestowed upon them gives ample evidence of the good judgment shown in their direction by Acting Manager Fred R. Comee. The programmes arranged and played under the direction of Mr. Max Zach are admirably chosen and the men of the orchestra have never done better work than during the present season. Arrangements were made at the beginning of the present season to divide the duties of conductor between Mr. Max Zach and Mr. Gustav Strube, and the coming week will be the last of Mr. Zach's portion of the season. Mr. Strube is also a member of the Symphony Orchestra, and is well fitted in every way to please the patrons of the promenades. The concerts will be continued every week day evening until July 2. Next Monday evening the programme will give prominence to the compositions of John Philip Sousa, the selections being as follows:

March, "Washington Post"	Sousa
Overture, "Mignon"	A. Thomas
Waltz, "O schöner Mai"	Strauss
Selection from "El Capitan"	Sousa
Entr'acte, "Forget me not"	McBeth
March, "King Cotton"	Sousa
Waltz, "Soldier's Songs"	Gungl
Narcissus	Nevin
March, "Manhattan Beach"	Sousa
Overture, "Rienzi"	Wagner
Overture, "Martha"	Flotow
"The Darkey's Dream"	Lansing
March from "Bride Elect"	Sousa
Waltz, "Arabian Nights"	Strauss
March, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, JUNE 12, 1898.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADES.

One strong factor in the continued success of these concerts is the change in the program each evening. Mr. Strube, the conductor, is to be commended for the excellence of his programs, also his willingness to perform a large number of the patriotic selections of the day. Special attractions thus far announced are tomorrow (Monday) evening, Wagner program; Wednesday, June 15, Soloists' Night; Friday, June 17, Bunker Hill Night; Monday, June 20, Harvard Night; Monday, June 27, Graduates' Night.

Of late years it has become quite popular for the different classes of Harvard to have a reunion at the Pops, and on the 27th nearly the entire reserved section on the floor has been reserved for the classes of '88, '89, '92 and '95. The program in full for tomorrow evening is:

March, "Under the Double Eagle"	Wagner
Overture, "Rienzi"	Wagner
Waltz, "Bagunen"	Strauss
Selection, "The Serenade"	Herbert
Overture, "Tannhauser"	Wagner
"The Evening Star" Trombone solo, by Mr. Carl Hampe.	Wagner
Selection, "La Fille de Madame Angot"	Lecocq
a. Procession of the Women, from "Lohengrin" (First time)	Wagner
b. Introduction to Act III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
Selection, "Brigands"	Offenbach
Ride of the Valkyries	Wagner
Baby Polka	Bayer
March, "Tabasco"	Chadwick

The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Bad weather seems to have a favorable rather than a depressing, effect upon the attendance at the Promenade Concerts in Music Hall, as the crowded houses during this last week attest. The coming week has for special attractions a Sousa programme on Monday night, when five of the most popular military marches will be played in recognition of Decoration Day. Thursday evening, June 2, will be Technology night, with special features complimentary to this favorite New England institution. Saturday night will have a special importance, as it will mark the farewell appearance of Conductor Max Zach, who, in accordance with a custom which has been in vogue for the past few seasons, retires after a most successful season, to make way for Conductor Gustav Strube, like Mr. Zach, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and who will assume the position of director of these concerts on Monday evening, June 6.

Gustav Strube was born at Ballenstedt, a small town in Anhalt, on March 3, 1867. His father was town musician in his native place, and it was from him that he got his first musical instruction. Strube afterwards studied for four years at the Conservatorium in Leipzig—the violin under Adolf Brodsky, the pianoforte under Alois Kechendorf and composition under Karl Reinicke and Salomol Jadassohn. After leaving the institution, he went to Mannheim, where he was engaged as teacher at the Conservatorium. In 1891 he came to this country to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in which he has been one of the first violins ever since.

Strube has taken high rank as a composer. On February 16, 1895, his overture in F major to Schiller's "Jungfrau von Orleans," Opus 8, was brought out in Boston by the Symphony Orchestra, and very favorably received by public and press. This was followed by a symphony in C minor, Opus 11, which was brought out by the same organization on April 4, 1896, and also extremely well received. The work has also been given in Germany. His violin concerto in G major, Opus 13, was first played in public by Franz Kneisel at one of the concerts of the Worcester festival of last September and again at one of the New York concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season.

Mr. Strube's remarkable versatility as a musician has often been put to the test at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, when the sudden illness of various members of the organization have made it impossible to provide for a substitute. In such cases as this, no matter what the instrument played by the indisposed performer, Mr. Strube was always able to fill the gap, and very acceptably. He has conducted his own works when played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and the success made by his predecessors from the ranks of this organization will undoubtedly be repeated in this case.

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY, JUNE 7, 1898.

The Pops.

Last night saw the first appearance of Mr. Gustav Strube at Music Hall as conductor of the Promenade Concerts. He was welcomed heartily when he raised his stick for the opening number, the Marche Hongroise, by Berlioz, and he was applauded frequently in the course of the program. Mr. Strube is an excellent musician and his tastes are pure and elevated. Let us hope that he will bear constantly in mind that these concerts are designed for the thoughtless pleasure of the audience rather than for any educational purpose. The program for the following nights of this week are more jovial than that of last night, which was too respectable—and therefore not wholly free from the charge of dullness. Boieldieu's "Dame Blanche" overture should be allowed to sleep quietly on the shelf; and Goldmark's prelude to "The Cricket on the Hearth" is not worth the voyage across the Atlantic. A little more animation, Mr. Strube! A little more biff! It takes a good deal to arouse a Boston audience to undisguised enjoyment.

The piece that awakened true enthusiasm last night were interpolated patriotic airs and a Sousa march. Portraits of the President, the Secretary of the Navy, Dewey, Sampson and Schley were cheered, and there was long continued and uproarious applause when the name Hobson appeared to the music of Dixie. It was good to hear both the tribute paid the brave Alabamian and the tune that led his father into battle.

The program tonight will include pieces by Sousa, Suppé, Strauss, Mascagni, Thomas, Bulzoni, Rubinstein, Wagner, Offenbach, Delibes, Nesvadba, Zach.

A special patriotic program will be presented Wednesday night, and the first letters of this program spell "Sampson-Schley." Next Monday night will be devoted to works of Wagner.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.
SUNDAY MORNING, JUNE 5, 1898.
(Copyright, 1898. Post Publishing Company.)

THE POP CONCERTS.

Tomorrow night in Music Hall there will be a change in the leadership of the promenade concerts, and Max Zach, who has conducted the orchestra thus far this season, will retire in favor of Gustav Strube, who will for the first time lead these entertainments. Mr. Strube is no stranger to Boston concert goers. He is a prominent member of the Symphony Orchestra and a composer of note. He has just returned from a highly successful concert tour through the South. Mr. Strube will conduct at Music Hall for the remainder of the season, which will continue until the evening of July 2.

The programme for tomorrow evening will be as follows: Marche Hongroise, from "The Damnation of Faust," Berlioz; overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; waltz "Les Patineurs," Waldteufel; selection, "Wizard of the Nile," Herbert; overture, "La Dame Blanche," Boieldieu; melody, Rubinstein; serenade, Moszkowski; polonaise, Chopin; prelude to "The Cricket on the Hearth," Goldmark; overture, "Poet and Peasant," Suppe; gavotte, "Stephanie," Czibulka; polka, "Sangerlust," Strauss; march "Home, Sweet Home," Strube.

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, JUNE 19, 1898.

Music Hall Promenades.

Twelve more evenings of the promenades at Music hall, and the regular summer season of these concerts will be over. Every evening during the past week an immense audience has greeted conductor Strube when he appeared to direct the orchestra, and the applause which followed each selection on the program must have been very gratifying to both conductor and orchestra. Instead of the 12 numbers as announced on the program, the orchestra, owing to the large number of encores, play nearly twice that number every night.

Tomorrow will be the annual "Harvard night;" Wednesday, June 22, "light opera night;" June 27, "graduate night;" June 28, "military night," when selections from the comic operas produced by the cadets will be given. The program for tomorrow evening is as follows:

March, Through the Yard	Terhune
Overture, Jolly Students	Suppe
Waltz, Grubenlichter	Zeller
Selection from The Alcayde	Barry
March, The Cruiser Harvard	Strube
Waltz, Estudiantina	Waldteufel
Potpourri, Brangle-Brink	Carpenter
Selection, Spontania	Loud
March, The Flying Squadron	Clark
Selection, Boscabello	Rand
Fair Harvard.
March, Up the Street	Morse

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR
CIII, NO. 158.
TUESDAY, JUNE 7, 1898.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The fifth week of the promenade concerts at Music Hall began last evening in the presence of one of the largest audiences of the season. The occasion had a special interest in the first appearance of Mr. Gustav Strube as conductor of the entertainment. He was received with marked cordiality, and was frequently and heartily applauded through the concert. Quite a number of the selections were encored, and there was a tremendous enthusiasm over the patriotic music, of which there was an ample share, especially in response to demands for repetitions. Among the features in harmony with the spirit of the time were numerous portraits of prominent characters of the day. During the performance of "The Star Spangled Banner" a likeness of President McKinley was unveiled. Later was lowered a line of portraits of Secretary of the Navy Long, Admiral Dewey, Admiral Sampson and Commodore Schley to the anthem "America," and still later the name "Hobson," formed of electric lights, which was greeted by the playing of "Dixie" by the orchestra. There were tempests of plaudits on each occasion, but the most stirring and prolonged recognition was accorded the name of the hero of the sinking of the Merrimac. Mr. Strube, it may be added, placed himself at once in the favor of his public. The programme for tonight includes selections from Sousa, Suppe, Strauss, Mascagni, Offenbach, Delibes, Wagner, Rubinstein and Zach.

Boston Daily Globe.
TUESDAY, JUNE 21, 1898.

HARVARD NIGHT AT "POP."

Students Made Merry, and Sang and Gave Class Cheers.

Everything was crimson at the promenade concert last evening, because Harvard owned the hall. The college boys turned out in full force and every seat in Music hall was filled.

The floor arrangement remained as usual, but tables of chums and knots of classmen soon made the presence of the collegians known. "America" and "Dixie" helped start the ball rolling, and soon the familiar "rah, rah, rah's" filled the hall. Ninety-nine raised its voice, only to be answered vigorously by 98 and the other classes. From that time on, until the singing of "Fair Harvard" near the close of the program, mirth and jollity reigned.

The American flag carefully concealed over the stage the lighted name, "John D. Long 57." This was withdrawn early in the evening amid cheers, while slogans for Long went up from the different coteries of students.

The program was appropriate. "Through the Yard" and "Jolly Students" aroused applause. The musical event of the evening was the rendition for the first time of the march, "The Cruiser Harvard," written by Gustav Strube, the conductor. The march is snappy, not too noisy, and is full of melody. It catches popular approval, particularly because the last movement is built upon "John Brown's Body."

There were selections from the Hasty Pudding productions of 98 and 96 on the program, "Boscabello" and "Brangle-Brink." "The Alcayde" and "Spontania" from the Pi Eta productions of 96 and 98 were also rendered.

The evening of fun closed with the snappy notes of the march, "Up the Street," with every one satisfied that the occasion had been a successful "Harvard night."

Boston Journal.
SUNDAY, JUNE 19, 1898.

THE PROMENADES.

Twelve more evenings of the promenades at Music Hall and the regular summer season will be over. Every evening during the past week a very large audience has greeted Conductor Strube when he appeared to direct the orchestra. Instead of the 12 numbers, as announced on the program, the orchestra, owing to the large number of encores, plays nearly twice that number every night.

Tomorrow will be the annual "Harvard Night"; Wednesday, June 22, "Light Opera Night;" June 27, "Graduates' Night;" June 28, "Military Night," when selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets will be given. The program in full for tomorrow evening is:

March, "Through the Yard"	Terhune
Overture, "Jolly Students"	Suppe
Waltz, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
Selection from "The Alcayde"	Barry
March, "The Cruiser Harvard" (First time.)	Strube
Waltz, "Estudiantina"	Waldteufel
Pot-pourri, "Brangle-Brink"	Carpenter
Selection, "Spontania"	Loud
March, "The Flying Squadron"	Clark
Selection, "Boscabello"	Rand
Fair Harvard
March, "Up the Street"	Morse

BOSTON POST,
JUNE 7, 1898.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Last evening inaugurated the second half of the season of promenade concerts in Music Hall, and also the first appearance at these entertainments as leader of Gustav Strube, who is well known here as a member of the Symphony Orchestra and a composer of merit. It was a novel position for the musician, and it took him some time to note the popular desire, but when once he ascertained the wishes of his audience he was not slow in gratifying them.

There were several very pretty features introduced. At the beginning of the concert the orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner," and at the same time an American flag was displayed on the stage, draping a portrait of President McKinley. Later came "America," when pictures of Admiral Dewey, Admiral Sampson, Commodore Schley and Secretary Long were shown. Lastly the band struck "Dixey," and an electric sign was lowered bearing the name "Hobson." It is needless to state that each feature, especially the last, created a perfect furore.

A fine programme has been arranged for this evening. Wednesday will be "patriotic night," and Monday, June 13, "Wagner night." The season will continue until Saturday evening, July 3.

That the [illegible] meet the demands of an [illegible] public cannot be questioned, judging by the attendance each evening. The past week has tested the capacity of the large hall each evening and "all sold" has become a stock phrase at the box office. The care shown by Conductor Strube in the selection and arrangement of the programme, and the musical tact and skill shown in affording the desired contrast in them, call for hearty prise. These concerts will continue only two weeks longer, the closing night being Saturday, July 2. Tomorrow will be "Harvard night"; Wednesday, June 22, "Light Opera Night"; Monday, June 27, "Graduates' Night"; Tuesday, June 28, "Military Night," when selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets will be given. The programme in full for tomorrow evening is:

March, "Through the Yard"	Terhune
Overture, "Jolly Students"	Suppe
Waltz, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
Selection from "The Alcayde" (Pi Eta Production, 1896)	Barry
March, "The Cruiser Harvard"	Strube
Waltz, "Estudiantina"	Waldteufel
Potpourri, "Brangle-Brink" (Hasty Pudding Production, 1896)	Carpenter
Selection, "Spontania" (Pi Eta Production, 1898)	Loud
March, "The Flying Squadron"	Clark
Selection, "Boscabello" (Hasty Pudding Production, 1898)	Rand
Fair Harvard.
March, "Up the Street"	Morse

Every night during the week there has been a perfect crush at Music Hall, for society likes that sort of thing. While these concerts are a distinctly Boston institution, they are the nearest approach we have ever had to the New York atmosphere, and decidedly refreshing as well as interesting. At the various tables on Monday night were noted Mr. and Mrs. James Jackson, Miss Jackson and her fiance, George Lee, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Pierce, Mr. and Mrs. William Blodgett, Mr. and Mrs. R. [illegible] Herrick, Mr. A. R. Whittier, Jr., Mr. B. W. Palmer, Miss Clara Munger, Miss Greenwood, Mr. Maurice Parker, Mr. George Seavey, Miss Seavey and party, Mr. John Dearborn, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Pierce. Tomorrow night will be "Harvard night," and a lot of surprises are in store for those who have been fortunate enough to secure tables.

On Wednesday night Mrs. Gardner came late with Mr. Proctor. She wore a gown of black with jetted bodice, the lace sleeves fitting tightly over her arms. A turquoise blue straw hat with black wings completed the toilet. An attractive group of young people sat nearby, the young women being especially noticeable for their fine gowns. Mrs. A. P. Gardner was there with a party of young people, looking extremely well in a severe gray coat and skirt, white pique shirt waist with purple stock and large purple hat. On Thursday night were noticed Mr. and Mrs. Gedney Richardson and Miss Richardson, Mr. Robert Baker with friends, Miss Christi McDonald, who looked cool and pretty in a light ecru crepon frock, with chiffon bodice and a large black hat with plumes and steel ornaments, Senator John Holden and Mr. Wallace Goodrich.

Harvard Night.

Harvard night at Boston Music Hall last evening called out an unusually representative crowd of college men. In addition to the programme previously announced, the orchestra rendered a number of extras and were encored more than once. The Glee Club was present and sang a number of selections which were well received. The evening ended with the singing of "Fair Harvard" by the undergraduates who crowded on the stage.

THE BOSTON COMMERCIAL.
Published Every Saturday Evening.

The Music Hall Concerts.

The attendance at the concerts at Music Hall continues to be very large, the hall being tested to its utmost capacity every evening. The programmes arranged by Conductor Strube meet with great favor, and all the selections are admirably given by the well trained orchestra. Only one week more remains of these popular concerts, the season closing on Saturday evening, July 2. Monday next, the 27th, will be "Graduates' Night" and Tuesday, "Military Night." On the latter evening selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets will be given.

TUESDAY, JUNE 21, 1898.

MUSIC HALL "PAINTED RED."

Harvard Night Celebrated at the "Pop." Concert.

Enthusiasm of the University Men Vented in Cheers and Song—Secretary Long's Name the Signal for a Rousing Demonstration—Unique Decorations.

Christmas comes but once a year, and "Harvard night" at the Promenade concerts comes but once in the season. When this night of nights at the "Pops" approaches they say that even the rats in the garret change their glossy black coats to red, out of sympathy with the crimson, and pipe a squeaking treble when the boys break out singing.

Whether the tale be true, everything in Music Hall last night spoke of Harvard.

The enthusiasm was more effervescent than the ginger ale and other things, and the sentiments more tumultuous than the playing of a political brass band.

The matrons and chaperons raised their lorgnettes good-naturedly at the outset, but their smiles later encouraged the sisters and the other fellows' sisters to join appreciatively in the singing and applause.

The boys called for their favorite selections, and then for more; they not only cheered, but yelled; they shouted not once, but all the time; they had not simply a good time, but a red-hot time. One of the most enjoyable features of the evening was the singing of the Harvard Glee Club during the intermissions.

After the playing of "America," the words of which were sung by the entire audience, the two national flags above the stage were drawn back, revealing an electrical illumination that read: "John D. Long, '57." A roof-lifting cheer for Long and for Harvard started the different classes to cheering themselves out of voice.

Above this electric feature, in huge red letters, was "Harvard, '98, '99, '00, '01," and all around the balconies were hung Harvard flags. Later in the evening a drop, bearing the words, "The crew. The nine," was let down, giving the enthusiasts another chance to cheer.

Conductor Strube and the entire orchestra caught the infectious spirit of the audience, and responded to the many calls with good will. The programme included "Through the Yard," "Jolly Students," selections from "The Alcayde," "The Cruiser Harvard," potpourri from "Brangle-Brink," selections from "Spontania," "The Flying Squadron," selections from "Boscabello," "Fair Harvard" and "Up the Street."

Boston Daily Globe.
TUESDAY, JUNE 28, 1898.

HARVARD MEN AT THE FRONT.

Harvard Men at the "Pop" Cheered Enthusiastically the Names of 34 Graduates of the University.

Harvard men held the main floor in Music hall at the "Pop" concert last evening. Tables were reserved for the graduates by classes, and for two hours they sang and cheered to the strains of the orchestra. Only six ladies were in the front section of the ring, three of whom were in Mrs Jack Gardner's party. Other ladies adorned the balconies and watched the fun.

Most of the numbers on the program were compositions by Harvard men.

When the "Star Spangled Banner" and "Fair Harvard" were played everybody stood erect, and the verses were shouted through the great hall with enthusiasm and in harmony.

Over the orchestra were the names of 34 "grads" at the front. Following that of John D. Long 57, were Wood 84, Roosevelt 80, Pew 80, Crowninshield 91, Clark 92, Curtis 96, Goodrich 98, Scull 98, White 92, Cromwell 92, Bancroft 78, Guild 81, Frye 86, Gardner 86, Marion 73, Devine 83, Porter 92, Norman 89, Norman 90, Brown 95, Wrenn 95, Murchie 95, Van Dieman 88, Anderson 88, Frothingham 93, Weed 92, Neff 92, Ruland 89, Flint 88, Porter 92 and Dean 92.

After "America" had been played and sung, a row of portraits was lowered, placing John D. Long and Dewey on the right of the president, Sampson and Schley on the left. These were draped with flags.

The menu cards were done in red, and the programs in white, with crimson type. All about the balconies were the class years, in red figures on white cloth, and in compliment to Harvard many ladies wore the carmine hue about their toilets.

When the program was half completed the name of "Teddy Roosevelt, 80," in letters formed by electric lights, was lowered, amid tremendous enthusiasm.

"Rah, rah, rah, Teddy!"

The class of 88, which holds its decennial dinner this week, was largely represented, and, led by Charles Francis Adams, did a great deal of cheering. The other classes congratulated it upon its 10th anniversary also by cheering.

The pleasures inseparable from the "Pop" concerts, as conducted in Music Hall, continue to attract large parties of people. In spite of the saying, "There is no one in Boston," an evening at Music Hall easily proves that there are many of the fashionable set here, or within the vicinity. An evening with "Pop" music, as rendered by the Symphony Orchestra, is always delightful, and never more so than when the weather is as warm as it has been the past week. New programmes of fine music will be given every evening of next week.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, JUNE 5, 1898.
(Copyright, 1898, Post Publishing Company.)

THE POP CONCERTS.

Tomorrow night in Music Hall there will be a change in the leadership of the promenade concerts, and Max Zach, who has conducted the orchestra thus far this season, will retire in favor of Gustav Strube, who will for the first time lead these entertainments. Mr. Strube is no stranger to Boston concert goers. He is a prominent member of the Symphony Orchestra and a composer of note. He has just returned from a highly successful concert tour through the South. Mr. Strube will conduct at Music Hall for the remainder of the season, which will continue until the evening of July 2.

The programme for tomorrow evening will be as follows: Marche Hongroise, from "The Damnation of Faust," Berlioz; overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor," Nicolai; waltz, "Les Patineurs," Waldteufel; selection, "Wizard of the Nile," Herbert; overture, "La Dame Blanche," Boieldieu; melody, Rubinstein; serenade, Moszkowski; polonaise, Chopin; prelude to "The Cricket on the Hearth," Goldmark; overture, "Poet and Peasant," Suppe; gavotte, "Stephanie," Czibulka; polka, "Sangerlust," Strauss; march, "Home, Sweet Home," Strube.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, JUNE 19, 1898.

Music Hall Promenades.

Twelve more evenings of the promenades at Music hall, and the regular summer season of these concerts will be over. Every evening during the past week an immense audience has greeted conductor Strube when he appeared to direct the orchestra, and the applause which followed each selection on the program must have been very gratifying to both conductor and orchestra. Instead of the 12 numbers as announced on the program, the orchestra, owing to the large number of encores, play nearly twice that number every night.

Tomorrow will be the annual "Harvard night;" Wednesday, June 22, "light opera night;" June 27, "graduate night;" June 28, "military night," when selections from the comic operas produced by the cadets will be given. The program for tomorrow evening is as follows:

March, Through the Yard	Terhune
Overture, Jolly Students	Suppe
Waltz, Grubenlichter	Zeller
Selection from The Alcayde	Barry
March, The Cruiser Harvard	Strube
Waltz, Estudiantina	Waldteufel
Potpourri, Brangle-Brink	Carpenter
Selection, Spontania	Loud
March, The Flying Squadron	Clark
Selection, Boscabello	Rand
Fair Harvard.
March, Up the Street	Morse

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
CIII, NO. 158.

TUESDAY, JUNE 7, 1898.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

The fifth week of the promenade concerts at Music Hall began last evening in the presence of one of the largest audiences of the season. The occasion had a special interest in the first appearance of Mr. Gustav Strube as conductor of the entertainment. He was received with marked cordiality, and was frequently and heartily applauded through the concert. Quite a number of the selections were encored, and there was a tremendous enthusiasm over the patriotic music, of which there was an ample share, especially in response to demands for repetitions. Among the features in harmony with the spirit of the time were numerous portraits of prominent characters of the day. During the performance of "The Star Spangled Banner" a likeness of President McKinley was unveiled. Later was lowered a line of portraits of Secretary of the Navy Long, Admiral Dewey, Admiral Sampson and Commodore Schley to the anthem "America," and still later the name "Hobson," formed of electric lights, which was greeted by the playing of "Dixie" by the orchestra. There were tempests of plaudits on each occasion, but the most stirring and prolonged recognition was accorded the name of the hero of the sinking of the Merrimac. Mr. Strube, it may be added, placed himself at once in the favor of his public. The programme for tonight includes selections from Sousa, Suppe, Strauss, Mascagni, Offenbach, Delibes, Wagner, Rubinstein and Zach.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, JUNE 21, 1898.

HARVARD NIGHT AT "POP."

Students Made Merry, and Sang and Gave Class Cheers.

Everything was crimson at the promenade concert last evening, because Harvard owned the hall. The college boys turned out in full force and every seat in Music hall was filled.

The floor arrangement remained as usual, but tables of chums and knots of classmen soon made the presence of the collegians known. "America" and "Dixie" helped start the ball rolling, and soon the familiar "rah, rah, rah's" filled the hall. Ninety-nine raised its voice, only to be answered vigorously by 98 and the other classes. From that time on, until the singing of "Fair Harvard" near the close of the program, mirth and jollity reigned.

The American flag carefully concealed over the stage the lighted name, "John D. Long 57." This was withdrawn early in the evening amid cheers, while slogans for Long went up from the different coteries of students.

The program was appropriate. "Through the Yard" and "Jolly Students" aroused applause. The musical event of the evening was the rendition for the first time of the march, "The Cruiser Harvard," written by Gustav Strube, the conductor. The march is snappy, not too noisy, and is full of melody. It catches popular approval, particularly because the last movement is built upon "John Brown's Body."

There were selections from the Hasty Pudding productions of 98 and 96 on the program. "Boscabello" and "Brangle-Brink." "The Alcayde" and "Spontania" from the Pi Eta productions of 96 and 98 were also rendered.

The evening of fun closed with the snappy notes of the march, "Up the Street," with every one satisfied that the occasion had been a successful "Harvard night."

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, JUNE 19, 1898.

THE PROMENADES.

Twelve more evenings of the promenades at Music Hall and the regular summer season will be over. Every evening during the past week a very large audience has greeted Conductor Strube when he appeared to direct the orchestra. Instead of the 12 numbers, as announced on the program, the orchestra, owing to the large number of encores, plays nearly twice that number every night.

Tomorrow will be the annual "Harvard Night"; Wednesday, June 22, "Light Opera Night;" June 27, "Graduates' Night;" June 28, "Military Night," when selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets will be given. The program in full for tomorrow evening is:

March, "Through the Yard"	Terhune
Overture, "Jolly Students"	Suppe
Waltz, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
Selection from "The Alcayde"	Barry
March, "The Cruiser Harvard" (First time.)	Strube
Waltz, "Estudiantina"	Waldteufel
Pot-pourri, "Brangle-Brink"	Carpenter
Selection, "Spontania"	Loud
March, "The Flying Squadron"	Clark
Selection, "Boscabello"	Rand
Fair Harvard
March, "Up the Street"	Morse

BOSTON POST,
JUNE 7, 1898.

THE PROMENADE CONCERTS.

Last evening inaugurated the second half of the season of promenade concerts in Music Hall, and also the first appearance at these entertainments as leader of Gustav Strube, who is well known here as a member of the Symphony Orchestra and a composer of merit. It was a novel position for the musician, and it took him some time to note the popular desire, but when once he ascertained the wishes of his audience he was not slow in gratifying them.

There were several very pretty features introduced. At the beginning of the concert the orchestra played "The Star Spangled Banner," and at the same time an American flag was displayed on the stage, draping a portrait of President McKinley. Later came "America," when pictures of Admiral Dewey, Admiral Sampson, Commodore Schley and Secretary Long were shown. Lastly the band struck "Dixey," and an electric sign was lowered bearing the name "Hobson." It is needless to state that each feature, especially the last, created a perfect furore.

A fine programme has been arranged for this evening. Wednesday will be "patriotic night," and Monday, June 13, "Wagner night." The season will continue until Saturday evening, July 3.

The pleasures inseparable from the "Pop" concerts, as conducted in Music Hall, continue to attract large parties of people. In spite of the saying, "There is no one in Boston," an evening at Music Hall easily proves that there are many of the fashionable set here, or within the vicinity. An evening with "Pop" music, as rendered by the Symphony Orchestra, is always delightful, and never more so than when the weather is as warm as it has been the past week. New programmes of fine music will be given every evening of next week.

THE PROMENADES.

That the Music Hall Promenade concerts meet the demand of an immense public cannot be questioned, judging by the attendance each evening. The past week has tested the capacity of the large hall each evening and "all sold" has become a stock phrase at the box office. The care shown by Conductor Strube in the selection and arrangement of the programme, and the musical tact and skill shown in affording the desired contrast in them, call for hearty prise. These concerts will continue only two weeks longer, the closing night being Saturday, July 2. Tomorrow will be "Harvard night"; Wednesday, June 22, "Light Opera Night"; Monday, June 27, "Graduates' Night"; Tuesday, June 28, "Military Night," when selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets will be given. The programme in full for tomorrow evening is:

March, "Through the Yard"	Terhune
Overture, "Jolly Students"	Suppe
Waltz, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
Selection from "The Alcayde" (Pi Eta Production, 1896)	Barry
March, "The Cruiser Harvard"	Strube
Waltz, "Estudiantina"	Waldteufel
Potpourri, "Brangle-Brink" (Hasty Pudding Production, 1896)	Carpenter
Selection, "Spontania" (Pi Eta Production, 1898)	Loud
March, "The Flying Squadron"	Clark
Selection, "Boscabello" (Hasty Pudding Production, 1898)	Rand
Fair Harvard.
March, "Up the Street"	Morse

Every night during the week there has been a perfect crush at Music Hall, for society likes that sort of thing. While these concerts are a distinctly Boston institution, they are the nearest approach we have ever had to the New York atmosphere, and decidedly refreshing as well as interesting. At the various tables on Monday night were noted Mr. and Mrs. James Jackson, Miss Jackson and her fiance, George Lee, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Pierce, Mr. and Mrs. William Blodgett, Mr. and Mrs. R. F. Herrick, Mr. A. R. Whittier, Jr., Mr. B. W. Palmer, Miss Clara Munger, Miss Greenwood, Mr. Maurice Parker, Mr. George Seavey, Miss Seavey and party, Mr. John Dearborn, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace Pierce. Tomorrow night will be "Harvard night," and a lot of surprises are in store for those who have been fortunate enough to secure tables.

On Wednesday night Mrs. Gardner came late with Mr. Proctor. She wore a gown of black with jetted bodice, the lace sleeves fitting tightly over her arms. A turquoise blue straw hat with black wings completed the toilet. An attractive group of young people sat nearby, the young women being especially noticeable for their fine gowns. Mrs. A. P. Gardner was there with a party of young people, looking extremely well in a severe gray coat and skirt, white pique shirt waist with purple stock and large purple hat. On Thursday night were noticed Mr. and Mrs. Gedney Richardson and Miss Richardson, Mr. Robert Baker with friends, Miss Christi McDonald, who looked cool and pretty in a light ecru crepon frock, with chiffon bodice and a large black hat with plumes and steel ornaments, Senator John Holden and Mr. Wallace Goodrich.

Harvard Night.

Harvard night at Boston Music Hall last evening called out an unusually representative crowd of college men. In addition to the programme previously announced, the orchestra rendered a number of extras and were encored more than once. The Glee Club was present and sang a number of selections which were well received. The evening ended with the singing of "Fair Harvard" by the undergraduates who crowded on the stage.

THE BOSTON COMMERCIAL.
Published Every Saturday Evening.

The Music Hall Concerts.

The attendance at the concerts at Music Hall continues to be very large, the hall being tested to its utmost capacity every evening. The programmes arranged by Conductor Strube meet with great favor, and all the selections are admirably given by the well trained orchestra. Only one week more remains of these popular concerts, the season closing on Saturday evening, July 2. Monday next, the 27th, will be "Graduates' Night" and Tuesday, "Military Night." On the latter evening selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets will be given.

BOSTON HERALD.

TUESDAY, JUNE 21, 1898.

MUSIC HALL "PAINTED RED."

Harvard Night Celebrated at the "Pop" Concert.

Enthusiasm of the University Men Vented in Cheers and Song—Secretary Long's Name the Signal for a Rousing Demonstration—Unique Decorations.

Christmas comes but once a year, and "Harvard night" at the Promenade concerts comes but once in the season. When this night of nights at the "Pops" approaches they say that even the rats in the garret change their glossy black coats to red, out of sympathy with the crimson, and pipe a squeaking treble when the boys break out singing.

Whether the tale be true, everything in Music Hall last night spoke of Harvard.

The enthusiasm was more effervescent than the ginger ale and other things, and the sentiments more tumultuous than the playing of a political brass band.

The matrons and chaperons raised their lorgnettes good-naturedly at the outset, but their smiles later encouraged the sisters and the other fellows' sisters to join appreciatively in the singing and applause.

The boys called for their favorite selections, and then for more; they not only cheered, but yelled; they shouted not once, but all the time; they had not simply a good time, but a red-hot time. One of the most enjoyable features of the evening was the singing of the Harvard Glee Club during the intermissions.

After the playing of "America," the words of which were sung by the entire audience, the two national flags above the stage were drawn back, revealing an electrical illumination that read: "John D. Long, '57." A roof-lifting cheer for Long and for Harvard started the different classes to cheering themselves out of voice.

Above this electric feature, in huge red letters, was "Harvard, '98, '99, '00, '01," and all around the balconies were hung Harvard flags. Later in the evening a drop, bearing the words, "The crew. The nine," was let down, giving the enthusiasts another chance to cheer.

Conductor Strube and the entire orchestra caught the infectious spirit of the audience, and responded to the many calls with good will. The programme included "Through the Yard," "Jolly Students," selections from "The Alcayde," "The Cruiser Harvard," potpourri from "Brangle-Brink," selections from "Spontania," "The Flying Squadron," selections from "Boscabello," "Fair Harvard" and "Up the Street."

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, JUNE 28, 1898.

HARVARD MEN AT THE FRONT.

Harvard Men at the "Pop" Cheered Enthusiastically the Names of 34 Graduates of the University.

Harvard men held the main floor in Music hall at the "Pop" concert last evening. Tables were reserved for the graduates by classes, and for two hours they sang and cheered to the strains of the orchestra. Only six ladies were in the front section of the ring, three of whom were in Mrs Jack Gardner's party. Other ladies adorned the balconies and watched the fun.

Most of the numbers on the program were compositions by Harvard men.

When the "Star Spangled Banner" and "Fair Harvard" were played everybody stood erect, and the verses were shouted through the great hall with enthusiasm and in harmony.

Over the orchestra were the names of 34 "grads" at the front. Following that of John D. Long 57, were Wood 84, Roosevelt 80, Pew 80, Crowninshield 91, Clark 92, Curtis 96, Goodrich 98, Scull 98, White 92, Cromwell 92, Bancroft 78, Guild 81, Frye 86, Gardner 86, Marion 78, Devine 83, Porter 92, Norman 89, Norman 90, Brown 95, Wrenn 95, Murchie 95, Van Dieman 88, Anderson 88, Frothingham 93, Weed 92, Neff 92, Ruland 89, Flint 88, Porter 92 and Dean 92.

After "America" had been played and sung, a row of portraits was lowered, placing John D. Long and Dewey on the right of the president, Sampson and Schley on the left. These were draped with flags.

The menu cards were done in red, and the programs in white, with crimson type. All about the balconies were the class years, in red figures on white cloth, and in compliment to Harvard many ladies wore the carmine hue about their toilets.

When the program was half completed the name of "Teddy Roosevelt, 80," in letters formed by electric lights, was lowered, amid tremendous enthusiasm.

"Rah, rah, rah, Teddy!"

The class of 88, which holds its decennial dinner this week, was largely represented, and, led by Charles Francis Adams, did a great deal of cheering. The other classes congratulated it upon its 10th anniversary also by cheering.

The Official Paper of the City.

TUESDAY MORNING, JUNE 21, 1898.

"HARVARD NIGHT."

"Harvard night" at the Promenade concert last night was the occasion of great enthusiasm. The students practically pre-empted the hall a week ago, and there was not space enough for them all.

Many of the students brought parties of ladies, and in the balconies the fair sex predominated. Pretty girls in natty gowns, chaperoned by aristocratic mothers, were never better represented.

Manager Comee arranged an excellent programme and sprung two surprises, each of which awakened a storm of cheering and applause.

The first was the sudden flashing forth of the name "John D. Long '57," in letters of electric light, (the number crimson) as two flags high up over the stage suddenly unveiled the emblazonry. This was just before the orchestra began to play Conductor Strube's march "The Cruiser Harvard." The students were immensely delighted and cheered again and again. Mr. Strube had to play his march over again. It is not a pretentious production—a few measures of lively martial music leading into "John Brown's Body," which the students sang vociferously.

The second surprise was the dropping down of a big placard bearing in crimson letters on a white background—"The Crew—The Nine."

This hung below the tribute to the secretary of the navy, and above both was spread the protecting wings of the eagle.

The programme (on crimson paper) contained many compositions by Harvard men, including selections from "The Alcayde," "Brangle Brink," "Spontania" and "Boscabello," and such popular numbers as Suppe's "Jolly Students" and Waldtenfel's "Estudiantina." It concluded with "Up the Street."

Generous encores were given. Whatever the students called for, in chorus, they got—including "The Belle of New York."

Patriotic music was also interspersed and when the opening strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" were heard the students shouted, "Everybody up." And everybody did stand and many joined in singing.

There was well nigh continuous music, for the Glee club in one corner near the stage, sang very delightfully, in intervals when the orchestra had left the stage.

Of course the cheering filled every least pause and sometimes overlapped the music. There was great rivalry between the classes and, sometimes, strange to say, the sophomores appeared to have the smallest representation. The freshmen and the juniors made the most noise, but there were cheers even for '94 and '97.

The crew, the nine, Secretary Long, Roosevelt, the navy and the San Francisco (this because two sailors from that ship strayed in) were all heartily cheered.

The old, familiar custom of singing "Fair Harvard" from the platform was observed, and was more successful even than usual, for the students fairly inundated the orchestra.

The especial decorations were in admirable taste. Harvard banners hung from balcony and crimson shades draped the lights.

Manager Comee has wisely provided a second Harvard night, next Monday, for those who could not get in last night. His careful management has tempted many nice people to these concerts who at first felt Puritanical misgivings.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 25, 1898.

THE MUSIC HALL POPS.

Every night is more or less of a Harvard night at the promenade concerts; but last Monday the boys were out in full force and took active part in the proceedings, in a good natured way that everybody enjoyed, and the Harvard Glee Club rendered some delightful selections during the intermissions.

There is no question about the success of these concerts under the admirable direction of Director Strube, who seems to know by intuition exactly what class of music will meet the popular taste and yet be of a character to attract the interest of cultivated musicians.

There will only be one more week of these delightful entertainments, and it is fair to suppose that Music Hall will be crowded every night up to and including July 2.

Mr. Strube has drawn up a unique series of programs, and new and attractive features will be introduced every evening, in which the prevailing patriotic sentiments will by no means be neglected.

SUNDAY, JUNE 5, 1898.

THE PROMENADES.

The past week was a very prosperous one for the promenade concerts at Music Hall. The audiences were steadily large and very appreciative of the excellent programmes given under the direction of Conductor Max Zach, who made his farewell appearance at last night's concert. Mr. Strube, who is to succeed Mr. Zach, will undoubtedly prove acceptable at the conductor's desk. Mr. Strube has selected for his opening programme tomorrow evening the following compositions:

Marche Hongroise, from "The Damnation of Faust"	Berlioz
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
Waltz, "Les Patineurs"	Waldteufel
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
Overture, "La Dame Blanche"	Boieldieu
Melody	Rubinstein
Serenade	Moszkowski
Polonaise	Chopin
Prelude to "The Cricket on the Hearth"	Goldmark
Overture, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppe
Gavotte, "Stephanie"	Czibulka
Polka, "Sangerlust"	Strauss
March, "Home, Sweet Home"	Strube

The first half of the promenade concert season closed last evening. In accordance with the custom of the last few years the season will be divided, and Mr. Gustav Strube, like Mr. Zach, a member of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will conduct the remaining four weeks. There were two special nights during the past week, with enormous houses. The first on Decoration day evening, Monday, and the second, Technology night, on Thursday evening. The Tech boys turned out in large numbers, and caused the greatest enthusiasm by their cheering, both by classes and as a unit for the Institute.

Among those noted during the week were: Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bigelow Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Gorham Hubbard, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Hecht, Miss Hecht, Mr. Van Raalte, Matthew Luce, Jr., Mr. Charles Gibson, who was at a table with Mrs. Duncan Elliott (Sallie Hargous), and Mrs. Robert C. Winthrop. Mr. Charles Head, with a number of guests, Mme. Camilla Urso and her husband, Frederic Luere, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Zerrahn, Mr. Harry Wainwright, Mr. Wadsworth Longfellow, Mr. E. Rollins Morse and party, Mr. E. Pierson Beebe, the Hon. A. L. Pillsbury, the Hon. Richard Olney, Miss Grace Maynadier, Mr. Howard Maynadier and Mr. H. R. W. Browne.

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY, JUNE 28, 1898.

HARVARD NIGHT.

Graduates Make Music Hall Ring With Cheers for Harvard Men at the Front—A Unique Assembly.

It was Harvard night at the "Pops" last night. "Graduates' Night" burned in red letters in front of Music Hall entrance, and the largest crowd of the season thronged the hall.

The entire floor was given up to graduates, who reserved the tables by classes. The numerals from '82 to '98 hung around the balconies, and a picture of John D. Long, '57, was at the back of the stage. During the concert "Teddy Roosevelt, '80," was lowered at the rear of the stage, the letters illuminated with red and white lights. Then the classes began to cheer their members who were at the front. Above the orchestra were the names of about 50 of the most prominent Harvard men, ranging from Brigadier-Generals to privates, who are now fighting for theih country.

Most of the numbers on the program were compositions by Harvard men, and Mr. Strube was generous in adding to the number upon call for favorites. Pi Eta and Hasty Pudding music was prominent. The class of '88, which holds its decennial dinner this week, was largely represented, and, led by Charles Francis Adams, did a great deal of cheering. The other classes congratulated it upon its tenth anniversary also by cheering. "The boys at the front" got many a cheer, and it is doubtful if Music Hall ever heard quite so much cheering. "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "Fair Harvard" were sung by the thousands of male voices, while everyone in the hall stood up. College songs filled up the intervals. Tonight will be devoted to the music of the First Corps of Cadets.

HARVARD NIGHT.

Crimson Prevailing Color at Last Night's "Pop" Concert.

Last night the prevailing color in Music Hall was crimson, the music patriotic, and more than 3000 persons stood while the "Star Spangled Banner" was played, with the Harvard Glee Club to lead.

During the song two American flags stretched high across the stage, were drawn, and disclosed the words, "John D. Long, '57," in white and red electric lights. Cheers were long for Long, and they came from the men of Harvard '98, '99, 1900 and 1901, who were seated in groups, widely scattered.

The programme opened with Terhune's "Through the Yard," and ended with Morse's "Up the Street." Harvard composers were recognized and the various Hasty Pudding and Pi Eta selections given amid great enthusiasm. A feature of the evening was the rendering of patriotic music for encore numbers, and the excellent singing of the Harvard Glee Club during the intermissions. Conductor Strube responded to calls for "The Belle of New York," "Stars and Stripes," etc., and near the close led his men in accompanying the entire audience in the singing of "Fair Harvard."

During the playing of "The Flying Squadron" two sailors from the San Francisco entered and were instantly cheered. They made a partial tour of the hall through the outer ring, and were overwhelmed with attentions.

Mrs. John L. Gardner had a party at her table which included the bachelor par excellence of Boston—Mr. Holker Abbott. Mrs. Gardner was attired in black, richly jetted, and wore a green straw hat with black trimmings.

Adjoining the Gardner table was the belle of the evening—Marie Burroughs of New York, with two friends. She was handsomely gowned in a grayish gauze with bands of green satin covered with black lace. A bunch of crimson roses adorned her bodice, and a cluster of the same colored flowers lent a pleasing relief to her picture hat of black. Miss Burroughs showed her patriotism in being the first to rise when the national hymn was rendered.

Near Miss Burroughs Mr. Henry L. Higginson had a large party of friends, and elsewhere were noted Dr. and Mrs. J. P. Sutherland, Miss Clara Munger, Miss Priscilla White and large party, Mrs. F. R. Comee with friends, Mr. Walter Penniman of Daly's company, Mr. Walter Bubier, Mr. Paul Keith, Miss Lucy Spinney, Miss Cora Pierce, Mr. Karl Brenemen, Mr. and Mrs. Max Zach, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Sprague, Dr. Galloupe, Miss Ida Richardson, Miss Mabel Beaman, Mr. and Mrs. Heinrich Schuecker, Miss Ida Wilbor, Mr. Alexander Wilbor, Dr. and Mrs. Withington, Mr. Walter DeLand Caine, Mr. John C. Abbott, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Ralph, several large parties from Newton and Brookline and about 1000 Harvard men.

The ushers wore red ribbons and carnation boutonnieres.

THE BOSTON TIMES

(ESTABLISHED 1864.)

EVERY SUNDAY,

At 20 HAWLEY STREET.

BUT ONE WEEK of the Pop concerts remains. It is a painful announcement, for these concerts have been more popular this season than ever before, and the stay-at-homes would enjoy having them for all summer. But, as is the case each year, the musicians have engagements elsewhere for the midsummer, so that their services could not be procured for a supplementary season of Promenades, much as we should like it. Tomorrow night will be Graduates' night and practically the entire reserved seat spare has been taken by Harvard men of the classes of '88, '89, '92 and '95. Tuesday will be military night and the programme will be made up of selections from the comic operas produced by the First Corps of Cadets.

Tomorrow night's programme will be: March, "University," Bruguière; overture, "Raymond," A. Thomas; waltz, "Theta Delta Chi," Hoyt; Hasty Pudding club Centennial march, '95, Purdon; selections, "Sphinx" (Hasty Pudding production, '92), Thompson; march, "The Cruiser Harvard" Strube; selections from "The Alcayde" (Pi Eta production, '92), Barry; American fantasy, Herbert; class song, '88, Carpenter; "Should Old Acquaintance Be Forgot"; two Hungarian dances, Brahms; Largo, Solo Violin, Mr. I. Schnitzler, Haendel; waltz, "Jolly Fellows," Vollstedt; Fair Harvard; Overland march, Morse.

Harvard night, last Monday was the gala night of the season of the Promenades thus far—crimson and white electric lights over the stage spelled "John D. Long, '57," and above that was "Harvard, '98, '99, '00, '01," also in red letters. Harvard flags were hung all around the balconies, and it was literally speaking "a red hot time." Cheers and yells filled the air almost incessantly, and during the intermissions the Harvard Glee club sang selections in which the audience frequently joined. Noticed in the audience were Mrs. John L. Gardner with Mr. Holker Abbott, Mr. John C. Abbott, Miss Marie Burroughs, Mr. Henry L. Higginson, Mr. Walter DeLand Came, Dr. and Mrs. J. P. Sutherland, Mr. and Heinrich Schuecker, Mr. and Mrs. Max Zach, Mrs. F. R. Comee, Miss Priscilla White, Mr. Paul Keith and Miss Lucy Spinney.

[illegible]

"Pop" Concert for Grad[illegible] Out Cheers for College [illegible] Front—Eighty-Eight and [illegible] Have Large Delegations Present.

Harvard graduates held the attention of Music Hall last night, and the concert given by Conductor Strube's players was in some ways merely an incident in the evening. As a proper beginning of the last week of the "Pops," as well as a fitting recognition of the commencement week at Harvard, all the seats on the floor were reserved for Harvard graduates, and even the ladies were excluded from all but a small group of tables. A big crimson tablet over the stage bore the name of the university, with the names of thirty-four graduates who are now at the front, beginning with John D. Long, '57, and running down to Dean, '92. When the orchestra began the programme, as usual this year, with "America," flags back of the stage were drawn aside, and portraits of President McKinley, Long, Dewey, Sampson and Schley were revealed; but it was when the evening was half over, while the orchestra was playing the "Star Spangled Banner," that the chef d'œuvre of the decorator was shown. It was in the form of an illuminated tablet, bearing the name "Teddy Roosevelt" in white lights, and the class, "'80," in crimson. It was lowered into sight at the back of the stage, and was greeted with wild cheering, every man in the hall standing. A moment after, the various classes most numerously represented began giving their class cheers for "Teddy."

The evening opened rather tamely. During the first few numbers greetings were being exchanged among the Harvard men on the floor, and with the rail removed, and the tables placed without barriers between them, the graduates strolled hither and thither, ostensibly to find their proper seats, but as a matter of fact to shake hands and speak a few words with every acquaintance encountered. The scene during the first division of the programme was like an impromptu reception.

Then things began to brighten up a bit. As the various groups became settled in their places, the cheering instinct made itself manifest; and before the first intermission, a pause in the programme gave an opportunity that was not to be missed. And the first cheer was hardly over before group after group, all over the hall, rose to give itself a fair representation in the concourse of yells. It was fun for the men on the floor, and fun for those who looked on from the balconies; and though it delayed the musicians a little, they took it good-naturedly. Not every "Pop" concert is a graduates' night. Thereafter, every pause in the programme was the signal for cheering, for the groups who failed to get in a cheer at one time, were among the first to start when the next chance came. '88 had a large delegation in the middle of the hall; '95 was even more prominent on the Hamilton-place side, with a little group of '94 men just to the rear, and a few more '93 enthusiasts in front, close to the stage. The peculiar swinging cheer of '91, which is the same cheer handed down to '94 and '97, came in inspiring volume from the far corner near the Winter-place side of the stage. Ninety-two had a small contingent that did its best from the rear of the hall. Other classes did not make themselves heard to any great extent, though the volume of sound that rose when, once or twice, cheers for Harvard, without distinction as to class, were called for, was something to think about. One feature of the cheering was when the '88 men took it into their heads to give their class cheer for every classmate whose name appeared on the big tablet of those who are at the front. This aroused considerable enthusiasm, and other classes represented on the tablet were not slow in following '88's example. Toward the end of the evening, during the last intermission, there was considerable singing, though the fact that the musical members of different classes rivalled one another at the same time in different parts of the hall rather marred the general effect. Everybody got together on "Auld Lang Syne," however, and when the "Camp Meeting in Georgia" was given as an extra, Harry Plummer of '88 electrified his classmates and furnished amusement for the rest of the assembly by an impromptu dance, in which the inadequate floor space allowed him did not prevent a good deal of ecstatic high-kicking. It was a wild night.

BOSTON DAILY

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State

The Official Paper of the City.

TUESDAY MORNING, JUNE 21, 1898.

"HARVARD NIGHT."

"Harvard night" at the Promenade concert last night was the occasion of great enthusiasm. The students practically preempted the hall a week ago, and there was not space enough for them all.

Many of the students brought parties of ladies, and in the balconies the fair sex predominated. Pretty girls in natty gowns, chaperoned by aristocratic mothers, were never better represented.

Manager Comee arranged an excellent programme and sprung two surprises, each of which awakened a storm of cheering and applause.

The first was the sudden flashing forth of the name "John D. Long '57," in letters of electric light, (the number crimson) as two flags high up over the stage suddenly unveiled the emblazonry. This was just before the orchestra began to play Conductor Strube's march "The Cruiser Harvard." The students were immensely delighted and cheered again and again. Mr. Strube had to play his march over again. It is not a pretentious production—a few measures of lively martial music leading into "John Brown's Body," which the students sang vociferously.

The second surprise was the dropping down of a big placard bearing in crimson letters on a white background—"The Crew—The Nine."

This hung below the tribute to the secretary of the navy, and above both was spread the protecting wings of the eagle.

The programme (on crimson paper) contained many compositions by Harvard men, including selections from "The Alcayde," "Brangle Brink," "Spontania" and "Boscabello," and such popular numbers as Suppe's "Jolly Students" and Waldtenfel's "Estudiantina." It concluded with "Up the Street."

Generous encores were given. Whatever the students called for, in chorus, they got—including "The Belle of New York."

Patriotic music was also interspersed and when the opening strains of "The Star Spangled Banner" were heard the students shouted, "Everybody up." And everybody did stand and many joined in singing.

There was well nigh continuous music, for the Glee club in one corner near the stage, sang very delightfully, in intervals when the orchestra had left the stage.

Of course the cheering filled every least pause and sometimes overlapped the music. There was great rivalry between the classes and, sometimes, strange to say, the sophomores appeared to have the smallest representation. The freshmen and the juniors made the most noise, but there were cheers even for '94 and '97.

The crew, the nine, Secretary Long, Roosevelt, the navy and the San Francisco (this because two sailors from that ship strayed in) were all heartily cheered.

The old, familiar custom of singing "Fair Harvard" from the platform was observed, and was more successful even than usual, for the students fairly inundated the orchestra.

The especial decorations were in admirable taste. Harvard banners hung from balcony and crimson shades draped the lights.

Manager Comee has wisely provided a second Harvard night, next Monday, for those who could not get in last night. His careful management has tempted many nice people to these concerts who at first felt Puritanical misgivings.

The Beacon.

SATURDAY, JUNE 25, 1898.

THE MUSIC HALL POPS:

night is more or less of a Harvard the promenade concerts; but last the boys were out in full force and part in the proceedings, in a good way that everybody enjoyed, and the Glee Club rendered some delightful during the intermissions.

no question about the success of under the admirable direction Strube, who seems to know by exactly what class of music will meet taste and yet be of a character to the interest of cultivated musicians.

There will only be one more week of these entertainments, and it is fair to suppose Music Hall will be crowded every up to and including July 2.

Strube has drawn up a unique series of programs, and new and attractive features will introduced every evening, in which the patriotic sentiments will by no means be neglected.

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIII., NO. 156.

SUNDAY, JUNE 5, 1898.

THE PROMENADES.

The past week was a very prosperous one for the promenade concerts at Music Hall. The audiences were steadily large and very appreciative of the excellent programmes given under the direction of Conductor Max Zach, who made his farewell appearance at last night's concert. Mr. Strube, who is to succeed Mr. Zach, will undoubtedly prove acceptable at the conductor's desk. Mr. Strube has selected for his opening programme tomorrow evening the following compositions:

Marche Hongroise, from "The Damnation of Faust" .... Berlioz
Overture, "Merry Wives of Windsor," .... Nicolai
Waltz, "Les Patineurs" .... Waldteufel
Selection, "Wizard of the Nile" .... Herbert
Overture, "La Dame Blanche" .... Boieldieu
Melody .... Rubinstein
Serenade .... Moszkowski
Polonaise .... Chopin
Prelude to "The Cricket on the Hearth" .... Goldmark
Overture, "Poet and Peasant" .... Suppe
Gavotte, "Stephanie" .... Czibulka
Polka, "Sangerlust" .... Strauss
March, "Home, Sweet Home" .... Strube

The first half of the promenade concert season closed last evening. In accordance with the custom of the last few years the season will be divided, and Mr. Gustav Strube, like Mr. Zach, a member of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will conduct the remaining four weeks. There were two special nights during the past week, with enormous houses. The first on Decoration day evening, Monday, and the second, Technology night, on Thursday evening. The Tech boys turned out in large numbers, and caused the greatest enthusiasm by their cheering, both by classes and as a unit for the institute.

Among those noted during the week were: Mr. and Mrs. Henry Bigelow Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Gorham Hubbard, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Hecht, Miss Hecht, Mr. Van Raalte, Matthew Luce, Jr., Mr. Charles Gibson, who was at a table with Mrs. Duncan Elliott (Sallie Hargous), and Mrs. Robert C. Winthrop. Mr. Charles Head, with a number of guests, Mme. Camilla Urso and her husband, Frederic Luere, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Zerrahn, Mr. Harry Wainwright, Mr. Wadsworth Longfellow, Mr. E. Rollins Morse and party, Mr. E. Pierson Beebe, the Hon. A. L. Pillsbury, the Hon. Richard Olney, Miss Grace Maynadier, Mr. Howard Maynadier and Mr. H. R. W. Browne.

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY, JUNE 28, 1898.

HARVARD NIGHT.

Graduates Make Music Hall Ring With Cheers for Harvard Men at the Front—A Unique Assembly.

It was Harvard night at the "Pops" last night. "Graduates' Night" burned in red letters in front of Music Hall entrance, and the largest crowd of the season thronged the hall.

The entire floor was given up to graduates, who reserved the tables by classes. The numerals from '82 to '98 hung around the balconies, and a picture of John D. Long, '57, was at the back of the stage. During the concert "Teddy Roosevelt, '80," was lowered at the rear of the stage, the letters illuminated with red and white lights. Then the classes began to cheer their members who were at the front. Above the orchestra were the names of about 50 of the most prominent Harvard men, ranging from Brigadier-Generals to privates, who are now fighting for theih country.

Most of the numbers on the program were compositions by Harvard men, and Mr. Strube was generous in adding to the number upon call for favorites. Pi Eta and Hasty Pudding music was prominent. The class of '88, which holds its decennial dinner this week, was largely represented, and, led by Charles Francis Adams, did a great deal of cheering. The other classes congratulated it upon its tenth anniversary also by cheering. "The boys at the front" got many a cheer, and it is doubtful if Music Hall ever heard quite so much cheering. "The Star-Spangled Banner" and "Fair Harvard" were sung by the thousands of male voices, while everyone in the hall stood up. College songs filled up the intervals. Tonight will be devoted to the music of the First Corps of Cadets.

---

he Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

HARVARD NIGHT.

Crimson Prevailing Color at Last Night's "Pop" Concert.

Last night the prevailing color in Music Hall was crimson, the music patriotic, and more than 3000 persons stood while the "Star Spangled Banner" was played, with the Harvard Glee Club to lead.

During the song two American flags, stretched high across the stage, were drawn, and disclosed the words, "John D. Long, '57." in white and red electric lights. Cheers were long for Long, and they came from the men of Harvard '98, '99, 1900 and 1901, who were seated in groups, widely scattered.

The programme opened with Terhune's "Through the Yard," and ended with Morse's "Up the Street." Harvard composers were recognized and the various Hasty Pudding and Pi Eta selections given amid great enthusiasm. A feature of the evening was the rendering of patriotic music for encore numbers, and the excellent singing of the Harvard Glee Club during the intermissions. Conductor Strube responded to calls for "The Belle of New York," "Stars and Stripes," etc., and near the close led his men in accompanying the entire audience in the singing of "Fair Harvard."

During the playing of "The Flying Squadron" two sailors from the San Francisco entered and were instantly cheered. They made a partial tour of the hall through the outer ring, and were overwhelmed with attentions.

Mrs. John L. Gardner had a party at her table which included the bachelor par excellence of Boston—Mr. Holker Abbott. Mrs. Gardner was attired in black, richly jetted, and wore a green straw hat with black trimmings.

Adjoining the Gardner table was the belle of the evening—Marie Burroughs of New York, with two friends. She was handsomely gowned in a grayish gauze with bands of green satin covered with black lace. A bunch of crimson roses adorned her bodice, and a cluster of the same colored flowers lent a pleasing relief to her picture hat of black. Miss Burroughs showed her patriotism in being the first to rise when the national hymn was rendered.

Near Miss Burroughs Mr. Henry L. Higginson had a large party of friends, and elsewhere were noted Dr. and Mrs. J. P. Sutherland, Miss Clara Munger, Miss Priscilla White and large party, Mrs. F. R. Comee with friends, Mr. Walter Penniman of Daly's company, Mr. Walter Bubier, Mr. Paul Keith, Miss Lucy Spinney, Miss Cora Pierce, Mr. Karl Brenemen, Mr. and Mrs. Max Zach, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Sprague, Dr. Galloupe, Miss Ida Richardson, Miss Mabel Beaman, Mr. and Mrs. Heinrich Schuecker, Miss Ida Wilbor, Mr. Alexander Wilbor, Dr. and Mrs. Withington, Mr. Walter DeLand Caine, Mr. John C. Abbott, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Ralph, several large parties from Newton and Brookline and about 1000 Harvard men.

The ushers wore red ribbons and carnation boutonnieres.

THE BOSTON TIMES

(ESTABLISHED 1864.)

EVERY SUNDAY,

At 20 HAWLEY STREET.

BUT ONE WEEK of the Pop concerts remains. It is a painful announcement, for these concerts have been more popular this season than ever before, and the stay-at-homes would enjoy having them for all summer. But, as is the case each year, the musicians have engagements elsewhere for the midsummer, so that their services could not be procured for a supplementary season of Promenades, much as we should like it. Tomorrow night will be Graduates' night and practically the entire reserved seat spare has been taken by Harvard men of the classes of '88, '89, '92 and '95. Tuesday will be military night and the programme will be made up of selections from the comic operas produced by the First Corps of Cadets.

Tomorrow night's programme will be: March, "University," Bruguière; overture, "Raymond," A. Thomas; waltz, "Theta Delta Chi," Hoyt; Hasty Pudding club Centennial march, '95, Purdon; selections, "Sphinx" (Hasty Pudding production, '92), Thompson; march, "The Cruiser Harvard" Strube; selections from "The Alcayde" (Pi Eta production, '92), Barry; American fantasy, Herbert; class song, '88, Carpenter; "Should Old Acquaintance Be Forgot"; two Hungarian dances, Brahms; Largo. Solo Violin, Mr. I. Schnitzler, Haendel; waltz, "Jolly Fellows," Vollstedt; Fair Harvard; Overland march, Morse.

Harvard night, last Monday was the gala night of the season of the Promenades thus far—crimson and white electric lights over the stage spelled "John D. Long, '57," and above that was "Harvard, '98, '99, '00, '01," also in red letters. Harvard flags were hung all around the balconies, and it was literally speaking "a red hot time." Cheers and yells filled the air almost incessantly, and during the intermissions the Harvard Glee club sang selections in which the audience frequently joined. Noticed in the audience were Mrs. John L. Gardner with Mr. Holker Abbott, Mr. John C. Abbott, Miss Marie Burroughs, Mr. Henry L. Higginson, Mr. Walter DeLand Came, Dr. and Mrs. J. P. Sutherland, Mr. and Heinrich Schuecker, Mr. and Mrs. Max Zach, Mrs. F. R. Comee, Miss Priscilla White, Mr. Paul Keith and Miss Lucy Spinney.

TUESDAY, JUNE 21

HARVARD MEN SANG AND CHEERED

"Pop" Concert for Graduates Brings Out Cheers for College Men at the Front—Eighty-Eight and Ninety-Five Have Large Delegations Present

Harvard graduates held the attention in Music Hall last night, and the concert given by Conductor Strube's players was in some ways merely an incident in the evening. As a proper beginning of the last week of the "Pops," as well as a fitting recognition of the commencement week at Harvard, all the seats on the floor were reserved for Harvard graduates, and even the ladies were excluded from all but a small group of tables. A big crimson tablet over the stage bore the name of the university, with the names of thirty-four graduates who are now at the front, beginning with John D. Long, '57, and running down to Dean, '92. When the orchestra began the programme, as usual this year, with "America," flags back of the stage were drawn aside, and portraits of President McKinley, Long, Dewey, Sampson and Schley were revealed; but it was when the evening was half over, while the orchestra was playing the "Star Spangled Banner," that the chef d'œuvre of the decorator was shown. It was in the form of an illuminated tablet, bearing the name "Teddy Roosevelt" in white lights, and the class, "'80," in crimson. It was lowered into sight at the back of the stage, and was greeted with wild cheering, every man in the hall standing. A moment after, the various classes most numerously represented began giving their class cheers for "Teddy."

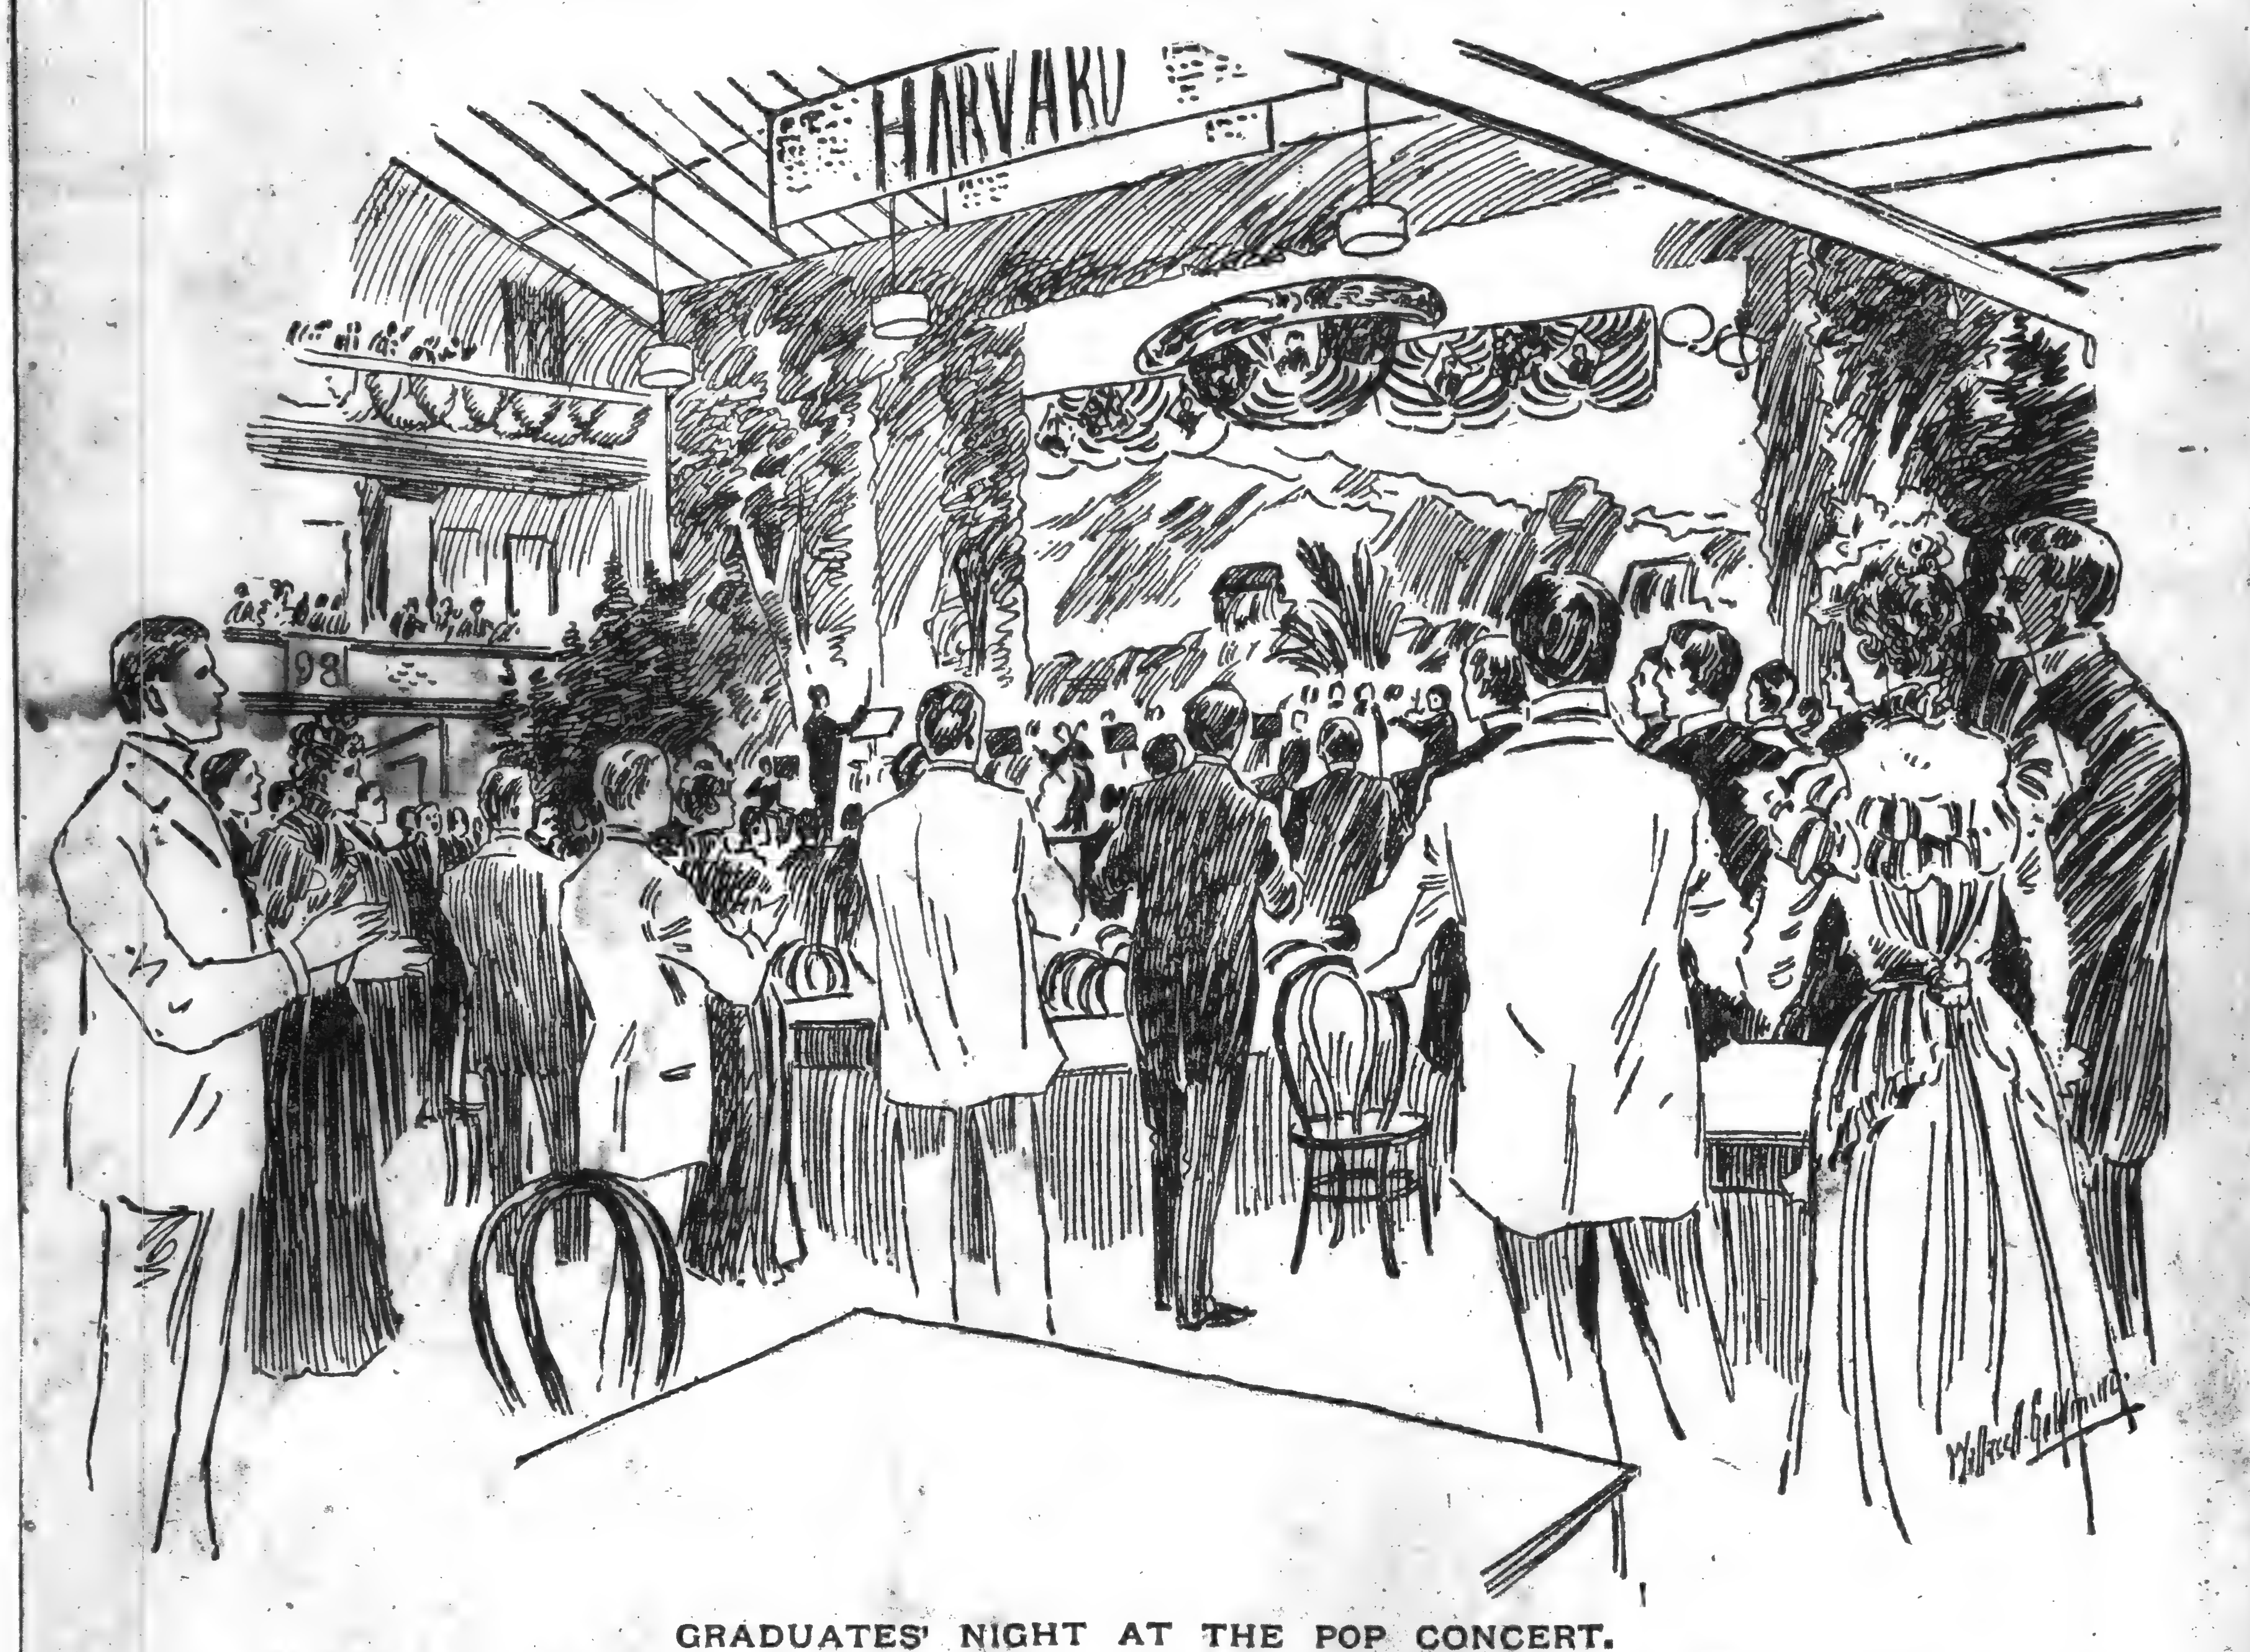
The evening opened rather tamely. During the first few numbers greetings were being exchanged among the Harvard men on the floor, and with the rail removed, and the tables placed without barriers between them, the graduates strolled hither and thither, ostensibly to find their proper seats, but as a matter of fact to shake hands and speak a few words with every acquaintance encountered. The scene during the first division of the programme was like an impromptu reception.

Then things began to brighten up a bit. As the various groups became settled in their places, the cheering instinct made itself manifest; and before the first intermission, a pause in the programme gave an opportunity that was not to be missed. And the first cheer was hardly over before group after group, all over the hall, rose to give itself a fair representation in the concourse of yells. It was fun for the men on the floor, and fun for those who looked on from the balconies; and though it delayed the musicians a little, they took it good-naturedly. Not every "Pop" concert is a graduates' night. Thereafter, every pause in the programme was the signal for cheering, for the groups who failed to get in a cheer at one time, were among the first to start when the next chance came. '88 had a large delegation in the middle of the hall; '95 was even more prominent on the Hamilton-place side, with a little group of '94 men just to the rear, and a few more '93 enthusiasts in front, close to the stage. The peculiar swinging cheer of '91, which is the same cheer handed down to '94 and '97, came in inspiring volume from the far corner near the Winter-place side of the stage. Ninety-two had a small contingent that did its best from the rear of the hall. Other classes did not make themselves heard to any great extent, though the volume of sound that rose when, once or twice, cheers for Harvard, without distinction as to class, were called for, was something to think about. One feature of the cheering was when the '88 men took it into their heads to give their class cheer for every classmate whose name appeared on the big tablet of those who are at the front. This aroused considerable enthusiasm, and other classes represented on the tablet were not slow in following '88's example. Toward the end of the evening, during the last intermission, there was considerable singing, though the fact that the musical members of different classes rivalled one another at the same time in different parts of the hall rather marred the general effect. Everybody got together on "Auld Lang Syne," however, and when the "Camp Meeting in Georgia" was given as an extra, Harry Plummer of '88 electrified his classmates and furnished amusement for the rest of the assembly by an impromptu dance, in which the inadequate floor space allowed him did not prevent a good deal of ecstatic high-kicking. It was a wild night.

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIII., NO. 179.
TUESDAY, JUNE 28, 1898.

TEDDY ROOSEVELT CHEERED TO THE ECHO

Harvard Graduates' Night at the "Pops" Was a Howling Success---The Hot Weather Was Almost Forgotten in the Excitement.



GRADUATES' NIGHT AT THE POP CONCERT.

It is said that no other university in the country is so well represented in the army and navy as is Harvard, and it is certain that no other university could have attested its loyalty to the country and its allegiance to the stars and stripes with greater vehemence and enthusiasm than did Harvard, as represented by the hundreds of her graduates who were present in Music Hall last evening.

It was Harvard graduates' night. That fact could not possibly have been overlooked. It was announced in letters of crimson fire at the entrance to the hall. It was proclaimed within by a huge banner bearing in crimson letters, 2½ feet long, the word "Harvard," and on either side of this the names of a score of Harvard's sons who had risen to distinction and honor in the present crisis. Among these names were noticed those of Secretary Long, Col. Wood, who commands the Rough Riders; Lieut.-Col. Roosevelt, Brig.-Gen. Bancroft and Messrs. Lodge, Gardner, Porter, Pew, Crowinshield, Curtis and Wrenn.

The concert opened with "America," and as the first strains of the band floated through the hall two American flags at the rear of the stage were drawn aside, revealing portraits of President McKinley, Secretary Long, Admiral Dewey, Commodore Schley and Capt. Sampson, all framed with the stars and stripes.

But it was not until after the sixth number on the programme was over that the principal incident of the evening was reached. Suddenly, over the heads of the musicians, appeared a blaze of light. It was "Teddy Roosevelt" in white electric letters, with the year of his graduation, '80, in crimson. It extended from one side of the stage to the other, and while the orchestra played the "Star Spangled Banner" every man present leaped to his feet, and in a moment the hall rang with "Rah, rah, rah, rah, Teddy." One class after another took up the cry, and it really seemed a pity that "Teddy" couldn't know of the royal welcome his name received—but he was attending a "pop" concert of another kind.

It was a very warm evening, but the energy of the graduates was equal to the occasion, and the cheering was most earnest and persistent. A dozen classes were represented, and each had its own song to sing and sang it.

The programme was a particularly good one. To be sure, a good deal of the time the orchestra couldn't be heard, but then no one went to hear the orchestra. As one man expressed it, when his collar was wilted and his face bathed in perspiration: "I wouldn't sit it out if it wasn't for the fun of hearing the boys cheer." Sometimes the cheering was so incessant that Conductor Strube found it difficult to get a chance to conduct at all. But everybody was happy, and that was all that was necessary.

Among the selections played was "Should Old Acquaintance Be Forgot." The crowd on the floor started to sing it, but the familiar old tune had suffered at the hands of an ambitious composer. The key changed every other bar, and it went from major to minor and back to major again, with fatal results, so far as the vocalists were concerned. Everybody was disappointed until, at the suggestion of a member of the orchestra, all variations were omitted, and then men and women rose to their feet by unanimous impulse and gave forth a volume of sound that would have been a credit to the Boston Choral Union.

The graduates' night was one of the most interesting of the entire series of "Pops."

THE PROMENADES.

The closing week of the current season of Promenade Concerts at Music Hall began last evening before a large audience. It was a Harvard graduate night and the programme was largely made up of selections from the comic operas presented from time to time by the University Club, and the reception of these was exceedingly enthusiastic. Of course encores were the order of the evening and as usual Conductor Strube responded generously to them. Tonight the music will present large contributions from the Cadet comic operas. Tomorrow evening is announced as a Sampson-Shafter occasion, and patriotic selections will predominate. The final concert on Saturday evening will present selections from the more brilliant music given since Mr. Strube assumed the conductorship.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

DEWEY CHEERED.

His Picture a Feature at Graduates' Night at the Pops.

M'KINLEY, TOO, A FAVORITE.

Thirty-four Harvard Boys Sat at the Front and Led in Singing National Songs—Mrs. Jack Gardner Was There.

Big electric light letters announced "Graduates' Night" at the pop concert last evening.

Long before the doors were opened a line of ticket purchasers reached well out toward Tremont street.

Inside, at 8 o'clock, all was animation—every seat on the lower floor being occupied chiefly by men of Harvard, the ladies filling the balconies, arrayed in their smartest togs. Only six ladies were in the front section of the ring, three of whom were in Mrs. John L. Gardner's party of six. Mrs. Gardner was a little late in arriving. Among her guests were Mr. S. A. B. Abbott (former librarian of the Public Library) and Mrs. Abbott, who have recently returned from Europe.

Over the orchestra were the names of thirty-four "grads" at the front. Following that of John D. Long, '57, were Wood, '84; Roosevelt, '80; Pew, '90; Crowninshield, '91; Clark, '92; Curtis, '96; Goodrich, '93; Scull, '93; White, '92; Cromwell, '92; Bancroft, '78; Guild, '81; Frye, '96; Gardner, '86; Marion, '78; Devine, '83; Porter, 92; Norman, '89; Norman, '90; Brown, '95; Wrenn, '95; Murchie, '95; Van Dieman, '88; Anderson, '88; Frothingham, '93; Weed, '92; Neff, '92; Ruland, '89; Flint, '88; Porter, '92, and Dean, '92.

Conductor Strube opened with "America," the audience standing, and McKinley's portrait was revealed, flanked by glories of flags. Before the conclusion of this number (in which all joined in song) a row of portraits was lowered, placing John D. Long and Dewey on the right of the President, Sampson and Schley on the left. These were draped with flags.

The menu cards were done in red, and the programmes in white with crimson type. All about the balconies were the class years in red figures on white cloth, and in compliment to Harvard many ladies wore the carmine hue about their toilets.

When the programme was half completed the name of "Teddy Roosevelt, '80," in letters formed by electric lights was lowered, amid tremendous enthusiasm and the "Star Spangled Banner." Class '90 mustered its musical members together and marched to the hall, entering it singing "Shneider's Band," a favorite with college boys that year.

Preceding "Fair Harvard," which called everyone up, a selection was given from one of the "Pudding" plays, and to the merriment of all Harry Plummer, class '88, took the floor and gave a solo dance, which included several high kicks. Cheers were given throughout the evening for the various classes, the men at the front, and finally for President Eliot and the college itself.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1898.

THE MUSIC HALL POPS.

As the time to close grows nearer, the "Pops" grow more and more popular in Music Hall. The place is crowded every night, and a general good time is enjoyed by all. One strong factor in their continued success is the change in the program each evening. Mr. Strube, the conductor, is to be commended for the excellence of his programs, also his willingness to perform a large number of patriotic selections of the day.

The special attractions this week have been, Monday evening, Wagner night; Wednesday, soloists' night; Friday, Bunker Hill night; Monday, June 20, Harvard night; Monday, June 27, graduates' night. Of late years it has become quite popular for the different Harvard classes to have a reunion at the pops, and for the evening of June 27 nearly the entire reserved section on the floor has been reserved for the classes of '88, '89, '92 and '95.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

DEWEY CHEERED.

His Picture a Feature at Graduates' Night at the Pops.

M'KINLEY, TOO, A FAVORITE.

Thirty-four Harvard Boys Sat at the Front and Led in Singing National Songs—Mrs. Jack Gardner Was There.

Big electric light letters announced "Graduates' Night" at the pop concert last evening.

Long before the doors were opened a line of ticket purchasers reached well out toward Tremont street.

Inside, at 8 o'clock, all was animation—every seat on the lower floor being occupied chiefly by men of Harvard, the ladies filling the balconies, arrayed in their smartest togs. Only six ladies were in the front section of the ring, three of whom were in Mrs. John L. Gardner's party of six. Mrs. Gardner was a little late in arriving. Among her guests were Mr. S. A. B. Abbott (former librarian of the Public Library) and Mrs. Abbott, who have recently returned from Europe.

Over the orchestra were the names of thirty-four "grads" at the front. Following that of John D. Long, '57, were Wood, '84; Roosevelt, '80; Pew, '80; Crowninshield, '91; Clark, '92; Curtis, '96; Goodrich, '98; Scull, '98; White, '92; Cromwell, '92; Bancroft, '78; Guild, '81; Frye, '86; Gardner, '86; Marion, '78; Devine, '83; Porter, 92; Norman, '89; Norman, '90; Brown, '95; Wrenn, '95; Murchie, '95; Van Dieman, '88; Anderson, '88; Frothingham, '93; Weed, '92; Neff, '92; Ruland, '89; Flint, '88; Porter, '92, and Dean, '92.

Conductor Strube opened with "America," the audience standing, and McKinley's portrait was revealed, flanked by glories of flags. Before the conclusion of this number (in which all joined in song) a row of portraits was lowered, placing John D. Long and Dewey on the right of the President, Sampson and Schley on the left. These were draped with flags.

The menu cards were done in red, and the programmes in white with crimson type. All about the balconies were the class years in red figures on white cloth, and in compliment to Harvard many ladies wore the carmine hue about their toilets.

When the programme was half completed the name of "Teddy Roosevelt, '80," in letters formed by electric lights was lowered, amid tremendous enthusiasm and the "Star Spangled Banner." Class '90 mustered its musical members together and marched to the hall, entering it singing "Shneider's Band," a favorite with college boys that year.

Preceding "Fair Harvard," which called everyone up, a selection was given from one of the "Pudding" plays, and to the merriment of all Harry Plummer, class '88, took the floor and gave a solo dance, which included several high kicks. Cheers were given throughout the evening for the various classes, the men at the front, and finally for President Eliot and the college itself.

The Beacon.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1898.

THE MUSIC HALL POPS.

As the time to close grows nearer, the "Pops" grow more and more popular in Music Hall. The place is crowded every night, and a general good time is enjoyed by all. One strong factor in their continued success is the change in the program each evening. Mr. Strube, the conductor, is to be commended for the excellence of his programs, also his willingness to perform a large number of patriotic selections of the day.

The special attractions this week have been, Monday evening, Wagner night; Wednesday, soloists' night; Friday, Bunker Hill night; Monday, June 20, Harvard night; Monday, June 27, graduates' night. Of late years it has become quite popular for the different Harvard classes to have a reunion at the pops, and for the evening of June 27 nearly the entire reserved section on the floor has been reserved for the classes of '88, '89, '92 and '95.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE FINEST AND MILDEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO., 232 WASHINGTON STREET.

MOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE
CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, MONDAY, MAY 9, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 1.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 9.

PROGRAMME.

1. AMERICAN MARCH - - - - - Ganne
(First Time.)
2. OVERTURE, "Domino Noir" - - - - - Auber
3. WALTZ, "Harlequin's Voyage" - - - - - Zach
4. SELECTION, "Madame Angot" - - - - - Lecocq

5. BALLET MUSIC from "The Queen of Sheba" - - Goldmark
Solo Violoncello, Mr. E. LOEFFLER.
6. TWO ENTR'ACTES from "Carmen" - - - Bizet
The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. WALTZ, "Kaiser" - - - - - - - Strauss
8. INTRODUCTION to Act I., "Lohengrin" - - Wagner

9. POTPOURRI, "Offenbachiana" - - - - - Conradi
10. MAZOURKA, "La Mousmé" - - - - - Ganne
11. AMERICAN FANTASY - - - - - Bendix
12. MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever" - - - - Sousa

The Latest ENGLISH SONGS for All Voices.

"When the World is Fair." - - - Cowen
"Love's Flight." - - - - Shelley
"Blacksmith's Hammer." - - A. Goring Thomas
"When you Return" - - - M. V. White
"Scent of the Mignonette." - - Hope Temple
"Idle Words." - - - Stephen Adams
Etc., etc., etc.

Just published, Miss LIZA LEHMANN'S Musical Idyll,
"GOOD-NIGHT, BABETTE,"
For Soprano and Baritone, with accompaniment for Piano, Violin, and 'Cello, or Piano only.

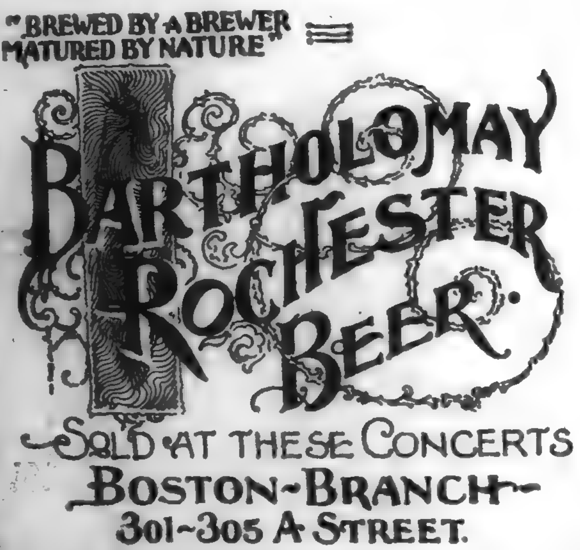
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

CLOTHING
CLEANSED or DYED
PROPERLY
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
... Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
BUNKER HILL
P.B.
BREWERIES
ALE
ALL THE YEAR ROUND
JANUARY

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET

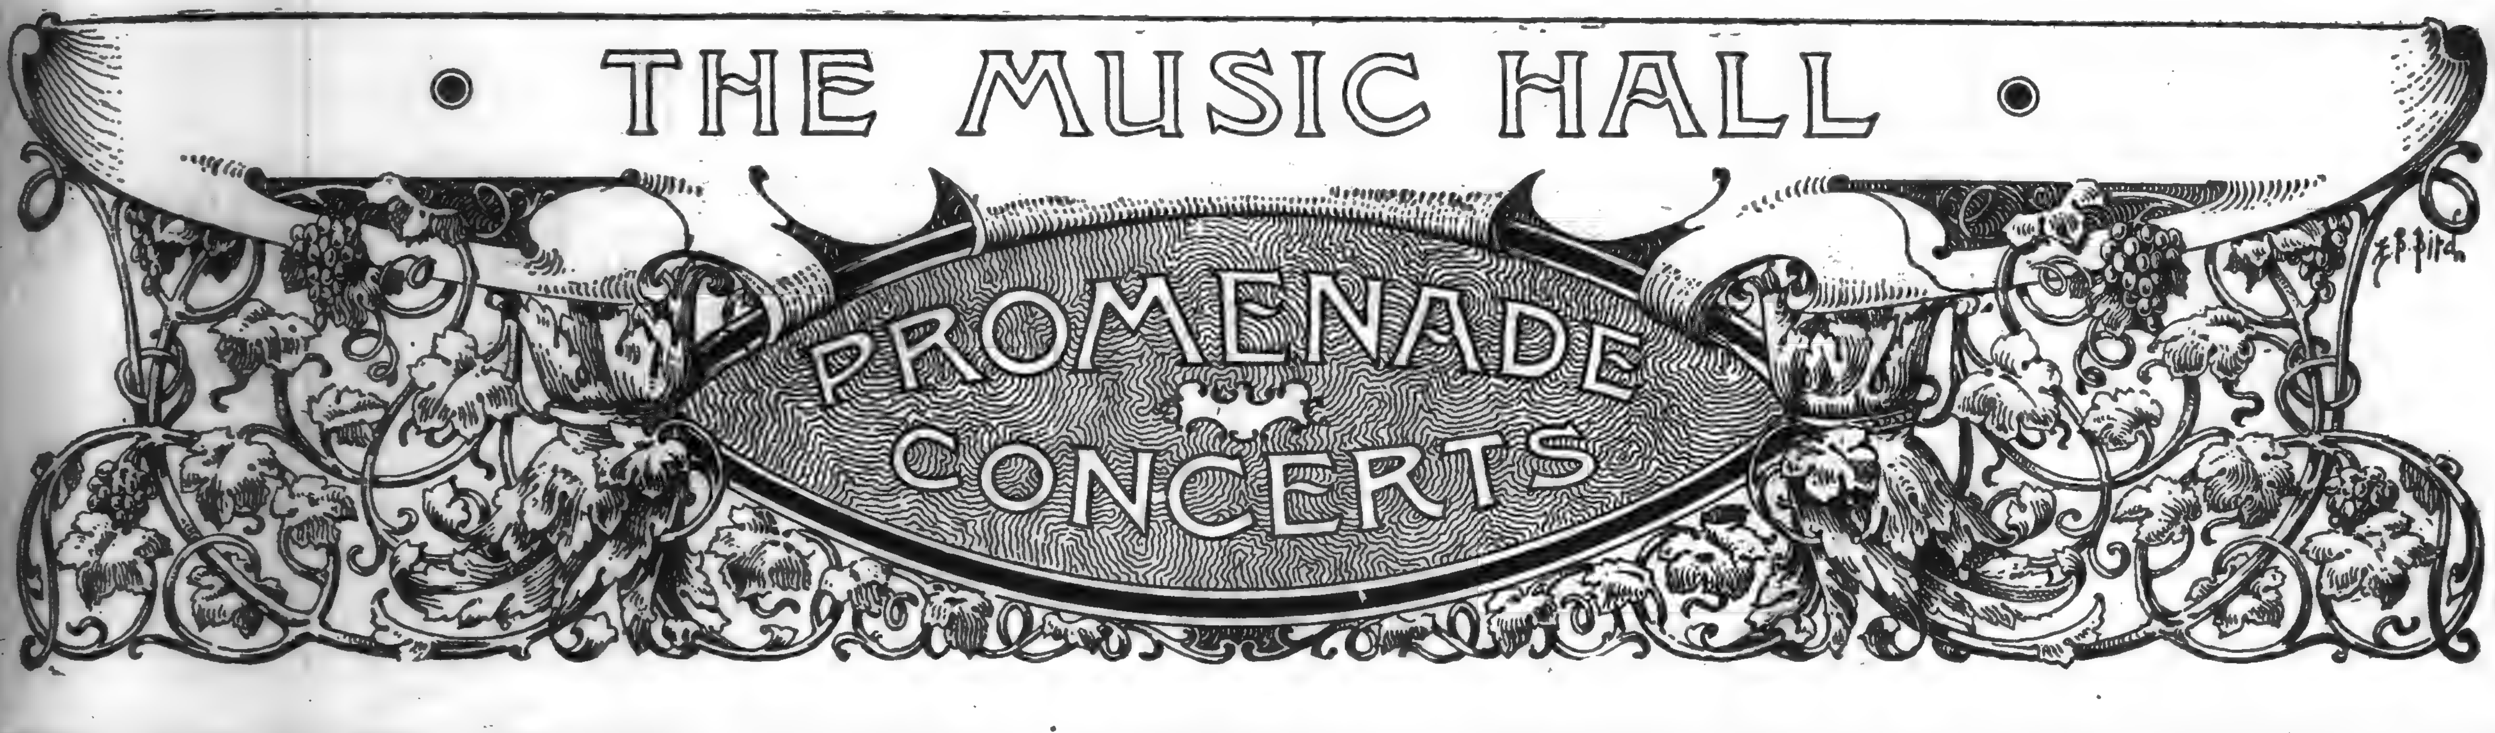
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER
Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE FINEST AND MILDEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO., 232 WASHINGTON STREET.



THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE
CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, TUESDAY, MAY 10, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 2.

THE... MUSIC... HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 10.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH from "The Serenade"	Herbert
2.	OVERTURE, "Mignon"	Thomas
3.	WALTZ, "Meerleuchten"	Ziehrer
4.	SELECTION, "Trovatore"	Verdi
5.	WALTZ AND PIZZICATO from Ballet Music, "Sylvia"	Delibes
6.	SAILORS' CHORUS from "The Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
7.	GAVOTTE for String Orchestra	Bach
8.	INVITATION TO DANCE	Weber
9.	OVERTURE, "Pique Dame"	Suppé
10.	WALTZ, "Landeskinder" (First Time.)	Strauss
11.	POLKA, "Tic-Tac"	Strobl
12.	MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle"	Wagner

AS PLAYED AT THESE CONCERTS.

Marche Americaine. Two-step.
By the famous composer, LOUIS GANNE.

Summer Dreams, Entr'acte.
By Squire.

Played with great success at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, London, and by all leading Orchestras.

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,

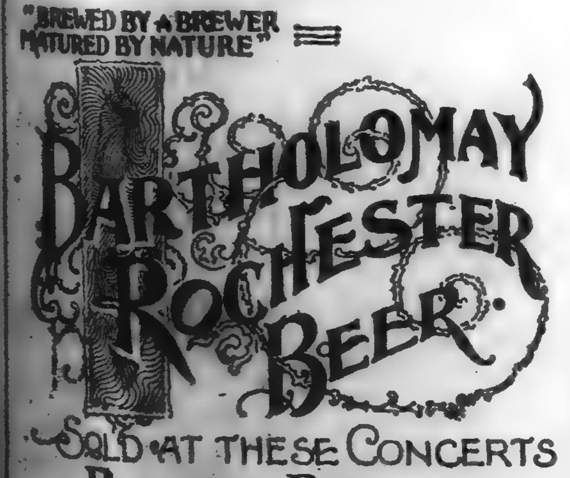
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

CLOTHING
CLEANSED or DYED
PROPERLY
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
... Telephones.

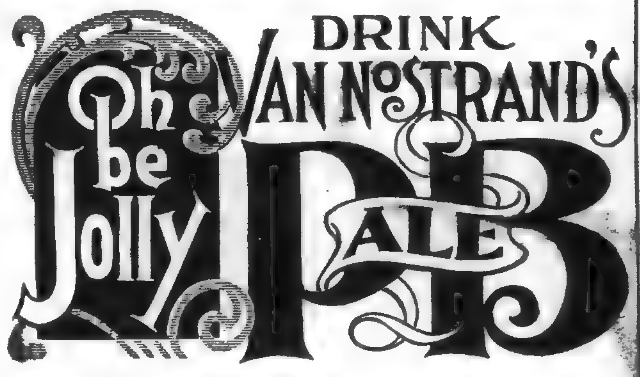
BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER.

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BUNKER HILL
Bunker Hill
LAGER
BEST BEER BREWED



DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P.B.
ALE

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

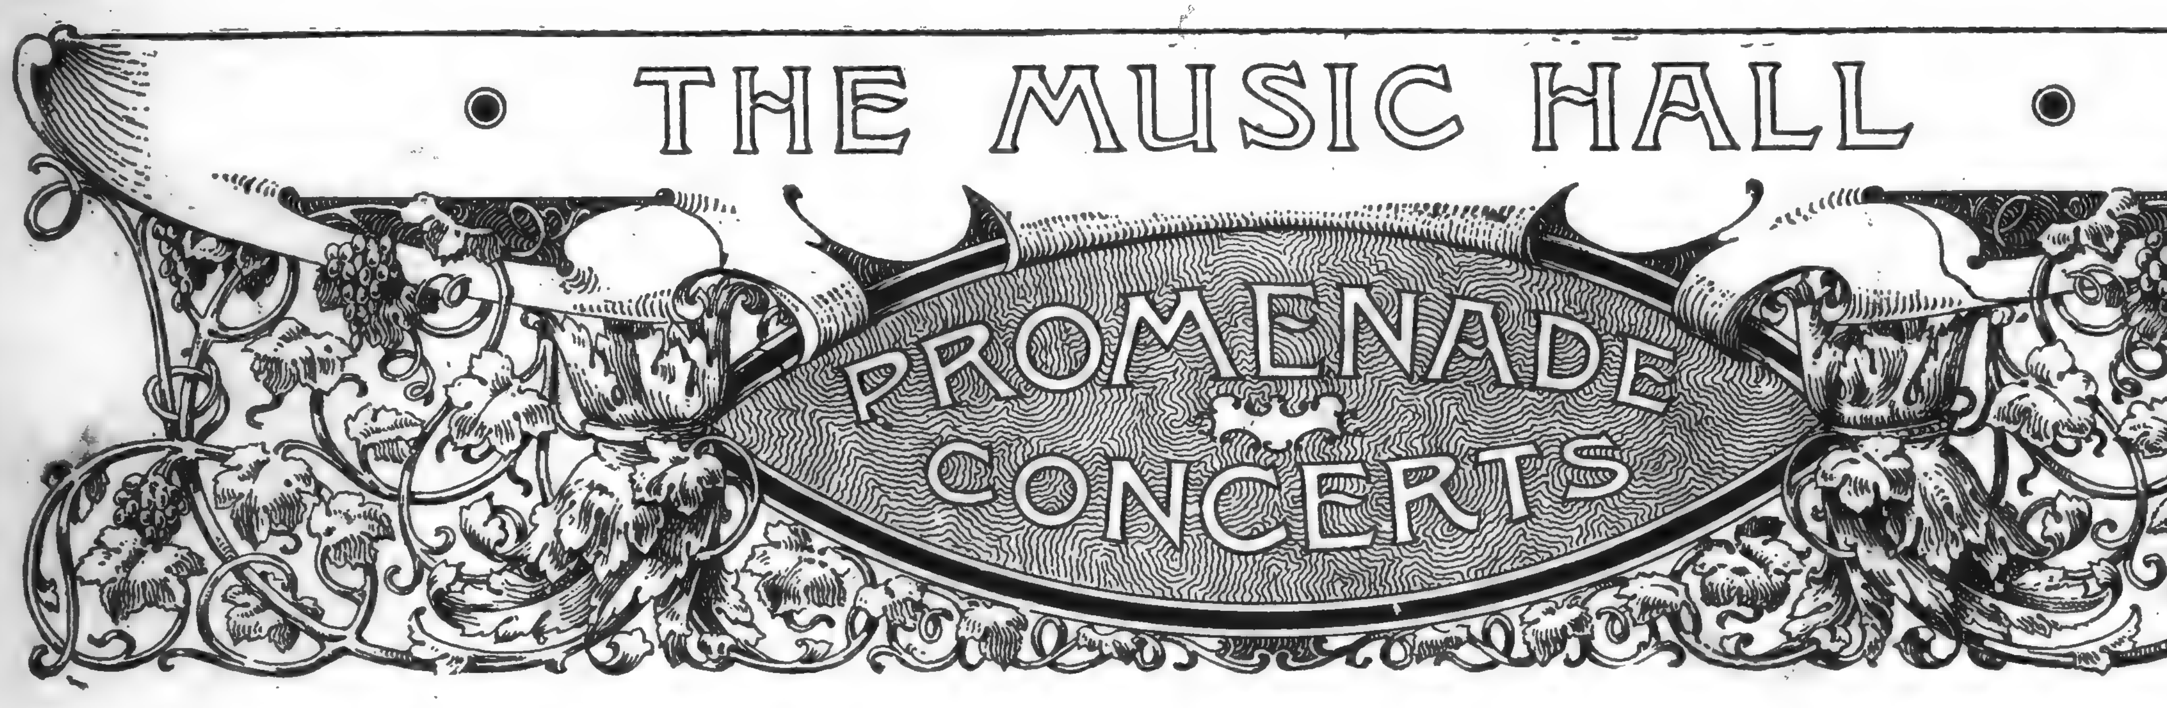
SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE FINEST AND MILDEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO., 232 WASHINGTON STREET.

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.



PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, MAY 11, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 3.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 11.

PROGRAMME.

1. HUNGARIAN MARCH . . . . Berlioz
2. OVERTURE, "Le Dieu et la Bayadère" . . . . . . Auber
3. WALTZ, "Arabian Nights" . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Carmen" . . . . Bizet

5. INTRODUCTION TO ACT III. of "The King's Children," Humperdinck
6. PAGINA D'AMORE . . . . Van der Stucken
   (First Time.)
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. MENUET FLEURI . . . . Ganne
   (First Time.)
8. OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor" . . . . . . Nicolai

9. SELECTION, "Mikado" . . . . Sullivan
10. WALTZ, "Gross Wien" . . . . Strauss
11. POLKA, "Tyrolean" . . . . Zeller
12. VIENNA DUDE MARCH . . . . Wagner

Ask for MLLE. CHAMINADE'S latest Compositions, among which you will find:

Rimembranza, Op. 88 }
Thème Varié, Op. 89 } For Piano Solo.
Légende, . . Op. 90 }
Chanson Triste . . }
Bleus . . . . . }
Au Pays Bleu . . } Songs.
Les Présents . . }

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,

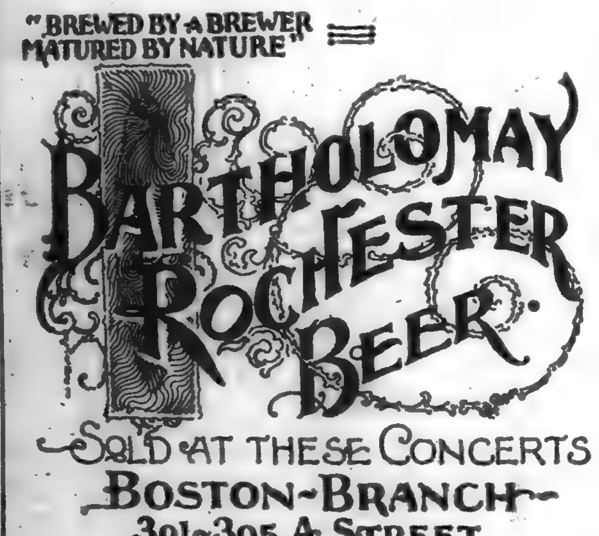
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

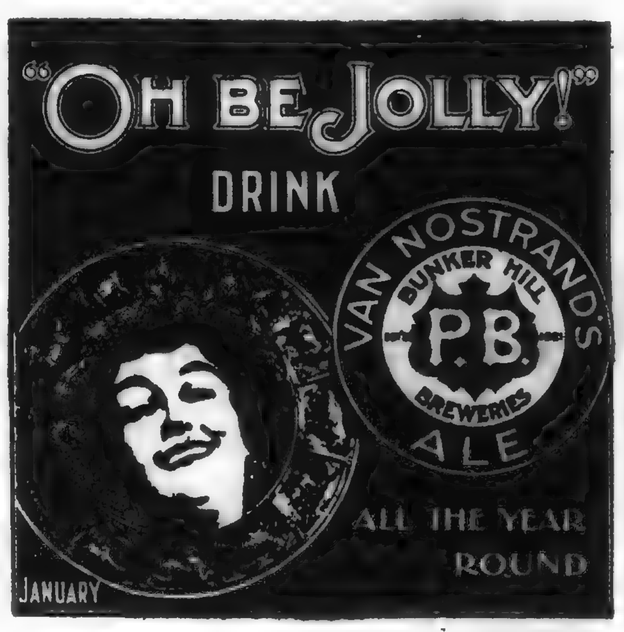
CLOTHING
CLEANSED or DYED
PROPERLY
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.



VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury
EDWARD RUHL, { or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, THURSDAY, MAY 12, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 4.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

CLOTHING
CLEANSED or DYED
PROPERLY
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES

10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

THE . . . MUSIC . . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

THURSDAY, MAY 12.

PROGRAMME.

1. ORIENTAL MARCH . . . . Zach
(First Time.)
2. OVERTURE, "Ruy Blas" . . . . Mendelssohn
3. WALTZ, "Sounds from the Vienna Woods" . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Aïda" . . . . Verdi

---

5. OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser" . . . . Wagner
6. ENTR'ACTE, "Rosamunde" . . . . Schubert
The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. WALTZ from "Puppenfee" . . . . Bayer
8. OVERTURE, "Sakuntala" . . . . Goldmark

---

9. SELECTION, "Wizard of the Nile" . . . . . . Herbert
10. PIZZICATO POLKA . . . . Strauss
11. LARGO . . . . Handel
Violin Obligato, Mr. ISIDOR SCHNITZLER.
12. TEUFELS MARCH . . . . Suppé

THE LATEST WORKS OF
CHARLES VILLIERS STANFORD.
A Cycle of Songs from "The Princess" of Lord Tennyson. Set to music for Quartette of Solo Voices, with piano accompaniment. Op. 68.
Te Deum, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Op. 66. To be performed at the coming Leeds Festival, England.
Requiem, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra, Op. 63. Composed for Birmingham Festival, 1897.
Phaudrig Crohoore, an Irish Ballad, for Chorus and Orchestra. Composed for Norwich Festival. Op. 62.
Six Elizabethan Pastorals (3d set) for Chorus (unaccompanied). Op. 67.
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
Bunker Hill
LAGER
BEST BEER BREWED

DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P. B.
PALE ALE

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER
Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD BUHL, Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

BLANK PAGE

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE
CONCERTS
E.B. Bird

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 14, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 6.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

THIRTEEN SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

SATURDAY, MAY 14.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "King Charles"	Eilenberg
2.	OVERTURE, "Martha"	Flotow
3.	SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
4.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
5.	SELECTIONS from Suite, "Peer Gynt" a. Anitra's Dance. b. The Imps are chasing Peer Gynt.	Grieg
6.	a. ENTR'ACTE, "Forget Me Not"	Macbeth
	b. "Love's Dream after the Ball"	Czibulka
7.	SELECTION, "Chicken Brigade" (First Time.)	Lee Johnson
8.	OVERTURE, "Mignon"	A. Thomas
9.	INTRODUCTION to Act III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
10.	WALTZ, "Barcarolle"	Waldteufel
11.	OVERTURE on American Airs	Moses
12.	MARCH, "Up the Street"	Morse

AS PLAYED AT THESE CONCERTS.

Marche Americaine. Two-step.
By the famous composer, LOUIS GANNE.

Summer Dreams, Entr'acte.
By Squire.

Played with great success at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, London, and by all leading Orchestras.

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,

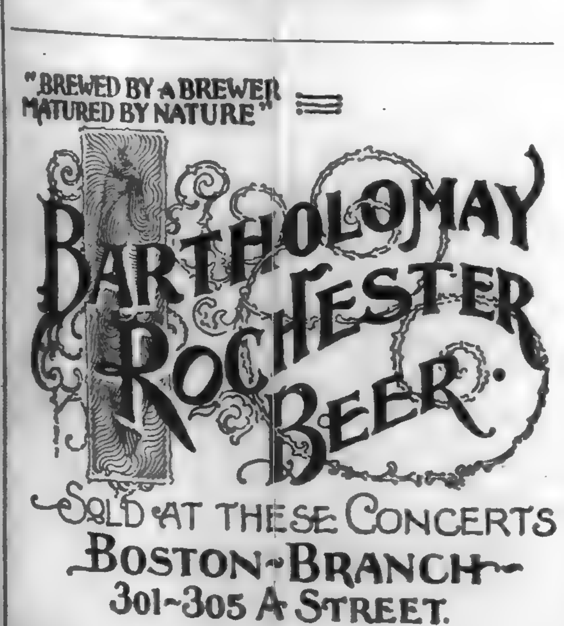
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

CLOTHING
CLEANSED or DYED
PROPERLY
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BUNKER HILL
Bunker Hill
LAGER
BEST BEER BREWED

DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P.B.
ALE

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS
E.B. Bird

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, MONDAY, MAY 16, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIII. No. 7.

THE... MUSIC... HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 16.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Merry Soldiers" (First Time.)	Sabathil
2.	OVERTURE, "Zampa"	Hérold
3.	WALTZ, "Morgenblätter"	Strauss
4.	POTPOURRI of Meyerbeer's Operas (First Time.)	Schreiner
5.	BALLET MUSIC from "Queen of Sheba" (Violoncello Solo, MR. E. LOEFFLER.)	Goldmark
6.	BABBIE WALTZES from "The Little Minister" (First Time.)	Fuerst
7.	a. BERCEUSE	Clayton Johns
	b. SERENATA	Moszkowski
8.	RHAPSODY in C	Liszt
9.	OVERTURE, "Freischütz"	Weber
10.	NARCISSUS	Nevin
11.	RIDE OF THE HUSSARS	Spindler
12.	TABASCO MARCH	Chadwick

Ask for MLLE. CHAMINADE'S latest Compositions, among which you will find:

Rimembranza, Op. 88 } For Piano Solo.
Thème Varié, Op. 89
Légende, . . Op. 90

Chanson Triste . . } Songs.
Bleus . . . . .
Au Pays Bleu . .
Les Présents . . .

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,

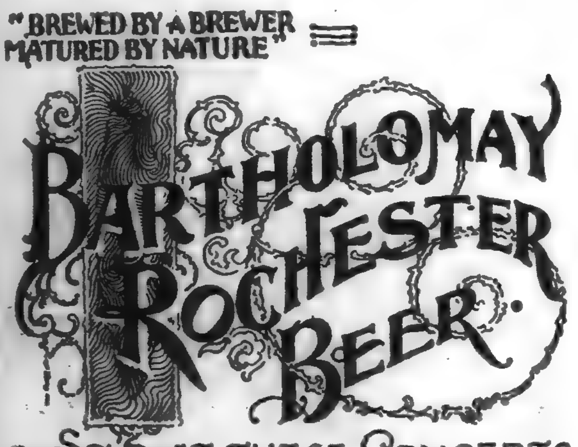
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

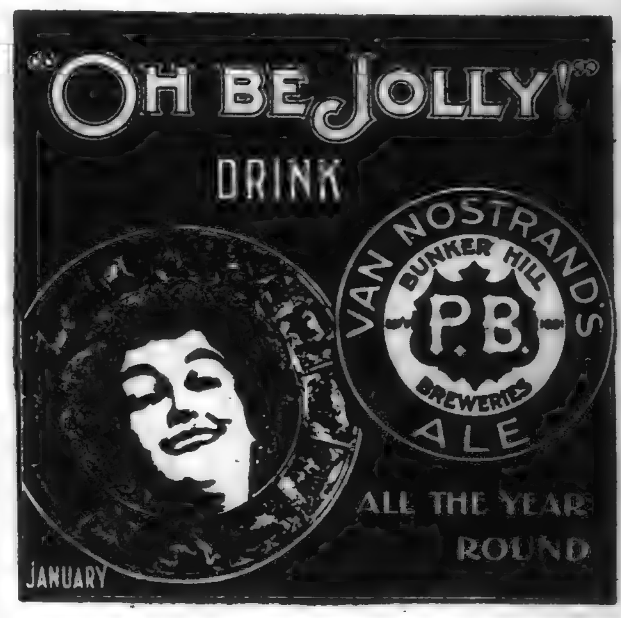
CLOTHING
CLEANSED or DYED
PROPERLY
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.



"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
BUNKER HILL
P.B.
BREWERIES
ALE
ALL THE YEAR ROUND
JANUARY

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W HABICH
EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, TUESDAY, MAY 17, 1898.

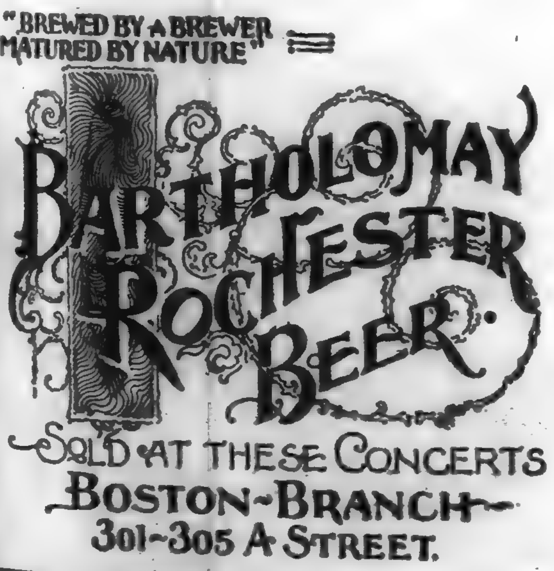
SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIII. No. 8.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

CLOTHING
CLEANSED or DYED
PROPERLY
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES

10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 17.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "El Capitan"	Sousa
2.	OVERTURE, "Ossian"	Gade
3.	WALTZ, "Du und Du," from "Die Fledermaus"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "The Brigands"	Offenbach
5.	BALLET MUSIC, "Feramors"	Rubinstein
6.	MELODY in F Orchestrated by MULLER-BERGHAUS.	Rubinstein
7.	AMERICAN FANTASY	Bendix
8.	FINALE, Act I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
9.	SELECTION, "The Fencing Master"	De Koven
10.	WALTZ, "Ich bin dir gut" (First Time.)	Strauss
11.	POLKA, "Birth of the Bird"	Waldteufel
12.	AUSTRIA MARCH	Zach

THE LATEST WORKS OF
CHARLES VILLIERS STANFORD.

A Cycle of Songs from "The Princess" of Lord Tennyson. Set to music for Quartette of Solo Voices, with piano accompaniment. Op. 68.

Te Deum, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Op. 66. To be performed at the coming Leeds Festival, England.

Requiem, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra, Op. 63. Composed for Birmingham Festival, 1897.

Phaudrig Crohoore, an Irish Ballad, for Chorus and Orchestra. Composed for Norwich Festival. Op. 62.

Six Elizabethan Pastorals (3d set) for Chorus (unaccompanied). Op. 67.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BUNKER HILL
Bunker Hill
BREWED
LAGER
BEST BEER BREWED

DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P B
ALE

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

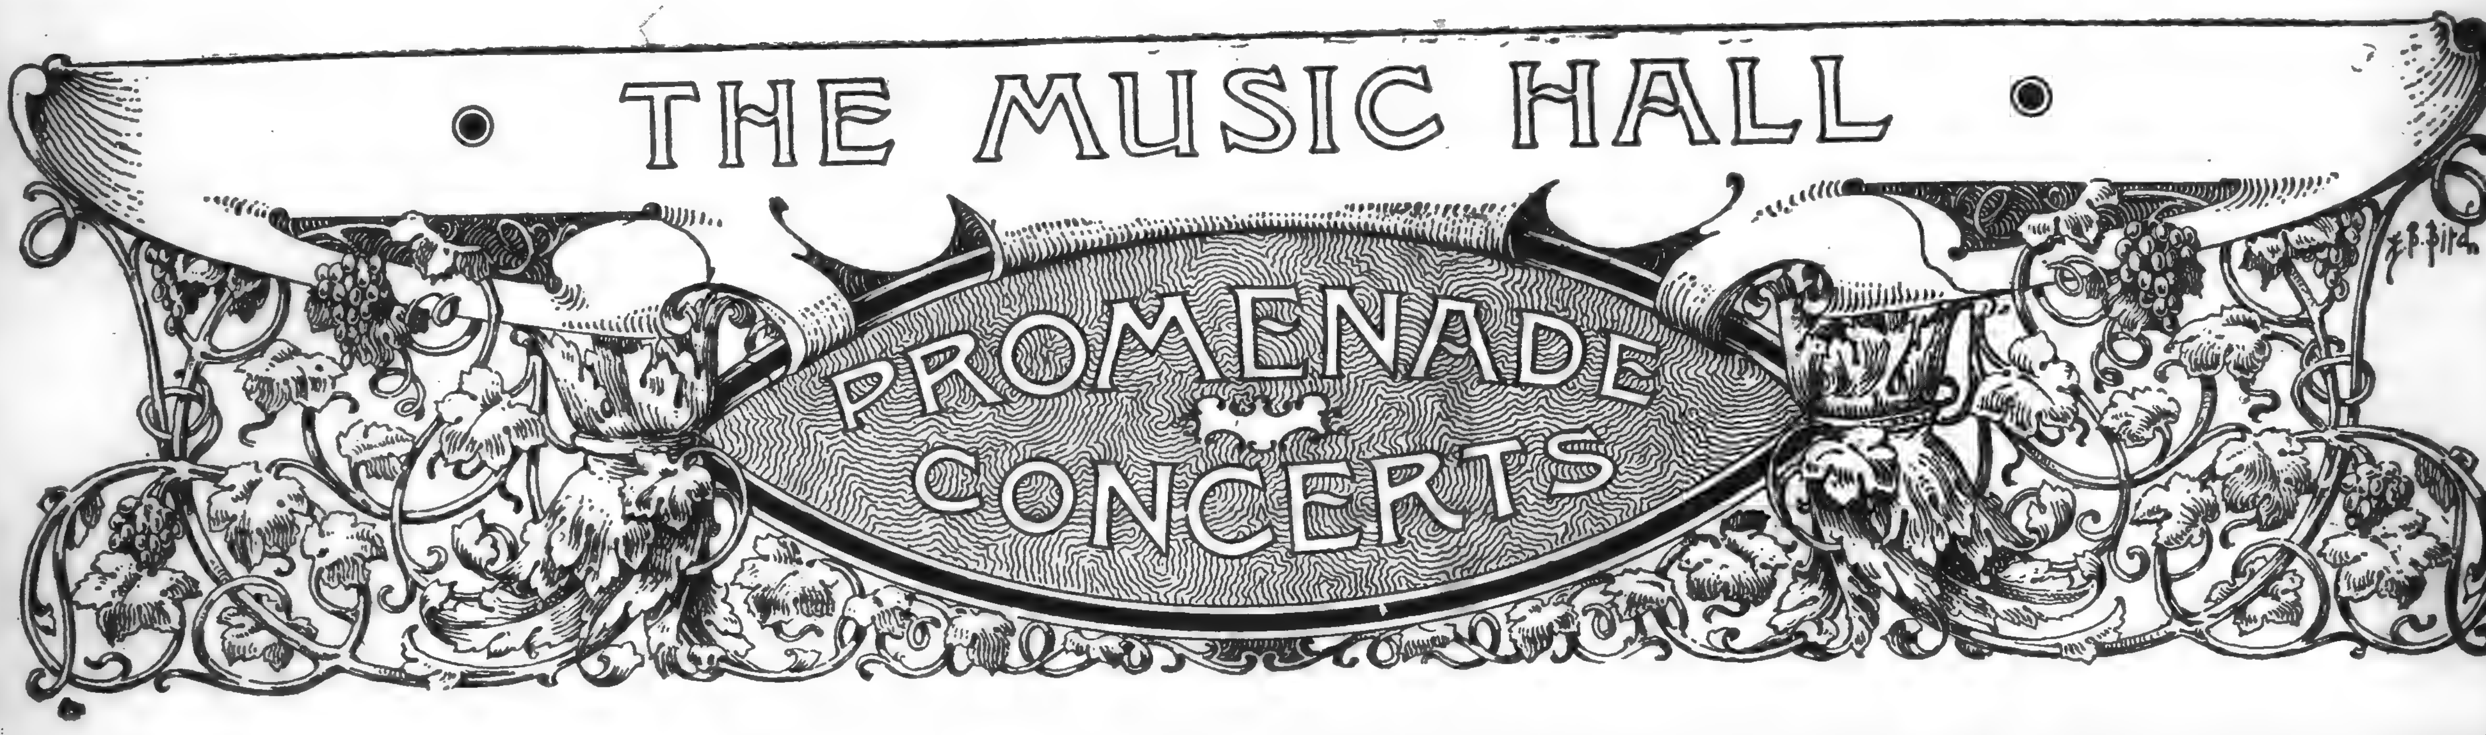
H. W. HABICH
EDWARD RUHL, Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.



THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, MAY 18, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 9.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 18.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Puppenfée"	Bayer
2.	OVERTURE, "Raymond"	A. Thomas
3.	WALTZ, "Harlequin on a Voyage"	Zach
4.	SELECTION, "Giroflé-Girofla"	Lecocq
5.	TWO MOVEMENTS from "Little Suite" a. Slumber Song. b. The Top.	Bizet
	The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
6.	OVERTURE, "Orpheus aux Enfers"	Offenbach
7.	a. SCARF DANCE from "Callirhoë"	Chaminade
	b. PIZZICATO from "Sylvia"	Delibes
8.	WALTZ, "Roses from the South"	Strauss
9.	CONGRESS OF MELODIES	Conradi
10.	WALTZ, "Snow Balls"	Ziehrer
11.	THE DARKIES' DREAM	Lansing
12.	MARCH, "Donna Juanita"	Suppé

The Latest ENGLISH SONGS for All Voices.

"When the World is Fair." - Cowen
"Love's Flight." - Shelley
"Blacksmith's Hammer." - A. Goring Thomas
"When you Return." - M. V. White
"Scent of the Mignonette." - Hope Temple
"Idle Words." - Stephen Adams
Etc., etc., etc.

Just published, Miss LIZA LEHMANN'S Musical Idyll,
"GOOD-NIGHT, BABETTE,"
For Soprano and Baritone, with accompaniment for Piano, Violin, and 'Cello, or Piano only.

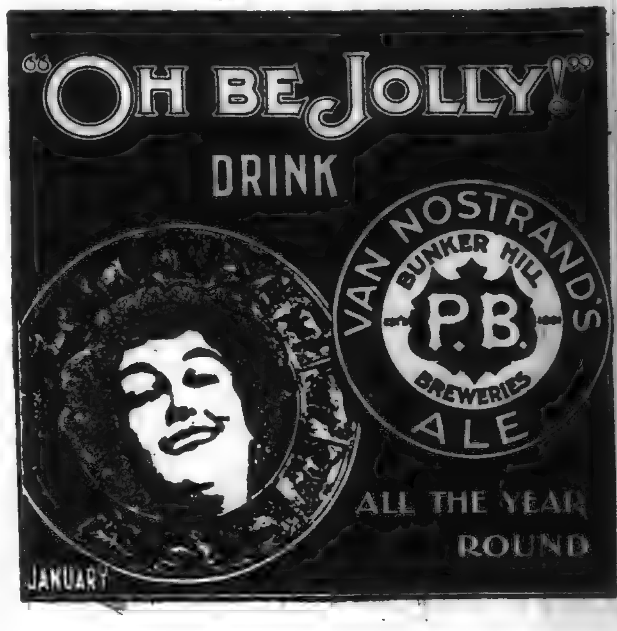
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

CLOTHING
CLEANSED or DYED
PROPERLY
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.



"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S P.B. ALE
ALL THE YEAR ROUND

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK CABINET
LAGER BEER
Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, THURSDAY, MAY 19, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 10.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

THURSDAY, MAY 19.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Am I a Wiz?"	Herbert
2.	OVERTURE, "Stradella"	Flotow
3.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
4.	SELECTION, "The Serenade" (First Time.)	Herbert
5.	ENTRÉE TRIOMPHALE DES BOYARDS	Halvorsen
6.	SELECTION, "Trovatore"	Verdi
7.	OVERTURE on American Airs	Moses
8.	WALTZ, "Love and Spring"	Waldteufel
9.	OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry"	Suppé
10.	RONDE D'AMOUR The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.	Westerhout
11.	POLKA, "The Mill"	Strauss
12.	UNIVERSITY MARCH	Bruguiere

AS PLAYED AT THESE CONCERTS.

Marche Americaine. Two-step.
By the famous composer, LOUIS GANNE.

Summer Dreams, Entr'acte.
By Squire.

Played with great success at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, London, and by all leading Orchestras.

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,

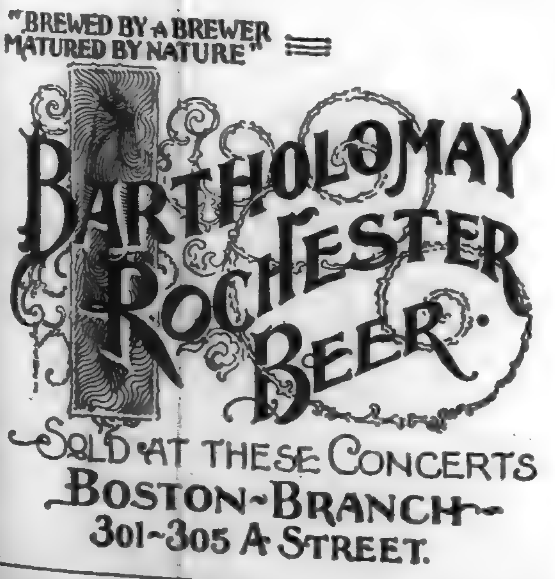
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

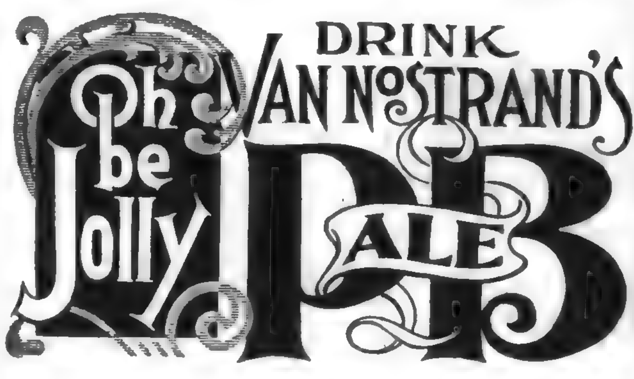
CLOTHING
CLEANSED or DYED
PROPERLY
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
Bunker Hill
LAGER
BEST BEER BREWED



DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P.B.
ALE

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH,
EDWARD RUHL,
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE
CONCERTS
F. F. Bird

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, MAY 20, 1898.

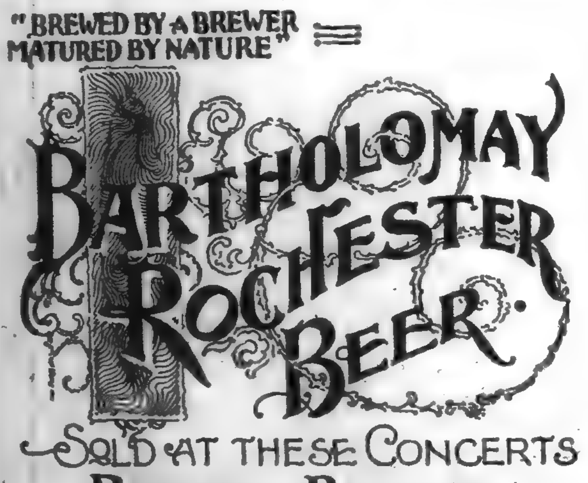
SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 11.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

CLOTHING
CLEANSED or DYED
PROPERLY
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES

10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

FRIDAY, MAY 20.
FRENCH COMPOSERS' NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Queen of Sheba" . . . . Gounod
2. OVERTURE, "The North Star" . . . . Meyerbeer
3. WALTZ, "Les Patineurs" . . . . Waldteufel
4. BALLET MUSIC from "Faust" . . . . Gounod

5. OVERTURE, "Piccolino" . . . . Guiraud
(First Time.)
6. LE DERNIER SOMMEIL DE LA VIERGE . . Massenet
7. OVERTURE, "Si j'étais Roi" . . . . Adam
8. JOYEUSE MARCHE . . . . Chabrier
(First Time.)

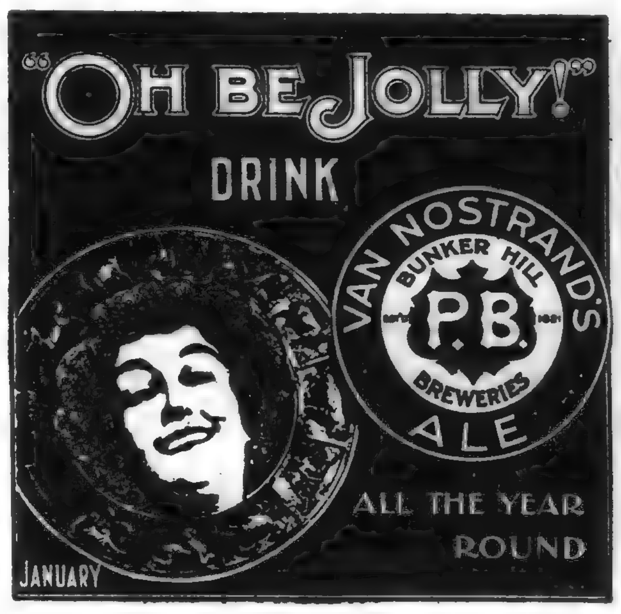
9. SCÈNE RELIGIEUSE AND INVOCATION . . Massenet
Violoncello Solo, MR. E. LOEFFLER.
The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
10. SEVILLANA . . . . Massenet
11. POLKA MAZOURKA, "Radieuse" . . . . Marie
(First Time.)
12. MARCH, "Tzigane" . . . . Lacome

Ask for MLLE. CHAMINADE'S latest
Compositions, among which you will find:

Rimembranza, Op. 88 } For Piano Solo.
Thème Varié, Op. 89 }
Légende, . . Op. 90 }
Chanson Triste . . } Songs.
Bleus . . . . . . }
Au Pays Bleu . . }
Les Présents . . . }

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.



VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, } Telephone, 56 Roxbury
EDWARD RUHL, } or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 21, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIII. No. 12.

LEWANDO'S · DYEING · LAUNDRY · CLEANSING

CLOTHING
CLEANSED or DYED
PROPERLY
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

SATURDAY, MAY 21.

PROGRAMME.

1.	ORIENTAL MARCH	Zach
2.	MEDLEY OVERTURE, "Salute to Erin" . . . . . (First Time.)	Lamotte
3.	WALTZ, "Violets"	Waldteufel
4.	SELECTION, "The Highwayman" . . . . . (First Time.)	De Koven
5.	OVERTURE, "Sphinx"	Thompson
6.	NARCISSUS	Nevin
7.	AMERICAN PATROL	Meecham
8.	OVERTURE, "William Tell"	Rossini
9.	WALTZ, "Obispah"	Knight
10.	SELECTION, "Robin Hood"	De Koven
11.	POLKA, "Tyrolean"	Zeller
12.	MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

SPECIAL. MONDAY, MAY 30, DECORATION DAY. SOUSA NIGHT.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Owing to a long-standing engagement of Music Hall, there will be no concert on the evening of Thursday, May 26.

THE LATEST WORKS OF
CHARLES VILLIERS STANFORD.

A Cycle of Songs from "The Princess" of Lord Tennyson. Set to music for Quartette of Solo Voices, with piano accompaniment. Op. 68.

Te Deum, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Op. 66. To be performed at the coming Leeds Festival, England.

Requiem, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra, Op. 63. Composed for Birmingham Festival, 1897.

Phaudrig Crohoore, an Irish Ballad, for Chorus and Orchestra. Composed for Norwich Festival. Op. 62.

Six Elizabethan Pastorals (3d set) for Chorus (unaccompanied). Op. 67.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BUNKER HILL
LAGER
BEST BEER BREWED

DRINK VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P.B. ALE

NORFOLK CABINET

LAGER BEER
Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD BUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

[48]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, MONDAY, MAY 23, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 13.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 23.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "King Cotton"	Sousa
2.	OVERTURE, "Le Pré aux Clercs"	Hérold
3.	WALTZ, "Artist's Life"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Carmen"	Bizet
5.	BARITONE SOLO, Prologue from "Pagliacci" MR. PLACIDO FIUMARA.	Leoncavallo
6.	MARCH from Symphony, "Leonore"	Raff
7.	OVERTURE, "Pique Dame"	Suppé
8.	VALSE CAPRICE	Rubinstein
9.	ANDANTE for String Orchestra The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.	Tschaikowsky
10.	WALTZ, "Pomone"	Waldteufel
11.	POLKA MAZOURKA, "Unparteische Kritik"	Strauss
12.	PERSIAN MARCH	Strauss

SPECIAL. MONDAY, MAY 30, DECORATION DAY. SOUSA NIGHT.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Owing to a long-standing engagement of Music Hall, there will be no concert on the evening of Thursday, May 26.

The Latest ENGLISH SONGS for All Voices.

"When the World is Fair."	Cowen
"Love's Flight."	Shelley
"Blacksmith's Hammer."	A. Goring Thomas
"When you Return."	M. V. White
"Scent of the Mignonette."	Hope Temple
"Idle Words."	Stephen Adams

Etc., etc., etc.

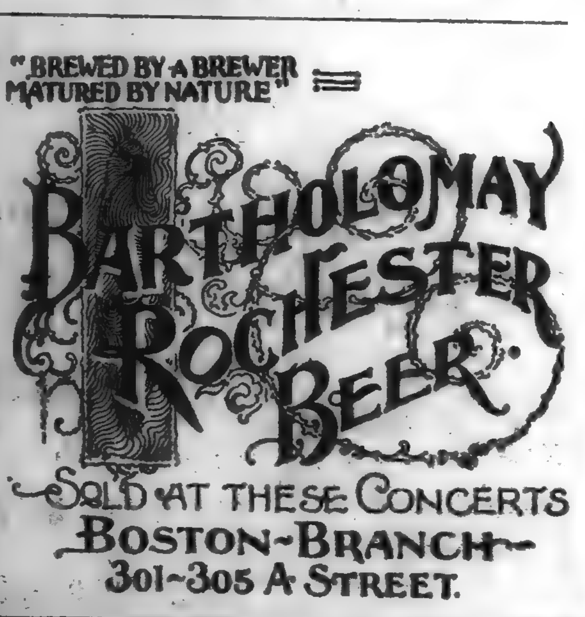
Just published, Miss LIZA LEHMANN'S Musical Idyll,
"GOOD-NIGHT, BABETTE,"
For Soprano and Baritone, with accompaniment for Piano, Violin, and 'Cello, or Piano only.
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

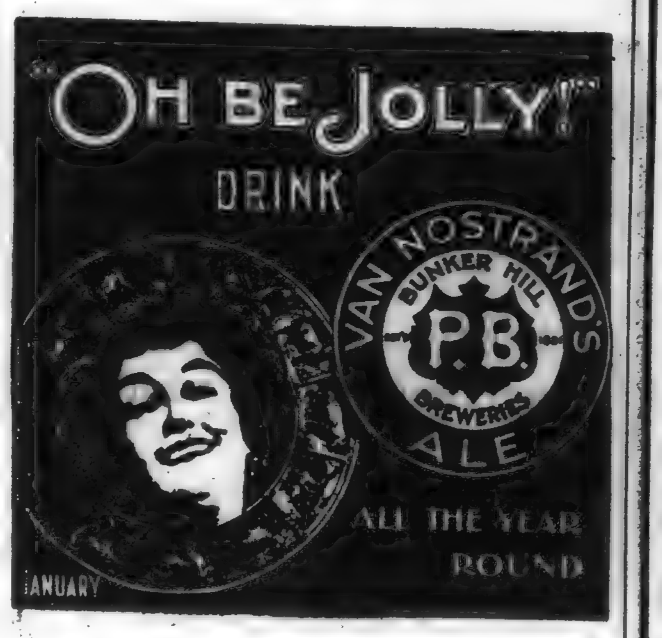
LEWANDO'S · DYEING · CLEANSING · LAUNDRY

CLOTHING
CLEANSED or DYED
PROPERLY
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.



"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
BUNKER HILL
P.B.
BREWERIES
ALE
ALL THE YEAR ROUND

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET
LAGER BEER
Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD BUHL, Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, TUESDAY, MAY 24, 1898.

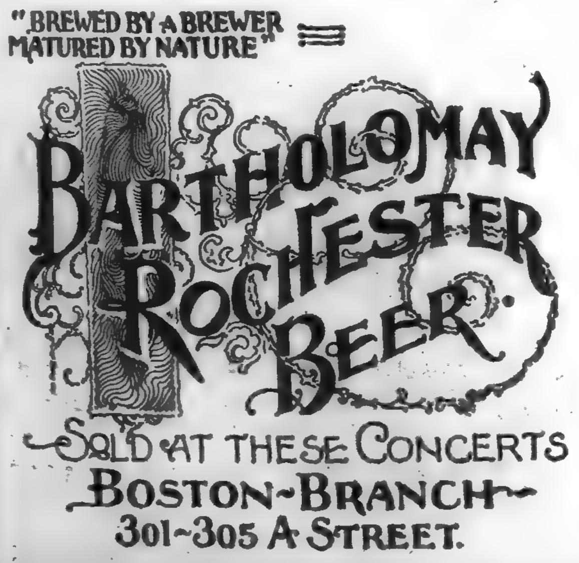
SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 14.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

In honor of Queen Victoria's eightieth birthday, "God save the Queen" and the "Star-spangled Banner" will be played together as an opening selection.

TUESDAY, MAY 24.

PROGRAMME.

1.	VENETIAN MARCH	Eilenberg
2.	OVERTURE, "Semiramide"	Rossini
3.	WALTZ, "Landeskinder"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Rigoletto"	Verdi
5.	TWO SLAVONIC DANCES	Dvorak
6.	SCÈNE RELIGIEUSE AND INVOCATION (Violoncello Solo, MR. E. LOEFFLER.) The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.	Massenet
7.	WALTZ, "Freut euch des Lebens"	Strauss
8.	GALOP CHROMATIQUE	Liszt
9.	SELECTION, "Beggar Student"	Milloecker
10.	POLKA MAZOURKA, "Mignonette"	Zach
11.	AMERICAN PATROL	Meecham
12.	MARCH, "Princess Ninetta"	Strauss

SPECIAL. MONDAY, MAY 30, DECORATION DAY. SOUSA NIGHT.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Owing to a long-standing engagement of Music Hall, there will be no concert on the evening of Thursday, May 26.

AS PLAYED AT THESE CONCERTS.

Marche Americaine. Two-step.
By the famous composer, LOUIS GANNE.

Summer Dreams, Entr'acte.
By Squire.

Played with great success at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, London, and by all leading Orchestras.

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
Bunker Hill
LAGER
BEST BEER BREWED

DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P B
ALE

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

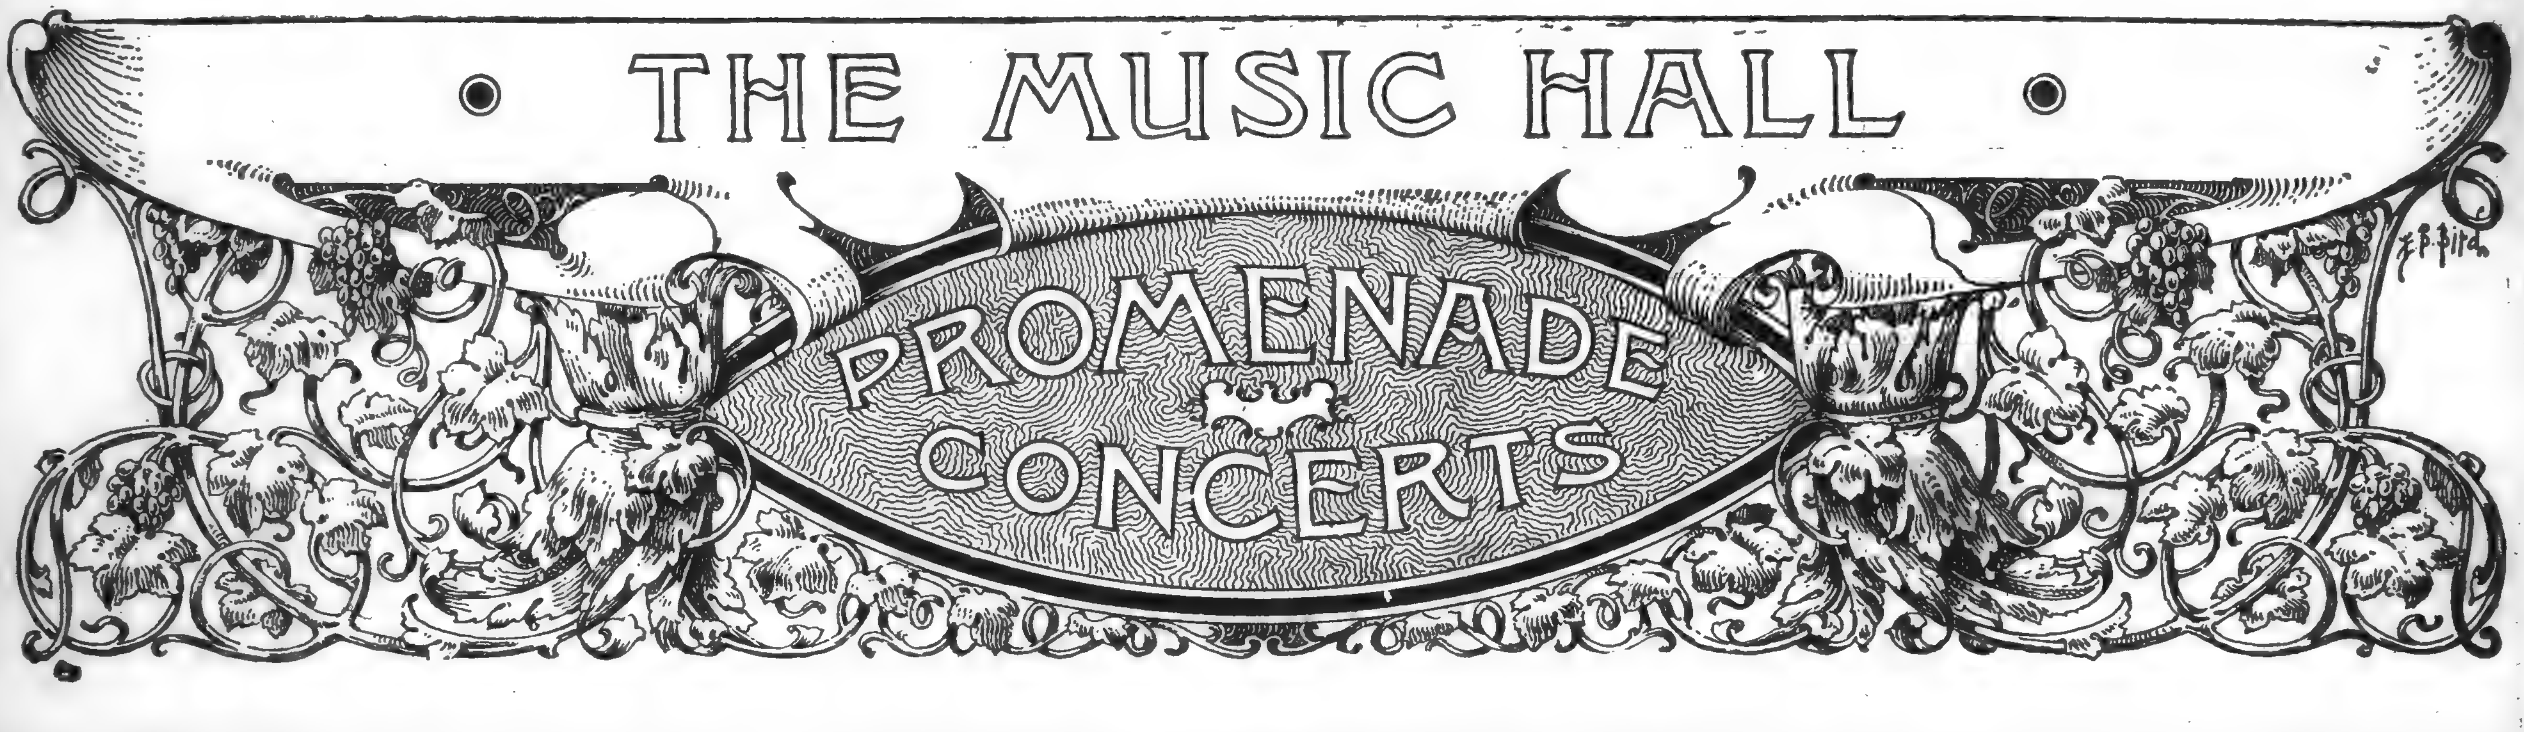
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD BUHL, Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES



THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, MAY 25, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 15.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 25.

OFFENBACH-SULLIVAN NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH from "The Serenade"	Herbert
2.	OVERTURE, "Orpheus aux Enfers"	Offenbach
3.	WALTZ, "Harlequin on a Voyage"	Zach
4.	SELECTION, "Gondoliers"	Sullivan
5.	SELECTION, "The Brigands"	Offenbach
6.	GRACEFUL DANCE	Sullivan
7.	SELECTION, "Grand Duchess"	Offenbach
8.	SELECTION, "Trovatore"	Verdi
9.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
10.	SELECTION, "Pirates of Penzance"	Sullivan
11.	LOVE'S DREAM AFTER THE BALL	Czibulka
	The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
12.	MARCH, "Up the Street"	Morse

SPECIAL. MONDAY, MAY 30, DECORATION DAY. SOUSA NIGHT.
Selection from "El Capitan" and five most popular marches.

SPECIAL NOTICE.—Owing to a long-standing engagement of Music Hall, there will be no concert on the evening of Thursday, May 26.

THURSDAY, JUNE 2. TECHNOLOGY NIGHT.

Ask for MLLE. CHAMINADE'S latest Compositions, among which you will find:

Rimembranza, Op. 88 } For Piano Solo.
Thème Varié, Op. 89 }
Légende, . . Op. 90 }

Chanson Triste . . } Songs.
Bleus . . . . . . }
Au Pays Bleu . . }
Les Présents . . . }

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

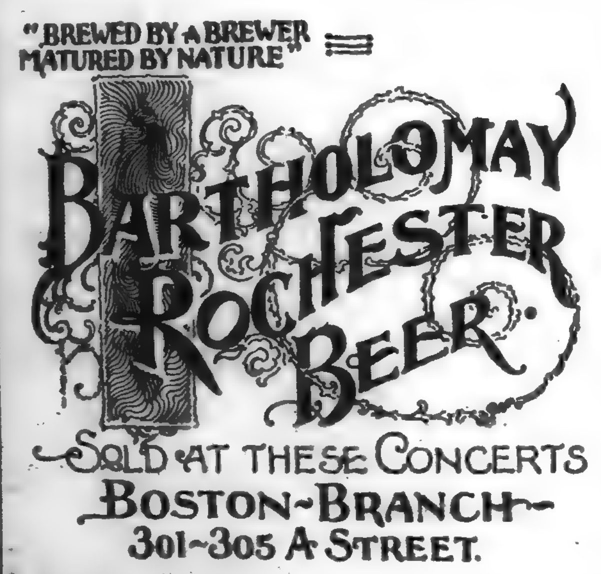
BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

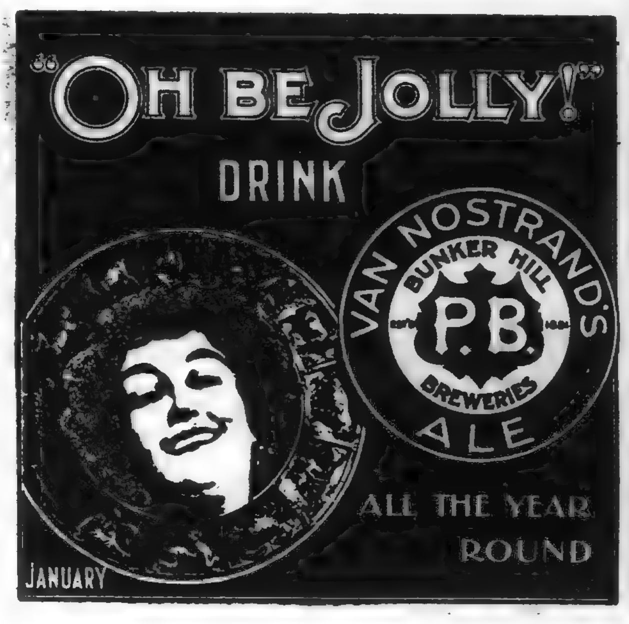
Blankets Cleansed to look like new,
75c. per pair, until July 1 only.
CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES

10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.



"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
BUNKER HILL
P.B.
BREWERIES
ALE
ALL THE YEAR ROUND
JANUARY

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, } Telephone, 56 Roxbury
EDWARD RUHL, } or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, MAY 27, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 16.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Blankets Cleansed to look like new,
75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING

Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.

LEWANDO'S

17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

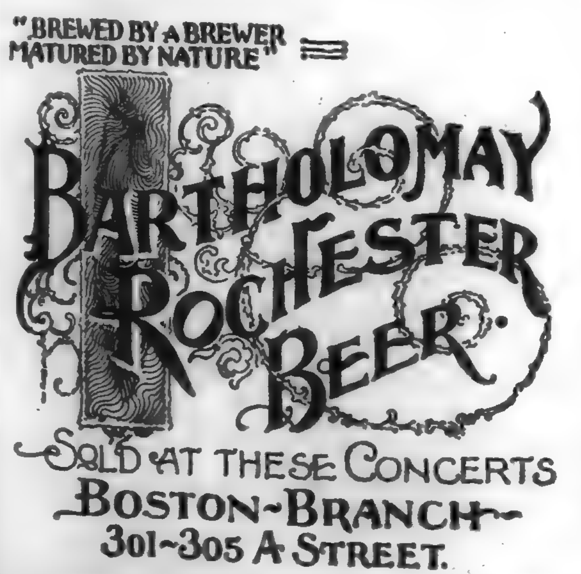
BETWEEN THE ACTS

ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES

IN TIN BOXES

10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.

For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

FRIDAY, MAY 27.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "King Carl"	Eilenberg
2.	OVERTURE, "Banditenstreiche"	Suppé
3.	WALTZ, "Vienna Blood"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Aïda"	Verdi
5.	FESTIVAL MARCH (First Time.)	Foerster
6.	PRIZE SONG from "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg" Trombone Solo, MR. CARL HAMPE.	Wagner
7.	WALTZ, "Du und Du," from "Fledermaus"	Strauss
8.	RIDE OF THE VALKYRIES	Wagner
9.	NOCTURNE The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.	Marshall
10.	SELECTION, "Fatinitza"	Suppé
11.	POLKA, "Rosebuds"	Eilenberg
12.	MARCH, "Liberty Bell"	Sousa

SPECIAL. MONDAY, MAY 30, DECORATION DAY. SOUSA NIGHT.

Selection from "El Capitan" and five most popular marches.

THURSDAY, JUNE 2. TECHNOLOGY NIGHT.

THE LATEST WORKS OF

CHARLES VILLIERS STANFORD.

A Cycle of Songs from "The Princess" of Lord Tennyson. Set to music for Quartette of Solo Voices, with piano accompaniment. Op. 68.

Te Deum, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Op. 66. To be performed at the coming Leeds Festival, England.

Requiem, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra, Op. 63. Composed for Birmingham Festival, 1897.

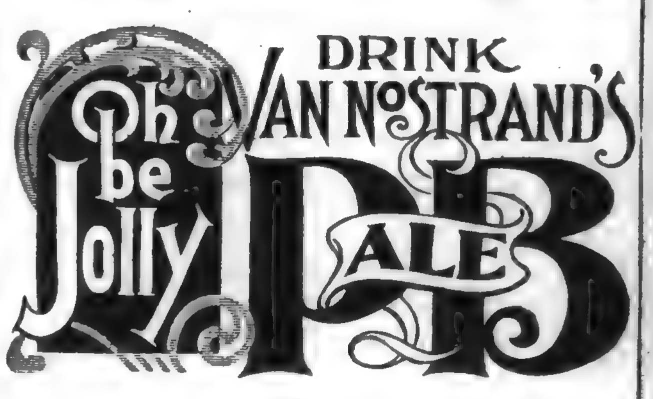
Phaudrig Crohoore, an Irish Ballad, for Chorus and Orchestra. Composed for Norwich Festival. Op. 62.

Six Elizabethan Pastorals (3d set) for Chorus (unaccompanied). Op. 67.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
Bunker Hill
LAGER
BEST BEER BREWED



DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P B
PALE ALE

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

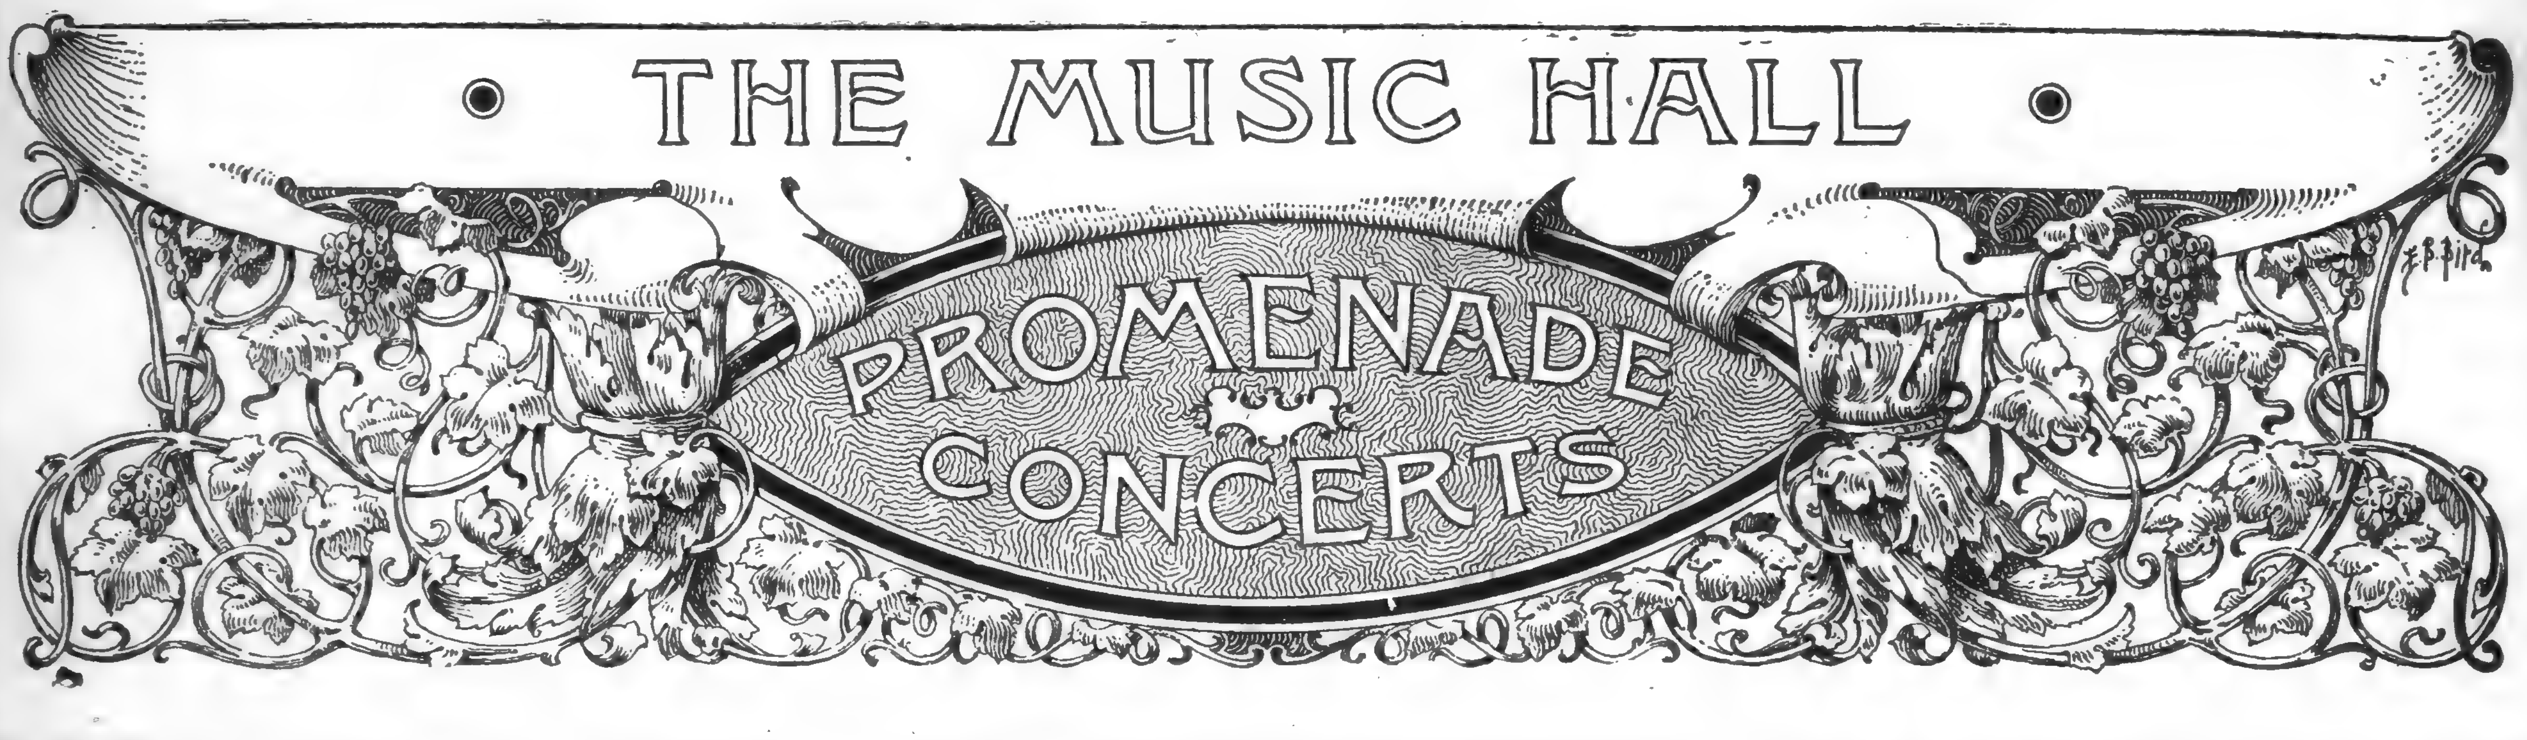
SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.



THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 17.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

SATURDAY, MAY 28.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "At a Georgia Camp-meeting" (First Time.)	Mills
2.	OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppé
3.	WALTZ, "Barcarolle"	Waldteufel
4.	SELECTION, "Belle of New York" (First Time.)	Kerker
5.	ENTRÉE TRIOMPHALE DES BOYARDS	Halvorsen
6.	LOIN DU BAL	Gillet
7.	SELECTION, "Fencing Master"	De Koven
8.	OVERTURE, "Fra Diavolo"	Auber
9.	AMERICAN FANTASY	Bendix
10.	WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows"	Follstedt
11.	POLKA, "Tic-Tac"	Strobl
12.	MARCH, "King Cotton"	Sousa

The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number. (No. 6)

SPECIAL. MONDAY, MAY 30, DECORATION DAY. SOUSA NIGHT.
Selection from "El Capitan" and five most popular marches.

THURSDAY, JUNE 2. TECHNOLOGY NIGHT.

The Latest ENGLISH SONGS for All Voices.

"When the World is Fair."	Cowen
"Love's Flight."	Shelley
"Blacksmith's Hammer."	A. Goring Thomas
"When you Return."	M. V. White
"Scent of the Mignonette."	Hope Temple
"Idle Words."	Stephen Adams

Etc., etc., etc.

Just published, Miss LIZA LEHMANN'S Musical Idyll,
"GOOD-NIGHT, BABETTE,"
For Soprano and Baritone, with accompaniment for Piano, Violin, and 'Cello, or Piano only.

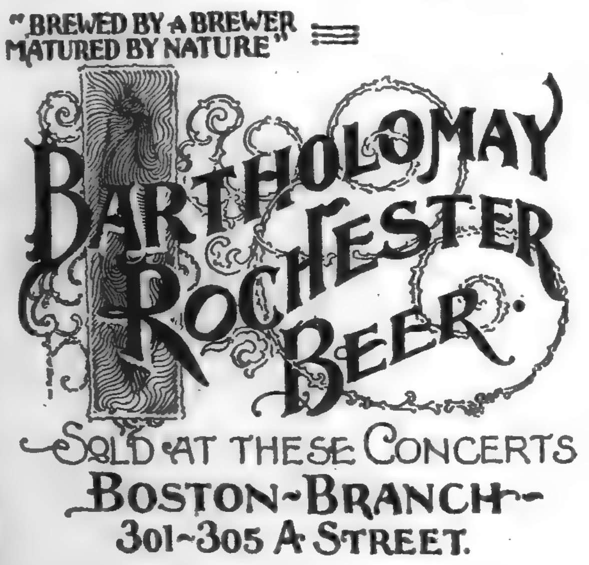
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

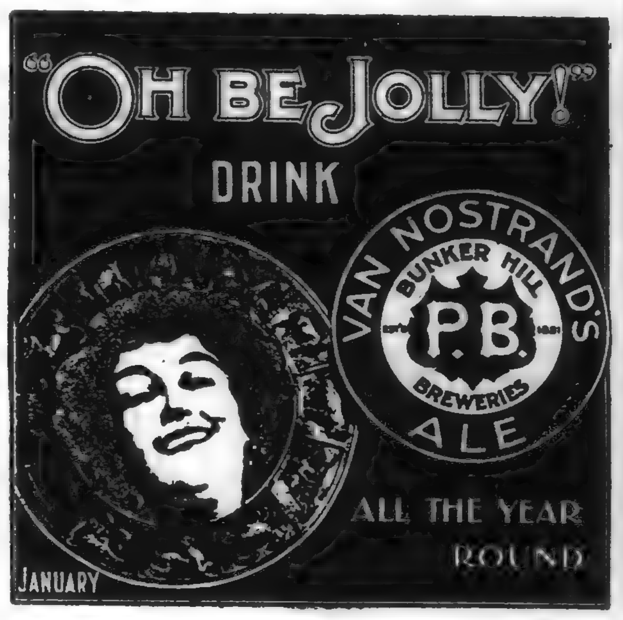
LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.
CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.



VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET

LAGER BEER
Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD BUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, MONDAY, MAY 30, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 18.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 30.

DECORATION DAY.

SOUSA NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Washington Post"	Sousa
2.	OVERTURE, "Mignon"	A. Thomas
3.	WALTZ, "O schöner Mai"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION from "El Capitan" (First Time.)	Sousa
5.	a. ENTR'ACTE, "Forget me not"	McBeth
	b. MARCH, "King Cotton"	Sousa
6.	WALTZ, "Soldier's Songs"	Gungl
7.	a. NARCISSUS	Nevin
	b. MARCH, "Manhattan Beach"	Sousa
8.	OVERTURE, "Rienzi"	Wagner
9.	OVERTURE, "Martha"	Flotow
10.	a. "The Darkey's Dream"	Lansing
	b. MARCH from "Bride Elect"	Sousa
11.	WALTZ, "Arabian Nights"	Strauss
12.	MARCH, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

THURSDAY, JUNE 2. TECHNOLOGY NIGHT.

AS PLAYED AT THESE CONCERTS.

Marche Americaine. Two-step.
By the famous composer, LOUIS GANNE.

Summer Dreams, Entr'acte.
By Squire.

Played with great success at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, London, and by all leading Orchestras.

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING · CLEANSING · LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
... Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
Bunker Hill
LAGER
BEST BEER BREWED

DRINK VAN NOSTRAND'S
Be Jolly
P. B. ALE

NORFOLK CABINET

LAGER BEER
Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD BUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[54]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

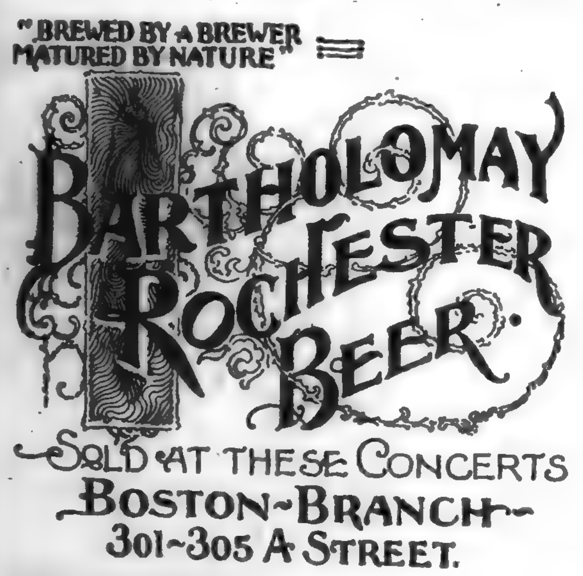
BOSTON, TUESDAY, MAY 31, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 19.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new,
75c. per pair, until July 1 only.
CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE . . . MUSIC . . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 31.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Vienna Dude"	Wagner
2.	OVERTURE, "The Beautiful Galathée"	Suppé
3.	WALTZ, "Neu-Wien"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION from "Carmen"	Bizet
5.	INTRODUCTION to Act I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
6.	WALTZ, "Snowballs"	Ziehrer
7.	SCÈNE RELIGIEUSE AND INVOCATION (Violoncello Solo, Mr. E. LOEFFLER.)	Massenet
8.	JOYEUSE MARCHE	Chabrier
9.	OVERTURE, "Domino Noir"	Auber
10.	WALTZ, "Je t'aime"	Waldteufel
11.	AMERICAN AIRS	Moses
12.	ORIENTAL MARCH	Zach

THURSDAY, JUNE 2. TECHNOLOGY NIGHT.

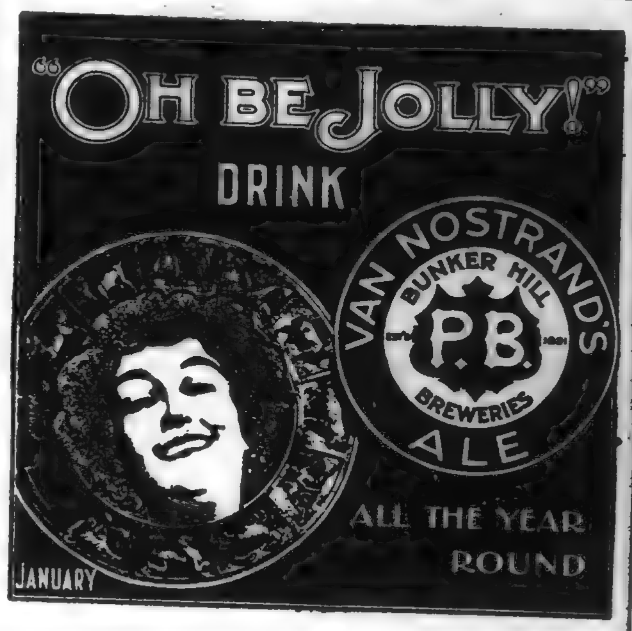
Ask for MLLE. CHAMINADE'S latest
Compositions, among which you will find:

Rimembranza, Op. 88
Thème Varié, Op. 89 } For Piano Solo.
Légende, . . Op. 90

Chanson Triste . .
Bleus . .
Au Pays Bleu . . } Songs.
Les Présents . .

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.



VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH,
EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 1, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 20.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 1.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Merry War" . . . . Strauss
2. OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor" . . . . . . Nicolai
3. WALTZ, "Avec Plaisir" . . . . Strobl
4. SELECTION from "The Serenade" . . . . . . Herbert

5. INTRODUCTION to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg" . Wagner
6. PRELUDE, "Le Déluge" . . . . Saint-Saens
   Violin Solo, Mr. I. Schnitzler.
7. a. INTERMEZZO, "Naila" . . . . Delibes
   b. A FOREST SCENE . . . . Kienzl
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
   (First Time.)
8. OVERTURE, "William Tell" . . . . Rossini

9. ANDANTE for String Orchestra . . . . . . Tschaikowsky
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
10. WALTZ, "Les Patineurs" . . . . Waldteufel
11. POLKA from "The Gypsy Baron" . . . . Strauss
12. MARCH, "The Flying Squadron" . . . . Clark
    (First Time.)

THURSDAY, JUNE 2. TECHNOLOGY NIGHT.

THE LATEST WORKS OF

CHARLES VILLIERS STANFORD.

A Cycle of Songs from "The Princess" of Lord Tennyson. Set to music for Quartette of Solo Voices, with piano accompaniment. Op. 68.

Te Deum, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Op. 66. To be performed at the coming Leeds Festival, England.

Requiem, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra, Op. 63. Composed for Birmingham Festival, 1897.

Phaudrig Crohoore, an Irish Ballad, for Chorus and Orchestra. Composed for Norwich Festival. Op. 62.

Six Elizabethan Pastorals (3d set) for Chorus (unaccompanied) Op. 67.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

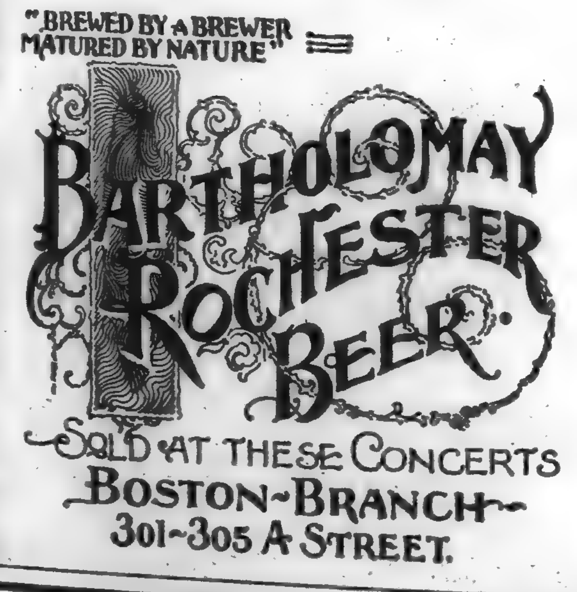
LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Blankets Cleansed to look like new,
75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
2 . . Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES

10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
Bunker Hill
LAGER
BEST BEER BREWED

DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P B
ALE
Be Jolly

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH,
EDWARD RUHL,
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, THURSDAY, JUNE 2, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 21.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Blankets Cleansed to look like new,
75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.

LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES

10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

THE . . . .
MUSIC . .
HALL . . .

Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 2.

TECHNOLOGY NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Puppenfée"	Bayer
2.	INVITATION TO DANCE	Weber
3.	TROVATORE POTPOURRI	Verdi
4.	ENTREE TRIOMPHALE DES BOYARDS	Halvorsen
5.	COLLEGE OVERTURE	Moses
6.	HUSARENRITT	Spindler
7.	NARCISSUS	Nevin
8.	OVERTURE ON AMERICAN AIRS	Moses
9.	LARGO. Solo Violin, MR. I. SCHNITZLER.	Haendel
10.	OVERTURE. "Martha"	Flotow
11.	GRUBENLICHTER WALTZ	Zeller
12.	YOU WILL RECOGNIZE IT.

The Latest ENGLISH SONGS for All Voices.

"When the World is Fair."	Cowen
"Love's Flight."	Shelley
"Blacksmith's Hammer."	A. Goring Thomas
"When you Return."	M. V. White
"Scent of the Mignonette."	Hope Temple
"Idle Words."	Stephen Adams

Etc., etc., etc.

Just published, Miss LIZA LEHMANN'S Musical Idyll,
"GOOD-NIGHT, BABETTE,"
For Soprano and Baritone, with accompaniment for Piano,
Violin, and 'Cello, or Piano only.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
BUNKER HILL
P.B.
BREWERIES
ALE
ALL THE YEAR ROUND
JANUARY

VAN NOSTRAND'S BOSTON CLUB Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager Beer

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD BUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, JUNE 3, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 22.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 3.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH from "Obersteiger"	Zeller
2.	OVERTURE, "Zampa"	Herold
3.	WALTZ, "Meerleuchten"	Ziehrer
4.	POTPOURRI OF MEYERBEER'S MELODIES	Schreiner

5.	SPRING SONG (First Time.)	Mendelssohn
6.	WALTZ, "Blue Danube"	Strauss
7.	TWO SLAVONIC DANCES	Dvorak
8.	OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser"	Wagner

9.	ES KOMMT EIN VOGEL GEFLOGEN Variations after the styles of Bach, Haydn, Mozart, Strauss, Verdi, Gounod, Wagner, as a Horn Quartet, Meyerbeer, and as a Military March.	Ochs
10.	TRAUMEREI The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.	Schumann
11.	WALTZ, "Love and Spring"	Waldteufel
12.	MARCH, "Wien bleibt Wien"	Schrammel

AS PLAYED AT THESE CONCERTS.

Marche Americaine. Two-step.
By the famous composer, LOUIS GANNE.

Summer Dreams, Entr'acte.
By Squire.

Played with great success at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, London, and by all leading Orchestras.

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
... Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES

10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
Bunker Hill
LAGER
BEST BEER BREWED

DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P.B. ALE
Be Jolly

NORFOLK
CABINET

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

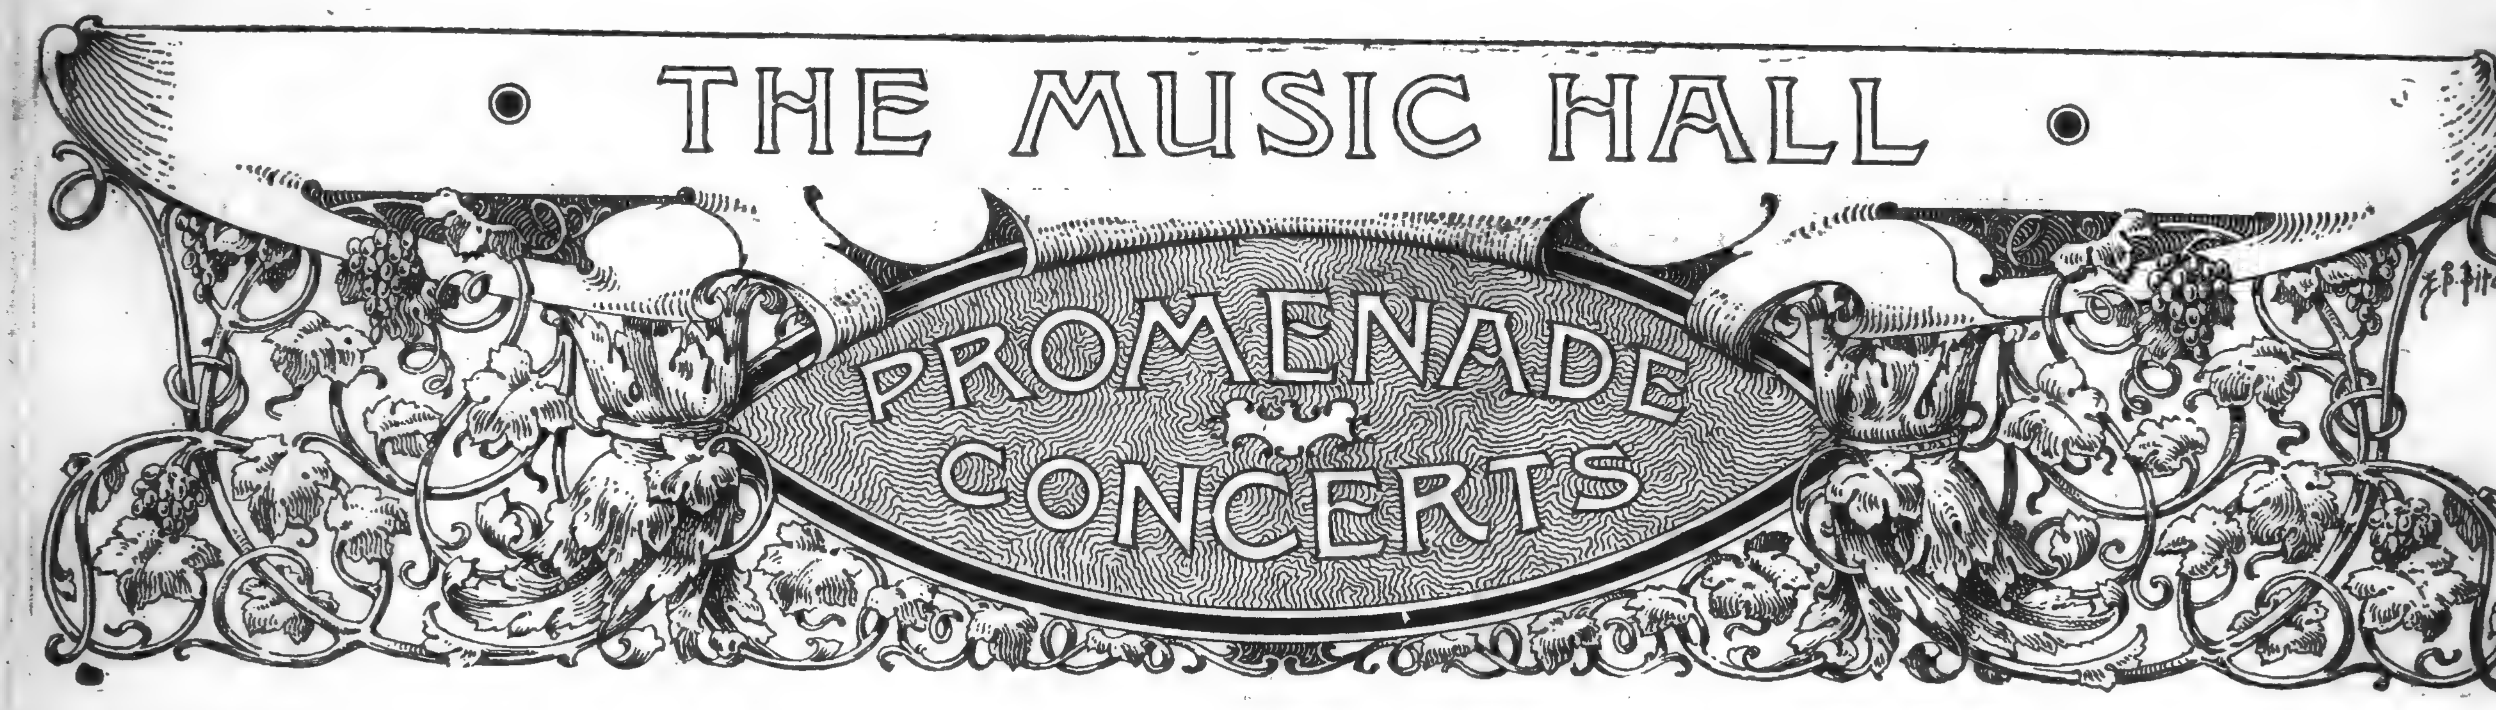
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD BUHL, Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.



THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

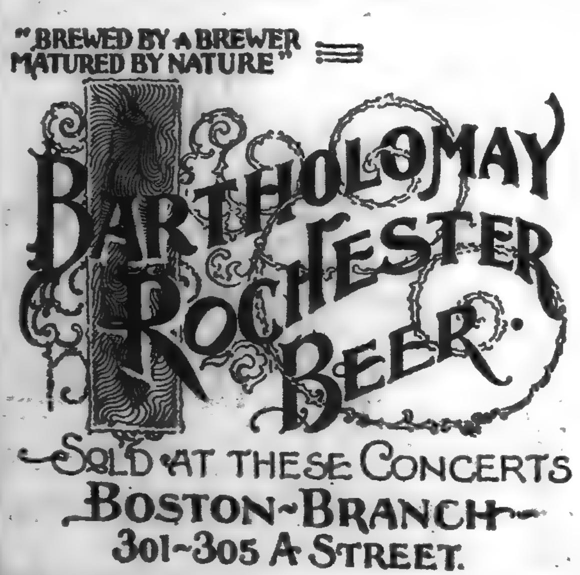
BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 4, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIII. No. 23.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.
CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 4.

Farewell appearance of Conductor MAX ZACH.

PROGRAMME.

1.	ORIENTAL MARCH	Zach
2.	OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry"	Suppé
3.	KAISER WALTZ	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Faust"	Gounod
5.	BARITONE SOLO, Cavatina from "The Barber of Seville" MR. PLACIDO FIUMARA.	Rossini
6.	WEDDING MARCH	Mendelssohn
7.	WALTZ, "Gross Wien"	Strauss
8.	OVERTURE, "1812"	Tschaikowsky
9.	ENTR'ACTE, "La Colombe" The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.	Gounod
10.	SELECTION, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
11.	POLKA, "Papa-Mama"	Bayer
12.	DEWEY-SAMPSON MARCH (First Time.)	M. Heindl

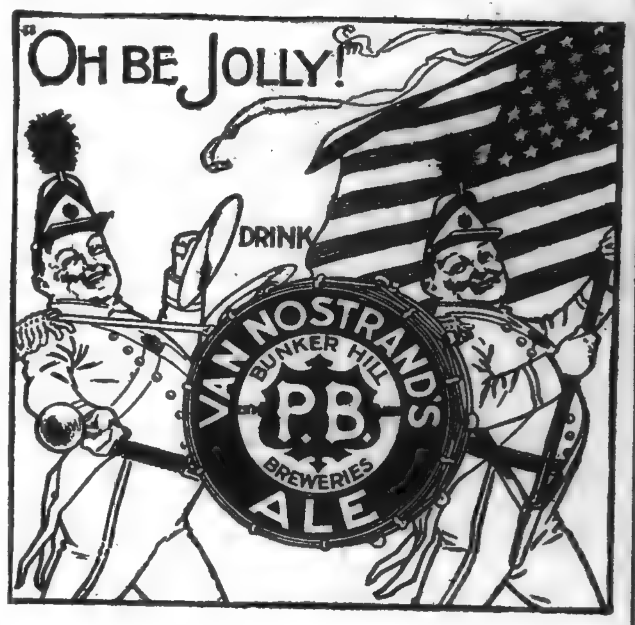
Ask for MLLE. CHAMINADE'S latest Compositions, among which you will find:

Rimembranza, Op. 88
Thème Varié, Op. 89 } For Piano Solo.
Légende, . . Op. 90

Chanson Triste
Bleus
Au Pays Bleu } Songs.
Les Présents

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.



VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK CABINET
LAGER BEER
Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, MONDAY, JUNE 6, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 24.

THE MUSIC HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 6.

First appearance of Conductor GUSTAV STRUBE.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCHE HONGROISE from "The Damnation of Faust"	Berlioz
2.	OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
3.	WALTZ, "Les Patineurs"	Waldteufel
4.	SELECTION, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
5.	OVERTURE, "La Dame Blanche"	Boieldieu
6.	a. MELODY	Rubinstein
	b. SERENADE	Moszkowski
	The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7.	POLONAISE	Chopin
8.	PRELUDE to "The Cricket on the Hearth"	Goldmark
9.	OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppé
10.	GAVOTTE, "Stéphanie"	Czibulka
11.	POLKA, "Sangerlust"	Strauss
12.	MARCH, "Home, Sweet Home"	Strube

SPECIAL. WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8, PATRIOTIC NIGHT.

SPECIAL. MONDAY, JUNE 13, WAGNER NIGHT.

THE LATEST WORKS OF

CHARLES VILLIERS STANFORD.

A Cycle of Songs from "The Princess" of Lord Tennyson. Set to music for Quartette of Solo Voices, with piano accompaniment. Op. 68.

Te Deum, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Op. 66. To be performed at the coming Leeds Festival, England.

Requiem, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra, Op. 63. Composed for Birmingham Festival, 1897.

Phaudrig Crohoore, an Irish Ballad, for Chorus and Orchestra. Composed for Norwich Festival. Op. 62.

Six Elizabethan Pastorals (3d set) for Chorus (unaccompanied). Op. 67.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING · CLEANSING · LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.
CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
Bunker Hill
LAGER

BEST BEER BREWED

DRINK VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P B
ALE

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER
Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, TUESDAY, JUNE 7, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 25.

THE... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 7.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "El Capitan"	Sousa
2.	OVERTURE, "Pique Dame"	Suppé
3.	WALTZ, "Morgenblätter"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
5.	OVERTURE, "Mignon"	A. Thomas
6.	MENUET	Bulzoni
7.	BAL COSTUMÉ	Rubinstein
8.	FINALE, "Lohengrin"	Wagner
9.	OVERTURE, "Orpheus aux Enfers"	Offenbach
10.	INTERMEZZO, "Naila"	Delibes
11.	PARAPHRASE on "Loreley"	Nesvadba
12.	ORIENTAL MARCH	Zach

SPECIAL. WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8, PATRIOTIC NIGHT.

SPECIAL. MONDAY, JUNE 13, WAGNER NIGHT.

The Latest ENGLISH SONGS for All Voices.

"When the World is Fair."	Cowen
"Love's Flight."	Shelley
"Blacksmith's Hammer."	A. Goring Thomas
"When you Return."	M. V. White
"Scent of the Mignonette."	Hope Temple
"Idle Words."	Stephen Adams

Etc., etc., etc.

Just published, Miss LIZA LEHMANN'S Musical Idyll,
"GOOD-NIGHT, BABETTE,"
For Soprano and Baritone, with accompaniment for Piano, Violin, and 'Cello, or Piano only.
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.
CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
... Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
BUNKER HILL
P.B.
BREWERIES
ALE

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

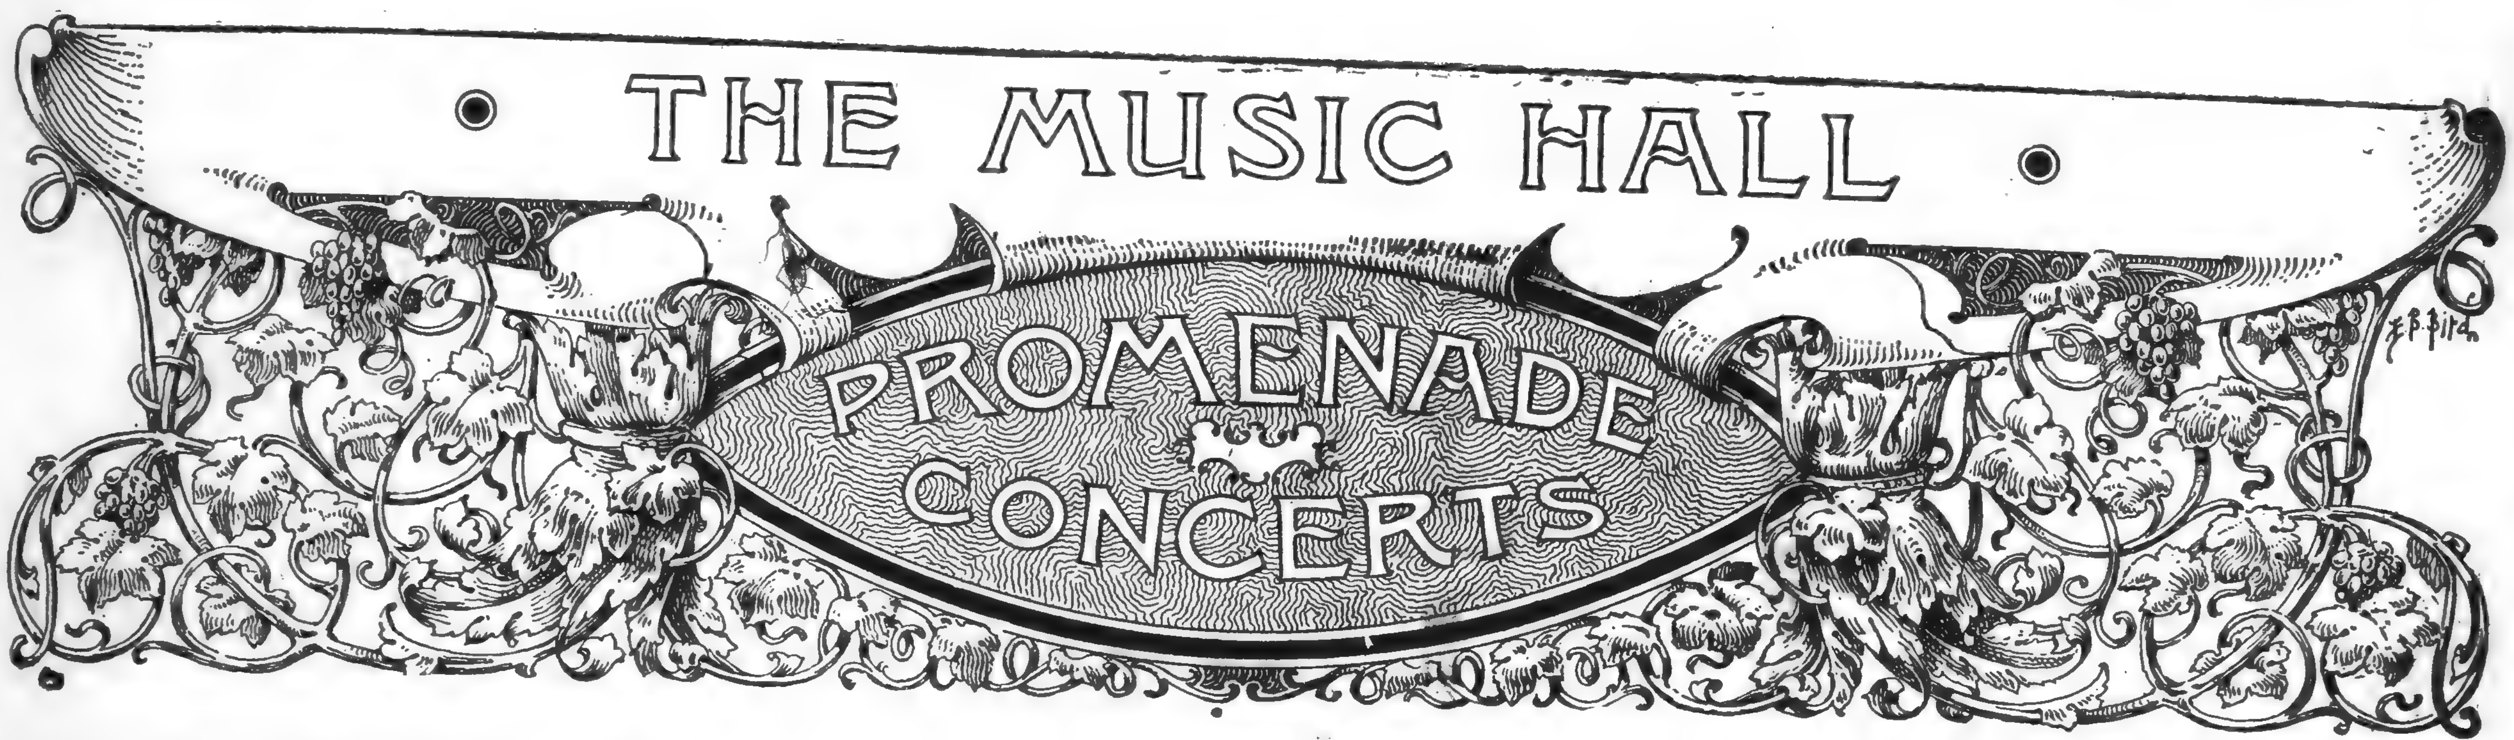
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.



PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 26.

THE....
MUSIC..
HALL...

Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8.

PATRIOTIC NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	SAMPSON-DEWEY MARCH	Heindl
2.	AT A GEORGIA CAMP-MEETING	Mills
3.	MANILA PATROL	Meecham
4.	POMONE WALTZ	Waldteufel
5.	SUITE, "Peer Gynt"	Grieg
6.	OVERTURE ON AMERICAN AIRS	Moses
7.	NARCISSUS	Nevin
	SERENADE for String Orchestra	Strube
8.	COLLEGE OVERTURE	Moses
9.	HUSARENRITT	Spindler
10.	LIBERTY BELL MARCH	Sousa
11.	ESTUDIANTINA WALTZ	Waldteufel
12.	YOUR FAVORITE, "Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

SPECIAL. MONDAY, JUNE 13, WAGNER NIGHT.

AS PLAYED AT THESE CONCERTS.

Marche Americaine. Two-step.
By the famous composer, LOUIS GANNE.

Summer Dreams, Entr'acte.
By Squire.

Played with great success at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, London, and by all leading Orchestras.

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.

LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
... Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
Bunker Hill
LAGER

BEST BEER BREWED

Oh be Jolly
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P.B.
ALE

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

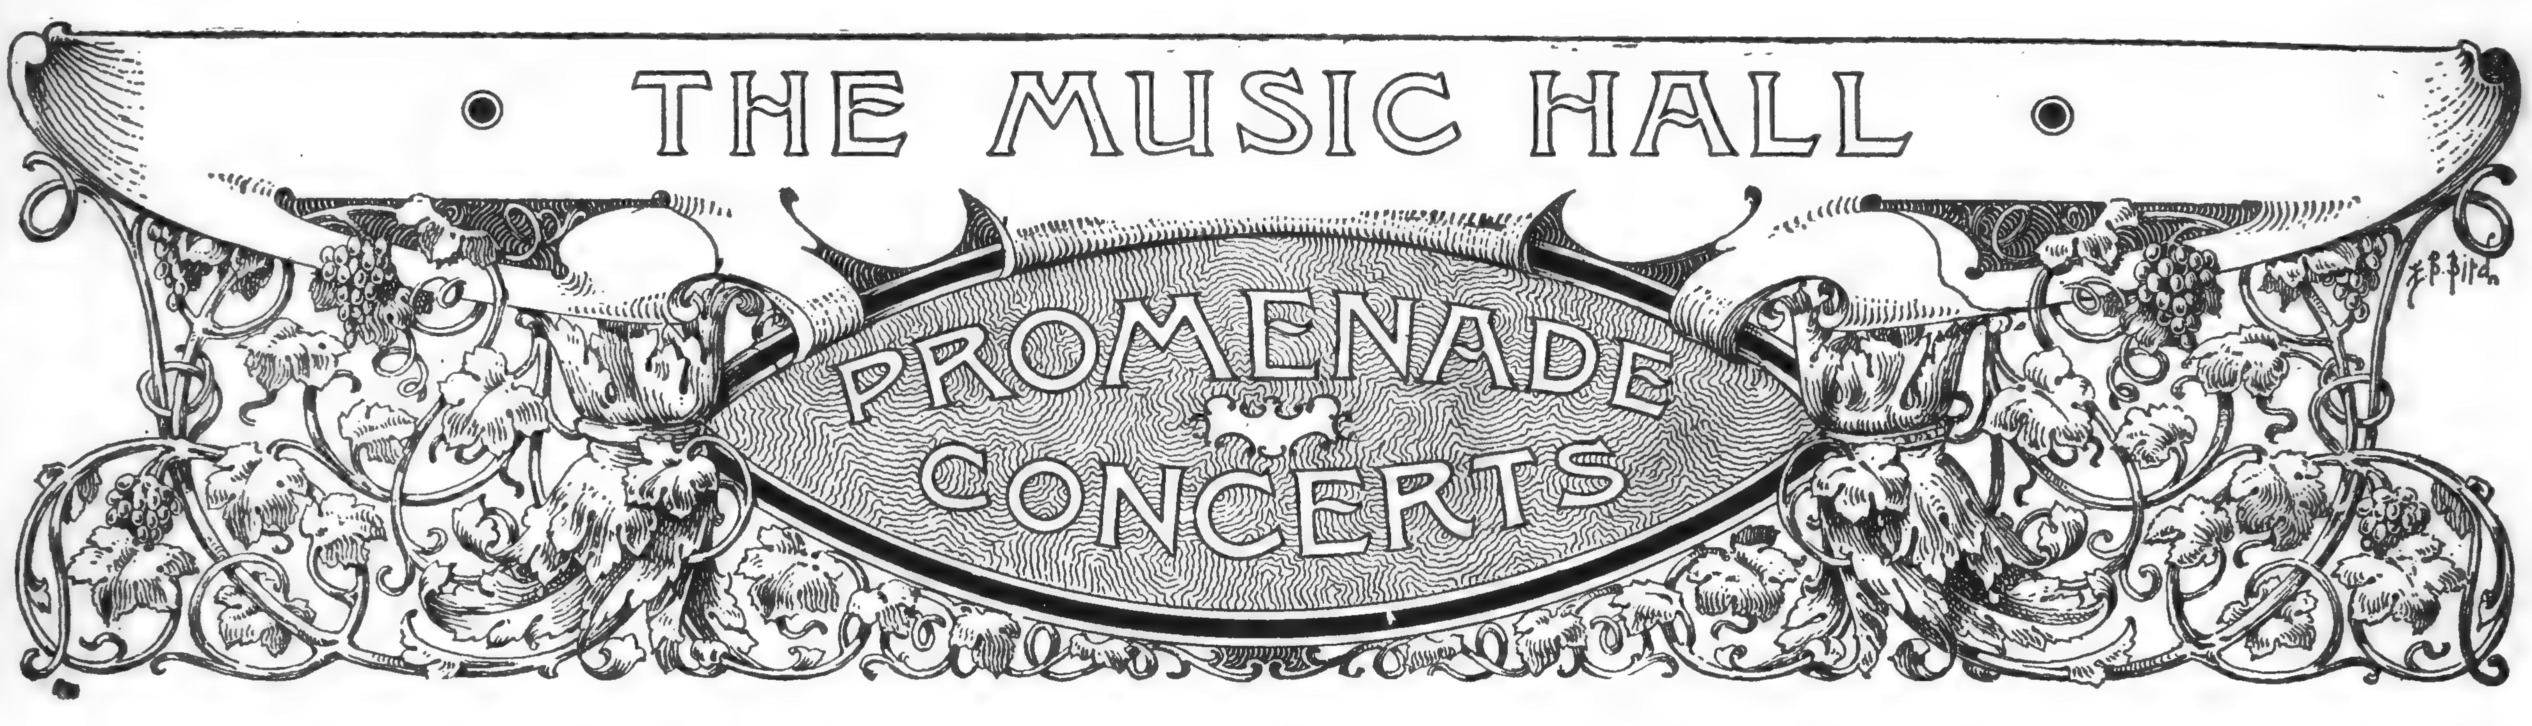
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES



PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, THURSDAY, JUNE 9, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 27.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 9.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg"	Kral
2.	OVERTURE, "Felsenmühle"	Reissiger
3.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
4.	SELECTION, "Trovatore"	Verdi
5.	OVERTURE, "Si j'étais Roi"	Adam
6.	HYMN TO ST. CECILIA Solo Violin, Mr. ISIDOR SCHNITZLER. The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.	Gounod
7.	PIZZICATO from Ballet Music, "Sylvia"	Delibes
8.	NOCTURNE AND WEDDING MARCH from "Midsummer-night's Dream Music"	Mendelssohn
9.	OVERTURE, "Stradella"	Flotow
10.	WALTZ, "Träume auf dem Ocean"	Gungl
11.	THE DARKIES' DREAM	Lansing
12.	MARCH, "Wien bleibt Wien"	Schrammel

SPECIAL. MONDAY, JUNE 13, WAGNER NIGHT.

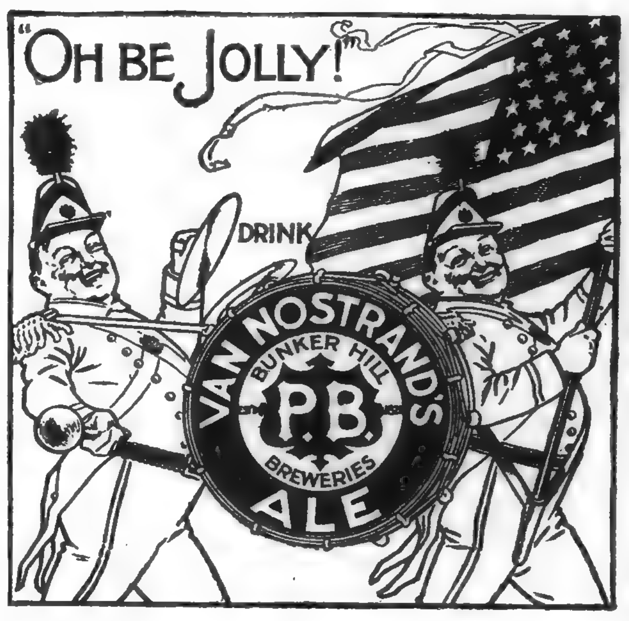
Ask for MLLE. CHAMINADE'S latest Compositions, among which you will find:

Rimembranza, Op. 88 }
Thème Varié, Op. 89 } For Piano Solo.
Légende, . . Op. 90 }

Chanson Triste . . }
Bleus . . . . . }
Au Pays Bleu . . } Songs.
Les Présents . . . }

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.



VAN NOSTRAND'S BOSTON CLUB Lager SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, JUNE 10, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIII. No. 28.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING

Cleansed or Dyed Properly and carefully pressed.

LEWANDO'S

17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS

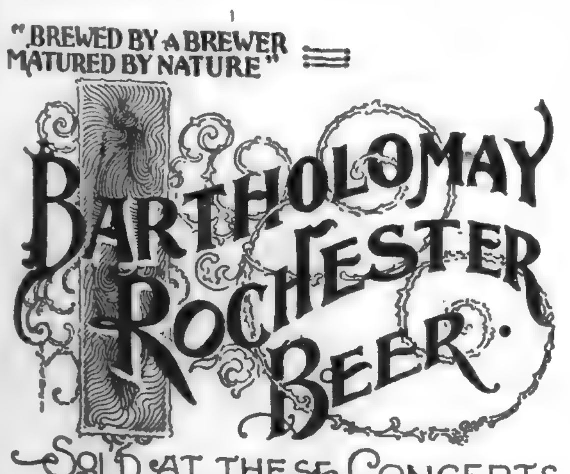
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES

IN TIN BOXES

10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.

For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"



SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 10.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Nibelungen"	Sonntag
2.	OVERTURE, "Martha"	Flotow
3.	WALTZ, "Artist's Life"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Robin Hood"	De Koven
5.	OVERTURE, "Euryanthe"	Weber
6.	ANDANTE	Tschaikowsky
7.	INTRODUCTION, Act III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
8.	HUNGARIAN RHAPSODY No 2	Liszt
9.	OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry"	Suppé
10.	THE MILL IN THE BLACK FOREST	Eilenberg
11.	WALTZ, "Wine, Woman, and Song"	Strauss
12.	AUSTRIAN MARCH	Zach

SPECIAL. MONDAY, JUNE 13, WAGNER NIGHT.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15, SOLOISTS' NIGHT.

FRIDAY, JUNE 17, BUNKER HILL NIGHT.

THE LATEST WORKS OF

CHARLES VILLIERS STANFORD.

A Cycle of Songs from "The Princess" of Lord Tennyson. Set to music for Quartette of Solo Voices, with piano accompaniment. Op. 68.

Te Deum, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Op. 66. To be performed at the coming Leeds Festival, England.

Requiem, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra, Op. 63. Composed for Birmingham Festival, 1897.

Phaudrig Crohoore, an Irish Ballad, for Chorus and Orchestra. Composed for Norwich Festival. Op. 62.

Six Elizabethan Pastorals (3d set) for Chorus (unaccompanied). Op. 67.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

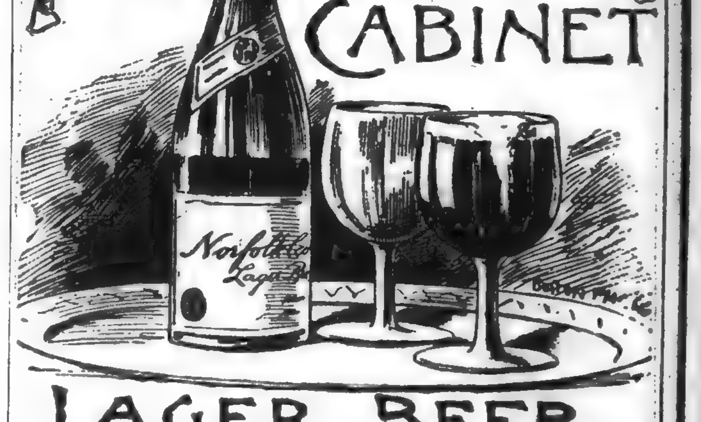
VAN NOSTRAND'S
Bunker Hill
LAGER

BEST BEER BREWED

DRINK VAN NOSTRAND'S

Oh be Jolly P B ALE

NORFOLK CABINET



LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 29.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 11.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Hobson's Choice" . . . . Strube
(First Time.)
2. OVERTURE, "William Tell" . . . . Rossini
3. WALTZ, "Bei uns z' Haus" . . . . Strauss
(First Time.)
4. SELECTION, "Aïda" . . . . Verdi

5. OVERTURE, "Sphinx" . . . . Thompson
6. ROMANCE for String Orchestra and Harp . . . . . Strube
(First Time.)
The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. SELECTION, "Carmen" . . . . Bizet
8. HUNGARIAN DANCES . . . . Brahms

9. OVERTURE, "Fra Diavolo" . . . . Auber
10. AMERICAN FANTASY . . . . Bendix
11. WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows" . . . . Vollstedt
12. MARCH, "Up the Street" . . . . Morse

SPECIAL. MONDAY, JUNE 13, WAGNER NIGHT.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15, SOLOISTS' NIGHT.

FRIDAY, JUNE 17, BUNKER HILL NIGHT.

The Latest ENGLISH SONGS for All Voices.

"When the World is Fair."	Cowen
"Love's Flight."	Shelley
"Blacksmith's Hammer."	A. Goring Thomas
"When you Return."	M. V. White
"Scent of the Mignonette."	Hope Temple
"Idle Words."	Stephen Adams

Etc., etc., etc.

Just published, Miss LIZA LEHMANN'S Musical Idyll,
"GOOD-NIGHT, BABETTE,"
For Soprano and Baritone, with accompaniment for Piano, Violin, and 'Cello, or Piano only.

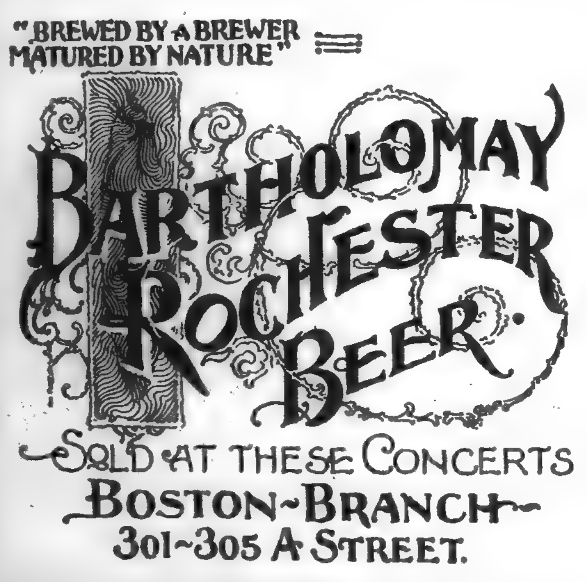
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

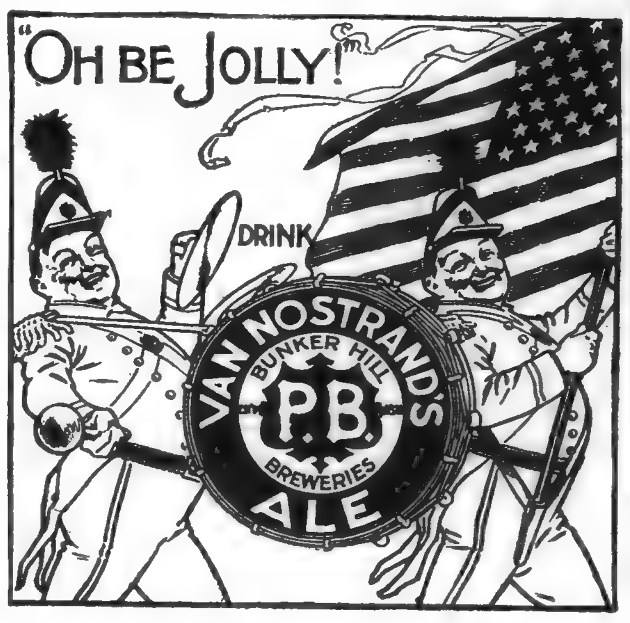
LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.
CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.



VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, MONDAY, JUNE 13, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 30.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 13.
WAGNER NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle"	Wagner
2. OVERTURE, "Rienzi"	Wagner
3. WALTZ, "Lagunen"	Strauss
4. SELECTION, "The Serenade"	Herbert
5. OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
6. THE EVENING STAR Trombone Solo, by MR. CARL HAMPE.	Wagner
7. SELECTION, "La Fille de Madame Angot"	Lecocq
8. a. PROCESSION OF THE WOMEN, from "Lohengrin" (First Time.)	Wagner
b. INTRODUCTION to Act III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
9. SELECTION, "Brigands"	Offenbach
10. RIDE OF THE VALKYRIES	Wagner
11. BABY POLKA	Bayer
12. MARCH, "Tabasco"	Chadwick

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15, SOLOISTS' NIGHT.

FRIDAY, JUNE 17, BUNKER HILL NIGHT.

MONDAY, JUNE 20, HARVARD NIGHT.

AS PLAYED AT THESE CONCERTS.

Marche Americaine. Two-step.
By the famous composer, LOUIS GANNE.

Summer Dreams, Entr'acte.
By Squire.

Played with great success at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, London, and by all leading Orchestras.

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING · CLEANSING · LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

VAN NOSTRAND'S Bunker Hill LAGER
BEST BEER BREWED

DRINK VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P B
PALE ALE

NORFOLK CABINET

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

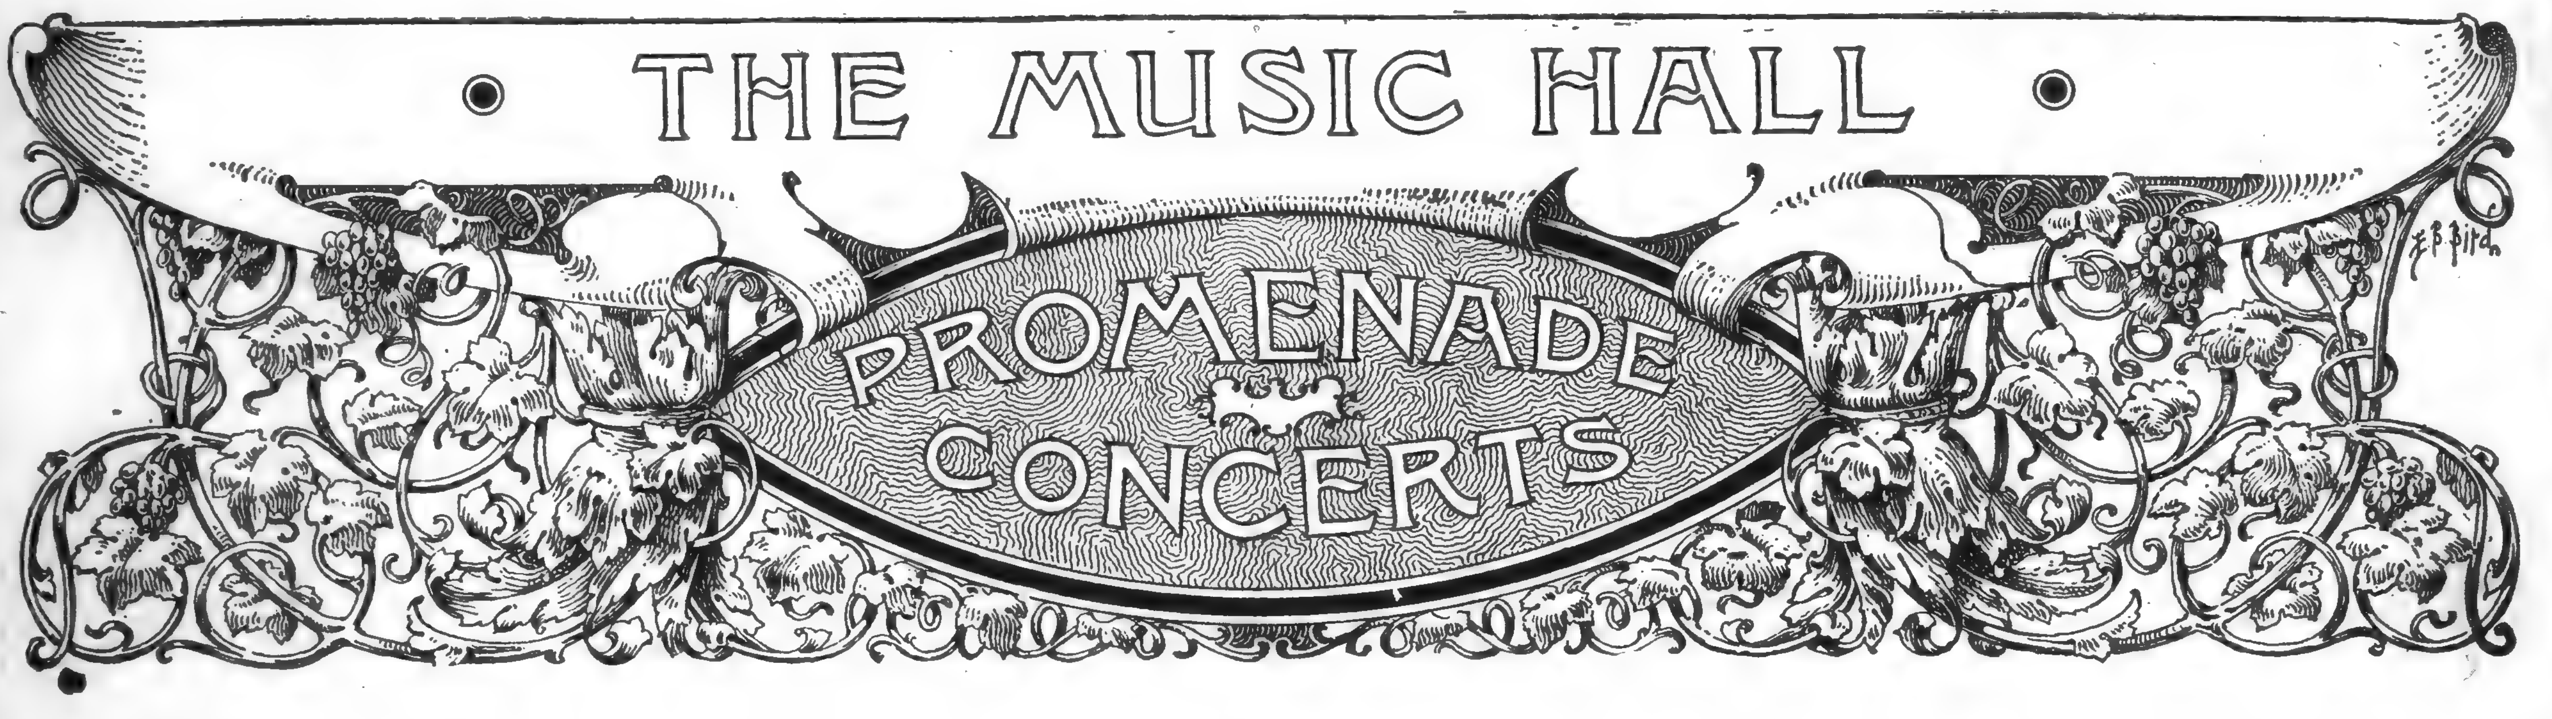
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.



THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, TUESDAY, JUNE 14, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 31.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Blankets Cleansed to look like new,
75c. per pair, until July 1 only.
CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE MUSIC HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 14.

PROGRAMME.

1.	ADMIRAL DEWEY MARCH	Cary
2.	OVERTURE, "Raymond"	A. Thomas
3.	WALTZ, "Sounds from the Vienna Woods"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Fencing Master"	De Koven
5.	OVERTURE, "Oberon"	Weber
6.	a. AIR. Solo Violin, Mr. I. SCHNITZLER b. GAVOTTE	Bach
	The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7.	AM STRANDE	Hampe
8.	POLONAISE	Liszt
9.	SELECTION, "Fatinitza"	Suppé
10.	GAVOTTE, "Circus Renz"	Fliege
11.	WALTZ, "Harlequin on a Journey"	Zach
12.	MARCH, "Liberty Bell"	Sousa

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15, SOLOISTS' NIGHT.

FRIDAY, JUNE 17, BUNKER HILL NIGHT.

MONDAY, JUNE 20, HARVARD NIGHT.

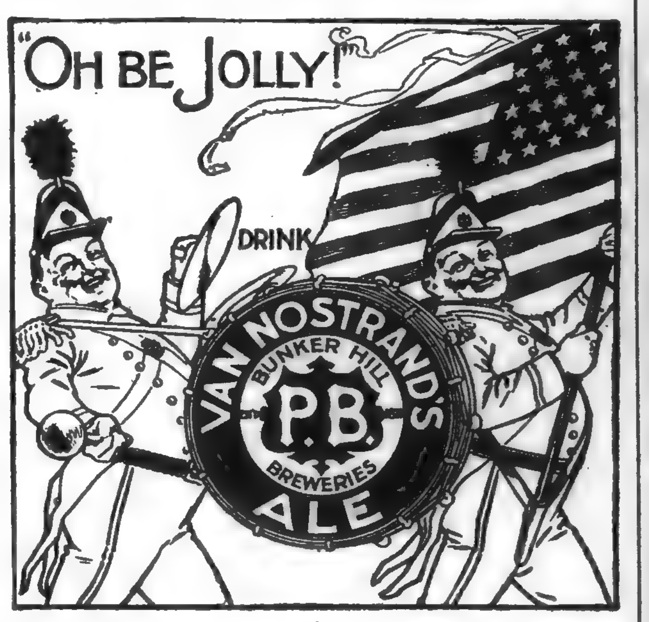
Ask for MLLE. CHAMINADE'S latest
Compositions, among which you will find:

Rimembranza, Op. 88 }
Thème Varié, Op. 89 } For Piano Solo.
Légende, . . Op. 90 }

Chanson Triste . . }
Bleus . . . . }
Au Pays Bleu . . } Songs.
Les Présents . . }

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.



VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET

LAGER BEER
Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 32.

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING · CLEANSING · LAUNDRY

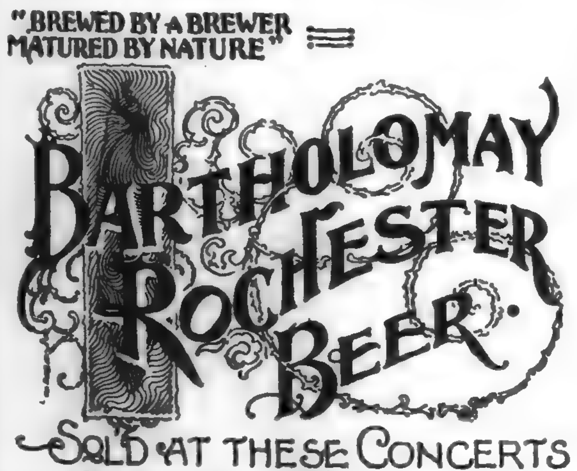
Blankets Cleansed to look like new,
75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES

10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"



SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 15.

SOLOISTS' NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Le Prophète"	Meyerbeer
2.	OVERTURE, "Masaniello"	Auber
3.	LÆNDLER, "Grossmütterchen"	Langer

Solo Violin. Mr. I. SCHNITZLER.

(First Time.)

The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.

4.	SELECTION, "La Grande Duchesse"	Offenbach
5.	OVERTURE, "Diebische Elster"	Rossini
6.	SERENADE for Flute and Horn	Titl

Messrs. JACQUET and HACKEBARTH.

7.	TWO MOVEMENTS from the "Little Suite"	Bizet
8.	POLONAISE. Oboe and Clarinet Obligato	Hamm

Messrs. SAUTET and POURTAU.

9.	OVERTURE, "Fledermaus"	Strauss
10.	EMERALD MAZOURKA. Piccolo Obligato	Bonniseau

Mr. BROOKE.

11.	WALTZ, "Blue Danube"	Strauss
12.	MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg"	Kral

FRIDAY, JUNE 17, BUNKER HILL NIGHT.

MONDAY, JUNE 20, HARVARD NIGHT.

THE LATEST WORKS OF
CHARLES VILLIERS STANFORD.

A Cycle of Songs from "The Princess" of Lord Tennyson. Set to music for Quartette of Solo Voices, with piano accompaniment. Op. 68.

Te Deum, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Op. 66. To be performed at the coming Leeds Festival, England.

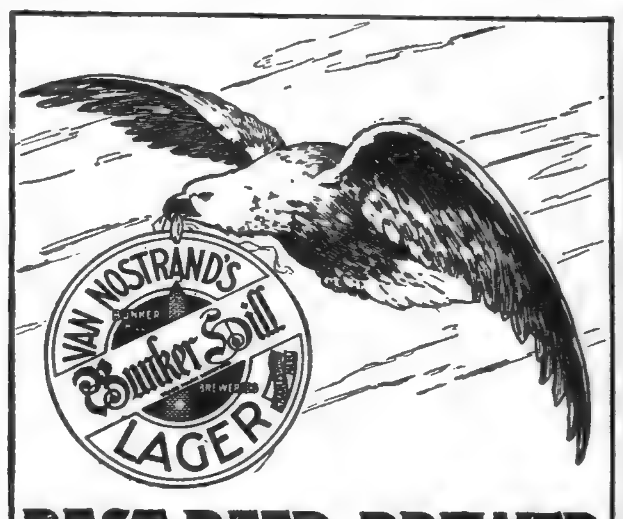
Requiem, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra, Op. 63. Composed for Birmingham Festival, 1897.

Phaudrig Crohoore, an Irish Ballad, for Chorus and Orchestra. Composed for Norwich Festival. Op. 62.

Six Elizabethan Pastorals (3d set, for Chorus (unaccompanied). Op. 67.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.



BEST BEER BREWED

DRINK VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P.B.
ALE

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTCS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 1898.

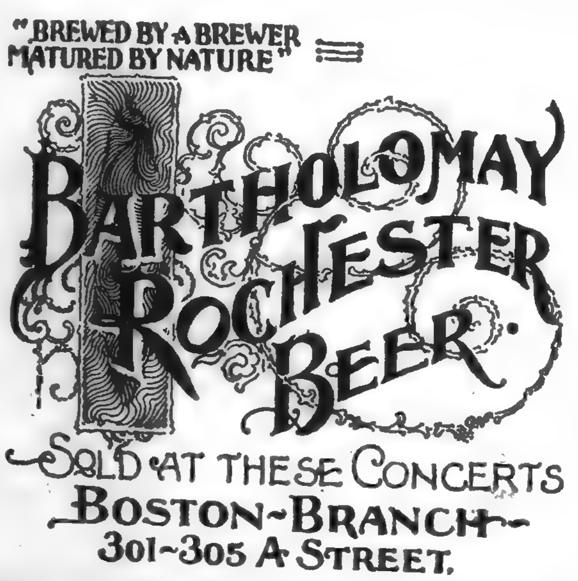
SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIII. No. 33.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

THE . . . MUSIC . . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 16.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Through the Yard" (First Time.)	Terhune and Loud
2.	OVERTURE, "Les Dragons de Villars"	Maillard
3.	WALTZ, "La Vague"	Metra
4.	SELECTION, "Mignon"	A. Thomas
5.	OVERTURE, "Ruy Blas"	Mendelssohn
6.	TWO SLAVONIC DANCES	Dvorak
7	a. TRAUMEREI	Schumann
	b. POLKA DES MANDOLINS	Desormes
	The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8.	MARCHE MILITAIRE	Saint-Saens
9.	SELECTION, "Prince pro Tem"
10.	ALABAMA PATROL (First Time.)	Stahl
11.	WALTZ, "Mon Rêve"	Waldteufel
12.	KING CARL MARCH	Eilenberg

FRIDAY, JUNE 17, BUNKER HILL NIGHT.

MONDAY, JUNE 20, HARVARD NIGHT.

The Latest ENGLISH SONGS for All Voices.

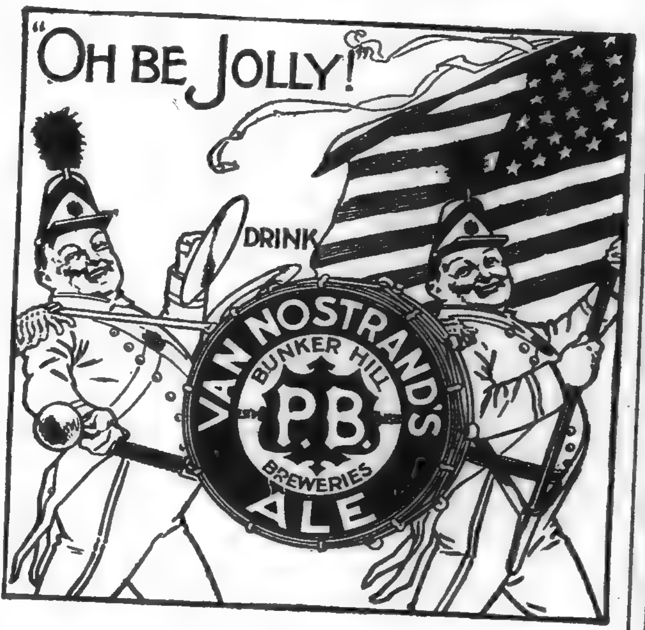
"When the World is Fair."	Cowen
"Love's Flight."	Shelley
"Blacksmith's Hammer."	A. Goring Thomas
"When you Return."	M. V. White
"Scent of the Mignonette."	Hope Temple
"Idle Words."	Stephen Adams

Etc., etc., etc.

Just published, Miss LIZA LEHMANN'S Musical Idyll,
"GOOD-NIGHT, BABETTE,"
For Soprano and Baritone, with accompaniment for Piano, Violin, and 'Cello, or Piano only.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.



VAN NOSTRAND'S BOSTON CLUB Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY - CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS
F. B. Bird

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, THURSDAY, JUNE 16, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 33.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING

Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.

LEWANDO'S

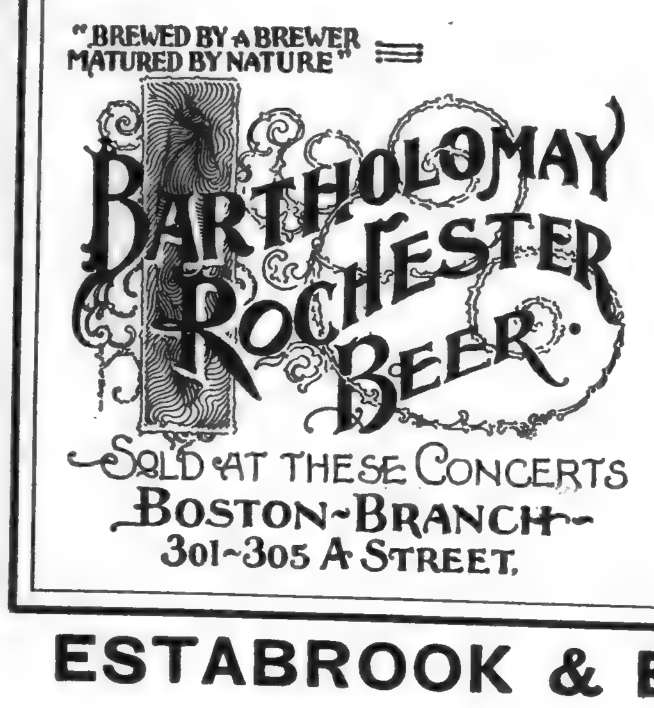
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS

ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES

10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.

For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL...

Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 16.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Through the Yard" (First Time.)	Terhune and Loud
2.	OVERTURE, "Les Dragons de Villars"	Maillard
3.	WALTZ, "La Vague"	Metra
4.	SELECTION, "Mignon"	A. Thomas
5.	OVERTURE, "Ruy Blas"	Mendelssohn
6.	TWO SLAVONIC DANCES	Dvorak
7	a. TRAUMEREI	Schumann
	b. POLKA DES MANDOLINS	Desormes
	The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8.	MARCHE MILITAIRE	Saint-Saens
9.	SELECTION, "Prince pro Tem"
10.	ALABAMA PATROL (First Time.)	Stahl
11.	WALTZ, "Mon Rêve"	Waldteufel
12.	KING CARL MARCH	Eilenberg

FRIDAY, JUNE 17, BUNKER HILL NIGHT.

MONDAY, JUNE 20, HARVARD NIGHT.

The Latest ENGLISH SONGS for All Voices.

"When the World is Fair."	Cowen
"Love's Flight."	Shelley
"Blacksmith's Hammer."	A. Goring Thomas
"When you Return."	M. V. White
"Scent of the Mignonette."	Hope Temple
"Idle Words."	Stephen Adams

Etc., etc., etc.

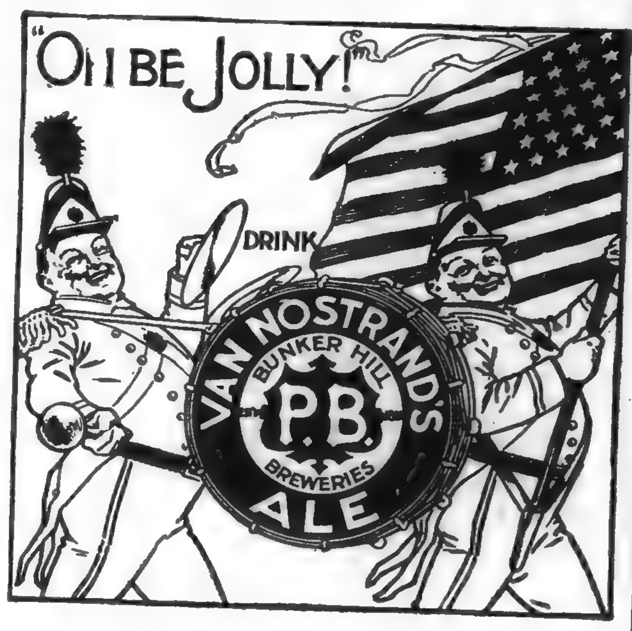
Just published, Miss LIZA LEHMANN'S Musical Idyll,

"GOOD-NIGHT, BABETTE,"

For Soprano and Baritone, with accompaniment for Piano, Violin, and 'Cello, or Piano only.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.



"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
BUNKER HILL
P.B.
BREWERIES
ALE

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH,
EDWARD RUHL,
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

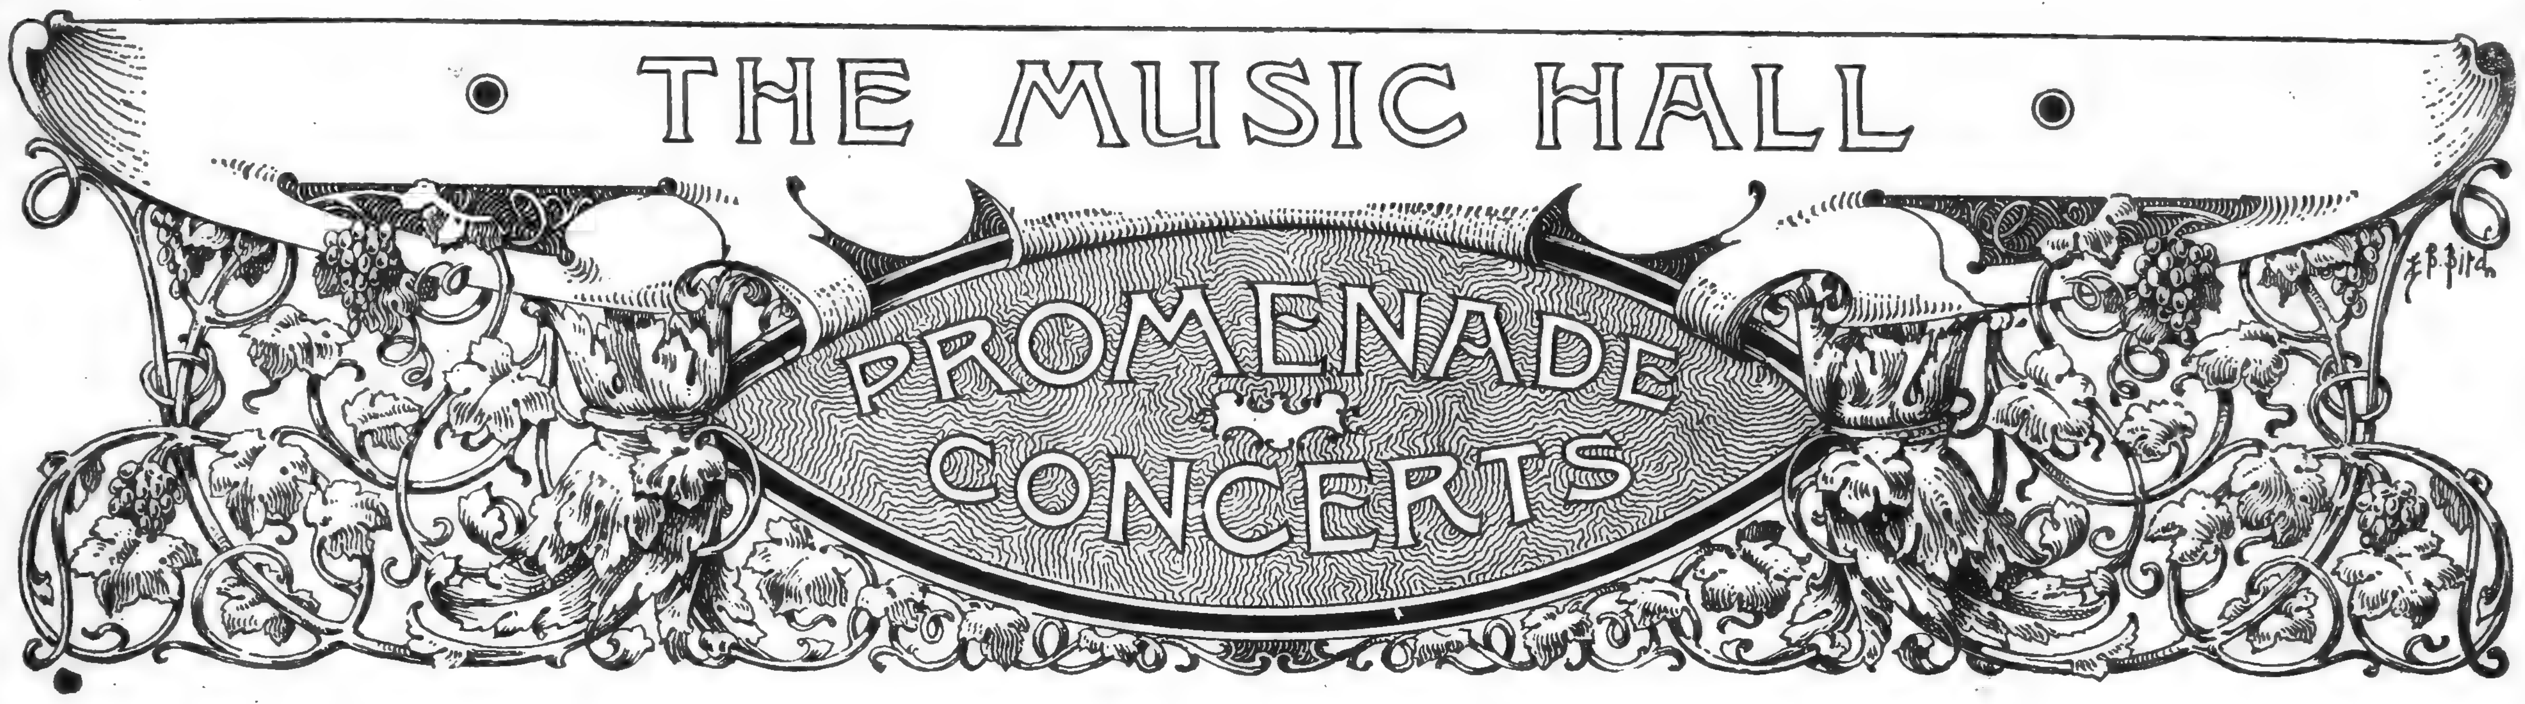
SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

- COVER ONLY - CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.



THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, JUNE 17, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 34.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 17.

BUNKER HILL NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	WASHINGTON POST MARCH	Sousa
2.	AT A GEORGIA CAMP-MEETING	Mills
3.	ROSES FROM THE SOUTH WALTZ	Strauss
4.	ROBIN HOOD SELECTION	De Koven
5.	ENTRÉE TRIOMPHALE DES BOYARDS	Halvorsen
6.	NARCISSUS	Nevin
7.	PEER GYNT SUITE. a. "Aase's Death" b. "The Imps are chasing Peer Gynt"	Grieg
8.	UP THE STREET MARCH	Morse
9.	TROVATORE SELECTION	Verdi
10	NEW VIENNA WALTZ	Strauss
11.	AMERICAN PATROL	Meecham
12.	MARCH, "The Stars and Stripes Forever"	Sousa

MONDAY, JUNE 20, HARVARD NIGHT.

AS PLAYED AT THESE CONCERTS.

Marche Americaine. Two-step.
By the famous composer, LOUIS GANNE.

Summer Dreams, Entr'acte.
By Squire.

Played with great success at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, London, and by all leading Orchestras.

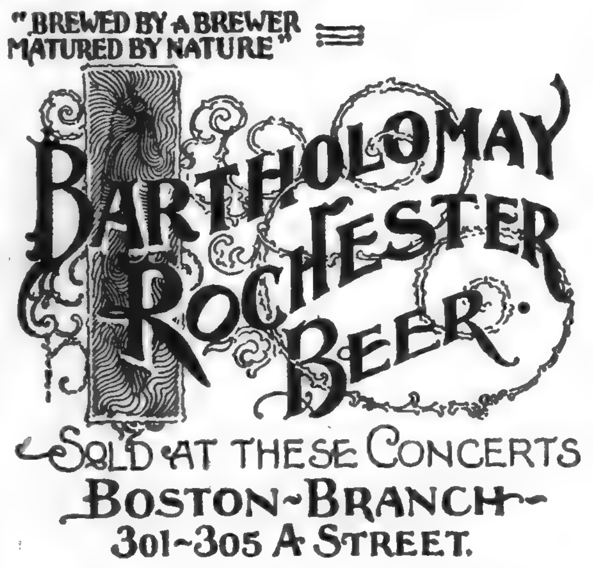
To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

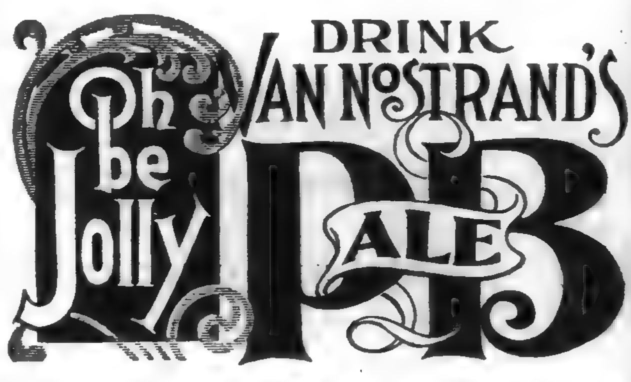
Blankets Cleansed to look like new,
75c. per pair, until July 1 only.
CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
... Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
Bunker Hill
LAGER
BEST BEER BREWED



DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P B
ALE

NORFOLK CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

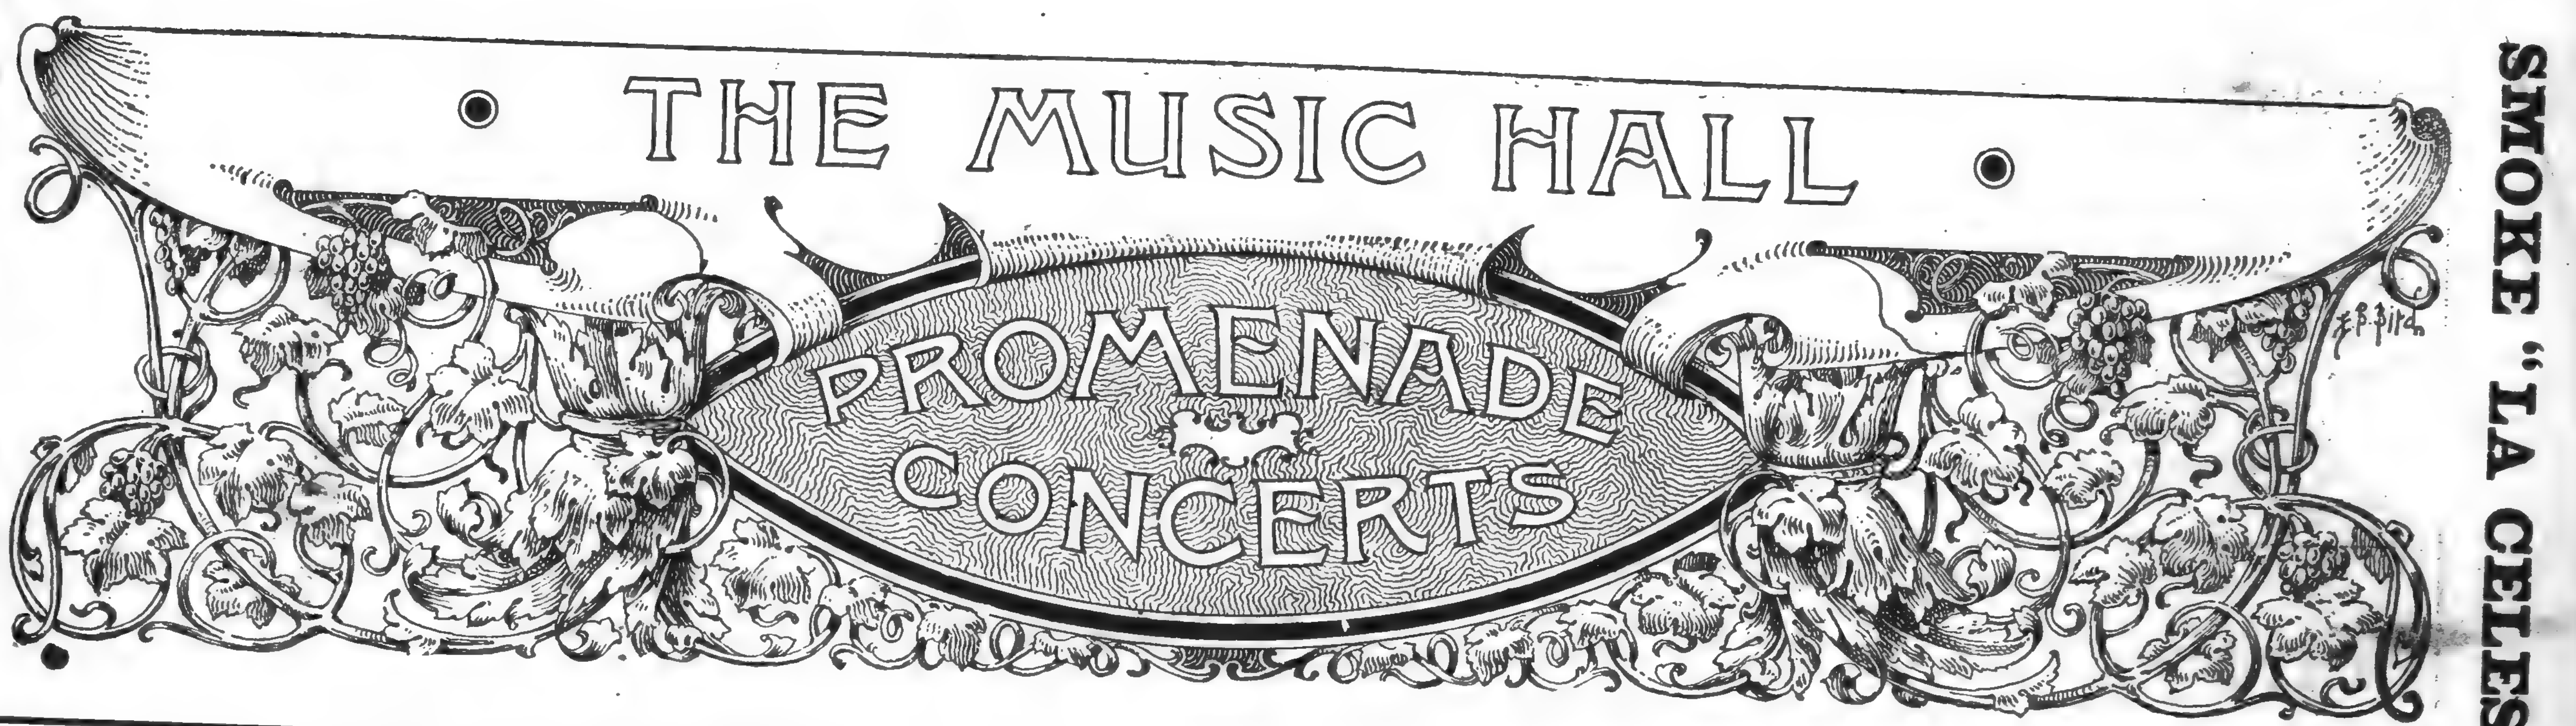
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY - CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.



THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 35.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING

Cleansed or Dyed Properly and carefully pressed.

LEWANDO'S

17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

THE MUSIC HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 18.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Queen of Sheba"	Gounod
2.	OVERTURE, "American Victory" (First Time.)	Bendix
3.	WALTZ, "Doctrinen"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Faust"	Gounod
5.	OVERTURE, "Zampa"	Hérold
6.	AUBADE PRINTANIÈRE (First Time.) The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.	Lacombe
7.	NEGRO EPISODE	Gilbert
8.	REVEILLE DU LYON	Kontski
9.	OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppé
10.	WALTZ, "Violets"	Waldteufel
11.	RIDE OF THE HUSSARS	Spindler
12.	MARCH, "On the Beach"	Abloescher

MONDAY, JUNE 20, HARVARD NIGHT.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 22, LIGHT OPERA NIGHT.

MONDAY, JUNE 27, GRADUATES' NIGHT.

TUESDAY, JUNE 28, MILITARY NIGHT.
Selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets.

Ask for MLLE. CHAMINADE'S latest Compositions, among which you will find:

Rimembranza, Op. 88 }
Thème Varié, Op. 89 } For Piano Solo.
Légende, . . Op. 90 }
Chanson Triste . . }
Bleus . . . . }
Au Pays Bleu . . } Songs.
Les Présents . . . }

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

BETWEEN THE ACTS

ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES

IN TIN BOXES

10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.

For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"

BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
BUNKER HILL
P.B.
BREWERIES
ALE

VAN NOSTRAND'S BOSTON CLUB Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY - CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

COLORED PAPER

COVER ONLY CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

COLORED PAPER

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BA[illegible]" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

- COVER ONLY - CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, TUESDAY, JUNE 21, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 37.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 21.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Merry War"	Strauss
2.	OVERTURE, "Semiramide"	Rossini
3.	WALTZ, "Artist's Life"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Mikado"	Sullivan

5.	OVERTURE, "Freischütz"	Weber
6.	PRELUDE to "Lohengrin"	Wagner

The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.

7.	FLIRTATION	Steck
8.	DANSE BACCHANALE	Saint-Saëns

9.	SELECTION, "Giroflé-Giroflá"	Lecocq
10.	WALTZ, "Vienna Beauties"	Ziehrer
11.	THE MILL IN THE FOREST	Eilenberg
12.	BOCCACCIO MARCH	Suppé

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 22, LIGHT OPERA NIGHT.

MONDAY, JUNE 27, GRADUATES' NIGHT.

TUESDAY, JUNE 28, MILITARY NIGHT.
Selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets.

The Latest ENGLISH SONGS for All Voices.

"When the World is Fair."	Cowen
"Love's Flight."	Shelley
"Blacksmith's Hammer."	A. Goring Thomas
"When you Return."	M. V. White
"Scent of the Mignonette."	Hope Temple
"Idle Words."	Stephen Adams

Etc., etc., etc.
Just published, Miss LIZA LEHMANN'S Musical Idyll,
"GOOD-NIGHT, BABETTE,"
For Soprano and Baritone, with accompaniment for Piano, Violin, and 'Cello, or Piano only.
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.
CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
... Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
BUNKER HILL
P.B.
BREWERIES
ALE

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER
Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

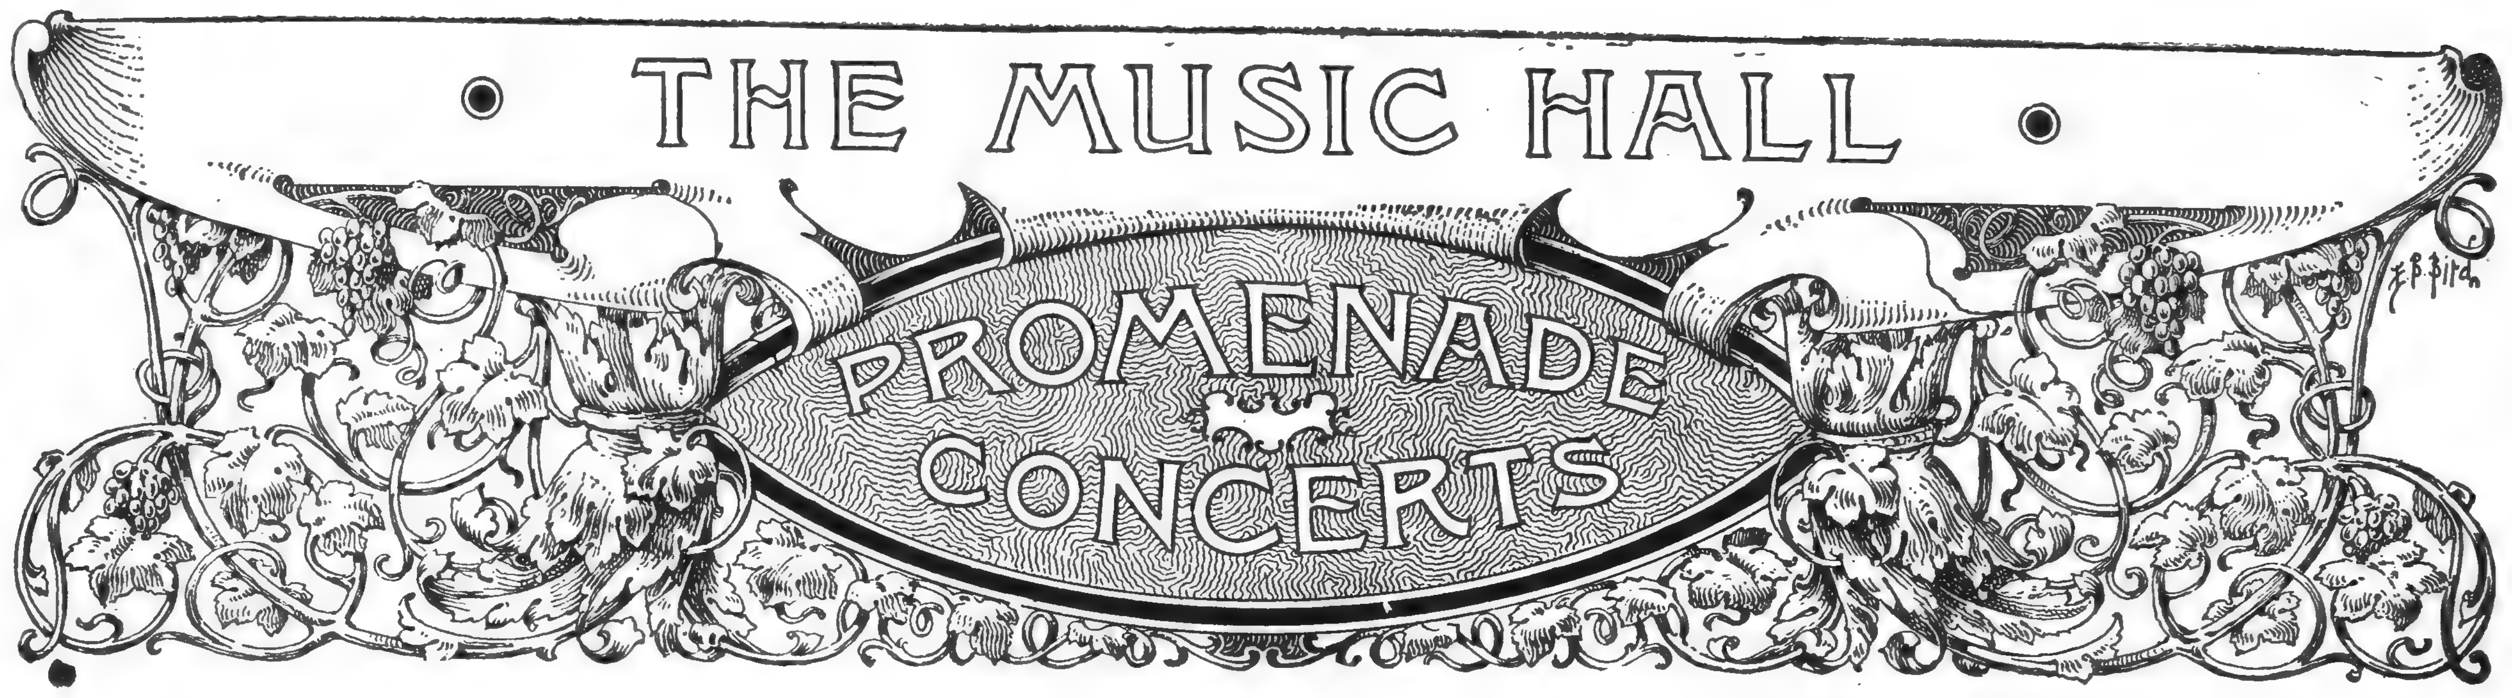
SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY - CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.



THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 22, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIII. No. 38.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 22.

LIGHT OPERA NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Am I a Wiz?"	Herbert
2.	SELECTION, "Robin Hood"	De Koven
3.	WALTZ, "Pomone"	Waldteufel
4.	SELECTION, "Geisha"	Sydney Jones
5.	POT-POURRI from "The Circus Girl"	Caryll–Monckton
6.	OVERTURE, "Sphinx"	Thompson
7.	SELECTION, "The Highwayman"	De Koven
8.	ALABAMA PATROL	Stahl
9.	SELECTION, "The Serenade"	Herbert
10.	WALTZ, "Harlequin on a Voyage"	Zach
11.	MEDLEY, "The Belle of New York"	Kerker
12.	MARCH from "The Bride Elect"	Sousa

MONDAY, JUNE 27, GRADUATES' NIGHT.

TUESDAY, JUNE 28, MILITARY NIGHT.
Selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets.

AS PLAYED AT THESE CONCERTS.

Marche Americaine. Two-step.
By the famous composer, LOUIS GANNE.

Summer Dreams, Entr'acte.
By Squire.

Played with great success at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, London, and by all leading Orchestras.

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

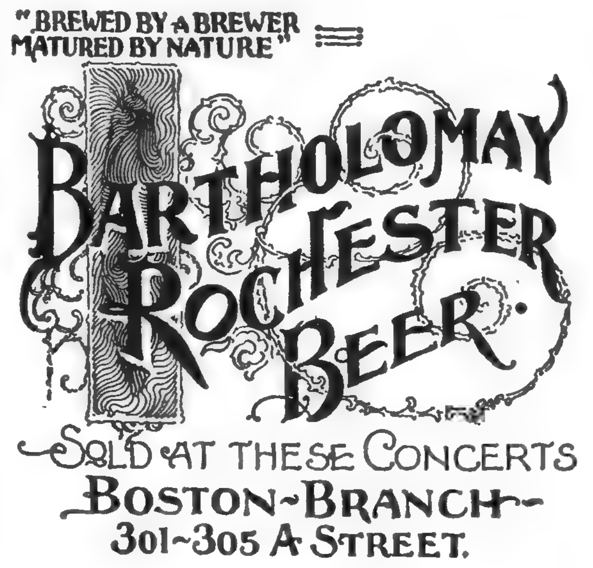
BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

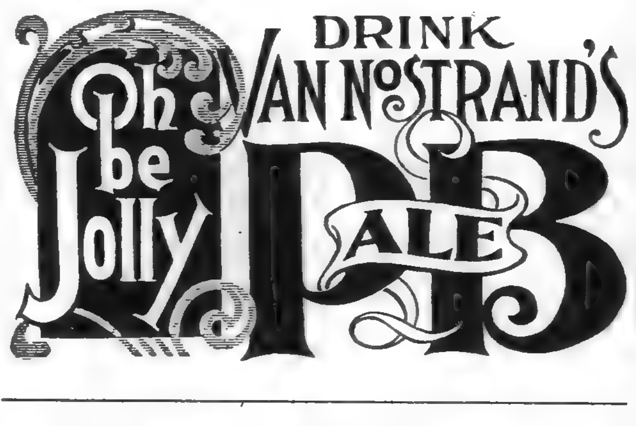
CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
... Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
Bunker Hill
LAGER
BEST BEER BREWED



DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P.B.
ALE

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY - CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 39.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new,
75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.

LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 23.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Home, Sweet Home"	Strube
2.	OVERTURE, "Barber of Seville"	Rossini
3.	WALTZ, "O Schöner Mai"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
5.	OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
6.	AM MEER	Schubert
	The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number. Trombone Solo, Mr. C. HAMPE.
7.	INVITATION TO DANCE	Weber
8.	SUITE, "L'Arlésienne"	Bizet
9.	OVERTURE, "Pique Dame"	Suppé
10.	WALTZ, "Meerleuchten"	Ziehrer
11.	SANGERLUST	Strauss
12.	MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg	Kral

MONDAY, JUNE 27, GRADUATES' NIGHT.

TUESDAY, JUNE 28, MILITARY NIGHT.
Selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets.

Ask for MLLE. CHAMINADE'S latest Compositions, among which you will find:

Rimembranza, Op. 88	For Piano Solo.
Thème Varié, Op. 89
Légende, Op. 90
Chanson Triste	Songs.
Bleus
Au Pays Bleu
Les Présents

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
BUNKER HILL
P.B.
BREWERIES
ALE

VAN NOSTRAND'S BOSTON CLUB Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager Beer

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, THURSDAY, JUNE 23, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 39.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 23.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Home, Sweet Home"	Strube
2.	OVERTURE, "Barber of Seville"	Rossini
3.	WALTZ, "O Schöner Mai"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
5.	OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
6.	AM MEER	Schubert
7.	INVITATION TO DANCE	Weber
8.	SUITE, "L'Arlésienne"	Bizet
9.	OVERTURE, "Pique Dame"	Suppé
10.	WALTZ, "Meerleuchten"	Ziehrer
11.	SANGERLUST	Strauss
12.	MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg	Kral

No. 6: The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.

Trombone Solo, Mr. C. HAMPE.

MONDAY, JUNE 27, GRADUATES' NIGHT.

TUESDAY, JUNE 28, MILITARY NIGHT.
Selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets.

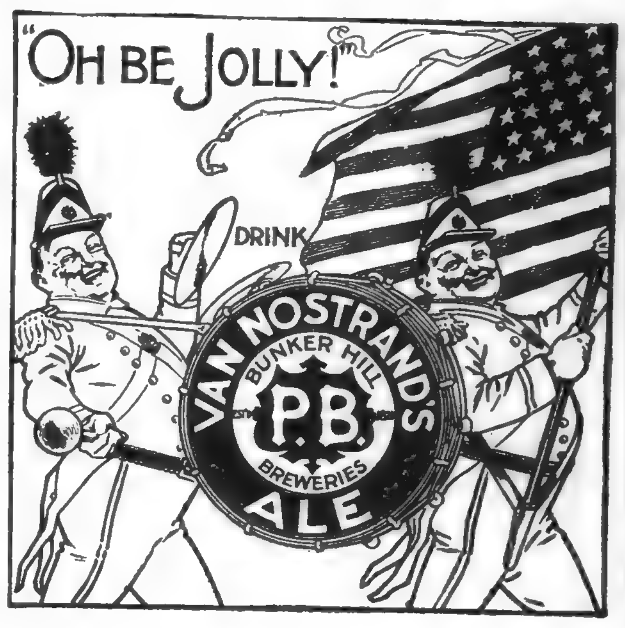
Ask for MLLE. CHAMINADE'S latest Compositions, among which you will find:

Rimembranza, Op. 88 }
Thème Varié, Op. 89 } For Piano Solo.
Légende, . . Op. 90 }

Chanson Triste . . }
Bleus . . . . . . }
Au Pays Bleu . . } Songs.
Les Présents . . }

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.



VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Cabinet Lager Beer

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

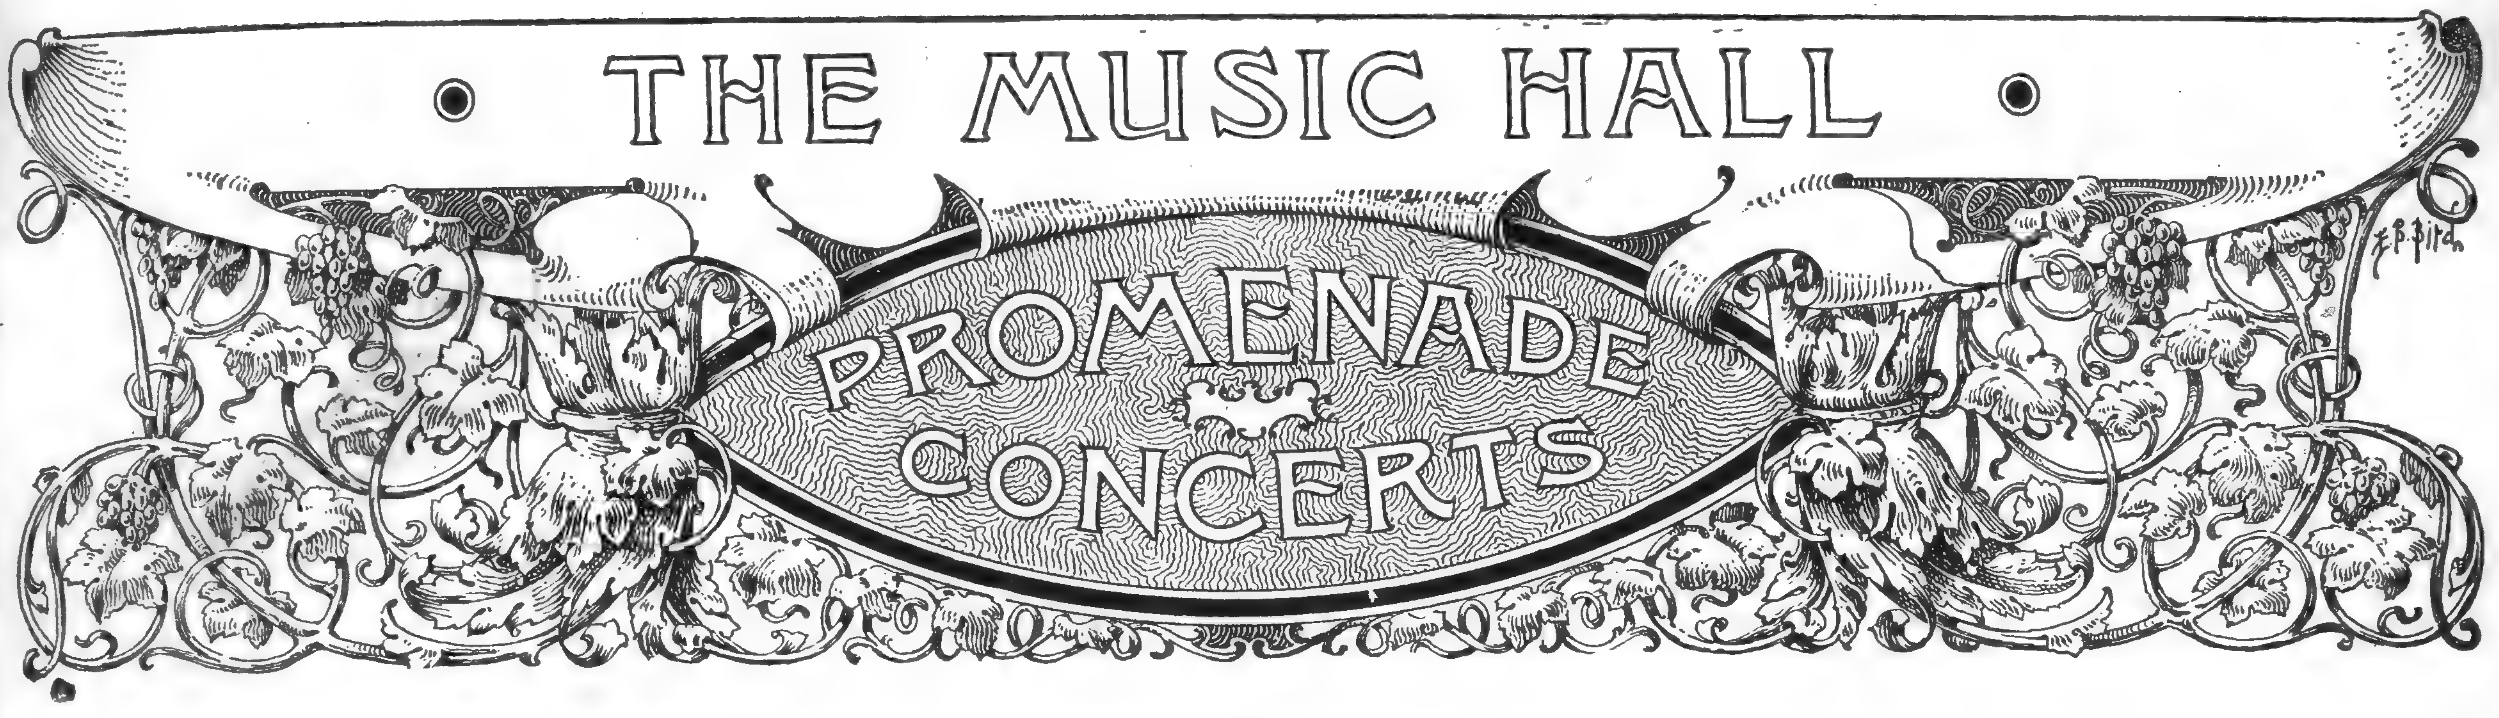
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.



PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, JUNE 24, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 40.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

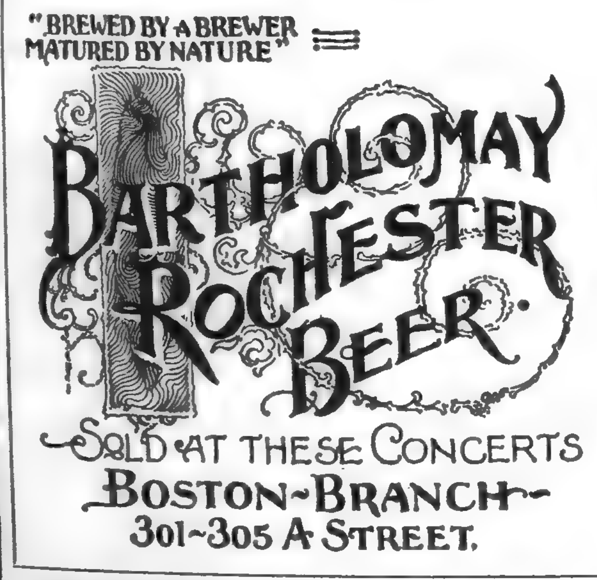
Blankets Cleansed to look like new,
75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.

LEWANDO'S

17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



THE . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 24.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Admiral Dewey"	Cary
2.	OVERTURE, "Martha"	Flotow
3.	WALTZ, "Kaiser"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
5.	OVERTURE, "Mignon"	A. Thomas
6.	CAVATINA The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.	Raff
7.	BALLET MUSIC, "Feramors"	Rubinstein
8.	AN EVENING WITH BILSE	Scherz
9.	OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry"	Suppé
10.	WALTZ, "Barcarolle"	Waldteufel
11.	POLKA, "Hunters' Yarns"	Komzak
12.	MARCH from "The Serenade"	Herbert

MONDAY, JUNE 27, GRADUATES' NIGHT.

TUESDAY, JUNE 28, MILITARY NIGHT.
Selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 29, SAMPSON-SHAFTER NIGHT.

SATURDAY, JULY 2, Closing Night and farewell appearance of Conductor Gustav Strube.

THE LATEST WORKS OF
CHARLES VILLIERS STANFORD.

A Cycle of Songs from "The Princess" of Lord Tennyson. Set to music for Quartette of Solo Voices, with piano accompaniment. Op. 68.

Te Deum, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Op. 66. To be performed at the coming Leeds Festival, England.

Requiem, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra, Op. 63. Composed for Birmingham Festival, 1897.

Phaudrig Crohoore, an Irish Ballad, for Chorus and Orchestra. Composed for Norwich Festival. Op. 62.

Six Elizabethan Pastorals (3d set) for Chorus (unaccompanied). Op. 67.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
Bunker Hill
LAGER

BEST BEER BREWED

DRINK VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P B
ALE

NORFOLK CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

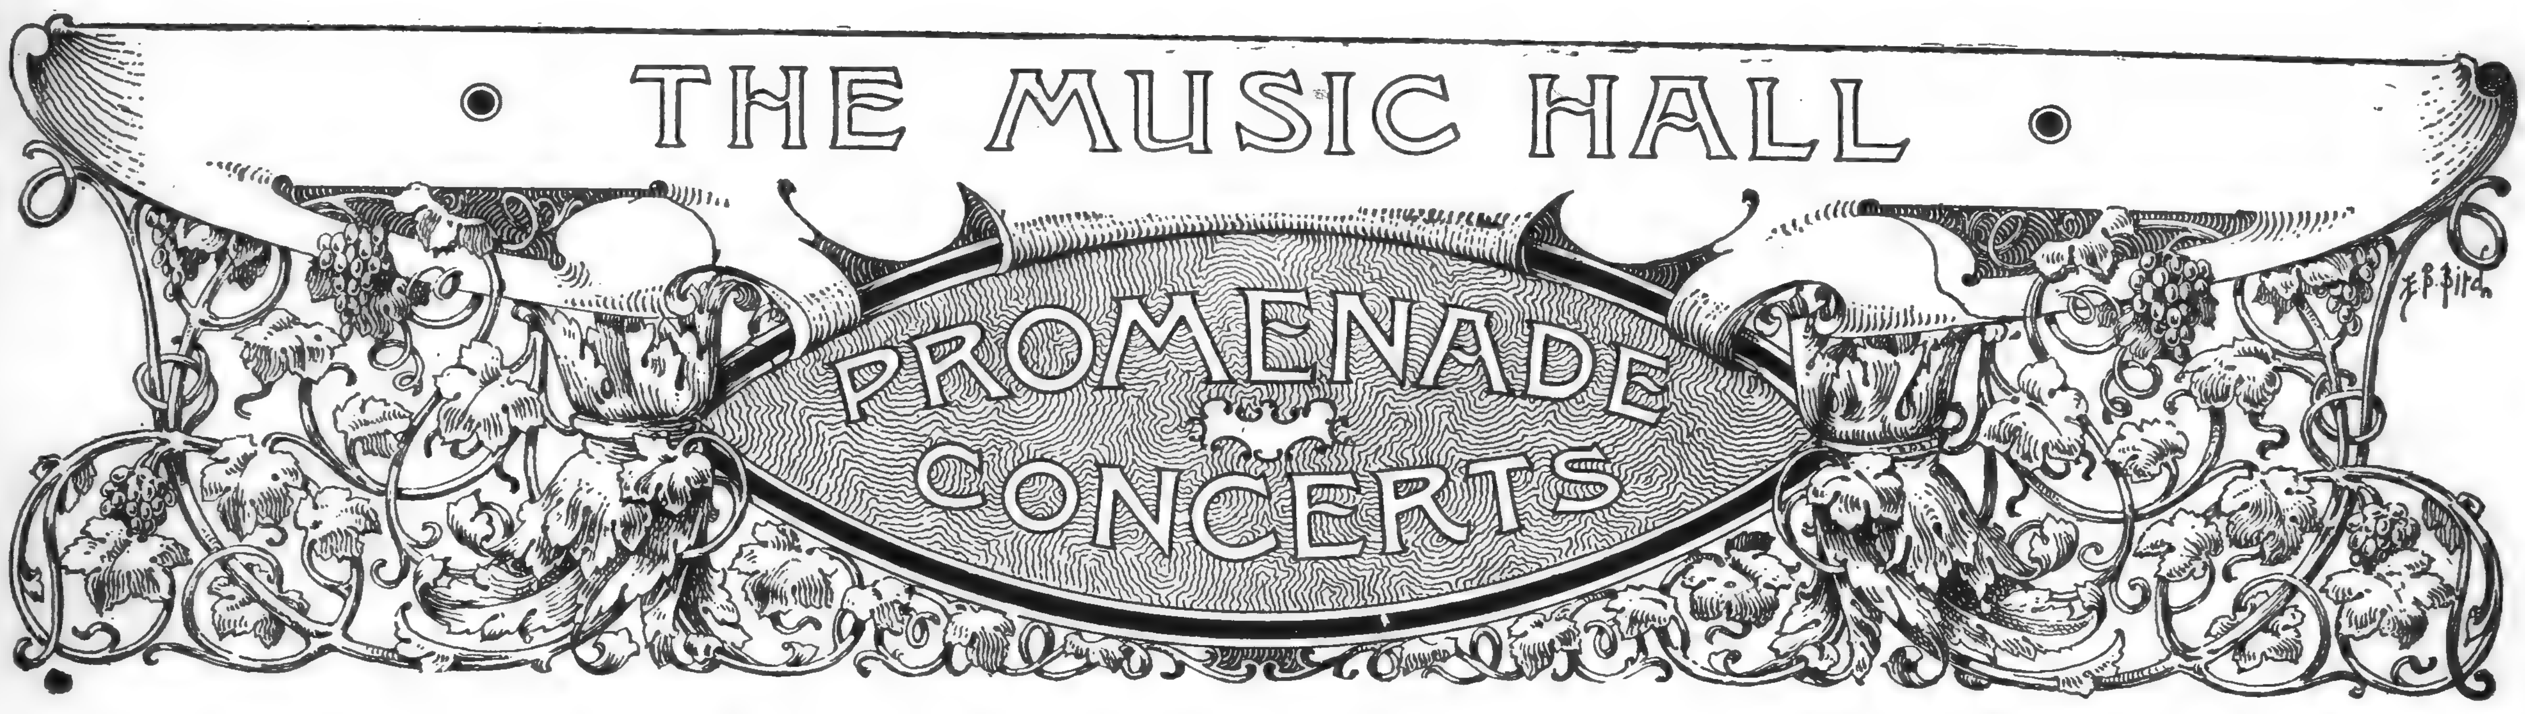
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES



PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 25, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 41.

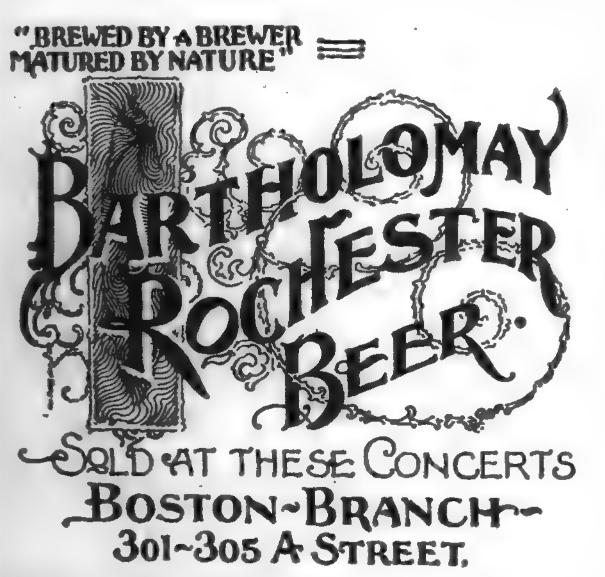
SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING · CLEANSING · LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

THE . . . .
MUSIC . .
HALL . . .

Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 25.

PROGRAMME.

1. TEUFEL'S MARCH . . . . Suppé
2. OVERTURE, "Si j'étais Roi" . . . . Adam
3. WALTZ, "Snowballs" . . . . Ziehrer
4. SELECTION, "Aïda" . . . . Verdi

5. JUBEL OVERTURE . . . . Weber
6. LA COLOMBE . . . . Gounod
The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. INTERMEZZO, "Naila" . . . . Delibes
8. ANGELUS AND FETE BOHÈME . . . . . . Massenet

9. OVERTURE, "Tabasco" . . . . Chadwick
10. WALTZ, "Donau Wellen" . . . . Ivanovici
11. MAZOURKA, "Mignonette" . . . . Zach
12. MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle" . . . . Wagner

MONDAY, JUNE 27, GRADUATES' NIGHT.

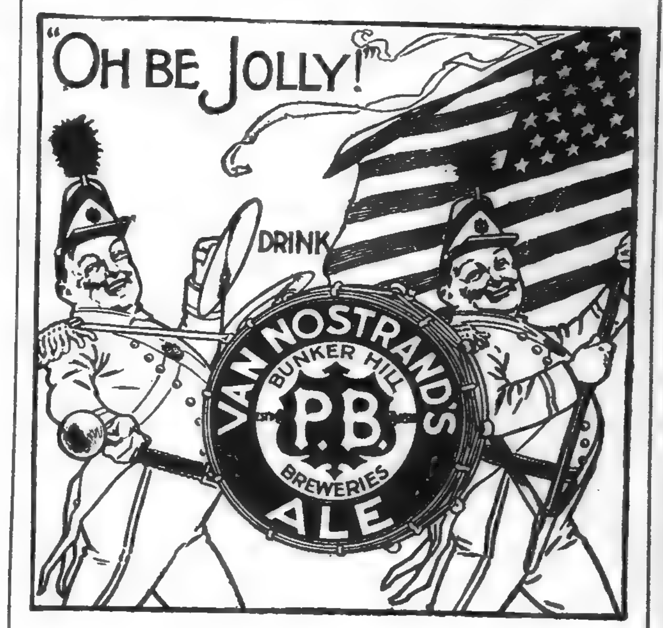
TUESDAY, JUNE 28, MILITARY NIGHT.
Selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 29, SAMPSON-SHAFTER NIGHT.

SATURDAY, JULY 2, Closing Night and farewell appearance of Conductor Gustav Strube.

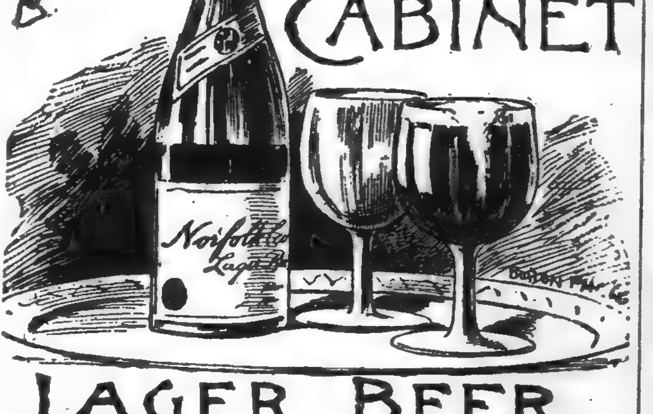
The Latest ENGLISH SONGS for All Voices.
"When the World is Fair." - - - Cowen
"Love's Flight." - - - Shelley
"Blacksmith's Hammer." - - - A. Goring Thomas
"When you Return." - - - M. V. White
"Scent of the Mignonette." - - Hope Temple
"Idle Words." - - - Stephen Adams
Etc., etc., etc.
Just published, Miss LIZA LEHMANN'S Musical Idyll,
"GOOD-NIGHT, BABETTE,"
For Soprano and Baritone, with accompaniment for Piano, Violin, and 'Cello, or Piano only.
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.



VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET



LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS
F. B. Bird

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, MONDAY, JUNE 27, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 42.

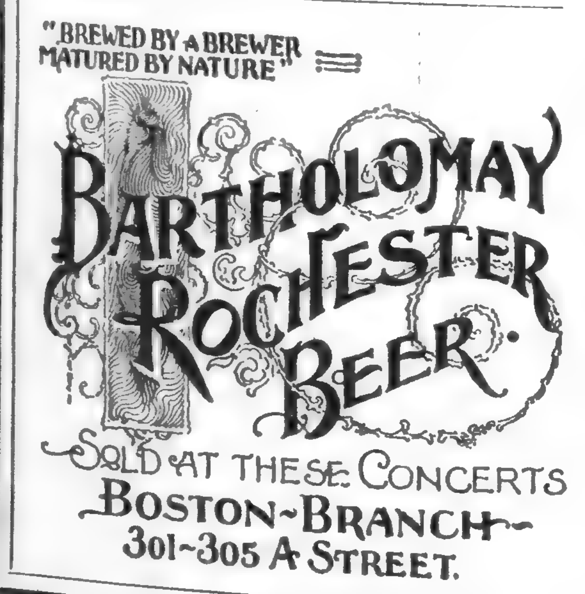
LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new,
75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.

LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 27.

GRADUATES' NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "University"	Bruguière
2.	OVERTURE, "Raymond"	A. Thomas
3.	a. WALTZ, "Theta Delta Chi"	Hoyt
	b. HASTY PUDDING CLUB CENTENNIAL MARCH, '95,	Purdon
4.	SELECTION, "Sphinx" (Hasty Pudding Production, '92)	Thompson
5.	a. MARCH, "The Cruiser Harvard"	Strube
	b. SELECTION from "The Alcayde" (Pi Eta Production, '96)	Barry
6.	AMERICAN FANTASY	Herbert
7.	a. CLASS SONG, '88	Carpenter
	b. "Should Old Acquaintance be forgot"
8.	TWO HUNGARIAN DANCES	Brahms
9	LE DÉLUGE Solo Violin, MR. I. SCHNITZLER.	Saint-Saëns
10.	WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows"	Vollstedt
11.	FAIR HARVARD.
12.	OVERLAND MARCH	Morse

TUESDAY, JUNE 28, MILITARY NIGHT.
Selections from the comic operas produced by the Cadets.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 29, SAMPSON-SHAFTER NIGHT.

THURSDAY, JUNE 30, WAGNER NIGHT.

FRIDAY, JULY 1, REQUEST NIGHT.

SATURDAY, JULY 2, Closing Night and farewell appearance of Conductor Gustav Strube.

AS PLAYED AT THESE CONCERTS.

Marche Americaine. Two-step.
By the famous composer, LOUIS GANNE.

Summer Dreams, Entr'acte.
By Squire.

Played with great success at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, London, and by all leading Orchestras.

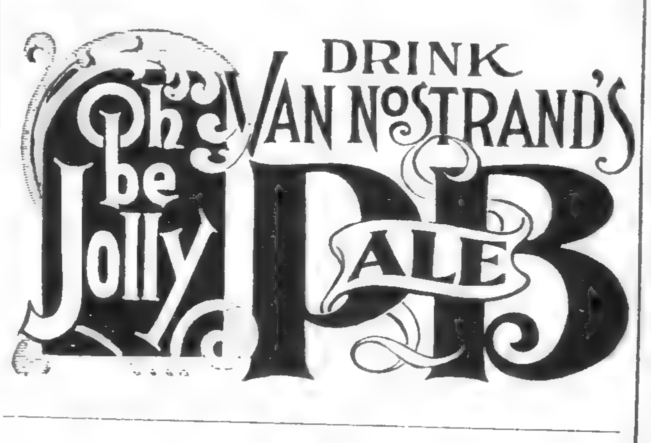
To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
Bunker Hill
LAGER

BEST BEER BREWED



NORFOLK CABINET

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, TUESDAY, JUNE 28, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIII. No. 43.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 28.

MILITARY NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Excelsior, Jr."
2.	OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry"	Suppé
3.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
4.	SELECTION, "The Serenade"	Herbert
5.	POT-POURRI, "Tabasco"	Chadwick
6.	AMERICAN FANTASY (By request.)	Herbert
7.	a. SPRING SONG	Mendelssohn
	b. WALTZ, "In April" (First Time.)	Alice H. Baker
8.	OVERTURE, "1812"	Tschaikowsky
9.	WALTZ POT-POURRI, "1492"	Pflueger
10.	AT A GEORGIA CAMP-MEETING	Mills
11.	SELECTION, "The Belle of New York"	Kerker
12.	MARCH, "Simple Simon"	Sloane

The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 29, SAMPSON-SHAFTER NIGHT.

THURSDAY, JUNE 30, WAGNER NIGHT.

FRIDAY, JULY 1, REQUEST NIGHT.

SATURDAY, JULY 2, Closing Night and farewell appearance of Conductor Gustav Strube.

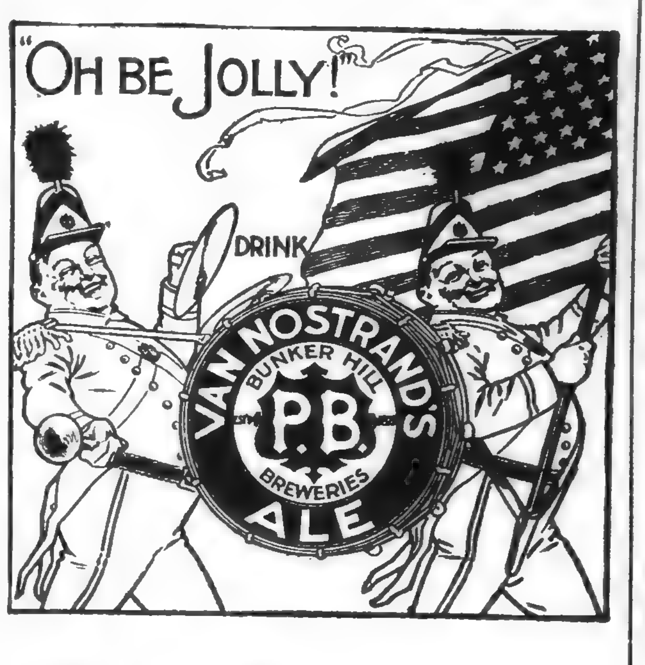
Ask for MLLE. CHAMINADE'S latest Compositions, among which you will find:

Rimembranza, Op. 88
Thème Varié, Op. 89 } For Piano Solo.
Légende, . . Op. 90

Chanson Triste
Bleus
Au Pays Bleu } Songs.
Les Présents

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.



VAN NOSTRAND'S BOSTON CLUB Lager SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE
CONCERTS
E. B. Bird.

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 29, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 44.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 29.

SAMPSON-SHAFTER NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	SERENADE MARCH	Herbert
2.	ABU HASSAN OVERTURE	Weber
3. a.	MELODY	Rubinstein
b.	POMONE WALTZ	Waldteufel
4.	SELECTION, "The Huguenots"	Meyerbeer
5.	OVERTURE, "Rienzi"	Wagner
6. a.	NARCISSUS	Nevin
b.	SERENADE	Moszkowski
7.	HOBSON'S CHOICE MARCH	Strube
8.	AN EVENING WITH BILSE	Scherz
9.	FUNERAL MARCH OF A MARIONETTE	Gounod
10.	TROVATORE SELECTION	Verdi
11.	ENTRÉE TRIOMPHALE DES BOYARDS	Halvorsen
12.	RADETZKY MARCH	Strauss

THURSDAY, JUNE 30, WAGNER NIGHT.

FRIDAY, JULY 1, REQUEST NIGHT.

SATURDAY, JULY 2, Closing Night and farewell appearance of Conductor Gustav Strube.

THE LATEST WORKS OF

CHARLES VILLIERS STANFORD.

A Cycle of Songs from "The Princess" of Lord Tennyson. Set to music for Quartette of Solo Voices, with piano accompaniment. Op. 68.

Te Deum, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra. Op. 66. To be performed at the coming Leeds Festival, England.

Requiem, for Soli, Chorus, and Orchestra, Op. 63. Composed for Birmingham Festival, 1897.

Phaudrig Crohoore, an Irish Ballad, for Chorus and Orchestra. Composed for Norwich Festival. Op. 62.

Six Elizabethan Pastorals (3d set) for Chorus (unaccompanied). Op. 67.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new,
75c. per pair, until July 1 only.
CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
... Telephones.

BETWEEN
THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
Bunker Hill
LAGER

BEST BEER BREWED

DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P.B.
Be Jolly
PALE

NORFOLK
CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER
Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH,
EDWARD RUHL,
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, THURSDAY, JUNE 30, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XIII. No. 45.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 30.

WAGNER NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	TANNHAUSER MARCH	Wagner
2.	OVERTURE, "Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
3.	WALTZ, "Bei uns z'Haus"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Fencing Master"	De Koven
5.	PRELUDE to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
6.	a. LE DERNIER SOMMEIL DE LA VIERGE	Massenet
	b. AUBADE PRINTANIÈRE	Lacombe
7.	PRIZE SONG from "Die Meistersinger" Trombone Solo, Mr. CARL HAMPE.	Wagner
8.	FINALE, Act I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
9.	CONGRESS OF MELODIES	Conradi
10.	WALTZ, "Fledermaus"	Strauss
11.	RIDE OF THE VALKYRIES	Wagner
12.	MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle"	Wagner

FRIDAY, JULY 1, REQUEST NIGHT.

SATURDAY, JULY 2, Closing Night and farewell appearance of Conductor Gustav Strube.

The Latest ENGLISH SONGS for All Voices.

"When the World is Fair."	Cowen
"Love's Flight."	Shelley
"Blacksmith's Hammer."	A. Goring Thomas
"When you Return."	M. V. White
"Scent of the Mignonette."	Hope Temple
"Idle Words."	Stephen Adams

Etc., etc., etc.

Just published, Miss LIZA LEHMANN'S Musical Idyll,
"GOOD-NIGHT, BABETTE,"
For Soprano and Baritone, with accompaniment for Piano, Violin, and 'Cello, or Piano only.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

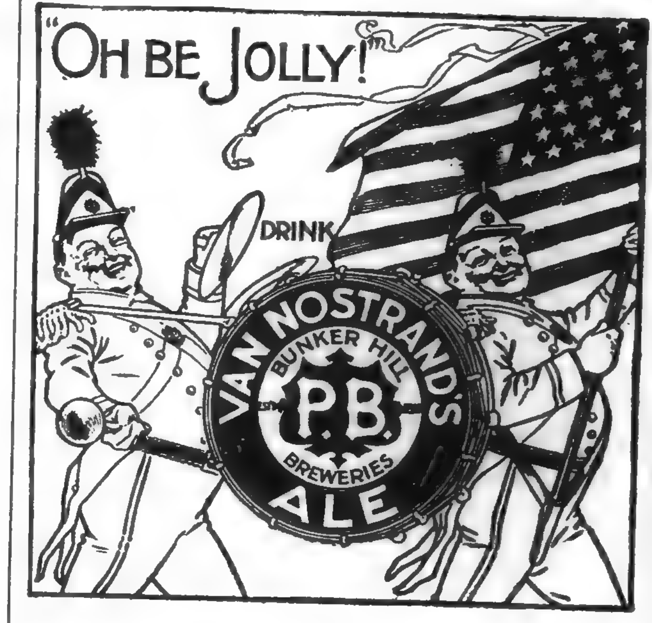
LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.



VAN NOSTRAND'S BOSTON CLUB Lager SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, JULY 1, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 46.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JULY 1.
REQUEST NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Queen of Sheba"	Gounod
2.	OVERTURE, "Fra Diavolo"	Auber
3.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
4.	SELECTION, "Fatinitza"	Suppé
5.	OVERTURE, "Stradella"	Flotow
6.	SCÈNE RELIGIEUSE Violoncello Solo, MR. BARTH.	Massenet
7.	HUNGARIAN RHAPSODY, No. 2	Liszt
8.	WEDDING MARCH	Mendelssohn
9.	OVERTURE, "Beautiful Galathée"	Suppé
10.	WALTZ, "Adlyn"	Hall
11.	POLKA, "Rosebuds"	Eilenberg
12.	MARCH, "King Cotton"	Sousa

SATURDAY, JULY 2, Closing Night and farewell appearance of Conductor Gustav Strube.

MUSIC HALL. BASE BALL RETURNS BY ELECTRICITY. Monday, July 4. Two Games, Morning and Afternoon. Smoking Allowed. Cooling Refreshments. Admission, 10 cents. Reserved Seats, 15 cents and 25 cents.

AS PLAYED AT THESE CONCERTS.

Marche Americaine. Two-step.
By the famous composer, LOUIS GANNE.

Summer Dreams, Entr'acte.
By Squire.

Played with great success at the Metropolitan Opera House, New York, Queen's Hall Promenade Concerts, London, and by all leading Orchestras.

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

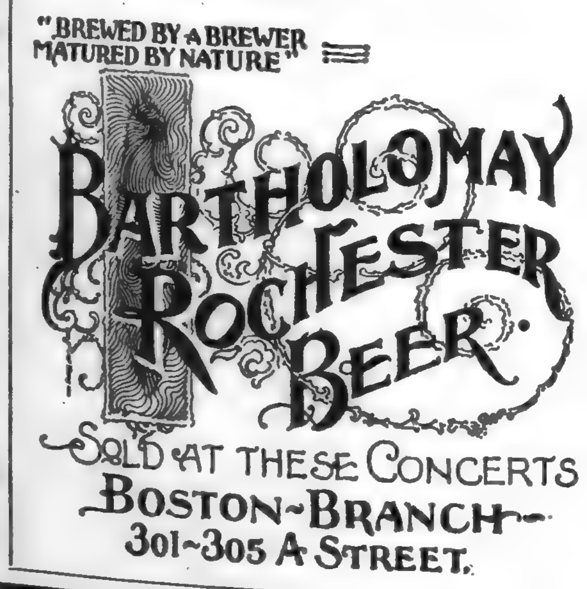
BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

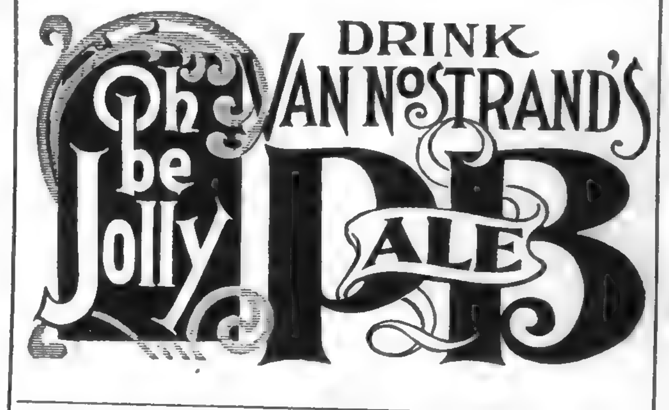
CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
... Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.



"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
Bunker Hill
LAGER
BEST BEER BREWED



DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P.B.
PALE ALE

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[82]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SMOKE THE POPULAR "BARRISTER" CIGARS AT THE POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JULY 2, 1898.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XIII. No. 47.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Blankets Cleansed to look like new, 75c. per pair, until July 1 only.

CLOTHING
Cleansed or Dyed Properly
and carefully pressed.
LEWANDO'S
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston St.
2206 Washington St., Roxbury.
1274 Massachusetts Ave., Cambridge.
Free delivery in Boston and suburbs.
. . . Telephones.

BETWEEN THE ACTS
ALL-TOBACCO CIGARETTES
IN TIN BOXES
10 Little Cigars 10 Cts.
For sale at the Concerts.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

THIRTEENTH SEASON.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. GUSTAV STRUBE, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JULY 2.

CLOSING NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCHE HONGROISE, from "Damnation of Faust" . . Berlioz
2. OVERTURE, "William Tell" . . . . Rossini
3. WALTZ, "Les Patineurs" . . . . Waldteufel
4. SELECTION, "Faust" . . . . Gounod

5. OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser" . . . . Wagner
6. a. ON THE LAGOON . . . . Slocum
   b. WALTZ, "In April" . . . . Alice H. Baker
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. MELODY . . . . Rubinstein
8. TWO SLAVONIC DANCES . . . . . . Dvorak

9. OVERTURE, "Orpheus aux Enfers" . . . . . . Offenbach
10. WALTZ, "Wine, Women, and Song" . . . . . . Strauss
11. HUSARENRITT . . . . Spindler
12. MARCH, "The Cruiser Harvard" . . . . Strube

MUSIC HALL. BASE BALL RETURNS BY ELECTRICITY. Monday, July 4. Two Games, Morning and Afternoon. Smoking Allowed. Cooling Refreshments. Admission, 10 cents. Reserved Seats, 15 cents and 25 cents.

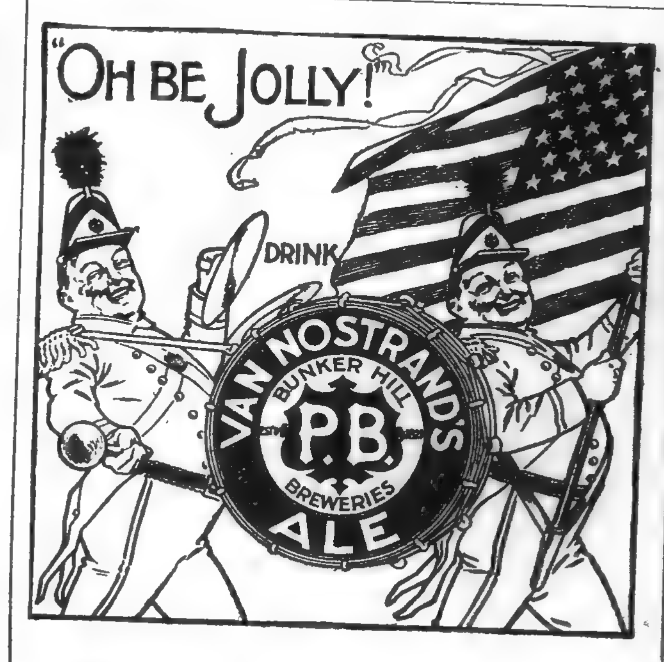
Ask for MLLE. CHAMINADE'S latest Compositions, among which you will find:

Rimembranza, Op. 88 }
Thème Varié, Op. 89 } For Piano Solo.
Légende, . . Op. 90 }

Chanson Triste . . }
Bleus . . . . . }
Au Pays Bleu . . . } Songs.
Les Présents . . . }

To be had from the leading dealers in Boston, or the publishers,
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East 17th St., NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.



VAN NOSTRAND'S BOSTON CLUB Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

SMOKE "LA CELESTINA," THE BEST ALL-HAVANA CIGAR. DANIEL FRANK & CO.

BLANK PAGE

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, MONDAY, MAY 10, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 1.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 10.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCHE HONGROISE from "The Damnation of Faust" . . . Berlioz
2. OVERTURE, "Le Roi l'a dit" . . . . Délibes
   (First Time.)
3. WALTZ, "Snowballs" . . . . Ziehrer
   (First Time.)
4. SELECTION, "Wizard of the Nile" . . . . . Herbert
   (First Time.)

5. BALLET MUSIC, "Feramors" . . . . . Rubinstein
   - I. Dance of Bayadères.
   - II. Candle Dance of the Brides of Kashmire.
6. PRELUDE TO ACT III. of "The Cricket on the Hearth" Goldmark
   (First time at these concerts.)
7. LA COLOMBE . . . . Gounod
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8. PRELUDE TO "THE MASTERSINGERS OF NUREMBERG" Wagner

9. ENTRÉE TRIOMPHALE DES BOYARDS . . . . Halvorsen
10. OVERTURE, "Pique Dame" . . . . Suppé
11. WALTZ, "Artists' Life" . . . . Strauss
12. MARCH, "Austria" . . . . Zach

ANOTHER LIST OF SUCCESSES.

"The Light of the World," 4 keys. Stephen Adams.
"A May Morning," 3 keys. L. Denza.
"I Dream of Thee," 3 keys. H. Trotere.
"A Night in June." A. Ward.
"Evening Shadows." A. Somervell.
"Only a Withered Rose." J. R. Thomas.
"The Angelus," 2 keys. I. Luckstone.
Etc., etc., etc.

PUBLISHED BY
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth St., New York.
And to be had from any dealer in Boston.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

SPOTS Removed from Clothing.

LEWANDO'S.

Fancy Dyers. French Cleansers.

17 Temple Place.
284 Boylston St.
Teams. Phones.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"

BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P. B.
ALE
BREWED & BOTTLED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES.
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

VAN NOSTRAND'S BOSTON CLUB LAGER

NORFOLK CABINET

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. { 10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET } ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS
E. B. Bird

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, TUESDAY, MAY 11, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 2.

SPOTS Removed from Clothing.

LEWANDO'S.

Fancy Dyers. French Cleansers.

17 Temple Place,
284 Boylston St.

Teams. Phones.

New Light.

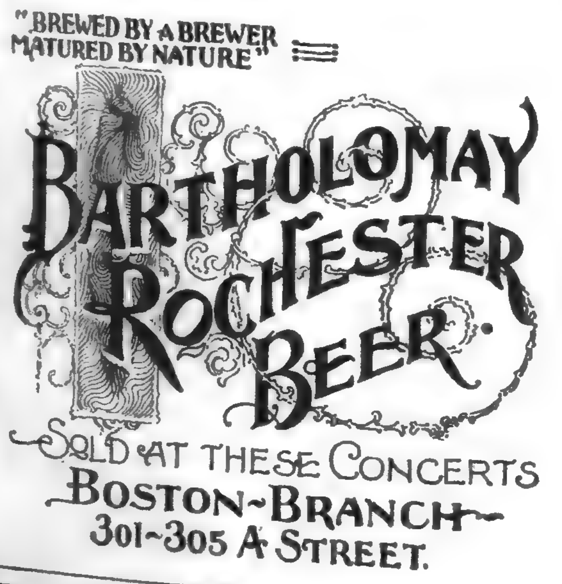
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"



BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 11.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Princess Ninetta"	Strauss
2.	OVERTURE, "Oberon"	Weber
3.	WALTZ, "Meerleuchten"	Ziehrer
4.	SELECTION, "La Fille de Madame Angot"	Lecocq
5.	PRELUDE TO ACT I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
6.	SERENADE ROCOCO (For String Orchestra) (First Time.)	Meyer-Helmund
	The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7.	RETRAITE CROATE	Gabriel-Marie
8.	TWO HUNGARIAN DANCES	Brahms
9.	OVERTURE, "Barber of Seville"	Rossini
10.	WALTZ, "Kaiser"	Strauss
11.	MAZOURKA, "La Mousmé"	Ganné
12.	MARCH, "Puppenfee"	Bayer

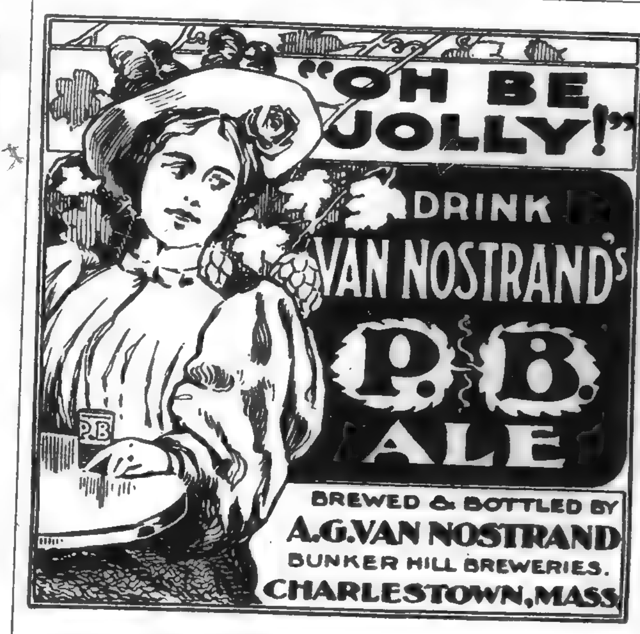
Song Recital programmes this season have included the following successes: —

"La Superbetta," old Italian	Arr. by A. L.
"White Heather"	Landon Ronald.
"Celia"	Arr. by A. L.
"Veneziana"	Arr. by A. L.
"The Jolly Comber"	Arr. by L. Broadwood.
"Oh, Yarmouth is a pretty town"	Arr. by L. Broadwood.
The Clown Songs	C. Villiers Stanford.
"Who'll buy my Lavender"	Edward German.
Shepherd's Wife Song	R. H. Walthew.

SEND FOR LISTS.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.



"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P.B.
ALE
BREWED & BOTTLED BY
A.G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES.
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

VAN NOSTRAND'S BOSTON CLUB LAGER

NORFOLK CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR STORE IS AT 283 WASHINGTON STREET.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. { 10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE 283 WASHINGTON STREET } ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR STORE IS AT 232 WASHINGTON STREET.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, MAY 12, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 3.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 12.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle" . . . . . Wagner
2. OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor" . . . . . Nicolai
3. WALTZ FROM "THE MANDARIN" (First Time.) . . . . . De Koven
4. SELECTION. "Faust" . . . . Gounod

5. BALLET MUSIC, "Coppelia" . . . . Délibes
   a. Notturno.
   b. Music of the Automatons and Waltz.
   c. Czardas.
6. INTERMEZZO, "Forget Me Not" . . . . . . Macbeth
7. EXCERPTS from "The Flying Dutchman" . . . . Wagner
8. POLONAISE . . . . Liszt

9. SELECTION, "La Grande Duchesse" . . . . . Offenbach
10. WALTZ, "Pomone" . . . . Waldteufel
11. POLKA FROM "THE GYPSY BARON" . . . . Strauss
12. MARCH, "Vienna Dude" . . . . Wagner

"THE CIRCUS GIRL." London and New York success.
"The Girl from Paris." " " " " "

Scores and separate songs and selections as played at these concerts.

Menuet Fleuri
La Victorieuse. March } . . . . Louis Ganné
La Scandinave. Mazurka }

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK,
Or the leading music dealers in Boston.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

SPOTS Removed from Clothing.

LEWANDO'S.

Fancy Dyers. French Cleansers.

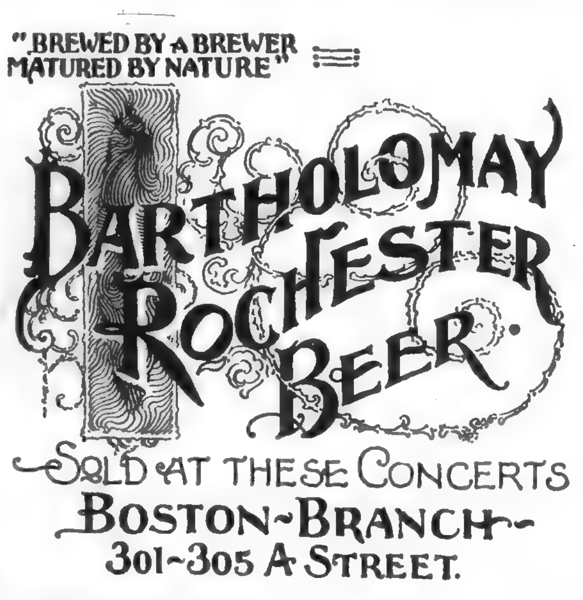
17 Temple Place.
284 Boylston St.
Teams. Phones.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S A.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P.B
ALE
BREWED & BOTTLED BY
A.G.VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES.
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON
CLUB LAGER

NORFOLK
CABINET

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, THURSDAY, MAY 13, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 4.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

THURSDAY, MAY 13.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Wien bleibt Wien"	Schrammel
2.	OVERTURE, "Martha"	Flotow
3.	WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows" (First Time.)	Vollstedt
4.	SELECTION, "Il Trovatore"	Verdi
5.	SUITE, "Peer Gynt" I. Morning Dawn. II. Aase's Death. III. Anitra's Dance. IV. In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains. The Imps are chasing Peer Gynt.	Grieg
6.	RONDE D'AMOUR The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.	Westerhout
7.	TURKISH MARCH	Mozart
8.	OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser"	Wagner
9.	WALTZ, "Freut euch des Lebens"	Strauss
10.	OVERTURE, "Fra Diavolo"	Auber
11.	POLKA, "Tic-Tac"	Strobl
12.	MARCH FROM "PROBE KUSS"	Millöcker

Mlle. C. CHAMINADE'S Latest Compositions.

Songs.—"My Heart Sings," 2 keys.
"Once More," 2 keys.
"Alone," 3 keys.
"Couplets Bachiques," 3 keys.
"Nuit d'Été," 2 keys.

Piano Solos.—Vert Galant, Op. 85.
Ballade, Op. 86.
Six pieces humoristiques, Op. 87, separately or in one book.

See that you get the original and only authorized edition of this composer's compositions, bearing our imprint.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

SPOTS Removed from Clothing.

LEWANDO'S.

Fancy Dyers. French Cleansers.

17 Temple Place.
284 Boylston St.
Teams. Phones.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

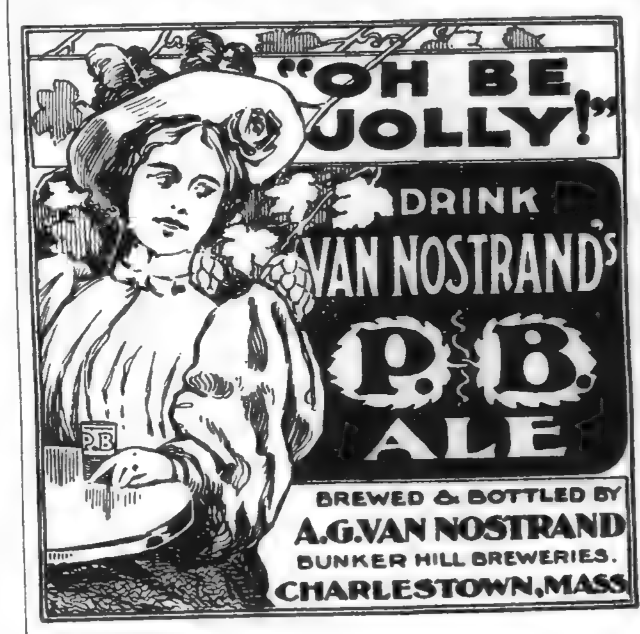
The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U. S. A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"

BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER.

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.



VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON
CLUB LAGER

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

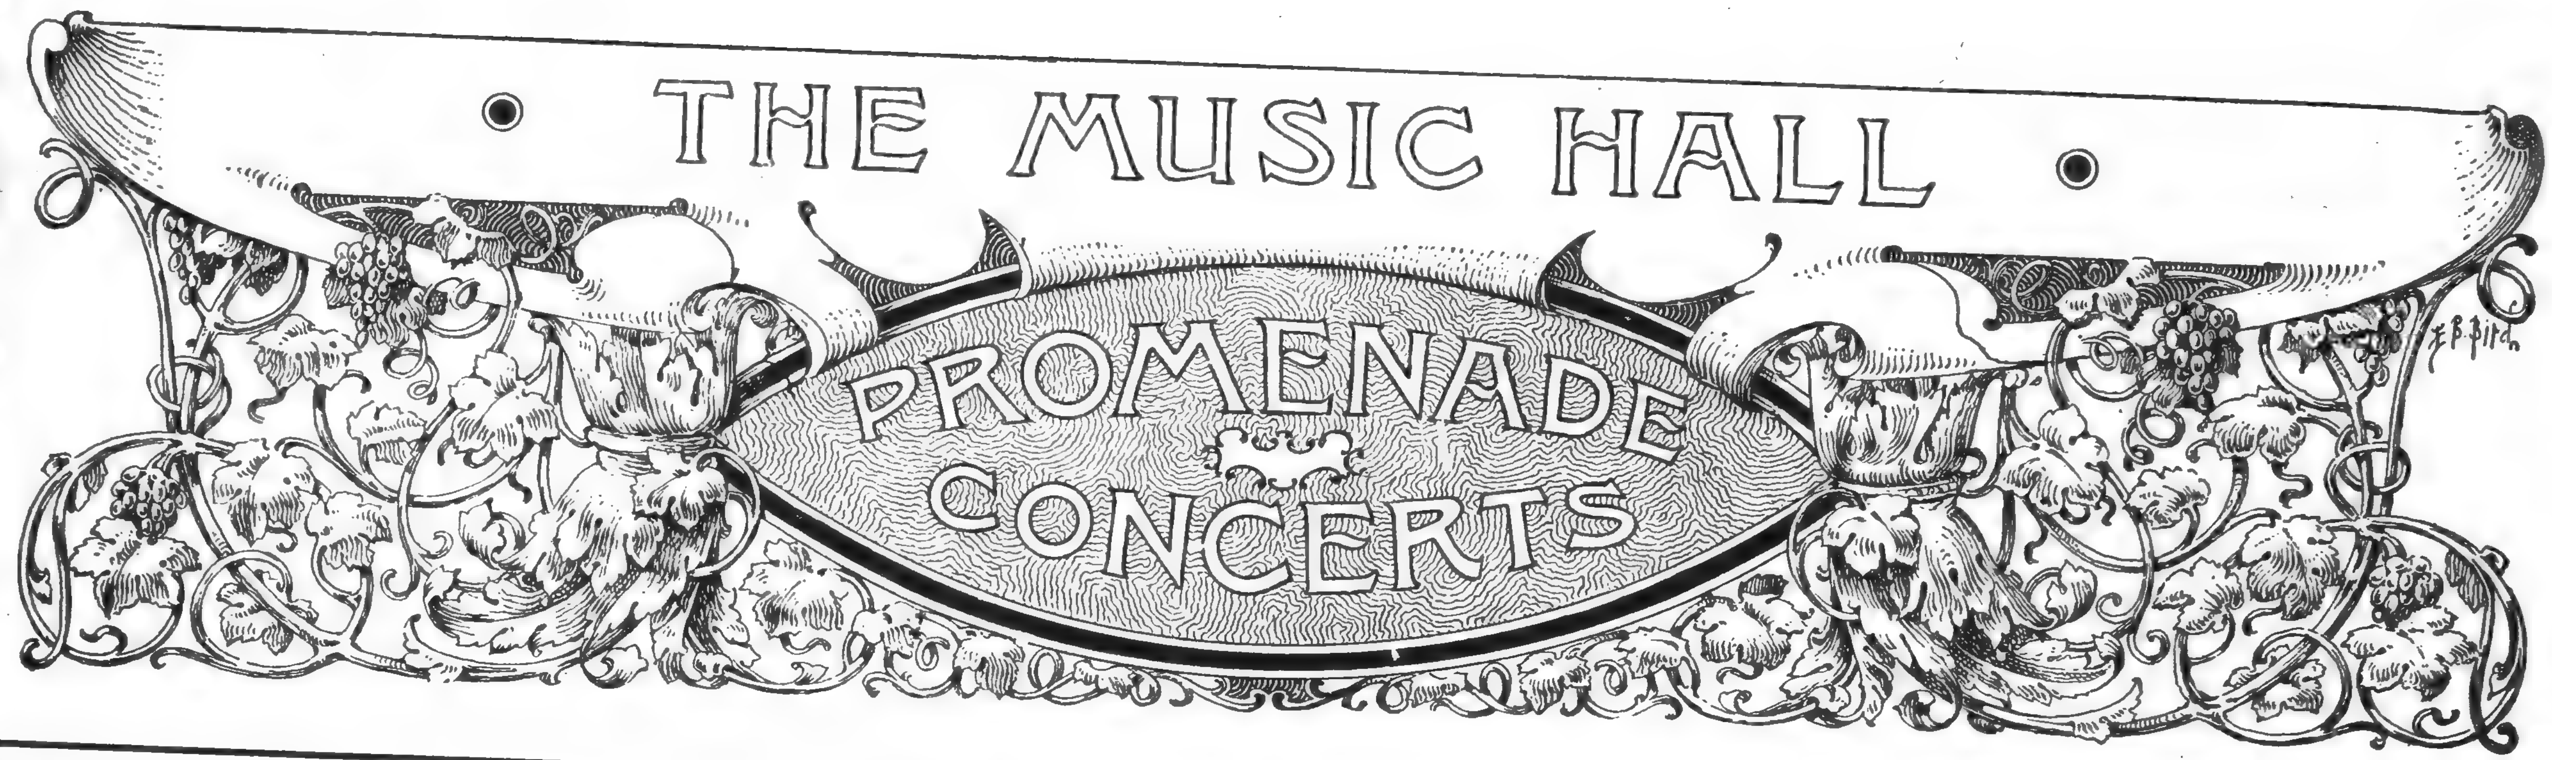
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR STORE IS AT 232 WASHINGTON STREET.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. { 10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE
232 WASHINGTON STREET } ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES



THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, MAY 14, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XII. No. 5.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

FRIDAY, MAY 14.

PROGRAMME.

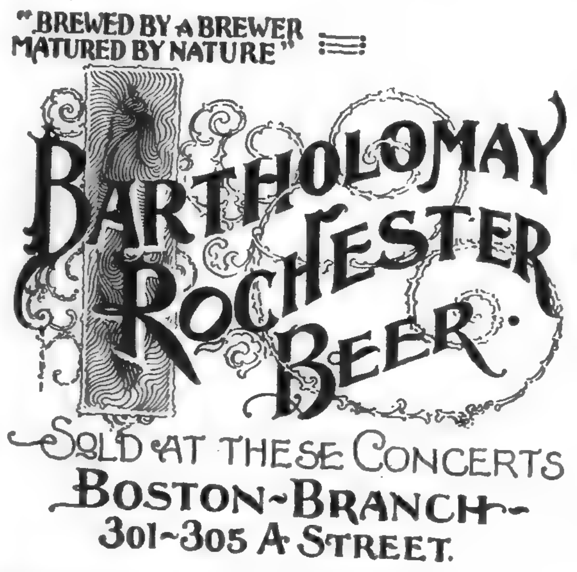
1.	MARCH, "Feurig Blut" (First Time.)	Vollstedt
2.	OVERTURE, "Zampa"	Hérold
3.	WALTZ, "Arabian Nights"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Poor Jonathan"	Milloecker
5.	BALLET MUSIC, "Queen of Sheba" ('Cello Obligato, Mr. E. LOEFFLER.)	Goldmark
6.	LE DERNIER SOMMEIL DE LA VIERGE The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.	Massenet
7.	TWO SLAVONIC DANCES	Dvorak
8.	RIDE OF THE VALKYRIES	Wagner
9.	SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
10.	OVERTURE, "Fledermaus"	Strauss
11.	POLKA, "Tyrolean"	Zeller
12.	MARCH, "El Capitan"	Sousa

ANOTHER LIST OF SUCCESSES.
"The Light of the World," 4 keys. Stephen Adams.
"A May Morning," 3 keys. L. Denza.
"I Dream of Thee," 3 keys. H. Trotere.
"A Night in June." A. Ward.
"Evening Shadows." A. Somervell.
"Only a Withered Rose." J. R. Thomas.
"The Angelus," 2 keys. I. Luckstone.
Etc., etc., etc.
PUBLISHED BY
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth St., New York.
And to be had from any dealer in Boston.

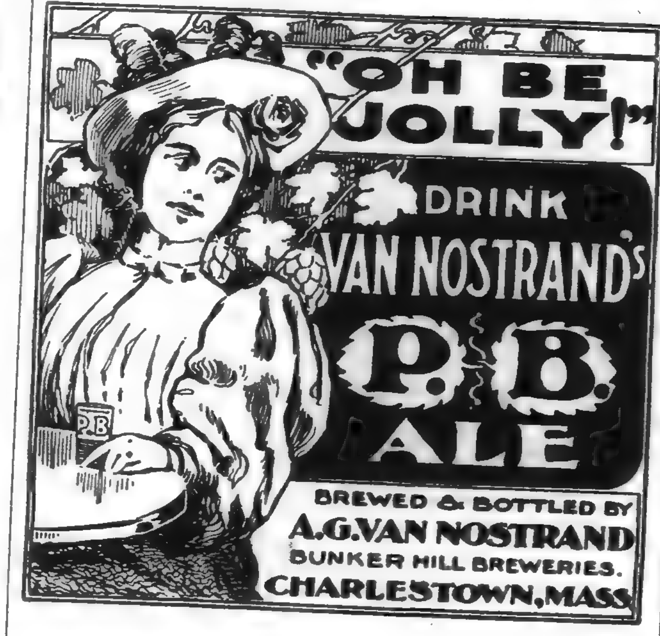
BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

SPOTS Removed from Clothing.
LEWANDO'S.
Fancy Dyers. French Cleansers.
17 Temple Place.
284 Boylston St.
Teams. Phones.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.
10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.
The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.
The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.



"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK VAN NOSTRAND'S P.B. ALE
BREWED & BOTTLED BY A.G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES.
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

VAN NOSTRAND'S BOSTON CLUB LAGER

NORFOLK CABINET
LAGER BEER
Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR STORE IS AT 232 WASHINGTON STREET.

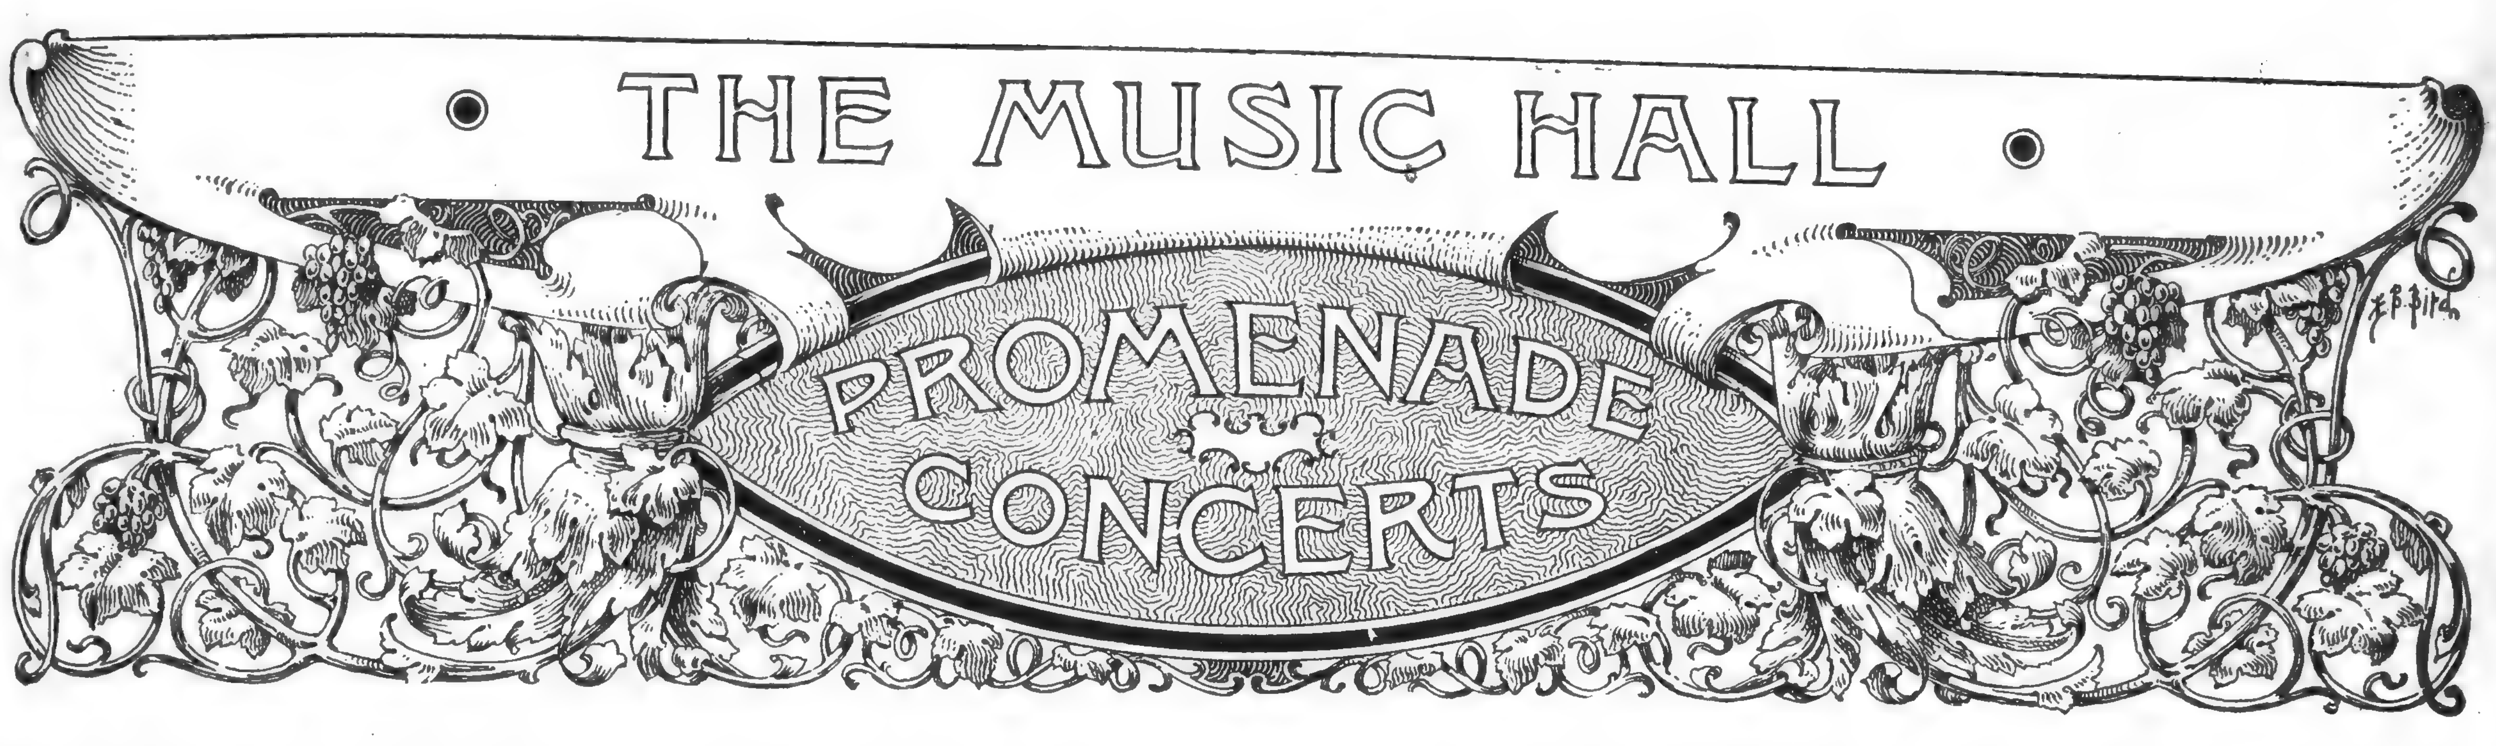
THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. { 10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE 232 WASHINGTON STREET } ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR STORE IS AT 232 WASHINGTON STREET.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.



PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 15, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XII. No. 6.

SPOTS Removed from Clothing.

LEWANDO'S.

Fancy Dyers. French Cleansers.

17 Temple Place,
284 Boylston St.

Teams. Phones.

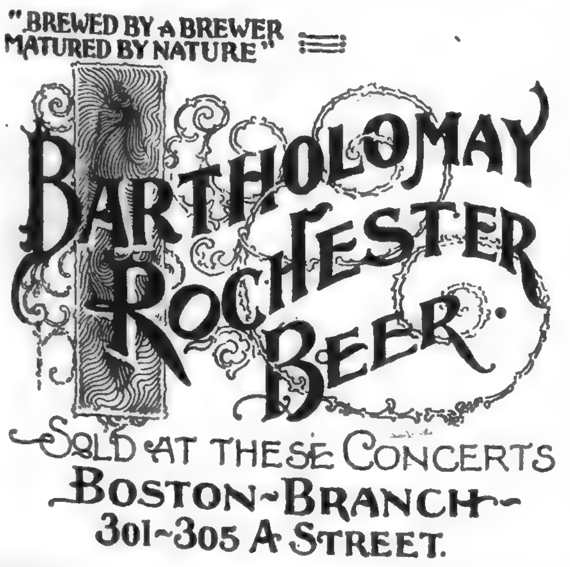
New Light.

All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

SATURDAY, MAY 15.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Wizard of the Nile"	Herbert
2.	OVERTURE, "Mignon"	A. Thomas
3.	WALTZ, "Espana"	Waldteufel
4.	SELECTION, "Robin Hood"	De Koven
5.	BALLET MUSIC, "Sylvia" a. Les Chasseuresses. b. Introduction and Valse Lente. c. Pizzicato Polka. d. Bacchanale.	Delibes
6.	HYMN TO ST. CECILIA Solo Violin, MR. J. HOFFMANN. The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.	Gounod
7.	GRACEFUL DANCE	Sullivan
8.	OVERTURE, "Rienzi"	Wagner
9.	SELECTION, "Carmen"	Bizet
10.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
11.	POLKA, "The Mill"	Strauss
12.	MARCH, "Up the Street"	Morse

Song Recital programmes this season have included the following successes: —

"La Superbetta," old Italian	Arr. by A. L.
"White Heather"	Landon Ronald.
"Celia"	Arr. by A. L.
"Veneziana"	Arr. by A. L.
"The Jolly Comber"	Arr. by L. Broadwood.
"Oh, Yarmouth is a pretty yown"	Arr. by L. Broadwood.
The Clown Songs	C. Villiers Stanford.
"Who'll buy my Lavender"	Edward German.
Shepherd's Wife Song	R. H. Walthew.

SEND FOR LISTS.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P.B.
ALE
BREWED & BOTTLED BY
A.G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES.
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON
CLUB LAGER

NORFOLK
CABINET

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

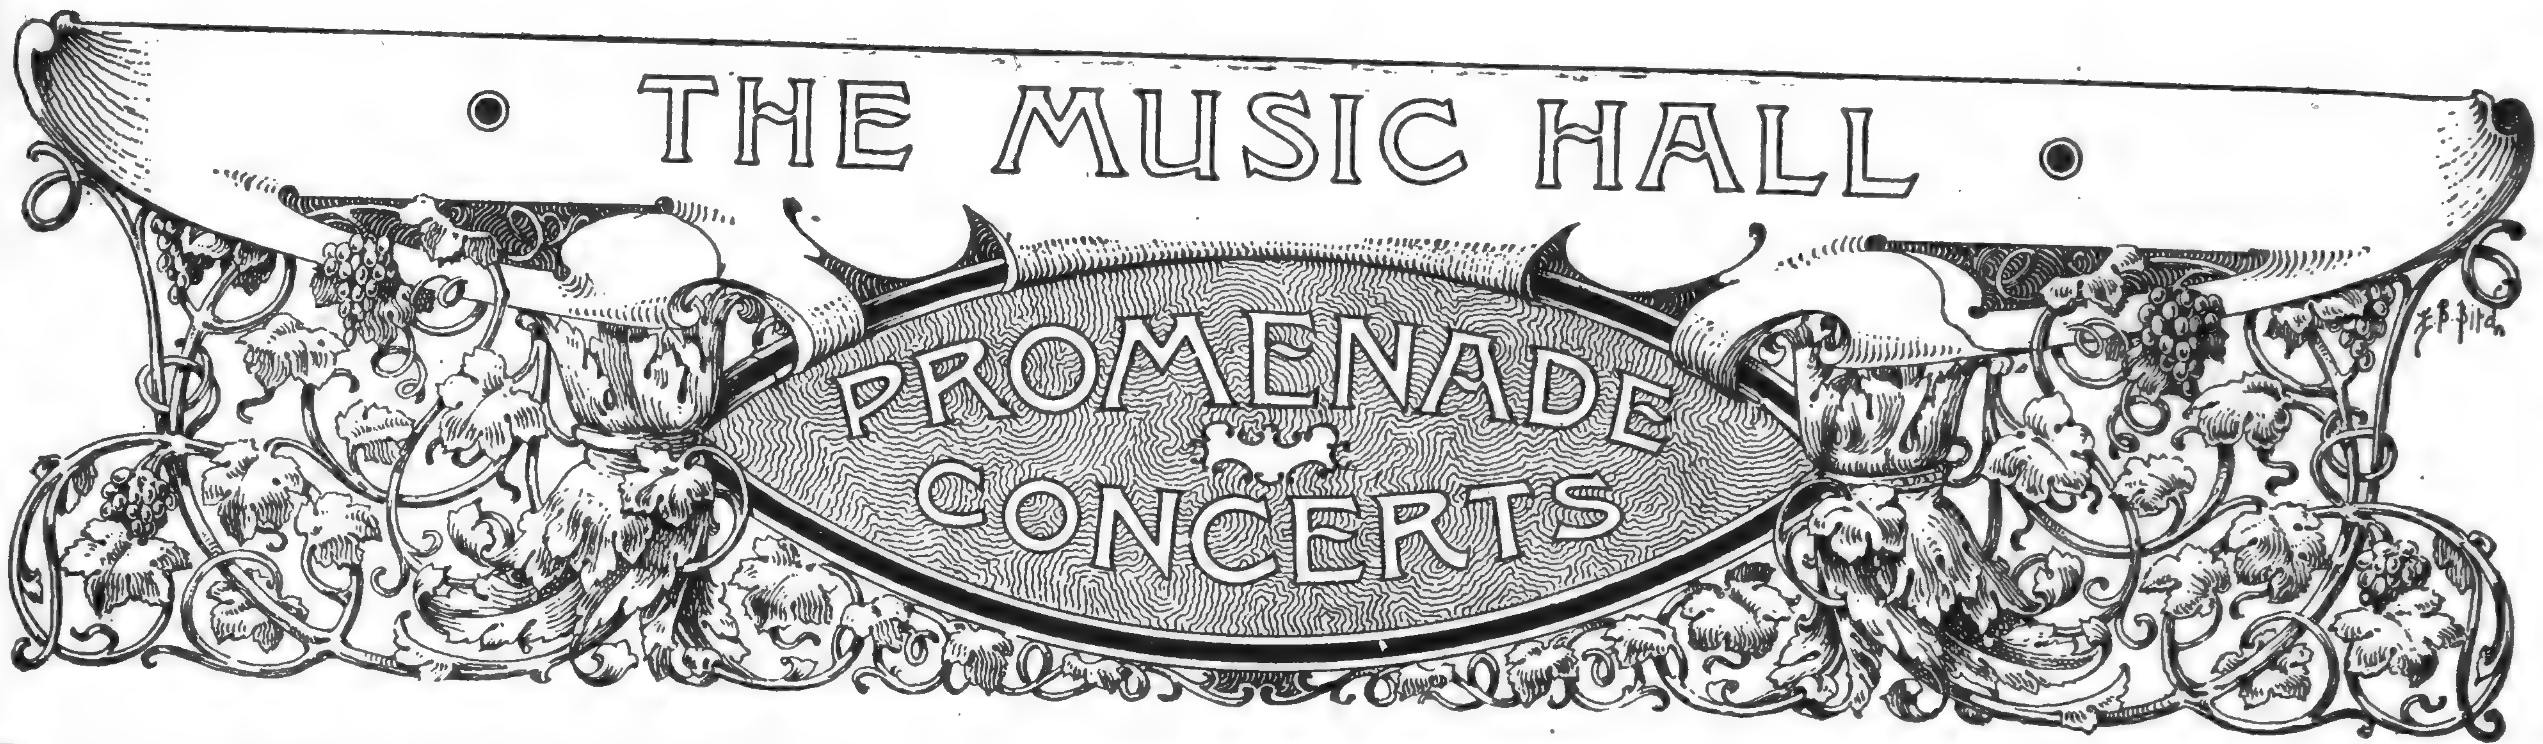
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES



PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, MONDAY, MAY 17, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 7.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 17.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Parapluie" . . . . Bayer
2. OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry" . . . . Suppé
3. WALTZ, "Les Patineurs" . . . . Waldteufel
4. SELECTION, "Beggar Student" . . . . . . Milloecker

---

5. a. SEVILLANA . . . . Massenet
   b. SERENATA . . . . Moszkowski
6. HUNGARIAN RHAPSODY IN F . . . . . . Liszt
7. TRAEUMEREI . . . . Schumann
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8. BALLET MUSIC from "Samson and Dalila" . . . Saint-Saëns
   a. Dance of the Priestesses.
   b. Bacchanale.

(First Time.)

---

9. OVERTURE, "Masaniello" . . . . Auber
10. WALTZ, "O Schöner Mai" . . . . Strauss
11. POLKA, "Sängerlust" . . . . Strauss
12. MARCH, "Boccaccio" . . . . Suppé

"THE CIRCUS GIRL." London and New York success.

"The Girl from Paris." " " " " "

Scores and separate songs and selections as played at these concerts.

Menuet Fleuri
La Victorieuse. March
La Scandinave. Mazurka } . . . . Louis Ganné

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK,

Or the leading music dealers in Boston.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

SPOTS Removed from Clothing.

LEWANDO'S.

Fancy Dyers. French Cleansers.

17 Temple Place.
284 Boylston St.
Teams. Phones.

New Light.

All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

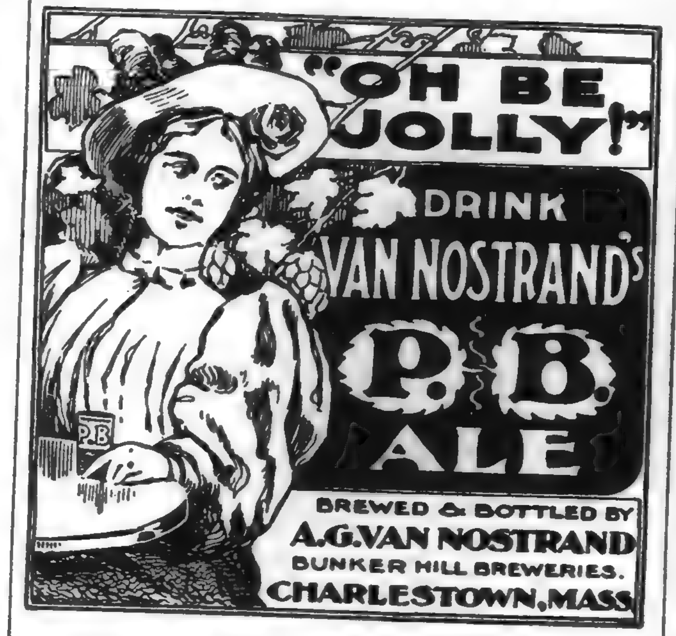
The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"

BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER.

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.



"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P. B.
ALE
BREWED & BOTTLED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES.
CHARLESTOWN, MASS

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON
CLUB LAGER

NORFOLK
CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH,
EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR STORE IS AT 232 WASHINGTON STREET.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

[91]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR STORE IS AT 232 WASHINGTON STREET.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, TUESDAY, MAY 18, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 8.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

TUESDAY, MAY 18.

PROGRAMME.

1.	PERSIAN MARCH	Strauss
2.	OVERTURE, "Traviata"	Verdi
3.	WALTZ, "Arlequin en Voyage"	Zach
4.	SELECTION, "Chimes of Normandy"	Planquette
5.	MENUET AND FARANDOLE from "L'Arlésienne No. 2" The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.	Bizet
6.	INVITATION A LA VALSE	Weber–Berlioz
7.	ALBUMBLATT (First Time.)	Wagner
8.	OVERTURE, "Phedre"	Massenet
9.	OFFENBACHIANA	Conrad
10.	WALTZ, "Vienna Blood"	Strauss
11.	POLKA, "Papa-Mama"	Bayer
12.	WERNER MARCH	Ziehrer

Mlle. C. CHAMINADE'S Latest Compositions.

Songs.— "My Heart Sings," 2 keys.
"Once More," 2 keys.
"Alone," 3 keys.
"Couplets Bachiques," 3 keys.
"Nuit d'Été," 2 keys.

Piano Solos.— Vert Galant, Op. 85.
Ballade, Op. 86.
Six pieces humoristiques, Op. 87, separately or in one book.

See that you get the original and only authorized edition of this composer's compositions, bearing our imprint.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S DYEING CLEANSING LAUNDRY

SPOTS Removed from Clothing.

LEWANDO'S.

Fancy Dyers. French Cleansers.

17 Temple Place.
284 Boylston St.
Teams. Phones.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

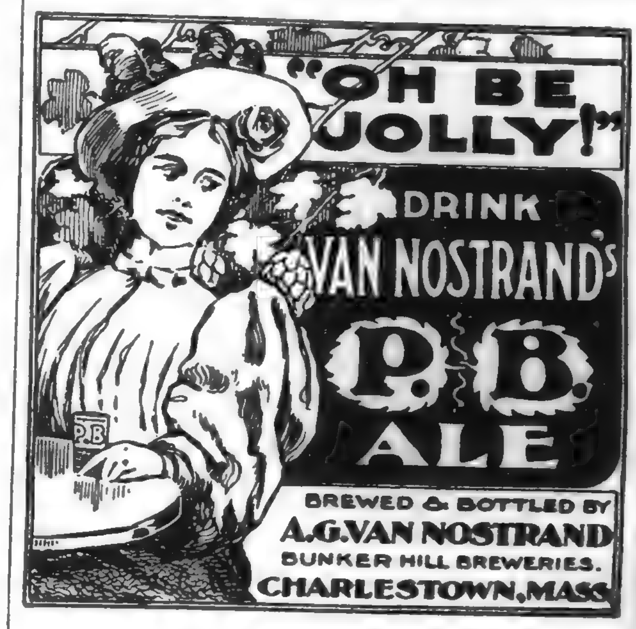
The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"

BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.



"OH BE JOLLY!" DRINK VAN NOSTRAND'S P.B. ALE
BREWED & BOTTLED BY A.G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES.
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

VAN NOSTRAND'S BOSTON CLUB LAGER

NORFOLK CABINET

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury
EDWARD RUHL, { or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, MAY 19, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XII. No. 9.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, MAY 19.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH from "Obersteiger" (First Time.)	Zeller
2.	OVERTURE, "Le Roi d'Ys"	Lalo
3.	WALTZ, "Puppenfee"	Bayer
4.	SELECTION, "Fencing Master"	De Koven
5.	TWO SPANISH DANCES (First Time.)	Moszkowski
6.	"LA CINQUANTAINE"	Gabriel-Marie
7.	NOCTURNE (First Time.)	Chopin-Glazounow

The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.

8.	a. ANGELUS b. FETE BOHÈME	Massenet
9.	OVERTURE, "Tabasco"	Chadwick
10.	SELECTION, "Gondoliers"	Sullivan
11.	WALTZ, "Barcarolle"	Waldteufel
12.	MARCH, "Fra Bombarda"	Czibulka

SPECIAL NOTICE. Owing to long-standing engagements of Music Hall, there will be no concerts on the evenings of Wednesday and Thursday, May 26 and 27. The concerts will be continued every evening except Sunday, beginning Friday, May 28.

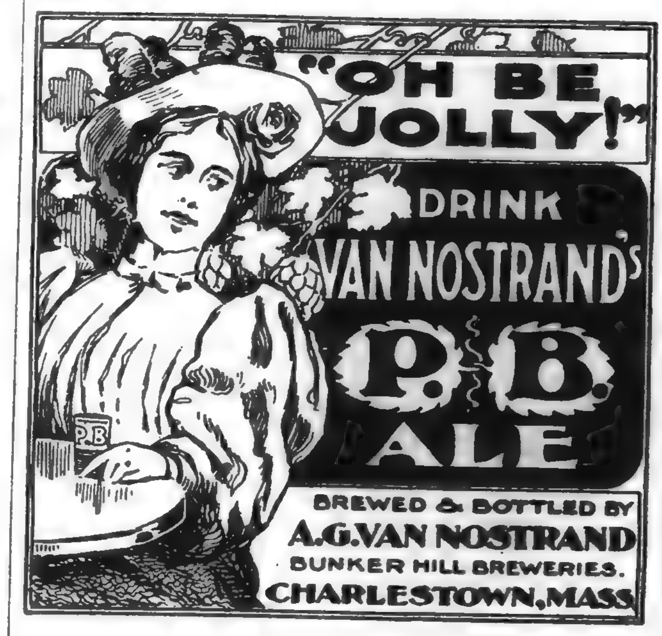
ANOTHER LIST OF SUCCESSES.
"The Light of the World," 4 keys. Stephen Adams.
"A May Morning," 3 keys. L. Denza.
"I Dream of Thee," 3 keys. H. Trotere.
"A Night in June." A. Ward.
"Evening Shadows." A. Somervell.
"Only a Withered Rose." J. R. Thomas.
"The Angelus," 2 keys. I. Luckstone.
Etc., etc., etc.
PUBLISHED BY
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth St., New York.
And to be had from any dealer in Boston.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S DYEING CLEANSING LAUNDRY
SPOTS Removed from Clothing.
LEWANDO'S.
Fancy Dyers. French Cleansers.
17 Temple Place.
284 Boylston St.
Teams. Phones.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.
10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.
The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.
The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.



"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK VAN NOSTRAND'S P.B. ALE
BREWED & BOTTLED BY A.G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES.
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

VAN NOSTRAND'S BOSTON CLUB LAGER

NORFOLK CABINET

LAGER BEER
Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR STORE IS AT 232 WASHINGTON STREET.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. (10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET) ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR STORE IS AT 232 WASHINGTON STREET.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS
E. B. Bird.

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, THURSDAY, MAY 20, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XII. No. 10.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

THURSDAY, MAY 20.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Pro Patria"	Milloecker
2.	OVERTURE, "Raymond"	A. Thomas
3.	WALTZ, "Fesche Geister"	Ed. Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Circus Girl" (First Time.)	Caryll–Monckton
5.	LOVE STORY (First Time.)	A. Krug
	The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
6.	INTERMEZZO from "Naila"	Delibes
7.	a. PRELUDE to "Pagliacci"	Leoncavallo
	b. INTRODUCTION TO ACT III., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
8.	TORCHLIGHT DANCE (First Time.)	Meyerbeer
9.	WALTZ, "Cagliostro"	Strauss
10.	OVERTURE, "Orpheus aux Enfers"	Offenbach
11.	LOIN DU BAL	Gillet
12.	MARCH, "Tzigane"	Lacome

SPECIAL NOTICE. Owing to long-standing engagements of Music Hall, there will be no concerts on the evenings of Wednesday and Thursday, May 26 and 27. The concerts will be continued every evening except Sunday, beginning Friday, May 28.

Song Recital programmes this season have included the following successes: —

"La Superbetta," old Italian	Arr. by A. L.
"White Heather"	Landon Ronald.
"Celia"	Arr. by A. L.
"Veneziana"	Arr. by A. L.
"The Jolly Comber"	Arr. by L. Broadwood.
"Oh, Yarmouth is a pretty yown"	Arr. by L. Broadwood.
The Clown Songs	C. Villiers Stanford.
"Who'll buy my Lavender"	Edward German.
Shepherd's Wife Song	R. H. Walthew.

SEND FOR LISTS.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

SPOTS Removed from Clothing.

LEWANDO'S.

Fancy Dyers. French Cleansers.

17 Temple Place.
284 Boylston St.

Teams. Phones.

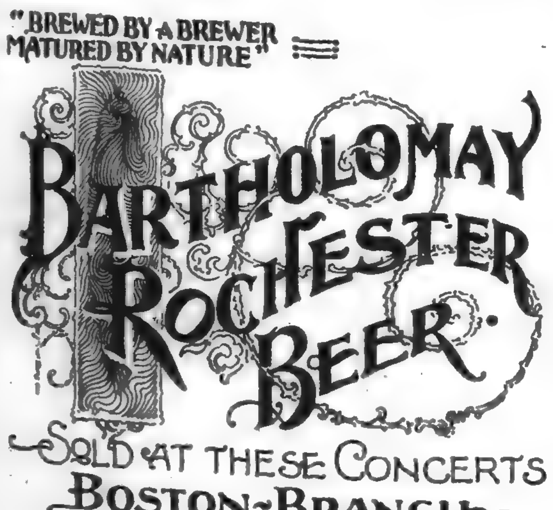
New Light.

All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

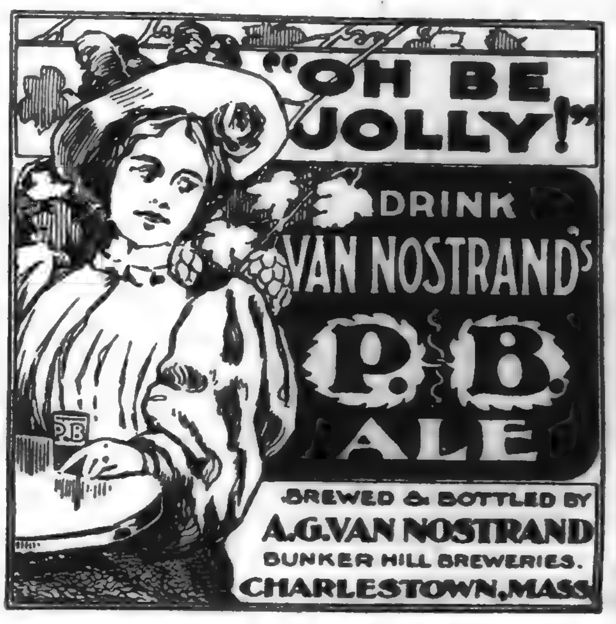
The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.



VAN NOSTRAND'S BOSTON CLUB LAGER

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT. Monday Evening, May 31, will be "MILITARY NIGHT," when the "New York Seventh Regiment March" will be played, also selections from "Simple Simon" and other productions of the Cadets. The programme will also include the "American Fantasy" by Herbert, the "Waltz Militaire" by Ganne, the "1812" and "Tabasco" Overtures, and other appropriate selections.

THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, MAY 21, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 11.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

FRIDAY, MAY 21.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "University" . . . .
2. OVERTURE, "William Tell" . . . . Bruguiere
3. WALTZ, "Doctrinen" . . . . Rossini
4. SELECTION, "Wizard of the Nile" . . . . . Ed. Strauss

Herbert

---

5. PRIZE-SONG from "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg" . Wagner
Trombone Solo, Mr. C. HAMPE.
The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
6. PRELUDE TO ACT III., "The Cricket on the Hearth" . Goldmark
7. NARCISSUS . . . . Nevin
8. FINALE, ACT I., "Lohengrin" . . . .

Wagner

---

9. OVERTURE, "Fingal's Cave" . . . .
10. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . . . Mendelssohn
11. MAZOURKA, "Mignonette" . . . . Zeller
12. MARCH from "The Serenade" . . . . Zach
(First Time.) . . . . Herbert

SPECIAL NOTICE. Owing to long-standing engagements of Music Hall, there will be no concerts on the evenings of Wednesday and Thursday, May 26 and 27. The concerts will be continued every evening except Sunday, beginning Friday, May 28.

"THE CIRCUS GIRL." London and New York success.
"The Girl from Paris." " " " " "

Scores and separate songs and selections as played at these concerts.

Menuet Fleuri
La Victorieuse. March
La Scandinave. Mazurka } . . . . Louis Ganné

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK,
Or the leading music dealers in Boston.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

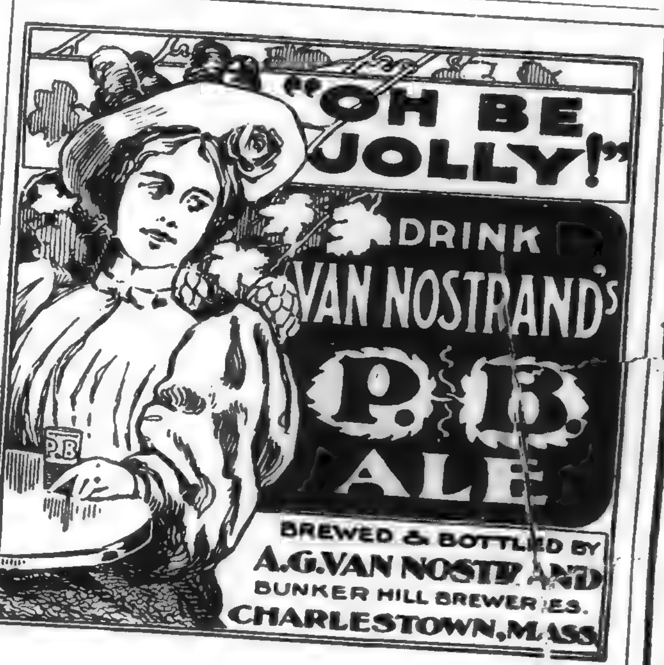
DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR STORE IS AT 232 WASHINGTON STREET.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

SPOTS Removed from Clothing.
LEWANDO'S.
Fancy Dyers. French Cleansers.
17 Temple Place.
284 Boylston St.
Teams. Phones.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.
10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.
The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.
The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.



VAN NOSTRAND'S BOSTON CLUB LAGER

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT. Monday Evening, May 31, will be "MILITARY NIGHT," when the "New York Seventh Regiment March" will be played, also selections from "Simple Simon" and other productions of the Cadets. The programme will also include the "American Fantasy" by Herbert, the "Waltz Militaire" by Ganne, the "1812" and "Tabasco" Overtures, and other appropriate selections.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 22, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 12.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

SATURDAY, MAY 22.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Queen of Sheba" . . . . Gounod
2. OVERTURE, "Tannhäuser" . . . . Wagner
3. WALTZ, "Artist's Life" . . . . Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Faust" . . . . Gounod

5. TWO MOVEMENTS FROM SUITE, "Peer Gynt" . Grieg
   a. Anitra's Dance.
   b. In the Halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains. The Imps are chasing Peer Gynt.
6. ENTRÉE TRIOMPHALE DES BOYARDS . . . Halvorsen
7. LOVE'S DREAM AFTER THE BALL . . . . Czibulka
8. POLONAISE . . . . Liszt

9. HULDIGUNGSMARSCH . . . . Wagner
10. LARGO . . . . Handel
    The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
    Solo Violin, Mr. J. HOFFMANN.
11. WALTZ, "Meerleuchten" . . . . Ziehrer
12. MARCH, "Manhattan Beach" . . . . Sousa

SPECIAL NOTICE. Owing to long-standing engagements of Music Hall, there will be no concerts on the evenings of Wednesday and Thursday, May 26 and 27. The concerts will be continued every evening except Sunday, beginning Friday, May 28.

Mlle. C. CHAMINADE'S Latest Compositions.

Songs.— "My Heart Sings," 2 keys.
"Once More," 2 keys.
"Alone," 3 keys.
"Couplets Bachiques," 3 keys.
"Nuit d'Été," 2 keys.

Piano Solos.— Vert Galant, Op. 85.
Ballade, Op. 86.
Six pieces humoristiques, Op. 87, separately or in one book.

See that you get the original and only authorized edition of this composer's compositions, bearing our imprint.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

SPOTS Removed from Clothing.

LEWANDO'S.

Fancy Dyers. French Cleansers.

17 Temple Place.
284 Boylston St.

Teams. Phones.

New Light.

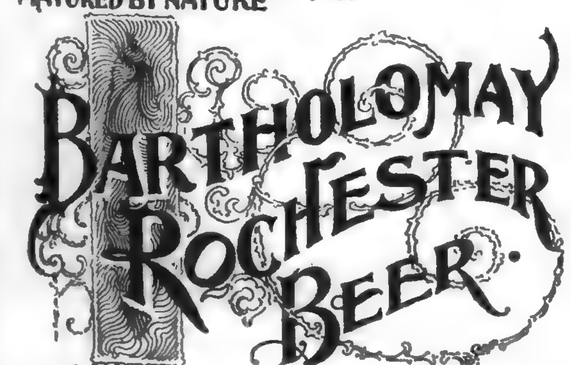
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"



SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P. B.
ALE

BREWED & BOTTLED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES.
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON
CLUB LAGER

NORFOLK
CABINET

Norfolk Lager Beer

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH,
EDWARD RUHL,
Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR STORE IS AT [illegible] WASHINGTON STREET.

[96]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT. Monday Evening, May 31, will be "MILITARY NIGHT," when the "New York Seventh Regiment March" will be played, also selections from "Simple Simon" and other productions of the Cadets. The programme will also include the "American Fantasy" by Herbert, the "Waltz Militaire" by Ganne, the "1812" and "Tabasco" Overtures, and other appropriate selections.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, MONDAY, MAY 24, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 13.

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR STORE IS AT 232 WASHINGTON STREET.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

SPOTS Removed from Clothing.

LEWANDO'S.

Fancy Dyers. French Cleansers.

17 Temple Place.
284 Boylston St.

Teams. Phones.

New Light.

All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"

BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 24.

PROGRAMME.

1. TABASCO MARCH
2. OVERTURE, "Mireille" . . . . Chadwick
(First Time.) . . . . . . Gounod
3. WALTZ, "Snowballs" . . . . Ziehrer
4. SELECTION, "Aida" . . . . Verdi

5. BALLET MUSIC, "Faust" . . . . Gounod
6. a. SERENADE (First Time) } For String Orchestra { . . Stange
b. MENUET . . . . . . Bolzoni

The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.

7. OVERTURE, "Semiramide" . . . . . . Rossini
8. EXCERPTS from "The Flying Dutchman" . . . Wagner

9. SELECTION, "The Geisha"
(First Time.) . . . . Jones
10. WALTZ, "Longchamps Fleuri"
(First Time.) . . . . . . Waldteufel
11. POLKA, "Hunters' Yarns"
(First Time.) . . . . . . Komzak
12. MARCH, "La Victorieuse"
(First Time.) . . . . Ganne

SPECIAL NOTICE. Owing to long-standing engagements of Music Hall, there will be no concerts on the evenings of Wednesday and Thursday, May 26 and 27. The concerts will be continued every evening except Sunday, beginning Friday, May 28.

Mlle. C. CHAMINADE'S Latest Compositions.

Songs.— "My Heart Sings," 2 keys.
"Once More," 2 keys.
"Alone," 3 keys.
"Couplets Bachiques," 3 keys.
"Nuit d'Été," 2 keys.

Piano Solos.— Vert Galant, Op. 85.
Ballade, Op. 86.
Six pieces humoristiques, Op. 87, separately or in one book.

See that you get the original and only authorized edition of this composer's compositions, bearing our imprint.

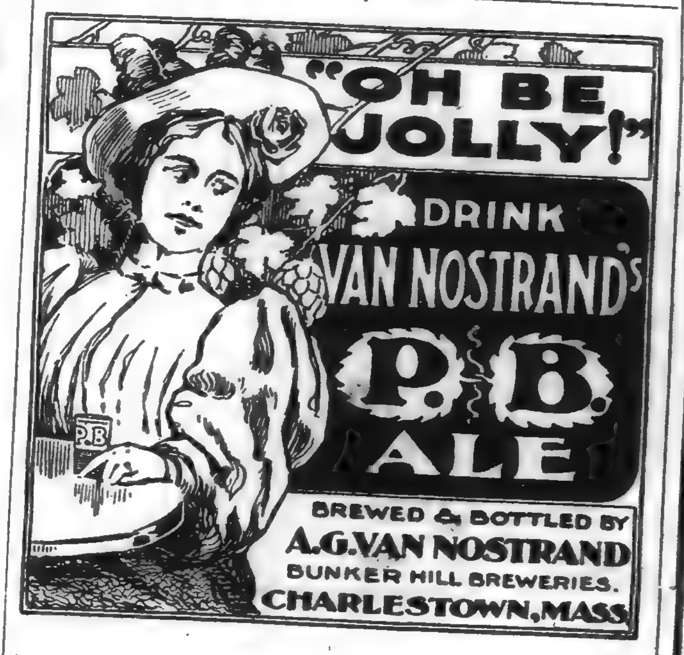
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

4

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.



VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON
CLUB LAGER

NORFOLK
CABINET

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, } Telephone, 56 Roxbury
EDWARD RUHL, } or 1152 Boston.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

INCOMPLETE

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

HERRICK, COPLEY SQUARE, Telephone 608 (Tremont), CHOICE TABLES for Music Hall "Pops."

GREAT WESTERN CHAMPAGNE

Great Western Rheims

A natural, genuine champagne, of the finest quality produced in America.

Sold by Wine Merchants, Grocers, and Druggists.

FRIDAY, MAY 28.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Princess Ninetta" . . . . Strauss
2. OVERTURE, "Si j'étais Roi" . . . . Adam
3. WALTZ, "Denksprüche" . . . . Ed. Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Erminie" . . . . Jakobowsky

5. BALLET MUSIC, "Queen of Sheba" . . . . . Goldmark
6. RETRAITE CROATE . . . . Gabriel-Marie
7. DREAM OF THE SHEPHERDESS . . . . . Labitzky
Solo Violins, Messrs. J. Hoffmann and K. Ondricek.
Zither, Mr. Abloescher.
(First Time.)
The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
8. POLONAISE . . . . Chopin-Glazounow

9. SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana" . . . . . Mascagni
10. CANZONETTA . . . . Langey
(First Time.)
11. FLIRTATION . . . . Steck
12. MARCH, "Wien bleibt Wien" . . . . Schrammel

"FOR LIGHT EVENING LUNCH," KENNEDY'S
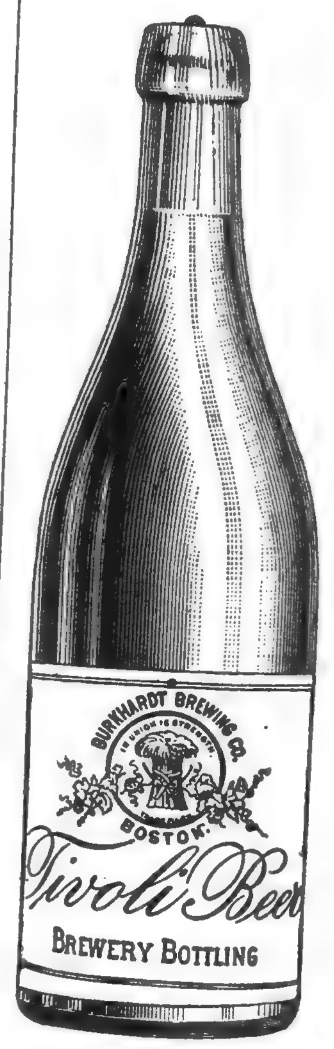
BANQUET WAFERS.
LIGHTLY SALTED OR PLAIN.

TIVOLI



Lager Beer.

FIVE MONTHS OLD.

If you desire a matured, ripe lager beer, call for Tivoli during the concert. Brewed for 19 years by the

Burkhardt Brewing Co.,
BOSTON, MASS.
Telephone, 265 Roxbury.

Summer
Music.

At the seashore or country, during vacation, good music will enliven the evenings, and act as a charm on rainy days.

We rent pianos for the seashore or country on very liberal terms. Our stock is large and varied, allowing you the great advantage of choice. Included are the pianos of Chickering & Sons and others. Many of these are new; all of them are in good condition.

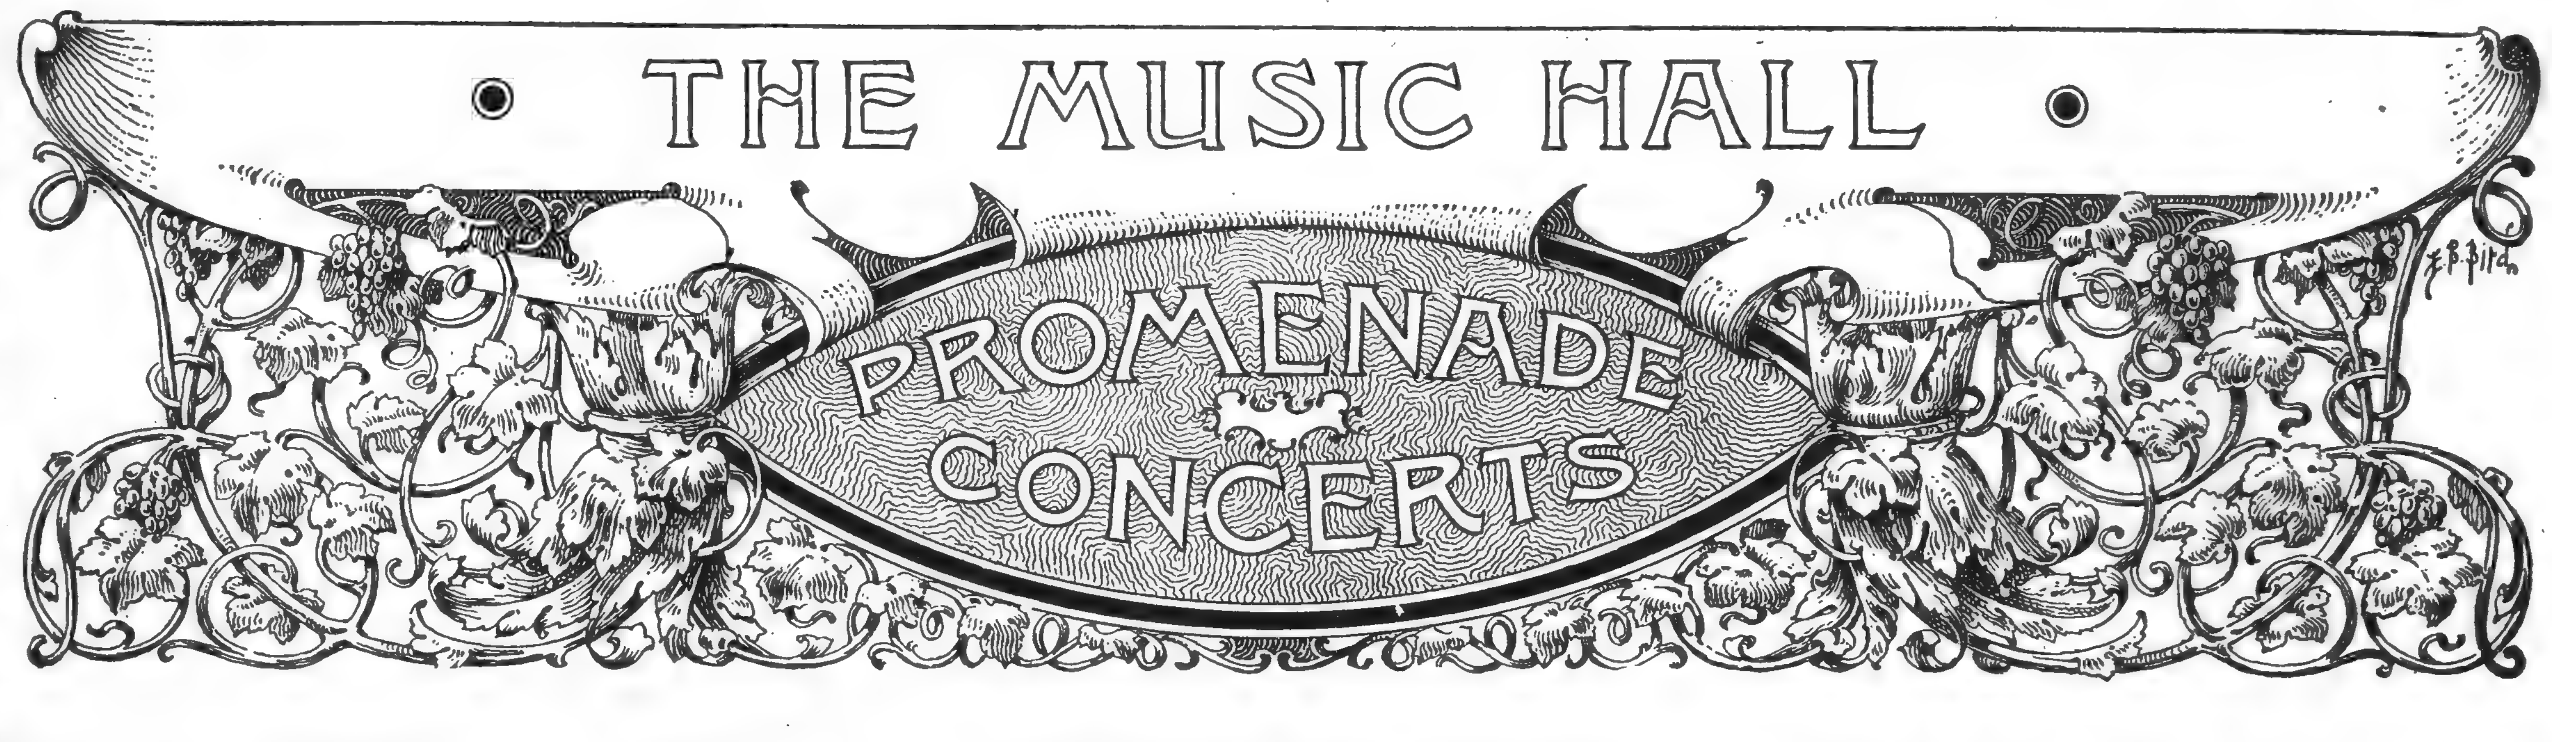
Pianos rented now, held free of charge until date of shipment.

PIANOS
TO RENT.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY,
453-463 Washington Street (take Elevator),
BOSTON, MASS.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR STORE IS AT 232 WASHINGTON STREET.



THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS
F. R. Bird

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, MAY 28, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XII. No. 15.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

SPOTS Removed from Clothing.

LEWANDO'S.

Fancy Dyers. French Cleansers.

17 Temple Place.
284 Boylston St.

Teams. Phones.

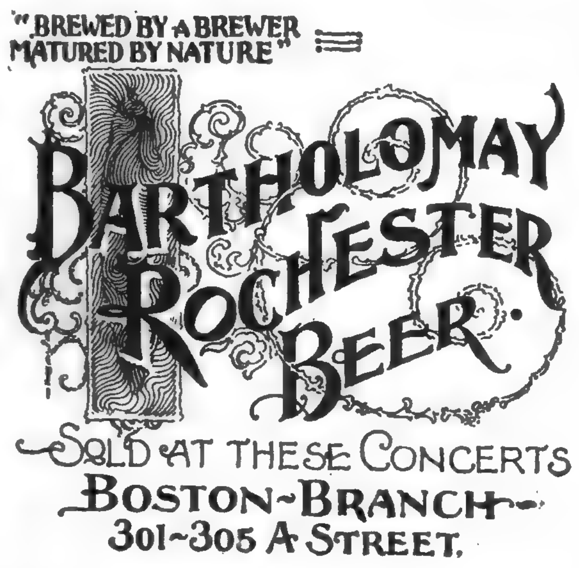
New Light.

All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE MUSIC HALL . . .

Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

FRIDAY, MAY 28.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Princess Ninetta" . . . . Strauss
2. OVERTURE, "Si j'étais Roi" . . . . Adam
3. WALTZ, "Denksprüche" . . . . Ed. Strauss
4. SELECTION, "Erminie" . . . . Jakobowsky

---

5. BALLET MUSIC, "Queen of Sheba" . . . . . Goldmark
6. INTERMEZZO, "Forget-Me-Not" . . . . . . Macbeth
7. DREAM OF THE SHEPHERDESS . . . . . Labitzky

Solo Violins, Messrs. J. Hoffmann and K. Ondricek.
Zither, Mr. Abloescher.
(First Time.)

The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.

8. POLONAISE . . . . Chopin–Glazounow

---

9. SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana" . . . . . . Mascagni
10. CANZONETTA . . . . Langey
(First Time.)
11. FLIRTATION . . . . Steck
12. MARCH, "Wien bleibt Wien" . . . . Schrammel

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT. Monday Evening, May 31, will be "MILITARY NIGHT," when the "New York Seventh Regiment March" will be played, also selections from "Simple Simon" and other productions of the Cadets. The programme will also include the "American Fantasy" by Bendix, the "Waltz Militaire" by Ganne, the "1812" and "Tabasco" Overtures, and other appropriate selections.

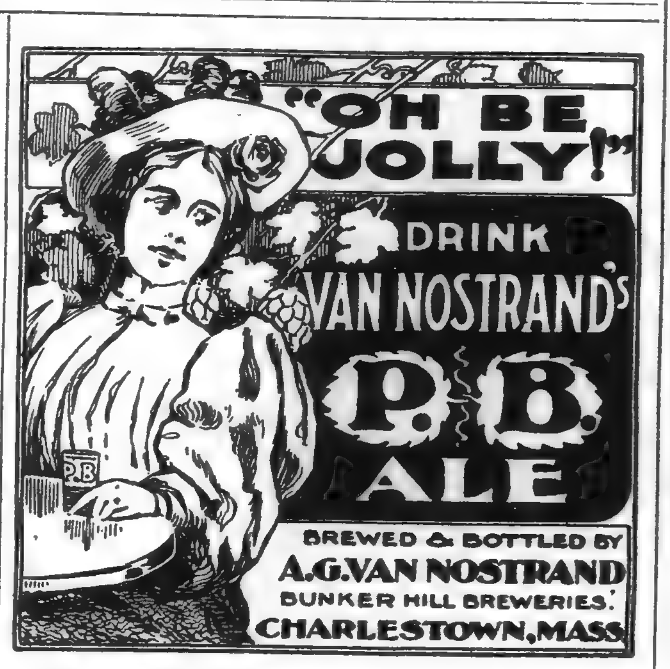
Song Recital programmes this season have included the following successes: —

"La Superbetta," old Italian . . . . Arr. by A. L.
"White Heather" . . . . Landon Ronald.
"Celia" . . . . Arr. by A. L.
"Veneziana" . . . . Arr. by A. L.
"The Jolly Comber" . . . . Arr. by L. Broadwood.
"Oh, Yarmouth is a pretty yown" Arr. by L. Broadwood.
The Clown Songs . . . . . . C. Villiers Stanford.
"Who'll buy my Lavender" . . . Edward German.
Shepherd's Wife Song . . . . . . R. H. Walthew.

SEND FOR LISTS.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.



"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P. B.
ALE
BREWED & BOTTLED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES.
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON
CLUB LAGER

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

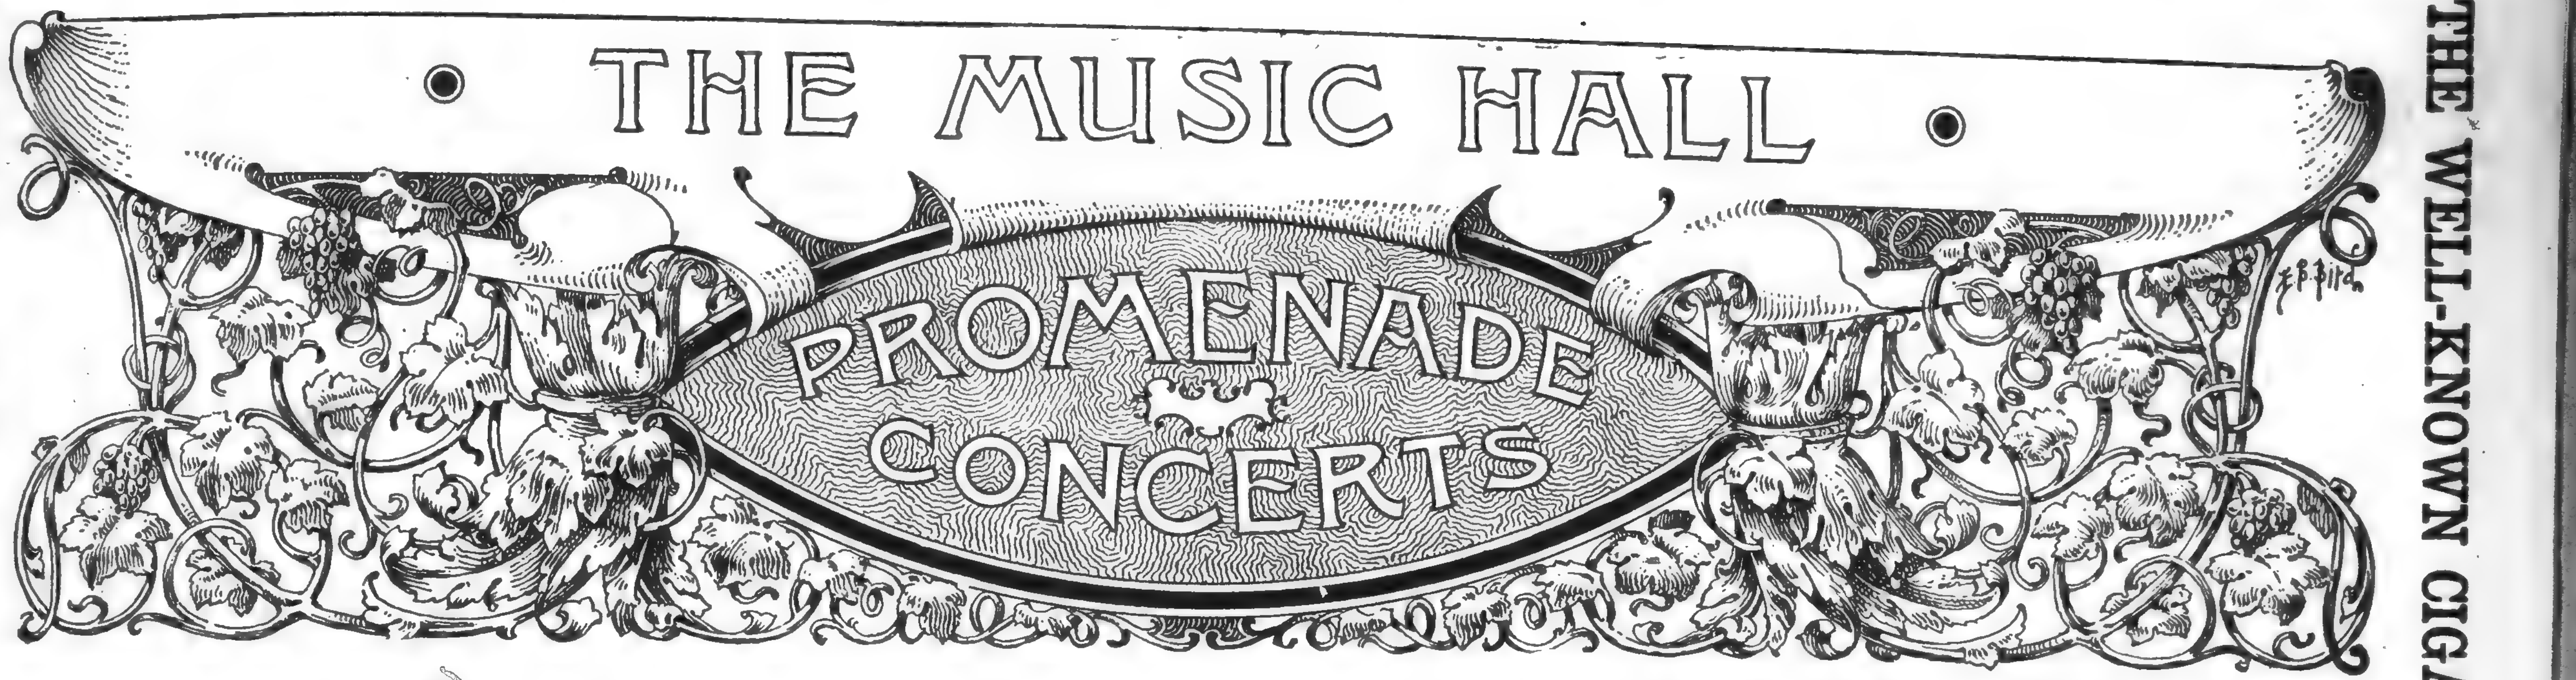
THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. { 10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET } ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR STORE IS AT 23[illegible] WASHINGTON STREET.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.



THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, MAY 29, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XII. No. 16.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

SPOTS Removed from Clothing.

LEWANDO'S.

Fancy Dyers. French Cleansers.

17 Temple Place.
284 Boylston St.

Teams. Phones.

New Light.

All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"

BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE MUSIC HALL

Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

SATURDAY, MAY 29.

1. TEUFELS MARCH . . . . Suppé
2. OVERTURE, "Stradella" . . . . Flotow
3. WALTZ, "Meerleuchten" . . . . Ziehrer
4. SELECTION, "Wizard of the Nile" . . . . . Herbert

5. NOCTURNE AND WEDDING MARCH from "Midsummer Night's Dream" . . . . Mendelssohn
6. BLISSFUL DREAM . . . . Meyer-Helmund
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. INTRODUCTION TO ACT III., "Lohengrin" . . Wagner
8. SELECTION, "Fatinitza" . . . . Suppé

9. WALTZ, "Estudiantina" . . . . Waldteufel
10. OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor" . . . . Nicolai
11. LOVE'S DREAM AFTER THE BALL . . . . . Czibulka
12. MARCH, "In Darkest Africa" . . . . Metz

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT. Monday Evening, May 31, will be "MILITARY NIGHT," when the "New York Seventh Regiment March" will be played, also selections from "Simple Simon" and other productions of the Cadets. The programme will also include the "American Fantasy" by Bendix, the "Waltz Militaire" by Ganne, the "1812" and "Tabasco" Overtures, and other appropriate selections.

"THE CIRCUS GIRL." London and New York success.

"The Girl from Paris." " " " " "

Scores and separate songs and selections as played at these concerts.

Menuet Fleuri
La Victorieuse. March
La Scandinave. Mazurka } . . . . . Louis Ganné

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK,

Or the leading music dealers in Boston.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P.B.
ALE
BREWED & BOTTLED BY
A.G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES.
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

VAN NOSTRAND'S BOSTON CLUB LAGER

NORFOLK CABINET

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR STORE IS AT 232 WASHINGTON STREET.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, MONDAY, MAY 31, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 17.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, MAY 31.

MILITARY NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	NEW YORK SEVENTH REGIMENT MARCH
2.	OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry"	Suppé
3.	WALTZ from "Jack and the Beanstalk"	Sloane
4.	SELECTION, "Robin Hood"	De Koven
5.	TWO MOVEMENTS FROM BALLET MUSIC, "Sylvia" The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.	Delibes
6.	RETRAITE CROATE	Gabriel-Marie
7.	WALTZ from "Simple Simon"	Sloane-Tracey
8.	OVERTURE, "1812"	Tschaikowsky
9.	OVERTURE, "Tabasco"	Chadwick
10.	AMERICAN FANTASY	Bendix
11.	WALTZ MILITAIRE, "La Housarde"	Ganne
12.	MARCH, "Simple Simon"	Sloane

Mlle. C. CHAMINADE'S Latest Compositions.

Songs.— "My Heart Sings," 2 keys.
"Once More," 2 keys.
"Alone," 3 keys.
"Couplets Bachiques," 3 keys.
"Nuit d'Été," 2 keys.
Piano Solos.— Vert Galant, Op. 85.
Ballade, Op. 86.
Six pieces humoristiques, Op. 87, separately or in one book.

See that you get the original and only authorized edition of this composer's compositions, bearing our imprint.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Pop! Pop! Popple!
The beer ran out of the bottle.
It made a bad mess,
Where it fell on her dress;
But she said: "No matter,
Don't blame the waiter.
I'll just send it to LEWANDO'S,
at 17 Temple Place or 284
Boylston Street; and they will make my dress all right."

Teams. Phones.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P. B.
ALE
P.B
BREWED & BOTTLED BY
A.G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES.
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON
CLUB LAGER

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager
LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS
E. B. Bird

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.
BOSTON, TUESDAY, JUNE 1, 1897.
SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XII. No. 18.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 1.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Obersteiger" . . . . Zeller
2. OVERTURE, "Mignon" . . . . A. Thomas
3. WALTZ, "O Mimosa," from "The Geisha" . . . Sidney Jones (First Time.)
4. AN EVENING WITH BILSE . . . . Scherz

5. BALLET, "Coppelia" . . . . Delibes
   a. Dance of Automatons and Waltz.
   b. Czardas.
6. a. ENTR'ACTE, "Rosamunde" . . . . Schubert
   b. ENTR'ACTE, "Mignon" . . . . A. Thomas
   The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7. OVERTURE, "Pique Dame" . . . . Suppé
8. FESTIVAL MARCH . . . . Hadley (First Time.)

9. SELECTION, "Carmen" . . . . Bizet
10. WALTZ, "Blue Danube" . . . . Strauss
11. INVITATION A LA GAVOTTE . . . . . . Waldteufel (First Time.)
12. MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg" . . . . Kral

ANOTHER LIST OF SUCCESSES.
"The Light of the World," 4 keys. Stephen Adams.
"A May Morning," 3 keys. L. Denza.
"I Dream of Thee," 3 keys. H. Trotere.
"A Night in June." A. Ward.
"Evening Shadows." A. Somervell.
"Only a Withered Rose." J. R. Thomas.
"The Angelus," 2 keys. I. Luckstone.
Etc., etc., etc.
PUBLISHED BY
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth St., New York.
And to be had from any dealer in Boston.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Pop! Pop! Popple!
The beer ran out of the bottle.
It made a bad mess,
Where it fell on her dress;
But she said: "No matter,
Don't blame the waiter.
I'll just send it to LEWANDO'S,
at 17 Temple Place or 284
Boylston Street; and they will
make my dress all right."
Teams. Phones.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.
10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.
The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.
The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P. B.
ALE
BREWED & BOTTLED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES,
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON
CLUB LAGER

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER
Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 2, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 19.

THE . . . .
MUSIC . .
HALL . . .

Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 2.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Under the Double Eagle"	Wagner
2.	OVERTURE, "Fra Diavolo"	Auber
3.	WALTZ, "Jolly Fellows"	Vollstedt
4.	POTPOURRI from "La Fille de Madame Angot"	Lecocq
5.	PRELUDE, ACT I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
6.	LA COLOMBE The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.	Gounod
7.	MENUET, "Pearl of Orr's Island"	Thomas Ryan
8.	TWO SPANISH DANCES	Moszkowski
9.	WALTZ, "Graziella" Conducted by the Composer.	Knecht
10.	LA CINQUANTAINE	Gabriel-Marie
11.	MAZOURKA, "Woman's Heart"	Strauss
12.	RADETZKY MARCH	Joh. Strauss, Sr.

Song Recital programmes this season have included the following successes: —

"La Superbetta," old Italian	Arr. by A. L.
"White Heather"	Landon Ronald.
"Celia"	Arr. by A. L.
"Veneziana"	Arr. by A. L.
"The Jolly Comber"	Arr. by L. Broadwood.
"Oh, Yarmouth is a pretty yown"	Arr. by L. Broadwood.
The Clown Songs	C. Villiers Stanford.
"Who'll buy my Lavender"	Edward German.
Shepherd's Wife Song	R. H. Walthew.

SEND FOR LISTS.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Pop! Pop! Popple!
The beer ran out of the bottle.
It made a bad mess,
Where it fell on her dress;
But she said: "No matter,
Don't blame the waiter.
I'll just send it to LEWANDO'S,
at 17 Temple Place or 284
Boylston Street; and they will
make my dress all right."

Teams. Phones.

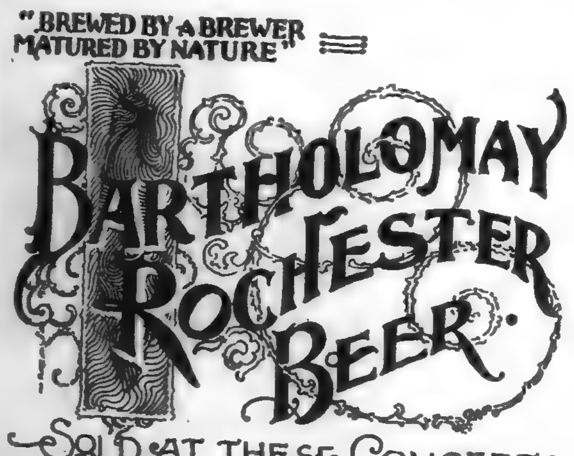
New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"



SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P.B
ALE

BREWED & BOTTLED BY
A.G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES,
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON
CLUB LAGER

NORFOLK
CABINET

Norfolk
Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

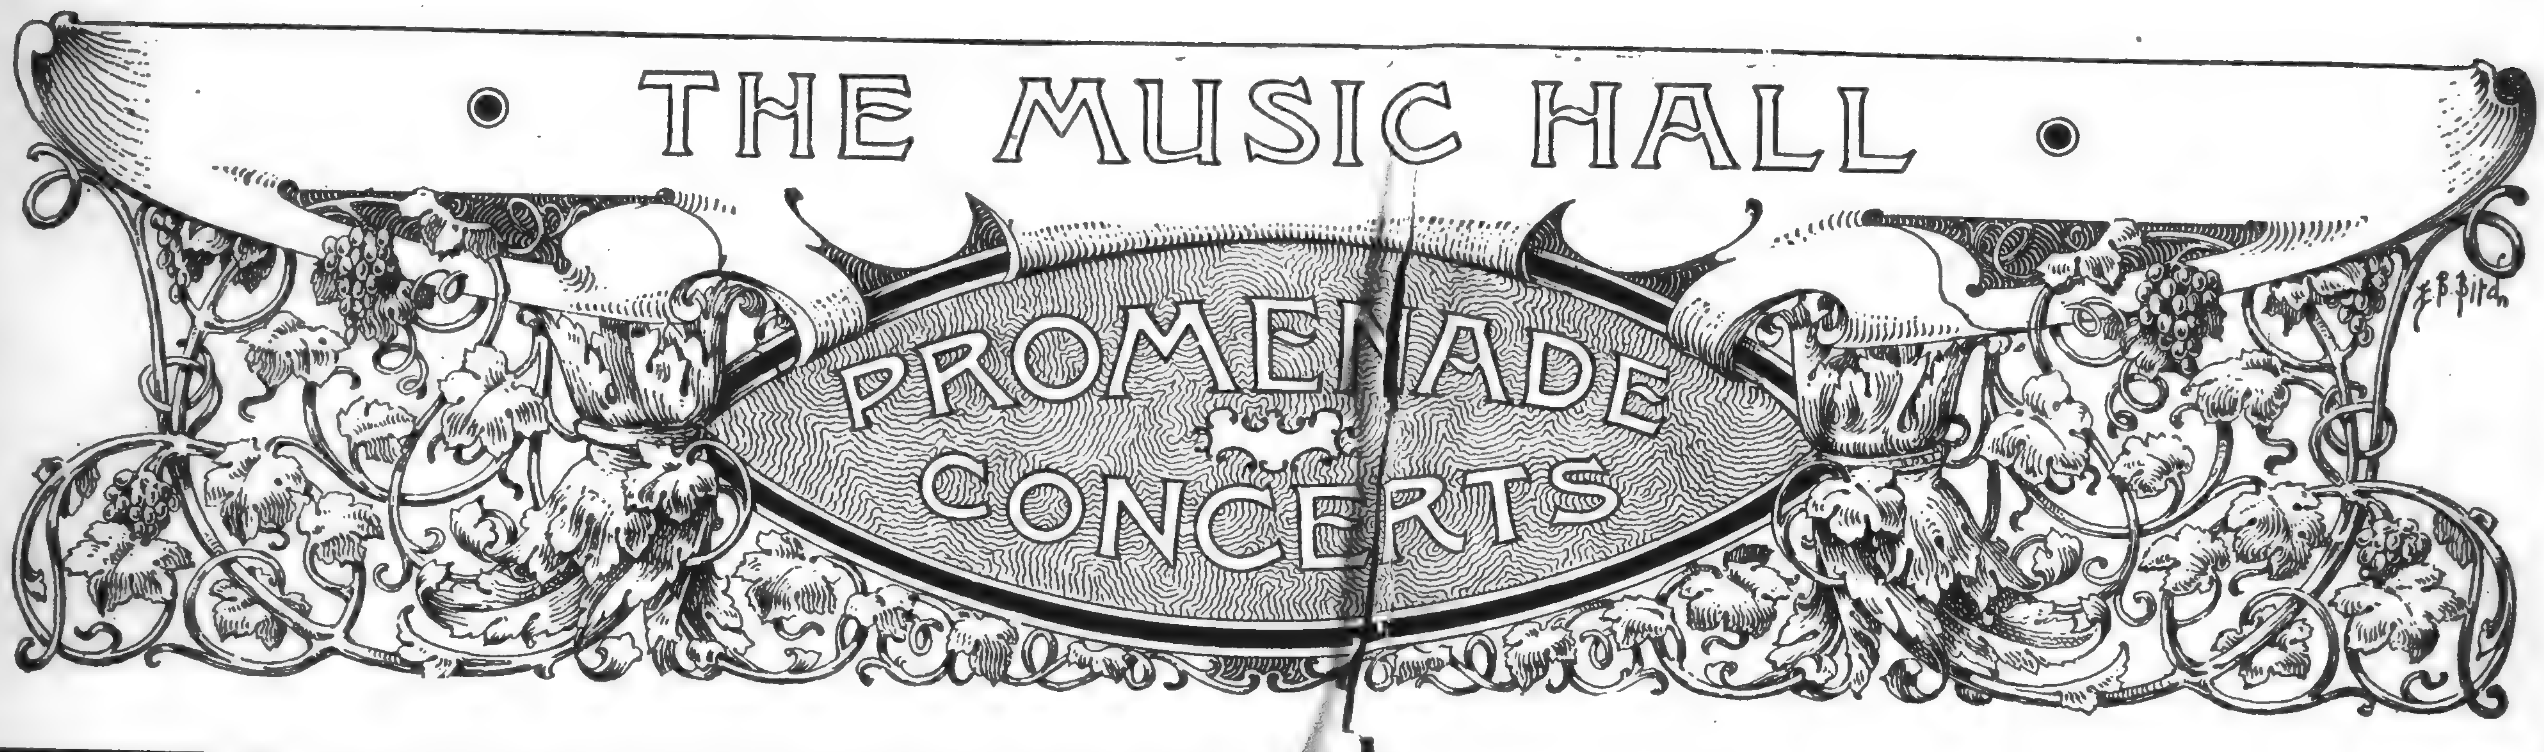
THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE, 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

[163]

BLANK PAGE

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

TRY “THE BARRISTER,” DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.



PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, JUNE 4, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 21.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 4.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, “Vienna Dude”	Wagner
2.	OVERTURE, “Zampa”	Hérold
3.	WALTZ from “The Mandarin”	De Koven
4.	SELECTION, “The Brigands”	Offenbach
5.	CORONATION MARCH from “Le Prophete”	Meyerbeer
6.	a. SEVILLANA	Massenet
	b. SERENATA	Moszkowski
	The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.
7.	TWO HUNGARIAN DANCES	Brahms
8.	FINALE, ACT I., “Lohengrin”	Wagner
9.	OVERTURE, “Phedre”	Massenet
10.	WALTZ, “Wine, Woman, and Song”	Strauss
11.	POLKA from “The Tyrolean”	Zeller
12.	WASHINGTON POST MARCH	Sousa

Mlle. C. CHAMINADE'S Latest Compositions.

Songs.— “My Heart Sings,” 2 keys.
“Once More,” 2 keys.
“Alone,” 3 keys.
“Couplets Bachiques,” 3 keys.
“Nuit d'Été,” 2 keys.

Piano Solos.— Vert Galant, Op. 85.
Ballade, Op. 86.
Six pieces humoristiques, Op. 87, separately or in one book.

See that you get the original and only authorized edition of this composer's compositions, bearing our imprint.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.
4

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Pop! Pop! Popple!
The beer ran out of the bottle.
It made a bad mess,
Where it fell on her dress;
But she said: “No matter,
Don't blame the waiter.
I'll just send it to LEWANDO'S,
at 17 Temple Place or 284
Boylston Street; and they will
make my dress all right.”

Teams. Phones.

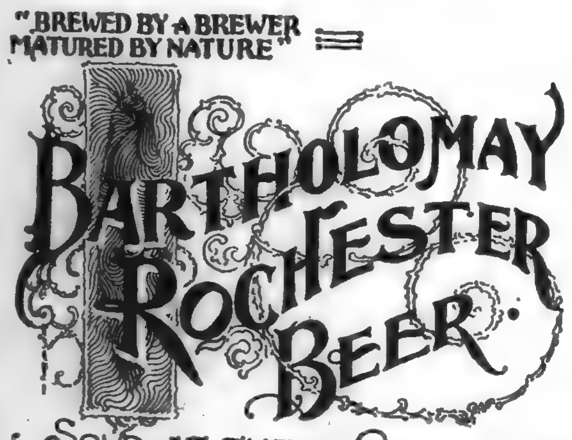
New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

“BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE”



SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

BOSTON CLUB LAGER
AN EXPORT BEER FOR TABLE USE
BOTTLED ONLY AT THE BREWERY
BREWED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
CHARLESTOWN MASS.

DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P. B.
ALE

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Co.
Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our “Cabinet” and “Bismarck Braeu” (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

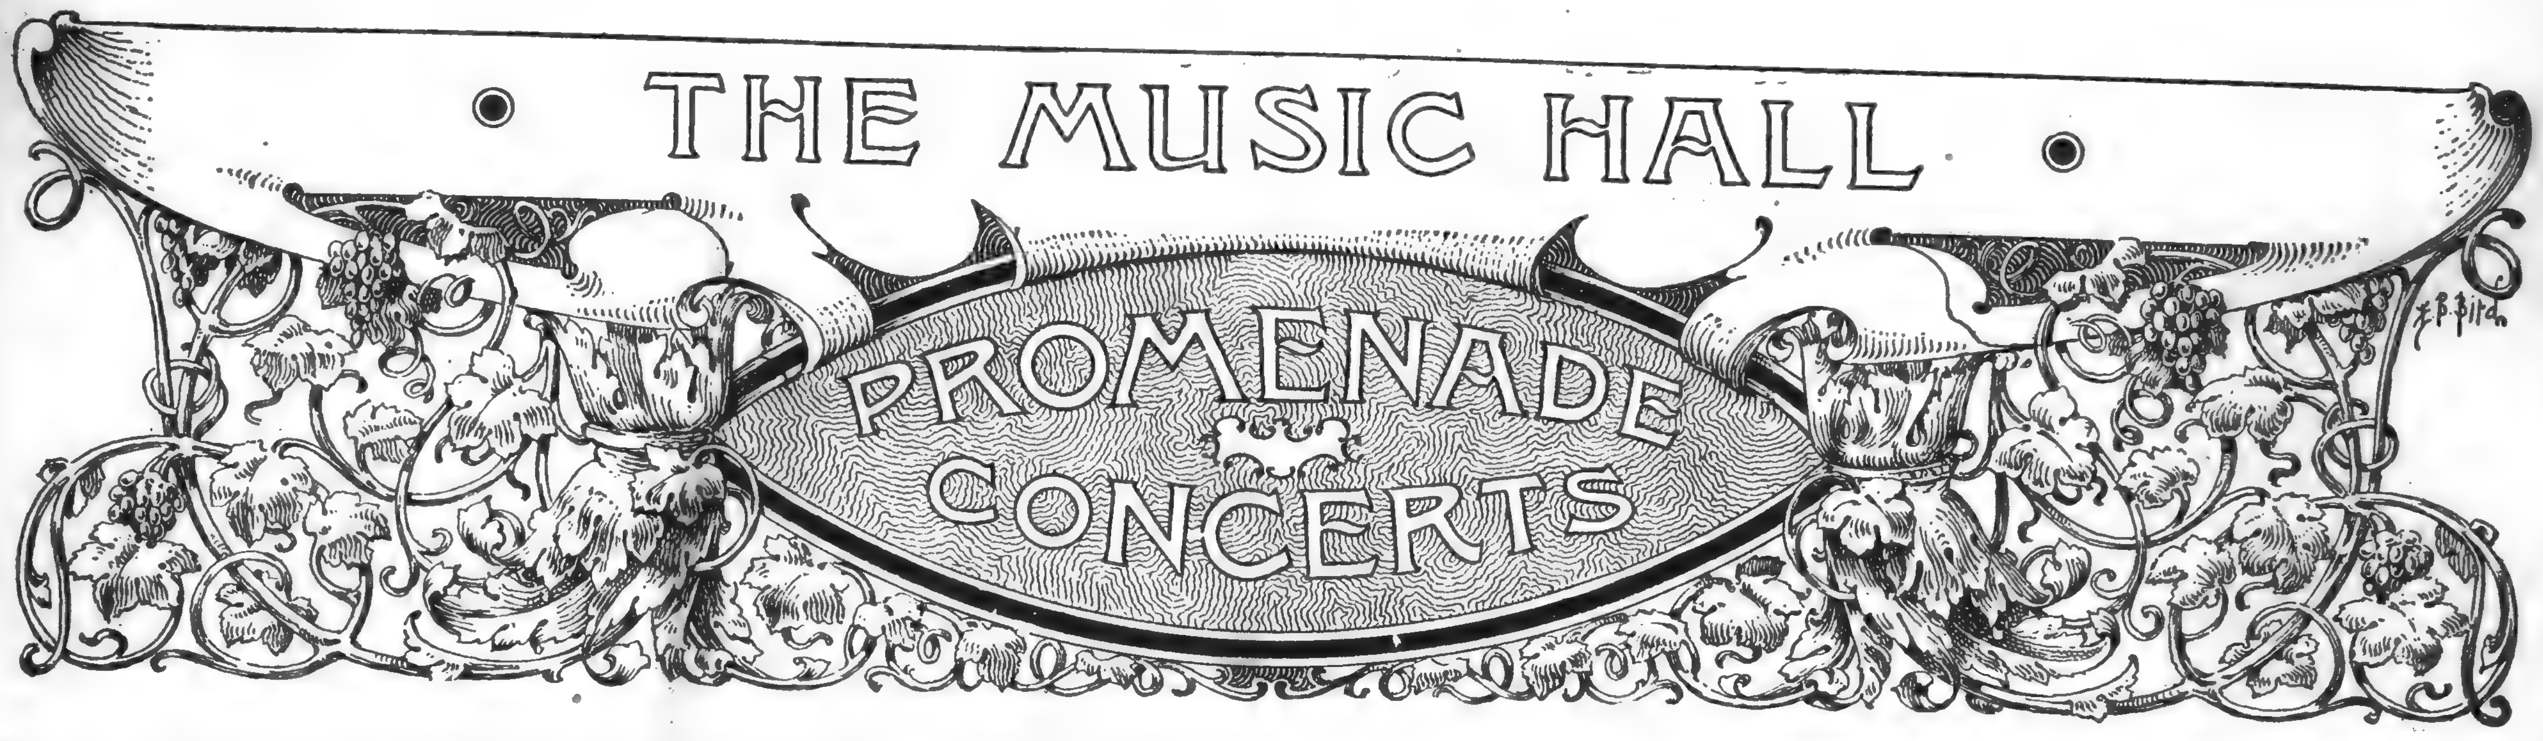
HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH. CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c. SOLD AT THE POPS.”

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES



THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 5, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 22.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 5.

Farewell appearance of Conductor MAX ZACH.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Austria" . . . . Zach
2. OVERTURE, "William Tell" . . . . Rossini
3. WALTZ, "Arabian Nights" . . . . Strauss
4. HARP SOLO. a. "Chant d'Exiles" . . . . . . Godefroid
   b. Mazourka . . . . . Edmund Schuecker

Soloist, Mr. HEINRICH SCHUECKER.

The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.

5. SELECTION from "The Geisha" . . . . . Sydney Jones
6. VIOLIN SOLO, Faust Fantasie . . . . . Wieniawski

Soloist, Mr. JACQUES HOFFMANN.

The audience is respectfully requested to preserve silence during the performance of this number.

7. POLISH DANCE . . . . Scharwenka
8. OVERTURE, "Rienzi" . . . . Wagner

9. WALTZ, "Grubenlichter" . . . . Zeller
10. AMERICAN FANTASY . . . . Bendix
By Request.
11. POLKA, "Bella-Bocca" . . . . Waldteufel
12. MARCH, "Up the Street" . . . . Morse

ANOTHER LIST OF SUCCESSES.

"The Light of the World," 4 keys. Stephen Adams.
"A May Morning," 3 keys. L. Denza.
"I Dream of Thee," 3 keys. H. Trotere.
"A Night in June." A. Ward.
"Evening Shadows." A. Somervell.
"Only a Withered Rose." J. R. Thomas.
"The Angelus," 2 keys. I. Luckstone.
Etc., etc., etc.

PUBLISHED BY
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth St., New York.
And to be had from any dealer in Boston.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Pop! Pop! Popple!
The beer ran out of the bottle.
It made a bad mess,
Where it fell on her dress;
But she said: "No matter,
Don't blame the waiter.
I'll just send it to LEWANDO'S,
at 17 Temple Place or 284
Boylston Street; and they will
make my dress all right."

Teams. Phones.

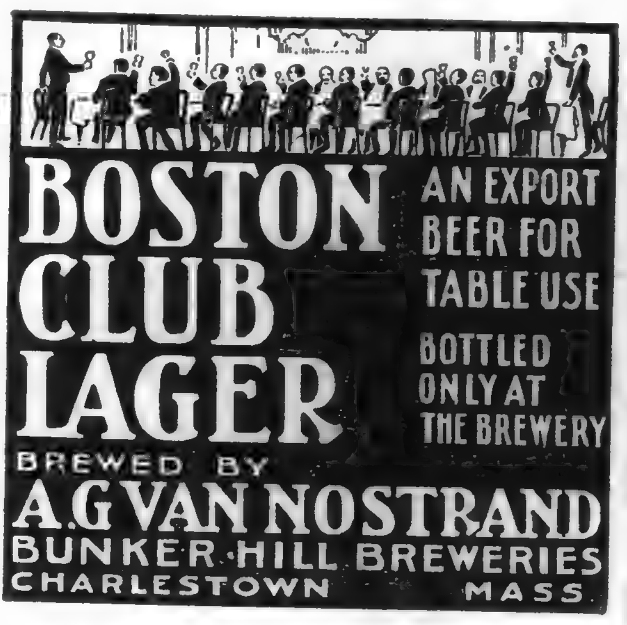
New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.



BOSTON CLUB LAGER
AN EXPORT BEER FOR TABLE USE
BOTTLED ONLY AT THE BREWERY
BREWED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
CHARLESTOWN MASS

DRINK VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P B ALE

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c. SOLD AT THE POPS."

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. { 10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE 232 WASHINGTON STREET } ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, MONDAY, JUNE 7, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 23.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. MAX ZACH, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 7.

First appearance of Conductor LEO SCHULZ.

PROGRAMME.

1. CORONATION MARCH . . . . Meyerbeer
2. OVERTURE, "Fra Diavolo" . . . . Auber
3. SELECTION, "Prince Ananias" . . . . Herbert
   (First Time.)
4. WALTZ, "Wiener Blut" . . . . Strauss

---

5. OVERTURE, "Benvenuto Cellini" . . . . Berlioz
6. EVENING REST . . . . Loeschhorn
   For String Orchestra and Harp.
   (First Time.)
7. KUJAWIAK . . . . Wieniawski
   Arranged by L. SCHULZ.
   (First Time.)
8. FINALE, ACT I., "Lohengrin" . . . . Wagner

---

9. OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry" . . . . Suppé
10. SELECTION, "La Grande Duchesse" . . . . . . Offenbach
11. POLKA, "Arabella" . . . . Knecht
    (First Time.)
12. MARCH, "Tabasco" . . . . Chadwick

Song Recital programmes this season have included the following successes:—

"La Superbetta," old Italian . . . . Arr. by A. L.
"White Heather" . . . . Landon Ronald.
"Celia" . . . . Arr. by A. L.
"Veneziana" . . . . Arr. by A. L.
"The Jolly Comber" . . . . Arr. by L. Broadwood.
"Oh, Yarmouth is a pretty yown" Arr. by L. Broadwood.
The Clown Songs . . . . . . C. Villiers Stanford.
"Who'll buy my Lavender" . . . Edward German.
Shepherd's Wife Song . . . . . R. H. Walthew.

SEND FOR LISTS.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

MEN,

Your Summer Clothing can be cleansed or dyed and pressed, ready to wear, for $2.00 per suit, and done properly.

LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Teams. Phones.

New Light.

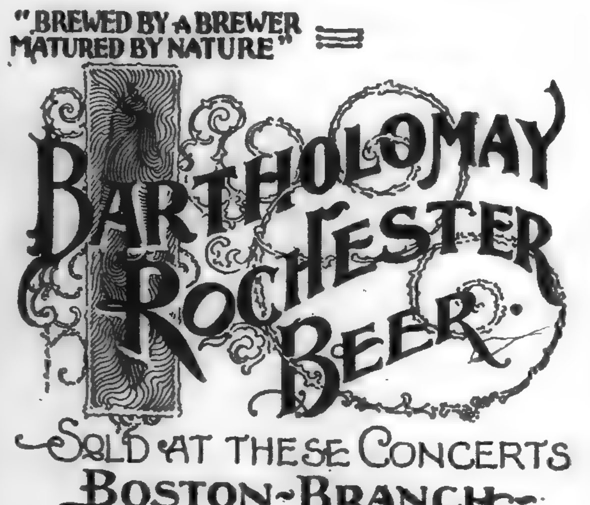
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

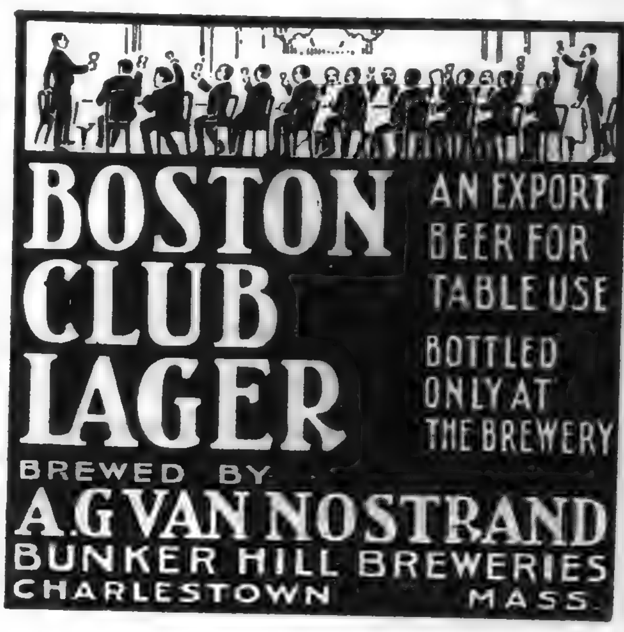
The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"



BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.



BOSTON
CLUB
LAGER
AN EXPORT
BEER FOR TABLE USE
BOTTLED
ONLY AT THE BREWERY
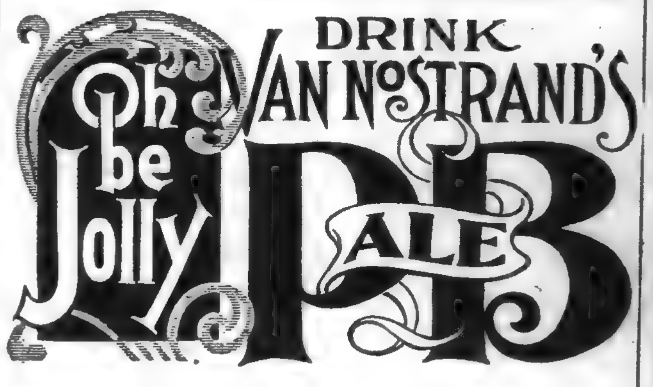
BREWED BY
A.G VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
CHARLESTOWN MASS.



DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P B
ALE

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c. SOLD AT THE POPS."

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, TUESDAY, JUNE 8, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 24.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 8.

PROGRAMME.

1.	WEDDING MARCH	Mendelssohn
2.	OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
3.	GAVOTTE CIRKUS	Fliege
4.	SELECTION, "Carmen"	Bizet
5.	OVERTURE, "Ivane soussanine" (First Time.)	Glinka
6.	PRELUDE, JANIE (First Time.)	Dalcrose
7.	RIDE OF THE HUSSARS (First Time.)	Spindler
8.	SLAVONIC RHAPSODY, No. 2	Dvorak
9.	OVERTURE, "Martha"	Flotow
10.	WALTZ, "Vienna Beauties" (First Time.)	Ziehrer
11.	SELECTION, "Mikado"	Sullivan
12.	MARCH, "Washington Post"	Sousa

SPECIAL.

Thursday, June 10, First Soloists' Night.

"THE CIRCUS GIRL." London and New York success.

"The Girl from Paris." " " " " "

Scores and separate songs and selections as played at these concerts.

Menuet Fleuri
La Victorieuse. March } . . . . . Louis Ganné
La Scandinave. Mazurka

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK,

Or the leading music dealers in Boston.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

MEN,

Your Summer Clothing can be cleansed or dyed and pressed, ready to wear, for $2.00 per suit, and done properly.

LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Teams. Phones.

New Light.

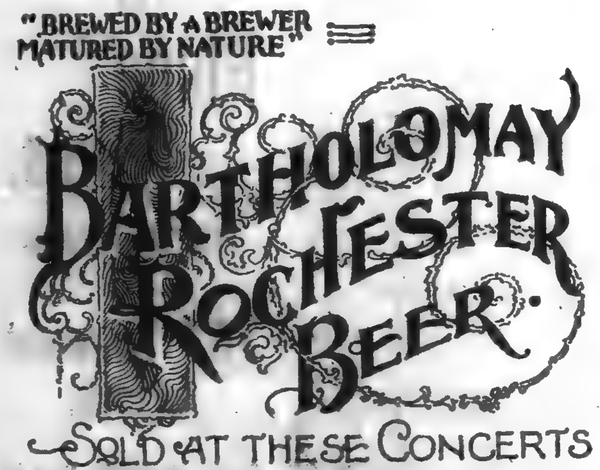
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

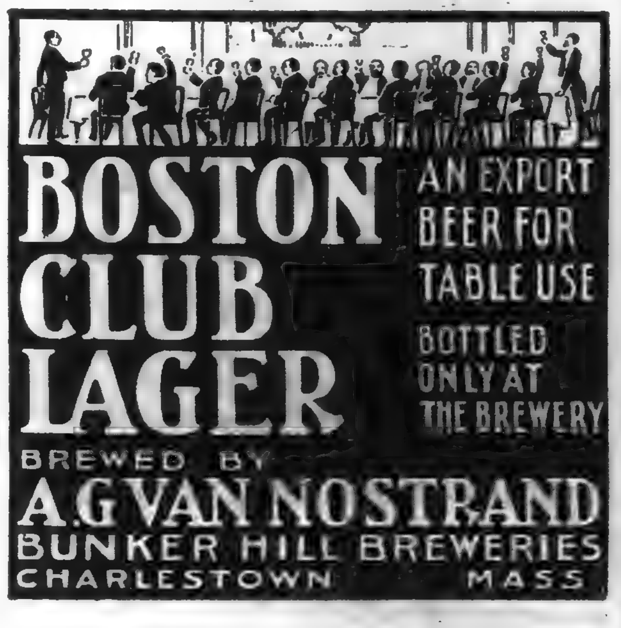
The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"



BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.



BOSTON
CLUB
LAGER
AN EXPORT
BEER FOR TABLE USE
BOTTLED
ONLY AT THE BREWERY
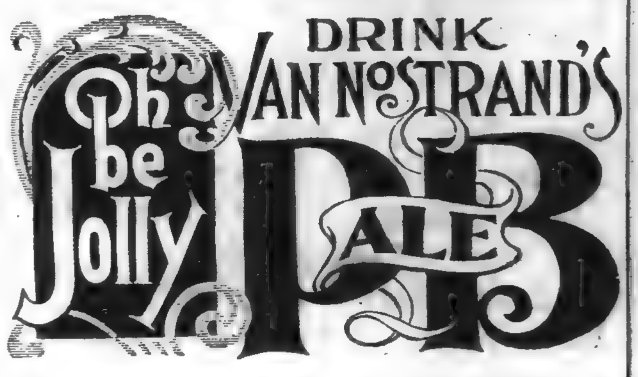
BREWED BY
A.G VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
CHARLESTOWN MASS



Oh be Jolly
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P B
ALE

NORFOLK
CABINET

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, } Telephone, 56 Roxbury
EDWARD RUHL, } or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 9, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 25.

LEWANDO'S · DYEING · LAUNDRY · CLEANSING

MEN,

Your Summer Clothing can be cleansed or dyed and pressed, ready to wear, for $2.00 per suit, and done properly.

LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Teams. Phones.

New Light.

All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"

BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 9.

SPECIAL PROGRAMME.

COMPLIMENTARY TO THE HOTEL MEN'S MUTUAL BENEFIT ASSOCIATION.

1. HOCH HABSBURG MARCH . . . . Kral
2. OBERON OVERTURE . . . . Weber
3. THOUSAND AND ONE NIGHTS WALTZ . . . Strauss
4. ERMINIE SELECTION . . . . Jacobowski
5. LOHENGRIN FINALE, ACT I. . . . . . . Wagner
6. MARIONETTES' FUNERAL MARCH . . . . Gounod
7. ESPANA . . . . Waldteufel
8. NABUCODONOSOR OVERTURE . . . . . . Verdi
9. SYLVIA BALLET MUSIC . . . . Delibes
   a. Les Chasseuresses.
   b. Pizzicato Polka.
10. MIKADO SELECTION . . . . Sullivan
11. BELLA-BOCCA POLKA . . . . Waldteufel
12. AMERICAN MARCH . . . . Strube

SPECIAL.—Thursday, June 10, First Soloists' Night.

Mlle. C. CHAMINADE'S Latest Compositions.

Songs.— "My Heart Sings," 2 keys.
"Once More," 2 keys.
"Alone," 3 keys.
"Couplets Bachiques," 3 keys.
"Nuit d'Été," 2 keys.

Piano Solos.— Vert Galant, Op. 85.
Ballade, Op. 86.
Six pieces humoristiques, Op. 87, separately or in one book.

See that you get the original and only authorized edition of this composer's compositions, bearing our imprint.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

BOSTON CLUB LAGER
AN EXPORT BEER FOR TABLE USE
BOTTLED ONLY AT THE BREWERY
BREWED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
CHARLESTOWN MASS.

DRINK VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh! be Jolly
P. B.
ALE

NORFOLK CABINET

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO., 10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE, 32 WASHINGTON STREET, ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS
F.B. Bird.

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, THURSDAY, JUNE 10, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 26.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 10.

SOLOISTS' NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Queen of Sheba" . . . . . . Gounod
2. OVERTURE, "Felsenmühle" (First Time.) . . . . . . Reissiger
3. SERENADE FOR FLUTE AND FRENCH HORN . . Titl
   MESSRS. JACQUET and HACKEBARTH. (First Time.)
4. SELECTION, "Fledermaus" . . . . . . Strauss

---

5. INTRODUCTION TO ACT III., "Lohengrin" . . Wagner
6. a. ROMANCE } Solos for Violin } . . . . Wieniawski
   b. SPANISH DANCE } . . . . Sarasate
   Soloist, CONCERTMASTER ONDRICEK.
7. AIR, "Louis XIII." . . . . . . Ghys
8. SELECTION, "Faust" . . . . . . Gounod

---

9. WALTZ, "Meerleuchten" . . . . . . Ziehrer
10. NOCTURNE FOR 'CELLO AND HARP . . . Chopin
    MESSRS. SCHULZ and SCHUECKER.
11. KUJAWIAK . . . . Wieniawski
    Arranged by L. SCHULZ.
12. MARCH, "Boccaccio" . . . . Suppé

ANOTHER LIST OF SUCCESSES.

"The Light of the World," 4 keys. Stephen Adams.
"A May Morning," 3 keys. L. Denza.
"I Dream of Thee," 3 keys. H. Trotere.
"A Night in June." A. Ward.
"Evening Shadows." A. Somervell.
"Only a Withered Rose." J. R. Thomas.
"The Angelus," 2 keys. I. Luckstone.
Etc., etc., etc.

PUBLISHED BY
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth St., New York.
And to be had from any dealer in Boston.

1

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S DYEING CLEANSING LAUNDRY

MEN,
Your Summer Clothing can be cleansed or dyed and pressed, ready to wear, for $2.00 per suit, and done properly.

LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Teams. Phones.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

BOSTON CLUB LAGER
AN EXPORT BEER FOR TABLE USE
BOTTLED ONLY AT THE BREWERY
BREWED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
CHARLESTOWN MASS.

DRINK
Oh be Jolly VAN NOSTRAND'S P.B. ALE

NORFOLK CABINET
LAGER BEER
Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. { 10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE 232 WASHINGTON STREET } ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

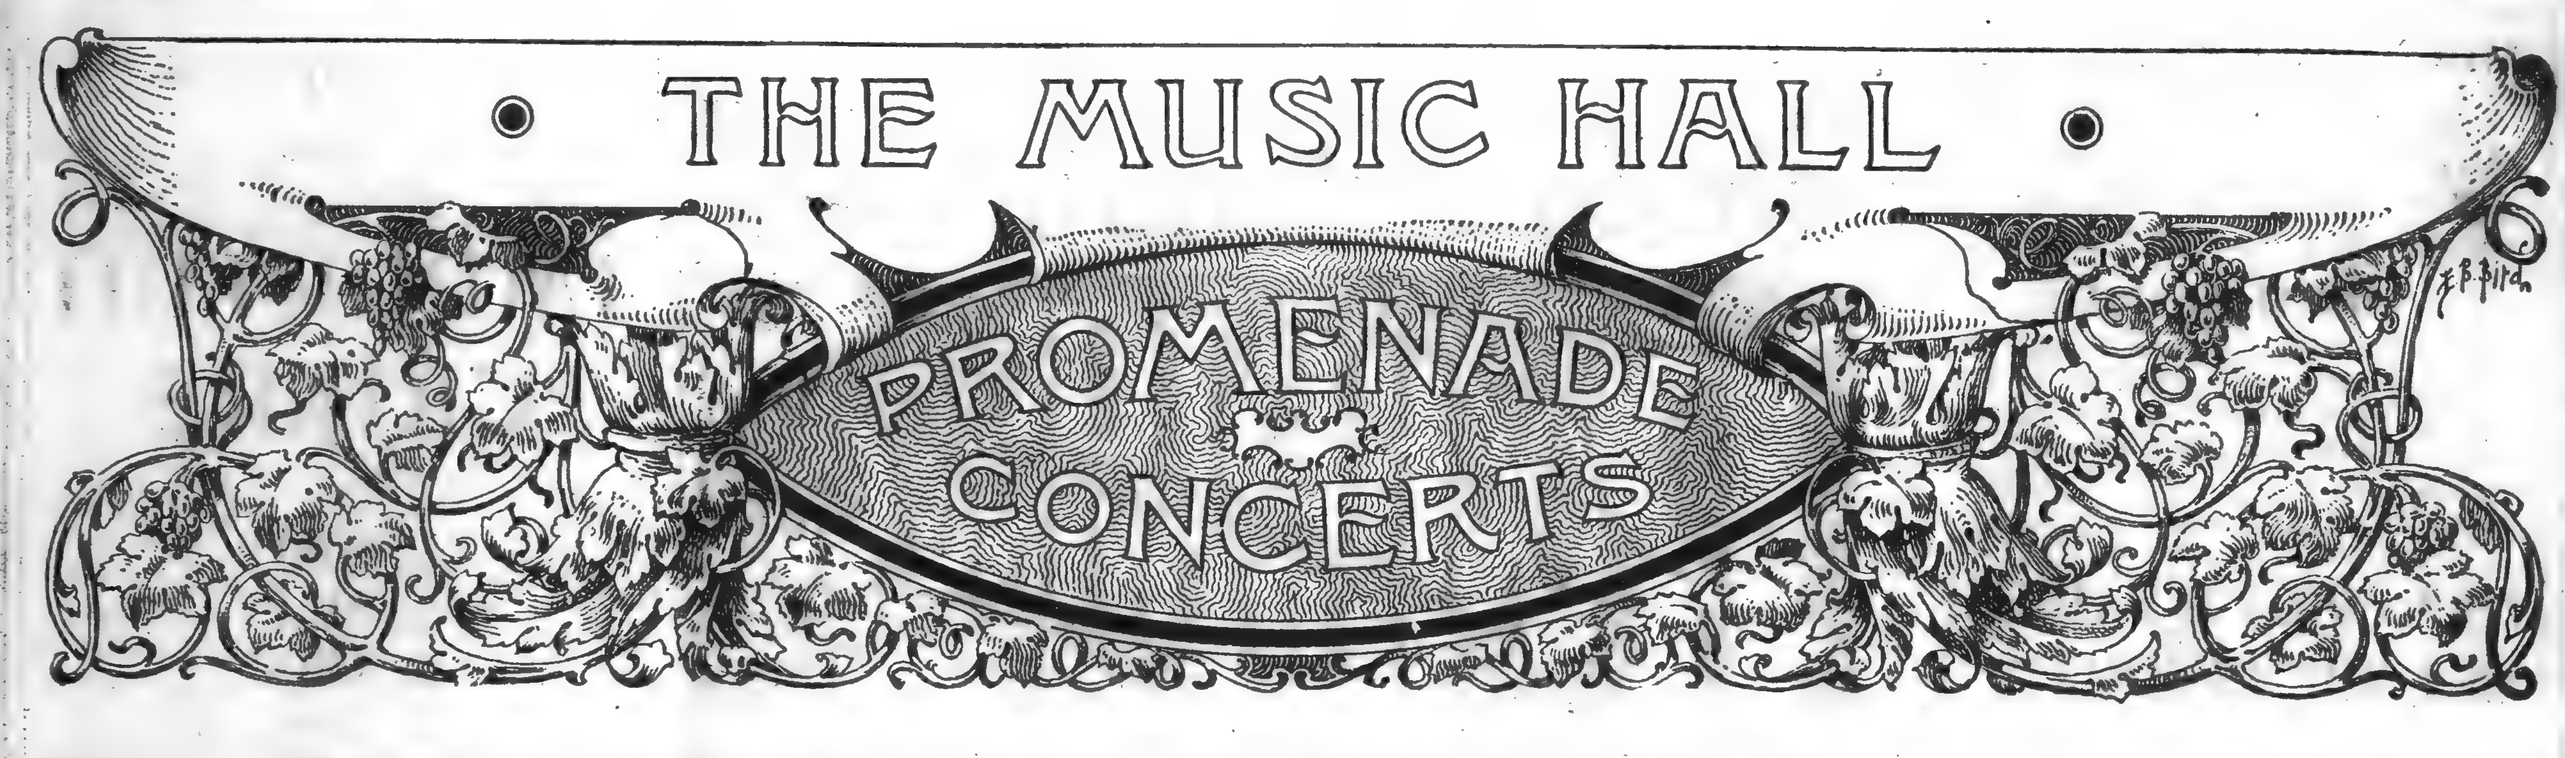
ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH. CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[110]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.



THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, JUNE 11, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 27.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 11.

PROGRAMME.

1.	CORONATION MARCH	Svendsen
2.	OVERTURE, "L'Italienne en Algiers" (First Time.)	Rossini
3.	MAZOURKA, "Halka"	Moniuszko
4.	SELECTION, "The Huguenots"	Meyerbeer
5.	OVERTURE, "The Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
6.	SERENADE, "Under the Balcony." (For String Orchestra.) Solo 'Cello, MR. NAGEL. (First Time.)	Wuerst
7.	WALTZ, "Hydropaten"	Gungl
8.	BALLET MUSIC from "Feramors" a. Dance of the Bayadères. b. Candle Dance.	Rubinstein
9.	OVERTURE, "Patrie" (First time at these concerts.)	Bizet
10.	EVENING REST. (For String Orchestra.) (First Time.)	Thallon
11.	SELECTION, "La Perichole"	Offenbach
12.	MARCH, "On Dress Parade" (First Time.)	Knecht

Song Recital programmes this season have included the following successes: —

"La Superbetta," old Italian	Arr. by A. L.
"White Heather"	Landon Ronald.
"Celia"	Arr. by A. L.
"Veneziana"	Arr. by A. L.
"The Jolly Comber"	Arr. by L. Broadwood.
"Oh, Yarmouth is a pretty yown"	Arr. by L. Broadwood.
The Clown Songs	C. Villiers Stanford.
"Who'll buy my Lavender"	Edward German.
Shepherd's Wife Song	R. H. Walthew.

SEND FOR LISTS.
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

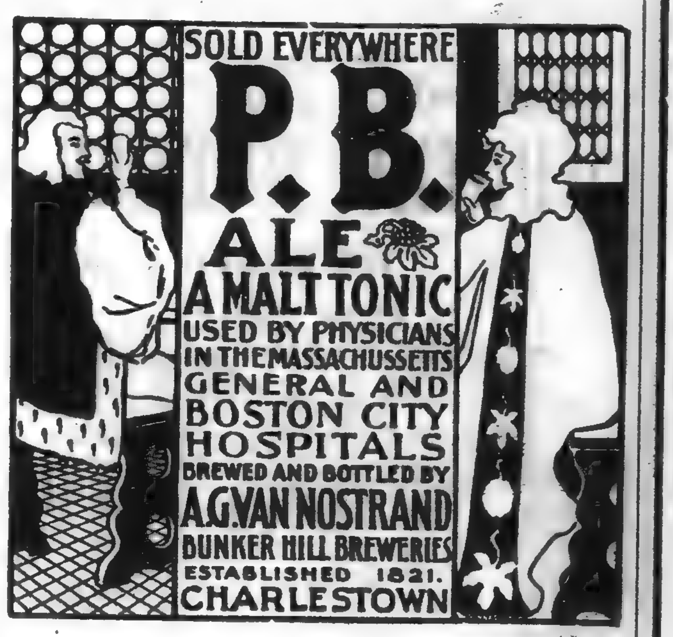
BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

MEN,
Your Summer Clothing can be cleansed or dyed and pressed, ready to wear, for $2.00 per suit, and done properly.
LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Teams. Phones.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.
10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.
The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.
The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.



SOLD EVERYWHERE
P. B.
ALE
A MALT TONIC
USED BY PHYSICIANS IN THE MASSACHUSSETTS
GENERAL AND BOSTON CITY HOSPITALS
BREWED AND BOTTLED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
ESTABLISHED 1821.
CHARLESTOWN

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[111]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

TRY “ THE BARRISTI ” DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON SATURDAY, JUNE 12, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 28.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 12.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, “Liberty Bell”	Sousa
2.	OVERTURE, “Struensee” (First Time.)	Meyerbeer
3.	WALTZ, “Les Patineurs”	Waldteufel
4.	SELECTION, “Robin Hood”	De Koven
5.	OVERTURE, “Tannhäuser”	Wagner
6.	MELODY, “Old Folks at Home” (For String Orchestra.) (First Time.)	Bush
7.	WALTZ, “Kaiser”	Strauss
8.	COLUMBIAN MARCH	Schulz
9.	NARCISSUS	Nevin
10.	SELECTION, “Tabasco”	Chadwick
11.	WALTZ, “Grubenlichter”	Zeller
12.	RADETZKY MARCH	Strauss

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Wednesday, June 16. WAGNER NIGHT.
Thursday, June 17. PATRIOTIC NIGHT.

“THE CIRCUS GIRL.” London and New York success.
“The Girl from Paris.” “ “ “ “ “

Scores and separate songs and selections as played at these concerts.

Menuet Fleuri
La Victorieuse. March
La Scandinave. Mazurka } . . . . Louis Ganné

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK,

Or the leading music dealers in Boston.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

MEN,

Your Summer Clothing can be cleansed or dyed and pressed, ready to wear, for $2.00 per suit, and done properly.

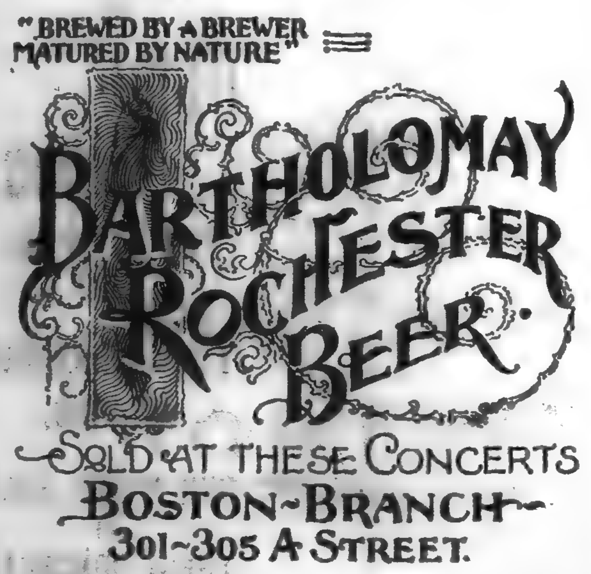
LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Teams, Phones.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

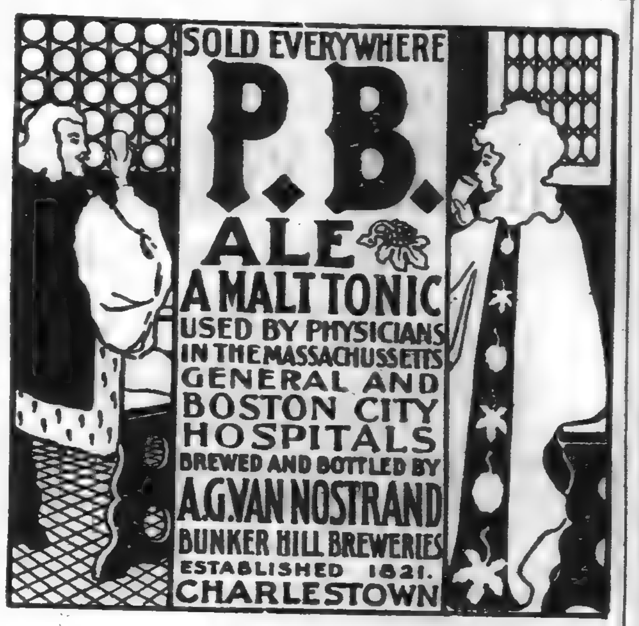
10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.



“BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE”
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.



SOLD EVERYWHERE
P.B.
ALE
A MALT TONIC
USED BY PHYSICIANS IN THE MASSACHUSETTS GENERAL AND BOSTON CITY HOSPITALS BREWED AND BOTTLED BY
A.G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
ESTABLISHED 1821.
CHARLESTOWN

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our “Cabinet” and “Bismarck Braeu” (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

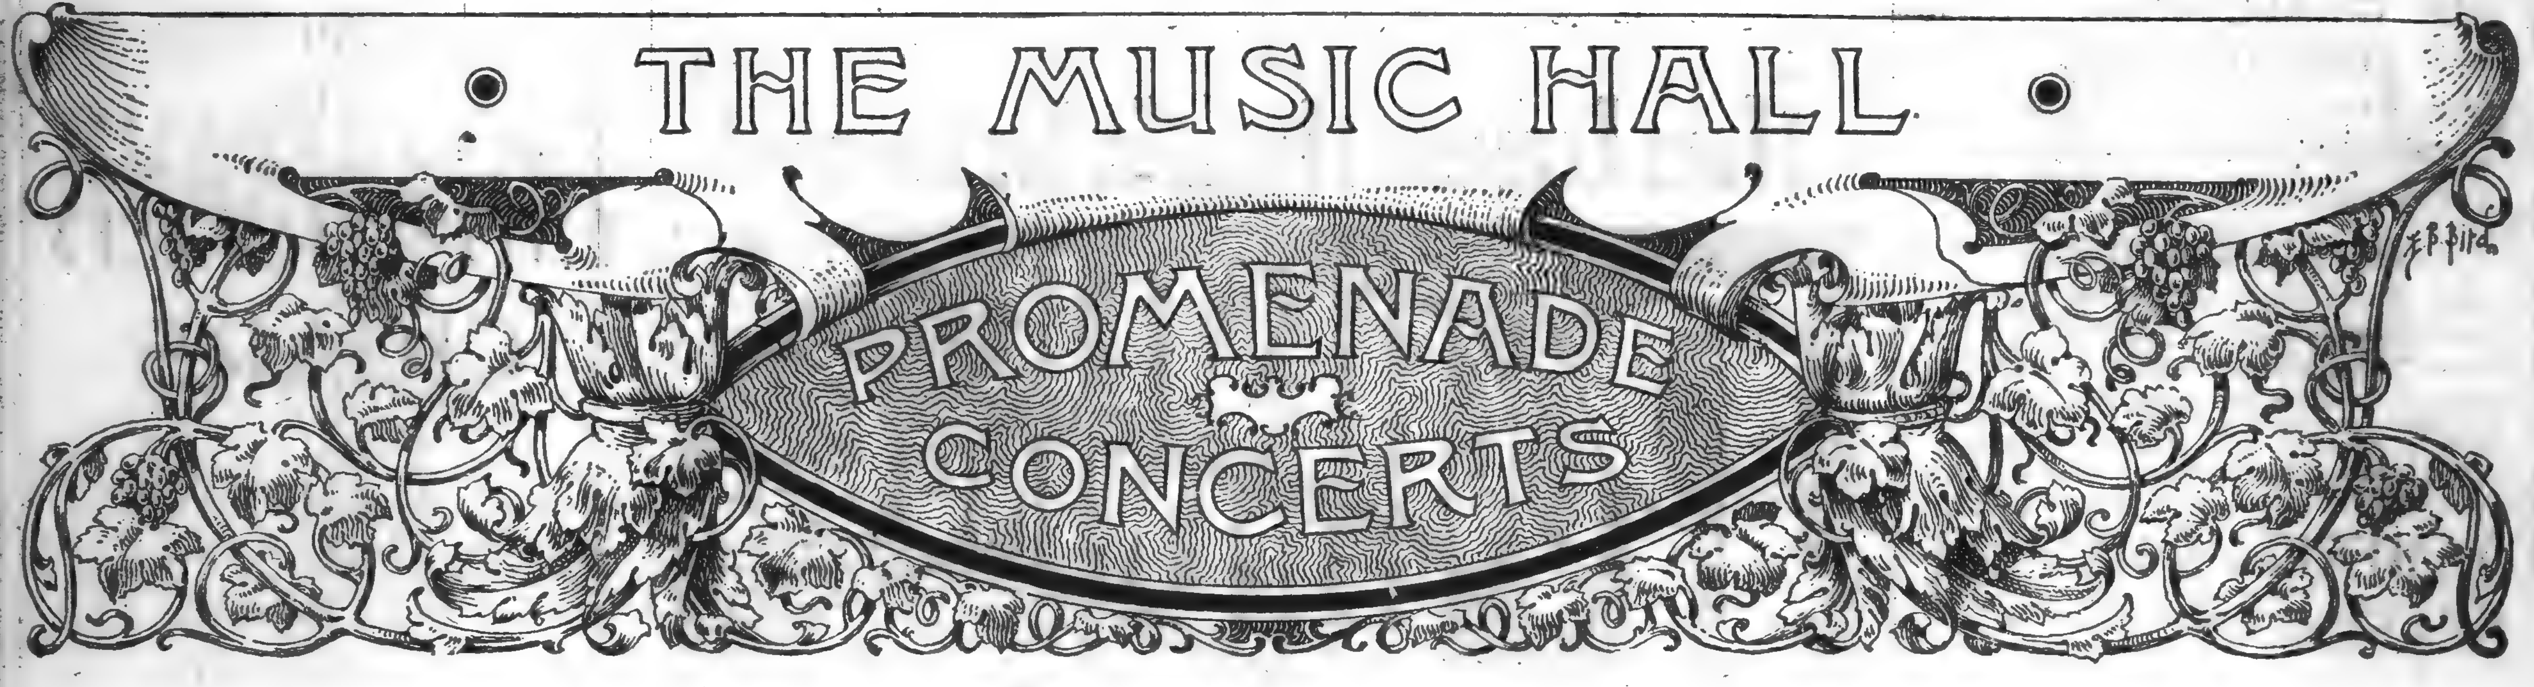
H. W. HABICH, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury
EDWARD RUHL, { or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE “POPS.”

[112]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.



THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, MONDAY, JUNE 14, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 29.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

MEN,

Your Summer Clothing can be cleansed or dyed and pressed, ready to wear, for $2.00 per suit, and done properly.

LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Teams. Phones.

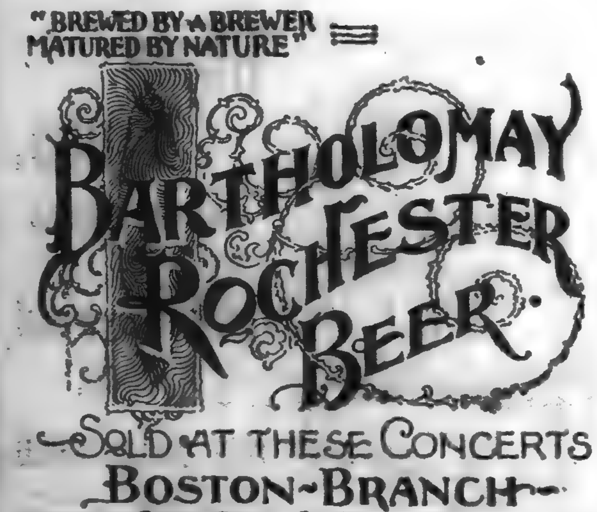
New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"



BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 14.

NOVELTY NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.*	MARCH	Joachim
2.*	OVERTURE, "Chant des Belges"	Litolff
3.*	WALTZ, "Rose Leaves"	Waldteufel
4.	SELECTION, "The Geisha"	Sydney Jones
5.*	OVERTURE, "Astorga"	Abert
6.*	BALLET MUSIC, "Laurin" a. Night. b. Bacchanale.	Moszkowski
7.*	WALTZ, "Donauweibschen"	Strauss
8.*	KUKUSKA. Russian Dances	Lehar
9.*	SELECTION, "Robert le Diable"	Meyerbeer
10.*	CHARME D'AMOUR	Ronsard
11.	RIDE OF THE HUSSARS	Spindler
12.*	MARCH, "Cotton King"	Sousa

* First Time

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Wednesday, June 16. WAGNER NIGHT.
Thursday, June 17. PATRIOTIC NIGHT.

Mlle. C. CHAMINADE'S Latest Compositions.

Songs.— "My Heart Sings," 2 keys.
"Once More," 2 keys.
"Alone," 3 keys.
"Couplets Bachiques," 3 keys.
"Nuit d'Été," 2 keys.

Piano Solos.— Vert Galant, Op. 85.
Ballade, Op. 86.
Six pieces humoristiques, Op. 87, separately or in one book.

See that you get the original and only authorized edition of this composer's compositions, bearing our imprint.

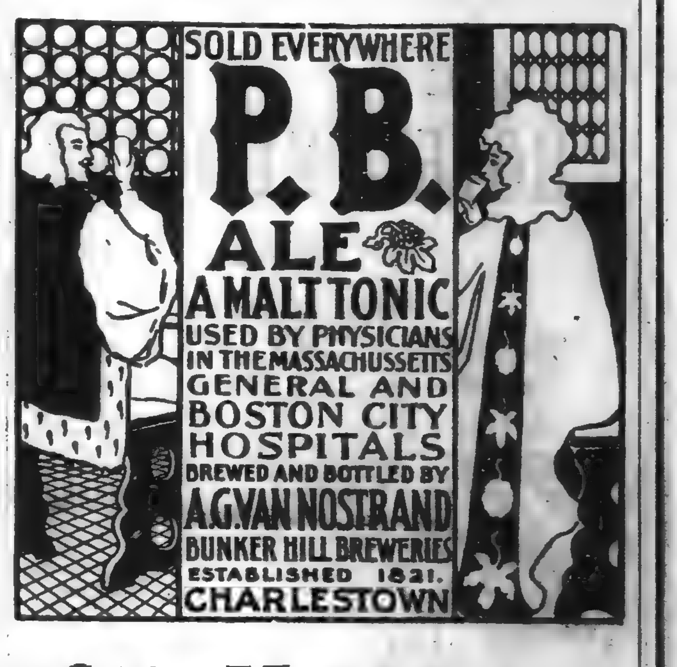
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.



SOLD EVERYWHERE
P.B.
ALE
A MALT TONIC
USED BY PHYSICIANS IN THE MASSACHUSETTS GENERAL AND BOSTON CITY HOSPITALS BREWED AND BOTTLED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
ESTABLISHED 1821.
CHARLESTOWN

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[113]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, TUESDAY, JUNE 15, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 30.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 15.

PROGRAMME.

1.	PERSIAN MARCH	Strauss
2.	OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppé
3.	WALTZ, "The Kiss"	Strauss
4.	SELECTION, "Robin Hood"	De Koven
5.	OVERTURE, "Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
6.	CHANSON TRISTE. (For String Orchestra.) (First Time.)	Tschaikowsky
7.	SELECTION, "Traviata"	Verdi
8.	WALTZ, "A Toi"	Waldteufel
9.	DANSE MACABRE	Saint-Saëns
10.	SELECTION, "Prince Ananias"	Herbert
11.	SPANISH SERENADE	Métra
12.	TEUFELS MARCH	Suppé

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Wednesday, June 16. WAGNER NIGHT.
Thursday, June 17. PATRIOTIC NIGHT.
Tuesday, June 22. HARVARD NIGHT.

ANOTHER LIST OF SUCCESSES.

"The Light of the World," 4 keys. Stephen Adams.
"A May Morning," 3 keys. L. Denza.
"I Dream of Thee," 3 keys. H. Trotere.
"A Night in June." A. Ward.
"Evening Shadows." A. Somervell.
"Only a Withered Rose." J. R. Thomas.
"The Angelus," 2 keys. J. Luckstone.
Etc., etc., etc.

PUBLISHED BY
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth St., New York.
And to be had from any dealer in Boston.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

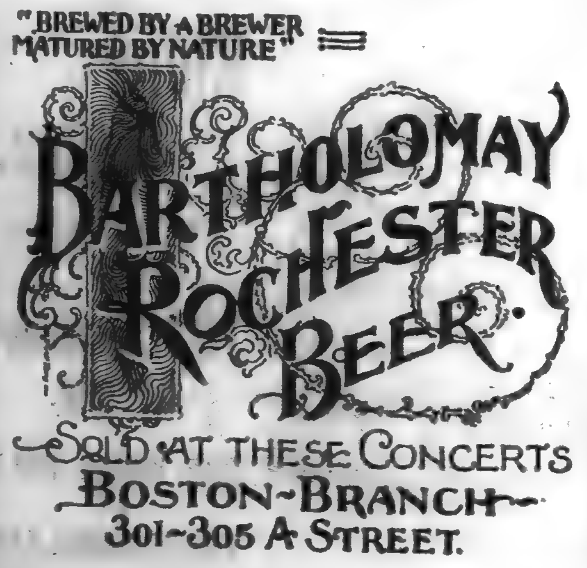
MEN,
Your Summer Clothing can be cleansed or dyed and pressed, ready to wear, for $2.00 per suit, and done properly.
LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Teams. Phones.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

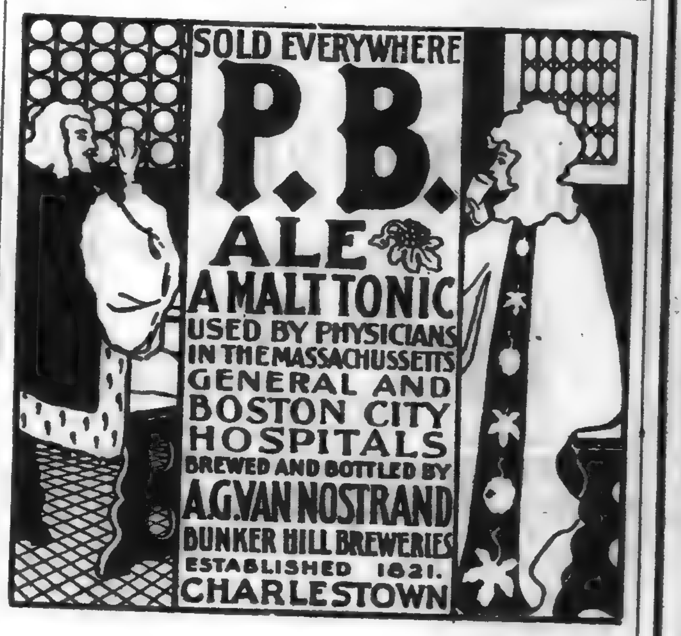
10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.



SOLD EVERYWHERE
P.B.
ALE
A MALT TONIC
USED BY PHYSICIANS IN THE MASSACHUSSETTS GENERAL AND BOSTON CITY HOSPITALS BREWED AND BOTTLED BY
A.G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
ESTABLISHED 1821.
CHARLESTOWN

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 16, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XII. No. 31.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 16.

WAGNER NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Tannhauser"	Wagner
2.	OVERTURE, "Rienzi"	Wagner
3.	WALTZ, "Artist's Life"	Strauss
4.	SPINNING SONG AND SAILORS' CHORUS from "The Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
5.	HULDIGUNG'S MARCH	Wagner
6.	PRELUDE to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
7.	BAL COSTUMÉ	Rubinstein
8.	FINALE, ACT I., "Lohengrin"	Wagner
9.	PRELUDE to "The Mastersingers of Nuremberg"	Wagner
10.	WALTZ, "Amour Printemps"	Waldteufel
11.	RIDE OF THE VALKYRIES	Wagner
12.	MARCH, "Nibelungen"	Kurth

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Thursday, June 17. PATRIOTIC NIGHT.
Monday, June 21. AMERICAN COMPOSERS' NIGHT.
Tuesday, June 22. HARVARD NIGHT.

Song Recital programmes this season have included the following successes:—

"La Superbetta," old Italian	Arr. by A. L.
"White Heather"	Landon Ronald.
"Celia"	Arr. by A. L.
"Veneziana"	Arr. by A. L.
"The Jolly Comber"	Arr. by L. Broadwood.
"Oh, Yarmouth is a pretty yown"	Arr. by L. Broadwood.
The Clown Songs	C. Villiers Stanford.
"Who'll buy my Lavender"	Edward German.
Shepherd's Wife Song	R. H. Walthew.

SEND FOR LISTS.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S DYEING CLEANSING LAUNDRY

Shirt Waists

of Silk, Muslin, Organdie,
Cleansed or Dyed,
and
Wash Waists properly laundered.

LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Phones. Teams.

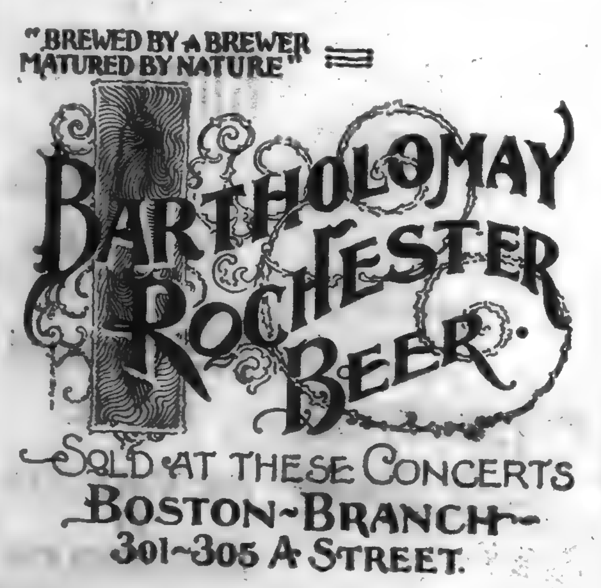
New Light.

All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.



BOSTON CLUB LAGER
BREWED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.
AN EXPORT BEER FOR TABLE USE
BOTTLED ONLY AT THE BREWERY.

Oh be Jolly
DRINK VAN NOSTRAND'S
P. B. ALE

NORFOLK CABINET

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH. CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, THURSDAY, JUNE 17, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 32.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 17.

PATRIOTIC NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1. MARCH, "Cadets" . . . . Metra
2. OVERTURE, "Jubel" . . . . Weber
3 WALTZ, "Estudiantina" . . . . Waldteufel
4. SELECTION, "Girofle-Girofla" . . . . Lecocq

5. OVERTURE, "1812" . . . . Tschaikowsky
6. MELODY, "Old Folks at Home" . . . . Bush
For String Orchestra.
7. SELECTION, "The Brigands" . . . . Offenbach
8. POLONAISE . . . . Liszt

9. OVERTURE, "Orpheus" . . . . Offenbach
10. AMERICAN FANTASY . . . . Bendix
11. MAZOURKA, "Czarina" . . . . Ganné
12. MARCH, "America" . . . . Eilenberg
(First Time.)

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Monday, June 21. AMERICAN COMPOSERS' NIGHT.
Tuesday, June 22. HARVARD NIGHT.

"THE CIRCUS GIRL." London and New York success.

"The Girl from Paris." " " " " "

Scores and separate songs and selections as played at these concerts.

Menuet Fleuri
La Victorieuse. March
La Scandinave. Mazurka } . . . . . Louis Ganné

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK,

Or the leading music dealers in Boston.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Shirt Waists

of Silk, Muslin, Organdie, Cleansed or Dyed, and Wash Waists properly laundered.

LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Phones. Teams.

New Light.

All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"

BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

BOSTON CLUB LAGER

BREWED BY
A.G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
CHARLESTOWN, MASS
AN EXPORT BEER FOR TABLE USE
BOTTLED ONLY AT THE BREWERY.

Oh be Jolly
DRINK VAN NOSTRAND'S PB ALE

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

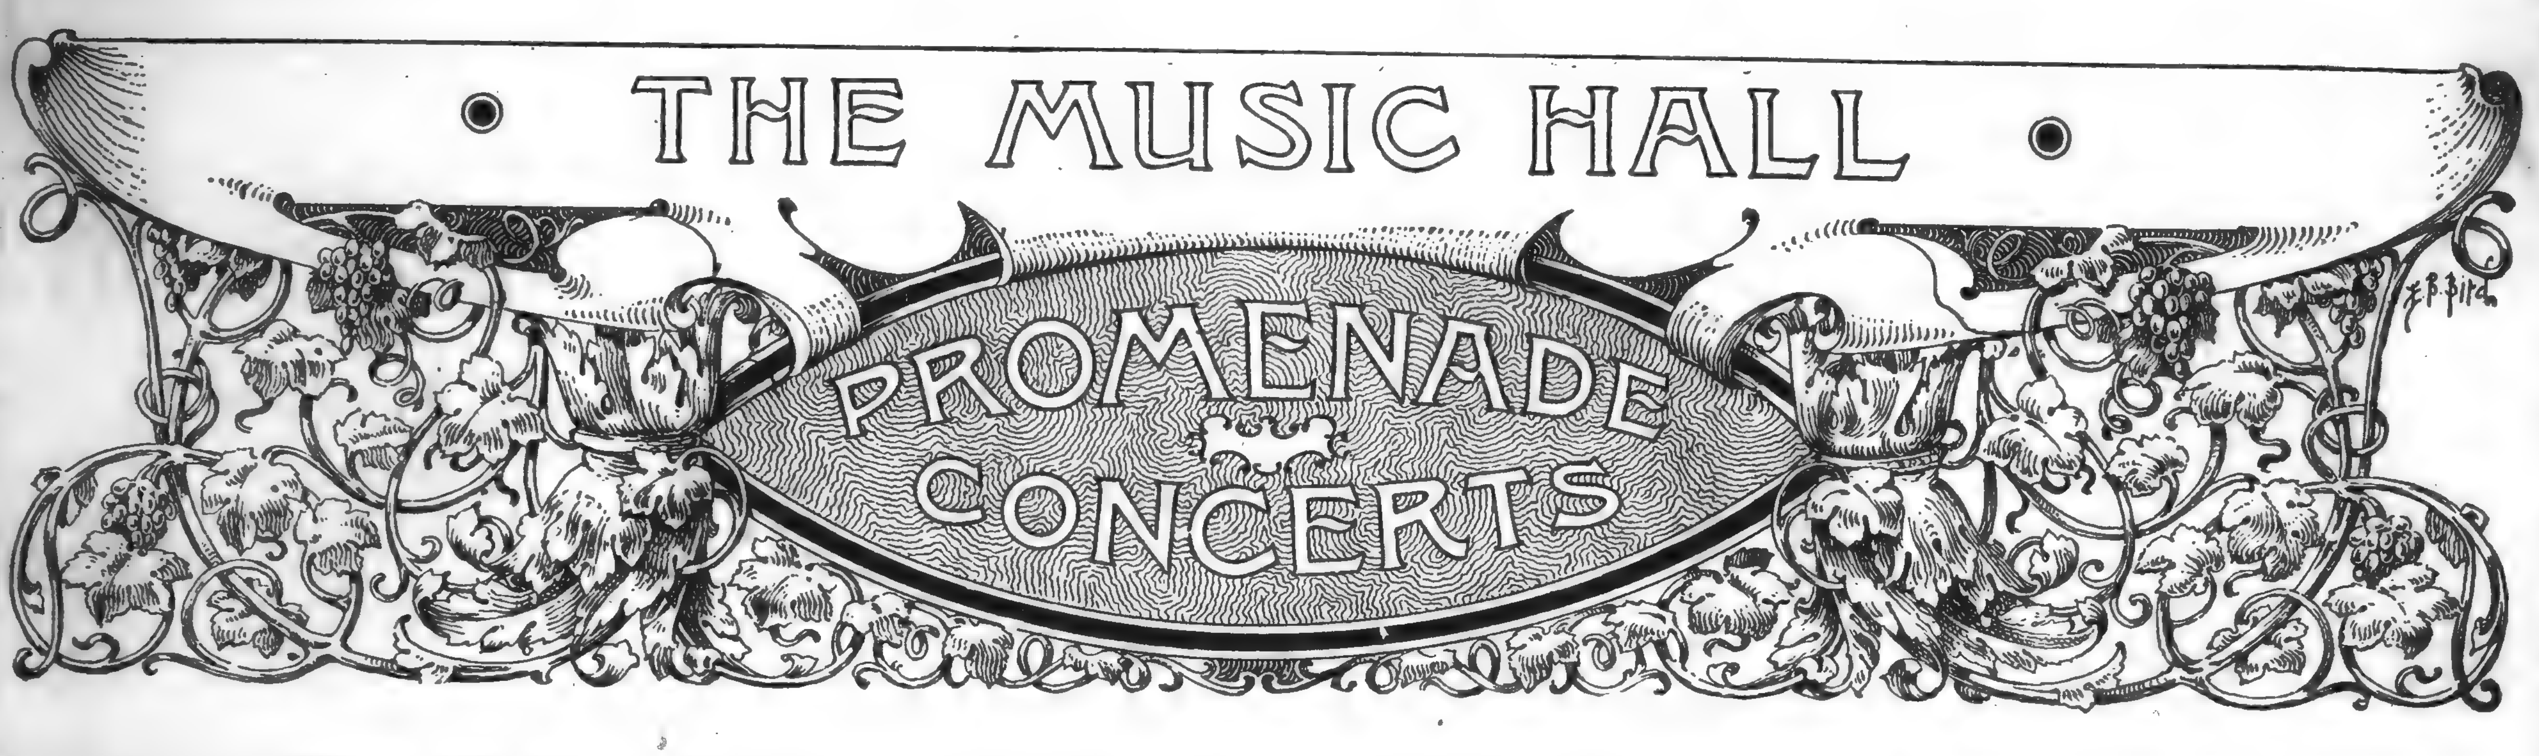
H. W. HABICH, } Telephone, 56 Roxbury
EDWARD RUHL, } or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE
232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.



THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS
E.B. Bird

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.
BOSTON, FRIDAY, JUNE 18, 1897.
SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XII. No. 33.

THE . . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 18.

SOLOISTS' NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Walking Delegate"	Hosmer
2.	OVERTURE, "Banditenstreiche"	Suppé
3.	a. ROSLEIN IM WALDE	Fischer
	b. WALDANDACHT	Abt
	BOSTON SYMPHONY HORN QUARTET. Messrs. HACKEBARTH, HAIN, LORBEER, and SCHUMANN.
4.	WALTZ, "Pesther"	Lanner
5.	OVERTURE, "Sakuntala"	Goldmark
6.	ARIA FOR BARITONE from "Faust"	Gounod
	MR. FIUMARA.
7.	SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
8.	WALTZ, "Schlaraffenleben" (First Time.) Conducted by the Composer.	Knecht
9.	OVERTURE, "Zanetta" (First Time.)	Auber
10.	SOLI FOR VIOLONCELLO. a. Andante	Goltermann
	b. Spanish Dance	Popper
	MR. LEO SCHULZ. Accompanist, Mr. NAGEL.
11.	WALTZ, "Roses from the South"	Strauss
12.	MARCH, "Pour la Patrie"	Millöcker

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Monday, June 21. AMERICAN COMPOSERS' NIGHT.
Tuesday, June 22. HARVARD NIGHT.

Mlle. C. CHAMINADE'S Latest Compositions.

Songs.—"My Heart Sings," 2 keys.
"Once More," 2 keys.
"Alone," 3 keys.
"Couplets Bachiques," 3 keys.
"Nuit d'Été," 2 keys.

Piano Solos.—Vert Galant, Op. 85.
Ballade, Op. 86.
Six pieces humoristiques, Op. 87, separately or in one book.

See that you get the original and only authorized edition of this composer's compositions, bearing our imprint.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

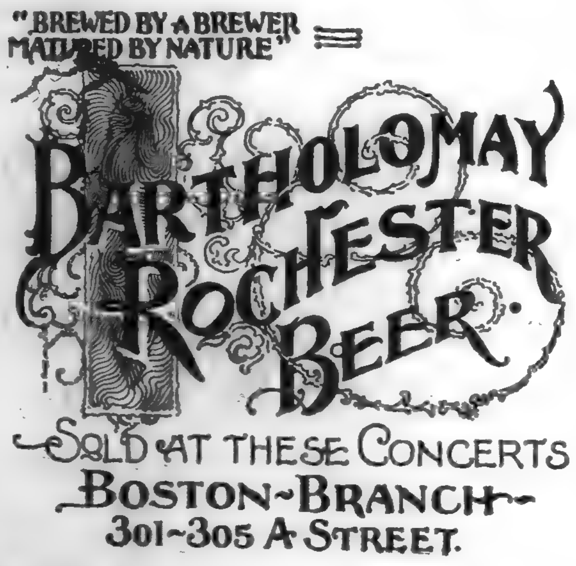
Shirt Waists
of Silk, Muslin, Organdie,
Cleansed or Dyed,
and
Wash Waists properly laundered.
LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Phones. Teams.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

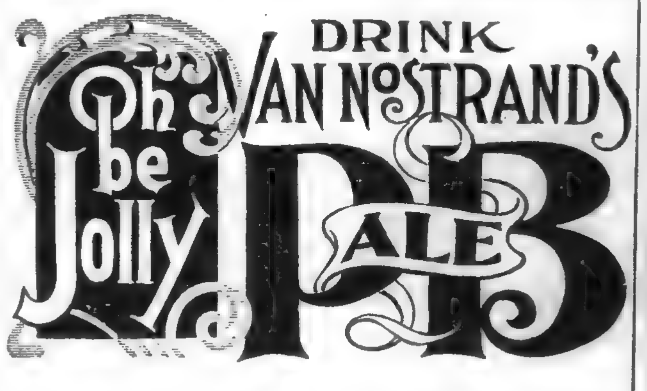
The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

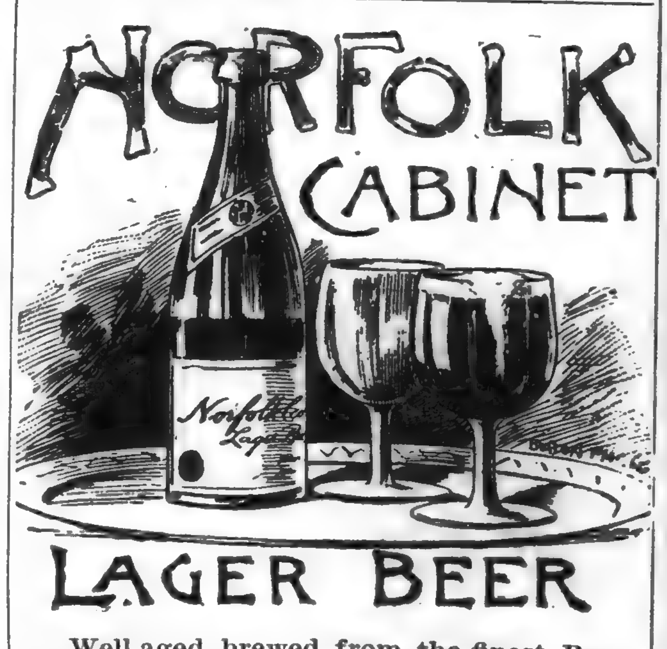


"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A-STREET.

BOSTON CLUB LAGER
BREWED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
CHARLESTOWN, MASS
AN EXPORT BEER FOR TABLE USE
BOTTLED ONLY AT THE BREWERY.



Oh be Jolly
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P.B.
ALE



NORFOLK CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[117]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 19, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 34.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Shirt Waists
of Silk, Muslin, Organdie,
Cleansed or Dyed,
and
Wash Waists properly laundered.
LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Phones. Teams.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.
10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.
The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.
The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH—
301–305 A STREET.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 19.

SPECIAL REQUEST PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "King Cotton"	Sousa
2.	OVERTURE, "William Tell"	Rossini
3.	WALTZ, "Hydropaten"	Gungl
4.	SELECTION, "Faust"	Gounod
5.	OVERTURE, "Rienzi"	Wagner
6.	LARGO Solo Violin, CONCERTMEISTER ONDRICEK.	Haendel
7.	DANSE MACABRE	Saint-Saëns
8.	SELECTION, "Jack and the Beanstalk"	Sloane
9.	POTPOURRI, "The Brigands"	Offenbach
10.	LOVE'S DREAM AFTER THE BALL	Czibulka
11.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
12.	MARCH, "Tabasco"	Chadwick

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Monday, June 21. AMERICAN COMPOSERS' NIGHT.
Tuesday, June 22. HARVARD NIGHT.
Wednesday, June 23. OFFENBACH NIGHT.
Friday, June 25. SOLOISTS' NIGHT.

ANOTHER LIST OF SUCCESSES.
"The Light of the World," 4 keys. Stephen Adams.
"A May Morning," 3 keys. L. Denza.
"I Dream of Thee," 3 keys. H. Trotere.
"A Night in June." A. Ward.
"Evening Shadows." A. Somervell.
"Only a Withered Rose." J. R. Thomas.
"The Angelus," 2 keys. I. Luckstone.
Etc., etc., etc.
PUBLISHED BY
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth St., New York.
And to be had from any dealer in Boston.

1

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

BOSTON CLUB LAGER

BREWED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
CHARLESTOWN, MASS
AN EXPORT BEER FOR TABLE USE
BOTTLED ONLY AT THE BREWERY.

DRINK VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh! be Jolly
P B ALE

NORFOLK CABINET
Norfolk Lager
LAGER BEER
Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.
Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.
HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

[118]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE
232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL

BOSTON, MONDAY, JUNE 21, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 35.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 21.

AMERICAN COMPOSERS' NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "The Belle of Philadelphia"	Fulton
2.	OVERTURE, "The Walking Delegate" (First Time.)	Hosmer
3.	ORIENTAL SERENADE (First Time.)	Atherton
4.	PRELUDE, ACT III., "Lohengrin" (By Request.)	Wagner
5.	OVERTURE, "Jubel" (By Request.)	Weber
6.	SERENADE, "Remembrance" (First Time.)	Mrs. H. Carmichael
7.	SELECTION, "Fencing Master"	De Koven
8.	SCHERZO (First Time.)	Cutter
9.	OVERTURE, "Prince pro Tem."	Thompson
10.	EVENING SONG	Thallon
11.	WALTZ, "Obispah"	Knight
12.	MARCH, "On Dress Parade"	Knecht

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Tuesday, June 22. HARVARD NIGHT.
Wednesday, June 23. OFFENBACH NIGHT.
Friday, June 25. SOLOISTS' NIGHT.

Song Recital programmes this season have included the following successes:—

"La Superbetta," old Italian	Arr. by A. L.
"White Heather"	Landon Ronald.
"Celia"	Arr. by A. L.
"Veneziana"	Arr. by A. L.
"The Jolly Comber"	Arr. by L. Broadwood.
"Oh, Yarmouth is a pretty yown"	Arr. by L. Broadwood.
The Clown Songs	C. Villiers Stanford.
"Who'll buy my Lavender"	Edward German.
Shepherd's Wife Song	R. H. Walthew.

SEND FOR LISTS.
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S DYEING CLEANSING LAUNDRY

Shirt Waists
of Silk, Muslin, Organdie,
Cleansed or Dyed,
and
Wash Waists properly laundered.
LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Phones. Teams.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

BOSTON CLUB LAGER
BREWED BY
A.G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
CHARLESTOWN, MASS
AN EXPORT BEER
FOR TABLE USE
BOTTLED ONLY AT THE BREWERY.

Oh be Jolly
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P.B. ALE

NORFOLK CABINET
LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

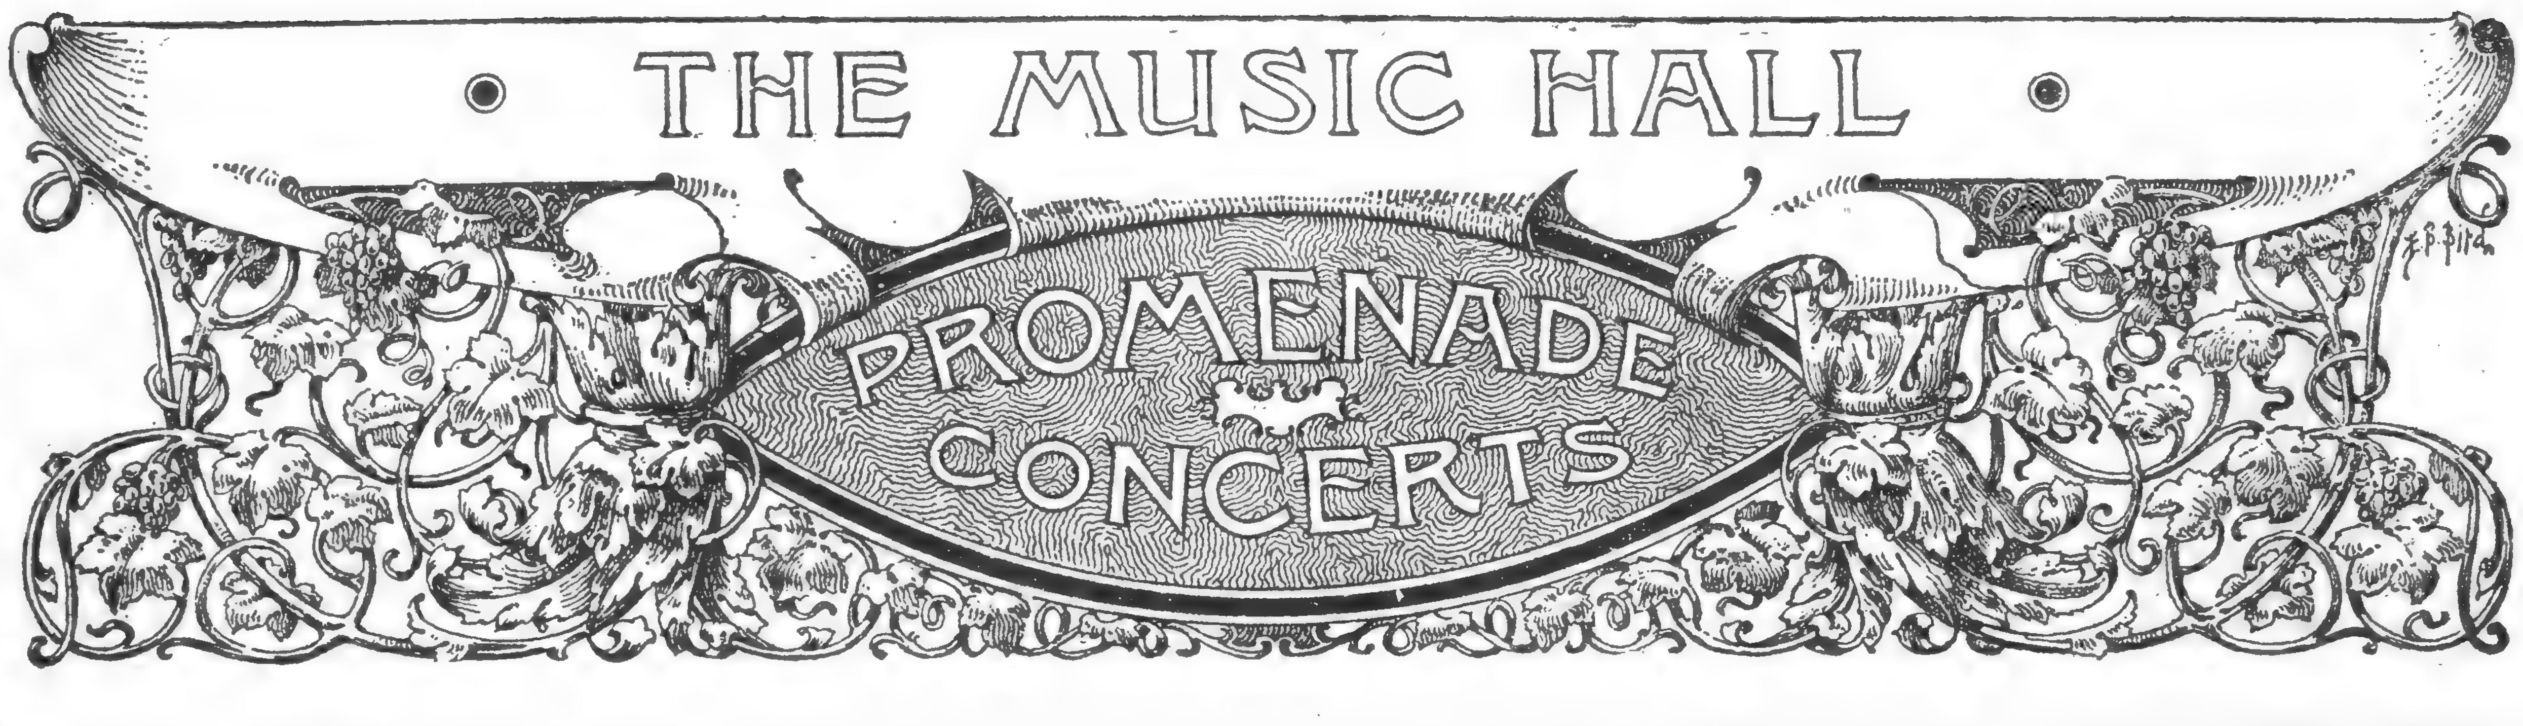
A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.



PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL

BOSTON, TUESDAY, JUNE 22, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XII. No. 36.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 22.

HARVARD NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "University"	Bruguiere
2.	COLLEGE OVERTURE (First Time.)	Moses
3.	WALTZ, "Espana"	Waldteufel
4.	SELECTION, "Sphinx"	Thomson
5.	ACADEMIC OVERTURE	Brahms
6.	THEME AND VARIATIONS. (For String Orchestra.)	Haydn
7.	SELECTION, "Hamlet" (Produced by the Hasty Pudding Club, 1893.) (First Time.)	Atherton-Abbott
8.	WALTZ, "Blue Danube"	Strauss
9.	AMERICAN FANTASY	Bendix
10.	WALTZ, "Bacchante" (First Time.)	Morse
11.	FAIR HARVARD.
12.	MARCH, "Casino" (First Time.)	Belisle

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Wednesday, June 23. OFFENBACH NIGHT.

Friday, June 25. SOLOISTS' NIGHT.

Monday, June 28. Selections from the Comic Operas produced by the "Cadets."

"THE CIRCUS GIRL." London and New York success.

"The Girl from Paris." " " " " "

Scores and separate songs and selections as played at these concerts.

Menuet Fleuri
La Victorieuse. March
La Scandinave. Mazurka } . . . . Louis Ganné

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK,

Or the leading music dealers in Boston.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Shirt Waists

of Silk, Muslin, Organdie,
Cleansed or Dyed,
and
Wash Waists properly laundered.

LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Phones. Teams.

New Light.

All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"

BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P. B.
ALE
BREWED & BOTTLED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES,
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

VAN NOSTRAND'S BOSTON CLUB Lager SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

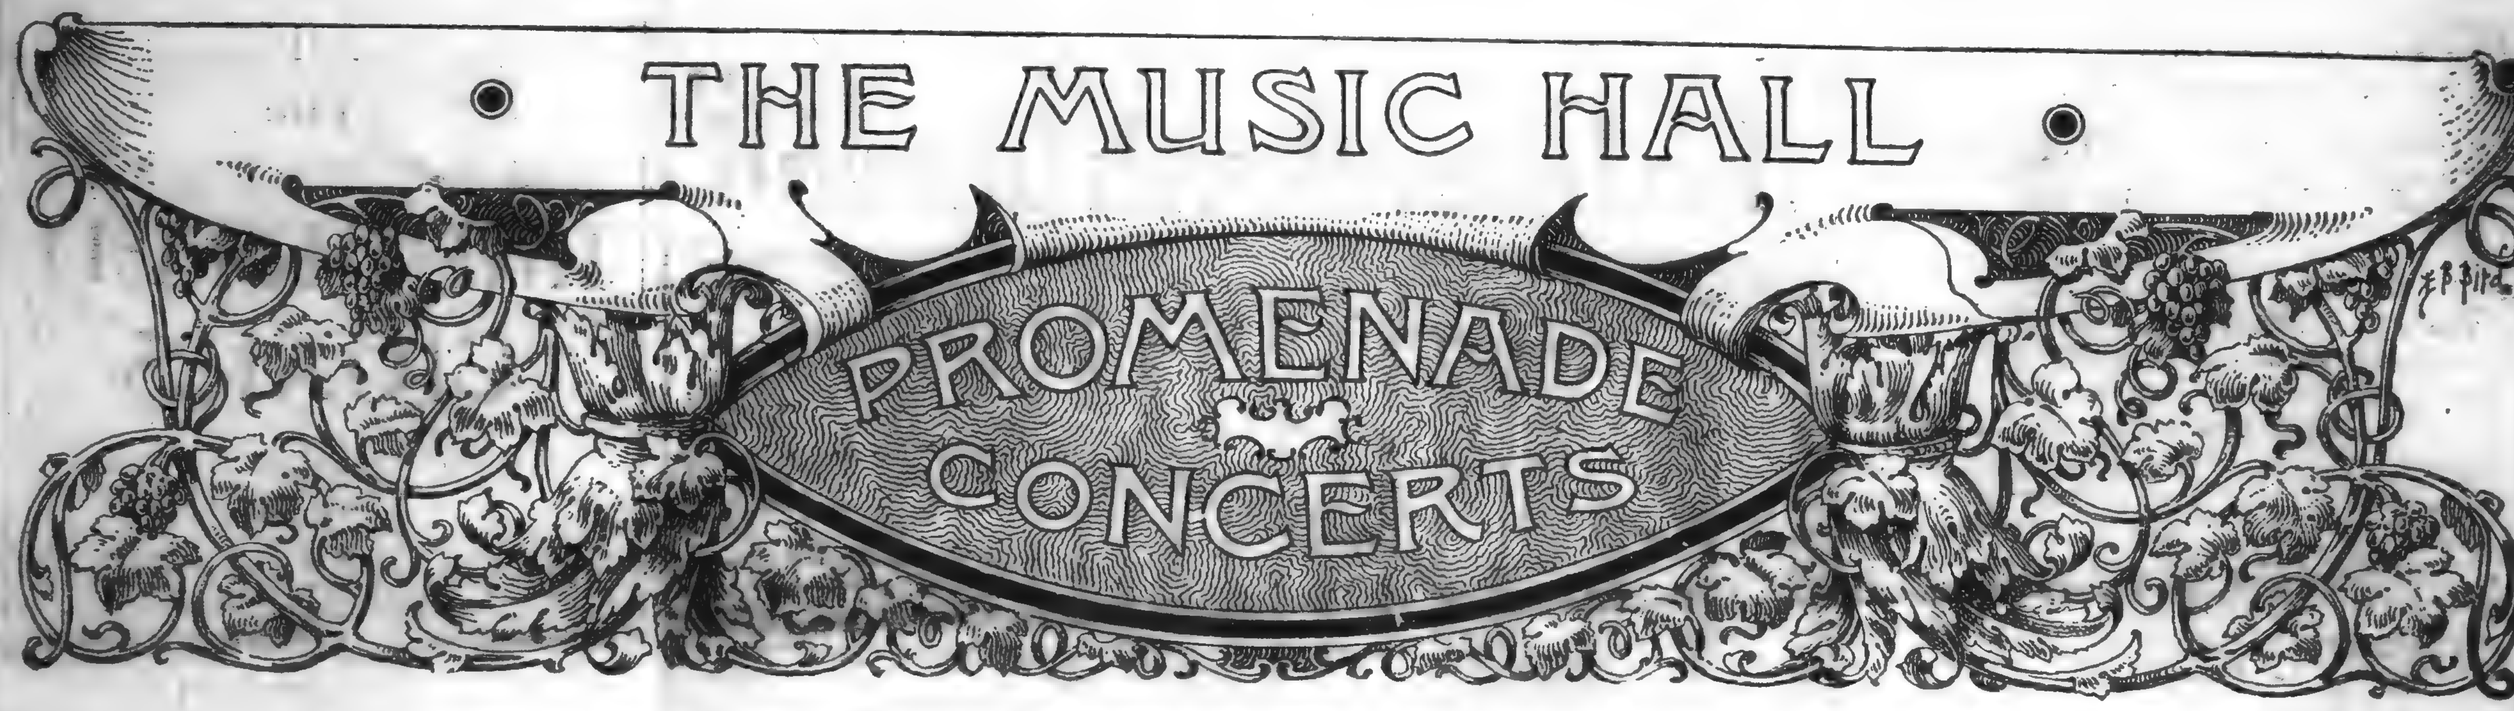
HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES



THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 23, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 37.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Shirt Waists
of Silk, Muslin, Organdie,
Cleansed or Dyed,
and
Wash Waists properly laundered.
LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Phones. Teams.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"

BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER.

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE MUSIC HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 23.

OFFENBACH NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	CORONATION MARCH	Meyerbeer
2.	OVERTURE, "La Jolie Parfumeuse"	Offenbach
3.	WALTZ, "Carlotta"	Milloecker
4.	POTPOURRI, "La Grande Duchesse"	Offenbach
5.	OVERTURE, "Orpheus"	Offenbach
6.	HYMN TO ST. CECILIA Solo Violin, CONCERTMEISTER ONDRICEK.	Gounod
7.	TWO HUNGARIAN DANCES	Brahms
8.	OFFENBACHIANA	Conradi
9.	WALTZ, "Wine, Woman, and Song"	Strauss
10.	SELECTION, "Brigands"	Offenbach
11.	POLKA MAZOURKA	Strauss
12.	MARCH, "Jubilee"	Bilse

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Friday, June 25. SOLOISTS' NIGHT.

Monday, June 28. Selections from the Comic Operas produced by the "Cadets."

Tuesday, June 29. HARVARD GRADUATES' NIGHT.

Mlle. C. CHAMINADE'S Latest Compositions.

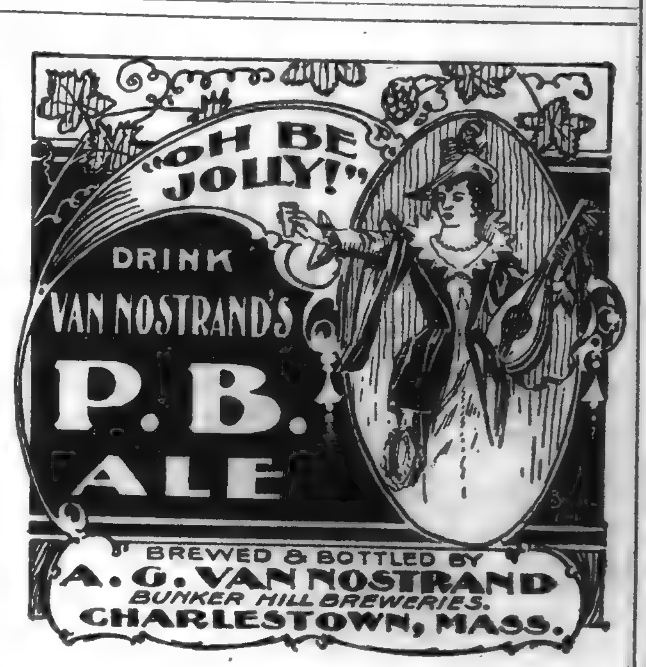
Songs.—"My Heart Sings," 2 keys.
"Once More," 2 keys.
"Alone," 3 keys.
"Couplets Bachiques," 3 keys.
"Nuit d'Été," 2 keys.

Piano Solos.—Vert Galant, Op. 85.
Ballade, Op. 86.
Six pieces humoristiques, Op. 87, separately or in one book.

See that you get the original and only authorized edition of this composer's compositions, bearing our imprint.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.
4

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.



"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P. B.
ALE
BREWED & BOTTLED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES.
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. { 10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET } ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL

BOSTON, THURSDAY, JUNE 24, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 38.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JUNE 24.

1. MARCH, "Cuban Liberty" . . . . Ramsdell
(First Time.)
2. OVERTURE, "Stradella" . . . . Flotow
3. INTERMEZZO, "Naila" . . . . Delibes
4. SELECTION, "Fencing Master" . . . . De Koven

5. OVERTURE, "Robespierre" . . . . Litolff
6. SERENADE, "Under the Balcony." (For String Orchestra.) Wuerst
Solo 'Cello, Mr. NAGEL.
7. RIDE OF THE COSSACKS . . . . Milloecker
8. MARCH from "Symphonie Pathétique" . . . . Tschaikowsky

9. OVERTURE, "Raymond" . . . . A. Thomas
10. NARCISSUS . . . . Nevin
11. GAVOTTE, "Circus" . . . . Fliege
12. GALOP, "Express" . . . . Silberberg

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Friday, June 25. SOLOISTS' NIGHT.
Monday, June 28. Selections from the Comic Operas produced by the "Cadets."
Tuesday, June 29. HARVARD GRADUATES' NIGHT.

ANOTHER LIST OF SUCCESSES.

"The Light of the World," 4 keys. Stephen Adams.
"A May Morning," 3 keys. L. Denza.
"I Dream of Thee," 3 keys. H. Trotere.
"A Night in June." A. Ward.
"Evening Shadows." A. Somervell.
"Only a Withered Rose." J. R. Thomas.
"The Angelus," 2 keys. I. Luckstone.
Etc., etc., etc.

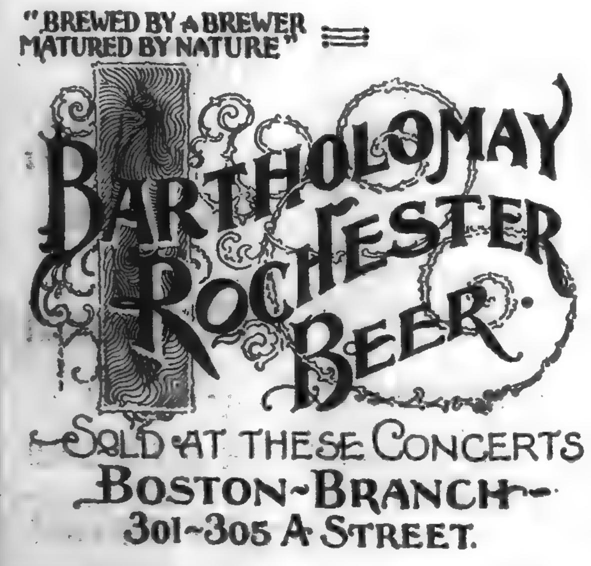
PUBLISHED BY
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth St., New York.
And to be had from any dealer in Boston.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

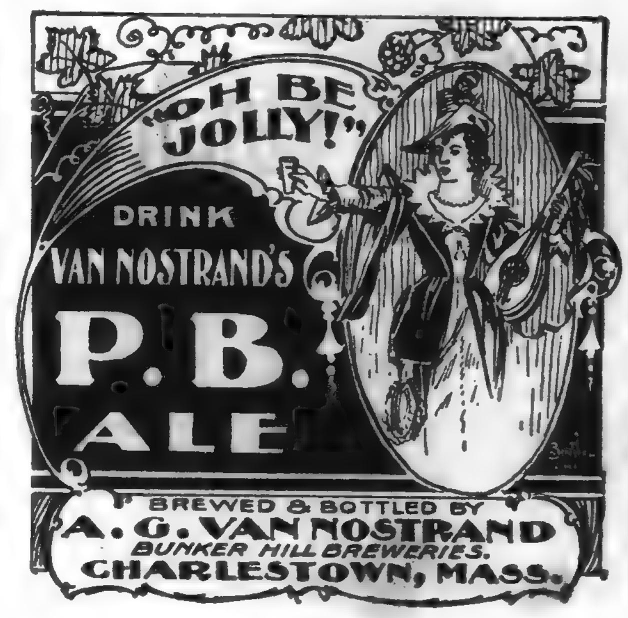
Shirt Waists
of Silk, Muslin, Organdie,
Cleansed or Dyed,
and
Wash Waists properly laundered.
LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Phones. Teams.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.
10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.
The Only All Tobacco Cigarette
Sold at these Concerts.
The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER

SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.



VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, JUNE 25, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 39.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING CLEANSING LAUNDRY

Shirt Waists
of Silk, Muslin, Organdie,
Cleansed or Dyed,
and
Wash Waists properly laundered.
LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Phones. Teams.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JUNE 25.

SOLOISTS' NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	WEDDING MARCH	Mendelssohn
2.	OVERTURE, "Pique Dame"	Suppé
3.	WALTZ, "Tales from the Orient"	Strauss
4.	HARP SOLO. "Dance of the Sylphs"	Godefroid
	Solo Harp, Mr. HEINRICH SCHUECKER.
5.	OVERTURE, "Tannhauser"	Wagner
6.	RELIGIOSO. (For Four 'Celli.)	Goltermann
	Messrs. SCHULZ, NAGEL, LOEFFLER, and BEHR. (First Time.)
7.	RONDO A LA HONGARESA	Haydn
	Arranged by Muller-Berghaus. (First Time.)
8.	SELECTION, "Patience"	Sullivan
9.	OVERTURE, "Mignon"	A. Thomas
10.	CAVATINA FOR VIOLINS	Raff
11.	WALTZ, "Artists' Life"	Strauss
12.	MARCH, "Exhibition"	Fahrbach

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Monday, June 28. Selections from the Comic Operas produced by the "Cadets."

Tuesday, June 29. HARVARD GRADUATES' NIGHT.

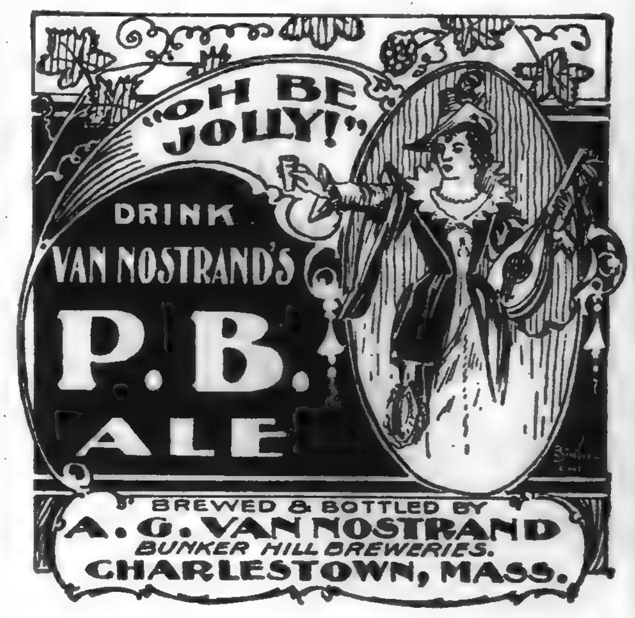
Wednesday, June 30. WAGNER NIGHT.
First appearance of Master WILLIE TRAUPE, Violinist.

Song Recital programmes this season have included the following successes:—

"La Superbetta," old Italian	Arr. by A. L.
"White Heather"	Landon Ronald.
"Celia"	Arr. by A. L.
"Veneziana"	Arr. by A. L.
"The Jolly Comber"	Arr. by L. Broadwood.
"Oh, Yarmouth is a pretty yown"	Arr. by L. Broadwood.
The Clown Songs	C. Villiers Stanford.
"Who'll buy my Lavender"	Edward German.
Shepherd's Wife Song	R. H. Walthew.

SEND FOR LISTS.
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.



"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P. B.
ALE
BREWED & BOTTLED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES.
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

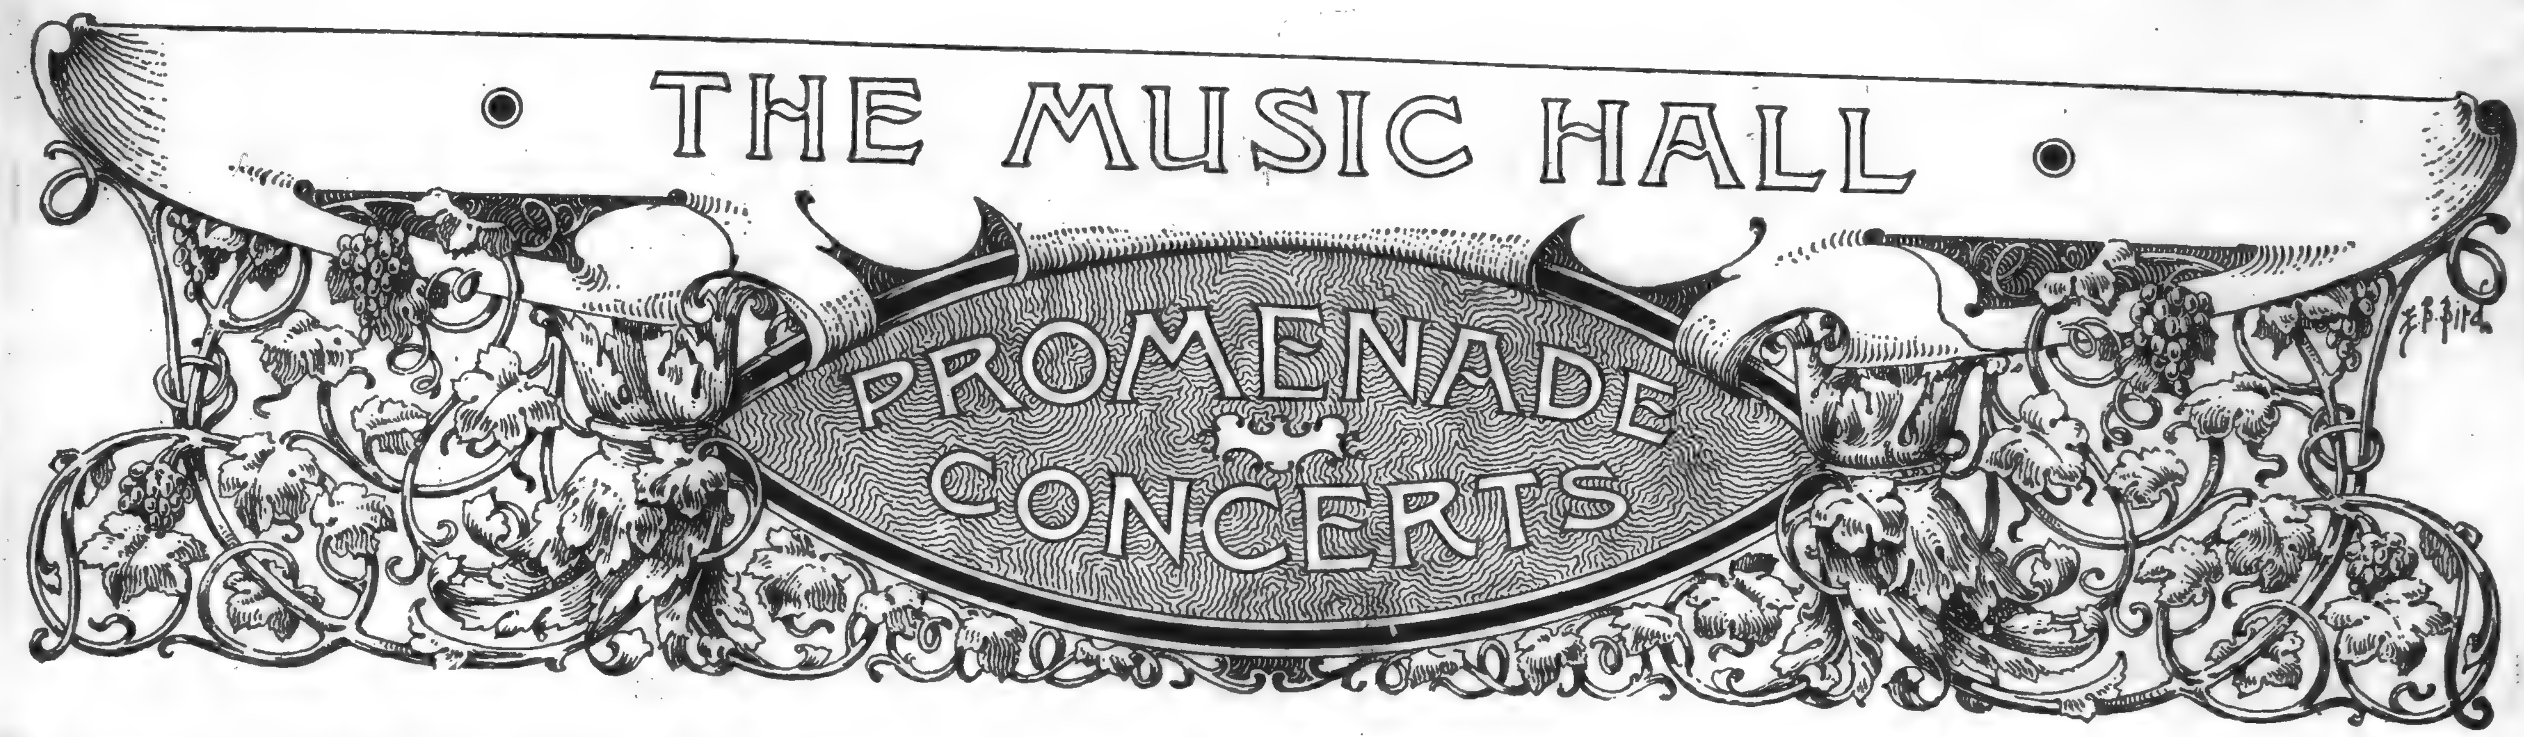
HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.



THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JUNE 26, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 40.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JUNE 26.

1.	MARCH, "Budapest"	Kral
2.	OVERTURE, "Jolly Students"	Suppé
3.	WALTZ, "Rose Leaves"	Waldteufel
4.	SELECTION, "Merry War"	Strauss
5.	OVERTURE, "Phedre"	Massenet
6.	TRAEUMEREI. (For String Orchestra.)	Schumann
7.	WILL O' THE WISP (First Time.)	Bendix
8.	HUNGARIAN RHAPSODY	Liszt
9.	WALTZ, "Meerleuchten"	Ziehrer
10.	POTPOURRI, "The Algerians"	De Koven
11.	SERENATA	Moszkowski
12.	MARCH, "Nibelungen"	Kurth

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Monday, June 28. Selections from the Comic Operas produced by the "Cadets."

Tuesday, June 29. HARVARD GRADUATES' NIGHT.

Wednesday, June 30. WAGNER NIGHT.
First appearance of Master WILLIE TRAUPE, Violinist.

"THE CIRCUS GIRL." London and New York success.
"The Girl from Paris." " " " " "

Scores and separate songs and selections as played at these concerts.

Menuet Fleuri
La Victorieuse. March
La Scandinave. Mazurka } . . . . Louis Ganné

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK,
Or the leading music dealers in Boston.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Shirt Waists
of Silk, Muslin, Organdie,
Cleansed or Dyed,
and
Wash Waists properly laundered.
LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Phones. Teams.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

"OH BE JOLLY!"
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P.B.
ALE
BREWED & BOTTLED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES.
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, } Telephone, 56 Roxbury
EDWARD RUHL, } or 1152 Boston.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE / 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL

PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, MONDAY, JUNE 28, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 41.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

MONDAY, JUNE 28.

Selections from the Comic Operas produced by the Cadets.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Excelsior, Jr."	Tracey
2.	OVERTURE, "Tabasco"	Chadwick
3.	WALTZ, "Jack and the Beanstalk"	Tracey–Sloane
4.	SELECTION, "Simple Simon"	Tracey
5.	OVERTURE, "Light Cavalry"	Suppé
6.	a. NIGHT SONG	Vogt
	b. NEGRO EPISODE (First Time.)	Gilbert
7.	WALTZ, "Artist's Dream"	Liebig
8.	SELECTION, "1492"	Pflueger
9.	OVERTURE, "Felsenmühle"	Reissiger
10.	WALTZ, "1492"	Pflueger
11.	RIDE OF THE HUSSARS	Spindler
12.	MARCH, "Tabasco"	Chadwick

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Tuesday, June 29. HARVARD GRADUATES' NIGHT.

Wednesday, June 30. WAGNER NIGHT.

First appearance of Master WILLIE TRAUPE, Violinist.

Thursday July 1. REQUEST NIGHT.

Mlle. C. CHAMINADE'S Latest Compositions.

Songs.—"My Heart Sings," 2 keys.
"Once More," 2 keys.
"Alone," 3 keys.
"Couplets Bachiques," 3 keys.
"Nuit d'Été," 2 keys.

Piano Solos.—Vert Galant, Op. 85.
Ballade, Op. 86.
Six pieces humoristiques, Op. 87, separately or in one book.

See that you get the original and only authorized edition of this composer's compositions, bearing our imprint.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

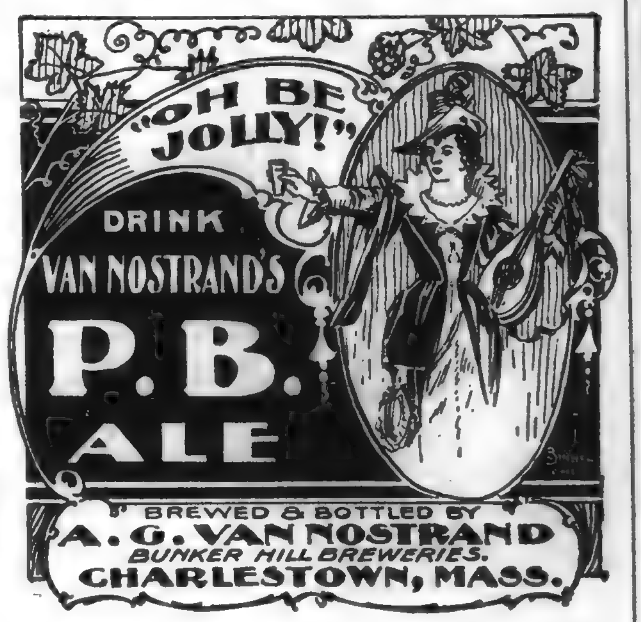
BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Shirt Waists
of Silk, Muslin, Organdie,
Cleansed or Dyed,
and
Wash Waists properly laundered.
LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Phones. Teams.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.
10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.
The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.
The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.



VAN NOSTRAND'S
BOSTON CLUB
Lager
SOLD AT THESE Concerts

NORFOLK
CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, TUESDAY, JUNE 29, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 42.

THE . . . MUSIC . . HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

TUESDAY, JUNE 29.

HARVARD GRADUATES' NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "University"	Bruguiere
2.	OVERTURE, "Carlo Broschi"	Auber
3.	WALTZ, "Amorello" from "Fool's Gold" "Pi Eta" Burlesque of 1897. (First Time.)	Loud
4.	SELECTION, "Pirates of Penzance"	Sullivan
5.	OVERTURE, "Martha"	Flotow
6.	THEME AND VARIATIONS. (For String Orchestra.) (First time at these concerts.)	Schubert
7.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
8.	COLLEGE OVERTURE	Moses
9.	SELECTION, "Prince pro Tem."	Thompson
10.	a. ORIENTAL SERENADE	Atherton
	b. LOVE-SONG. (Andante from Suite.)	Farwell
11.	AMERICAN FANTASY	Bendix
12.	MARCH, "Up the Street"	Morse

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Wednesday, June 30. WAGNER NIGHT.
First appearance of Master WILLIE TRAUPE, Violinist.
Thursday July 1. REQUEST NIGHT.
Friday, July 2. LAST SOLOISTS' NIGHT.

ANOTHER LIST OF SUCCESSES.

"The Light of the World," 4 keys. Stephen Adams.
"A May Morning," 3 keys. L. Denza.
"I Dream of Thee," 3 keys. H. Trotere.
"A Night in June." A. Ward.
"Evening Shadows." A. Somervell.
"Only a Withered Rose." J. R. Thomas.
"The Angelus," 2 keys. I. Luckstone.
Etc., etc., etc.

PUBLISHED BY
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth St., New York.
And to be had from any dealer in Boston.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Shirt Waists
of Silk, Muslin, Organdie,
Cleansed or Dyed,
and
Wash Waists properly laundered.
LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Phones. Teams.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.
10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.
The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.
The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

BOSTON CLUB LAGER
AN EXPORT BEER FOR TABLE USE.
BOTTLED ONLY AT THE BREWERY
BREWED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
CHARLESTOWN, MASS

Oh be Jolly
DRINK VAN NOSTRAND'S P.B. ALE

NORFOLK CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.
Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.
H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE, 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE
232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, WEDNESDAY, JUNE 30, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 43.

THE MUSIC HALL . . . Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 30.

WAGNER NIGHT.

Master WILLIE TRAUPE, Violinist.

1.	KAISERMARSCH	Wagner
2.	ALBUMBLATT	Wagner
3.	WALTZ, "Vienna Blood"	Strauss
4.	PRELUDE, ACT III., "Meistersinger"	Wagner
5.	OVERTURE, "The Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
6.	AIR HONGROIS FOR VIOLIN MASTER WILLIE TRAUPE.	Ernst
7.	SAILORS' CHORUS from "The Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
8.	ENTRANCE OF THE GODS INTO WALHALLA	Wagner
9.	OVERTURE, "Rienzi"	Wagner
10.	PRELUDE to "Lohengrin"	Wagner
11.	(By Request.) a. CHINESE EXECUTION MARCH b. DANCE OF THE CANNIBALS	Wetzler
12.	NIBELUNGEN MARCH	Kurth

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Thursday, July 1. REQUEST NIGHT.
Friday, July 2. LAST SOLOISTS' NIGHT.
Saturday, July 3. CLOSING NIGHT.

Song Recital programmes this season have included the following successes:—

"La Superbetta," old Italian	Arr. by A. L.
"White Heather"	Landon Ronald.
"Celia"	Arr. by A. L.
"Veneziana"	Arr. by A. L.
"The Jolly Comber"	Arr. by L. Broadwood.
"Oh, Yarmouth is a pretty yown"	Arr. by L. Broadwood.
The Clown Songs	C. Villiers Stanford.
"Who'll buy my Lavender"	Edward German.
Shepherd's Wife Song	R. H. Walthew.

SEND FOR LISTS.

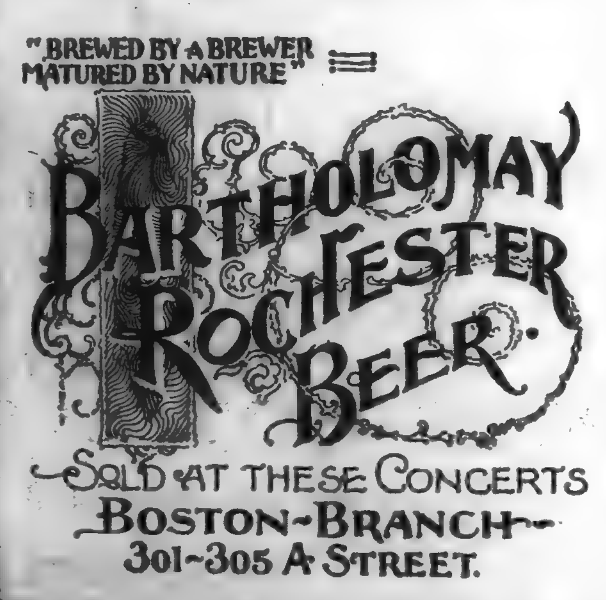
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Shirt Waists
of Silk, Muslin, Organdie,
Cleansed or Dyed,
and
Wash Waists properly laundered.
LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Phones. Teams.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.
10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.
The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.
The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.



"BREWED BY A BREWER
MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY
ROCHESTER
BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

BOSTON
CLUB
LAGER
AN EXPORT BEER
FOR TABLE USE.
BOTTLED ONLY
AT THE BREWERY
BREWED BY A. G. VAN
NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL
BREWERIES
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

Oh be Jolly
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P B
ALE

NORFOLK
CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

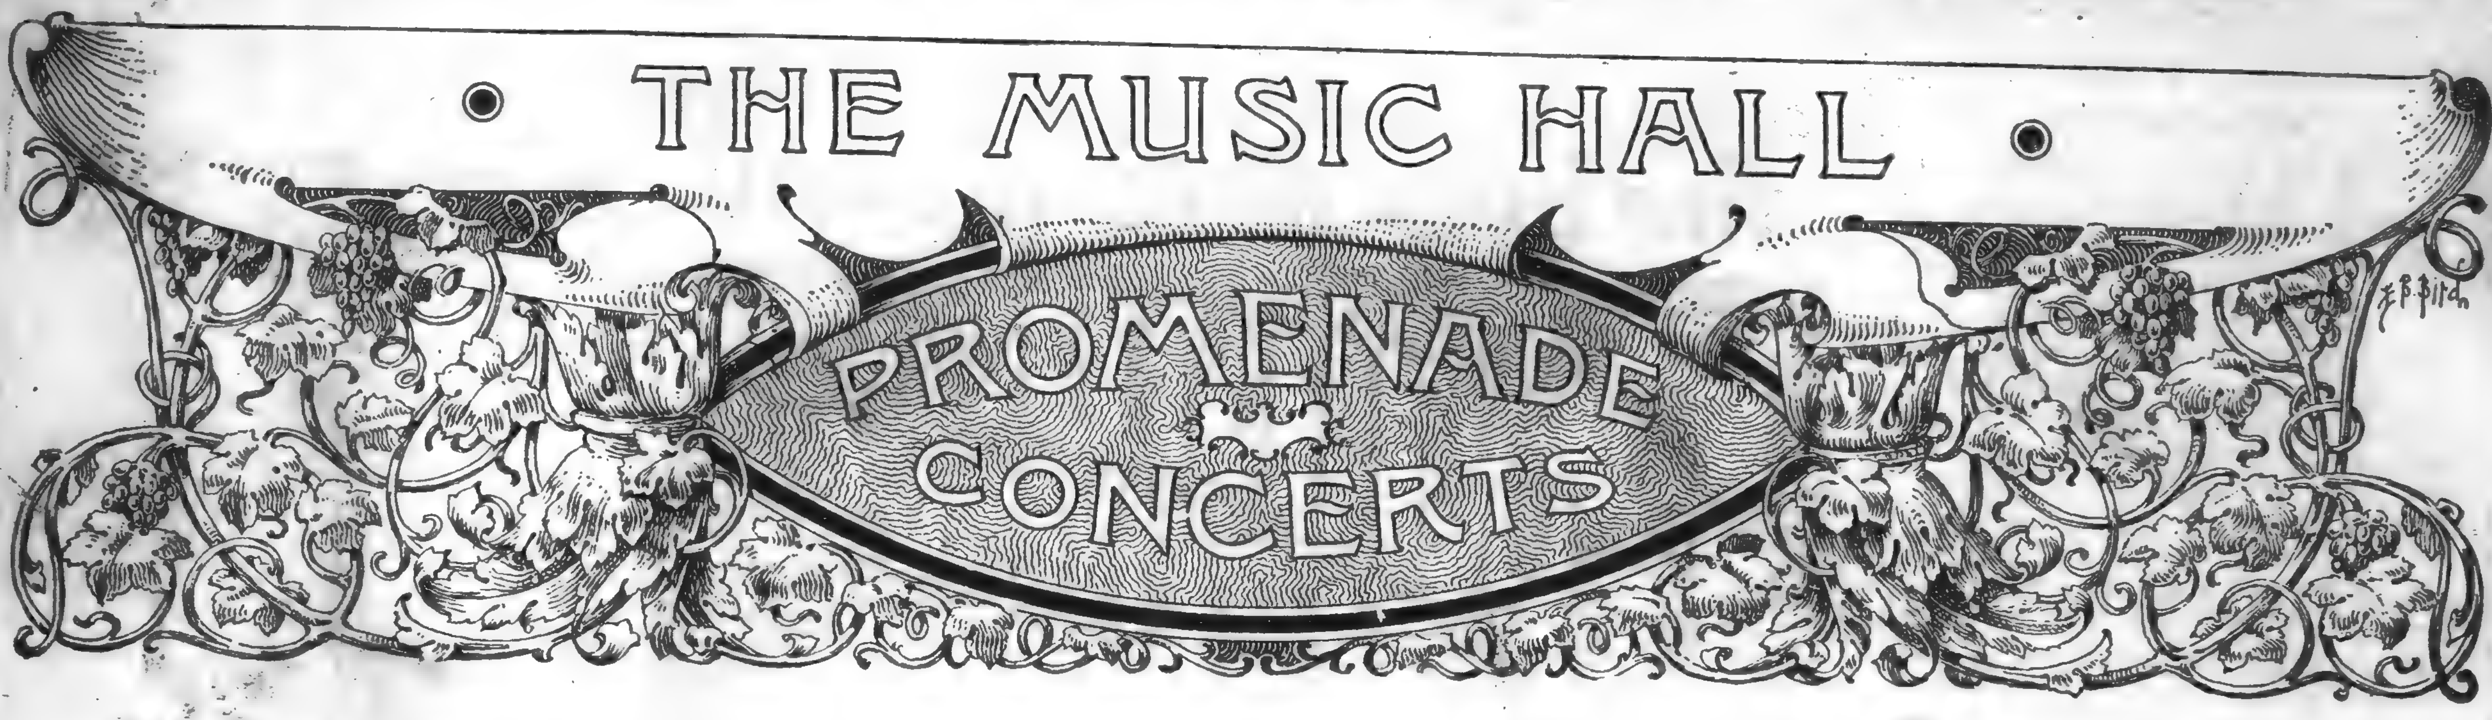
HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

☞ See Page 7 for "AN IDEAL OUTING."



THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, THURSDAY, JULY 1, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XII. No. 44.

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
CLEANSING
LAUNDRY

Shirt Waists

of Silk, Muslin, Organdie,
Cleansed or Dyed,
and
Wash Waists properly laundered.

LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Phones. Teams.

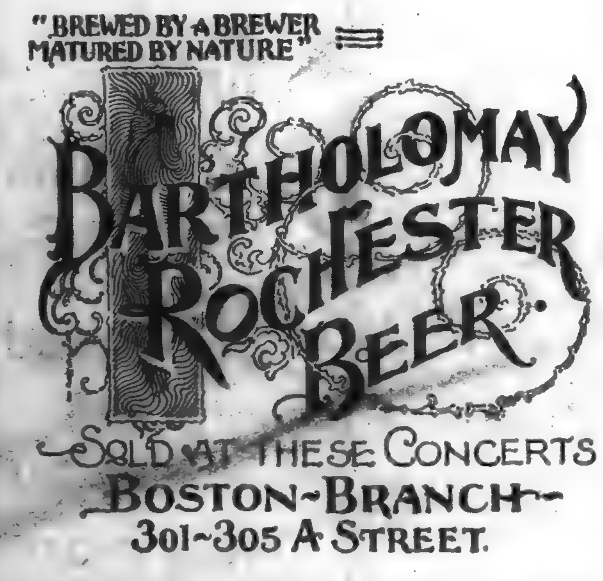
New Light.

All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.



"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

THE .... MUSIC .. HALL ... Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

THURSDAY, JULY 1.

REQUEST NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Queen of Sheba"	Gounod
2.	OVERTURE, "Robespierre"	Litolff
3.	MELANCHOLIE	Schulz
4.	SELECTION, "Wizard of the Nile" (First Time.)	Herbert
5.	OVERTURE, "Egmont"	Beethoven
6.	ANDANTE CANTABILE. (For String Orchestra)	Tschaikowsky
7.	a. RONDO A LA HONGARESA	Haydn
	b. BACCHANALE from Ballet "Laurin"	Moszkowski
8.	WALTZ, "Cagliostro"	Strauss
9.	PRELUDE to "Die Meistersinger"	Wagner
10.	a. BAL COSTUMÉ. Andalouse	Rubinstein
	b. POLISH DANCE	Scharwenka
11.	POLKA, "Libelle"	Strauss
12.	GALOP, "Ideal Railway"	Knecht

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Friday, July 2. LAST SOLOISTS' NIGHT.

Saturday, July 3. CLOSING NIGHT.

MUSIC HALL. BASE BALL RETURNS BY ELECTRICITY. Monday, July 5. Two Games, Morning and Afternoon. Smoking Allowed. Cooling Refreshments. Admission, 10 cents. Reserved Seats, 15 cents and 25 cents.

"THE CIRCUS GIRL." London and New York success.

"The Girl from Paris." " " " " "

Scores and separate songs and selections as played at these concerts.

Menuet Fleuri
La Victorieuse. March
La Scandinave. Mazurka } . . . . Louis Ganné

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK,

Or the leading music dealers in Boston.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

BOSTON CLUB LAGER
AN EXPORT BEER FOR TABLE USE.
BOTTLED ONLY AT THE BREWERY
BREWED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
CHARLESTOWN, MASS

DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P.B.
ALE
Oh be Jolly

NORFOLK CABINET
Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE, 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

☞ See Page 5 for "AN IDEAL OUTING."

THE MUSIC HALL
PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY C. A. ELLIS, MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, FRIDAY, JULY 2, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON. Vol. XII. No. 45.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Shirt Waists
of Silk, Muslin, Organdie, Cleansed or Dyed, and Wash Waists properly laundered.
LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Phones. Teams.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.
10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.
The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.
The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"

BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER.
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH-
301-305 A STREET.

THE.... MUSIC.. HALL... Promenade Concerts
TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

FRIDAY, JULY 2.
LAST SOLOISTS' NIGHT.
PROGRAMME.

1.	MARCH, "Hoch Habsburg"	Kral
2.	OVERTURE, "Poet and Peasant"	Suppé
3.	SOLO FOR FLUTE. a. Andante	Haendel
	b. Valse	Godard
	Solo Flute, MONS. L. JACQUET.
4.	SELECTION, "Cavalleria Rusticana"	Mascagni
5.	OVERTURE, "Merry Wives of Windsor"	Nicolai
6.	SOLO FOR VIOLIN. a. Cavatina	Raff
	b. Hungarian Dance	Brahms
	MR. KARL ONDRICEK, Concertmeister.
7.	MAZOURKA from "Halka"	Moniuszko
8.	ROMANZA, "Non e ver." (For Cornet.)	Mattei
	MR. PIERRE MULLER.
9.	OVERTURE, "The Flying Dutchman"	Wagner
10.	SERENADE FOR VIOLIN, 'CELLO, AND HARP	Oelschlegel
	MESSRS. ONDRICEK, SCHULZ, and SCHUECKER. (First Time.)
11.	POLKA, "Arabella"	Knecht
12.	MARCH, "Stars and Stripes forever" (First Time.)	Sousa

SPECIAL ANNOUNCEMENT.
Saturday, July 3. CLOSING NIGHT.

MUSIC HALL. BASE BALL RETURNS BY ELECTRICITY. Monday, July 5. Two Games, Morning and Afternoon. Smoking Allowed. Cooling Refreshments. Admission, 10 cents. Reserved Seats, 15 cents and 25 cents.

Mlle. C. CHAMINADE'S Latest Compositions.

Songs.— "My Heart Sings," 2 keys.
"Once More," 2 keys.
"Alone," 3 keys.
"Couplets Bachiques," 3 keys.
"Nuit d'Été," 2 keys.

Piano Solos.— Vert Galant. Op. 85.
Ballade, Op. 36.
Six pieces humoristiques, Op. 87, separately or in one book.

See that you get the original and only authorized edition of this composer's compositions, bearing our imprint.

BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth Street, NEW YORK.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

BOSTON CLUB LAGER
AN EXPORT BEER FOR TABLE USE.
BOTTLED ONLY AT THE BREWERY
BREWED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
CHARLESTOWN, MASS.

DRINK VAN NOSTRAND'S
Oh be Jolly
P. B. ALE

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

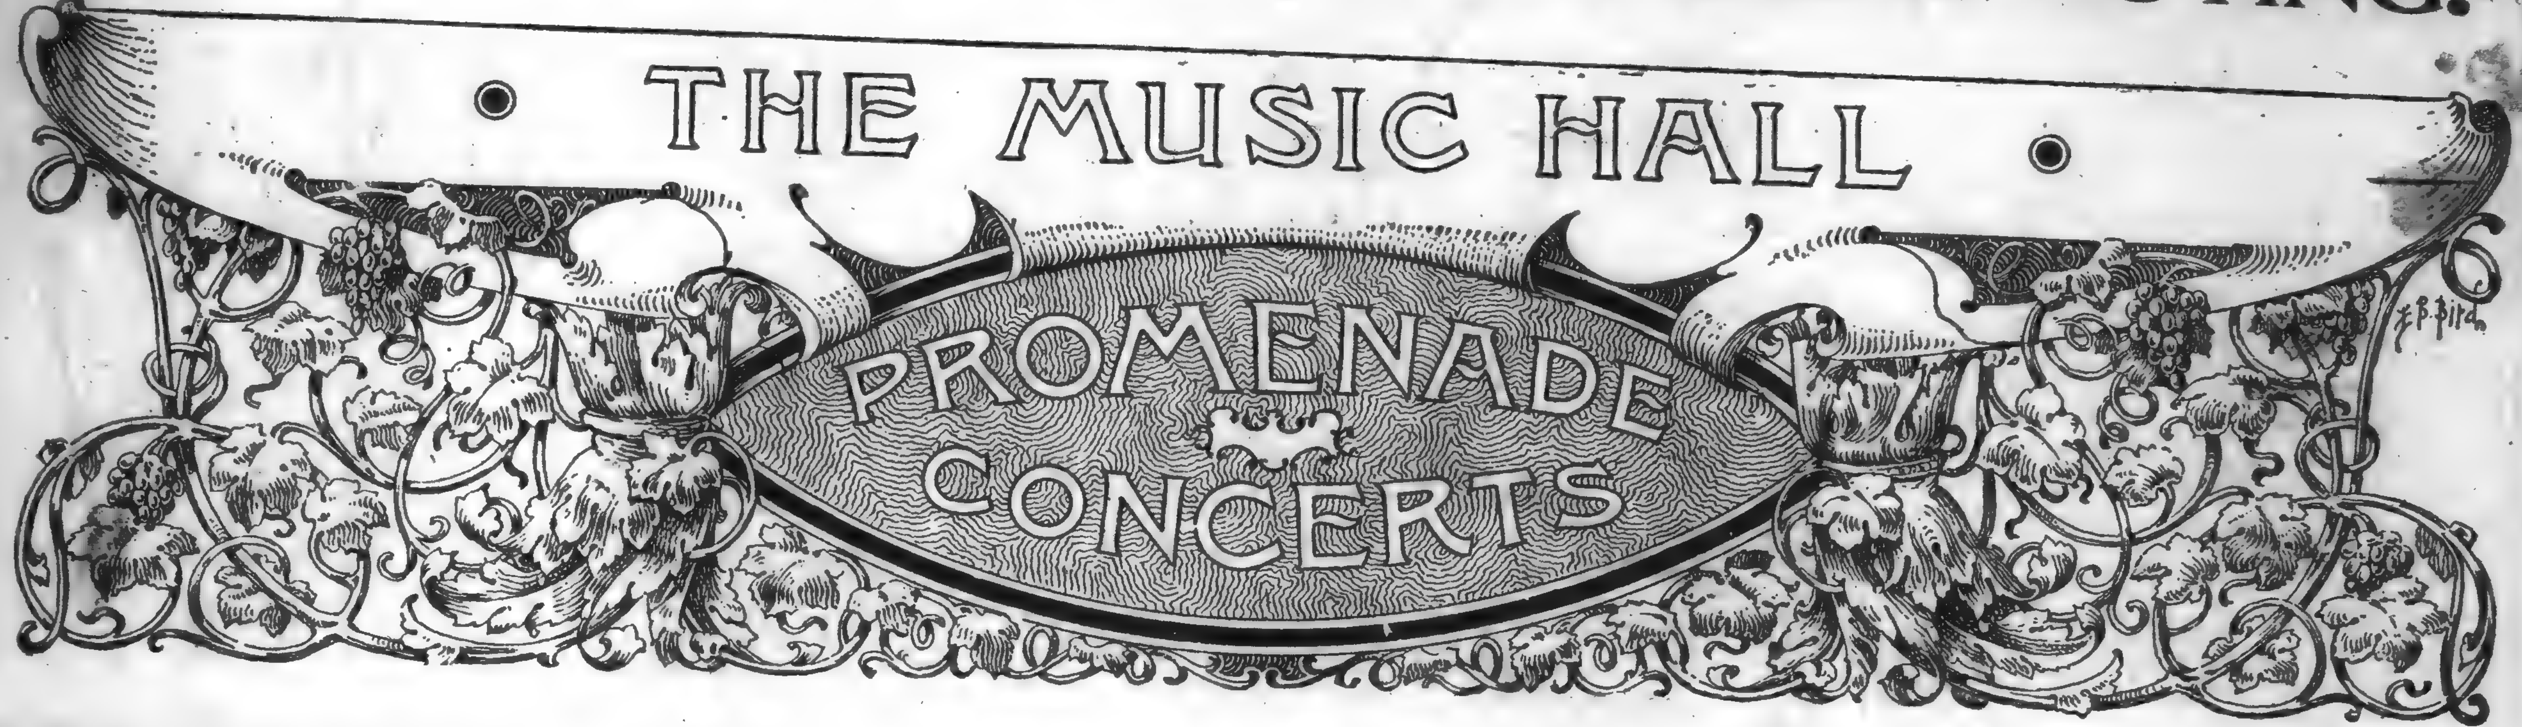
THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

TRY THE BARRISTER, DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

[129]

- COVER ONLY -
CONTENTS AVAILABLE
ELSEWHERE IN ARCHIVES

☞ See Pages 3, 5, and 7 for "AN IDEAL OUTING."



THE MUSIC HALL PROMENADE CONCERTS

PUBLISHED BY
C. A. ELLIS,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, JULY 3, 1897.

SUMMER SEASON.
Vol. XII. No. 46.

THE MUSIC HALL Promenade Concerts

TWELFTH SEASON

C. A. ELLIS, Manager. F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.
Mr. LEO SCHULZ, Conductor.

SATURDAY, JULY 3.

CLOSING NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

1.	WEDDING MARCH	Mendelssohn
2.	OVERTURE, "Rienzi"	Wagner
3.	a. CHANSON TRISTE	Tschaikowsky
	b. DANCE OF SYLPHS	Léhar
4.	WALTZ, "Les Patineurs"	Waldteufel
5.	OVERTURE, "Sakuntala"	Goldmark
6.	NOCTURNE FOR 'CELLO with Harp Accompaniment MESSRS. SCHULZ and SCHUECKER.	Chopin
7.	a. NARCISSUS	Nevin
	b. GAVOTTE, "Stefanie"	Czibulka
8.	WALTZ, "Blue Danube"	Strauss
9.	OVERTURE, "Pique Dame"	Suppé
10.	WALTZ, "Grubenlichter"	Zeller
11.	SELECTION, "Grand Duchess"	Offenbach
12.	MARCH, "Liberty Bell"	Sousa
	THE STAR SPANGLED BANNER.

MUSIC HALL. BASE BALL RETURNS BY ELECTRICITY. Monday, July 5. Two Games, Morning and Afternoon. Smoking Allowed. Cooling Refreshments. Admission, 10 cents. Reserved Seats, 15 cents and 25 cents.

ANOTHER LIST OF SUCCESSES.

"The Light of the World," 4 keys. Stephen Adams.
"A May Morning," 3 keys. L. Denza.
"I Dream of Thee," 3 keys. H. Trotere.
"A Night in June." A. Ward.
"Evening Shadows." A. Somervell.
"Only a Withered Rose." J. R. Thomas.
"The Angelus," 2 keys. I. Luckstone.
Etc., etc., etc.

PUBLISHED BY
BOOSEY & CO., 9 East Seventeenth St., New York.
And to be had from any dealer in Boston.

BICYCLES CHECKED FREE.

LEWANDO'S
DYEING
LAUNDRY
CLEANSING

Shirt Waists
of Silk, Muslin, Organdie,
Cleansed or Dyed,
and
Wash Waists properly laundered.
LEWANDO'S,
17 Temple Place. 284 Boylston Street.
W. L. CROSBY, Manager.
Phones. Teams.

New Light.
All Tobacco Cigarettes.

10 LITTLE CIGARS 10 cts.

The Only All Tobacco Cigarette Sold at these Concerts.

The American Tobacco Co., Mfrs.
NEW YORK, U.S.A.

"BREWED BY A BREWER MATURED BY NATURE"
BARTHOLOMAY ROCHESTER BEER
SOLD AT THESE CONCERTS
BOSTON-BRANCH
301-305 A STREET.

BOSTON CLUB LAGER
AN EXPORT BEER FOR TABLE USE.
BOTTLED ONLY AT THE BREWERY
BREWED BY
A. G. VAN NOSTRAND
BUNKER HILL BREWERIES
CHARLESTOWN, MASS

Oh be Jolly
DRINK
VAN NOSTRAND'S
P.B.
ALE

NORFOLK CABINET

Norfolk Lager

LAGER BEER

Well aged, brewed from the finest Barley-malt and choicest Hops in the good old-fashioned way, without any artificial process.

A Particularly Fine Lager for Family Use and Clubs.

Bottled in the most careful manner at our own bottling department, and sold by the S. S. Pierce Co. and all other leading grocers in New England.

Our "Cabinet" and "Bismarck Braeu" (see page 7 of this programme) are the most popular refreshments at these concerts.

HABICH & CO.

H. W. HABICH, EDWARD RUHL, { Telephone, 56 Roxbury or 1152 Boston.

ESTABROOK & EATON'S MARGUERITE PERFECTOS, 10c. EACH, CONCHAS, 10c., 3 FOR 25c., SOLD AT THE "POPS."

TRY "THE BARRISTER," DANIEL FRANK & CO.'S NEW CIGAR.

THE WELL-KNOWN CIGARS OF DANIEL FRANK & CO. {10 POST-OFFICE SQUARE 232 WASHINGTON STREET} ON SALE AT THESE CONCERTS.

END OF
VOLUME

VOLUME 13

BSO

1898 - 1899

[illegible]'s
Invoice & Scrap
BOOK

EIGHTEENTH SEASON, 1898-99.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

1607th to 1612th CONCERT.

NOVEMBER ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, November 6, at 7, P. M. Providence Depot.

Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, November 7, at 7 A.M.

CONTINENTAL HOTEL.

Concert at Academy of Music at 8, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.

Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, November 8, Baltimore & Ohio R. R., Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.22, A.M.

Arrive Baltimore, at 12.45 P. M.

Concert at Music Hall, Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.

Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Tuesday November 8, at midnight. Sleeping cars ready at 10, P. M.

Arrive New York, Depot Central R.R. of N. J., Wednesday, November 9, at 7, A.M.

NEW YORK ADDRESS, CARNEGIE HALL.

Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Wednesday, November 9, at 2.

Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday Evening, November 10, at 8, P. M.

Matinee at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday, November 11, at 3.30.

Concert at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Saturday, November 12, at 8, P.M.

Leave New York, Grand Central Depot, Saturday, November 12, midnight.

Hotel baggage will be collected after the concert Saturday night.

Arrive Boston Sunday, November 13, at 7 A.M. Providence Depot.

Instruments must be ready and marked to-night (Saturday), after the Concert.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SATURDAY, November 5, 1898.

☞ Special attention is called to the change in the hour of the Brooklyn Matinee, from 3 to 3.30.

EIGHTEENTH SEASON, 1898-99.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

1658th to 1663d CONCERT.

FEBRUARY ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, Feb'ry 19, at 12 midnight. Providence Depot.

Arrive New York, Grand Central Depot, Monday, February 20, at 7, A.M.

Leave New York Monday, February 20, Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, 9 A.M.

Arrive Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Monday, February 20, at 11.40 A.M.

CONTINENTAL HOTEL.

Concert at Academy of Music at 8, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.

Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, February 21, Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.22, A.M.

Arrive Baltimore, at 12.45 P. M.

Concert at Music Hall, Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.

Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Tuesday, February 21, at midnight. Sleeping cars ready at 10, P. M.

NEW YORK ADDRESS, CARNEGIE HALL.

Arrive New York, Depot Central R.R. of N.J., Wednesday, February 22, at 7, A.M.

Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Wednesday, February 22, at 2.

Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday Evening, February 23, at 8, P.M.

Matinee at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday, February 24, at 3.30.

Concert at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Saturday, February 25, at 8, P. M.

Leave New York, Grand Central Depot, Saturday, February 25, midnight.

Hotel baggage will be collected after the concert Saturday night.

Arrive Boston Sunday, February 26, at 7 A.M. Providence Depot.

Instruments must be ready and marked to-night (Saturday), after the Concert.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SATURDAY, February 18, 1899.

EIGHTEENTH SEASON, 1898-99.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

1673d to 1678th CONCERT.

MARCH ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, March 19, at 12 midnight. Providence Depot.

Arrive New York, Grand Central Depot, Monday, March 20, at 7, A.M.

Leave New York Monday, March 20, Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, 9 A.M.

Arrive Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Monday, March 20, at 11.40 A.M.

CONTINENTAL HOTEL.

Concert at Academy of Music at 8, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.

Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, March 21, Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.22, A.M.

Arrive Baltimore, at 12.45 P. M.

Concert at Music Hall, Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.

Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Tuesday March 21, at midnight. Sleeping cars ready at 10, P. M.

NEW YORK ADDRESS, CARNEGIE HALL.

Arrive New York, Depot Central R.R. of N.J., Wednesday, March 22, at 7, A.M.

Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Wednesday, March 22, at 2.

Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday Evening, March 23, at 8, P.M.

Matinee at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday, March 24, at 3.30.

Concert at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Saturday, March 25, at 8, P. M.

Leave New York, Grand Central Depot, Saturday, March 25, midnight.

Hotel baggage will be collected after the concert Saturday night.

Arrive Boston Sunday, March 26, at 7 A.M. Providence Depot.

Instruments must be ready and marked to-night (Saturday), after the Concert.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SATURDAY, March 18, 1899.

NOTICE

Attention is called to the fact that the Saturday concert of next week (April 22) will begin promptly at 8.30, and that the first movement of the symphony lasts about twenty-five minutes.

[1]

SHIPMAN'S
Invoice & Scrap
BOOK

EIGHTEENTH SEASON, 1898-99.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

1607th to 1612th CONCERT.

NOVEMBER ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, November 6, at 7, P. M. Providence Depot.

Arrive Philadelphia, Broad Street Station Penna. R. R., Monday, November 7, at 7 A.M.

CONTINENTAL HOTEL.

Concert at Academy of Music at 8, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.

Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, November 8, Baltimore & Ohio R. R., Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.22, A.M.

Arrive Baltimore, at 12.45 P. M.

Concert at Music Hall, Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.

Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Tuesday November 8, at midnight. Sleeping cars ready at 10, P. M.

Arrive New York, Depot Central R.R. of N.J., Wednesday, November 9, at 7, A.M.

NEW YORK ADDRESS, CARNEGIE HALL.

Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Wednesday, November 9, at 2.

Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday Evening, November 10, at 8, P. M.

Matinee at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday, November 11, at 3.30.

Concert at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Saturday, November 12, at 8, P.M.

Leave New York, Grand Central Depot, Saturday, November 12, midnight.

Hotel baggage will be collected after the concert Saturday night.

Arrive Boston Sunday, November 13, at 7 A.M. Providence Depot.

Instruments must be ready and marked to-night (Saturday), after the Concert.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SATURDAY, November 5, 1898.

☞ Special attention is called to the change in the hour of the Brooklyn Matinee, from 3 to 3.30.

EIGHTEENTH SEASON, 1898-99.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

1658th to 1663d CONCERT.

FEBRUARY ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, Feb'ry 19, at 12 midnight. Providence Depot.

Arrive New York, Grand Central Depot, Monday, February 20, at 7, A.M.

Leave New York Monday, February 20, Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, 9 A.M.

Arrive Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Monday, February 20, at 11.40 A.M.

CONTINENTAL HOTEL.

Concert at Academy of Music at 8, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.

Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, February 21, Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.22, A.M.

Arrive Baltimore, at 12.45 P. M.

Concert at Music Hall, Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.

Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Tuesday, February 21, at midnight. Sleeping cars ready at 10, P. M.

NEW YORK ADDRESS, CARNEGIE HALL.

Arrive New York, Depot Central R.R. of N.J., Wednesday, February 22, at 7, A.M.

Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Wednesday, February 22, at 2.

Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday Evening, February 23, at 8, P.M.

Matinee at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday, February 24, at 3.30.

Concert at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Saturday, February 25, at 8, P. M.

Leave New York, Grand Central Depot, Saturday, February 25, midnight.

Hotel baggage will be collected after the concert Saturday night.

Arrive Boston Sunday, February 26, at 7 A.M. Providence Depot.

Instruments must be ready and marked to-night (Saturday), after the Concert.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SATURDAY, February 18, 1899.

EIGHTEENTH SEASON, 1898-99.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

1673d to 1678th CONCERT.

MARCH ITINERARY.

Leave Boston Sunday, March 19, at 12 midnight. Providence Depot.

Arrive New York, Grand Central Depot, Monday, March 20, at 7, A.M.

Leave New York Monday, March 20, Central Railroad of New Jersey, Ferry foot of Liberty Street, 9 A.M.

Arrive Philadelphia, Reading Terminal, Monday, March 20, at 11.40 A.M.

CONTINENTAL HOTEL.

Concert at Academy of Music at 8, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.

Leave Philadelphia, Tuesday, March 21, Baltimore & Ohio R. R. Twenty-fourth and Chestnut Sts., at 10.22, A.M.

Arrive Baltimore, at 12.45 P. M.

Concert at Music Hall, Mount Royal Avenue and Cathedral St., at 8, P.M.

Hotel baggage not ready directly after the concert will be moved at owner's expense.

Leave Baltimore, Camden Street Station, B. & O. R. R., Tuesday March 21, at midnight. Sleeping cars ready at 10, P. M.

NEW YORK ADDRESS, CARNEGIE HALL.

Arrive New York, Depot Central R.R. of N.J., Wednesday, March 22, at 7, A.M.

Matinee at Carnegie Hall, Wednesday, March 22, at 2.

Concert at Carnegie Hall, Thursday Evening, March 23, at 8, P.M.

Matinee at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Friday, March 24, at 3.30.

Concert at Academy of Music, Brooklyn, Saturday, March 25, at 8, P. M.

Leave New York, Grand Central Depot, Saturday, March 25, midnight.

Hotel baggage will be collected after the concert Saturday night.

Arrive Boston Sunday, March 26, at 7 A.M. Providence Depot.

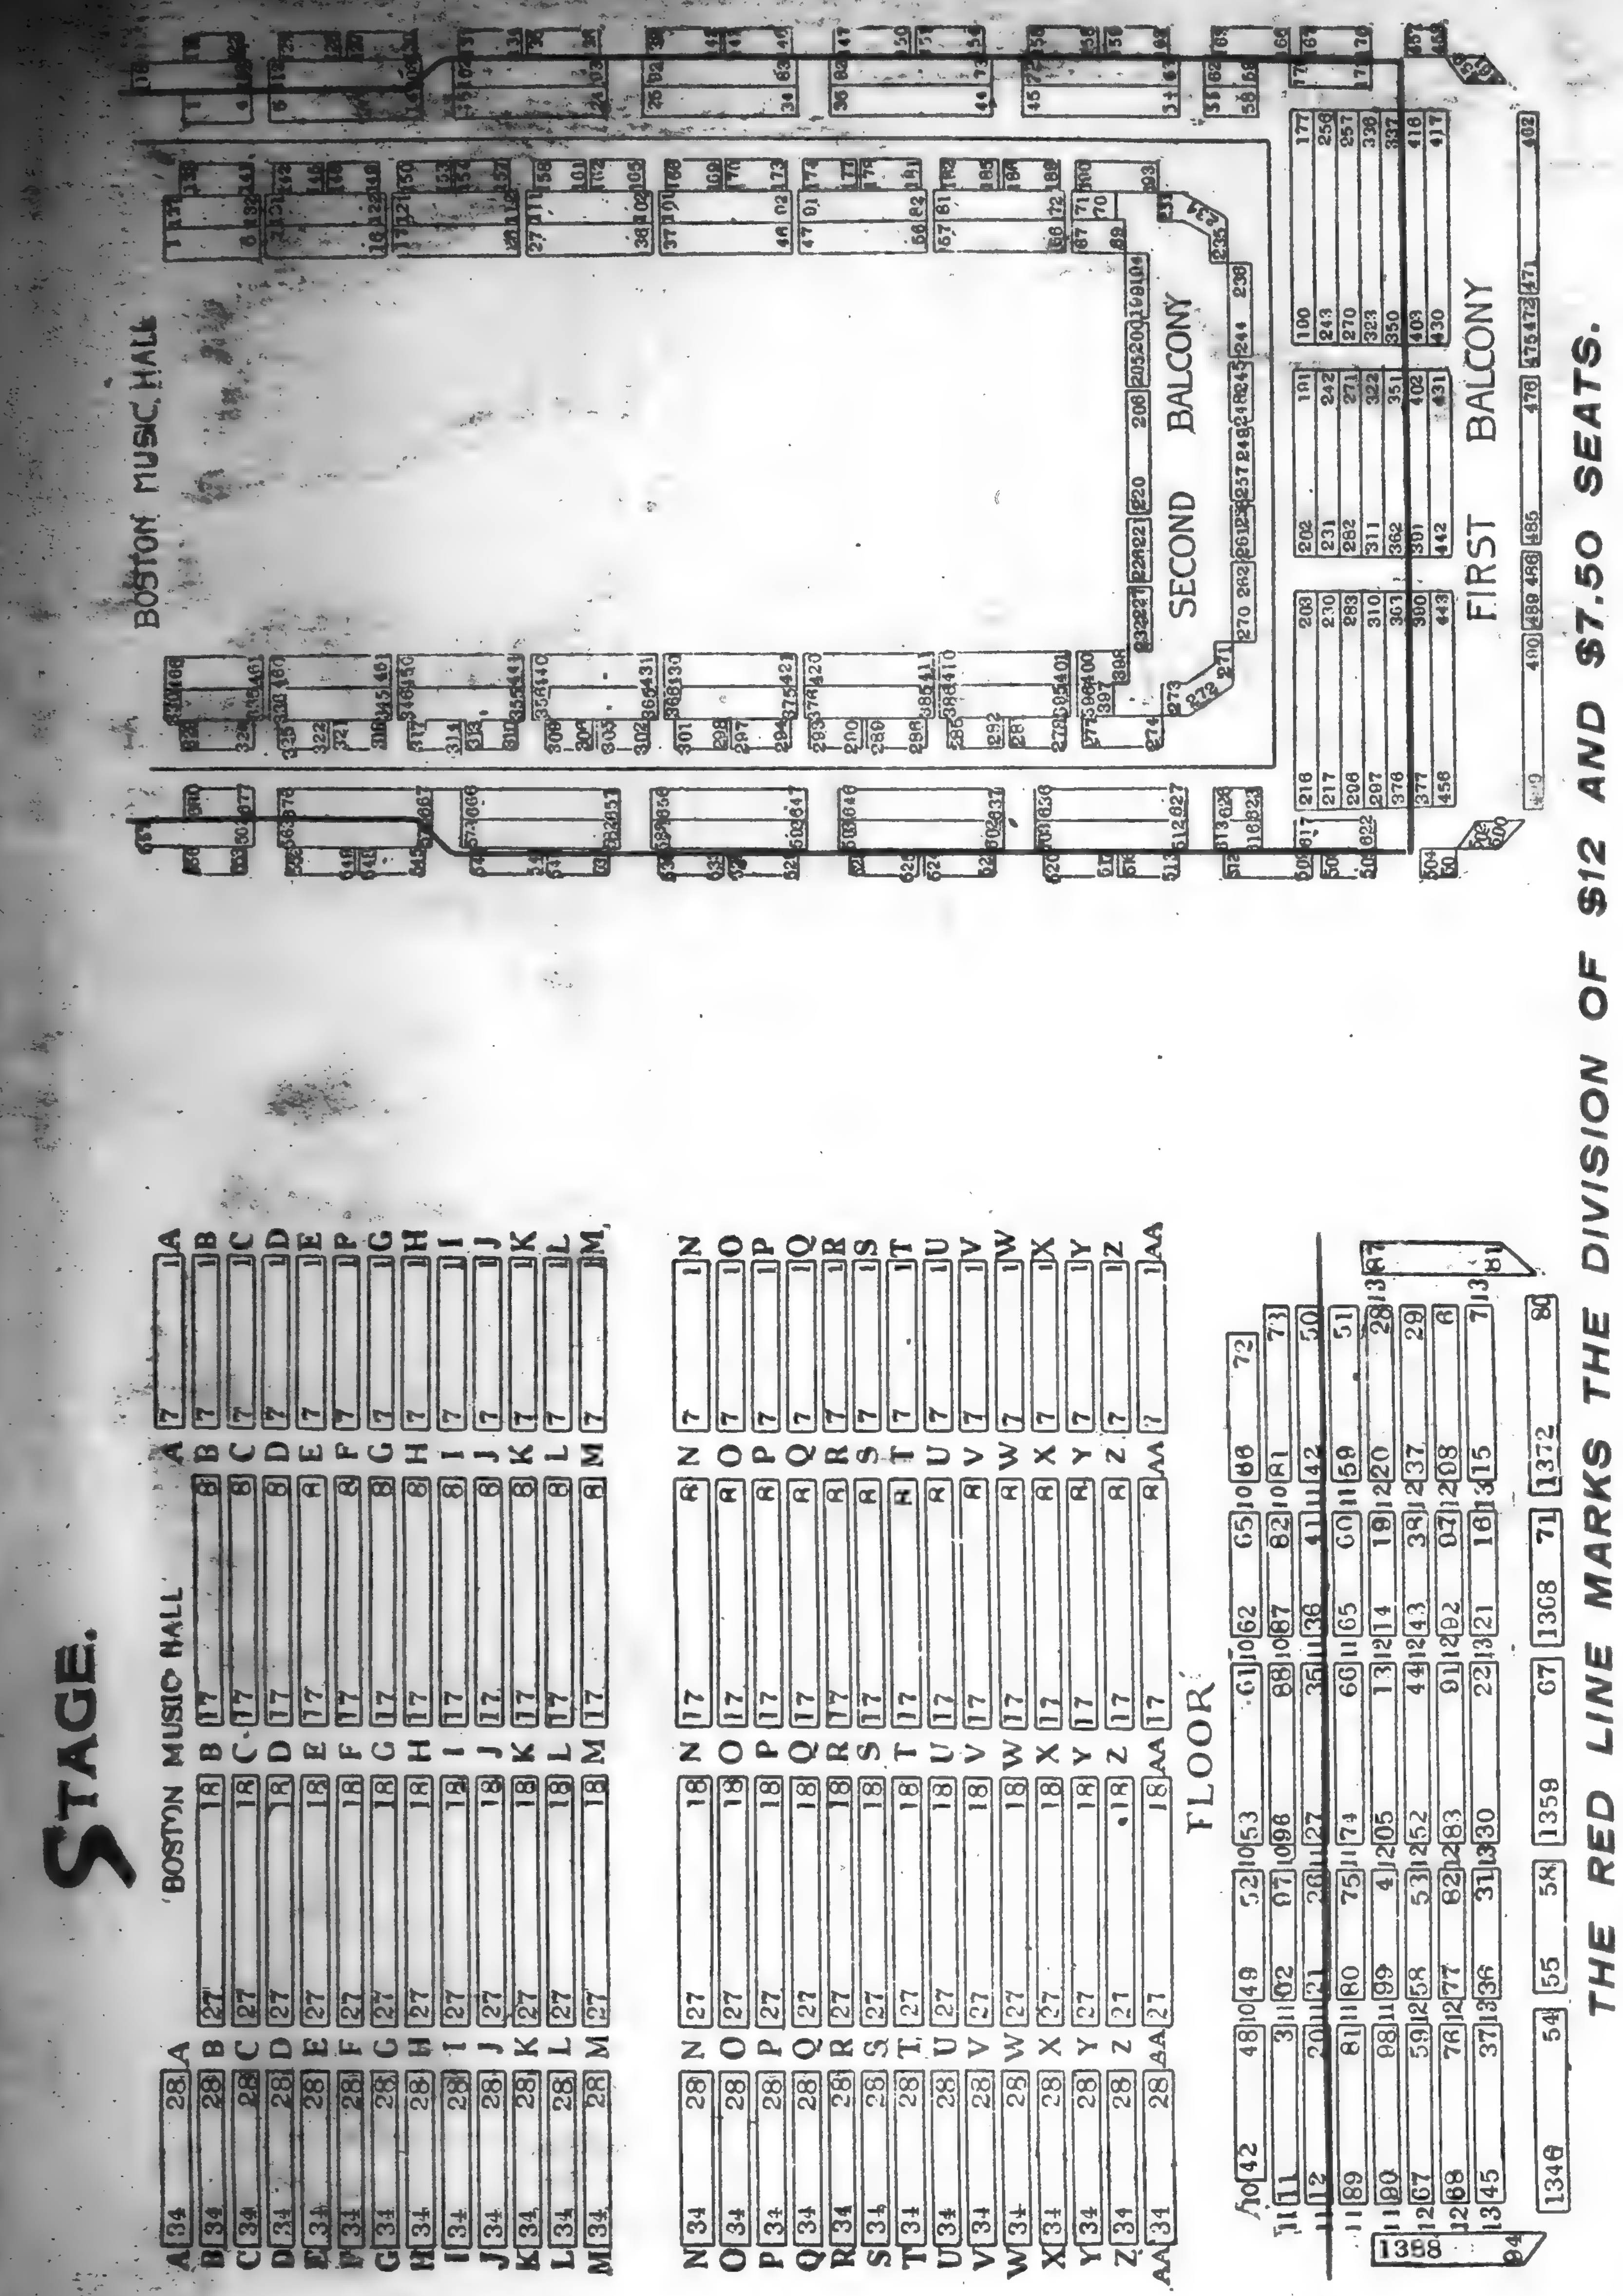
Instruments must be ready and marked to-night (Saturday), after the Concert.

C. A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
F. R. COMEE, ASS'T MANAGER.

SATURDAY, March 18, 1899.

NOTICE

Attention is called to the fact that the Saturday concert of next week (April 22) will begin promptly at 8.30, and that the first movement of the symphony lasts about twenty-five minutes.



BOSTON
MUSIC HALL

EIGHTEENTH SEASON
1898-99

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

Twenty-four Concerts

On consecutive SATURDAY EVENINGS, from October 15, 1898, to April 29, 1899, omitting November 12, December 17, 1898, January 21, February 25, and March 25, 1899, and

Twenty-four Public Rehearsals

On consecutive FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, from October 14, 1898, to April 28, 1899, omitting November 11, December 16, 1898, January 20, February 24, and March 24, 1899.

SOLOISTS:

Mme. Gadski, Lady Hallé (Norman Neruda), Mme. Carreno, Miss Aus Der Ohe, Messrs. Rosenthal, Sauer, Willy Burmester, Sahla, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski, Schroeder, and others.

For the first time in several years, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with quartet and chorus and Schumann's "Manfred" with soloists, reader, and chorus will be given.

TICKETS for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals, $12.00 and $7.50 according to location.

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, MONDAY, September 26, at 10 A.M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, September 27, at 10 A.M.

The $12 Seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, September 29, at 10 A.M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place, on FRIDAY, September 30, at 10 A.M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be immediately resold.

(OVER.)

BOSTON
SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA,
MUSIC HALL.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
FOUNDED 1881.
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
MUSIC HALL, BOSTON.

CHARLES A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
FREDERIC R. COMEE, ASSISTANT MANAGER.

September 28, 1898.

We beg to call your attention to the announcement of the series of five matinees and five evening concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall.

Should you desire to subscribe, please sign and mail enclosed order, indicating the location of seats preferred.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

UNITED STATES POSTAGE
TWO 2 CENTS

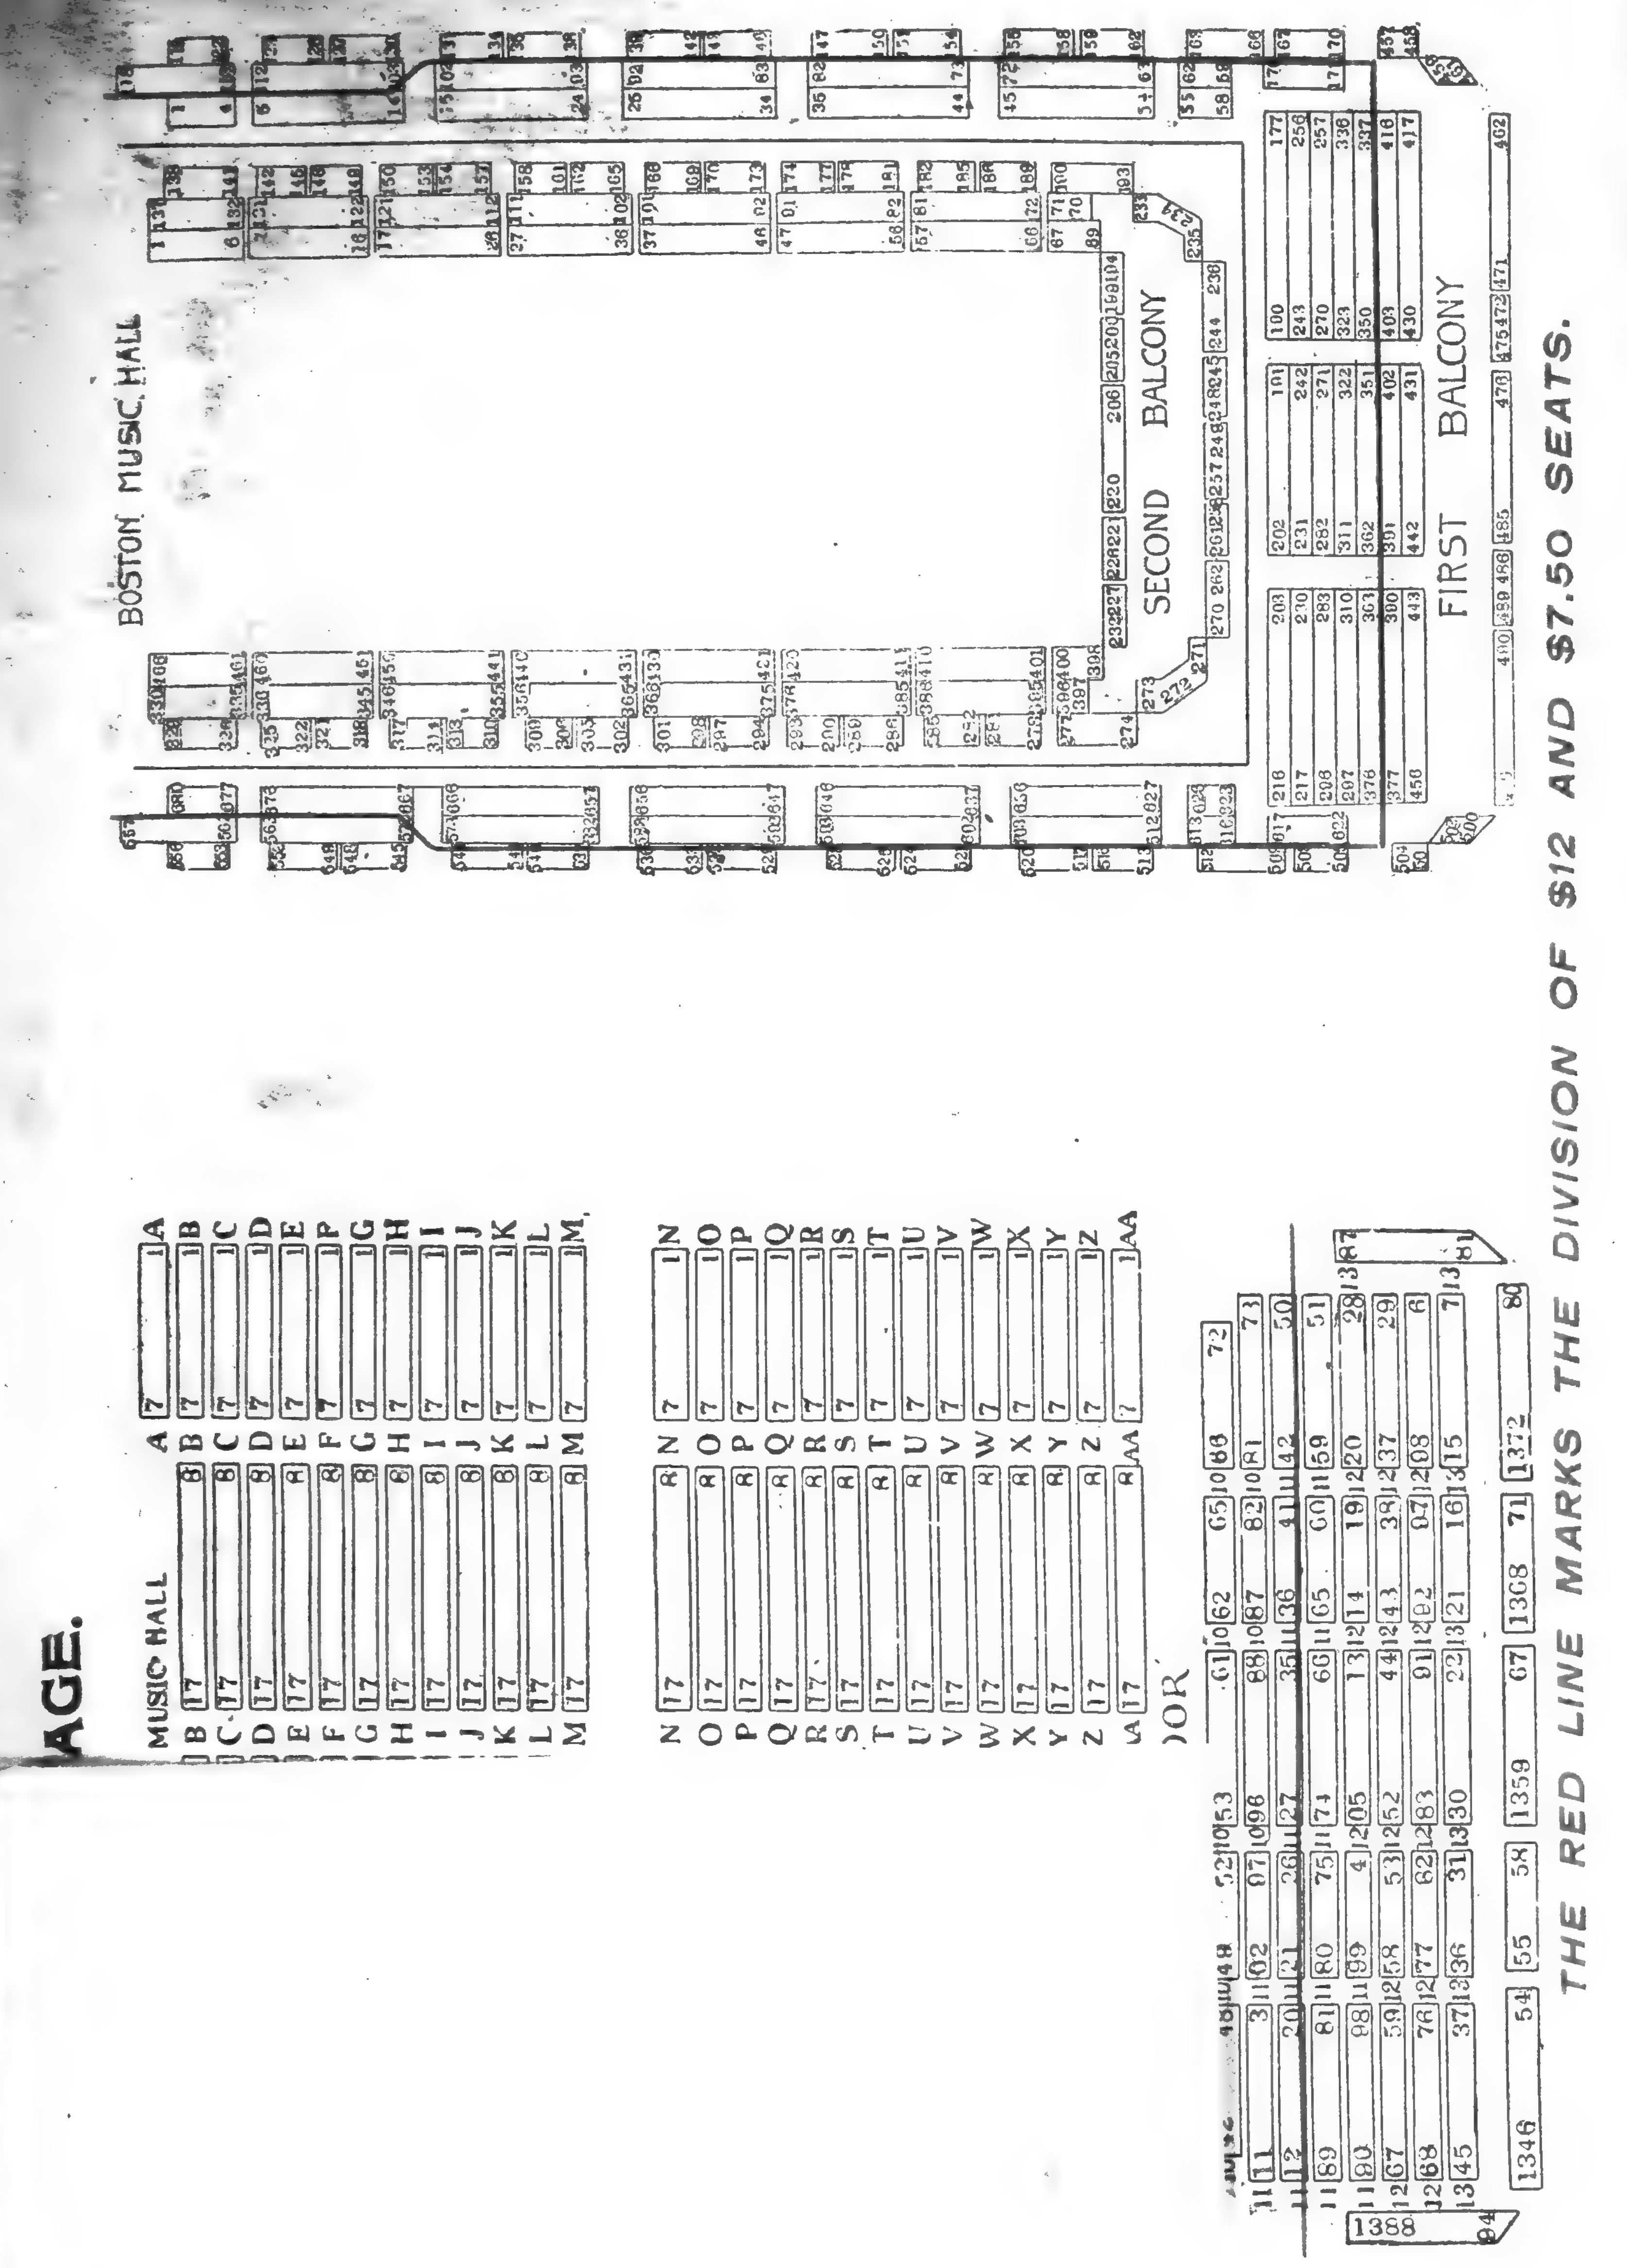
CHARLES A. ELLIS,
Manager Boston Symphony Orchestra,
Carnegie Hall,
NEW YORK.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
FOUNDED 1881.
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
MUSIC HALL, BOSTON

CHARLES A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
FREDERIC R. COMEE, ASSISTANT MANAGER.

189 .

The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra regret that they cannot comply with your request for free tickets.



THE RED LINE MARKS THE DIVISION OF $12 AND $7.50 SEATS.

BOSTON
MUSIC HALL

EIGHTEENTH SEASON
1898-99

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

Twenty-four Concerts

On consecutive SATURDAY EVENINGS, from October 15, 1898, to April 29, 1899, omitting November 12, December 17, 1898, January 21, February 25, and March 25, 1899, and

Twenty-four Public Rehearsals

On consecutive FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, from October 14, 1898, to April 28, 1899, omitting November 11, December 16, 1898, January 20, February 24, and March 24, 1899.

SOLOISTS:

Mme. Gadski, Lady Hallé (Norman Neruda), Mme. Carreno, Miss Aus Der Ohe, Messrs. Rosenthal, Sauer, Willy Burmester, Sahla, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski, Schroeder, and others.

For the first time in several years, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with quartet and chorus and Schumann's "Manfred" with soloists, reader, and chorus will be given.

TICKETS for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals, $12.00 and $7.50 according to location.

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, MONDAY, September 26, at 10 A.M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, September 27, at 10 A.M.

The $12 Seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, September 29, at 10 A.M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place, on FRIDAY, September 30, at 10 A.M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be immediately resold.

(OVER.)

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
FOUNDED 1881.
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
MUSIC HALL, BOSTON.
CHARLES A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
FREDERIC R. COMEE, ASSISTANT MANAGER.

September 28, 1898.

We beg to call your attention to the announcement of the series of five matinees and five evening concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall.

Should you desire to subscribe, please sign and mail enclosed order, indicating the location of seats preferred.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

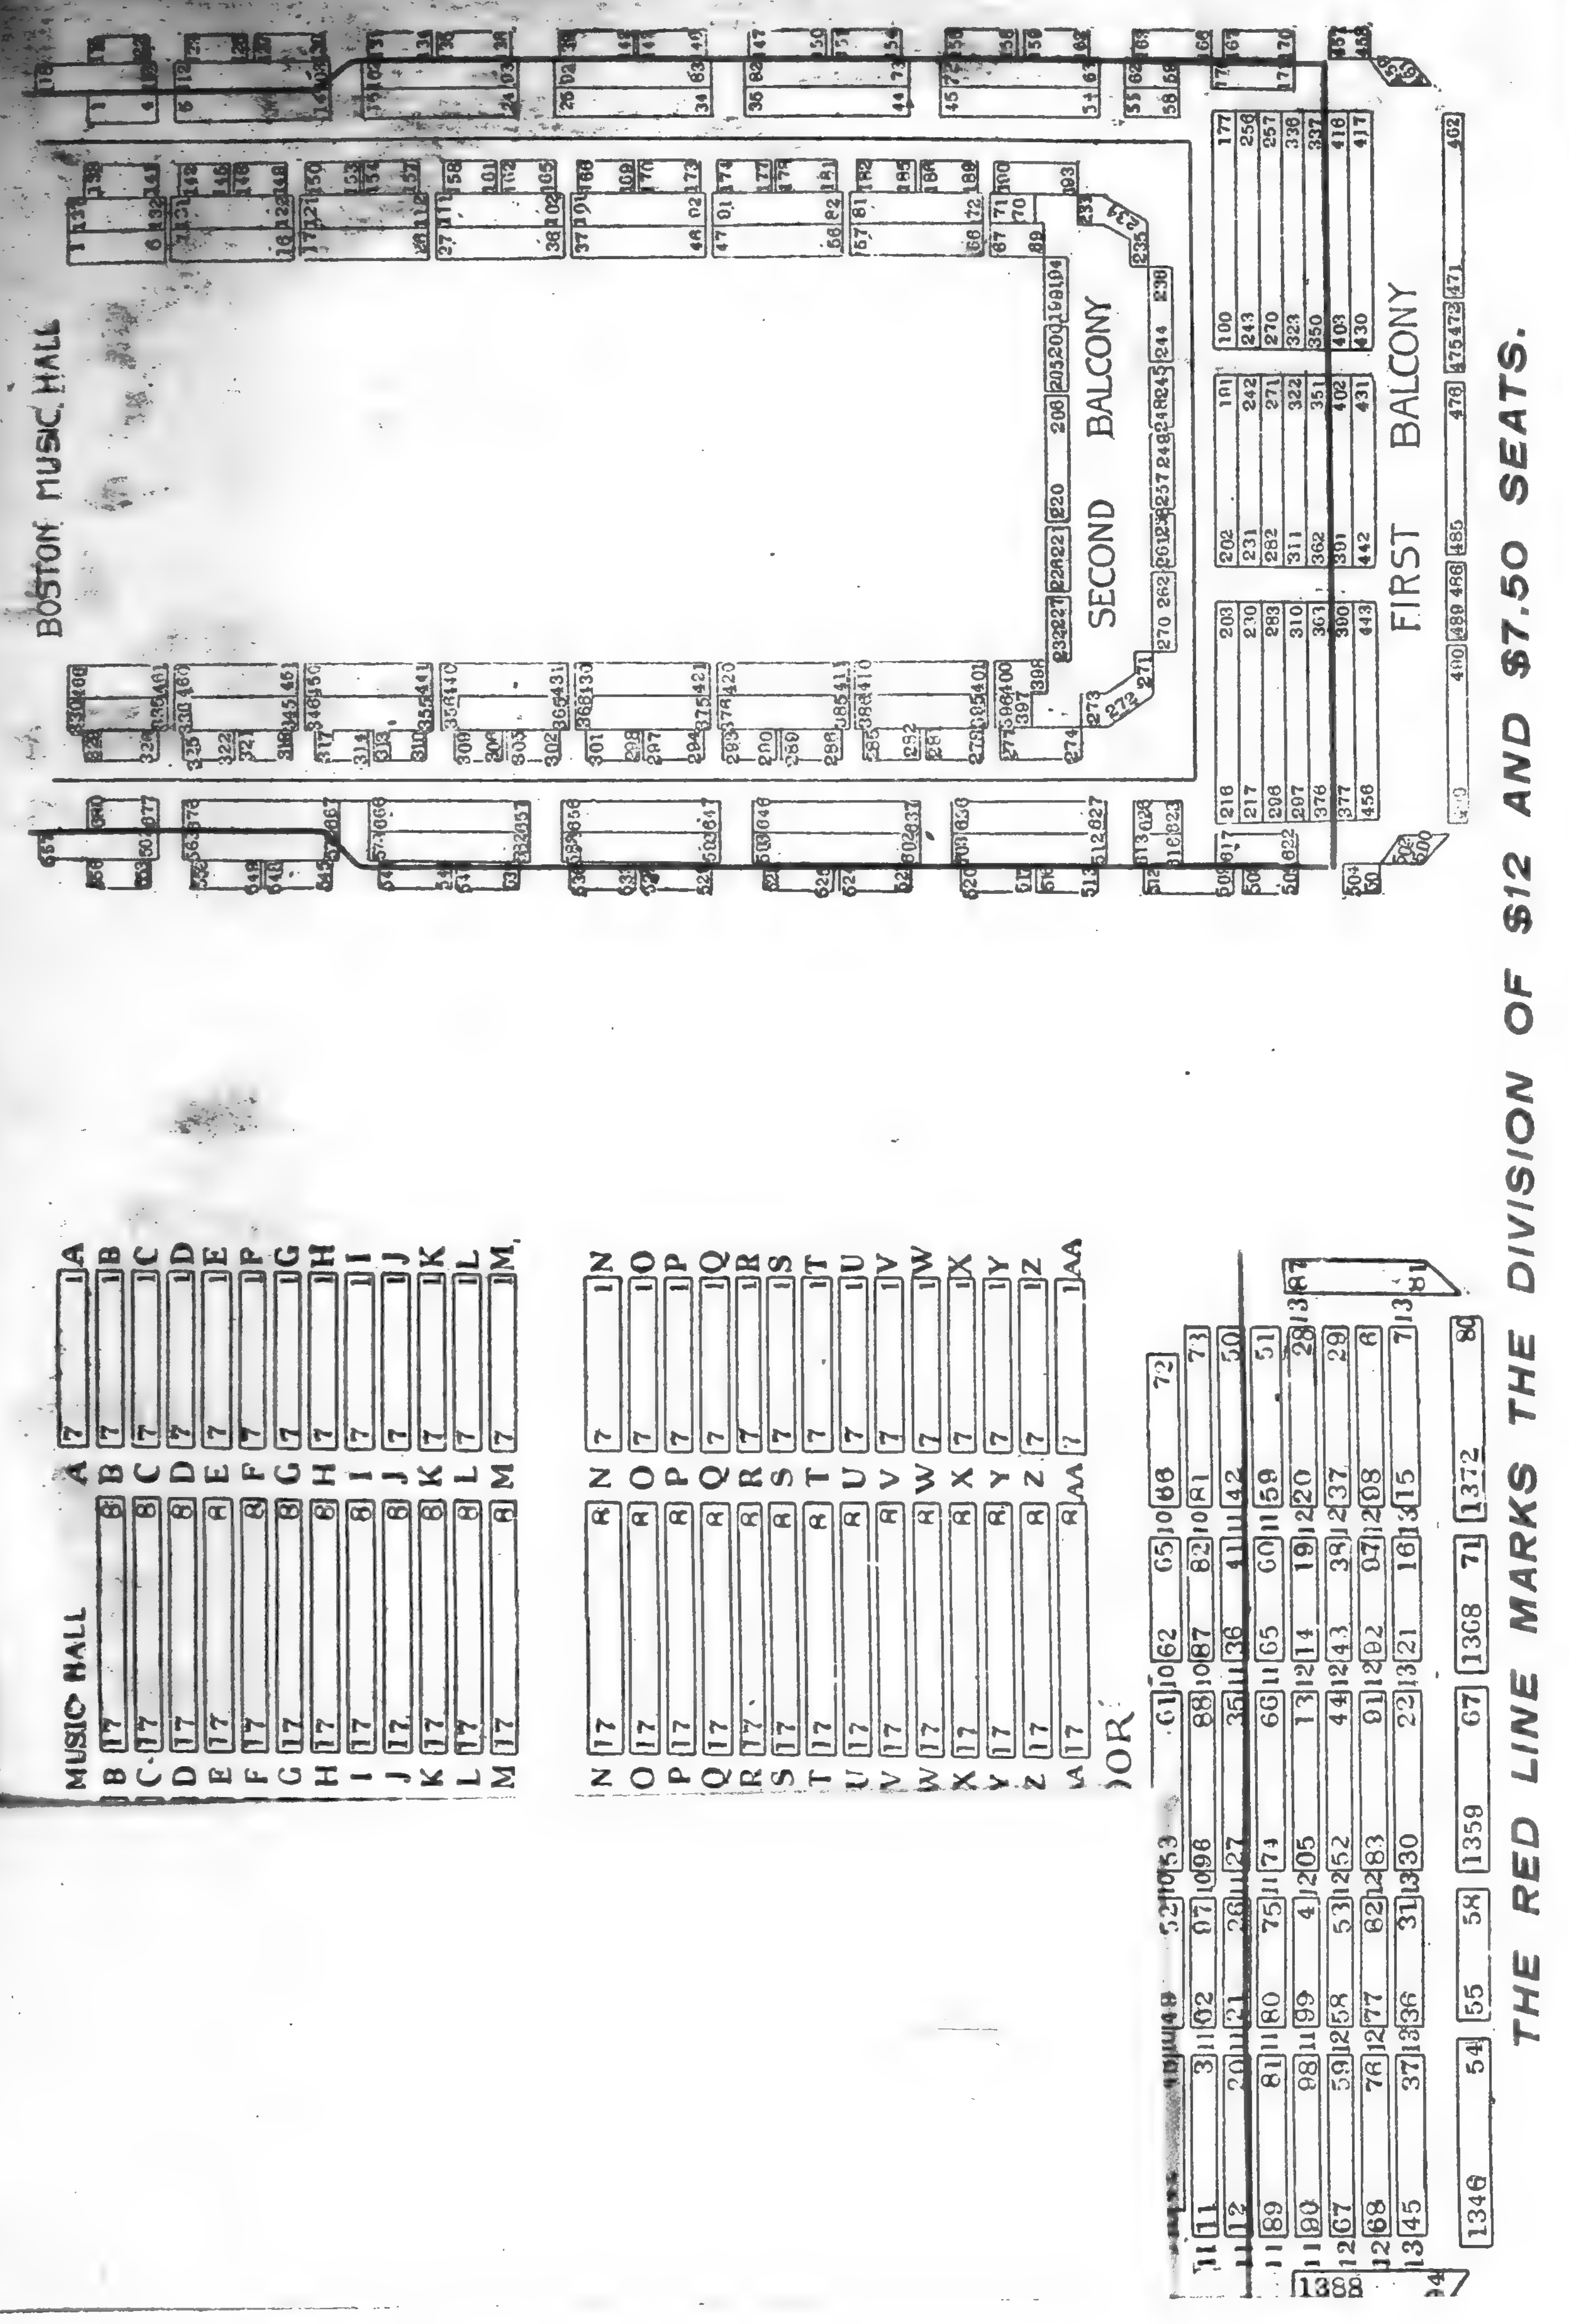
UNITED STATES POSTAGE TWO CENTS

CHARLES A. ELLIS,
Manager Boston Symphony Orchestra,
Carnegie Hall,
NEW YORK.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
FOUNDED 1881.
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
MUSIC HALL, BOSTON
CHARLES A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
FREDERIC R. COMEE, ASSISTANT MANAGER.

189 .

The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra regret that they cannot comply with your request for free tickets.



THE RED LINE MARKS THE DIVISION OF $12 AND $7.50 SEATS.

BOSTON
MUSIC HALL

EIGHTEENTH SEASON
1898–99

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

Twenty-four Concerts

On consecutive SATURDAY EVENINGS, from October 15, 1898, to April 29, 1899, omitting November 12, December 17, 1898, January 21, February 25, and March 25, 1899, and

Twenty-four Public Rehearsals

On consecutive FRIDAY AFTERNOONS, from October 14, 1898, to April 28, 1899, omitting November 11, December 16, 1898, January 20, February 24, and March 24, 1899.

SOLOISTS:

Mme. Gadski, Lady Hallé (Norman Neruda), Mme. Carreno, Miss Aus Der Ohe, Messrs. Rosenthal, Sauer, Willy Burmester, Sahla, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski, Schroeder, and others.

For the first time in several years, Beethoven's Ninth Symphony with quartet and chorus and Schumann's "Manfred" with soloists, reader, and chorus will be given.

TICKETS for the series of Concerts and for the series of Rehearsals, $12.00 and $7.50 according to location.

The $12 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, MONDAY, September 26, at 10 A.M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, TUESDAY, September 27, at 10 A.M.

The $12 Seats for the Concerts will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on THURSDAY, September 29, at 10 A.M.

The $7.50 Seats for the Concerts will be sold in like manner at the same place, on FRIDAY, September 30, at 10 A.M.

Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid. The seats open to competition will be shown on a diagram, and will be marked off as sold.

Tickets will be delivered in the Hall, and must be paid for as soon as bought, or they will be immediately resold.

(OVER.)

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
FOUNDED 1881.
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
MUSIC HALL, BOSTON.

CHARLES A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
FREDERIC R. COMEE, ASSISTANT MANAGER.

September 28, 1898.

We beg to call your attention to the announcement of the series of five matinees and five evening concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall.

Should you desire to subscribe, please sign and mail enclosed order, indicating the location of seats preferred.

Yours respectfully,

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.
FOUNDED 1881.
WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
MUSIC HALL, BOSTON

CHARLES A. ELLIS, MANAGER.
FREDERIC R. COMEE, ASSISTANT MANAGER.

189 .

The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra regret that they cannot comply with your request for free tickets.

[2]

To the Washington patrons of the

Boston Symphony Orchestra:

The growing popularity of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York has led the management to give an additional series of concerts in that city during the coming season. As the entire week of the monthly tournées of the Orchestra was already filled, this decision made it imperative to give up either the Baltimore or Washington series. An evening performance is always preferable to a matinee, for obvious reasons; and because a suitable audience-room cannot be secured for evening performances in Washington the series in that city must be abandoned. In view of the generous patronage of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Washington during the past thirteen seasons, the management take this action with much regret.

It may be of interest to Washington patrons to know that a train, via the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, leaving Washington at 6.20 P.M. arrives in Baltimore at 7.20 P.M., at the Mt. Royal station, directly across the Square from Music Hall, where the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are held. After the concert a train leaving from the same station at 10.41 P.M. reaches Washington at 11.41 P.M.

The five Baltimore concerts are on Tuesday evenings, November 8, December 13, January 17, February 21, and March 21. The season tickets are $7 and $5, according to location. A plan of the hall, with the division of seats, is shown on the next page.

SOLOISTS:

Mme. Gadski, Soprano; Lady Hallé (Norman Neruda) and Willy Burmester, Violinists; Mme. Carreno and Emil Sauer, Pianists.

Mr. Edward F. Guzman, 925 Pennsylvania Avenue, is authorized to receive subscriptions, and will attend the sale of season tickets in Baltimore to personally secure desired locations. Special rates will be secured from the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, the entire benefit of which will be given to patrons. No fee will be charged by Mr. Guzman, who will be paid by the management of the Orchestra.

F. R. COMEE,
ASSISTANT MANAGER.

C. A. ELLIS,
MANAGER.

(OVER.)

Sample Pages Boston Symphony Orchestra Programme.

SUITE NO. 1, FROM MUSIC TO "PEER GYNT," OPUS 46 . EDVARD GRIEG.

(Born at Bergen, in Norway, on June 15, 1843; still living.)

Peer Gynt, a dramatic poem by Henrik Ibsen, was written in 1867, and thus belongs to what may be called his second or middle period. The following is a brief synopsis of the poem, or allegorical play.

The character of Peer Gynt is taken from a Norwegian folk-legend. He is a sort of Norsk Faust, a man destined to be lured on to destruction by his over-wealth of imagination, unless he be saved by a woman. In the play, Peer Gynt is a peasant boy whose parents had once seen better days; but the father is dead, and mother and son are now living in extreme poverty. The boy's head teems with ideas, and he forms many grand plans for the future. He makes his mother his confidant, and she, though not blind to the fantastic wildness of his ways and schemes, cannot help believing in him. His youthful arrogance is unbounded. He goes to a wedding and carries off the young bride to the mountains, where he afterwards deserts her. Roaming about through the night, he meets a party of frolicsome dairy-maids. At last he finds refuge in the halls of the King of the Dovre Mountains; here he falls in love with the king's daughter, but is expelled from the palace on his love being discovered. Returning home again, he finds his mother, Ase, on her death-bed. After her death, he sails for foreign lands, stays away for many years, and at length lands on the coast of Morocco, a rich man. In an Arabian desert he meets Anitra, daughter of a Bedouin chieftain, and falls in love with her; but his love is only short-lived, and Anitra, discovering that her hold upon him

This Space, One=third Page,

DIRECTLY UNDER READING MATTER.

	Boston Issue. 48 Performances. 144,000 Copies.	Circuit Issue. New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, and Providence. 38 Performances. 330,000 Copies.	Total Issue. 86 Performances. 474,000 Copies.
SEASON. Oct. 15 to April 30.	$100.	$150.	$250.
THREE MONTHS. Oct. 15 to Jan. 15.	$60.	$80.	$150.

NEARLY HALF A MILLION ISSUED ANNUALLY.

New York, September 28, 1898.

I hereby subscribe for................................season tickets for the series of five { Wednesday Afternoon / Thursday Evening } Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall.

....

....

Location desired, as near as possible..............................

....

☞ Unless you wish to subscribe for both, please indicate your choice between the Afternoon and Evening series.

EIGHTEENTH SEASON, 1898-99

INFANTRY HALL, PROVIDENCE

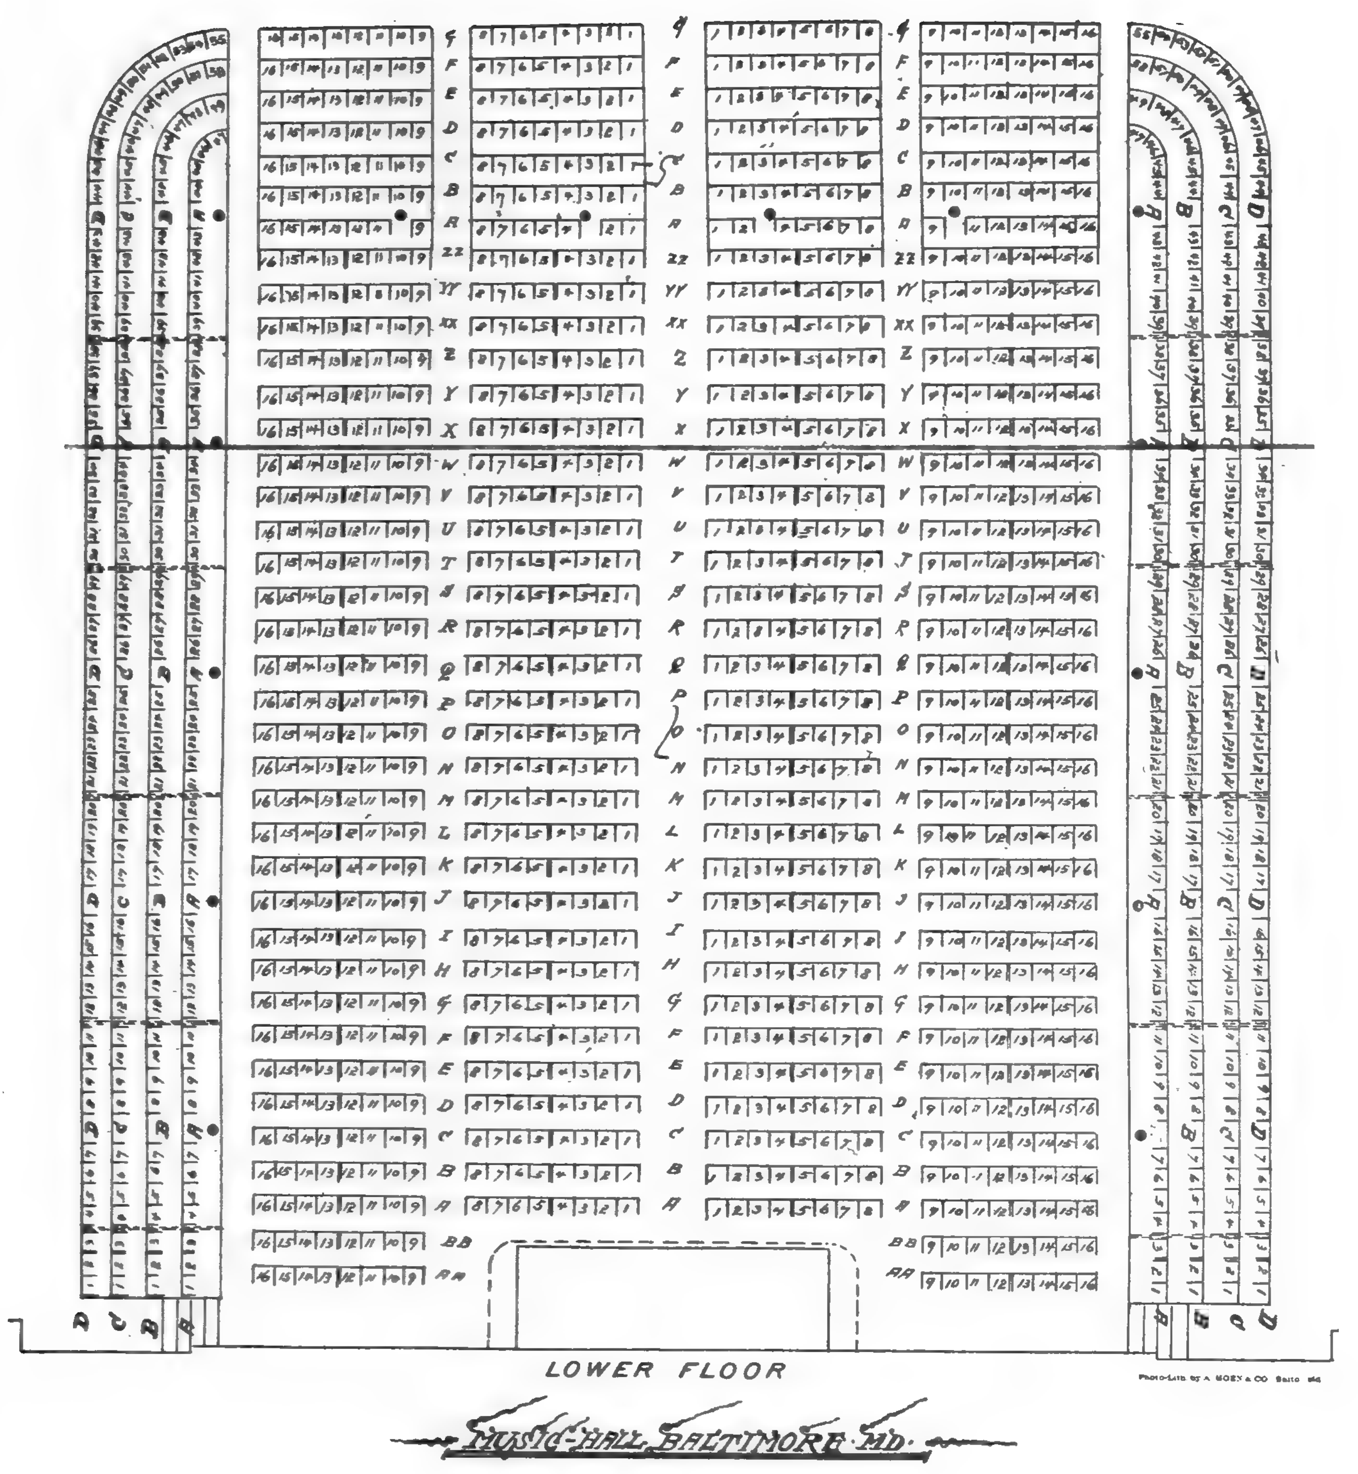
The Boston Symphony Orchestra

70 PERFORMERS

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

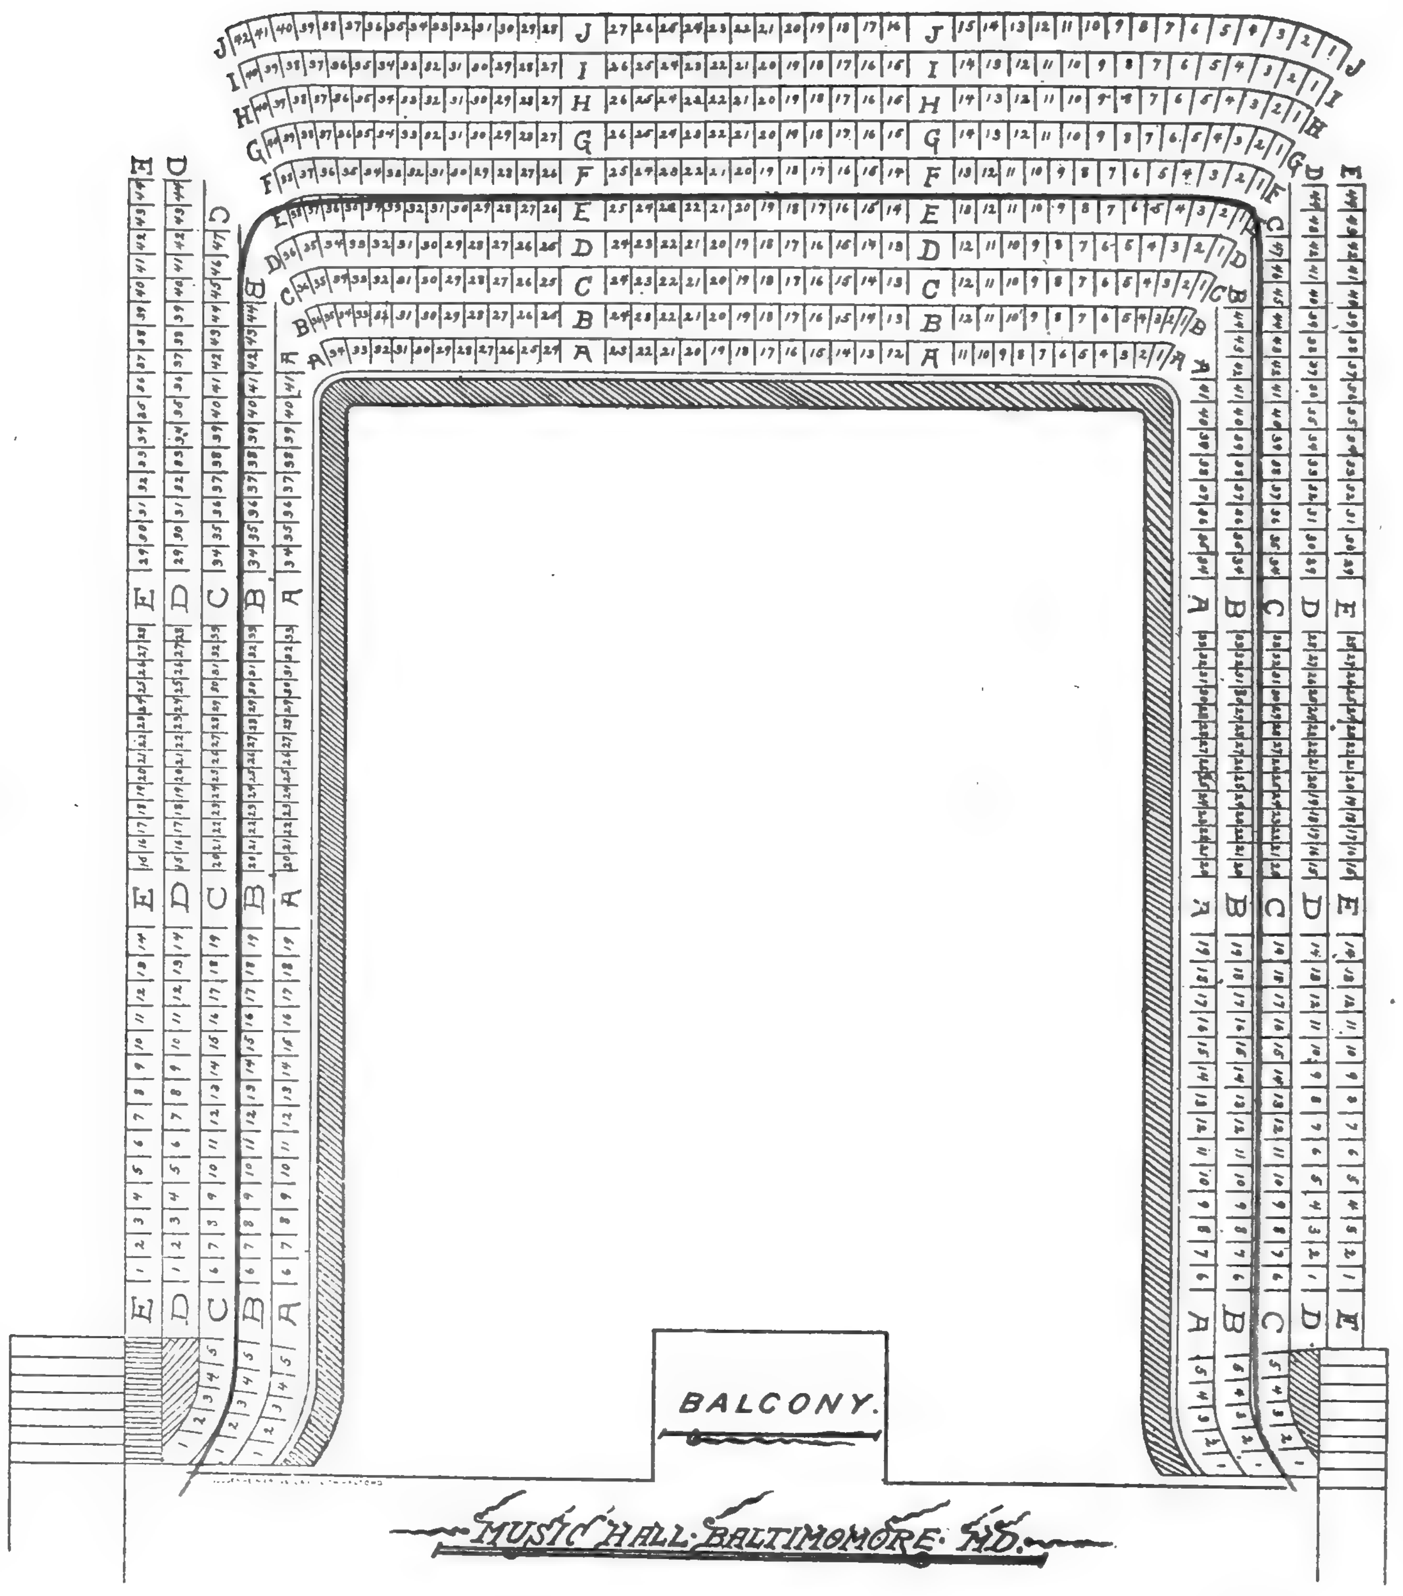
A permanent Orchestra maintained solely for Concert performances

F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager. C. A. ELLIS, Manager.



LOWER FLOOR
MUSIC HALL BALTIMORE MD.

STAGE.



BALCONY.
MUSIC HALL BALTIMOMORE MD.

STAGE.

THE RED LINES MARK THE DIVISION BETWEEN $7 AND $5 SEATS.

New York, September 28, 1898.

I hereby subscribe for .... season tickets for the series of five { Wednesday Afternoon / Thursday Evening } Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall.

....

....

Location desired, as near as possible ....

....

☞ Unless you wish to subscribe for both, please indicate your choice between the Afternoon and Evening series.

A PERMANENT ORCHESTRA MAINTAINED SOLELY FOR CONCERT PERFORMANCES.

"A virtuoso orchestra."—New York Sun.

"Peerless band of musicians."—New York Herald.

"For the past decade our standard of orchestral performance."—New York Times.

"A splendid organization, by far the most perfect in the country."—New York Life.

The highest exponents of orchestral work in the country."—New York World.

New York, September 28, 1898.

I hereby subscribe for .... season tickets for the series of five { Wednesday Afternoon / Thursday Evening } Concerts to be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall.

....

....

Location desired, as near as possible ....

....

☞ Unless you wish to subscribe for both, please indicate your choice between the Afternoon and Evening series.

[3]

THIS ENTIRE PAGE,

Directly Opposite Reading Matter.

	Boston Issue. 48 Performances. 144,000 Copies.	Circuit Issue. New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, and Providence. 38 Performances. 330,000 Copies.	Total Issue. 86 Performances. 474,000 Copies.
SEASON. Oct. 15 to April 30.	$200.	$300.	$500.
THREE MONTHS. Oct. 15 to Jan. 15.	$125.	$175.	$300.

EITHER UPPER OR LOWER HALF PAGE.

Directly Opposite Reading Matter.

	Boston Issue.	Circuit Issue.	Total Issue.
SEASON.	$100.	$150.	$250.
THREE MONTHS.	$70.	$100.	$150.

BILLS RENDERED MONTHLY, BEGINNING NOVEMBER 15.

grows weaker, soon leaves him. He dreams of Solweig, his first love, the bride whom he had abandoned in the Norway mountains. He goes back to his Northern home, finds Solweig faithfully waiting for him, and dies in her arms.

Grieg has written incidental music to this play, selections from which he has grouped together in two orchestral suites, opus 46 and 55. The four movements constituting the first suite — played at this concert — are all perfectly free in form, and thus do not subject themselves readily to technical analysis. It should be said, however, that the fourth movement accompanies the scene in the play in which Peer Gynt is pursued and tormented by imps in the Hall of the Mountain King.

The first movement is scored for 2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 clarinets, 2 bassoons, 4 horns, 2 trumpets, 1 pair of kettle-drums, and the usual strings; the second movement, for muted strings alone; the third movement, for muted strings and triangle; the last movement, for 1 piccolo-flute, 2 flutes, 2 oboes, 2 clarinets, 2 bassoons, 4 horns, 2 trumpets, 1 pair of kettle-drums, 3 trombones, 1 bass-tuba, bass-drum and cymbals, and the usual strings. The score bears no dedication.

SCENA, "MY STRENGTH IS SPENT," FROM "TAMING OF THE SHREW."

HERMANN GOETZ.

(Born at Königsberg on Dec. 17, 1840; died at Hottingen, near Zürich, on Dec. 3, 1876.)

Der Widerspenstigen Zähmung (Taming of the Shrew), comic opera in four acts, the text freely arranged from Shakspere's comedy by Joseph Viktor Widmann, the music by Hermann Goetz, was first brought out at

THIS SPACE, ONE-SIXTH PAGE,

Directly under Reading Matter.

	Boston.	Circuit.	Total.
SEASON.	$50.	$75.	$125.
THREE MONTHS.	$30.	$40.	$75.

THIS SPACE, ONE-TWELFTH PAGE,

Directly under Reading Matter.

	Boston.	Circuit.	Total.
SEASON.	$30.	$40.	$70.
THREE MONTHS.	$20.	$25.	$40.

SPECIAL RATES FOR COVER PAGES AND DISPLAY SPACES.

Eight Concerts

WEDNESDAY EVENINGS at 8, sharp

November 2,	February 1,
November 30,	March 8,
December 28,	March 29,
January 11,	April 19.

Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series of eight concerts, $7, on sale at Infantry Hall, Monday morning, October 24, at 9.

Programme books, with descriptive notes on the works to be performed, will be mailed in advance of each concert to purchasers of season tickets.

Solo Artists

Mme. GADSKI.

Miss AUS DER OHE.

LADY HALLÊ (Norman Neruda).

(First appearance in Providence.)

Mme. TERESA CARRENO.

Mr. BEN DAVIES.

AND OTHERS, TO BE ANNOUNCED.

Mannheim on October 11, 1874. The scene sung at this concert—Adagio in E-flat minor (4-4 time) and Allegro moderato in G-flat major (4-4 time)—is Act IV., Scene 3. The situation is where Katharine, overcome by Petruchio's violence in the scene where he finds fault with every dish served up to him, soliloquizes about her love for him and her intention to change her previous shrewish demeanor. The text is in the original German, and the current English version is as follows:—

My strength is spent, of fighting I am weary,
  And as a ship goes down before a storm,
So does the latest glimmer of my courage
  Before the wildness of his anger die.

Are woman's weapons only made of straw?
Where is my pride? Why am I now so weak?
Abhor I him? Oh, no! Abhor I cannot!
My life for him I would surrender.
I would that I could see him placable!
For else beneath his anger must I pine.

    Keep back lamentation
    With meek resignation,
  And bear the trial he bids thee bear!
    To calm thy repining,
    One hope is shining;
  With thee it lingers, and sweetens care.

    Blest expectation,
    That such resignation
  His heart to mercy at last may move.
    O thought full of pleasure!
    O joy out of measure!
  That I hereafter may have his love.

This Space, One-sixth Page,

Directly under Reading Matter.

	Boston.	Circuit.	Total.
SEASON.	$50.	$75.	$125.
THREE MONTHS.	$30.	$40.	$75.

NEARLY HALF A MILLION ISSUED ANNUALLY.

Two Performar

TH

D

SEAS
Oct. 15 to

THREE M
Oct. 15 to

EITH

Di

SEAS(

THREE M

BILLS RENI

Eighi

"A virtuoso orchestra."—New York Sun.

"Peerless band of musicians."—New York Herald.

"For the past decade our standard of orchestral performance."—New York Times.

"A splendid organization, by far the most perfect in the country."—New York Life.

"The highest exponents of orchestral work in the country."—New York World.

Season tic
$7, on sale at I

Programm formed, will b
season tickets.

BEGINS OCTOBER 14, 1898. ENDS APRIL 29, 1899.

EIGHTEENTH SEASON, 1898-99.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Programme.

Historical and Descriptive Notes by WILLIAM F. APTHORP, Musical Editor, "Boston Transcript."
Published by C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

CIRCULATION.

BOSTON.	Music Hall. 48 Performances (24 Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals, 24 Saturday Evening Concerts),	144,000 copies.

... CIRCUIT ...

NEW YORK.	Carnegie Music Hall. 10 Monthly Performances (5 Matinees and 5 Evenings),	60,000 "
BROOKLYN.	Academy of Music. 10 Monthly Performances (5 Matinees and 5 Evenings),	60,000 "
PHILADELPHIA.	Academy of Music. 5 Monthly Performances,	50,000 "
WASHINGTON.	Lafayette Sq. Opera House. 5 Monthly Performances,	36,000 "
PROVIDENCE.	Infantry Hall. 8 Monthly Performances,	50,000 "
	Total Guaranteed Circulation,	400,000 "

Total Number of Performances, 86.

Mr. EDGAR A. BARRELL, Organist and Choirmaster,
Grace Church, Newton.
Organ, Harmony, and Counterpoint.
Address care Miles & Thompson,
or Choir Guild Hall, Newton, Mass.

Exact sample of Teacher's and Soloist's Card.

.. RATES ..

	Boston Issue.	Circuit Issue.	Total Issue.
SEASON,	48 Performances, $35.	38 Performances, $25.	86 Performances, $50.
3 MONTHS,	24 " 20.	21 " 15.	45 " 25.
1 MONTH,	8 " 8.	7 " 5.	15 " 10.

(OVER.)

EIGHTEENTH SEASON, 1898–99

ACADEMY OF MUSIC, PHILADELPHIA

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

87 PERFORMERS

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

*A permanent
Orchestra maintained
solely for
Concert performances*

F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager. C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

EIGHTEENTH SEASON, 1898–99

CARNEGIE HALL

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

87 PERFORMERS

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

*A permanent
Orchestra maintained
solely for
Concert performances*

F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager. C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

EIGHTEENTH SEASON, 1898–99

SANDERS THEATRE, CAMBRIDGE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

*A permanent
Orchestra maintained
solely for
Concert performances*

F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager. C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

[4]

Miss ROSE STEWART,
Pupil of MARCHESI.
VOCAL INSTRUCTION.
Studio No. 25,
STEINERT HALL BUILDING.

☞ Exact sample second size Teacher's and Soloist's Card.

. . RATES . .

	Boston Issue.	Circuit Issue.	Total Issue.
SEASON,	48 Performances, $20.	38 Performances, $15.	86 Performances, $30.
3 MONTHS,	24 " 10.	21 " 8.	45 " 15.
1 MONTH,	8 " 4.	7 " 3.	15 " 5.

These Soloists' and Teachers' Cards are located under the general heading "Musical Instruction." A large part of the above circulation is sent out in advance of each concert in the various cities on the circuit. The management regard this advance circulation as the best possible method of arousing interest in the performances, and it is obviously as much for their interest as for the advertisers' that it should be faithfully distributed. This advance distribution, repeated several times during the season, compares most favorably with sending out circulars, both in effectiveness and expense.

All applications for space should be sent, with copy, to

Fred. R. Comee

Address, MUSIC HALL, Boston.

Five Matinees

WEDNESDAY AFTERNOONS at 2

November 9,	February 22,
December 14,	March 22,
January 18,

. . . AND . . .

Five Concerts

THURSDAY EVENINGS at 8.15

November 10,	February 23,
December 15,	March 23.
January 19,

Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series of five matinees or five concerts, $7.50, $6, $5, and $3, and boxes $50 and $40, according to location. Programme books, with descriptive notes on the works to be performed, will be mailed in advance of each concert to purchasers of season tickets.

☞ The programmes for the afternoon and evening series will be entirely different.

Solo Artists

Mr. MORITZ ROSENTHAL.

Mr. WILLY BURMESTER.
(First appearances in New York.)

LADY HALLÉ (Norman Neruda).
(First appearances in New York.)

Mr. ALVAREZ.
(Only appearances in New York.)

Mme. TERESA CARRENO.

BEGINS OCTOBER 14, 1898. ENDS APRIL 29, 1899.

EIGHTEENTH SEASON, 1898-99.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Programme.

Historical and Descriptive Notes by WILLIAM F. APTHORP, Musical Editor, "Boston Transcript."
Published by C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

CIRCULATION.

BOSTON. Music Hall. 48 Performances (24 Friday Afternoon Public Rehearsals, 24 Saturday Evening Concerts),	144,000 copies.
... CIRCUIT ...
NEW YORK. Carnegie Music Hall. 10 Monthly Performances (5 Matinees and 5 Evenings),	60,000 "
BROOKLYN. Academy of Music. 10 Monthly Performances (5 Matinees and 5 Evenings),	60,000 "
PHILADELPHIA. Academy of Music. 5 Monthly Performances,	50,000 "
WASHINGTON. Lafayette Sq. Opera House. 5 Monthly Performances,	36,000 "
PROVIDENCE. Infantry Hall. 8 Monthly Performances,	50,000 "
Total Guaranteed Circulation,	400,000 "

Total Number of Performances, 86.

Mr. EDGAR A. BARRELL,

Organist and Choirmaster,
Grace Church, Newton.
Organ, Harmony, and Counterpoint.
Address care Miles & Thompson,
or Choir Guild Hall, Newton, Mass.

Exact sample of Teacher's and Soloist's Card.

.. RATES ..

	Boston Issue.		Circuit Issue.		Total Issue.
SEASON,	48 Performances,	$35.	38 Performances,	$25.	86 Performances,	$50.
3 MONTHS,	24 "	20.	21 "	15.	45 "	25.
1 MONTH,	8 "	8.	7 "	5.	15 "	10.

(OVER.)

"A virtuoso orchestra."—New York Sun.

"Peerless band of musicians."—New York Herald.

"For the past decade our standard of orchestral performance."—New York Times.

"A splendid organization, by far the most perfect in the country."—New York Life.

"The highest exponents of orchestral work in the country."—New York World.

Five Concerts

MONDAY EVENINGS at 8.15

November 7,	February 20,
December 12,	March 20.
January 16,

Proscenium boxes seating eight, and boxes seating six and four, will be sold at $75, $63, and $42 respectively, for the series of five concerts.

Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series of five concerts, $7, $5, and $3.50, according to location.

The sale of tickets will open Monday morning, October 17, at Blasius's, 1103 Chestnut Street.

Programme books, with descriptive notes on the works to be performed, will be mailed in advance of each concert to purchasers of season tickets.

3 MONTHS,	24	"	20.	21
1 MONTH,	8	"	8.	7	"	5.	15	"	10.

(OVER.)

Solo Artists

Mr. MORITZ ROSENTHAL.

Mr. WILLY BURMESTER.
(First appearance in Philadelphia.)

LADY HALLÉ (Norman Neruda).
(First appearance in Philadelphia.)

Mme. TERESA CARRENO.

AND OTHERS TO BE ANNOUNCED.

Ten Concerts

ON THURSDAY EVENINGS

October 27,	February 9,
November 17,	March 2,
December 8,	March 16,
January 5,	April 6,
January 26,	April 27.

Solo Artists

Mme. GADSKI.

LADY HALLÉ (Norman Neruda).
(First appearances in Cambridge.)

Miss ADELE AUS DER OHE.

Miss OLIVE MEAD.

Mr. GEORGE PROCTOR.

Mr. THEODORE BYARD.

AND OTHERS, TO BE ANNOUNCED.

Five

Prosceni will be sold concerts.

Season t
$7, $5, and

The sale
Blasius's, 11c

Program formed, will
season tickets

"A virtuoso orchestra."—New York Sun.

"Peerless band of musicians."—New York Herald.

"For the past decade our standard of orchestral performance."—New York Times.

"A splendid organization, by far the most perfect in the country."—New York Life.

"The highest exponents of orchestral work in the country."—New York World.

3 MONTHS, 24
1 MONTH, 8 " 8. 7 " 5. 15 " 10.

(OVER.)

Ten

"A virtuoso orchestra."—New York Sun.

"Peerless band of musicians."—New York Herald.

"For the past decade our standard of orchestral performance."—New York Times.

"A splendid organization, by far the most perfect in the country."—New York Life.

"The highest exponents of orchestral work in the country."—New York World.

EIGHTEENTH SEASON, 1898-99

MUSIC HALL, BALTIMORE

The Boston Symphony Orchestra

87 PERFORMERS

Mr. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor

A permanent Orchestra maintained solely for Concert performances

F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager. C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

Five Concerts

TUESDAY EVENINGS at 8.15

November	8,	February	21,
December	13,	March	21.
January	17,

Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series of five concerts, $7 and $5, according to location.

Programme books, with descriptive notes on the works to be performed, will be mailed in advance of each concert to purchasers of season tickets.

The sale of season tickets opens at Albert's, 13 North Charles Street, Monday, October 17, at 9 A.M.

Solo Artists

Mme. GADSKI.

Mr. WILLY BURMESTER.
(First appearance in Baltimore.)

Mr. EMIL SAUER.
(First appearance in Baltimore.)

LADY HALLÉ (Norman Neruda).
(First appearance in Baltimore.)

Mme. TERESA CARRENO.

Five

Season tic
$7 and $5, acc

Programm
formed, will season tickets

The sale
Street, Mond

"A virtuoso orchestra."—New York Sun.

"Peerless band of musicians."—New York Herald.

"For the past decade our standard of orchestral performance."—New York Times.

"A splendid organization, by far the most perfect in the country."—New York Life.

"The highest exponents of orchestral work in the country."—New York World.

COLORED PAPER

18

BOSTON MUSIC HALL 607

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MR. WILHELM GERICKE
CONDUCTOR

PUBLIC REHEARSAL

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 10, 1899, AT 2.30 O'CLOCK

ADMIT ONE C. A. Ellis Manager.

19

BOSTON MUSIC HALL 776

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MR. WILHELM GERICKE
CONDUCTOR

PUBLIC REHEARSAL

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 17, 1899, AT 2.30 O'CLOCK

ADMIT ONE C. A. Ellis Manager.

20

BOSTON MUSIC HALL 30

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MR. WILHELM GERICKE
CONDUCTOR

PUBLIC REHEARSAL

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, MARCH 31, 1899, AT 2.30 O'CLOCK

ADMIT ONE C. A. Ellis Manager.

21

BOSTON MUSIC HALL 345

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MR. WILHELM GERICKE
CONDUCTOR

PUBLIC REHEARSAL

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 7, 1899, AT 2.30 O'CLOCK

ADMIT ONE C. A. Ellis Manager.

22

BOSTON MUSIC HALL 401

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MR. WILHELM GERICKE
CONDUCTOR

PUBLIC REHEARSAL

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 14, 1899, AT 2.30 O'CLOCK

ADMIT ONE C. A. Ellis Manager.

23

BOSTON MUSIC HALL 272

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MR. WILHELM GERICKE
CONDUCTOR

PUBLIC REHEARSAL

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 21, 1899, AT 2.30 O CLOCK

ADMIT ONE C. A. Ellis Manager.

24

BOSTON MUSIC HALL 169

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MR. WILHELM GERICKE
CONDUCTOR

PUBLIC REHEARSAL

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 28, 1899, AT 2.30 O CLOCK

ADMIT ONE C. A. Ellis Manager.

BLANK PAGE

TIGHT BINDING

COLORED PAPER

5

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 102
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY.
SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 15, 1898.
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

2

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 102
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY.
SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 22, 1898.
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

29

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 10
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY.
SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 29, 1898.
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

5

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 143
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY.
SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 5, 1898.
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

19

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 23
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY.
SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 19, 1898.
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

26

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 52
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY.
SATURDAY EVENING, NOVEMBER 26, 1898.
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

3

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 52
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY.
SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 3, 1898.
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

0

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 133
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY.
SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 10, 1898.
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

23

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 39
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY.
FRIDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 23, 1898.
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

31

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 20
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY.
SATURDAY EVENING, DECEMBER 31, 1898.
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

7

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 73
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY.
SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 7, 1899.
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

14

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 202
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY
SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 14, 1899
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY C. A. Ellis Manager.

28

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 5
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY.
SATURDAY EVENING, JANUARY 28, 1899.
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

4

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 102
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY.
SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 4, 1899.
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

11

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 105
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY.
SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 11, 1899.
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

4

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 68
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY.
SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 4, 1899.
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

18

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 102
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY.
SATURDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 18, 1899.
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

11

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 102
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY.
SATURDAY EVENING, MARCH 11, 1899.
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

46

1

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 213
Boston Symphony Orchestra
MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.
ADMISSION
TO FLOOR ONLY.
SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 1, 1899.
GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

COLORED PAPER

8

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 40

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

ADMISSION

TO FLOOR ONLY.

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 8, 1899.

GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

15

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 51

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

ADMISSION

TO FLOOR ONLY.

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 15, 1899.

GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

22

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 56

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

ADMISSION

TO FLOOR ONLY.

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 22, 1899.

GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

29

BOSTON MUSIC HALL. 84

Boston Symphony Orchestra

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, CONDUCTOR.

ADMISSION

TO FLOOR ONLY.

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 29, 1899.

GOOD THIS DATE ONLY. C. A. Ellis Manager.

MUSICAL COURIER.
A WEEKLY JOURNAL
DEVOTED TO MUSIC AND THE MUSIC TRADES.

XXXVII.—NO. 7. NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 17, 1898. WHOLE NO.

[illegible]

WILHELM GERICKE

[10]

Vol. XVII. Worcester, Mass., September 1, 1898.

Festival Bulletin.

Process Eng. Co. Worc.

MADAME JOHANNA GADSKI.

MISS ADELE AUS DER OHE

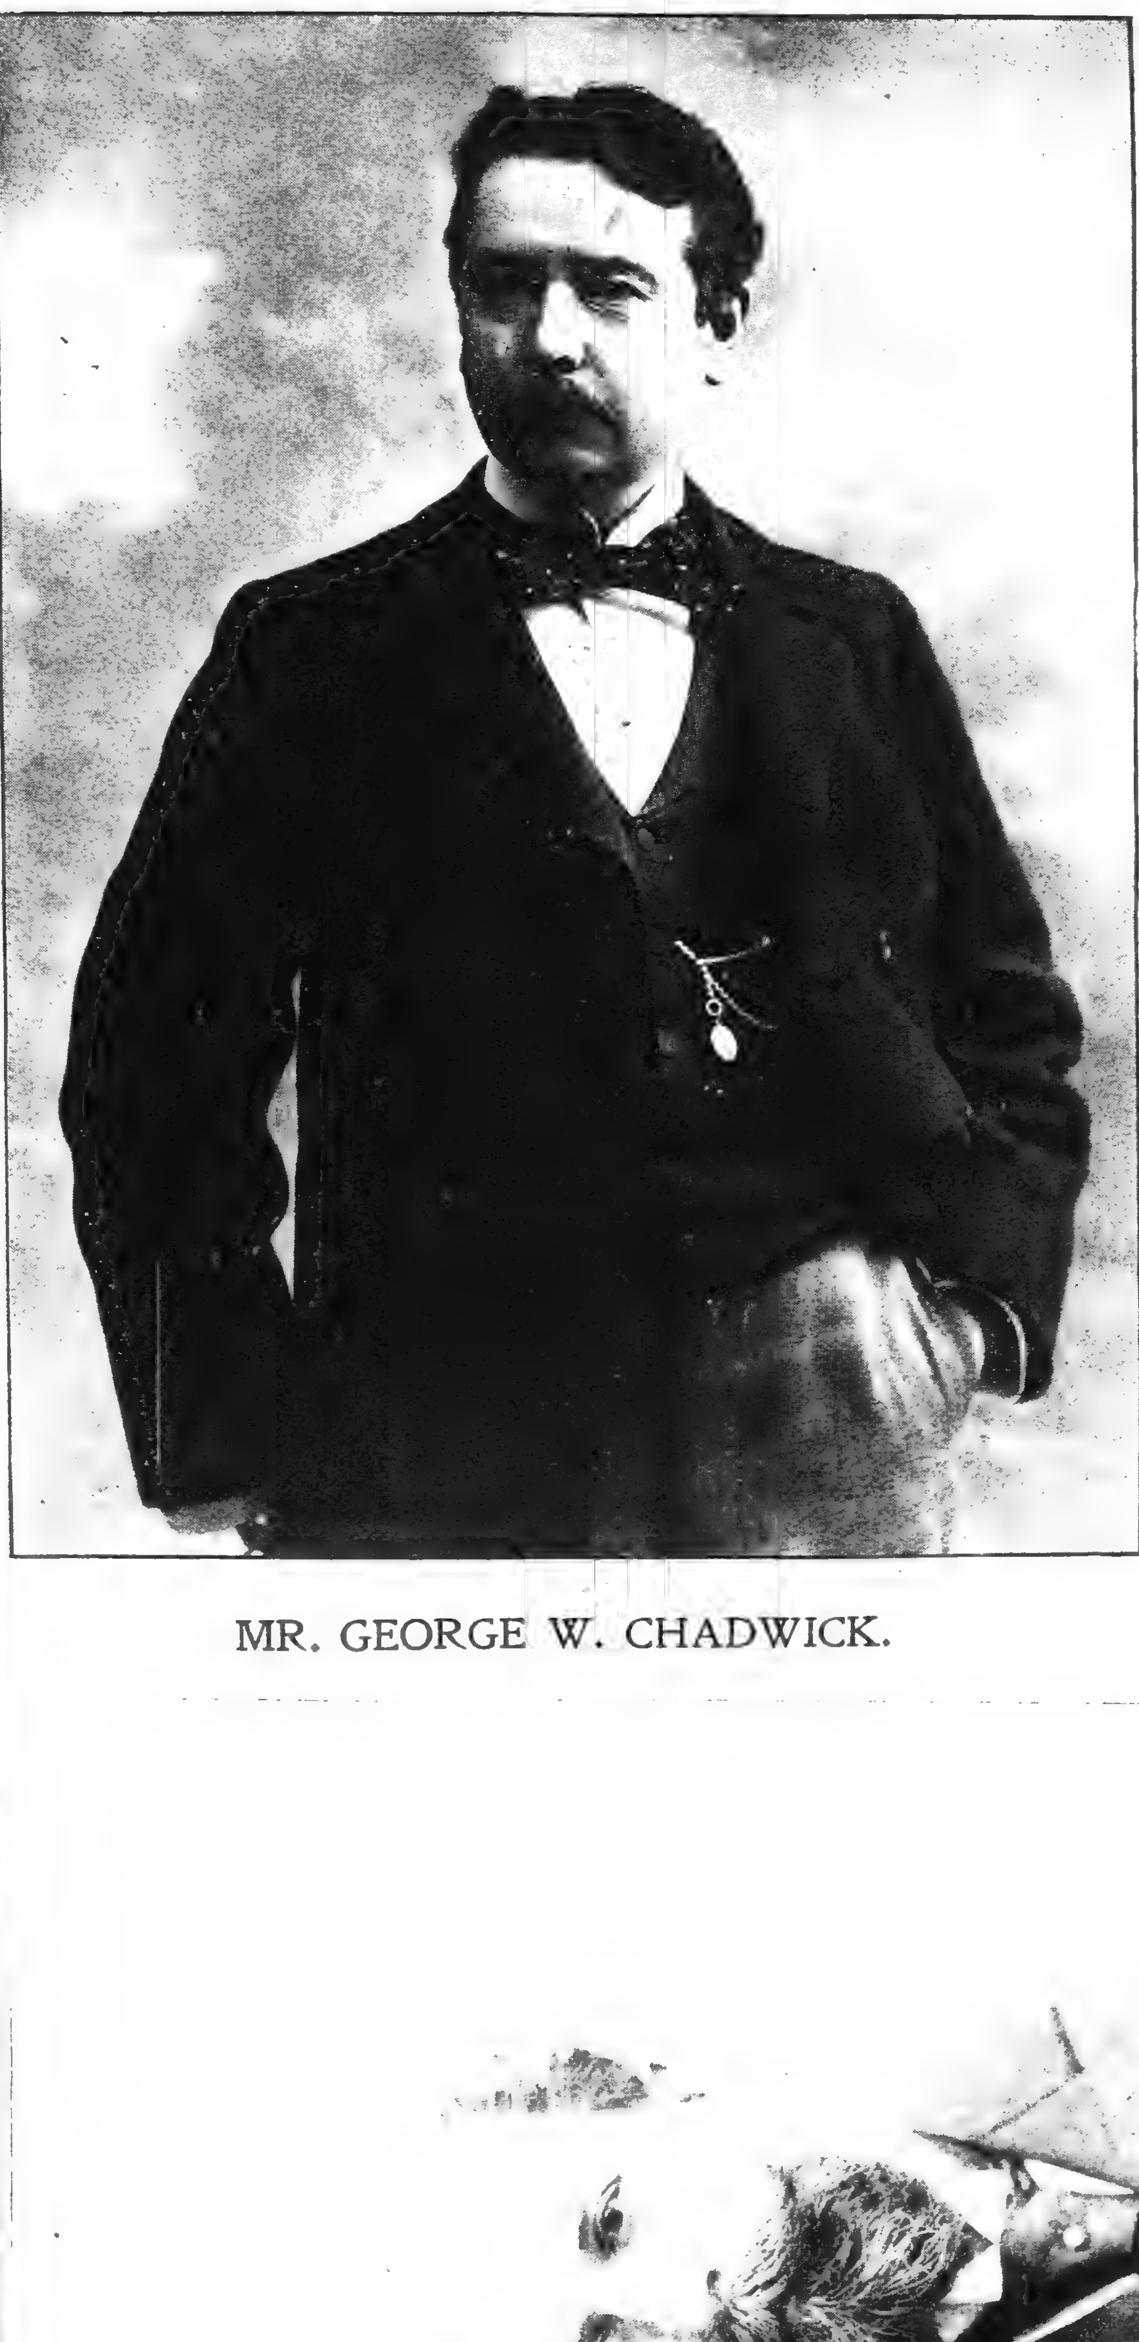
OVIDE MUSIN.

WORCESTER MUSIC FESTIVAL.

MR. GWYLYM MILES

MISS MARIE DOWNEY.

MISS SARA ANDERSON.



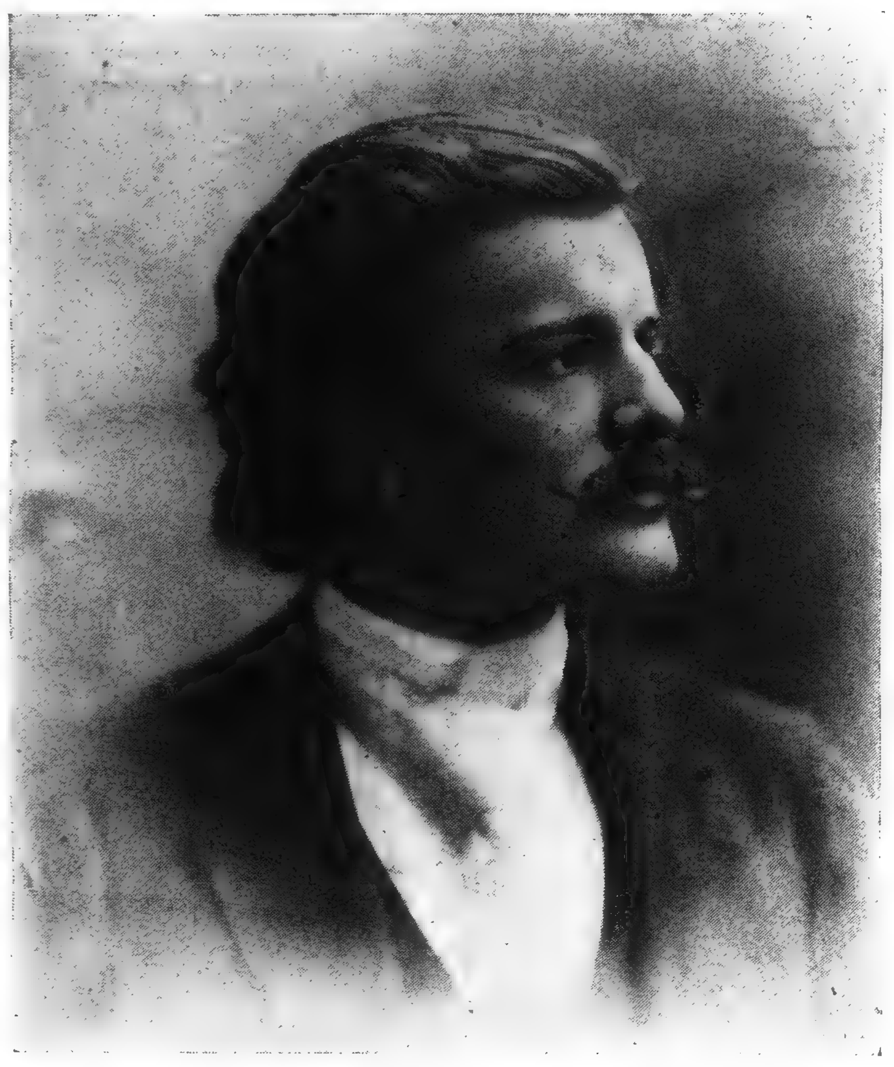
MR. GEORGE W. CHADWICK.

MRS. CARL ALVES.

BROOKLYN LIFE.

WILLIAM GERICKE

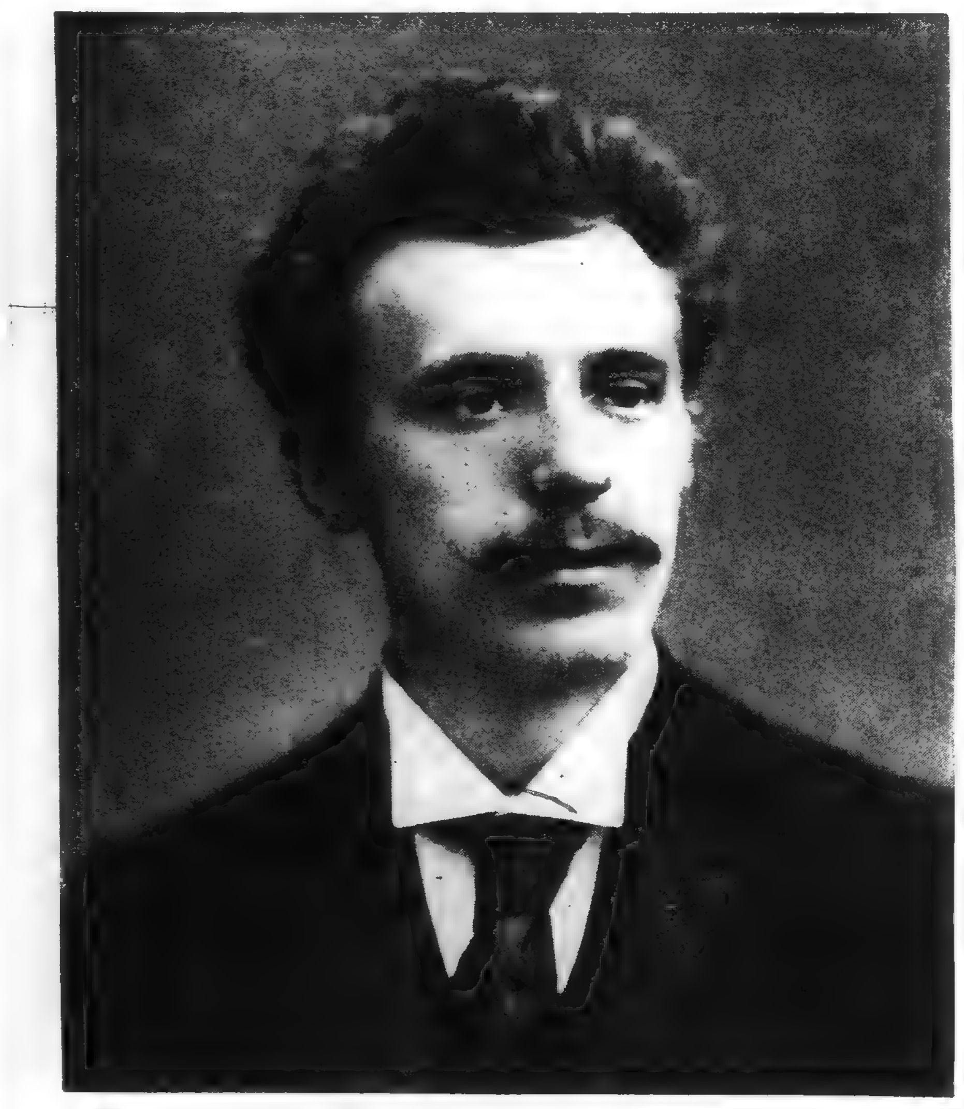
[14]



MORITZ ROSENTHAL.

LADY HALLE (NORMAN NERUDA.)

LEANDRO CAMPANARI.



WILLY BURMESTER.

WILHELM GERICKE,
Conductor of the Symphony Orchestra.

EMIL SAUER.

MISS ADELAIDE AUS DER OHE.

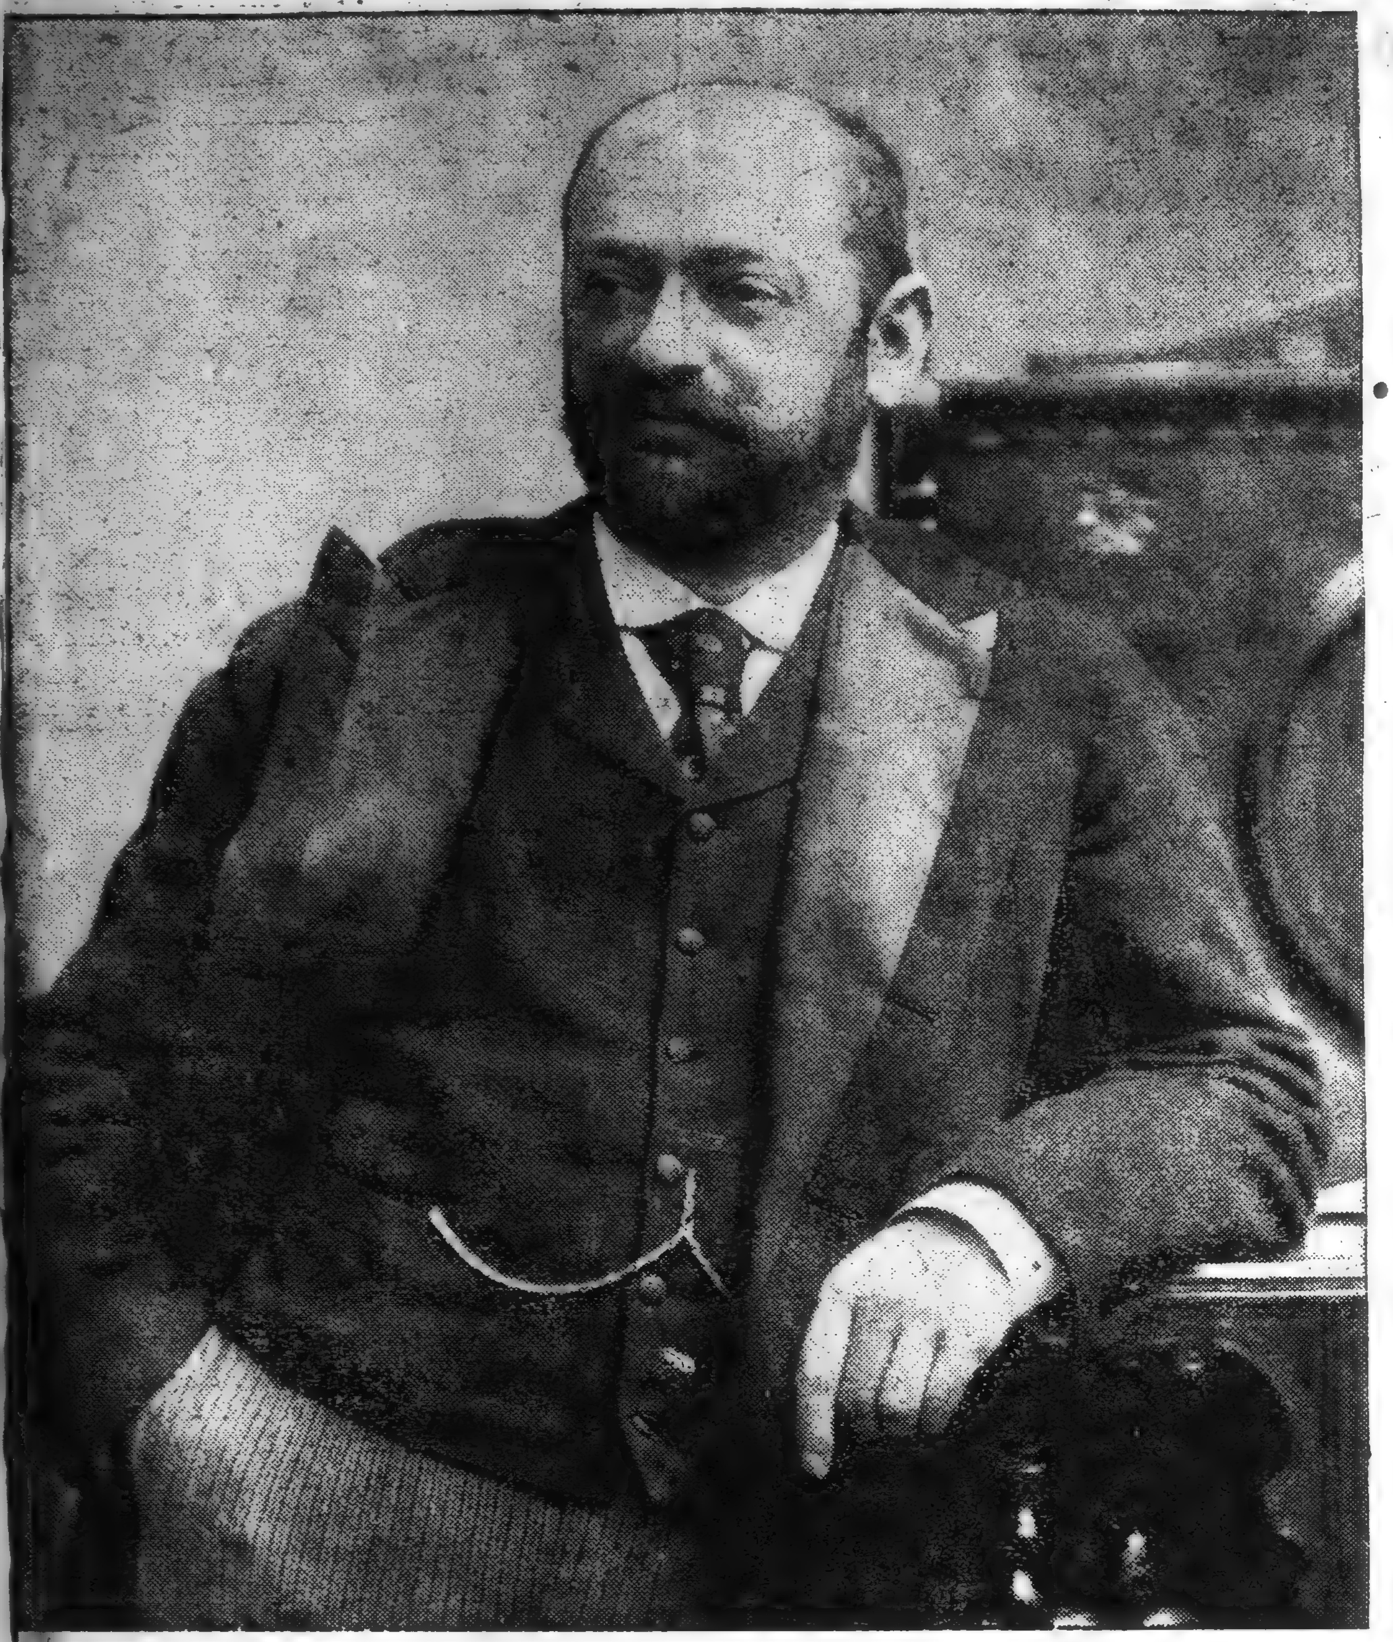
MME. JOHANNA GADSKI.

MME. TERESA CARRENO.

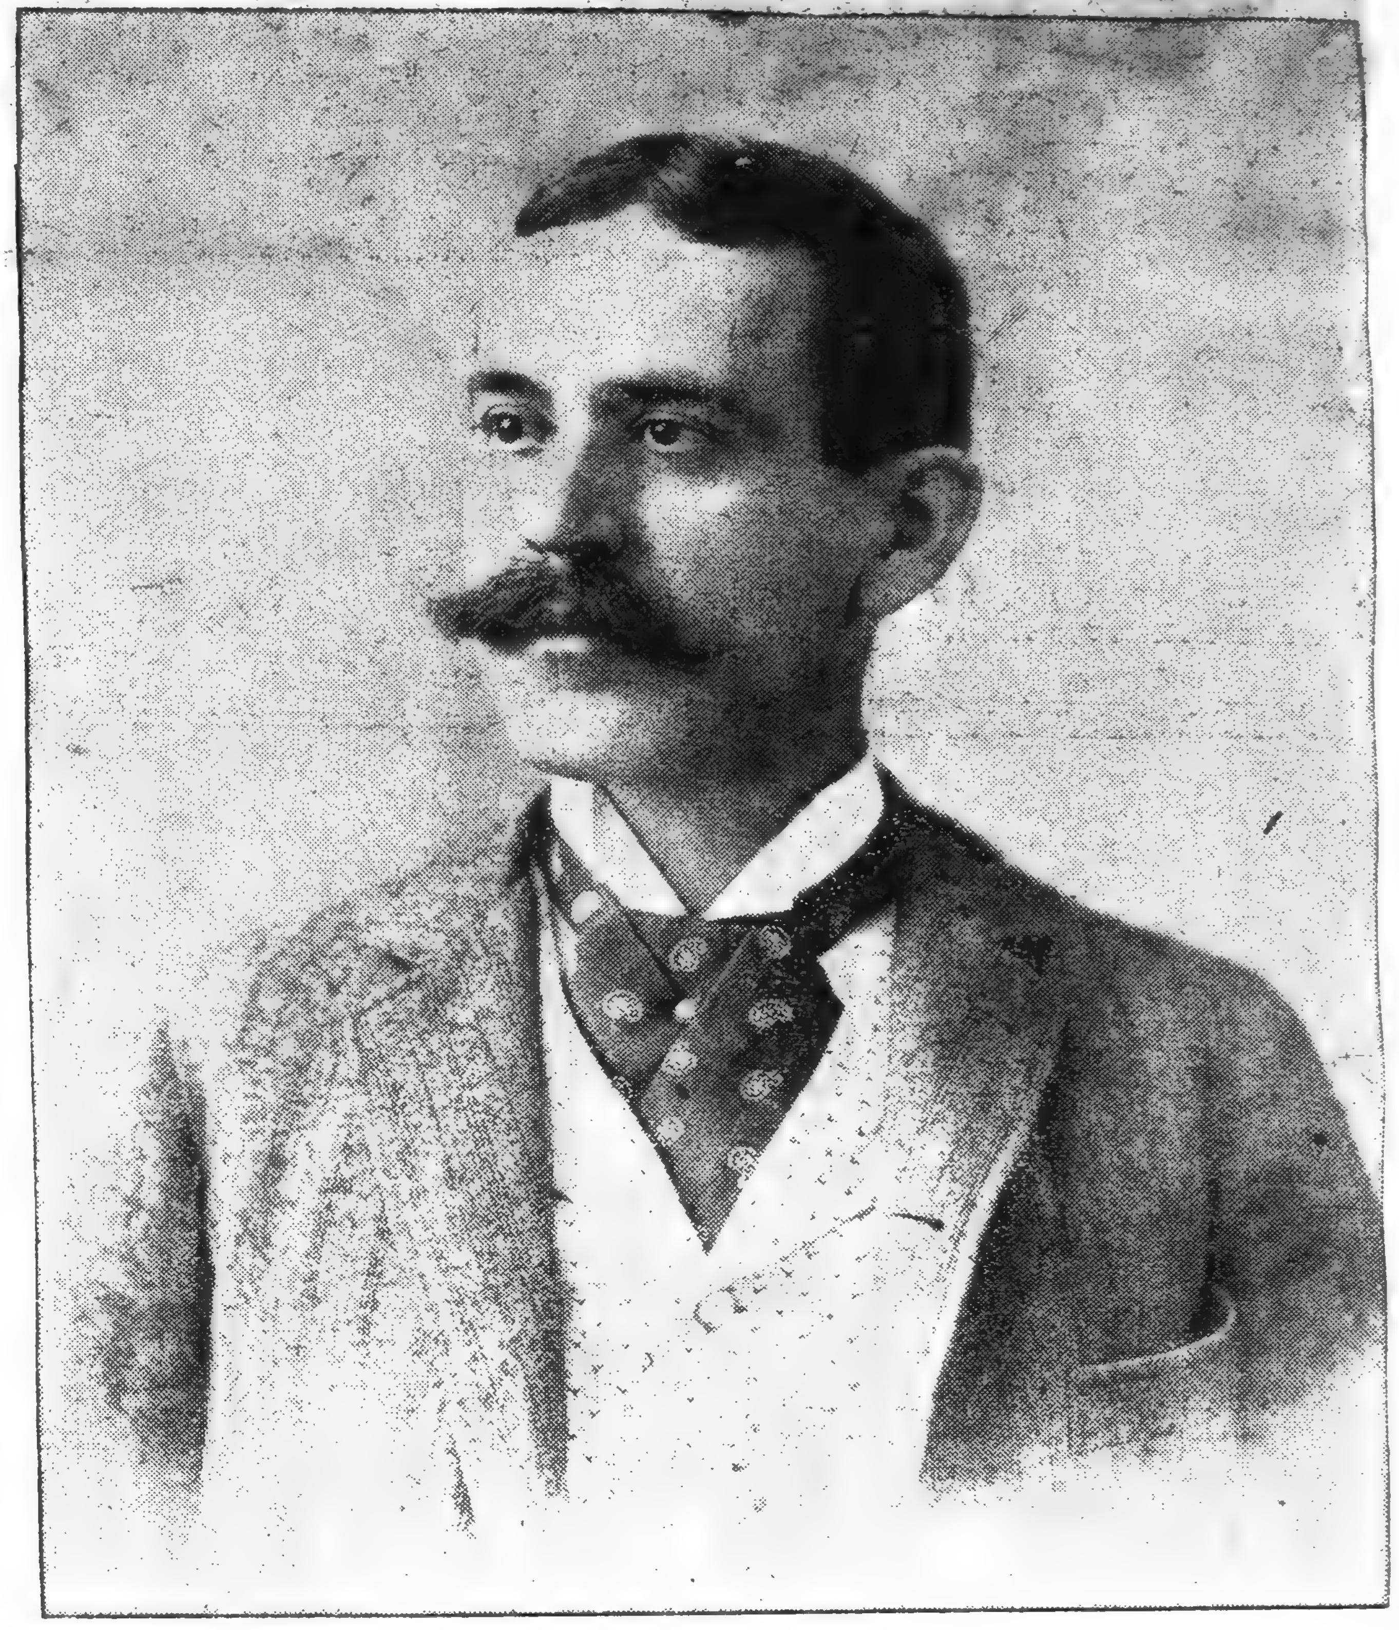
THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA FOR 1898-'99.

PORTRAITS OF THE NEW LEADER AND THE PRINCIPAL ARTISTS WHO WILL APPEAR DURING THE SEASON.

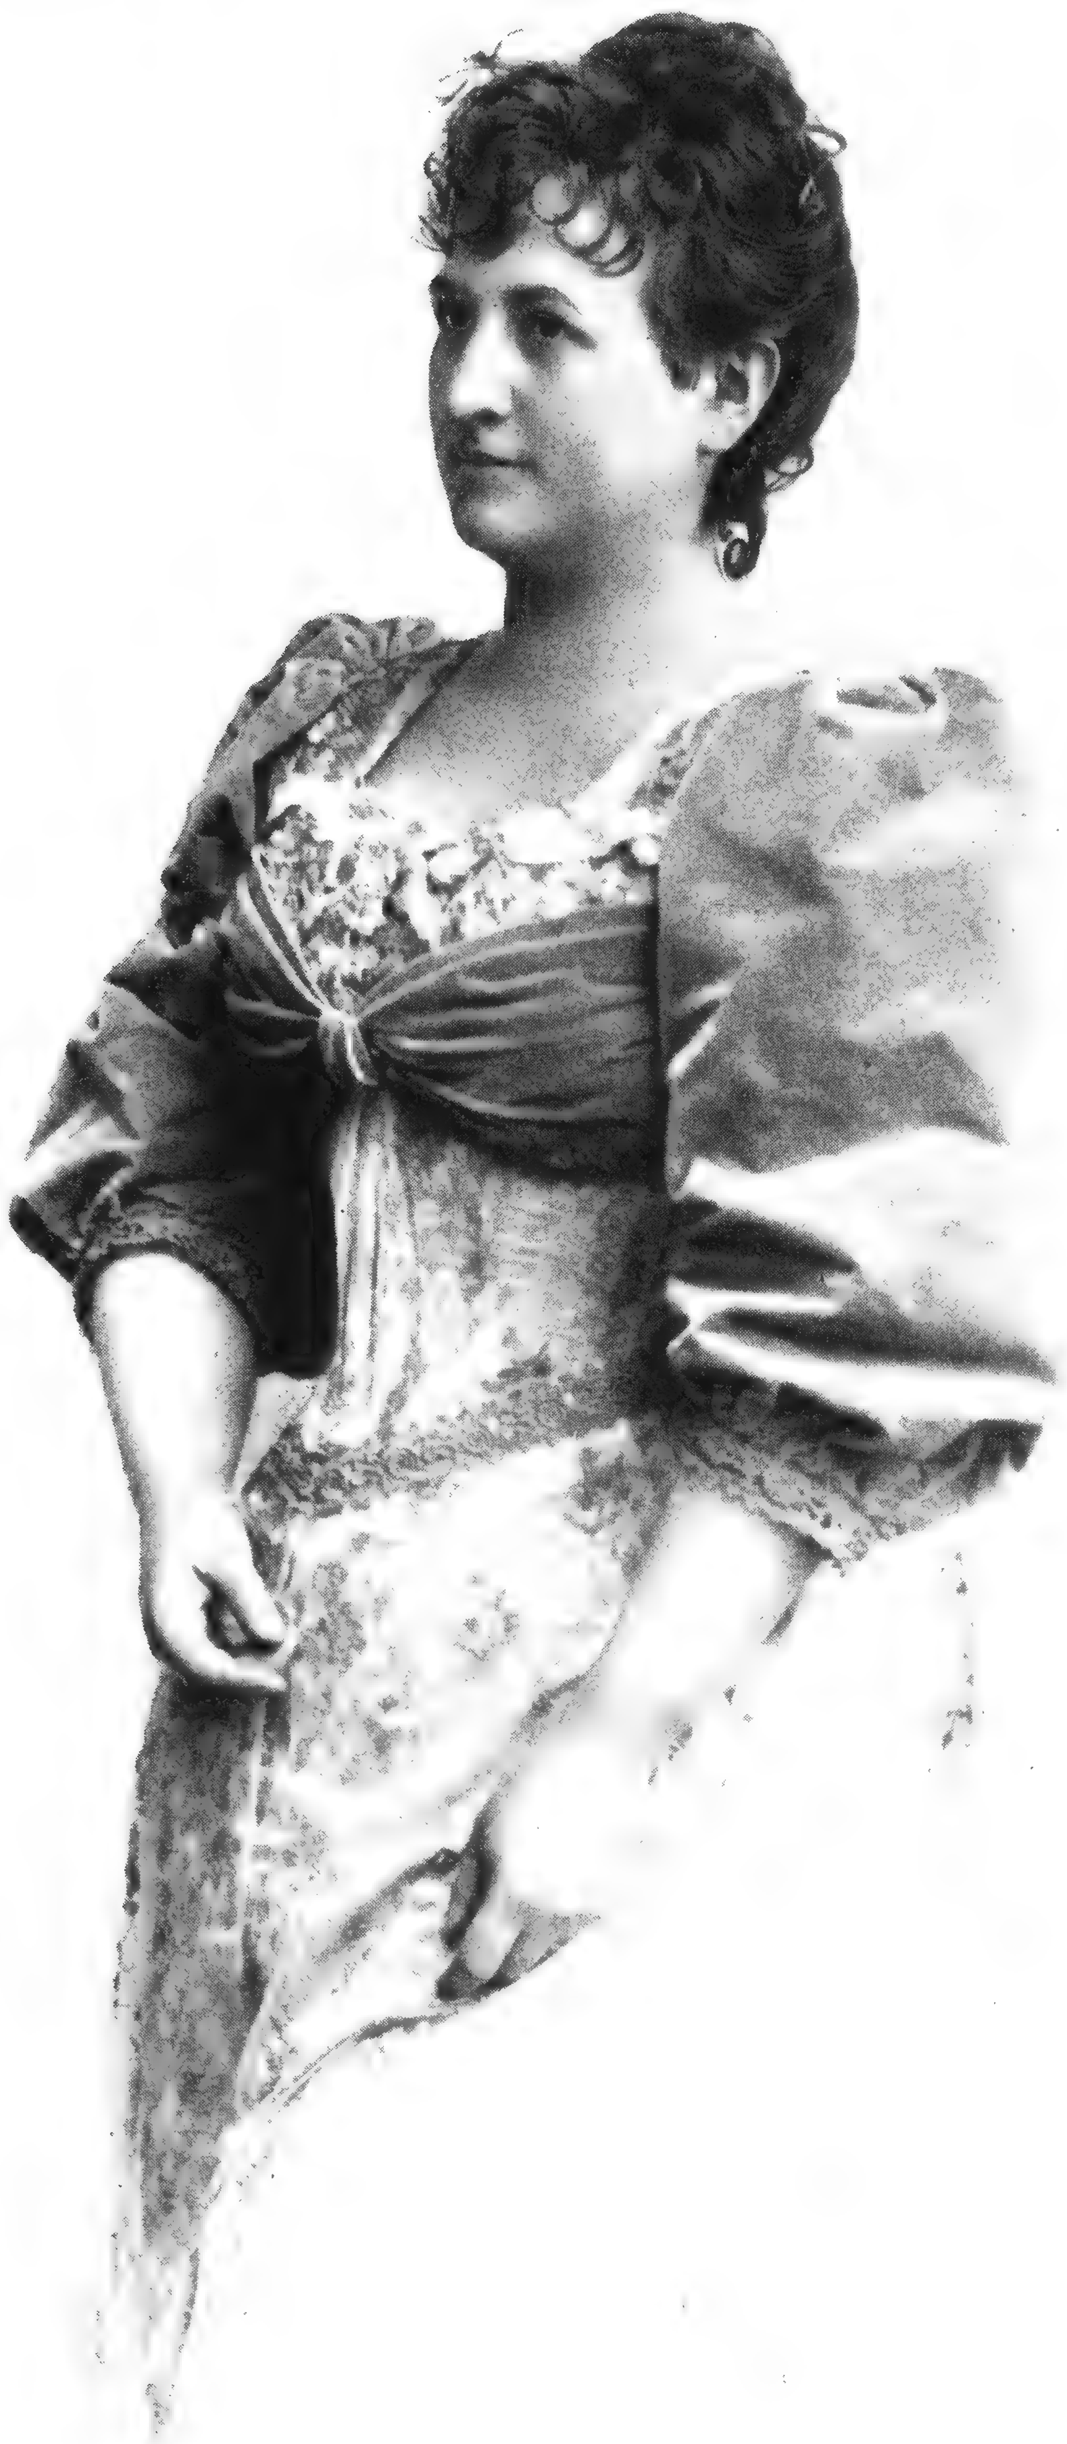
NEW-YORK TRIBUNE ILLUSTRATED SUPPLEMENT.



MAURICE GRAU.
Manager of the Metropolitan Opera Company.



CHARLES A. ELLIS.
Manager of the Ellis Opera Company.



TERESA CARREÑO

Mme. SZUMOWSKA

⊙ Concert Pianiste. ⊙

THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Some of the Players in the Noted Boston Musical Organization.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which now enjoys an international reputation, differs substantially in foundation from other now existing and famous orchestras. It owed its birth, it owes its present vigorous life, to the philanthropic wish of one man that his fellow townsmen should be able to hear the best of orchestral music at reasonable prices. That fashion has in a measure thwarted the wish of Mr. H. L. Higginson in regard to the lowness of admission prices is in no wise his fault. When it was not "the thing" to be seen at these concerts; when even genuine music-lovers did not perhaps fully appreciate them, the generous founder did not lose heart, nor swerve from his purpose to give the people of Boston ample opportunity for musical education. Today the orchestra is his animated, sonorous monument.

C. M. LOEFFLER.
A first violin of the Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Henschel was a conductor of little experience, but he was enthusiastic, of catholic taste and successful in program-making. Mr. Gericke gave the orchestra the technical proficiency that puts it in the very front rank of all such organizations. Mr. Nikisch and Mr. Paur, emotional conductors, made it more elastic and infused it with passion. And now, under Mr. Gericke, a second time conductor, this orchestra is in its mature strength.

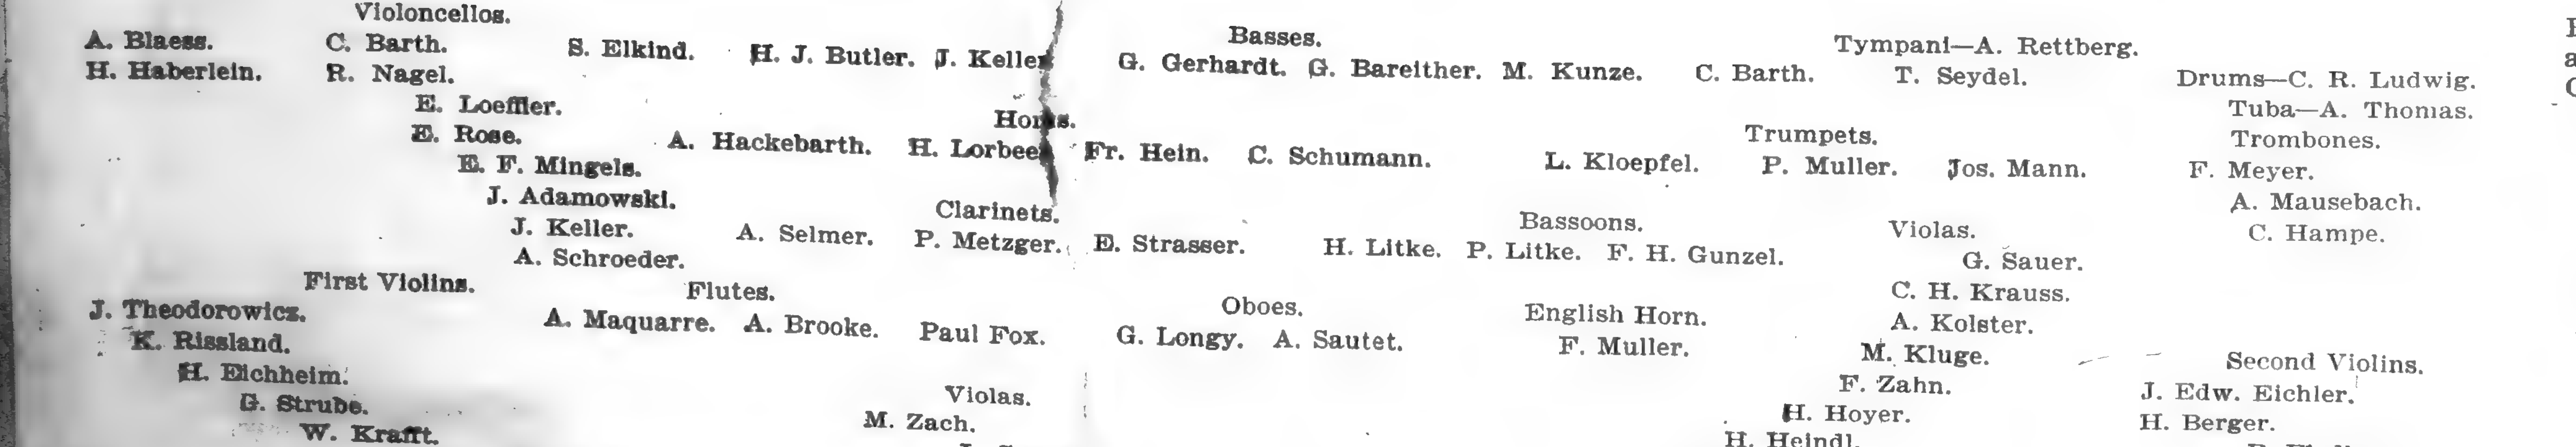
Naturally there have been constant changes in the personnel. Only two or three now remain who shared in the first struggles of Mr. Henschel. Mr. Gericke brought young men, admirably trained and full of zeal, from Vienna; among them was Mr. Kneisel, to whom the Boston public owes so much. Wood-wind players were sought out in France. It is not too much to say that this season the orchestra is remarkably rich in solo players, who, however, are never conspicuous at the expense of the ensemble.

Think for a moment of the soloists among the first violins: Messrs. Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski, Schnitzler, Roth, Kuntz—but each violinist is a soloist! An oboist was wanted. Mr. Longy was taken from Colonne's great orchestra, and the experienced Mr. Sautet sits by his side. The lamented Pourtau was succeeded by another Frenchman, and Mr. Jacquet, who also met an untimely death, was followed by a fellow countryman. Only in France or Belgium is such an ensemble of wood-wind to be found, and we doubt if even there you would have an equal ensemble. That celebrated artist, Mr. Alwin Schroeder, sits at the head of the 'cellos. Mr. Hackebarth, the first horn, is a man without superior as an orchestral player. And so you might go through each separate choir of this orchestra and recount name after name of men to whom is due the much-abused title "artist." Nor is it necessary to sing the praise at this late day of the Kneisel Quartet composed of Messrs. Kneisel, Roth, Svecenski, Schroeder.

The presence of composers in this orchestra should also be noted. Of these, Mr. Loeffler easily stands first, a composer of singularly fantastic imagination, rare sense of color and most fastidious taste. Mr. Straube is known to the audiences of these concerts by symphony, overture and violin concerto. Mr. Schroeder is known as editor, arranger, writer of treatises on the 'cello. And there are several others whose proficiency is not confined to mere technical mastery of their respective instruments.

The orchestra has been extremely fortunate in its business managers. Mr. Ellis, keen, cool, sensible and honorable, has been ably assisted by Mr. Comee.

THE KNEISEL QUARTET.
This quartet is composed of Messrs. Kneisel, Schroeder, Svecenski and Roth.



Violoncellos.
A. Blaess.
H. Haberlein.
C. Barth.
R. Nagel.
S. Elkind.
H. J. Butler.
J. Keller.
E. Loeffler.
E. Rose.
E. F. Mingels.
J. Adamowski.
J. Keller.
A. Schroeder.
Basses.
G. Gerhardt.
G. Bareither.
M. Kunze.
C. Barth.
Tympani—A. Rettberg.
T. Seydel.
Drums—C. R. Ludwig.
Tuba—A. Thomas.
Horns.
A. Hackebarth.
H. Lorbeer.
Fr. Hein.
C. Schumann.
L. Kloepfel.
Trumpets.
P. Muller.
Jos. Mann.
Trombones.
F. Meyer.
A. Mausebach.
C. Hampe.
Clarinets.
A. Selmer.
P. Metzger.
E. Strasser.
H. Litke.
Bassoons.
P. Litke.
F. H. Gunzel.
First Violins.
J. Theodorowicz.
K. Rissland.
H. Eichheim.
G. Strube.
W. Krafft.
Flutes.
A. Maquarre.
A. Brooke.
Paul Fox.
Oboes.
G. Longy.
A. Sautet.
English Horn.
F. Muller.
Violas.
G. Sauer.
C. H. Krauss.
A. Kolster.
M. Kluge.
F. Zahn.
H. Hoyer.
H. Heindl.
C. Barleben.
Second Violins.
J. Edw. Eichler.
H. Berger.
B. Fiedler.
J. Michael.
Violas.
M. Zach.
L. Svecenski.
First Violins.
F. Mahn.
J. Hoffman.
E. Fiedler.
A. Moldauer.
D. Kuntz.
O. Roth.
I. Schnitzler.
T. Adamowski.
C. M. Loeffler.
Fr. Kneisel.
Harp.
H. Schuecker.
Conductor.
Wilhelm Gericke.
P. Flumare.
J. Akeroyd.
E. B. Marble.
W. W. Swornsbourne.
Second Violins.
J. Kneisel.
F. E. Schuchman.
S. Goldstein.
H. Tischer-Zeitz.
R. Kurth.
A. Kuntz.

SEATING PLAN OF THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Mme. SZUMOWSKA

• Concert Pianiste. •

THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Some of the Players in the Noted Boston Musical Organization.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which now enjoys an international reputation, differs substantially in foundation from other now existing and famous orchestras. It owed its birth, it owes its present vigorous life, to the philanthropic wish of one man that his fellow townsmen should be able to hear the best of orchestral music at reasonable prices. That fashion has in a measure thwarted the wish of Mr. H. L. Higginson in regard to the lowness of admission prices is in no wise his fault. When it was not "the thing" to be seen at these concerts; when even genuine music-lovers did not perhaps fully appreciate them, the generous founder did not lose heart, nor swerve from his purpose to give the people of Boston ample opportunity for musical education. Today the orchestra is his animated, sonorous monument.

C. M. LOEFFLER.

A first violin of the Symphony Orchestra.

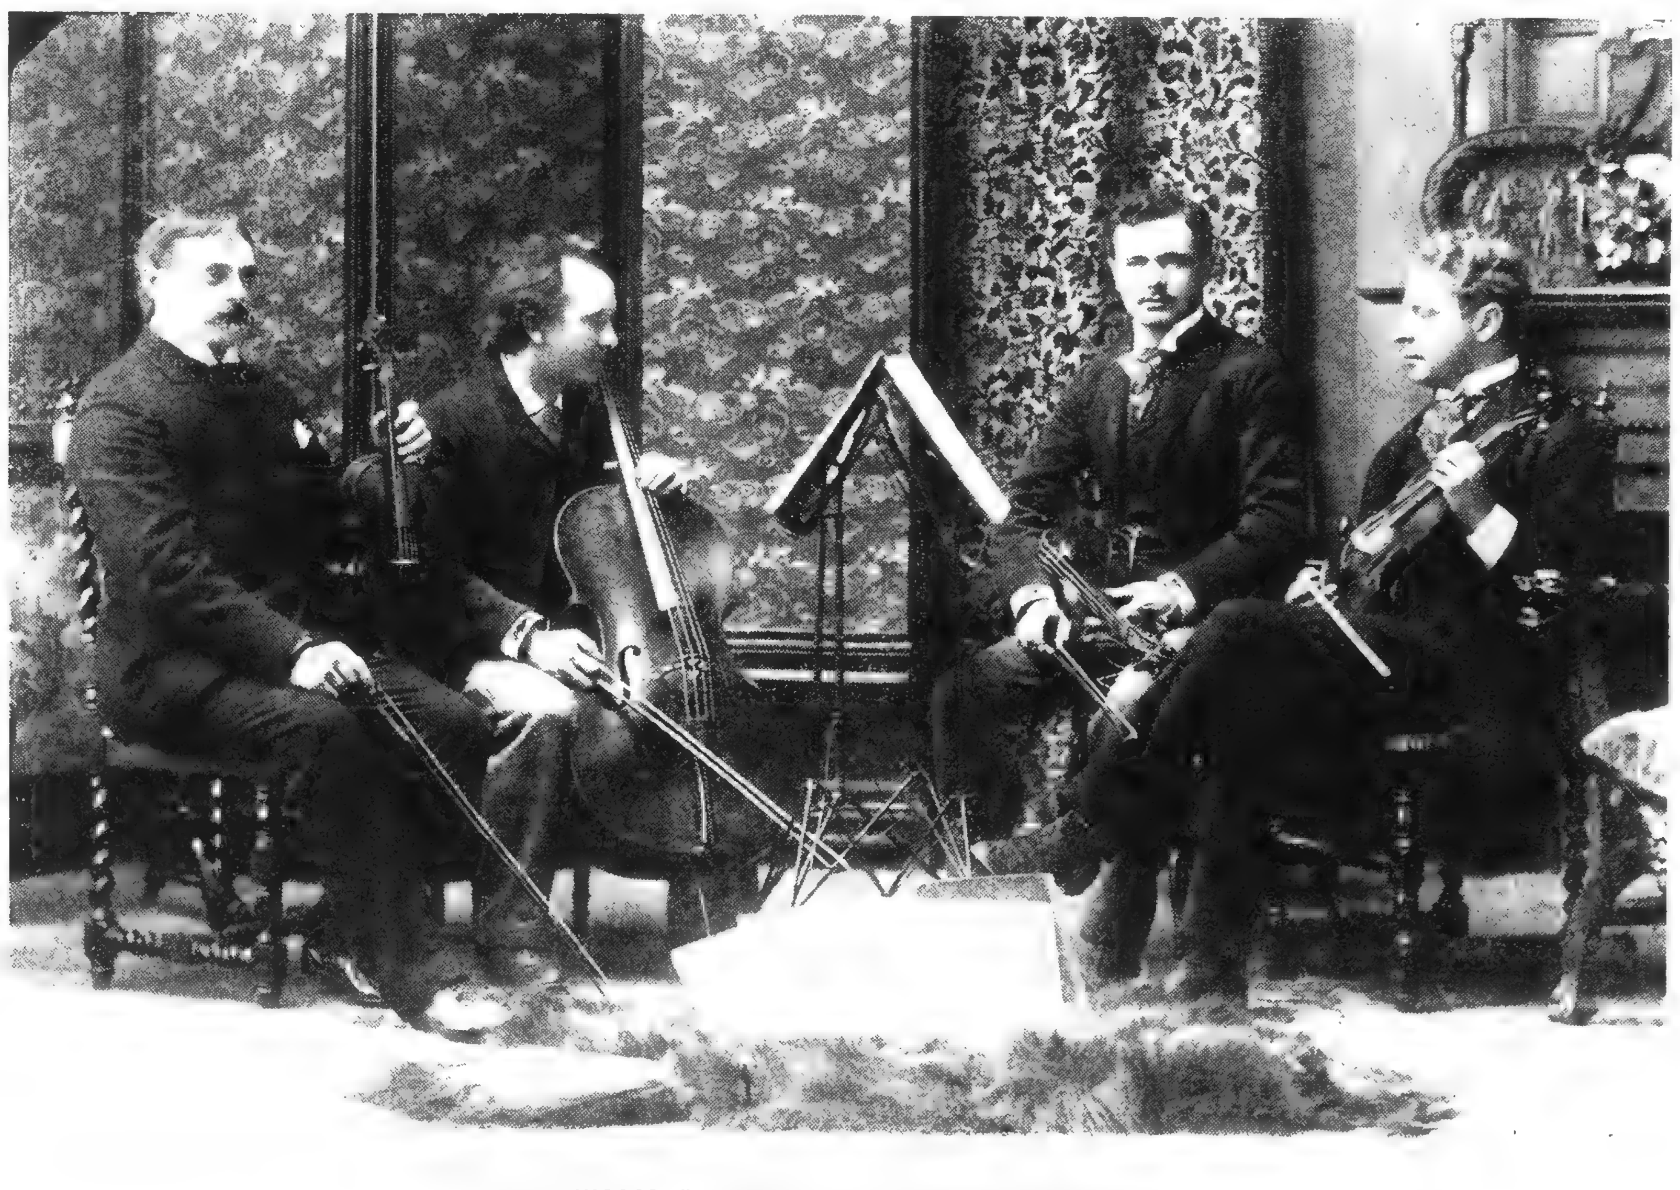
Mr. Henschel was a conductor of little experience, but he was enthusiastic, of catholic taste and successful in program-making. Mr. Gericke gave the orchestra the technical proficiency that puts it in the very front rank of all such organizations. Mr. Nikisch and Mr. Paur, emotional conductors, made it more elastic and infused it with passion. And now, under Mr. Gericke, a second time conductor, this orchestra is in its mature strength.

Naturally there have been constant changes in the personnel. Only two or three now remain who shared in the first struggles of Mr. Henschel. Mr. Gericke brought young men, admirably trained and full of zeal, from Vienna, among them was Mr. Kneisel, to whom the Boston public owes so much. Wood-wind players were sought out in France. It is not too much to say that this season the orchestra is remarkably rich in solo players, who, however, are never conspicuous at the expense of the ensemble.

Think for a moment of the soloists among the first violins: Messrs. Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski, Schnitzler, Roth, Kuntz but each violinist is a soloist! An oboist was wanted. Mr. Longy was taken from Colonne's great orchestra, and the experienced Mr. Sautet sits by his side. The lamented Pourtau was succeeded by another Frenchman, and Mr. Jacquet, who also met an untimely death was followed by a fellow countryman. Only in France or Belgium is such an ensemble of wood-wind to be found, and we doubt if even there you would have an equal ensemble. That celebrated artist, Mr. Alwin Schroeder, sits at the head of the 'cellos. Mr. Hackebarth, the first horn, is a man without superior as an orchestral player. And so you might go through each separate choir of this orchestra and recount name after name of men to whom is due the much-abused title "artist." Nor is it necessary to sing the praise at this late day of the Kneisel Quartet composed of Messrs. Kneisel, Roth, Svecenski, Schroeder.

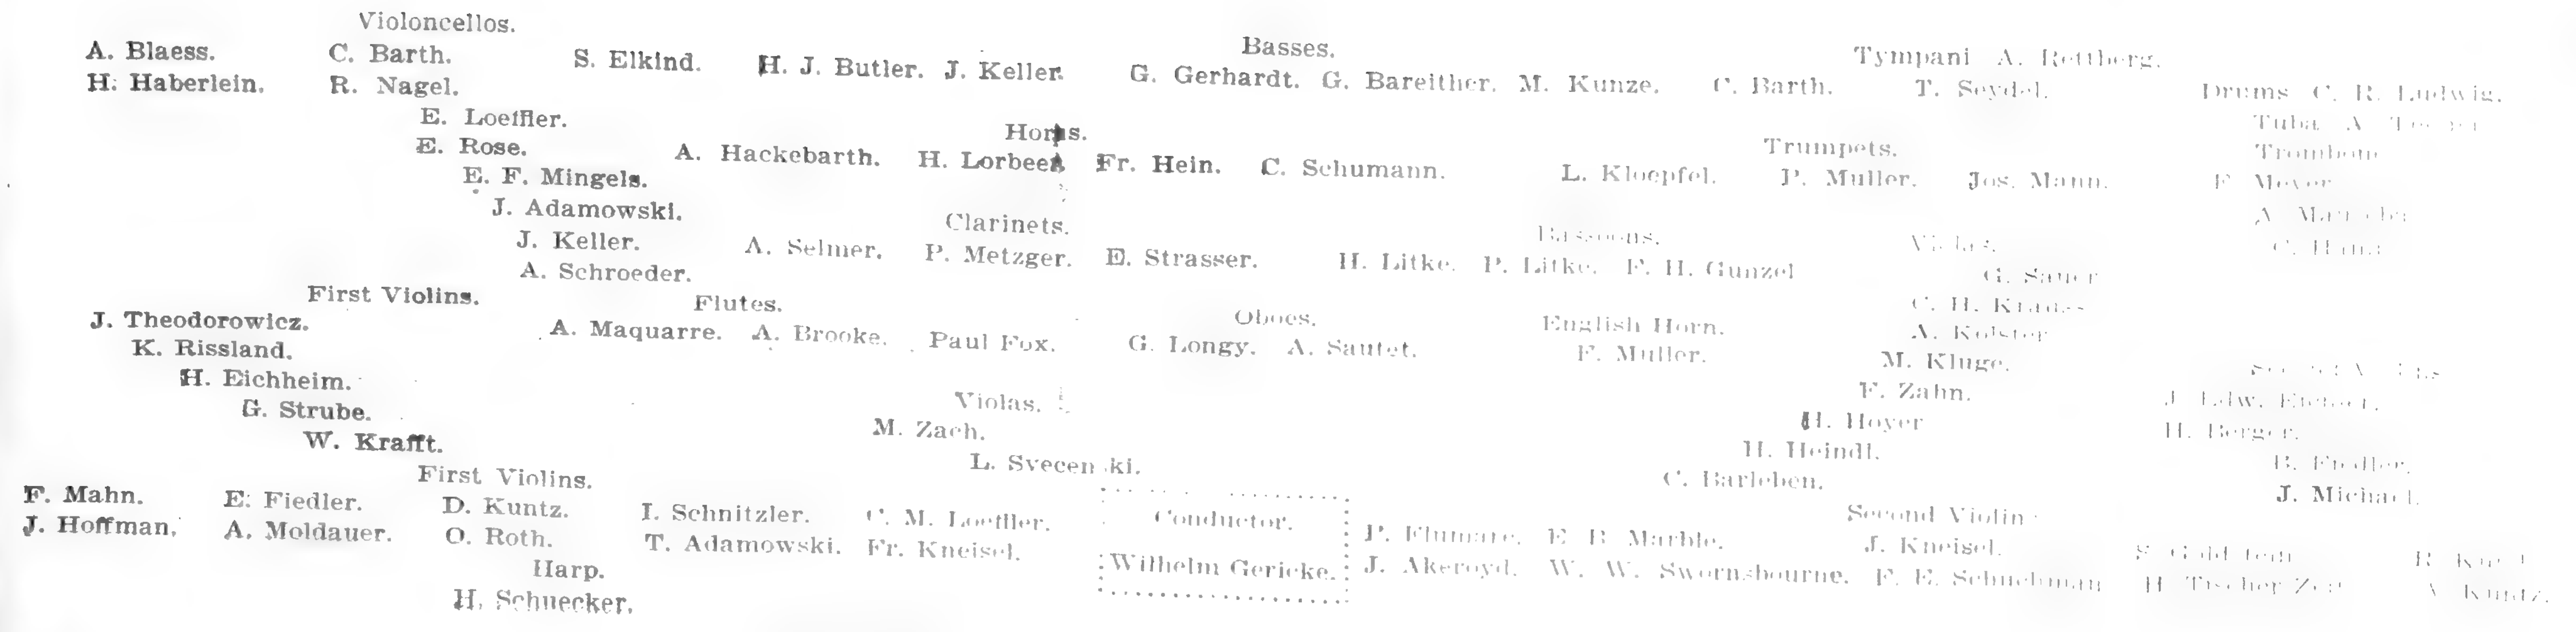
The presence of composers in this orchestra should also be noted. Of these, Mr. Loeffler easily stands first, a composer of singularly fantastic imagination, rare sense of color and most fastidious taste. Mr. Straube is known to the audiences of these concerts by symphony, overture and violin concerto. Mr. Schroeder is known as editor, arranger, writer of treatises on the 'cello. And there are several others whose proficiency is not confined to mere technical mastery of their respective instruments.

The orchestra has been extremely fortunate in its business managers. Mr. Ellis, keen, cool, sensible and honorable, has been ably assisted by Mr. Comee.



THE KNEISEL QUARTET:

This quartet is composed of Messrs. Kneisel, Schroeder, Svecenski and Roth.



Violoncellos.
A. Blaess.
H. Haberlein.
C. Barth.
R. Nagel.
E. Loeffler.
E. Rose.
E. F. Mingels.
J. Adamowski.
J. Keller.
A. Schroeder.
S. Elkind.
H. J. Butler.
J. Keller.
Basses.
G. Gerhardt.
G. Bareither.
M. Kunze.
C. Barth.
Tympani A. Rettberg.
T. Seydel.
Drums C. R. Ludwig.
Tuba.
Trombone
F. Meyer
C. Hampe
Horns.
A. Hackebarth.
H. Lorbeer.
Fr. Hein.
C. Schumann.
L. Kloepfel.
Trumpets.
P. Muller.
Jos. Mann.
Clarinets.
A. Selmer.
P. Metzger.
E. Strasser.
Bassoons.
H. Litke.
P. Litke.
F. H. Gunzel
Flutes.
A. Maquarre.
A. Brooke.
Paul Fox.
Oboes.
G. Longy.
A. Sautet.
English Horn.
F. Muller.
Violas.
G. Sauer
C. H. Krauss
A. Kolster
M. Kluge.
F. Zahn.
H. Hoyer
H. Heindl.
C. Barleben.
M. Zach.
L. Svecenski.
First Violins.
J. Theodorowicz.
K. Rissland.
H. Eichheim.
G. Strube.
W. Krafft.
First Violins.
F. Mahn.
J. Hoffman.
E. Fiedler.
A. Moldauer.
D. Kuntz.
O. Roth.
I. Schnitzler.
T. Adamowski.
C. M. Loeffler.
Fr. Kneisel.
Harp.
H. Schuecker.
Conductor.
Wilhelm Gericke.
P. Fiumara.
J. Akeroyd.
E. B. Marble.
W. W. Swornsbourne.
Second Violins.
J. Kneisel.
F. E. Schuchman
Second Violins.
H. Berger.
B. Fiedler.
J. Michael.
S. Goldstein
A. Kuntz.

SEATING PLAN OF THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

aug. 17-1898.

WILHELM GERICKE.

AFTER some years over seas, Wilhelm Gericke, formerly conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returns to his old post, and there can be no doubt as to the genuineness of the satisfaction expressed in print and private regarding his renomination. By perfectly fair, perfectly legitimate means, Mr. Gericke has won a reputation for himself, both at home and abroad. Beloved in Vienna, and his name a glorious tradition for the younger frequenters of the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he comes back to the scenes of his former triumphs richer in experience and without abating a jot of that old mastery of his men—a mastery that laid the technical foundations of the band from Boston.

Mr. Gericke has been strenuously absorbed in his work while in Europe, but he confesses to always having felt a weakness for America. He it was who first conducted the Boston Orchestra in this city and at Steinway Hall. We understand that Mrs. Jeannette M. Thurber played the part of an impresaria in the matter. There it was that Mr. Gericke unfolded to our astonished ears the technical beauty, the grace, finesse and polish of his wonderful organization. Since those days he has grown, and a too austere preoccupation with the material side of his music has given way to a certain breadth, mellowness and poetry. He has the true conductor's temperament—alert, nervously vigorous, tactful and musical. We look for much from Wilhelm Gericke and the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the coming season.

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CIV., NO. 73.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 11, 1898.

The Symphony Concerts Under Conductor Gericke—Grand Opera—The Worcester County Festival—Concert for the Sheltering Home Note and Comment.

THE approaching Boston musical season promises to be particularly brilliant. With the Symphony concerts at Music Hall, a three weeks' season of grand opera in mid-winter at the Boston Theatre, and the usual concerts of the various clubs and societies, music lovers may look forward to it with pleasant anticipation. The Boston Symphony orchestra will resume its concerts at Music Hall, Oct. 14, and will give its usual weekly performances Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings until the end of April. The playing of this great organization has become the standard of orchestral performance in America, and in no other city of the world can so fine a series of concerts be heard. They give pleasure to a multitude of music lovers and have made Boston a Mecca of musical students. The arrangements for the season are practically completed. The vacancies in the orchestra created by the loss of several valued members have been filled by engagements made during the summer. The following artists have been secured: Messrs. von Theodorowitz, violin, of the Berlin Philharmonic orchestra; Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne orchestra; Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux orchestra; Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony orchestra. With the exception of tnese changes, the personnel will be the same as for several years past. William Gericke, who has been engaged as conductor, will be warmly welcomed. He may be counted upon to give the concerts a distinction and dignity which were characteristic of them during his former regime. His return will be hailed with joy by subscribers who had the pleasure of hearing the orchestra between 1884 and 1889, and by the new generation of concert goers which has grown up since he left Boston nine years ago. The soloists for the season have been selected with care, and among them will be many artists of world-wide fame. The auction sales of season tickets will be held at Music Hall, Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept. 26, 27, 29 and 30.

The trips of the Boston Symphony orchestra away from home will this season be a day longer than formerly. The management had intended to abandon the concerts in Baltimore when it first laid out the season's itinerary, in order to gain time to give an extra concert each month in New York. This disappointed the music lovers of Baltimore, and five gentlemen entered into a guarantee sufficiently generous to persuade the management to add one to the days of travel. On each trip the orchestra will give one concert in Baltimore on Saturday, one in Washington on Monday, one in Philadelphia on Tuesday, two in New York on Wednesday and Thursday and two in Brooklyn on Friday.

BOSTON JOURNAL.

SUNDAY, SEPT 11, 1898.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

For the eighteenth consecutive season, the preliminary announcement of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 1898-99 will set the musical pace for Boston and vicinity. On Oct. 14 Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, whose five years' leadership from 1884 to 1889 left a lasting impression not only on the orchestra itself but in the minds of a majority of its patrons at the present day, will again be welcomed with all the hearty recognition of an established favorite. One can look with absolute certainty for that steadfast loyalty to high ideals which first gave to the Boston Symphony Orchestra its rank among the leading musical organizations of the age.

Since the close of last season the orchestra has lost quite a number of its members, yet in such a numerous organization the proportion of change is still slight. All the vacancies have been satisfactorily filled by the engagement during the summer of the following artists: Messrs. von Theodorowicz, violin; of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra; Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra; Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Kloepfel, trumpet, Mausebach, trombone, Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra. With the exception of these changes, the personnel will be the same as for several years past.

A later announcement of the soloists will be in keeping with the high standard of these concerts, and will include many artists known throughout the world.

The auction sales of season tickets will be held at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept 26, 27, 29 and 30.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1898.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Music lovers in Boston have reason to look forward with pleasurable anticipation to the season of 1898-99, which promises to be unusually interesting. The superb symphony concerts at Music hall, a three weeks' season of grand opera at the Boston theater by a fine company headed by Melba and Ternina, and the regular concerts by the various clubs and societies will provide a plentiful supply of musical performances of a high order.

The Boston symphony orchestra, as usual, will be the first in the field. It will begin its 18th season on Oct 14, and with few omissions will give performances on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings of each week until the end of April. The concerts of this great organization, constantly maintained at the highest standard, offer rare attractions, and have deservedly won an enormous and faithful clientele.

The interest in them will undoubtedly be increased next winter by the return of Wilhelm Gericke to the position he so ably filled from 1884 to 1889. This distinguished conductor will be cordially welcomed by all whose privilege it was to hear the superlatively fine performances which were the rule under his direction, and by the new generation of concert-goers which has sprung up since he left Boston, nine years ago.

Since the close of last season the orchestra has lost several valued members. Their places have been filled by the engagement of Julius von Theodorowitz, violin, of the Berlin philharmonic society; Andre Maquarre, flute of the Lamoureux orchestra; Mr Longy, oboe, of the Colonne orchestra; Alexander Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux orchestra; Louis Kloepfel, trumpet; August Mausebach, trombone; Andreas Thomae, tuba, and August Rettberg, tympani, of the New York symphony orchestra. Otherwise the personnel of the organization will be the same as for several years past.

The soloists for the season have been selected with care, and include many artists of world-wide fame. The auction sales of season tickets will be held at Music hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept 26, 27, 29 and 30.

BOSTON POST,

The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 11, 1898.
(Copyright, 1898, Post Publishing Company.)

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

For the eighteenth consecutive season the preliminary announcement of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 1898-99 will set the musical pace for Boston and vicinity. On Oct. 14 Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, whose five years' leadership, from 1884 to 1889, left a lasting impression not only on the orchestra itself, but in the minds of a majority of its patrons at the present day, will again be welcomed with all the hearty recognition of an established favorite. One can look with absolute certainty for that steadfast loyalty to high ideals which first gave to the Boston Symphony Orchestra its rank among the leading musical organizations of the age.

Since the close of last season the orchestra has lost quite a number of its members, yet in such a numerous organization the proportion of change is still slight. All the vacancies have been satisfactorily filled by the engagement during the summer of the following artists: Messrs. Von Theodorowicz, violin, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra; Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Cologne Orchestra; Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thome, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra. With the exception of these changes the personnel will be the same as for several years past.

A later announcement of the soloists will be in keeping with the high standard of these concerts, and will include many artists known throughout the world.

The auction sales of season tickets will be held at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept. 26, 27, 29 and 30.

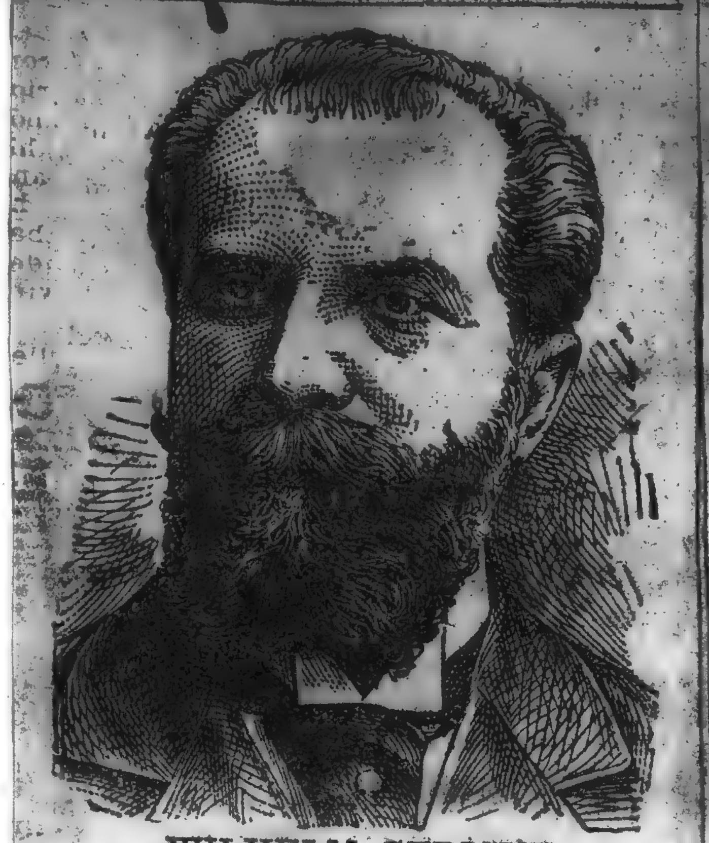
BOSTON POST,

The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND

SUNDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 18, 1898.
(Copyright, 1898, Post Publishing Company.)

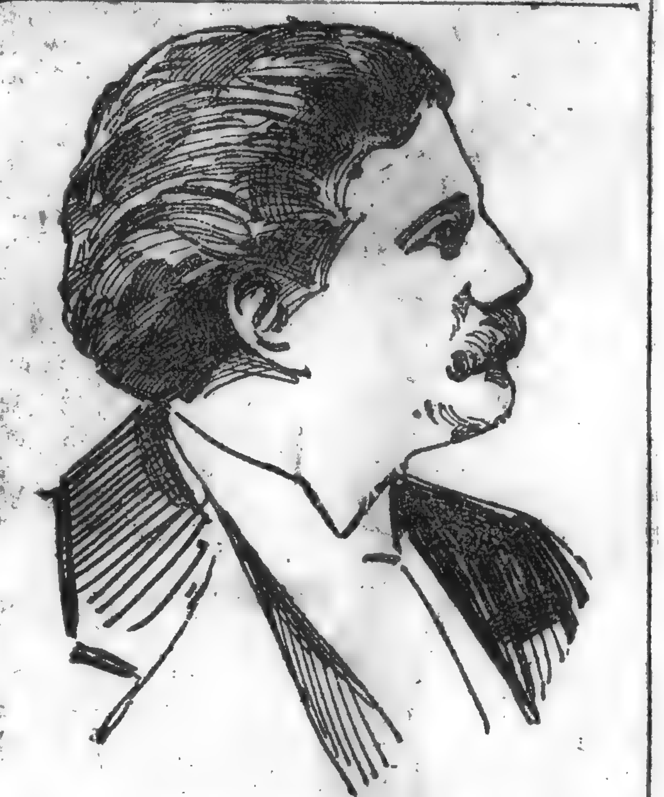
THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERTS.

All arrangements have been completed for the coming season of Symphony concerts at Music Hall. The return of Wilhelm Gericke, the appearance of many musical celebrities and other favoring conditions promise to make it the most brilliant ever given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The season will comprise the usual twenty-four public rehearsals on Friday afternoons and twenty-four concerts on Saturday evenings, beginning on Oct. 14 and extending until the end of April.



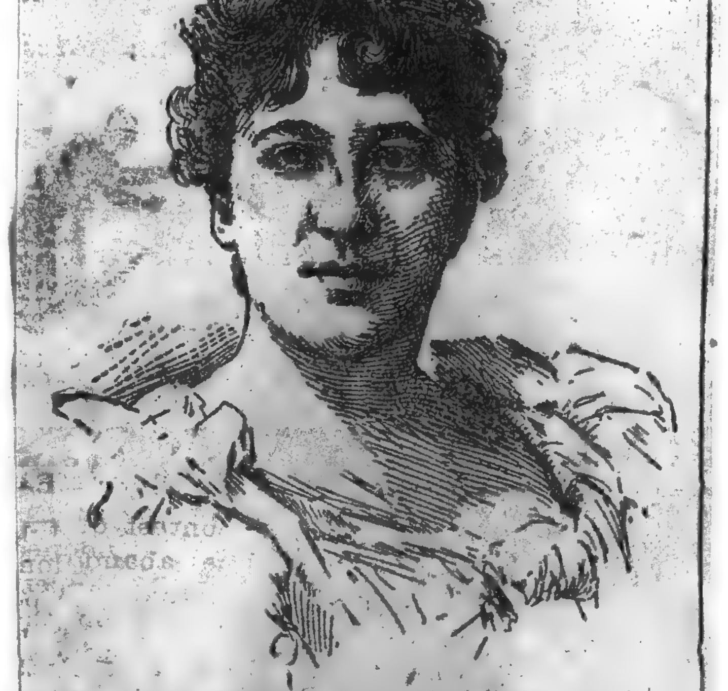
WILHELM GERICKE.

Nothing new can be said of the merits of this great organization or of the attractiveness of its concerts, now so well known and appreciated by the musical public. Subscribers will hear the finest possible performances of a wide variety of orchestra music by the greatest composers, old and modern, and will also enjoy the opportunity of hearing some of the greatest solo artists of the present day.



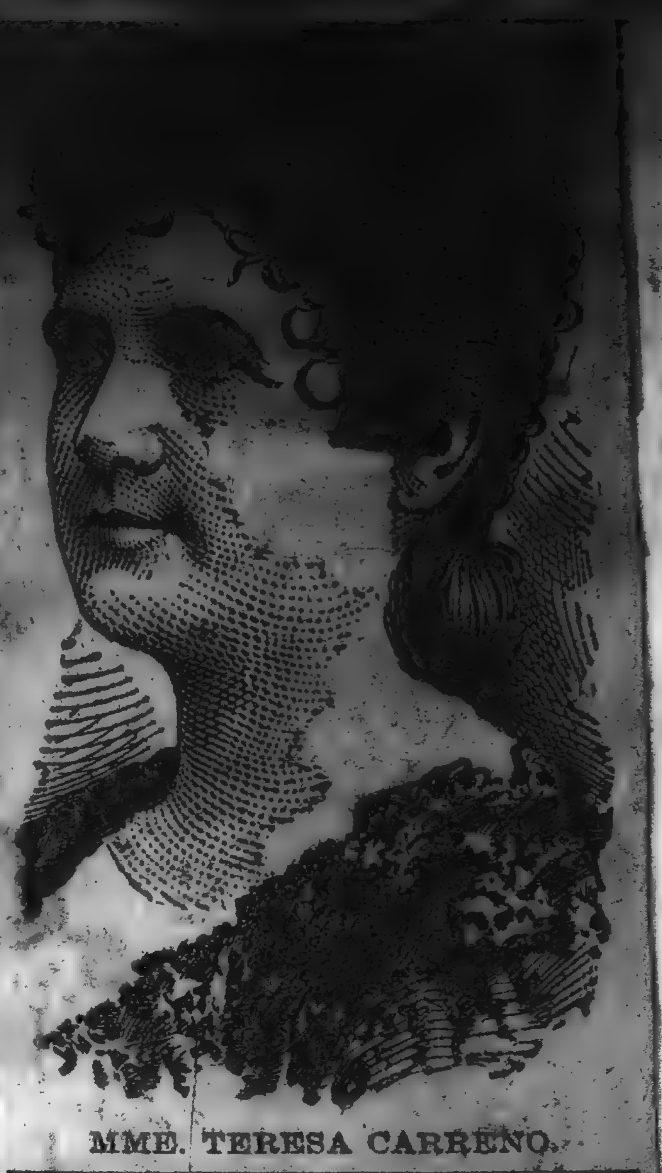
HERR ROSENTHAL.

A few changes in the membership of the orchestra became necessary by the loss of several valued members since the close of last season. The vacancies thus created have been filled by the engagement of artists of high rank from the great orchestras of Paris and Berlin. Among the soloists engaged for the concerts are Mme. Gadski, Lady Halle (Norman Neruda), Mme. Carreno, Miss Aus der Ohe, Messrs. Rosenthal, Sauer, Willy Burmester, Sahla, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski and Schroeder.



MME. GADSKI.

The sales of season tickets for the twenty-four Friday afternoon rehearsals and twenty-four Saturday evening concerts will be by auction, as usual. They will be held at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept. 26, 27, 29 and 30. The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold on Monday, the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals on Tuesday, and the $12 and $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening concerts on Thursday and Friday respectively. Circulars giving full information may be had at Music Hall.



MME. TERESA CARRENO.

Boston Sunday Globe.

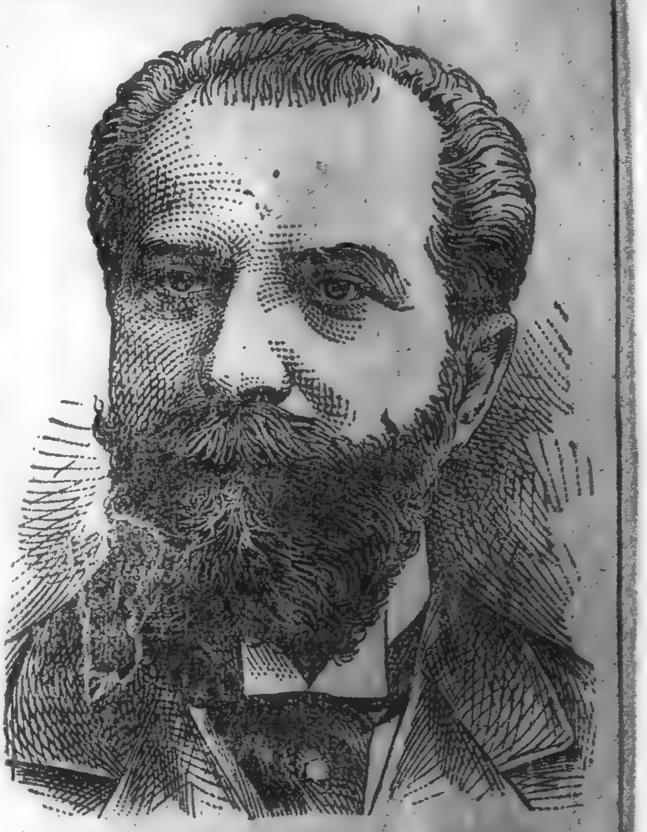
SUNDAY, SEPT 18, 1898.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The 18th Season Will Begin in Music Hall Oct 14 Under the Direction of Wilhelm Gericke—Noted Soloists Engaged.

The 18th season of the Boston symphony orchestra, which will begin at Music hall Oct 14, will be particularly brilliant for many reasons, and there is abundant evidence of more than the usual interest in the approaching series of performances.

It is needless to reiterate the superlatively fine qualities of this great organization, whose efficiency is so well known to the musical public. No considerations are allowed to interfere with the most perfect performances possible, and the statement frequently made that these concerts are the best given in any city of the world will not be seriously questioned.



CONDUCTOR WILHELM GERICKE.

The arrangements for the season are practically completed. Wilhelm Gericke, who returns to his old position as conductor after an absence of nine years, will be cordially welcomed, and his appearances will add immeasurably to the interest in the concerts. To him fairly belongs the credit of first placing this orchestra in the foremost rank of similar organizations, and his great ability as a conductor, his fine musicianship and sincerity of purpose lend to concerts under his direction a dignity and attractiveness which no one else has been able to maintain.

Pending the arrival of the new conductor, little can be said with definiteness about the programs. The library of the orchestra, one of the largest in the country, contains musical literature sufficient to suit all tastes, and Mr Gericke can be depended upon to present programs of great variety, made up of the best music of all schools.

Those who remember the extraordinary success of the performances of Schumann's "Manfred" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, when given under his direction, will be glad to know that it is his intention to repeat them this winter.

The soloists expected form a notable group, including some of the most interesting of contemporary musical celebrities. Among them are Mme Gadski, Lady Halle (Norman Neruda), Mme Carreno, Miss Aus der Ohe, Messrs Rosenthal, Sauer, Willy Burmester, Sahla, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski and Schroeder.

The sales of season tickets for the 24 Friday afternoon rehearsals and 24 Saturday evening concerts will be by auction, as is customary. They will be held at Music hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept 26, 27, 29 and 30. The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold on Monday, the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals on Tuesday, and the $12 and $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening concerts on Thursday and Friday, respectively.

—Mr Gericke sailed last Tuesday from Bremen and will be expected to arrive about the middle of the week. He intends to remain some time in New York before coming to resume his duties in Boston.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

WILHELM GERICKE.

AFTER some years over seas, Wilhelm Gericke, formerly conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, returns to his old post, and there can be no doubt as to the genuineness of the satisfaction expressed in print and private regarding his renomination. By perfectly fair, perfectly legitimate means, Mr. Gericke has won a reputation for himself, both at home and abroad. Beloved in Vienna, and his name a glorious tradition for the younger frequenters of the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he comes back to the scenes of his former triumphs richer in experience and without abating a jot of that old mastery of his men—a mastery that laid the technical foundations of the band from Boston.

Mr. Gericke has been strenuously absorbed in his work while in Europe, but he confesses to always having felt a weakness for America. He it was who first conducted the Boston Orchestra in this city and at Steinway Hall. We understand that Mrs. Jeannette M. Thurber played the part of an impresaria in the matter. There it was that Mr. Gericke unfolded to our astonished ears the technical beauty, the grace, finesse and polish of his wonderful organization. Since those days he has grown, and a too austere preoccupation with the material side of his music has given way to a certain breadth, mellowness and poetry. He has the true conductor's temperament—alert, nervously vigorous, tactful and musical. We look for much from Wilhelm Gericke and the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the coming season.

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CIV., NO. 73.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 11, 1898.

The Symphony Concerts Under Conductor Gericke—Grand Opera—The Worcester County Festival—Concert for the Sheltering Home Note and Comment.

THE approaching Boston musical season promises to be particularly brilliant. With the Symphony concerts at Music Hall, a three weeks' season of grand opera in mid-winter at the Boston Theatre, and the usual concerts of the various clubs and societies, music lovers may look forward to it with pleasant anticipation. The Boston Symphony orchestra will resume its concerts at Music Hall, Oct. 14, and will give its usual weekly performances Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings until the end of April. The playing of this great organization has become the standard of orchestral performance in America, and in no other city of the world can so fine a series of concerts be heard. They give pleasure to a multitude of music lovers and have made Boston a Mecca of musical students. The arrangements for the season are practically completed. The vacancies in the orchestra created by the loss of several valued members have been filled by engagements made during the summer. The following artists have been secured: Messrs. von Theodorowitz, violin, of the Berlin Philharmonic orchestra; Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne orchestra; Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux orchestra; Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony orchestra. With the exception of tnese changes, the personnel will be the same as for several years past. William Gericke, who has been engaged as conductor, will be warmly welcomed. He may be counted upon to give the concerts a distinction and dignity which were characteristic of them during his former regime. His return will be hailed with joy by subscribers who had the pleasure of hearing the orchestra between 1884 and 1889, and by the new generation of concert goers which has grown up since he left Boston nine years ago. The soloists for the season have been selected with care, and among them will be many artists of world-wide fame. The auction sales of season tickets will be held at Music Hall, Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept. 26, 27, 29 and 30.

The trips of the Boston Symphony orchestra away from home will this season be a day longer than formerly. The management had intended to abandon the concerts in Baltimore when it first laid out the season's itinerary, in order to gain time to give an extra concert each month in New York. This disappointed the music lovers of Baltimore, and five gentlemen entered into a guarantee sufficiently generous to persuade the management to add one to the days of travel. On each trip the orchestra will give one concert in Baltimore on Saturday, one in Washington on Monday, one in Philadelphia on Tuesday, two in New York on Wednesday and Thursday, and two in Brooklyn on Friday and Saturday.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, SEPT 11, 1898.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

For the eighteenth consecutive season, the preliminary announcement of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 1898-99 will set the musical pace for Boston and vicinity. On Oct. 14 Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, whose five years' leadership from 1884 to 1889 left a lasting impression not only on the orchestra itself but in the minds of a majority of its patrons at the present day, will again be welcomed with all the hearty recognition of an established favorite. One can look with absolute certainty for that steadfast loyalty to high ideals which first gave to the Boston Symphony Orchestra its rank among the leading musical organizations of the age.

Since the close of last season the orchestra has lost quite a number of its members, yet in such a numerous organization the proportion of change is still slight. All the vacancies have been satisfactorily filled by the engagement during the summer of the following artists: Messrs. von Theodorowicz, violin; of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra; Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra: Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Kloepfel, trumpet, Mausebach, trombone, Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra. With the exception of these changes, the personnel will be the same as for several years past.

A later announcement of the soloists will be in keeping with the high standard of these concerts, and will include many artists known throughout the world.

The auction sales of season tickets will be held at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept. 26, 27, 29 and 30.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 11, 1898.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Music lovers in Boston have reason to look forward with pleasurable anticipation to the season of 1898-99, which promises to be unusually interesting. The superb symphony concerts at Music hall, a three weeks' season of grand opera at the Boston theater by a fine company headed by Melba and Ternina, and the regular concerts by the various clubs and societies will provide a plentiful supply of musical performances of a high order.

The Boston symphony orchestra, as usual, will be the first in the field. It will begin its 18th season on Oct 14, and with few omissions will give performances on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings of each week until the end of April. The concerts of this great organization, constantly maintained at the highest standard, offer rare attractions, and have deservedly won an enormous and faithful clientele.

The interest in them will undoubtedly be increased next winter by the return of Wilhelm Gericke to the position he so ably filled from 1884 to 1889. This distinguished conductor will be cordially welcomed by all whose privilege it was to hear the superlatively fine performances which were the rule under his direction, and by the new generation of concert-goers which has sprung up since he left Boston, nine years ago.

Since the close of last season the orchestra has lost several valued members. Their places have been filled by the engagement of Julius von Theodorowitz, violin, of the Berlin philharmonic society; Andre Maquarre, flute of the Lamoureux orchestra; Mr Longy, oboe, of the Colonne orchestra; Alexander Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux orchestra; Louis Kloepfel, trumpet; August Mausebach, trombone; Andreas Thomae, tuba, and August Rettberg, tympani, of the New York symphony orchestra. Otherwise the personnel of the organization will be the same as for several years past.

The soloists for the season have been selected with care, and include many artists of world-wide fame. The auction sales of season tickets will be held at Music hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept 26, 27, 29 and 30.

BOSTON POST,

The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 11, 1898.
(Copyright, 1898, Post Publishing Company.)

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

For the eighteenth consecutive season the preliminary announcement of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 1898-99 will set the musical pace for Boston and vicinity. On Oct. 14 Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, whose five years' leadership, from 1884 to 1889, left a lasting impression not only on the orchestra itself, but in the minds of a majority of its patrons at the present day, will again be welcomed with all the hearty recognition of an established favorite. One can look with absolute certainty for that steadfast loyalty to high ideals which first gave to the Boston Symphony Orchestra its rank among the leading musical organizations of the age.

Since the close of last season the orchestra has lost quite a number of its members, yet in such a numerous organization the proportion of change is still slight. All the vacancies have been satisfactorily filled by the engagement during the summer of the following artists: Messrs. Von Theodorowicz, violin, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra; Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Cologne Orchestra; Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thome, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra. With the exception of these changes the personnel will be the same as for several years past.

A later announcement of the soloists will be in keeping with the high standard of these concerts, and will include many artists known throughout the world.

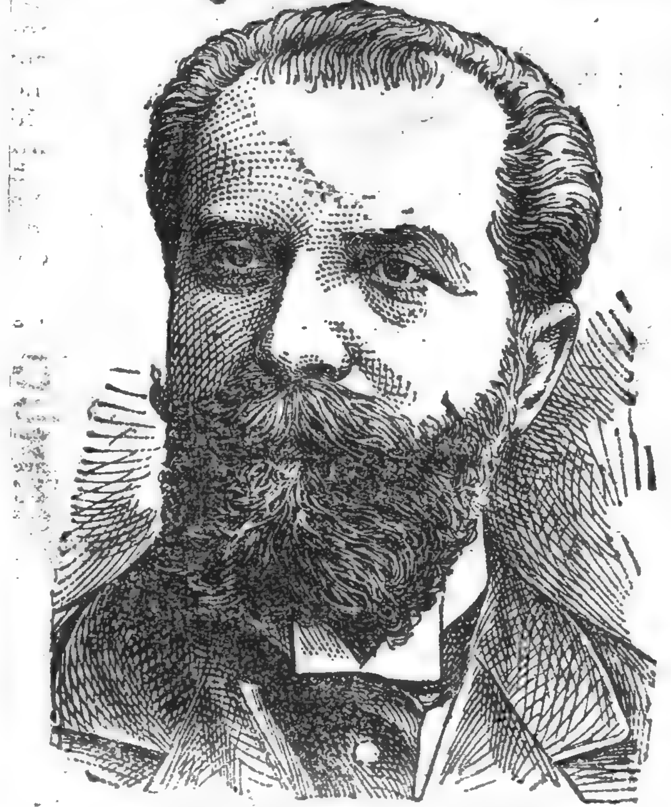
The auction sales of season tickets will be held at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept. 26, 27, 29 and 30.

BOSTON POST,

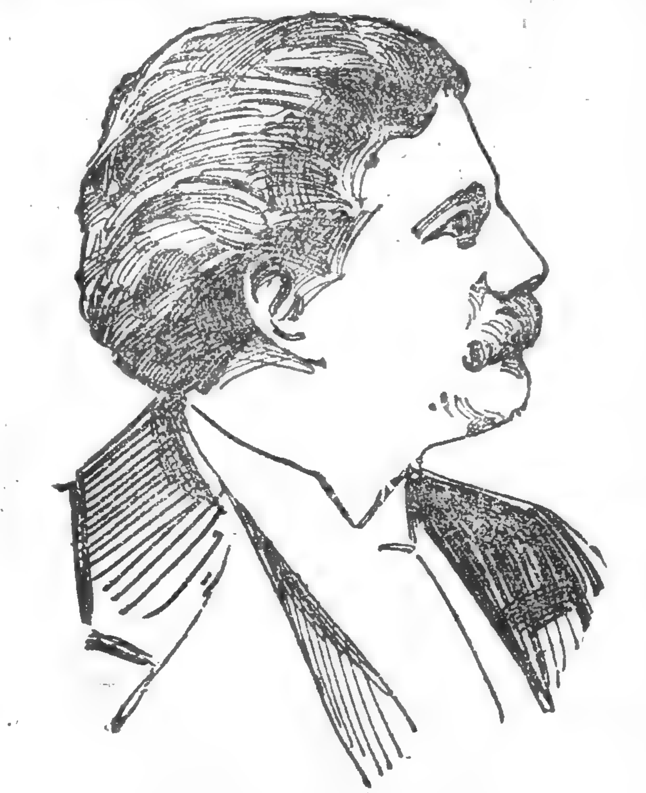
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 18, 1898.
(Copyright, 1898, Post Publishing Company.)

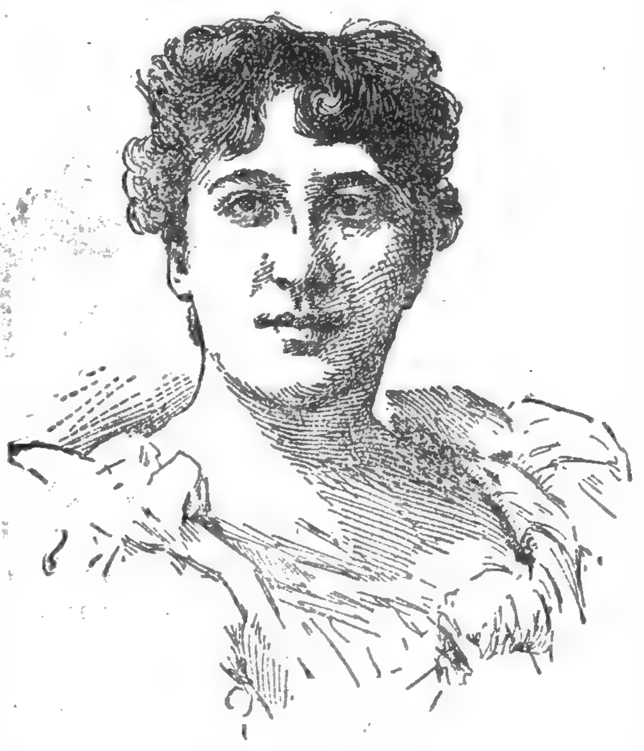
THE SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA CONCERTS.



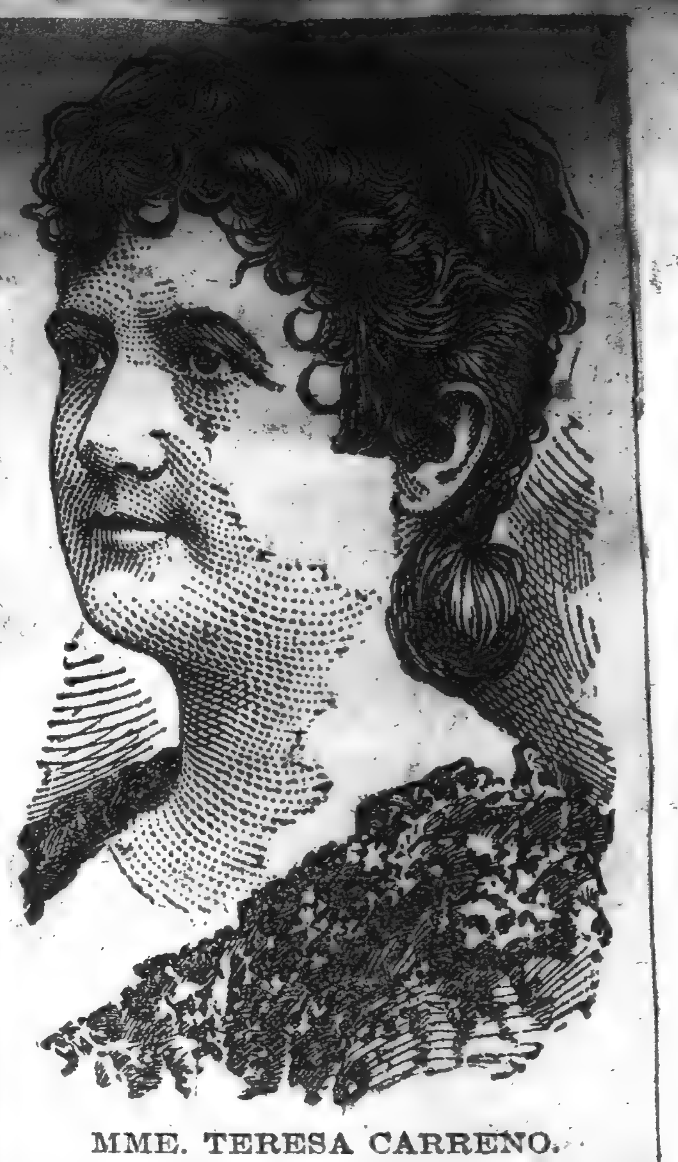
WILHELM GERICKE.



HERR ROSENTHAL.



MME. GADSKI.



MME. TERESA CARRENO.

All arrangements have been completed for the coming season of Symphony concerts at Music Hall. The return of Wilhelm Gericke, the appearance of many musical celebrities and other favoring conditions promise to make it the most brilliant ever given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The season will comprise the usual twenty-four public rehearsals on Friday afternoons and twenty-four concerts on Saturday evenings, beginning on Oct. 14 and extending until the end of April.

Nothing new can be said of the merits of this great organization or of the attractiveness of its concerts, now so well known and appreciated by the musical public. Subscribers will hear the finest possible performances of a wide variety of orchestra music by the greatest composers, old and modern, and will also enjoy the opportunity of hearing some of the greatest solo artists of the present day.

A few changes in the membership of the orchestra became necessary by the loss of several valued members since the close of last season. The vacancies thus created have been filled by the engagement of artists of high rank from the great orchestras of Paris and Berlin. Among the soloists engaged for the concerts are Mme. Gadski, Lady Halle (Norman Neruda), Mme. Carreno, Miss Aus der Ohe, Messrs. Rosenthal, Sauer, Willy Burmester, Sahla, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski and Schroeder.

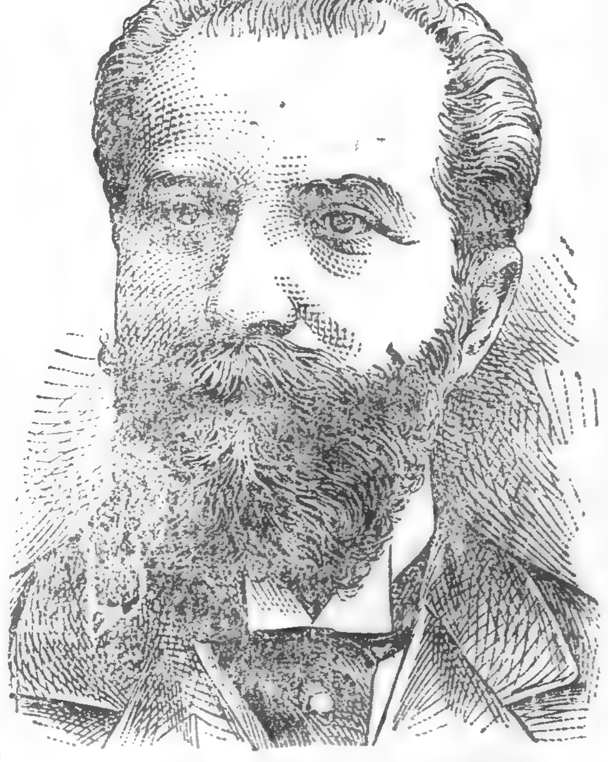
The sales of season tickets for the twenty-four Friday afternoon rehearsals and twenty-four Saturday evening concerts will be by auction, as usual. They will be held at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept. 26, 27, 29 and 30. The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold on Monday, the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals on Tuesday, and the $12 and $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening concerts on Thursday and Friday respectively. Circulars giving full information may be had at Music Hall.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, SEPT 18, 1898.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The 18th Season Will Begin in Music Hall Oct 14 Under the Direction of Wilhelm Gericke—Noted Soloists Engaged.



CONDUCTOR WILHELM GERICKE.

The 18th season of the Boston symphony orchestra, which will begin at Music hall Oct 14, will be particularly brilliant for many reasons, and there is abundant evidence of more than the usual interest in the approaching series of performances.

It is needless to reiterate the superlatively fine qualities of this great organization, whose efficiency is so well known to the musical public. No considerations are allowed to interfere with the most perfect performances possible, and the statement frequently made that these concerts are the best given in any city of the world will not be seriously questioned.

The arrangements for the season are practically completed. Wilhelm Gericke, who returns to his old position as conductor after an absence of nine years, will be cordially welcomed, and his appearances will add immeasurably to the interest in the concerts. To him fairly belongs the credit of first placing this orchestra in the foremost rank of similar organizations, and his great ability as a conductor, his fine musicianship and sincerity of purpose lend to concerts under his direction a dignity and attractiveness which no one else has been able to maintain.

Pending the arrival of the new conductor, little can be said with definiteness about the programs. The library of the orchestra, one of the largest in the country, contains musical literature sufficient to suit all tastes, and Mr Gericke can be depended upon to present programs of great variety, made up of the best music of all schools.

Those who remember the extraordinary success of the performances of Schumann's "Manfred" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, when given under his direction, will be glad to know that it is his intention to repeat them this winter.

The soloists expected form a notable group, including some of the most interesting of contemporary musical celebrities. Among them are Mme Gadski, Lady Halle (Norman Neruda), Mme Carreno, Miss Aus der Ohe, Messrs Rosenthal, Sauer, Willy Burmester, Sahla, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski and Schroeder.

The sales of season tickets for the 24 Friday afternoon rehearsals and 24 Saturday evening concerts will be by auction, as is customary. They will be held at Music hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept 26, 27, 29 and 30. The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold on Monday, the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals on Tuesday, and the $12 and $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening concerts on Thursday and Friday, respectively.

—Mr Gericke sailed last Tuesday from Bremen and will be expected to arrive about the middle of the week. He intends to remain some time in New York before coming to resume his duties in Boston.

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CIV., NO. 80.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 18, 1898.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

The Symphony Orchestra's Boston Season.

Newcomers of Note in the Organization Under Conductor Gericke—List of Soloists—Wagner Operas Without Cuts—Mlle. Lorraine's American Tour—The Bostonians.

THE 18th season of the Boston Symphony orchestra, like its predecessors, will be the musical magnet of the year, attracting its thousands of patrons from Boston and vicinity for a radius of at least 50 miles. Through all these years, the season-ticket purchasers in the early eighties have steadfastly remained, while it has come to pass that a new generation has swelled the audiences to unprecedented numbers. No stronger evidence than this can reasonably be asked as to the integrity of the organization and the standard of its work. It was organized as a permanent orchestra, to be maintained solely for concert performances, and it remains the same today. As a striking evidence of its unchanged personnel, the great majority of the newcomers brought to this country by Herr Wilhelm Gericke when he reorganized the orchestra early in his regime 12 years ago, will welcome his return to the conductor's desk with the coming season. The intelligent and discriminating clientele of the Boston Symphony orchestra have never forgotten the five years from 1884 to 1889, when Mr. Gericke laid the foundation, so vital to every enduring organization, and so essential to his successors in accomplishing results well night impossible but for his earlier preparation.

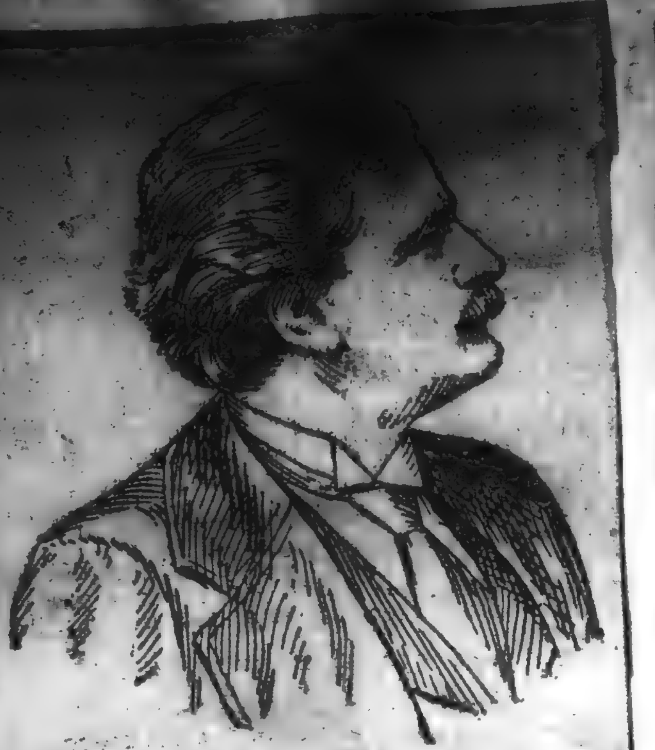
And when it is borne in mind that the organization over which Mr. Gericke is to raise his baton in a few weeks is a tremendous improvement upon the one he found in 1884, congratulations are in order, both for the conductor and an expectant public. It is but simple justice to credit Mr. Gericke with an absolute loyalty to a high standard of ideal performance. To gain this standard he was untiring, sparing neither the orchestra nor himself.

It it a pleasure to announce that the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven, with its quartet of vocalists and chorus, will be given complete, and the music to Schumann's "Manfred," also with singers, chorus and reader. Those who recall the marvellous work evolved from a chorus not over large in numbers in a performance of the Ninth Symphony, under Mr. Gericke, some 10 years ago, will know the full meaning of the above announcement, and anticipate accordingly.

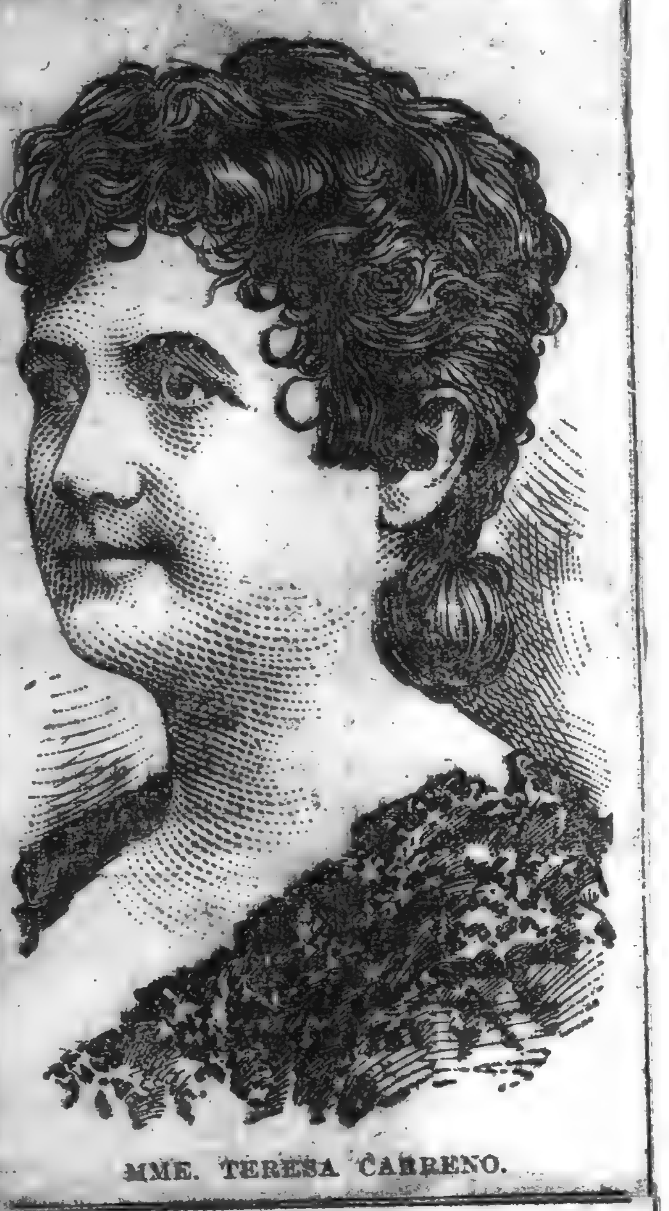
It is worthy of note that, as the three members of the orchestra lost last July were Frenchmen on a French steamer, so France is called upon to fill their places from her most famous orchestras. There have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne orchestra, and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz of the Berlin Philharmonic orchestra, and a violoncellist, whom Mr. Gericke will bring with him. There have also been engaged, Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony orchestra, making a total of only nine changes in a membership of 90.

The list of soloists is, as usual, one worthy of the orchestra and its stand... The newcomers making their first ... to America are Willy Burmester ... Lady Halle, possibly better known ... Norman-Neruda, and Sahla, violin... and Emil Sauer, pianist. The list ... includes Mme. Gadski and Mr. ...panari, Mr. Rosenthal, Mme. Car... and Miss Aus der Ohe. From the ... of the orchestra, Messrs. Kneisel, ...es, Adamowski and Schroeder are ...en.

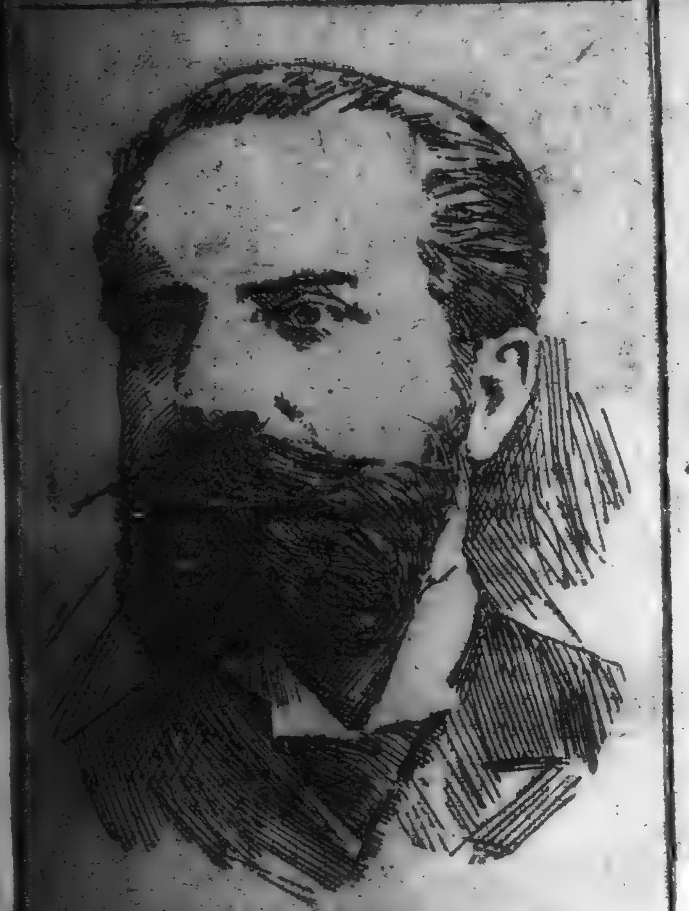
The sales of season tickets for the 24 ...day afternoon rehearsals and 24 Sat...day evening concerts will be by auc..., as usual, and will be held at Music ..., Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and ...day, Sept. 26, 27, 29 and 30. The $12 ... for the rehearsals will be sold ...day; the $7.50 seats for the rehears... Tuesday, and the $12 and $7.50 seats ... Saturday evening concerts, ...rsday and Friday, respectively.



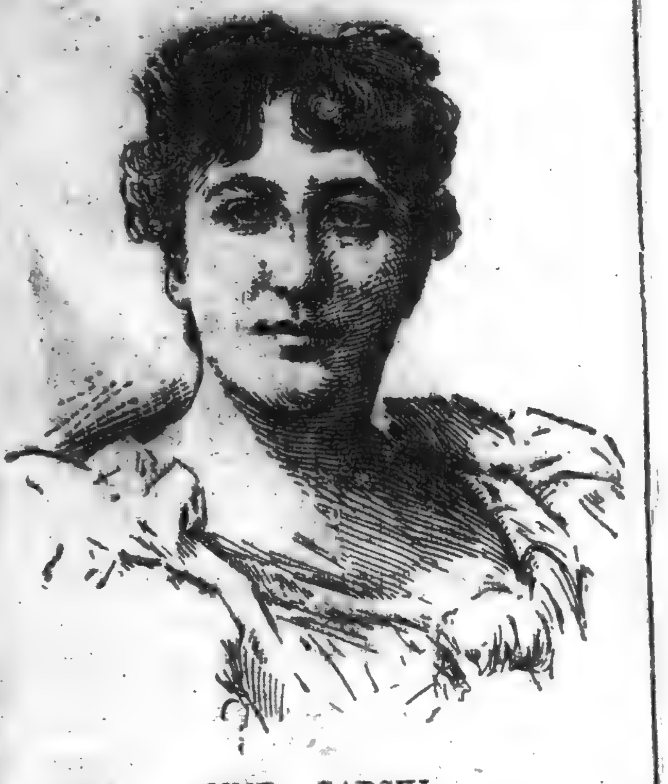
MR. MORITZ ROSENTHAL.



MME. TERESA CARRENO.



CONDUCTOR WILLIAM GERICKE.



MME. GADSKI.

Boston Evening Transcript.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1898.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, in all its extended existence, never began a more auspicious season than the 18th, which opens Oct. 14. It has never been the aim of the management so much to make each season outdo its predecessor, as to have all seasons on an equality of excellence, but there are signs in the air for the coming season which are not to be mistaken. The conductor who first carried the standard of performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to such a point as to command attention, not only in New England, but notably in a score of musical centres of the United States, after a lapse of nine years, returns to again assume control. It is surely safe to say that Mr. Gericke will find many traces of the admirable foundation which he so ably laid, and it is equally true that he will find no such task of reorganization and drilling as confronted him when he first came to Boston. Comparisons are odious; and since Mr. Gericke left us we have never had a performance which fell to the level of mediocrity, while the great majority were admirable, enjoyable, and often beyond reproach. But it is equally noteworthy that for steadfast loyalty to a high ideal, in striving to reach which he spared neither the orchestra nor himself, Wilhelm Gericke stands facile princeps among his fellow conductors. Whether the work was by Beethoven or Brahms, Mozart or Schumann, he always gave to it the interpretation its composer meant it to have, never intruding sensational effects of his own in the mistaken effort to improve upon a master. It is strong proof of the permanent personnel of the orchestra that most of its members brought by Mr. Gericke to this country at the time of his reorganization will welcome his return. It is also worthy of comment that these same members have played together in nearly a thousand concerts since Mr. Gericke left. To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra, and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist whom Mr. Gericke will bring with him. There have also been engaged Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra, making a total of only nine changes in a membership of ninety. The spirit of change is not confined to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for this year the Handel and Haydn Society, the Worcester Festival, the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, the Seidl Orchestra and the Liederkranz, all have new conductors. The list of soloists will be worthy of the orchestra. The newcomers making their first visit to America are Willy Burmester and Lady Hallé, possibly better known as Mme. Normann-Neruda, violinists, and Emil Sauer, pianist. The list will also include Gadski and Campanari, Rosenthal, Carreno and Aus der Ohe. From the ranks of the orchestra Messrs. Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski and Schroeder will be chosen.

The sales of season tickets for the 24 Friday afternoon rehearsals and 24 Saturday evening concerts will be by auction, as usual, and will be held at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept. 26, 27, 29 and 30. The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold on Monday; the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals on Tuesday; and the $12 and $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening concerts on Thursday and Friday, respectively. Circulars giving full information may be had at Music Hall.

Mr. Gericke, who has set sail for this country, has not announced the program of the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will be given Oct. 15. There is reasonable curiosity concerning his position toward ultra-modern music. Is he friendly toward the Russian school? During his previous administration, he preferred to look toward Vienna rather than toward Paris.

Mr. Kneisel will be the first of the soloists, and it is said that he will play Goldmark's concerto at the second concert.

The dates of the Kneisel Quartet concerts in Association Hall will be Oct. 24, Nov. 21, Dec. 5, Jan. 2, 30, Feb. 13, March 13, April 10.

⁂

Of the soloists who will appear at the Symphony concerts, Gadski, Carreno, Aus der Ohe, Campanari and Rosenthal are by no means unknown.

Rosenthal has not been heard here since 1888, for sickness prevented his coming here in 1896. He made his first appearance in Boston Nov. 9, 1888, at Music Hall, with an orchestra led by Walter Damrosch. He then played Liszt's E flat concerto, and solo pieces by Liszt, Schumann and Henselt. He was assisted by Fritz Kreisler, violinist. Rosenthal afterward gave concerts in Bumstead Hall Dec. 17, 18, 19 of the same year. He is now 36 years old.

Lady Hallé, violinist, has never visited this country. Wilma Maria Franciska Neruda was her maiden name and she was born at Brünn, March 29, 1839. Her father was a church organist. She first studied under Jansa. At the age of seven she appeared in public with her sister Amalie, a pianist, in Vienna. With their father and their brother Franz, a 'cellist, they gave concerts in Germany and appeared in 1849 at a Philharmonic concert in London. She played in Paris in 1864, and married there Ludwig Normann (1831-1885), a Swedish conductor. Separated from him in 1869, she made London her home, appearing in many chamber and orchestral concerts. In 1888 she married Sir Charles Hallé, who died in 1895.

Willy Burmester, violinist, was born at Hamburg in 1869. He was first taught by his father; then for four years he studied with Joachim. For three years afterward he worked by himself at Helsingfors in Finland. With his sister Johanna, pianist, he made his first appearance in Berlin Nov. 10, 1891. He reappeared there in 1894. His first appearance in London was March 14, 1895, when he played a concerto and some variations by Paganini. They say that he makes it his custom to play music by Paganini whenever he appears for the first time in any city—because it

Emil Sauer, as well as Burmester, will visit the United States for the first time. He, too, was born at Hamburg (Oct. 8, 1862). His mother was his first teacher, and the boy appeared in public in Hamburg Dec. 13, 1873. Rubinstein heard him two or three years later and recommended him to his brother, Nikolaus. Sauer studied at Moscow until 1881. Then he played in cities of Northern Germany and the Rhineland and in 1882 he played in London. The next year he went to Italy and Spain. In 1884 he was a few months with Liszt, and the next year he appeared in Berlin. Since then he has played throughout Europe with remarkable success, and he is ranked among the very first of pianists. When asked in London why he never played one of the five last sonatas of Beethoven, he answered: "I know the critics have been surprised at this. I believe, however, I had good reason for acting as I have done. I do not like to play the pieces that every pianist plays. Not that I fear comparisons, but because I prefer to play those pieces that are seldom heard—that are neglected by pianists. Every pianist begins with Sonata op. 110, for instance. As for op. 106, perhaps you will be shocked to hear that I do not like it."

⁂

Blanche Roosevelt made her first appearance on any stage at Covent Garden April 15, 1876, as Violetta. She then sang under the name of "Mlle. Rosavella."

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

SEPTEMBER 21, 1898.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The eighteenth series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts begin in Music Hall October 14, continuing to the end of April, with the usual monthly absences in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Baltimore.

The vacancies caused by the loss of several of the valued members of the orchestra in the sinking of La Bourgogne, have been filled by the engagement of the following artists: Von Theodorowicz, violin, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra; Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra; Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra. Otherwise, the membership will be the same as before.

As has been already announced, Wilhelm Gericke will be the conductor. Pending his arrival no definite announcements can be made in reference to the programs. All who remember the performances of Schumann's "Manfred" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, when given under Mr. Gericke's direction, will be glad to know that it is his intention to repeat them this winter. The soloists will include nearly all the musical celebrities who are to be in the country. Among them are Madame Gadski, Lady Hallé (Norman Neruda), Madame Carreño, Miss Aus der Ohe, Messrs. Rosenthal, Sauer, Willy Burmester, Sahla, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski and Schroeder.

The sales of season tickets for the twenty-four Friday afternoon rehearsals and the twenty-four Saturday evening concerts will be by auction, as usual, and will be held at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, September 26, 27, 29 and 30. The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold on Monday; the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals on Tuesday and the $12 and $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening concerts on Thursday and Friday respectively.

Gericke and Rosenthal.

Wilhelm Gericke will make his rentrée in the Boston Symphony concerts, so far as New York is concerned, on November 9 and 10, at Carnegie Hall, and on these two occasions Rosenthal has been engaged as soloist. Previous to these dates Rosenthal will be heard here in recitals.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIV., NO. 84.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 22, 1898.

HERR GERICKE ARRIVES.

New Leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra Lands in New York, from Europe.

NEW YORK, Sept. 21, 1898. Wilhelm Gericke, the new conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which position he left several years ago because of poor health/ arrived here from Europe today.

He said he had engaged eight new musicians for the Symphony orchestra. Two of these were necessary to replace Messrs. Weiss and Pourteau, who were lost at sea with the Bourgogne. Of the new men, three are from Paris—two from the orchestra of the Opera Comique, and one from the Lamoreux. The other five are former members of the New York Symphony orchestra.

Herr Gericke said that the orchestra would have few new works in its repertory this year. There would be only two of importance, both symphonies, one by Buckner and the other by Sinding. Herr Gericke will remain in New York several days before going to Boston.

[17]

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CIV., NO. 80.

SUNDAY, SEPT. 18, 1898.

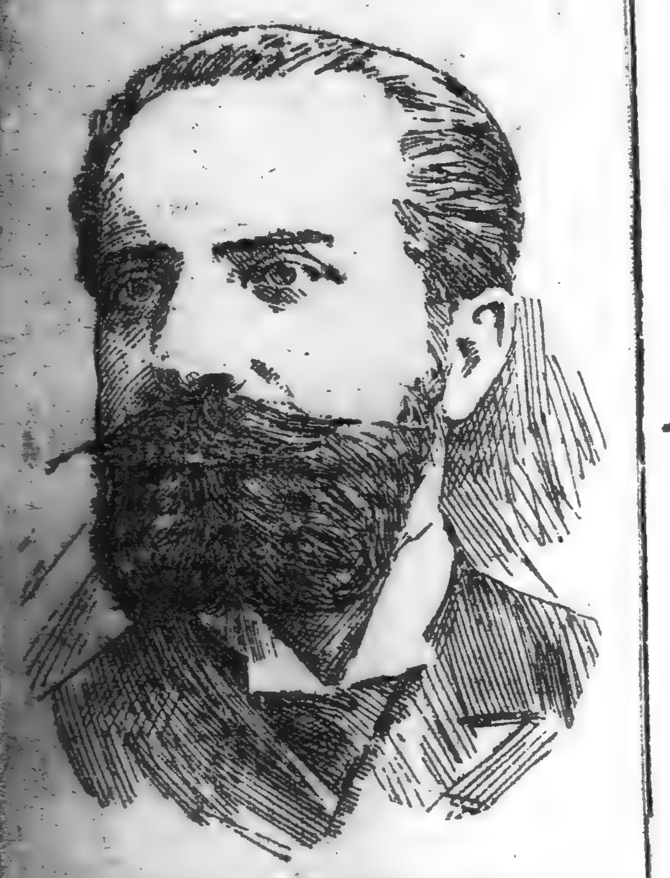
IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

The Symphony Orchestra's Boston Season.

Newcomers of Note in the Organization Under Conductor Gericke—List of Soloists—Wagner Operas Without Cuts—Mlle. Lorraine's American Tour—The Bostonians.

THE 18th season of the Boston Symphony orchestra, like its predecessors, will be the musical magnet of the year, attracting its thousands of patrons from Boston and vicinity for a radius of at least 50 miles. Through all these years, the season-ticket purchasers in the early eighties have steadfastly remained, while it has come to pass that a new generation has swelled the audiences to unprecedented numbers. No stronger evidence than this can reasonably be asked as to the integrity of the organization and the standard of its work. It was organized as a permanent orchestra, to be maintained solely for concert performances, and it remains the same today. As a striking evidence of its unchanged personnel, the great majority of the newcomers brought to this country by Herr Wilhelm Gericke when he reorganized the orchestra early in his regime 12 years ago, will welcome his return to the conductor's desk with the coming season. The intelligent and discriminating clientele of the Boston Symphony orchestra have never forgotten the five years from 1884 to 1889, when Mr. Gericke laid the foundation, so vital to every enduring organization, and so essential to his successors in accomplishing results well night impossible but for his earlier preparation.

And when it is borne in mind that the organization over which Mr. Gericke is to raise his baton in a few weeks is a tremendous improvement upon the one he found in 1884, congratulations are in order, both for the conductor and an expectant public. It is but simple justice to credit Mr. Gericke with an absolute loyalty to a high standard of ideal performance. To gain this standard, he was untiring, sparing neither the orchestra nor himself.



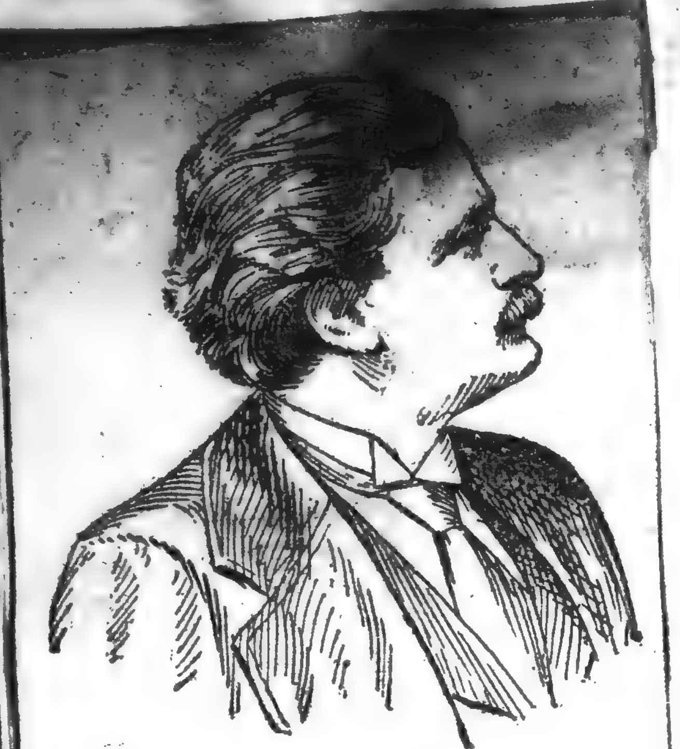
CONDUCTOR WILLIAM GERICKE.

It it a pleasure to announce that the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven, with its quartet of vocalists and chorus, will be given complete, and the music to Schumann's "Manfred," also with singers, chorus and reader. Those who recall the marvellous work evolved from a chorus not over large in numbers in a performance of the Ninth Symphony, under Mr. Gericke, some 10 years ago, will know the full meaning of the above announcement, and anticipate accordingly.

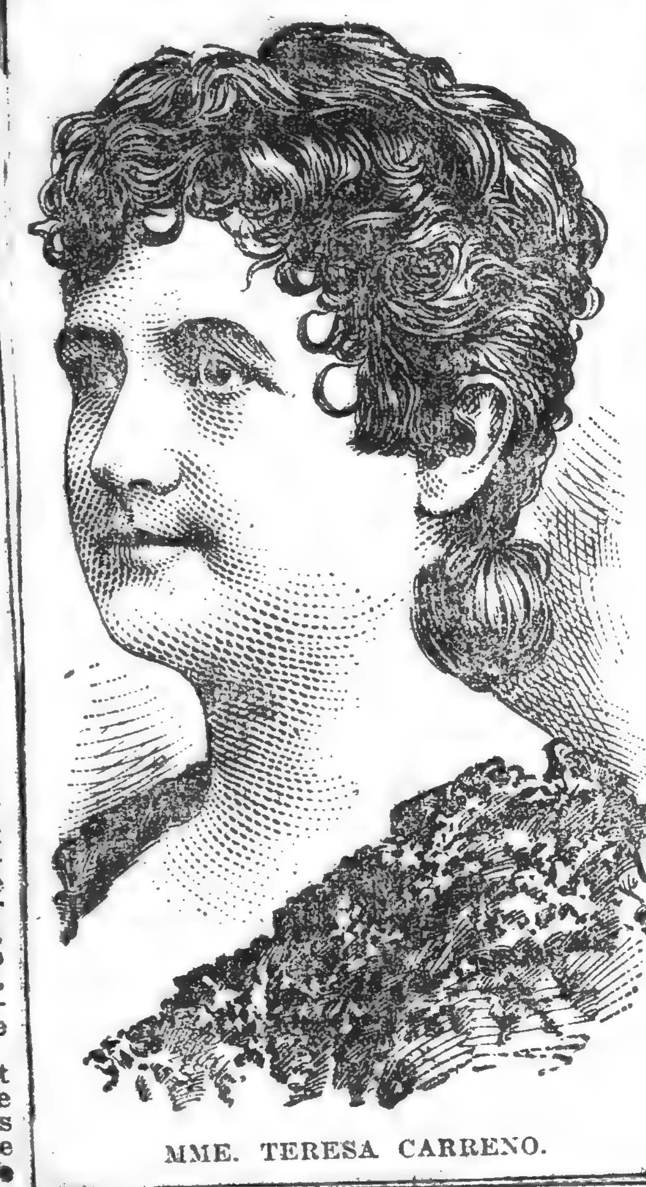
It is worthy of note that, as the three members of the orchestra lost last July were Frenchmen on a French steamer, so France is called upon to fill their places from her most famous orchestras. There have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne orchestra, and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz of the Berlin Philharmonic orchestra, and a violoncellist, whom Mr. Gericke will bring with him. There have also been engaged, Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony orchestra, making a total of only nine changes in a membership of 90.

The list of soloists is, as usual, one worthy of the orchestra and its standing. The newcomers making their first visit to America are Willy Burmester and Lady Halle, possibly better known as Norman-Neruda, and Sahla, violinists, and Emil Sauer, pianist. The list also includes Mme. Gadski and Mr. Campanari, Mr. Rosenthal, Mme. Carreno and Miss Aus der Ohe. From the ranks of the orchestra, Messrs. Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski and Schroeder are chosen.

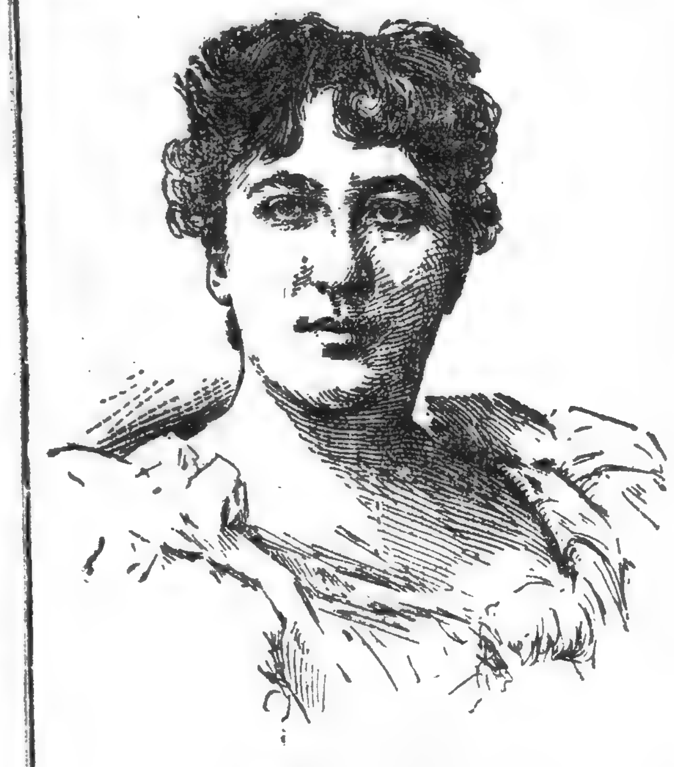
The sales of season tickets for the 24 Friday afternoon rehearsals and 24 Saturday evening concerts will be by auction, as usual, and will be held at Music Hall, Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept. 26, 27, 29 and 30. The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold Monday; the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals, Tuesday, and the $12 and $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening concerts, Thursday and Friday, respectively.



MR. MORITZ ROSENTHAL.



MME. TERESA CARRENO.



MME. GADSKI.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 18, 1898.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, in all its extended existence, never began a more auspicious season than the 18th, which opens Oct. 14. It has never been the aim of the management so much to make each season outdo its predecessor, as to have all seasons on an equality of excellence, but there are signs in the air for the coming season which are not to be mistaken. The conductor who first carried the standard of performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to such a point as to command attention, not only in New England, but notably in a score of musical centres of the United States, after a lapse of nine years, returns to again assume control. It is surely safe to say that Mr. Gericke will find many traces of the admirable foundation which he so ably laid, and it is equally true that he will find no such task of reorganization and drilling as confronted him when he first came to Boston. Comparisons are odious; and since Mr. Gericke left us we have never had a performance which fell to the level of mediocrity, while the great majority were admirable, enjoyable, and often beyond reproach. But it is equally noteworthy that for steadfast loyalty to a high ideal, in striving to reach which he spared neither the orchestra nor himself, Wilhelm Gericke stands facile princeps among his fellow conductors. Whether the work was by Beethoven or Brahms, Mozart or Schumann, he always gave to it the interpretation its composer meant it to have, never intruding sensational effects of his own in the mistaken effort to improve upon a master. It is strong proof of the permanent personnel of the orchestra that most of its members brought by Mr. Gericke to this country at the time of his reorganization will welcome his return. It is also worthy of comment that these same members have played together in nearly a thousand concerts since Mr. Gericke left. To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra, and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist whom Mr. Gericke will bring with him. There have also been engaged Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra, making a total of only nine changes in a membership of ninety. The spirit of change is not confined to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for this year the Handel and Haydn Society, the Worcester Festival, the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, the Seidl Orchestra and the Liederkranz, all have new conductors. The list of soloists will be worthy of the orchestra. The newcomers making their first visit to America are Willy Burmester and Lady Hallé, possibly better known as Mme. Normann-Neruda, violinists, and Emil Sauer, pianist. The list will also include Gadski and Campanari, Rosenthal, Carreno and Aus der Ohe. From the ranks of the orchestra Messrs. Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski and Schroeder will be chosen.

The sales of season tickets for the 24 Friday afternoon rehearsals and 24 Saturday evening concerts will be by auction, as usual, and will be held at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, Sept. 26, 27, 29 and 30. The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold on Monday; the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals on Tuesday; and the $12 and $7 50 seats for the Saturday evening concerts on Thursday and Friday, respectively. Circulars giving full information may be had at Music Hall.

Mr. Gericke, who has set sail for this country, has not announced the program of the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which will be given Oct. 15. There is reasonable curiosity concerning his position toward ultra-modern music. Is he friendly toward the Russian school? During his previous administration, he preferred to look toward Vienna rather than toward Paris.

Mr. Kneisel will be the first of the soloists, and it is said that he will play Goldmark's concerto at the second concert.

The dates of the Kneisel Quartet concerts in Association Hall will be Oct. 24, Nov. 21, Dec. 5, Jan. 2, 30, Feb. 13, March 13, April 10.

⁂

Of the soloists who will appear at the Symphony concerts, Gadski, Carreno, Aus der Ohe, Campanari and Rosenthal are by no means unknown.

Rosenthal has not been heard here since 1888, for sickness prevented his coming here in 1896. He made his first appearance in Boston Nov. 9, 1888, at Music Hall, with an orchestra led by Walter Damrosch. He then played Liszt's E flat concerto, and solo pieces by Liszt, Schumann and Henselt. He was assisted by Fritz Kreisler, violinist. Rosenthal afterward gave concerts in Bumstead Hall Dec. 17, 18, 19 of the same year. He is now 36 years old.

Lady Hallé, violinist, has never visited this country. Wilma Maria Franciska Neruda was her maiden name and she was born at Brünn, March 29, 1839. Her father was a church organist. She first studied under Jansa. At the age of seven she appeared in public with her sister Amalie, a pianist, in Vienna. With their father and their brother Franz, a 'cellist, they gave concerts in Germany and appeared in 1849 at a Philharmonic concert in London. She played in Paris in 1864, and married there Ludwig Normann (1831-1885), a Swedish conductor. Separated from him in 1869, she made London her home, appearing in many chamber and orchestral concerts. In 1888 she married Sir Charles Hallé, who died in 1895.

Willy Burmester, violinist, was born at Hamburg in 1869. He was first taught by his father; then for four years he studied with Joachim. For three years afterward he worked by himself at Helsingfors in Finland. With his sister Johanna, pianist, he made his first appearance in Berlin Nov. 10, 1891. He reappeared there in 1894. His first appearance in London was March 14, 1895, when he played a concerto and some variations by Paganini. They say that he makes it his custom to play music by Paganini whenever he appears for the first time in any city—because it [illegible]

Emil Sauer, as well as Mr. Burmester, will visit the United States for the first time. He, too, was born at Hamburg (Oct. 8, 1862). His mother was his first teacher, and the boy appeared in public in Hamburg Dec. 13, 1873. Rubinstein heard him two or three years later and recommended him to his brother, Nikolaus. Sauer studied at Moscow until 1881. Then he played in cities of Northern Germany and the Rhineland and in 1882 he played in London. The next year he went to Italy and Spain. In 1884 he was a few months with Liszt, and the next year he appeared in Berlin. Since then he has played throughout Europe with remarkable success, and he is ranked among the very first of pianists. When asked in London why he never played one of the five last sonatas of Beethoven, he answered: "I know the critics have been surprised at this. I believe, however, I had good reason for acting as I have done. I do not like to play the pieces that every pianist plays. Not that I fear comparisons, but because I prefer to play those pieces that are seldom heard—that are neglected by pianists. Every pianist begins with Sonata op. 110, for instance. As for op. 106, perhaps you will be shocked to hear that I do not like it."

⁂

Blanche Roosevelt made her first appearance on any stage at Covent Garden April 15, 1876, as Violetta. She then sang under the name of "Mlle. Rosavella."

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

SEPTEMBER 21, 1898.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The eighteenth series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts begin in Music Hall October 14, continuing to the end of April, with the usual monthly absences in New York, Brooklyn, Philadelphia and Baltimore.

The vacancies caused by the loss of several of the valued members of the orchestra in the sinking of La Bourgogne, have been filled by the engagement of the following artists: Von Theodorowicz, violin, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra; Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra; Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra. Otherwise, the membership will be the same as before.

As has been already announced, Wilhelm Gericke will be the conductor. Pending his arrival no definite announcements can be made in reference to the programs. All who remember the performances of Schumann's "Manfred" and Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, when given under Mr. Gericke's direction, will be glad to know that it is his intention to repeat them this winter. The soloists will include nearly all the musical celebrities who are to be in the country. Among them are Madame Gadski, Lady Hallé (Norman Neruda), Madame Carreño, Miss Aus der Ohe, Messrs. Rosenthal, Sauer, Willy Burmester, Sahla, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski and Schroeder.

The sales of season tickets for the twenty-tour Friday afternoon rehearsals and the twenty-four Saturday evening concerts will be by auction, as usual, and will be held at Music Hall on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday, September 26, 27, 29 and 30. The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold on Monday; the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals on Tuesday and the $12 and $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening concerts on Thursday and Friday respectively.

Gericke and Rosenthal.

Wilhelm Gericke will make his rentrée in the Boston Symphony concerts, so far as New York is concerned, on November 9 and 10, at Carnegie Hall, and on these two occasions Rosenthal has been engaged as soloist. Previous to these dates Rosenthal will be heard here in recitals.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIV., NO. 84.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 22, 1898.

HERR GERICKE ARRIVES.

New Leader of Boston Symphony Orchestra Lands in New York, from Europe.

NEW YORK, Sept. 21, 1898. Wilhelm Gericke, the new conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, which position he left several years ago because of poor health, arrived here from Europe today.

He said he had engaged eight new musicians for the Symphony orchestra. Two of these were necessary to replace Messrs. Weiss and Pourteau, who were lost at sea with the Bourgogne. Of the new men, three are from Paris—two from the orchestra of the Opera Comique, and one from the Lamoreux. The other five are former members of the New York Symphony orchestra.

Herr Gericke said that the orchestra would have few new works in its repertory this year. There would be only two of importance, both symphonies, one by Buckner and the other by Sinding. Herr Gericke will remain in New York several days before going to Boston.

[17]

Boston Daily Globe.
THURSDAY, SEPT. 22, 1898.

TO LEAD THE SYMPHONY.

Herr Wm. Gericke Arrives in New York.

Announced that He Has Engaged Eight New Musicians.

Few New Works Will Be Included in Repertory This Season.

NEW YORK, Sept 21—Wm. Gericke arrived here from Europe today, being engaged as conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra for the coming year. He left the position several years ago in poor health.

Herr Gericke said that he had engaged eight new musicians for the symphony orchestra. Two of these were necessary to replace Messrs Weiss and Pourteau, who were lost at sea with the Bourgogne. Of the new men, three are from Paris, two from the orchestra of the opera Comique, and one from the Lamoreux. The other five are former members of the New York symphony orchestra.

Herr Gericke said that the orchestra would have few new works in its repertory this year. There would be only two of importance, both symphonies, one by Buckner and the other by Sinding. Herr Gericke will remain in New York for several days before going to Boston.

The sale of seats for the 18th season of Boston symphony concerts will begin in Music hall next Monday morning and continue four days.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.
THURSDAY MORNING, SEPT. 22, 1898.

GERICKE IN NEW YORK.

New York, Sept. 21.—William Gericke arrived here from Europe today, being engaged as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the coming year. He left the position several years ago in poor health.

Herr Gericke said that he had engaged eight new musicians for the symphony orchestra. Two of these were necessary to replace Messrs. Weiss and Pourteau, who were lost at sea with the Bourgogne.

Of the new men, three are from Paris, two from the orchestra of the Opera Comique and one from the Lamoureux. The other five are former members of the New York Symphony Orchestra.

Herr Gericke said that the orchestra would have few new works in its repertory this year. There would be only two of importance, both symphonies, one by Buckner and the other by Sinding. Herr Gericke will remain in New York for several days before going to Boston.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

Sep 22

William Gericke, who is to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra this season, arrived in New York on the Kaiser Friedrich yesterday.

Boston Transcript
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1898

Wilhelm Gericke, the leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived in New York this morning by the steamship Kaiser Friedrich. He is accompanied by his wife, daughter and Frau Flamm, the mother of Mrs. Gericke.

Boston Journal.
THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1898.

EIGHT NEW PLAYERS.

Conductor Gericke Arrives—Says the Symphony Audiences Will Hear Few Novelties.

New York, Sept. 21.—Wm. Gericke arrived here from Europe today, being engaged as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the coming year. He left the position several years ago in poor health.

Herr Gericke said that he had engaged eight new musicians for the Symphony Orchestra. Two of these were necessary to replace Messrs. Weiss and Pourteau, who were lost at sea with the Bourgogne. Of the new men three are from Paris, two from the orchestra of the Opera Comique and one from the Lamoureux. The other five are former members of the New York Symphony Orchestra.

Herr Gericke said that the orchestra would have few new works in its repertory this year. There would be only two of importance, both symphonies, one by Buckner and the other by Sinding. Herr Gericke will remain in New York for several days before going to Boston.

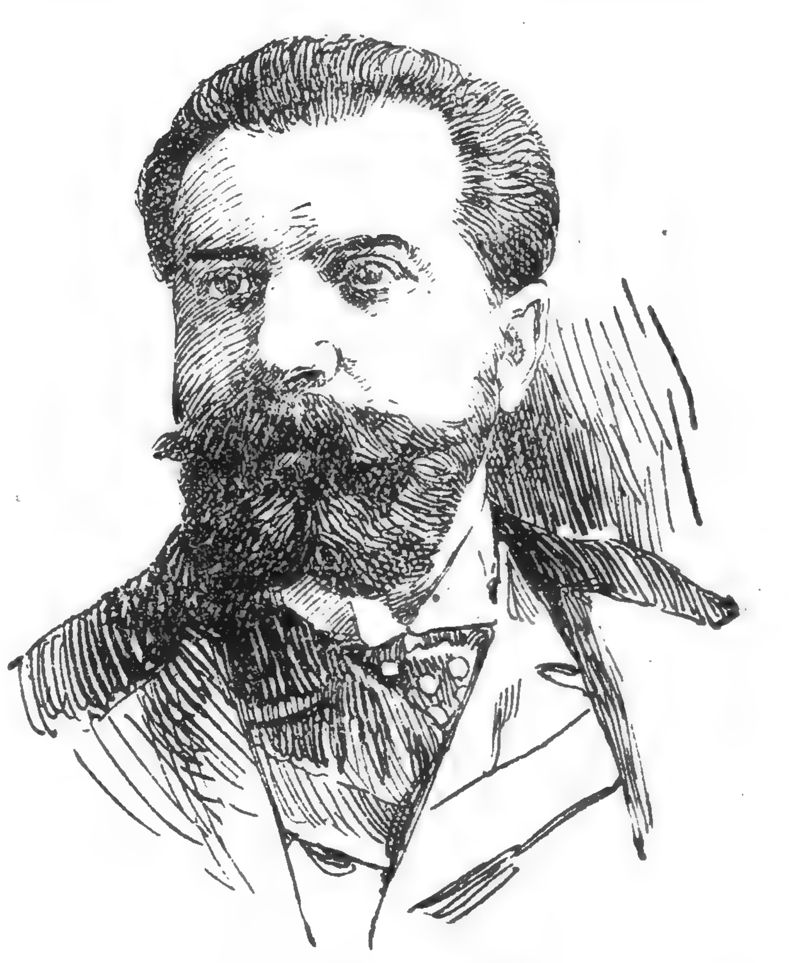
NEW-YORK DAILY TRIBUNE
SEPTEMBER 22, 1898.

HERR GERICKE'S RETURN

FEW NEW COMPOSITIONS FOR THE BOSTON SYMPHONY—MORE CONCERTS IN NEW-YORK.

William Gericke arrived here from Europe yesterday, being engaged as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the coming year. He left the place several years ago, in poor health. After his return to Europe his health rapidly improved, and he has now, he says, been entirely well for some years. Herr Gericke rested for a year after leaving Boston, and then resumed the Gesellschaft Concerts in Vienna, of which he had formerly been the conductor. He continued these for five years, and then spent a year in Dresden.

Herr Gericke said yesterday that he had engaged eight new musicians for the Symphony Orchestra. Two of these were necessary to replace Messrs. Weiss and Pourteau, who were lost at sea with the Bourgogne. Of the new men, three are from Paris, two from the orchestra of the Opéra Comique and one from the Lamoureux. The other five are former members of the New-York Symphony Orchestra.



WILLIAM GERICKE,
who returns to this country to resume his old place as leader of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The orchestra will have few new works in its repertory this year, the conductor says. There will be only two of importance, both symphonies, one by Bruckner and the other by Sinding. Herr Gericke says that he looked over all the new concertos that the publishers were issuing just before he left Europe, and he could find nothing that he thought worth bringing for the orchestra.

He was much gratified, he said, by the new arrangement for giving more concerts in New-York. This year, at each visit of the orchestra to this city, there will be an afternoon concert and a concert in the evening of the following day. The next afternoon there will be a concert in Brooklyn, and the next evening there will be another, making the whole stay of the orchestra in New-York four days. It has never been found possible to make such a satisfactory arrangement as this before. Herr Gericke is also pleased with the change whereby the concerts in Manhattan are to be given this winter in the Carnegie Music Hall, instead of the Metropolitan Opera House. The first New-York concerts will be on the afternoon of November 9 and the evening of November 10 in Manhattan, and on the afternoon of November 11 and the evening of November 12 in Brooklyn.

Herr Gericke will remain in New-York for several days before going to Boston, as he says he wants time to see several of his old friends here.

◆

The Sun.
THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 22, 1898.

BOSTON SYMPHONY'S LEADER HERE.

Wilhelm Gericke Returns from Europe After Nine Years' Absence—His Plans.

Wilhelm Gericke, who returns to this country to take the direction of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived here yesterday on the Kaiser Friederich. It was nine years ago that he went back to Europe after having acted for several years most successfully as the director of this famous orchestra. He was succeeded by Arthur Nikisch, who in turn gave place to Emil Paur, who continued in control until last spring.

"I am quite well again," Mr. Gericke said yesterday to a SUN reporter at the Hotel Belvedere. "I was broken down in health when I returned to Europe and rested for a year before I began again to work. Then I resumed the direction of the Gesellschaft's Concerte of which I had charge before I came here the first time. For five years I directed them, and afterward went for a year to Dresden.

"I am very glad that the change in the plans of the orchestra will make it possible for us to give two concerts here within a short interval instead of one, as we did in the past. That will be much better for the orchestra in every way. This year we shall have eight new players. Three of these come from Paris, two from the orchestra of the Opéra Comique, and three from the Lamoureux orchestra. These three were engaged to take the place of the unfortunate members of the orchestra lost in the Bourgogne disaster. The other five players were engaged in New York. They formerly belonged to Mr. Damrosch's Symphony Orchestra.

"I only know now of two new numbers which I shall give. They are both symphonies, one by Bruckner and the other by Sinding, a Swedish composer. I would have liked to give more, and studied a great number of new works that were sent to me from Leipsic. But I am sorry to say that I found among them very little that was worth giving. Whether I am able to give even these in New York I do not know. It will depend on the Boston programmes. They will certainly be played there. I am very much delighted that the orchestra is to play hereafter in the Carnegie Music Hall instead of the Metropolitan."

Mr. Gericke will remain in New York for several weeks. The first concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be given on Nov. 9 and 10. Miss Adele Aus Der Ohe was also a passenger on the Kaiser Friederich.

Brooklyn Daily Eagle
MONDAY EVENING, SEPTEMBER 19.
(Copyrighted.)
(Trade mark "Eagle" registered.)

The Musical Season.

Now that the prospectus of the Brooklyn Institute is out we can see what a feast of riches the Brooklyn musical public is to have this winter. Most people do not yet realize it, but it is true that no city in America offers such musical advantages as Brooklyn. The musical programme which the Institute alone provides will compare favorably with that of any city but Boston, which has the long series of Saturday night orchestral concerts as the backbone of its great musical activity. But Brooklyn people are not shut up to the music offered on this side of the river, rich as that is. The Boston Symphony Orchestra gives a series of concerts in Manhattan every winter and there are almost certain to be two other orchestras playing more or less regularly in that borough. We have, too, the long season of opera at the Metropolitan, as well as the excellent and cheap series of opera in English by the Castle Square Company at the American Theater, with which to supplement the offerings in Brooklyn.

New Yorkers, as the Manhattanese are fond of calling themselves to the exclusion of the rest of us, boast that their musical season is more active and richer than that of any other American city, that it is far ahead of London in the artistic value of its offerings and the catholicity of its taste, and even that in some respects it is on a par with Berlin. In that estimate they never think of including Brooklyn, which to them is of no more importance than is the visible bulk of the ostrich to that bird, when his head is buried in the sand. Brooklynites have no such feeling. They know that they have an extremely rich and varied musical season at home, but that does not prevent them from crossing the bridge for the best of the offerings over there as a supplement to the home fare. The result is that the Brooklyn music lover is better served, hears more and better music than the Manhattanese or even than the Bostonian.

The center of the season will be, of course, the concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, of which there are to be ten, five in the afternoon and five in the evening. William Gericke, the admirable musician who formerly directed this band, will return and under him it will do thoroughly good work, although there is no reason to suppose that its former excellence will be increased and although there was no public reason why Mr. Paur should have been retired. We have not yet reached the point where a large audience is willing to listen to an orchestra without the presence of a soloist, and the soloists this year have been chosen wisely. The list includes Rosenthal and Carreno, pianists; Kneisel and Burmeister, violinists, and Alwyn Schroeder, 'cellist; all of whom will play works of which the orchestra is an integral part. There will also be singers whom we might hear elsewhere to as good advantage without interrupting the work of the orchestra for them.

The New York Times
"All the News That's Fit to Print."
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
NEW YORK, THURSDAY, SEPT. 22, 1898.

HERR GERICKE ARRIVES.

The Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Comes from Europe—Talks of His Plans.

Wilhelm Gerieke, who has been selected to succeed Emil Paur as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, arrived from Europe yesterday after an absence from this country of nine years.

The first year after his return to Dresden, his home, Herr Gericke said yesterday was to take a thorough rest, necessitated by the severe strain upon him from the many concerts which he had conducted. He then gave a series of concerts in Vienna of the same knd as those he had given in this country.

Herr Gericke has engaged eight new men for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, three of whom will come from the Opera Comique, Paris, and two from Lamoureux. The three others have been secured in this city, and are former members of the New York Symphony Orchestra.

In discussing his plans, Herr Gericke said that of the many new works which he had religiously gone over, he had thus far concluded to give only two, viz.: The symphonies of Sinding and the symphonies of Bruckner. He may not, however, give them in this city, their rendition here depending greatly upon their success in Boston. He was delighted at the idea of giving the concerts this year at the Carnegie Hall, instead of in the Metropolitan Opera House. He thinks the arrangements in the hall are much better, as far as the orchestral work is concerned.

The plan outlined is to give two concerts in this city, repeating them in Brooklyn. The first concert will be given in New York on the evening of Oct. 9, and in Brooklyn on the afternoon of the 10th. Herr Gericke will remain in this city for several weeks, when he will take up his headquarters in Boston.

HOME JOURNAL.
NEW YORK:
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 21, 1898.

William Gericke, the new conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will make his rentrée in New York, November 9 and 10, at Carnegie Music Hall. Rosenthal will be the soloist on each occasion.

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIV., NO. 86.
SATURDAY, SEPT. 24, 1898.

Dear, dear! Mr. Gericke starts off by saying there will be nothing new given this season! Well, yes, two works, perhaps, that do not sound very promising, and when there is so much new music that one longs to hear, this rather dashes one's ardor. Instead of beginning his conductorship on these conservative lines, it was hoped Mr. Gericke would make some inspiriting announcements, seeing that he comes fresh from the centres of musical art. Perhaps he wishes to get the hang of the new-old orchestra he parted from eight years ago before trying to be startling.

WORCESTER MUSIC FESTIVAL.
WORCESTER, MASS., SEPT. 1, 1898.

Lost on La Bourgogne.

M. POURTEAU was first clarionetist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and was an acknowledged master of his instrument. Indeed, so well did he perform upon it that it will be very difficult to replace him. He had been a member of the orchestra since 1894. His wife was drowned with him. He had intended spending several months in Europe, visiting his old home and haunts, and seeing his old friends, when his pleasure excursion was so tragically ended by that fatal collision

M. JACQUET was first flutist in the Orchestra, and he succeeded Mr. Charles Mole as instructor on his instrument at the New England Conservatory of Music. It is said that he had been looking forward to this trip abroad with the keenest delight, and to the friends who saw him off on the day the steamer sailed, he expressed the pleasure of a child in his contemplated holiday.

M. WEISS, second oboe in the Orchestra, was returning to France to visit his family. He is said to have met his death most gallantly. It is sad to reflect on the untimely end of these three talented men. They were all in the prime of life, were full of vigor and ambition, and undoubtedly would have made brilliant careers.

BOSTON
HOME JOURNAL
A PAPER OF TO-DAY
SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1898.

Interest of musical people now centres in the auction sales of the seats for the forthcoming concerts and rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at Music Hall next Monday at 10 A. M., and the $7.50 seats will be sold at the same hour and place Tuesday. The $12 concert seats are to be sold at 10 Thursday, and the $7.50 concert seats at 10 Friday of next week. The concerts and rehearsals will be marked by the usual features. Some new works are to be performed, and there will be the pleasure of welcoming back Mr. Gericke as conductor. The soloists selected are all singers of undoubted prominence—Gadski, Mme. Hale, Carreno, Aus der Ohe, Messrs. Rosenthal, Sauer, Burmester, Sahla, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski, Schroeder and others.

Boston Transcript
SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1898

The Symphony Season

The auction sale of season tickets for the performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held next week at Music Hall. The higher-priced seats for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be sold on Monday; the lower-priced seats for the same series will be sold on Tuesday, and the seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold on Thursday and Friday. The sales will begin each day at 10 A. M.

The season will begin Oct. 14, and promises to be one of the most brilliant ever given by the organization. Mr. Gericke, the newly appointed conductor, needs no words of introduction. His qualities as a conductor became well known during the five years (1884-1889) that he held the position. Mr. Gericke returned to Boston today, and will call the orchestra together for rehearsals at the beginning of October. He spent the summer months in making preparations for the season's concerts, and carefully examined the scores of a large number of new orchestral works. He found little, however, in the way of novelties which he considered worthy of a place on his programmes. The only two important new works to be given are symphonies by Sinding and Bruckner. Other notable performances will be Schumann's "Manfred," with chorus, soloists and reader, and Beethoven's Ninth (Choral) Symphony.

The list of soloists includes Mme. Gadski, Lady Hallé (Norman Neruda), Mme. Carreno, Miss Aus der Ohe, Rosenthal, Sauer, Willy Burmester, Sahla, Ben Davies, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski, Schroeder, and others.

The programmes for the first four concerts are as follows:

FIRST CONCERT—Oct. 15

Weber: Overture, "Euryanthe."
Bach: Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte.
String Orchestra.
Brahms: Variations on a Theme by Haydn (Chorale Sancti Antoni), op. 56.
Beethoven: Symphony No. 5, in C minor, op. 67.

SECOND CONCERT—Oct. 22

Chadwick: Overture, "Melpomene."
Goldmark: Concerto for Violin in A minor, op. 28.
Mr. Franz Kneisel.
Smetana: Symphonic poem, "Vysehrad" (My Country).
Schumann: Symphony No. 2, in C major, op. 61.

THIRD CONCERT—Oct. 29

Goldmark: Overture, "Im Fruhling" (In the Spring), op. 36.
Song.
Mme. Gadski.
Tschaikovsky: Symphony "Pathetique," No. 6, in B minor, op. 74.
Song.
Mme. Gadski.
Beethoven: Menuet and Fugue from the Quartet No. 9, op. 59.
String Orchestra.
Liszt: Hungarian Rhapsody No. 1.

FOURTH CONCERT—Nov. 5

Brahms: Symphony No. 3, in F major, op. 90.
Piano concerto.
Mr. Rosenthal.
Richard Strauss: Tone poem, "Don Juan," op. 20.
Wagner: Prelude and Closing Scene from "Tristan and Isolde."

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.
SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 25, 1898.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Unless all signs fail, the auction sales of season tickets for the two series of twenty-four concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which begin in Music Hall tomorrow morning, will realize as satisfactory prices as were ever received. And yet one can always secure acceptable seats in various parts of the hall at prices which average most fairly by comparison with those of other amusement enterprises, and on Friday afternoons nearly 1000 patrons secure admission to the hall, with a seat for the early comers, at the low price of 25 cents. And every one of these seats could readily be sold for the season at prices double and treble the total received under the above plan.

In the eighteen years since the founding of the orchestra a new generation of music lovers has come to the front, while countless patrons remain who have never missed a concert. And in other cities visited each month, the orchestra is welcomed as the standard of musical performance by which all other organizations must be judged.

Mr. Gericke returns after an absence of nine years to find over half the orchestra he left in 1889 awaiting his coming, while a much larger percentage of his audiences in the past will offer him a hearty welcome. Until thoroughly familiar with his new charge, Mr. Gericke cannot reasonably be expected to present many novelties, and even then he must depend on the old standard works, to which repertoire only now and then is added a modern composition worthy a place.

Three of these are found in the programmes of the first four concerts, which follow:

FIRST CONCERT, OCT. 15.

Overture, "Euryanthe," Weber; prelude, Adagio and Gavotte (string orchestra), Bach; variations on a theme by Haydn (Chorale Sancti Anton), op. 56, Brahms; Symphony No. 5, in C minor, op. 67, Beethoven.

SECOND CONCERT, OCT. 22.

Overture, "Melpomene," Chadwick; concerto for violin in A minor, op. 28 (Mr. Franz Kneisel), Goldmark; symphonic poem, "Vysehrad" (My Country), Smetana; Symphony No. 2, in C major, op. 61, Schumann.

THIRD CONCERT, OCT. 29.

Overture, "Im Fruhling" (In the Spring), op. 36, Goldmark; song, Mme. Gadski; Symphony No. 6, "Pathetique," in B minor, op. 74, Tschaikowsky; song, Mme. Gadsi; Menuet and Fugue from Quartet No. 9, op. 59 (for string orchestra), Beethoven; Hungarian Rhapsody No. 1, Liszt.

FOURTH CONCERT, NOV. 5.

Symphony No. 3, in F major, op. 20, Brahms; piano concerto, Mr. Rosenthal; tone poem, "Don Juan," op. 20, Richard Strauss; prelude and closing scene from "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner.

SUNDAY HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CIV, NO. 87.
SUNDAY, SEPT. 25, 1898.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

Programmes of the First Four Symphony Concerts.

THE auction sales of season tickets for the performances of the Boston Symphony orchestra will be held this week at Music Hall. The $12 seats for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be sold tomorrow, the $7.50 seats for the same series will be sold on Tuesday, and the $12 and $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold on Thursday and Friday, respectively. The sales are to begin each day at 10 A. M. The new season will begin Oct. 14, and will offer all the attractive features that have given these concerts their immense popularity. Among the celebrated solo artists already engaged, who are to be heard are Mme. Gadski, Lady Halle (Norman Neruda), Mme. Carreno, Miss Aus Der Ohe, Messrs. Rosenthal, Sauer, Willy Burmester, Sahla, Ben Davies, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski and Schroeder. Mr. Gericke arrived in the city yesterday, and will begin rehearsing Oct. 1. From the large number of new orchestral works submitted to him for examination he selected but two that he considered worthy to be placed on his programmes. These are symphonies by Sinding and Bruckner. Other notable productions will be Schumann's "Manfred" for chorus, soloists and reader, and Beethoven's Choral symphony. The following are the programmes for the first four concerts:

FIRST CONCERT, Oct. 15.

Overture, "Euryanthe" .... Weber
Prelude, adagio and gavotte (string orchestra) .... Bach
Variations on a theme by Haydn (Chorale Sancti Antoni), op. 56 .... Brahms
Symphony No. 5 in C minor, op. 67 .. Beethoven

SECOND CONCERT, Oct. 22.

Overture, "Melpomene" .... Chadwick
Concerto for violin in A minor, op. 28, Goldmark
Mr. Franz Kneisel.
Symphonic Poem, "Vysehrad," (My Country) .... Smetana
Symphony No. 2, in C major, op. 61 .. Schumann

THIRD CONCERT, Oct. 29.

Overture, "Im Fruhling" (In the Spring), op. 36, song .... Goldmark
Symphony, "Pathetique," No. 6, in B minor, op. 74, song .... Tschaikowsky
Menuet and Fugue from the quartet No. 9, op. 59 (for string orchestra) .. Beethoven
Hungarian Rhapsody No. 1 .... Liszt

FOURTH CONCERT, Nov. 5.

Symphony No. 3, in F major, op. 90, piano concerto .... Brahms
Mr. Rosenthal.
Tone Poem, "Don Juan," op. 20 .... Richard Strauss
Prelude and closing scene from "Tristan and Isolde" .... Wagner

CONDUCTOR GERICKE'S RETURN.

Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, the new conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, after an absence of nine years, arrived in New York on the steamer Kaiser Friedrich last Wednesday morning. Accompanying him were Mrs. Gericke, their daughter Katie, Mrs. Gericke's mother, Frau Flamm, and two servants. Mr. Gericke was met at the dock by Mr. F. R. Comee, assistant manager of the orchestra, and several friends, who accompanied him to his hotel in New York, where he remained until Saturday morning. With his party he left New York yesterday forenoon, and arrived at the Park Square station at 3 P. M. A large party, including Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mr. George Proctor, Mr. Kneisel, Mr. Svecenski, Mr. Comee and several newspaper representatives, were waiting to receive Mr. Gericke, who met with quite an ovation. Carriages were taken to the Hotel Brunswick, where temporary quarters had been secured preparatory to taking possession of the residence on Upland road, Brookline, formerly occupied by Mrs. John Chapman.

Mr. Gericke, who was in excellent health and spirits, was seen by The Herald representative soon after his arrival at the hotel. Of course, after his five years' stay in Boston, from 1884 to 1889, customary questions as to his impressions of America were superfluous. In speaking of his return, Mr. Gericke said:

"The public, the gentlemen of the press, and especially Mr. Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, were all so very kind and fair to me that, it goes without saying, I am very happy to be again among my friends."

When asked as to his programme for the coming season, Mr. Gericke said: "At present I have only given out the programmes of the first four concerts in Boston."

"Is it your intention to produce many novelties?"

"I must first become thoroughly acquainted with the orchestra. Although I understand that more than one-half the members of the orchestra under my direction in 1889 still remain, there are some players new, not only to me, but to the orchestra. At present, I have in mind as novelties, symphonies by Sinding, Bruckner and Gilson, and several shorter selections."

When told that many patrons of the orchestra who recalled his excellent work with chorus in the past were looking forward with pleasurable anticipation to some works of a similar nature during the coming season, Mr. Gericke said: "It is my intention to give the music to Schumann's 'Manfred,' with chorus, singers and reader; the Faust symphony by Lizst with chorus, and also the Ninth symphony of Beethoven complete, with chorus and quartet of soloists."

Mr. Gericke expressed himself as much pleased with the double series of concerts to be given in New York, recalling with pride that the first performance ever given by the orchestra in New York was under his direction, at Steinway Hall, Feb. 14, 1887.

After leaving Boston Mr. Gericke rested a year, and then resumed his old position as conductor of the Gesellschaft Society in Vienna, which he retained during the next five years. He then spent a year in Dresden.

Boston [illegible]
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1898.

SYMPHONY TICKET SALE.

The auction sales of season tickets for the coming season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin Monday morning at Music Hall, and, as far as one can judge from usual indications, good prices will prevail.

Mr. Wilhelm Gericke arrived in Boston yesterday, and will resume at the first concert, on Oct. 14, the position he left nine years ago. By actual count, 48 members of the orchestra playing under him in 1889 will welcome his return, a marked tribute to the integrity of the organization.

The programs for the first four concerts are as follows:

FIRST CONCERT, OCT. 15.

Weber—Overture, "Euryanthe."
Bach—Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte (String Orchestra).
Brahms—Variations on a Theme by Haydn (Chorale "Sancti Antoni"), op. 56.
Beethoven—Symphony No. 5, in C minor, op. 67.

SECOND CONCERT, OCT. 22.

Chadwick—Overture, "Melpomene."
Goldmark—Concerto for violin in A minor, op. 28 (Mr. Franz Kneisel).
Smetana—Symphonic Poem, "Vysehrad" (My country).
Schumann—Symphony No. 2, in C major, op. 61.

THIRD CONCERT, OCT. 29.

Goldmark—Overture, "Im Fruehling" (In the Spring), op. 36. Song. (Mme. Gadski.)
Tschaikowsky—Symphony No. 6, "Pathetique," in B minor, op. 74. Song. (Mme. Gadski.)
Beethoven—Menuet and Fugue from Quartet No. 9, op. 59 (for String Orchestra).
Liszt—Hungarian Rhapsody No. 1.

FOURTH CONCERT, NOV. 5.

Brahms—Symphony No. 3, in F major, op. 90. Piano concerto (Mr. Rosenthal).
Richard Strauss—Tone Poem, "Don Juan," op. 20.
Wagner—Prelude and closing scene from "Tristan and Isolde."

NOTES

The programs of the first four concerts of the Symphony Orchestra may be found on this page. It surely will be interesting to become acquainted with Mr. Gericke's reading of Tschaikowsky's Pathetic Symphony, for in Europe there is much discussion over the various readings by Lamoureux, Mottl and Richter. Worshipers of Brahms will be pleased to see that their idol will be properly displayed.

⁂

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, SEPT 25, 1898.

Symphony Orchestra Concerts.

The auction sale of season tickets for the two series of 24 concerts by the Boston symphony orchestra will begin at Music hall tomorrow morning. The all-absorbing question as to what one must pay for their seats this season as compared with previous years can, of course, never be satisfactorily answered until the day of the sale, but there is comfort in the knowledge that desirable locations can always be secured at prices comparing most favorably with those of other amusement enterprises. A few years ago a newspaper man made a careful estimate showing that the seats throughout the hall averaged less than $1 a concert, and the same is true today.

Conductor Wilhelm Gericke, after an absence of nine years, returned to Boston yesterday, and will resume his former position at the first concert, Oct 14. It is a compliment to the permanency of the orchestra that over 60 percent of its personnel in 1889 still remain, and probably a greater percentage of the audiences of 1889 will welcome Mr Gericke's return, while a new generation will watch with pleasurable anticipation the fulfilment of his past reputation.

In the make-up of his programs one can hardly expect Mr Gericke to introduce novelties until he is again in thorough touch with his orchestra. So the programs of the first four concerts, which follow, comprise old, yet standard works, with more modern composers like Tschaikowsky and the eccentric Richard Strauss also in evidence. An American composer is recognized in the second concert, which promises well for Mr Gericke's catholicity.

The programs are:

FIRST CONCERT, OCT 15.

Overture, Euryanthe .... Weber
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte .... Bach
String orchestra.
Variations on a theme by Haydn (Chorale Sancti Antoni), op 56 .... Brahms
Symphony No. 5, in C minor, op 67 .. Beethoven

SECOND CONCERT, OCT 22.

Overture, Melpomene .... Chadwick
Concerto for violin in A minor, op 28. Goldmark
Mr Franz Kneisel.
Symphonic poem, Vysehrad (My Country) Smetana
Symphony No. 2, in C major, op 61 .. Schumann

THIRD CONCERT, OCT 29.

Overture, Im Fruhling (In the Spring), op 36, Goldmark
Song, Mme Gadski.
Symphony No. 6, Pathetique, in B minor, op 74 .... Tschaikowsky
Song, Mme Gadski.
Menuet and Fugue from quartet No. 9, op 59, (for string orchestra) .... Beethoven
Hungarian rhapsody No. 1 .... Liszt

FOURTH CONCERT, NOV 5.

Symphony No. 3, in F major, op 90, piano concerto .... Brahms
Mr Rosenthal.
Tone poem, Don Juan, op 20 .. Richard Strauss
Prelude and closing scene from Tristan and Isolde .... Wagner

WORCESTER MUSIC FESTIVAL.
WORCESTER, MASS., SEPT. 1, 1898.

Lost on La Bourgogne.

M. POURTEAU was first clarionetist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and was an acknowledged master of his instrument. Indeed, so well did he perform upon it that it will be very difficult to replace him. He had been a member of the orchestra since 1894. His wife was drowned with him. He had intended spending several months in Europe, visiting his old home and haunts, and seeing his old friends, when his pleasure excursion was so tragically ended by that fatal collision

M. JACQUET was first flutist in the Orchestra, and he succeeded Mr. Charles Mole as instructor on his instrument at the New England Conservatory of Music. It is said that he had been looking forward to this trip abroad with the keenest delight, and to the friends who saw him off on the day the steamer sailed, he expressed the pleasure of a child in his contemplated holiday.

M. WEISS, second oboe in the Orchestra, was returning to France to visit his family. He is said to have met his death most gallantly. It is sad to reflect on the untimely end of these three talented men. They were all in the prime of life, were full of vigor and ambition, and undoubtedly would have made brilliant careers.

THE BOSTON COMMERCIAL.
SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1898.

The Symphony Concerts.

The sale of seats for the eighteenth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts and rehearsals will occur as follows: The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction, at Music Hall, on Monday next at 10 A. M.; the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at auction on Tuesday next at 10 A. M. On Thursday the $12 seats for the concerts will be sold at auction at 10 A. M.; the $7 50 seats will be sold in a like manner on Friday at 10 A. M. Bids will be accepted for seats in their regular order only, and not for the choice; and no more than four seats will be sold on one bid.

BOSTON HOME JOURNAL
A PAPER OF TO-DAY
SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1898.

Interest of musical people now centres in the auction sales of the seats for the forthcoming concerts and rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The $12 seats for the rehearsals will be sold at Music Hall next Monday at 10 A. M., and the $7.50 seats will be sold at the same hour and place Tuesday. The $12 concert seats are to be sold at 10 Thursday, and the $7.50 concert seats at 10 Friday of next week. The concerts and rehearsals will be marked by the usual features. Some new works are to be performed, and there will be the pleasure of welcoming back Mr. Gericke as conductor. The soloists selected are all singers of undoubted prominence Gadski. Mme. Hale, Carreno, Aus der Ohe, Messrs. Rosenthal, Sauer. Burmester, Sahla. Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski, Schroeder and others.

Boston Transcript
SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 24, 1898

The Symphony Season

The auction sale of season tickets for the performances of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will be held next week at Music Hall. The higher-priced seats for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be sold on Monday; the lower-priced seats for the same series will be sold on Tuesday, and the seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold on Thursday and Friday. The sales will begin each day at 10 A. M.

The season will begin Oct. 14, and promises to be one of the most brilliant ever given by the organization. Mr. Gericke, the newly appointed conductor, needs no words of introduction. His qualities as a conductor became well known during the five years (1884-1889) that he held the position. Mr. Gericke returned to Boston today, and will call the orchestra together for rehearsals at the beginning of October. He spent the summer months in making preparations for the season's concerts, and carefully examined the scores of a large number of new orchestral works. He found little, however, in the way of novelties which he considered worthy of a place on his programmes. The only two important new works to be given are symphonies by Sinding and Bruckner. Other notable performances will be Schumann's "Manfred," with chorus, soloists and reader, and Beethoven's Ninth (Choral) Symphony.

The list of soloists includes Mme. Gadski, Lady Hallé (Norman Neruda), Mme. Carreno, Miss Aus der Ohe, Rosenthal, Sauer, Willy Burmester, Sahla, Ben Davies, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski, Schroeder, and others.

The programmes for the first four concerts are as follows:

FIRST CONCERT—Oct. 15

Weber: Overture, "Euryanthe."
Bach: Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte.
String Orchestra.
Brahms: Variations on a Theme by Haydn (Chorale Sancti Antoni), op. 56.
Beethoven: Symphony No. 5, in C minor, op. 67.

SECOND CONCERT—Oct. 22

Chadwick: Overture, "Melpomene."
Goldmark: Concerto for Violin in A minor, op. 28.
Mr. Franz Kneisel.
Smetana: Symphonic poem, "Vysehrad" (My Country).
Schumann: Symphony No. 2, in C major, op. 61.

THIRD CONCERT—Oct. 29

Goldmark: Overture, "Im Fruhling" (In the Spring), op. 36.
Song.
Mme. Gadski.
Tchaikovsky: Symphony "Pathetique," No. 6, in B minor, op. 74.
Song.
Mme. Gadski.
Beethoven: Menuet and Fugue from the Quartet No. 9, op. 59.
String Orchestra.
Liszt: Hungarian Rhapsody No. 1.

FOURTH CONCERT—Nov. 5

Brahms: Symphony No. 3, in F major, op. 90.
Piano concerto.
Mr. Rosenthal.
Richard Strauss: Tone poem, "Don Juan," op. 20.
Wagner: Prelude and Closing Scene from "Tristan and Isolde."

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.
SUNDAY MORNING, SEPT. 25, 1898.
(Copyright [illegible])

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Unless all signs fail, the auction sales of season tickets for the two series of twenty-four concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which begin in Music Hall tomorrow morning, will realize as satisfactory prices as were ever received. And yet one can always secure acceptable seats in various parts of the hall at prices which average most fairly by comparison with those of other amusement enterprises, and on Friday afternoons nearly 1000 patrons secure admission to the hall, with a seat for the early comers, at the low price of 25 cents. And every one of these seats could readily be sold for the season at prices double and treble the total received under the above plan.

In the eighteen years since the founding of the orchestra a new generation of music lovers has come to the front, while countless patrons remain who have never missed a concert. And in other cities visited each month, the orchestra is welcomed as the standard of musical performance by which all other organizations must be judged.

Mr. Gericke returns after an absence of nine years to find over half the orchestra he left in 1889 awaiting his coming, while a much larger percentage of his audiences in the past will offer him a hearty welcome. Until thoroughly familiar with his new charge, Mr. Gericke cannot reasonably be expected to present many novelties, and even then he must depend on the old standard works, to which repertoire only now and then is added a modern composition worthy a place.

Three of these are found in the programmes of the first four concerts, which follow:

FIRST CONCERT, OCT. 15.

Overture, "Euryanthe," Weber; prelude, Adagio and Gavotte (string orchestra), Bach; variations on a theme by Haydn (Chorale Sancti Anton), op. 56, Brahms; Symphony No. 5, in C minor, op. 67, Beethoven.

SECOND CONCERT, OCT. 22.

Overture, "Melpomene," Chadwick; concerto for violin in A minor, op. 28 (Mr. Franz Kneisel), Goldmark; symphonic poem, "Vysehrad" (My Country), Smetana; Symphony No. 2, in C major, op. 61, Schumann.

THIRD CONCERT, OCT. 29.

Overture, "Im Fruhling" (In the Spring), op. 36, Goldmark; song, Mme. Gadski; Symphony No. 6, "Pathetique," in B minor, op. 74, Tschaikowsky; song, Mme. Gadsi; Menuet and Fugue from Quartet No. 9, op. 59 (for string orchestra), Beethoven; Hungarian Rhapsody No. 1, Liszt.

FOURTH CONCERT, NOV. 5.

Symphony No. 3, in F major, op. 20, Brahms; piano concerto, Mr. Rosenthal; tone poem, "Don Juan," op. 20, Richard Strauss; prelude and closing scene from "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner.

SUNDAY HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CIV., NO. 87.
SUNDAY, SEPT. 25, 1898.

IN THE WORLD OF MUSIC.

Programmes of the First Four Symphony Concerts.

THE auction sales of season tickets for the performances of the Boston Symphony orchestra will be held this week at Music Hall. The $12 seats for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals will be sold tomorrow, the $7.50 seats for the same series will be sold on Tuesday, and the $12 and $7.50 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be sold on Thursday and Friday, respectively. The sales are to begin each day at 10 A. M. The new season will begin Oct. 14, and will offer all the attractive features that have given these concerts their immense popularity. Among the celebrated solo artists already engaged, who are to be heard are Mme. Gadski, Lady Halle (Norman Neruda), Mme. Carreno, Miss Aus Der Ohe, Messrs. Rosenthal, Sauer, Willy Burmester, Sahla, Ben Davies, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski and Schroeder. Mr. Gericke arrived in the city yesterday, and will begin rehearsing Oct. 1. From the large number of new orchestral works submitted to him for examination he selected but two that he considered worthy to be placed on his programmes. These are symphonies by Sinding and Bruckner. Other notable productions will be Schumann's "Manfred" for chorus, soloists and reader, and Beethoven's Choral symphony. The following are the programmes for the first four concerts:

FIRST CONCERT, Oct. 15.

Overture, "Euryanthe"..................Weber
Prelude, adagio and gavotte (string orchestra)..............................Bach
Variations on a theme by Haydn (Chorale Sancti Antoni), op. 56............Brahms
Symphony No. 5 in C minor, op. 67..Beethoven

SECOND CONCERT, Oct. 22.

Overture, "Melpomene"..............Chadwick
Concerto for violin in A minor, op. 28, Goldmark
Mr. Franz Kneisel.
Symphonic Poem, "Vysehrad," (My Country)..............................Smetana
Symphony No. 2, in C major, op. 61..Schumann

THIRD CONCERT, Oct. 29.

Overture, "Im Fruhling" (In the Spring), op. 36, song...................Goldmark
Symphony, "Pathetique," No. 6, in B minor, op. 74, song........Tschaikowsky
Menuet and Fugue from the quartet No. 9, op. 59 (for string orchestra)..Beethoven
Hungarian Rhapsody No. 1..............Liszt

FOURTH CONCERT, Nov. 5.

Symphony No. 3, in F major, op. 90, piano concerto....................Brahms
Mr. Rosenthal.
Tone Poem, "Don Juan," op. 20........ Richard Strauss
Prelude and closing scene from "Tristan and Isolde"......................Wagner

CONDUCTOR GERICKE'S RETURN.

Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, the new conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, after an absence of nine years, arrived in New York on the steamer Kaiser Friedrich last Wednesday morning. Accompanying him were Mrs. Gericke, their daughter Katie, Mrs. Gericke's mother, Frau Flamm, and two servants. Mr. Gericke was met at the dock by Mr. F. R. Comee, assistant manager of the orchestra, and several friends, who accompanied him to his hotel in New York, where he remained until Saturday morning. With his party he left New York yesterday forenoon, and arrived at the Park Square station at 3 P. M. A large party, including Mrs. John L. Gardner, Mr. George Proctor, Mr. Kneisel, Mr. Svecenski, Mr. Comee and several newspaper representatives, were waiting to receive Mr. Gericke, who met with quite an ovation. Carriages were taken to the Hotel Brunswick, where temporary quarters had been secured preparatory to taking possession of the residence on Upland road, Brookline, formerly occupied by Mrs. John Chapman.

Mr. Gericke, who was in excellent health and spirits, was seen by The Herald representative soon after his arrival at the hotel. Of course, after his five years' stay in Boston, from 1884 to 1889, customary questions as to his impressions of America were superfluous. In speaking of his return, Mr. Gericke said:

"The public, the gentlemen of the press, and especially Mr. Higginson, the patron of the orchestra, were all so very kind and fair to me that, it goes without saying, I am very happy to be again among my friends."

When asked as to his programme for the coming season, Mr. Gericke said: "At present I have only given out the programmes of the first four concerts in Boston."

"Is it your intention to produce many novelties?"

"I must first become thoroughly acquainted with the orchestra. Although I understand that more than one-half the members of the orchestra under my direction in 1889 still remain, there are some players new, not only to me, but to the orchestra. At present, I have in mind as novelties, symphonies by Sinding, Bruckner and Gilson, and several shorter selections."

When told that many patrons of the orchestra who recalled his excellent work with chorus in the past were looking forward with pleasurable anticipation to some works of a similar nature during the coming season, Mr. Gericke said: "It is my intention to give the music to Schumann's 'Manfred,' with chorus, singers and reader; the Faust symphony by Lizst with chorus, and also the Ninth symphony of Beethoven complete, with chorus and quartet of soloists."

Mr. Gericke expressed himself as much pleased with the double series of concerts to be given in New York, recalling with pride that the first performance ever given by the orchestra in New York was under his direction, at Steinway Hall, Feb. 14, 1887.

After leaving Boston Mr. Gericke rested a year, and then resumed his old position as conductor of the Gesellschaft Society in Vienna, which he retained during the next five years. He then spent a year in Dresden.

Boston Journal.
SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1898.

SYMPHONY TICKET SALE.

The auction sales of season tickets for the coming season by the Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin Monday morning at Music Hall, and, as far as one can judge from usual indications, good prices will prevail.

Mr. Wilhelm Gericke arrived in Boston yesterday, and will resume at the first concert, on Oct. 14, the position he left nine years ago. By actual count, 48 members of the orchestra playing under him in 1889 will welcome his return, a marked tribute to the integrity of the organization.

The programs for the first four concerts are as follows:

FIRST CONCERT, OCT. 15.

Weber—Overture, "Euryanthe."
Bach—Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte (String Orchestra).
Brahms—Variations on a Theme by Haydn (Chorale "Sancti Antoni"), op. 56.
Beethoven—Symphony No. 5, in C minor, op. 67.

SECOND CONCERT, OCT. 22.

Chadwick—Overture, "Melpomene."
Goldmark—Concerto for violin in A minor, op. 28 (Mr. Franz Kneisel).
Smetana—Symphonic Poem, "Vysehrad" (My country).
Schumann—Symphony No. 2, in C major, op. 61.

THIRD CONCERT, OCT. 29.

Goldmark—Overture, "Im Fruehling" (In the Spring), op. 36. Song. (Mme. Gadski.)
Tschaikowsky—Symphony No. 6, "Pathetique," in B minor, op. 74. Song. (Mme. Gadski.)
Beethoven—Menuet and Fugue from Quartet No. 9, op. 59 (for String Orchestra).
Liszt—Hungarian Rhapsody No. 1.

FOURTH CONCERT, NOV. 5.

Brahms—Symphony No. 3, in F major, op. 90. Piano concerto (Mr. Rosenthal).
Richard Strauss—Tone Poem, "Don Juan," op. 20.
Wagner—Prelude and closing scene from "Tristan and Isolde."

NOTES.

The programs of the first four concerts of the Symphony Orchestra may be found on this page. It surely will be interesting to become acquainted with Mr. Gericke's reading of Tschaikowsky's Pathetic Symphony, for in Europe there is much discussion over the various readings by Lamoureux, Mottl and Richter. Worshipers of Brahms will be pleased to see that their idol will be properly displayed.

⁂

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, SEPT 25, 1898.

Symphony Orchestra Concerts.

The auction sale of season tickets for the two series of 24 concerts by the Boston symphony orchestra will begin at Music hall tomorrow morning. The all-absorbing question as to what one must pay for their seats this season as compared with previous years can, of course, never be satisfactorily answered until the day of the sale, but there is comfort in the knowledge that desirable locations can always be secured at prices comparing most favorably with those of other amusement enterprises. A few years ago a newspaper man made a careful estimate showing that the seats throughout the hall averaged less than $1 a concert, and the same is true today.

Conductor Wilhelm Gericke, after an absence of nine years, returned to Boston yesterday, and will resume his former position at the first concert, Oct 14. It is a compliment to the permanency of the orchestra that over 60 percent of its personnel in 1889 still remain, and probably a greater percentage of the audiences of 1889 will welcome Mr Gericke's return, while a new generation will watch with pleasurable anticipation the fulfilment of his past reputation.

In the make-up of his programs one can hardly expect Mr Gericke to introduce novelties until he is again in thorough touch with his orchestra. So the programs of the first four concerts, which follow, comprise old, yet standard works, with more modern composers like Tschaikowsky and the eccentric Richard Strauss also in evidence. An American composer is recognized in the second concert, which promises well for Mr Gericke's catholicity.

The programs are:

FIRST CONCERT, OCT 15.

Overture, Euryanthe ....Weber
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte.............Bach
String orchestra.
Variations on a theme by Haydn (Chorale Sancti Antoni), op 56..............Brahms
Symphony No. 5, in C minor, op 67..Beethoven

SECOND CONCERT, OCT 22.

Overture, Melpomene ....Chadwick
Concerto for violin in A minor, op 28. Goldmark
Mr Franz Kneisel.
Symphonic poem, Vysehrad (My Country) Smetana
Symphony No. 2, in C major, op 61 ..Schumann

THIRD CONCERT, OCT 29.

Overture, Im Fruhling (In the Spring), op 36, Goldmark
Song, Mme Gadski.
Symphony No. 6, Pathetique, in B minor, op 74 ....Tschaikowsky
Song, Mme Gadski.
Menuet and Fugue from quartet No. 9, op 59, (for string orchestra) ....Beethoven
Hungarian rhapsody No. 1 ....Liszt

FOURTH CONCERT, NOV 5.

Symphony No. 3, in F major, op 90, piano concerto ....Brahms
Mr Rosenthal.
Tone poem, Don Juan, op 20 ..Richard Strauss
Prelude and closing scene from Tristan and Isolde ....Wagner

The New-York Tribune.
ILLUSTRATED SUPPLEMENT.

SUNDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1898.

TWO OPERATIC MANAGERS.

MR. GRAU AND MR. ELLIS, WHO WILL PURVEY A LARGE PART OF THIS SEASON'S ENTERTAINMENT.

One would have to search long among the patronizers of musical entertainments of one kind or another to find a person to whom the name of Grau is strange. To two generations, at least, it has been as familiar as a household word, though there may have been many who were unable to identify clearly which particular Grau it was who was concerned in this or the other enterprize that was contributing to their entertainment or edification. As to the present head of operatic affairs in New-York and London he has been so long identified with metropolitan affairs that to introduce him would be closely akin to an affront to the readers of a metropolitan journal. All that needs to be offered is an opportunity to look upon his latest counterfeit presentment; and that is done on this page.

It is a little different, however, with his amiable rival, or rather colleague, Charles A. Ellis, notwithstanding that when he entered the field of operatic management in connection with Mr. Walter Damrosch last season Mr. Ellis had been for seventeen years manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a position which he has held from the founding of that most admirable institution by Mr. Higginson in 1881. The fact that after eighteen years of managerial life Mr. Ellis is only a name to the people for whom he has catered is characteristic of the man.

Mr. Ellis was born and educated in Boston, and was only twenty-six years of age when called upon to assume the important position in relation to the Symphony Orchestra which he has held ever since. In addition to the Boston work and the seven Western trips of the orchestra, Mr. Ellis conducted a successful concert tour with Mme. Nordica as the "star" in 1893, and another with Mme. Melba in 1895. This season Mr. Ellis will have the sole management of his operatic enterprise, and the company will appear in Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, St. Louis, Denver and San Francisco. New-York is omitted in the plans, but Mme. Melba, the principal attraction of the company, will sing for a space with Mr. Grau's organization.

Mr. Ellis is a man of excellent judgment, stout in the courage of his convictions and in self-control. He knows how to make friends and to keep them as well as his promises, and there is a happy augury for him and the public in the circumstance that he has never been associated with a failure.

◆

The prospectus of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences for the season 1898-'99 provides eloquent proof that our sister borough is not going to suffer from a want of musical entertainments while Manhattan is enjoying the good things outlined in The Tribune of last Sunday. The plans laid down by the Institute's department of music, of which Walter S. Carter is president and John Hyatt Brewer secretary, comprise many more things than can be described here, and they are not yet complete. However, this much may be said: There will be five popular matinees by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the afternoons of November 11, December 16, January 20, February 24 and March 24; also five evening concerts by the same organization, on November 12, December 17, January 21, February 25 and March 25. The solo artists who have thus far been engaged to co-operate with the orchestra in these concerts are Ben Davies, Moritz Rosenthal, Teresa Carreño, Franz Kneisel, Willy Burmester and Alwin Schroeder. Mr. Rosenthal will play at the first afternoon and evening concerts. A series of five song and violin recitals will be given on Wednesday evenings, in Association Hall, as follows: October 19, Ffrangcon-Davies, barytone, and Mrs. Corinne Moore Lawson, soprano; November 2, Emma Juch, soprano, and Ovide Musin, violin; November 23, Evan Williams, tenor; Charlotte Maconda, soprano, and Maud Morgan, harp; December 21, David Bispham, barytone, and Miss Bertha Bucklin, violin, and January 4, Giuseppe Campanari, barytone, and Cecile Lorraine, soprano. There will be five concerts of chamber music evenings in Association Hall, as follows: October 26, by the Kneisel Quartet, of Boston; November 16, by the Kaltenborn Quartet, of New-York; December 7, by the Spiering Quartet, of Chicago; December 29, by the Adamowski Quartet, of Boston, and January 11, by the Richard Arnold Sextet, of New-York. Five pianoforte and song recitals will take place on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, in Association Hall, as follows: January 25, Alexander Siloti and Mrs. Katherine Fisk; February 8, Miss Aus der Ohe and Dudley Buck, jr.; March 2, Max Heinrich and Mrs. Hadden-Alexander; March 16, E. A. MacDowell and Miss Gertrude May Stein, and March 30, Edward Baxter Perry. On March 9 the Apollo Sixteen, of New-York, will give a concert, with the help of Dora Valesca Becker, and there will be other miscellaneous choral concerts, as follows: On April 5, by the Cæcilia Ladies' Vocal Society, of Brooklyn; on April 19, by the Brooklyn Swedish Glee Club; on May 3, by the Prospect Heights Choral Club, and on May 17, by the Brooklyn Sängerbund. Organ recitals will be given by Wilhelm Middelschulte, Harrison M. Wild, of Chicago; Everett E. Truette, of Boston; Gaston M. Dethier, of New-York, and William Kaffenberger, of Buffalo. The Brooklyn Oratorio Club, Walter Henry Hall, conductor, will perform Verdi's "Requiem" on February 1 and Professor Parker's "St. Christopher" on April 13. Moritz Rosenthal will give a pianoforte recital on December 5. Lectures are announced as follows: On September 30, at 4 p. m., Mrs. Jeannette Robinson Murphy, on "Negro Slave Songs and Plantation Folklore"; on October 8, at 4 p. m., H. E. Krehbiel, on "Folk Song in America" (the illustrations by Mrs. Krehbiel and Miss Lotta Mills); by Dr. Henry G. Hanchett, eight analytical pianoforte recitals; by William L. Tomlins, of Chicago, two lectures on the singing voice, and by Carl Figué, ten lessons on musical form.

There can be no doubt that the return of Mr. Gericke to be the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has produced almost as much gladness in New-York as in Boston. Mr. Gericke was the conductor who first carried the Boston orchestra's standard of performance so high as to command attention all over the country. On the evening of October 20, 1884, Henry L. Higginson, the founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was in Vienna and attended a performance at the Grand Opera House. The opera was "Aida," and the conductor Wilhelm Gericke, assistant orchestra chief in the Grand Opera of His Imperial Majesty, Francis Joseph. The next day there was an interview, and on the 22d it was arranged that Mr. Gericke should go to Boston as the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Gericke began his musical career when in his fifteenth year, and his progress at the conservatory while a pupil of Herr Dessoff—afterward manager of the Opera House at Frankfort—was so complete that immediately on graduating he entered the Imperial Opera as one of the three leaders of the orchestra. During his first stay in Boston Mr. Gericke proved himself an eclectic, selecting the best music wherever it could be found, and giving a proper recognition to all worthy composers, regardless of nationality. It is also worthy of note that, whether that of Beethoven or Brahms, Mozart or Schumann, he always gave to each work the interpretation its composer meant it to have, never intruding sensational effects of his own in the mistaken effort to improve upon a master. There were two memorable performances in Boston under Mr. Gericke's direction, outside of the regular series of concerts. One was the performance on April 10 and 11, 1888, of Mozart's "Requiem," when a very handsome sum was realized in aid of the fund to erect a monument to Mozart in Vienna. The solo singers were Lilli Lehmann, Louise Meisslinger, Paul Kalisch and Emil Fischer. The second was Mr. Gericke's farewell concert on May 23, 1889, when the Introduction and Good Friday's Spell from Wagner's "Parsifal" and the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven were given. On this latter occasion, quoting from one of Boston's leading dailies, "the scene of the entrance of Mr. Gericke, when orchestra, chorus and audience rose in his honor, was more than equalled in that which followed the finale of the Symphony. The audience rose to its feet and applauded the conductor to the echo." On the programmes of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Mr. Gericke's name appeared four times as the composer of a "Serenade for Strings," a "Concert Overture," a "Chorus of Homage" and two songs for soprano.

Cecile Lorraine, the young American prima donna who sang in England the last few years and sang the soprano part in the Marquis of Lorne's opera before the Queen last May, arrived in New-York Wednesday on the Teutonic. She will make her New-York début in the Metropolitan Opera House October 18 in a Bismarck memorial concert arranged by the United German Singing Societies.

THE SEASON AT MUSIC HALL

Concerts Will Have A Prominent Place On The List Of Manager Edgar Strakosch.

Manager Edgar Strakosch, of the Music Hall, has returned after a lengthy stay in New York, and is very enthusiastic over the prospect for good attractions at Music Hall this season. The season will open with the Passion Play October 3. The engagement will consist of six evening performances and six matinees. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will again appear at Music Hall, but the concerts will be given Tuesdays instead of Wednesdays, as heretofore. Mr. Gerricke will assume the leadership, as Mr. Paur has been engaged as conductor of the New York Permanent Orchestra. The Boston Symphony Orchestra management has sacrificed visits to Washington to come to Baltimore.

Sousa and his famous band will be heard in two concerts. The Baltimore Oratorio Society will give its usual two concerts. Other concerts which the Music Hall management hopes to announce include a series under the baton of Mr D. Melamet, to be given with the intention of encouraging a permanent local orchestra. Mr. Ross Jungnickel expects to repeat his concerts this season. The visits of the C. A. Ellis Grand Opera Company, with Melba, and the Maurice Grau Grand Opera Company, from the Metropolitan Opera House, are promised. Sembrich, Calve and other great artists will be heard. A very interesting engagement will be the lectures of Mr. Burton Holmes, the successor of Mr. Stoddard, who will give four lectures. Lieut. Dan Godfrey and his famous British Guard Band, will come to Baltimore in November.

---

* * *

When the first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra takes place at the Music Hall on November 8 it will be noticed there is a decided change in the personnel of the organization. Chief of these will be upon the director's platform, where William Gericke takes the place of Emil Paur. The vacancies occasioned by the loss of several members who went down with the ill-fated steamship Burgogne have been filled by the following:

Herr von Theodorowitz, violin, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra; Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne orchestra; Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux orchestra; Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra. Director Gericke will be warmly welcomed. He may be counted upon to give the concerts a distinction and dignity which were characteristic of them during his former regime. His return will be hailed with joy by those who had the pleasure of hearing the orchestra between 1884 and 1889, and by the new generation of concert-goers which has grown up since he left the orchestra nine years ago. The soloists for the season have been selected with care, and among them will be many artists of world-wide fame. The subscription sale will begin on Monday, October 17, at Albert's.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Season of Five Concerts to Be Given at Music Hall.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its usual five concerts at Music Hall but instead, as heretofore, on Wednesday, the concerts will be given on Tuesday evenings. The following dates have been selected: November 8, December 13, January 17, February 21 and March 21. The playing of this great organization has become the standard of orchestral performance in America, and in no other city in the world can so fine a series of concerts be heard. They give pleasure to a multitude of music-lovers, and at the same time are of great advantage to musical students. The vacancies in the orchestra, created by the loss of several valued members, have been filled by engagements made during the summer. The following artists have been secured: Messrs. Von Theodorowitz, violin, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra; Maquarre, flute, of the Lamouroux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra; Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamouroux Orchestra; Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra. With the exception of these changes, the personnel will be the same as for several years past. William Gericke, who has been engaged as conductor, will be warmly welcomed. He may be counted to give the concerts a distinction and dignity which were characteristic of them during his former regime. His return will be hailed with joy by subscribers who had the pleasure of hearing the orchestra between 1884 and 1889, and by the new generation of concert-goers which has grown up since he left America nine years ago. The soloists for the season have been selected with care, and among them will be many artists of world-wide fame.

The Sun.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1898.

CONCERT TICKETS SELL HIGH.

$325 Premium for a Seat at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Rehearsals.

BOSTON, Sept. 26.—At the auction sale to-day of tickets for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Music Hall the prices paid for seats were the highest in the history of the organization. The largest sum paid as premium was $325 for a seat in the seventh row of the orchestra. The next seat drew a premium of $310, and the next $150. Just back of these three seats brought $152.50. It is expected that to-morrow's sale of evening concert seats will bring still higher prices.

Balto. Sunday Herald Sept. 11 1898

* * *

As the beginning of the local season draws nearer the outlook for a series of good productions becomes brighter Manager Strakosch, of the Music Hall, has just returned from New York, and reports having booked a number of interesting attractions.

Principal among the coming events is a series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, whose coming is now absolutely assured. Until recently, even though publicity was given to the statement that the management had rescinded the determination to give Baltimore the go-by, there was still some uneasiness on the part of a number, because the exact dates for the concerts had not been given.

Now, however, all doubt is set at rest by the announcement that the concerts will be given at the Music Hall on Tuesday evenings, November 8. December 13, January 17, February 21 and March 21. The success which has met their endeavors is being viewed with considerable satisfaction by the gentlemen through whose influence a continuance of the affairs was obtained.

Sousa and his famous band will come to the Music Hall, as will also "Dan" Godfrey and his great military organization. The Oratorio Society, under the direction of Prof. Joseph Pache, will give its usual number of concerts, and a series of entertainments under the supervision of Prof. David Melamet, assisted by a local orchestra, are promised. W. Ross Jungwickle proposes to repeat the series of symphony concerts which were so popular last season.

In addition to the above Mr. Strakosch has every reason to believe that he will be able to regale Baltimoreans with two seasons of grand opera, one by C. A. Ellis' company and the other by the organization managed by Maurice Grau. Two other attractions of note to come to the Music Hall are the "Passion Play" and Mr. Burton Holmes, the lecturer. It is proposed some time during the season to incorporate a series of concerts such as are given at the Waldorf-Astoria in New York.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give its usual concerts at Music Hall, but instead, as heretofore, on Wednesday, the concerts will be given on Tuesday evenings of the following dates: November 8, December 13, January 17, February 21 and March 21. The following artists have been secured: Messrs. von Theodorowitz, violin, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra; Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra; Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra.

Boston Journal.

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1898.

ONE SEAT, $325

Another Brought a $310 Premium.

Record Prices at the Symphony Sale.

Past Sales' Highest Insignificant.

When seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra bring premiums ranging as high as $325 and $310, something extraordinary is happening.

It is probable that no such high premiums for $12 rehearsal seats ever were heard of as Monday's. Seats in Row P, back in the second section on the floor, drew $84 premium, and the highest mark last year was only $102. The good seats Monday rarely sold for less than $50, which is a very high average. The end seats which usually drag out low prices, were sold quickly, and seldom at less than $15. These were only the very end seats. Their neighbors, further inside, sold for from $22 to $35.

The bidding started briskly. The prominent men and women that, a few years ago, used to attend the sales and buy their seats, nowadays commission ticket agents to do the work. When they order certain seats, therefore, it is likely that a great deal of money will be spent. This was shown in the competition between the agents Monday morning. It brought out all the high prices, as a rule. It was an agent that bought No. 18 in row G for $325 premium, and it was also an agent that, forced by another, bought No. 17 in row H for $310. The unsuccessful bidder for that seat immediately bought the next for $150, and the next for $100. Those three seats, 17, 18 and 19, in row H, sold altogether for $560, an average of nearly $190. That is more than $80 in excess of the highest premium of 1897, which was seven dollars higher than the highest premium of 1896.

That same prodigal agent, Mr. Harlow, bought seats Nos. 16, 17 and 18 in row I for $152.50 each.

An agent took three seats near the end of row J for $70 each. Seats in the middle of the next row brought $64. Four seats in L were sold to an agent for $115 each, and a seat in the middle of N went also for $115. It took $87 to buy N 20, and $61 to buy N 21, and $55 N 22 and 23. These seats are almost exactly in the middle of the floor, just back of the cross aisle. Sixty and seventy dollars for seats was not uncommon. After the end seats had been disposed of the bidding usually started at $40. That was while the first section was selling. Later the bids started lower, but they ended almost always between $35 and $45. As far back as row S middle seats went for $50.

The management is not surprised at the remarkable prices. They attribute the rise in prices to the increased interest in the orchestra that Mr. Gericke's return has aroused. The sale of $7.50 rehearsal seats will be held today.

The $12 seats in the first balcony were sold at unusually good prices.

It is said that the highest premium ever paid for a ticket for either the rehearsals or the concerts was $390. That was in the memorable Nikisch year, early in the 90s. The buyer was George Q. Stewart.

There was a report around in the afternoon that the $325 premium will be made good by a well-known Brookline millionaire, and that Mrs. John L. Gardner has the seat for which the $310 premium was paid.

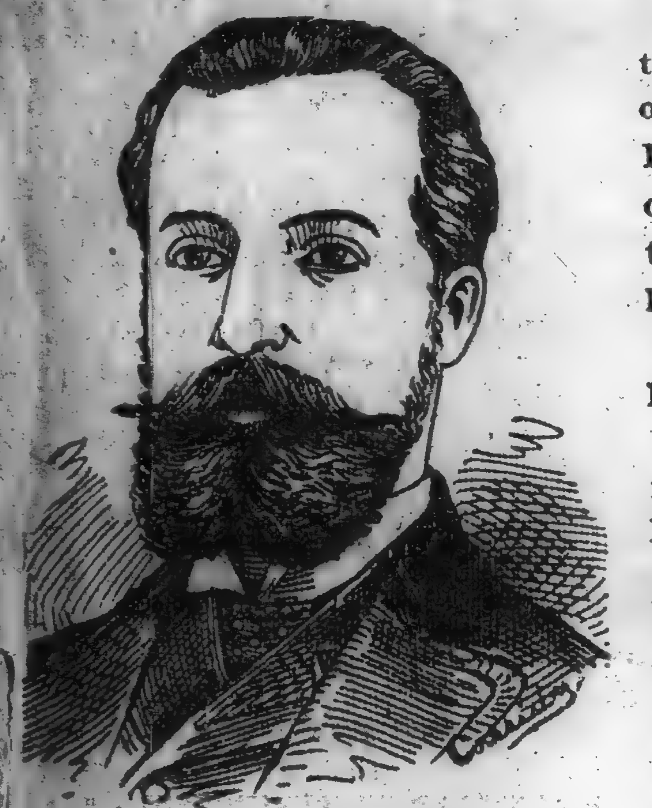
ston Journal.
DAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1898.

GERICKE HERE.

Celebrated Conductor Returns to Boston Again.

Glad to Lead the Symphony Orchestra Once More.

Finds Not Much Satisfaction in Latter-Day Works.



WILHELM GERICKE,
Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, who, in three weeks, will begin his second term as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, came to Boston late Saturday afternoon, after an absence that lasted not far from 10 years.

Mr. Gericke, with his wife, his little daughter Katie, and Mrs. Flamm, his wife's mother, reached New York on the Kaiser Friedrich last Wednesday morning. They were met by Mr. Fred R. Comee, representing Mr. Henry L. Higginson, the proprietor of the Symphony Orchestra, and some personal friends of the celebrated conductor. It was Mr. Comee that welcomed Mr. Gericke and his family back to Boston yesterday, on behalf of Mr. Higginson, and near by were Mr. Franz Kneisel, the concert master of the orchestra, whom Mr. Gericke brought to Boston in 1885, Mr. Otto Svecenski, another well-known member of the orchestra, Mrs. John L. Gardner and other friends.

A gentleman standing by said to the Journal reporter:

"They can say what they please about the peculiarities of Mrs. Gardner, but, nevertheless, it is just such acts of thoughtfulness as this that have caused the admiration of her many acquaintances."

It was nine years ago last spring, late in the spring, that, after conducting a notable performance of "Parsifal," Mr. Gericke, in a short but most affectionate speech, said good-by to Boston. The writer happened to be in the throng that cracked the ribs of Music Hall that night, and he remembers as distinctly as though recalling an event of the last season, the tumultous applause and the storm of farewells that followed the respected leader to his dressing-room. And how similar thought the musician himself!

"It seems like a dream," he said, early last evening, taking his ease at the Brunswick. "Yes, it seems like a dream. I can hardly realize that more than nine years have gone since I last saw this city. It seems much more likely that I was here last season, or, if you will, that I have been asleep here for a long, long time, and have just waked up. Yet the whole nine years and more have gone, every month of them, and you have seen changes here in Boston, no doubt, and I have seen changes. And now I am here to renew old friendships, and to see how time has blessed you. Have there been many changes here?"

Glad to Get Back.

It will be more interesting to learn how time has used Mr. Gericke than to recite the reporter's list of changes. The distinguished Austrian is the same as ever, as the uplanders say. His figure is unchanged, moderately formed and well. Some gray hairs have crept into the sides of his beard, but his bearing is as erect and elastic and vigorous, and his manner as courteous and kind as though the intervention of time had been only momentary.

"Glad—glad to get back?" He let the interrogation echo in the room, as though listening to it. "Indeed I am. It is no exaggeration to say that Boston is a second home to me. I left it primarily because health drove me home. For more than a year after I left Boston I could not turn my attention to music. I went to the opera two or three times, but all I could see was an act, or, at the most, two acts. Overwork had drained my nerves of their streugth. I had neither the taste nor the ambition to work. So I gave up music entirely. At the end of a year or so I resumed the conductorship of the Gesselschaft concerts. The Gesselschaft is a choral society that I led for some time before I first came to this country. I had had another offer from the Philharmonic Society of Berlin, but at the time it was made I was in no condition to consider it. I remained with the Gesselschaft choral five years, then I left for a year, but went back again, and I was in Vienna up to the time that I left for this country.

"However, because I was so far away, you must not think that I forgot Boston or the Symphony Orchestra. On the contrary, through papers and letters that I received, I constantly refreshed my memories. I watched the work of the orchestra, as I knew both Mr. Nikisch and Mr. Paur, my successors, very well, and was proud to note its continued successes. It is truly a magnificent organization, one of the greatest orchestras the world of music has today.

"Yes, as you say, the fact that more than half the present orchestra is made up of players that were under me before will make whatever tasks I may find much easier. But the loss of the players that were crossing the ocean on the Bourgogne is hard to repair. Oh, that was indeed terrible—terrible. Do you know, for some two or three weeks afterward I was unable to get rid of the awful thoughts of it. Then, professionally, aside from the death of those good fellows, their absence from the orchestra will necessitate the upbuilding of the ensemble. Ah! but we shall get along. I shall be so glad to see the familiar faces of the old players.

"How long will I remain? At least three years. That is the term that I have engaged myself for, and if my condition be good at the end of it I shall remain still longer. Nothing but my ill condition drew me away from here before."

"What are your plans?" the reporter asked.

"Well, the first few programs you can see for yourself. (They are

Continued on the Fourth Page.

LITERARY.

An author of established repute will examine and read manuscripts of all kinds and lengths, give opinions, revise, edit where desired, and assist by practical advice as to the best methods of securing insertions in newspapers and magazines, or publication in book form. Literary tuition undertaken. Moderate terms. "Author," care the Boston Journal, Boston, Mass.

Gericke the Conductor.

Contiuued from the First Page.

printed in the regular Sunday musical columns.) You see among them only familiar names. There's the "Euryanthe" overture, by Weber. I put that on the first program, because it was on the last that I conducted with the orchestra alone when I was here before. There are the old masters, and there are some moderns — Tchaikowsky, Richard Strauss and Chadwick. I selected Mr. Chadwick's "Melpomene" because I conducted it before. It is dedicated to me, in fact. He is one of your foremost composers. I know also the composition of MacDowell and Paine, and Foote, and at least one by Whiting—Arthur Whiting, who is now in New York.

"Among the novelties that I have chosen are symphonies by Bruckner, Sinding and Gilson. Gilson is a young Frenchman whose compositions have met with great success in France. Tchaikowsky, one of whose symphonies is already on the program, was one of the great modern writers. Richard Strauss—well his first symphonic poems merited the success that was given them. They were very fine works indeed. But his late work is too—too—what shall I say?—overtoned—complicated. There is too much dissonance to it. You hear too many counter sounds. It is like three orchestras playing together in different keys. I know that some regard his work as a new form of writing. As for me, I say the day may come when we shall accustom our ears to all that mixture.

"But that is not my idea of music; not by any means. To my mind, music should be clear, comprehensive, as varied and as difficult, as formal or as original as you wish, but always clear and full of the meaning that the composer intends to convey. In other words, music should be so written that the listener will be sure of what the composer is saying.

"To me the great, inspired musician was Bach. Think of his work, its abundance and grandeur. Merely to have written what he did required extraordinary ease and facility. Then there was Beethoven, who sets the standard for symphonies; and Mozart and Schumann, and others. Everyone interested in music is more or less acquainted with the master writers of the past. "Nowadays, well, I must say the work is disappointing. All the writers of music are laboring industriously, but, as a rule, what they do is not always satisfactory. It may be that they write too fast, or with too little care, it may be. Rubenstein, for example, was one of the great composers of our time whose work was spoiled by the want of care. He wrote and wrote and never looked at his writing. As fast as he could do his work, off it went, unimproved and unpolished. Now that was not the way in which Beethoven, on the other side, worked. When he had finished a composition he put it by, and when the thought of it was off his mind, so to speak, took it up again and went over it diligently and patiently. Hence his wonderful finish. It is hard to compare the new and the old works, their form, I will call it, is so different, and their purposes.

"Speaking of choral music, my plan is to conduct some symphonies with chorus. 'Manfred,' 'Liszt's 'Faust' and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven are the ones I have in mind. I would not give the Ninth Symphony without the last movement. If I cannot get a suitable chorus—although I do not doubt that I will—and good soloists, it will not be given. The Ninth Symphony without that last semi-choral movement would be like—well, a person with one leg. It would be imperfection.

"I think that Boston, and the world at large, owes a great deal to Mr. Higginson (the proprietor of the Symphony Orchestra). His work is unique, and therefore all the more praiseworthy."

It will interest those that know Mr. Gericke to read that since leaving Boston he has joined the ranks of the married. His wife was Miss Flamm of Vienna. She loves music, is an excellent amateur pianist, and, naturally enough, is deeply interested in her husband's new work in an old field. Their daughter is about five and a half years old. For the present they will stay at the Brunswick, but their home soon will be in Upland Road, Brookline.

Mr. Gericke will begin his new term on Friday afternoon, Oct. 14. The first concert will be played the following afternoon.

New-York Daily Tribune.
TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1898.

BOSTON SYMPHONY SEATS SOLD WELL.

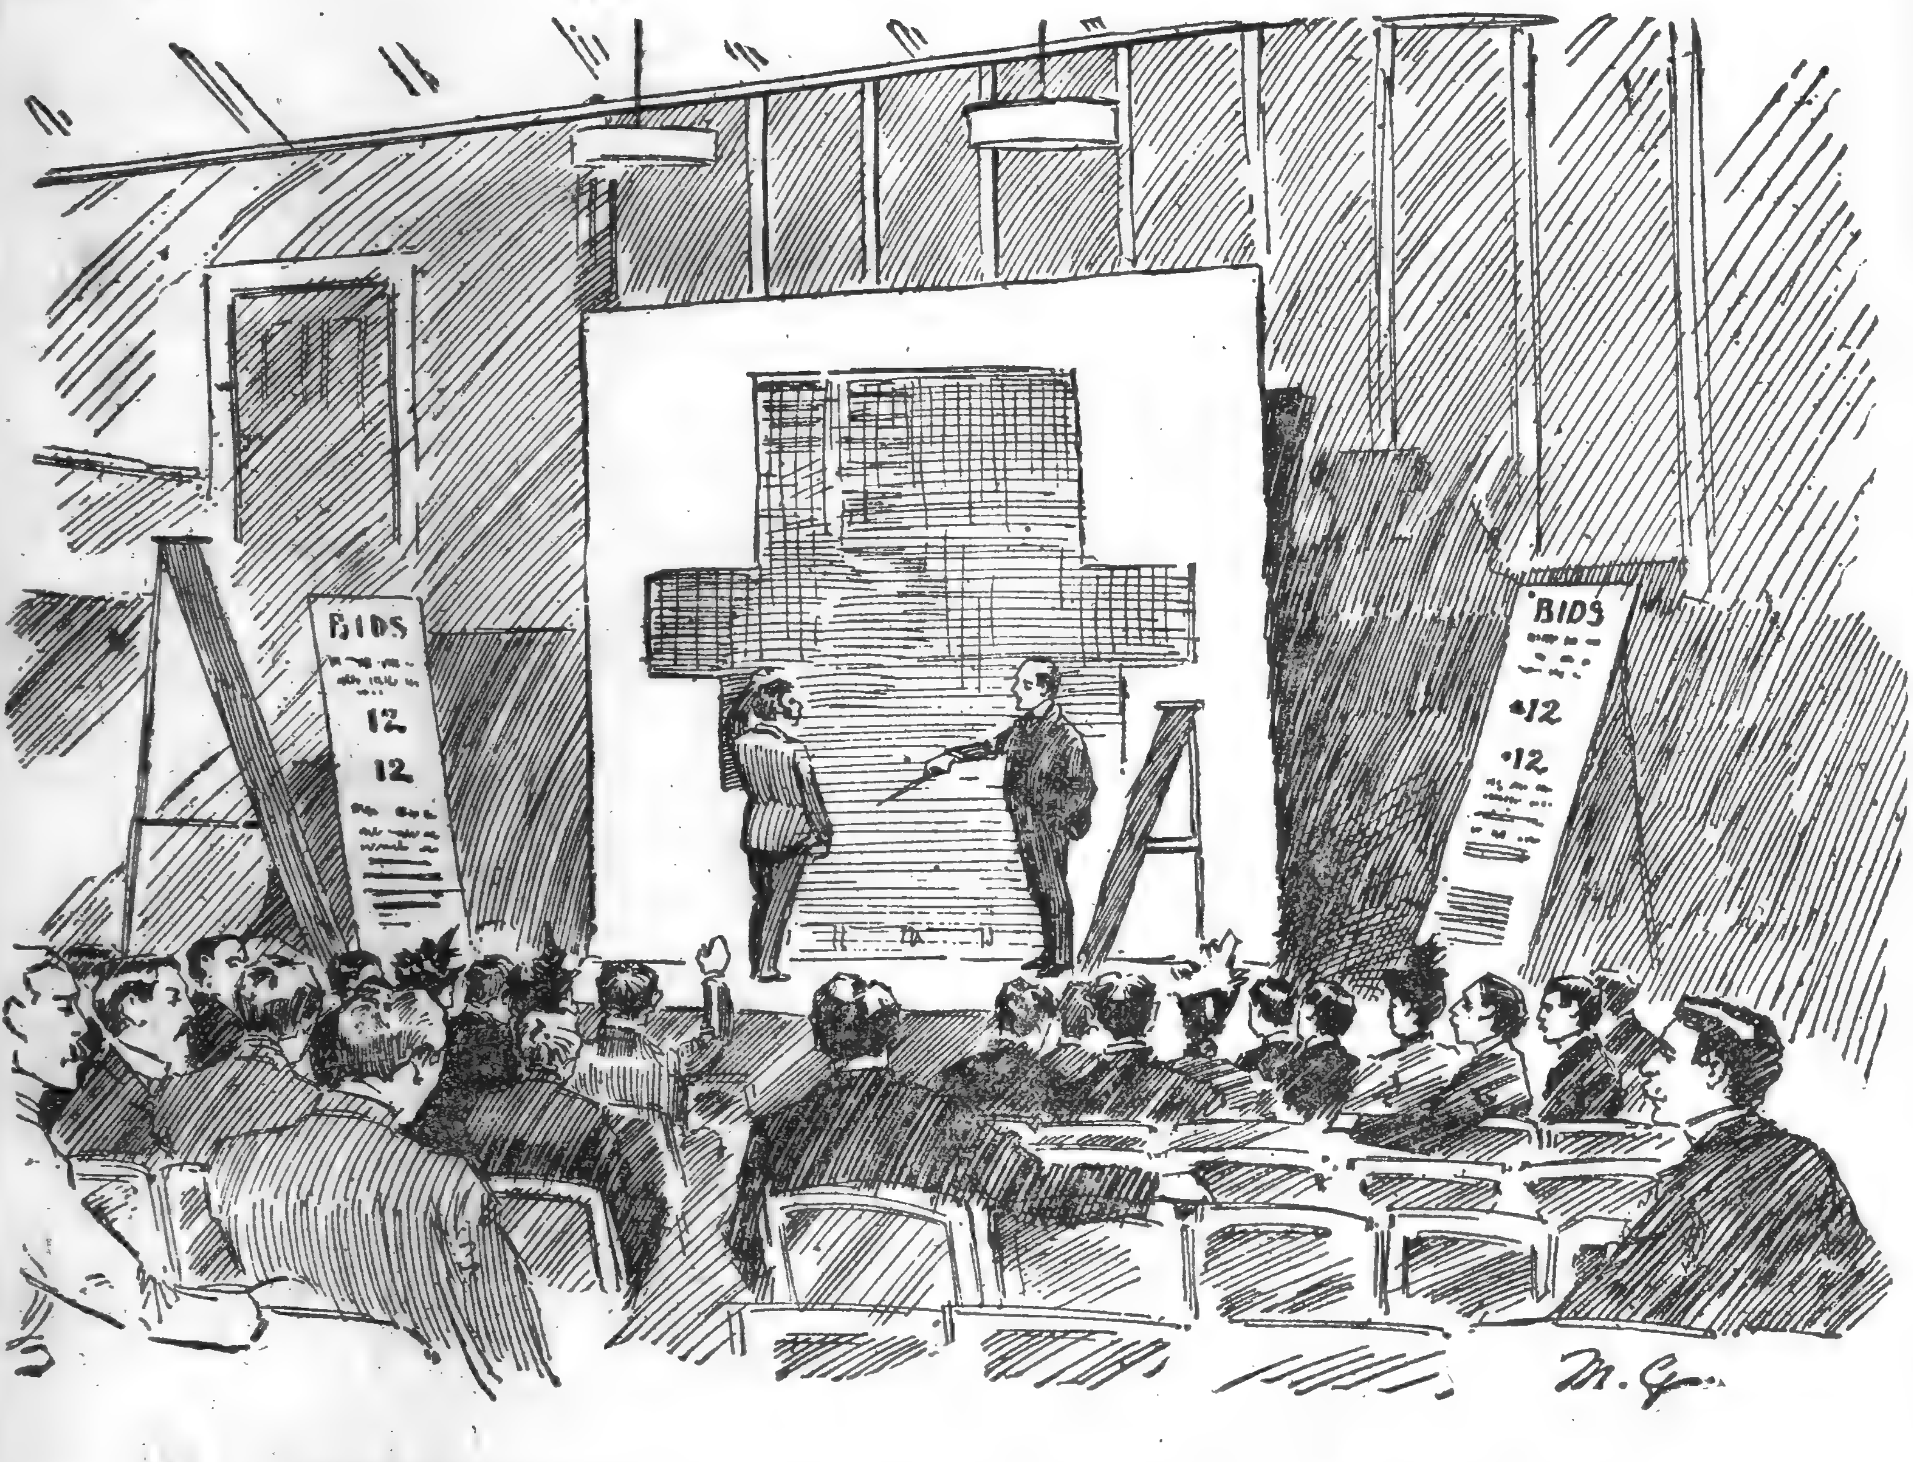
Boston, Sept. 26 (Special).—The auction sale of symphony tickets at the Music Hall to-day broke all records. The highest sum paid as a premium for an orchestra seat at the rehearsals was for seat No. 18, in row G, which, after a sharp contest, was knocked down for $325 to Mr. Wordsworth, who, it is said, was buying for Eben Jordan. The next highest price was $310, paid by C. J. Connelly, who was buying on an order. Just back of this were Nos. 16, 17 and 18 in row I, for which $152 50 each was paid on an order.

[21]

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIV., NO. 89.
TUESDAY, SEPT. 27, 1898.

WENT AT TOP NOTCH FIGURES.

Spirited Bidding at the Auction Sale of Seats for the Symphony Orchestra Rehearsals.



AUCTION SALE OF SYMPHONY SEATS AT MUSIC HALL.

Premiums for seats at the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Symphony orchestra reached top-notch figures at the auction in Music Hall yesterday afternoon. Early in the morning prospective buyers began to assemble, foremost among them being a group of well known brokers and speculators, who made matters lively by their spirited bidding for choice seats for their clients later in the day.

The high-water mark was reached by a bid of $325, made by Agent Wadsworth, who, it is said, was buying for Eben Jordan. Another seat brought $310, the offer being made by C. J. Connelly, who was buying on an order. Three seats went for $152.50 each, the largest net price paid on one bid during the day. The lowest bid was for $5, which captured seat No. 2 in row A. Seat No. 1, the first one put up, was the only one not bid for in the hall.

Most of the notables bought their seats through agents, and did not appear in person, though a few ventured to oppose the speculators who constituted a formidable barrier on the front row. Among those present was Mrs. Jack Gardner, who secured her seats through an agent.

The sale of seats, which began at 10 A. M., was continued until nearly 6 in the evening. Even the balcony seats, which went last, brought fancy prices, averaging at least $50 each for front rows and $35 for those further back.

Wealth and fashion will certainly be in attendance at this year's musical functions as never before, and a royal welcome to Conductor Gericke is assured.

THE CHATTERER.

Mr. Gericke will find the Symphony orchestra all right. With the exception of the new men, perhaps, they are in perfect condition for the most masterful conducting. See if they are not!

SYMPHONY TICKETS.

It is certainly not the fault of the founder of the Symphony concerts that his original purpose of furnishing high-class music here in Boston at low prices has failed to achieve that end. The class of entertainment provided has had an effect to make the competition for the possession of tickets very brisk, until now the premiums paid for the more desirable seats are the highest ever obtained. This is highly creditable to Boston's sense of appreciation of high-class music, but it is a condition of things that relegates to the region of the back rows those who are unable to pay high prices for the entertainment provided.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

BIG PREMUIMS PAID.

Fancy prices for seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Symphony Orchestra were paid at the auction in Music Hall yesterday.

Seat 17 in Row H was sold for $310 to Mr. Harlow; Seat 18 brought $150, and 19 $105. One of the biggest net prices paid for seats was $457.50, sold to Mr. Connolly at $152.50 each, for Nos. 16, 17 and 18 in Row I. In Row J, $75 each for two seats was the maximum bid, and in K, $46 each for two others. Seats 14, 15, 18 and 19 in Row L went for $115 each, the biggest net price paid during the morning for four seats. Ninety-one dollars for a single seat in M was the biggest bid for this row, and $115 for one seat in N was the figure which closed the bidding at 12:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

The sale of seats for the concerts will be held Thursday and Friday mornings.

The Boston Traveler
PUBLISHED BY THE
BOSTON TRAVELER CO.,
TORREY E. WARDNER, President.
Seventy-sixth year—Vol. LIV. No. 150
MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 26, 1898.

SYMPHONY PRICES SOAR DIZZILY

All Records Broken at Music Hall Today.

THE TOP NOTCH IS $325

Several Other Seats Up In the Hundreds Figure.

The auction sale of the $12 Friday afternoon rehearsal seats for the Symphony concerts this winter is being held in Music Hall today, and incidentally all records for premiums are knocked higher than the traditional kite. There seems to be but one really conclusive reason for such unprecedented figures—the return of Conductor Gericke to the scene of his former triumphs. But if opinions differ as to causes, there is no doubt about the accumulation of huge rolls of greenbacks in the little office to the right of the platform, and corresponding looks of satisfaction on the faces of Messrs. Ellis and Comee.

At just 10.12 this morning Auctioneer Jackson walked briskly upon the stage in the familiar fashion. He faced a large gathering, wherein jaunty hats and natty costumes predominated. The Symphony girl was out in force. Here and there were music-loving men and fathers of families, who were entrusted with the sacred duty of purchasing seats for their womenkind. In front was a row or two of the speculators, the shrewd and alert Connelly, the pleasant-faced, energetic Herrick, the dignified Wadsworth, the gentlemanly Heard and the rest of the fraternity, all entrusted with brokerage orders, and all willing to do a little investing on their private accounts. Behind the auctioneer rose the fascinating chart, and perched on his customary high stepladder was Usher Hartshorn, ready to begin his fateful work of chalking off seats as they were purchased.

The opening bid was a surprise, and people began to congratulate themselves that the coveted tickets were to be obtained at low figures this year. A 1, which last year brought a premium of $14, could not raise a single bid, even of 25 cents, and it was passed over. A 2 brought $5, however, and A 7 $13. On the other side of the hall A 28 brought $19, the highest price in the row, and $4 more than last year's best in A.

Thereafter prices shot up with dazzling swiftness. B 16 and 17, middle aisle seats, cost $30 bonus, and the whole row averaged about $20. C showed a slight increase, while D was the scene of a skirmish that brought seat 18 up to $61, far above anything in the row last season. The seat directly behind it in E also went for $61, and all the seats were steadily increasing in price. While the average was not yet above that of last season, it was noticeable that the choice places were bringing far higher prices. The best in F brought $51, as against $17 at the last sale.

In the charmed centre of row G occurred the most sensational event of the day. Seats had been selling at $39 and $49, until No. 18 was reached. Here opened a big battle of the brokers, each with an order to fill if possible. Up soared the price from $50 to $75, to $100, to $200 in great spurts, to $250, to $300. Men and women stood up to see who the combatants were. A thrill of excitement swept over the hall as it was recognized that all records were already broken. It was as genuine as the excitement on a race course. Auctioneer Jackson rolled out the big figures as phlegmatically as if he were selling hairpins at ten cents a package, and wagged his baton from one side of the hall to the other with electrical rapidity. At last $325 was reached, and one of the brokers subsided. One seat only was purchased at this figure. It will cost that woman just $14 for each concert this season.

But big prices were not yet ended. Another grand set-to occurred over H 17, which brought $310, while H 18 and 19 called for $150 and $101 respectively. These were all for positions coveted by people of wealth, for seats next them could be obtained for $40, $50 and $60.

In row I a Mr. Harlow had a brush with the speculators and won. He took seats 16, 17 and 18 at $152.50 each. Very high prices were being obtained all around this locality. Four seats on the centre aisle of L brought $115 apiece, and the average was over $50.

Premiums in M were from $30 to $91; in N from $28 to $115; in P from $25 to $84, and in Q from $24 to $71.

As a whole, the sale must surpass all others in point of revenue. The tide has turned in good earnest, and Mr. Higginson is on the high road to winning back the thousands he so generously lavished on these concerts in years past.

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIV., NO. 88.
MONDAY, SEPT. 26, 1898.

BIG PREMIUMS BEING PAID.

Auction Sale of Symphony Seats Starts off Lively.

Fourteen Rows Disposed of This Morning—One Seat Brought $325 and Another $310—Seats Sold in Regular Order and Not More Than Four on One Bid.

Fancy prices for seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Symphony orchestra are being paid at the auction going on in Music Hall today. Auctioneer Jackson opened the sale shortly after 10 o'clock this morning, and the bidding at once became lively. The premium on seats at times mounted high, one man bidding $325 for a single seat, another $310, and a half-dozen others going above the $100 mark. Up to 12:30 14 rows had been disposed of at figures which promise to make this season's premiums much higher than usual.

When the sale opened there were fully 500 people in the hall. The first seat put up was "A 1." No bid being immediately received, Mr. Jackson promptly put up the next, which left no doubt in the minds of his audience that he was going to move lively. By the terms of the auction bids were received for seats in their regular order only, not for the choice, and not more than four seats were sold on one bid.

The next seat, No. 2, brought the smallest figure of any subsequently sold. It was knocked down at $5, and checked off on the big diagram of the hall erected on the stage.

The premiums for seats in row A were comparatively small, none being over $19. In row B, running clear across the hall, $30 was the maximum bid. In C, $31; in D, $61; in E, $61; in F, $51.

When row G was sold off, the bidding between a couple of agents, of which there were several present, became decidedly lively when seat 18 was reached. The figure for this seat quickly mounted to $100 among several bidders, after which the spirit of rivalry waxed warm between two of the speculators, the closing bid of $325 being made by Mr. Wadsworth.

Seat 17 in row H was sold for $310 to Mr. Harlow; seat 18 brought $150, and 19, $105. One of the biggest net prices paid for seats was $457.50, sold to Mr. Connolly at $152.50, each, for Nos. 16, 17 and 18 in row I. In row J, $75 each for two seats was the maximum bid, and in K, $46 each for two others. Seats 14, 15, 18 and 19 in row L went for $115 each, the biggest net price paid during the morning for four seats. Ninety-one dollars for a single seat in M was the biggest bid for this row, and $115 for one seat in N was the figure which closed the bidding at 12:30 o'clock this afternoon.

All bids were for premiums strictly, in addition to which there is the regular charge of $12 per seat for the course.

The remaining $12 seats will be sold off this afternoon, and the $7.50 sittings for the rehearsals tomorrow morning. The sale of seats for the concerts will be held Thursday and Friday mornings.

INCOMPLETE

RICKE HERE.

He Returns to His Work as Conuctor of the Symphony.

Wilhelm Gericke, who, in three weeks, will begin his second term as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, came to Boston late Saturday afternoon, after an absence that lasted not far from 10 years.

Mr. Gericke, with his wife, his little daughter Katie, and Mrs. Flamm, his wife's mother, reached New York on the Kaiser Friedrich last Wednesday. Mr. Comee welcomed Mr. Gericke and his family back to Boston on behalf of Mr. Higginson, and near by were Mr. Franz Kneisel, Mr. Otto Svecenski, Mrs. J. L. Gardner and other friends.

"For more than a year after I left Boston," said he, "I could not turn my attention to music. I went to the opera two or three times, but all I could see was an act, or, at the most, two acts. Overwork had drained my nerves of their strength. I had neither the taste nor the ambition to work. So I gave up music entirely.

"At the end of a year or so I resumed the conductorship of the Gesselschaft concerts. The Gesselschaft is a choral society that I led for some time before I first came to this country. I had another offer from the Philharmonic Society of Berlin, but at the time it was made I was in no condition to consider it.

"I remained with the Gesselschaft choral five years, then I left for a year, but went back again.

"How long will I remain? At least three years. That is the term that I have engaged myself for, and if my condition be good at the end of it I shall remain still longer. Nothing but my ill condition drew me away from here before."

"What are your plans?" the reporter asked.

"Well, the first few programmes you can see for yourself. You see among them only familiar names. There's the 'Euryanthe' overture, by Weber. I put that on the first programme, because it was on the last that I conducted with the orchestra alone when I was here before. There are the old masters, and there are some moderns—Tchaikowsky, Richard Strauss and Chadwick. I selected Mr. Chadwick's 'Melpomene' because I conducted it before. It is dedicated to me, in fact. He is one of your foremost composers. I know also the composition of MacDowell and Paine, and Foote, and at least one by Whiting—Arthur Whiting, who is now in New York.

"Among the novelties that I have chosen are symphonies by Bruckner, Sinding and Gilson. Gilson is a young Frenchman whose compositions have met with great success in France.

"Speaking of choral music, my plan is to conduct some symphonies with chorus. 'Manfred,' Liszt's 'Faust' and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven are the ones I have in mind. I would not give the Ninth Symphony without the last movement. If I cannot get a suitable chorus—although I do not doubt that I will—and good soloists, it will not be given. The Ninth Symphony without that last semi-choral movement would be like—well, a person with one leg. It would be imperfection.

"I think that Boston, and the world at large, owes a great deal to Mr. Higginson (the proprietor of the Symphony Orchestra). His work is unique, and therefore all the more praiseworthy."

Mr. Gericke since leaving Boston has joined the ranks of the married. His wife was Miss Flamm of Vienna. She loves music, is an excellent amateur pianist, and, naturally enough, is deeply interested in her husband's new work in an old field.

BIG PRICES.

Highest Premiums on Symphony Seats

Ever Realized in Boston History.

The auction of tickets for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was opened in Music Hall at 10 a.m. A fairly large crowd was present when the bidding was opened and immediately entered into the spirit of the occasion. The general tendency seemed to be firmer and higher than last year and the seats were sold rapidly.

With the beginning of row G the bidding began to assume record breaking tendencies and reached its climax on seat 18 upon which a spirited contest soon held the premium at $325, which with the regular price of $12 places the value of G 18 at $337, a value unprecedented in the history of concert seats in Boston. This seat was purchased by Mrs. Wadsworth.

The record was almost equalled by Mr. Connolly on the sale of number 17 in the following row which brought a premium of $310.

Other seats of remarkable premiums were 16, 17 and 18 in row I at $152.50, and 16, 17, 18, 19 in row L at $115, while there were many ranging from $65 to $90 and located as far back as row M on the entire first section.

Bids were still prompt at this time and a great many were waiting for the more moderately valued seats of the second section.

In the right and left hand sections of the first row premiums ranged from $13.50 on the extreme side seats to $19

The real life of the bidding began on the second section, representative premiums being on 11 and 12, $18; 19 and 20, $27, and 16-17, $30. Row C opened very strong, ranging from $31 as high as $34, and with a tendency as the seats became more choice to be higher.

There was no lagging in the bids and everything moved promptly.

The general values at which seats from G to M ranged may be seen from these figures representing the maximum and minimum premiums offered in each row: G, $325 to $39; H, $310 to 34; I, $152.50 to $14; J, $70 to $31; K, $64 to $39; L, $115 to $40; M, $91 to $31.

This completed the entire first section, and a noted fall in the estimates was the result. The higher values given choice seats was in many cases the result of private rivalry for choice sections, and was not influential in determining the bid on even the next seat.

The general tendency is very much better, according to those who are interested in the work, and a successful financial season is predicted by many of the prominent bidders.

MR. GERICKE DROPS IN.

Fof a moment this morning Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, the Symphony's new conductor, dropped in at the auction.

Many olds friends recongized him from afar as he stood at the door, but there was only time for a nod in all directions, and he rushed to the window commanding the ticket office, where Mr. Ellis and Mr. Comee were busy checking off the sold seats.

After an animated chat lasting a minute and a half Mr. Gericke dashed out of the hall and away, looking very spick and span and up to date.

Those who never had seen him before were surprised to find him to be under middle height and of stocky build. In appearance he looks like a very successful business man or a banker who had stock where dividends of a large figure were of frequent occurrence.

His hair and beard are of a fine iron gray. His pointed beard is fastidiously trimmed, his eyes are very bright, and he has the ruddy color that bespeaks a lover of nature.

Another distinguished visitor at the office window was Mrs. J. L. Gardner. At first she was only known to the onlookers as the veiled lady, for she was in black from head to toe, and the thick black veil absolutely concealed her features.

But when she put her hands behind her and talked there was an indiscribable manner all her own, and then everybody noted the trim, tailor-made gown that looked like a riding habit.

It was handsomely braided, and the collarless neck was just V enough in the back to reveal the plump neck that has shown off to advantage such heaps of diamonds.

Her hat was a small black toque, as simple as could be, and her veil was as the pall of night.

After giving her orders for her favorite seats Mrs. Gardner went to the gallery above and there watched the sale for some time.

THE EARLY BUYERS.

Among the early buyers were Gen. W. W. Blackmar, J. C. R. Peabody, Dr. Marion, who has just returned from the front, Capt. Driver, Howard Ticknor, and scores of other well-known faces.

A symphony auction is always next in order to the sociability of a tea. On this occasion there was, as usual, much elation on the part of those who secured the very seats they wanted early.

A feature of a Symphony sale is the visiting from person to person of the black and white cat that has by long association become a part of Music Hall.

Although many society women attend all the auctions, the one on Friday afternoon is the only one that calls them out in great numbers. It was evident that most of the people had just come in to the auction from the country and shore, for they were as brown as berries.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1898

SALE OF SYMPHONY SEATS

Good Prices Realized at the Auction of Rehearsal Seats Today

This morning at ten o'clock the auction of the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals of the Symphony Orchestra took place in Music Hall. There was a good-sized crowd present, the greater part being composed of ladies. The floor of the hall fairly buzzed with them, as they discussed the seats they wanted and the prices they wanted to pay. The plans of the seats that the management had scattered over the hall seemed to be plain enough, but proved to be too difficult for many of the ladies to understand, and the gentlemen in attendance were kept busy making explanations. In the balconies there were many ladies, who tried different seats to satisfy themselves as to the acoustic properties.

It was a little after ten when the auctioneer took his stand on the platform and announced that the sale would begin. The first seats put up were those on the floor, in the rear of the hall. They proved not very popular, and although No. 1151 brought $13.50, the remainder averaged but $6 premium.

The balcony seats brought out more spirited bidding. These seats were the favorites with the ladies, who bought many of them. One young lady bid on eight different seats, and each time stopped at $13. Each time she was overbid. On the ninth seat, however, the auctioneer took pity on her and knocked down the seat to her. The highest premium paid for any of these seats was $158, paid for No. 189 and three others. Several brought $90, but the average was $15.

The last seats to be sold, and every one put up found a purchaser, were those in the rear of the first balcony. They brought from $8 to $16, and went off with very little bidding. Thursday morning at ten o'clock the $12 seats for the concert will be sold, and on Friday the $7.50 seats.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State.

The Official Paper of the City.

TUESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 27, 1898.

SYMPHONY SEATS

Brought The Highest Premiums Of any Auction Sale Before.

The auction of tickets for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was opened in Music Hall yesterday. A fairly large crowd was present when the bidding was opened and immediately entered into the spirit of the occasion. The general tendency seemed to be firmer and higher than last year and the seats were sold rapidly.

With the beginning of row G the bidding began to assume record breaking tendencies and reached its climax on seat 18 upon which a spirited contest soon held the premium at $325, which with the regular price of $12 places the value of G 18 at $337, a value unprecedented in the history of concert seats in Boston. This seat was purchased by Mr. Wadsworth.

The record was almost equalled by Mr. Connolly on the sale of number 17 in the following row which brought a premium of $310.

Other seats of remarkable premiums were 16, 17 and 18 in row I at $152.50, and 16, 17, 18, 19 in row L at $115, while there were many ranging from $65 to $90 and located as far back as row M on the entire first section.

Bids were still prompt at this time and a great many were waiting for the more moderately valued seats of the second section.

In the right and left hand sections of the first row premiums ranged from $13.50 on the extreme side seats to $19 and $20 on the inner ones.

The real life of the bidding began on the second section, representative premiums being on 11 and 12, $18; 19 and 20, $27, and 16-17, $30. Row C opened very strong, ranging from $31 as high as $34, and with a tendency as the seats became more choice to be higher.

There was no lagging in the bids and everything moved promptly.

The general values at which seats from G to M ranged may be seen from these figures representing the maximum and minimum premiums offered in each row: G, $325 to $39; H, $310 to 34; I, $152.50 to $14; J, $70 to $31; K, $64 to $39; L, $115 to $40; M, $91 to $31.

This completed the entire first section, and a noted fall in the estimates was the result. The higher values given choice seats was in many cases the result of private rivalry for choice sections, and was not influential in determining the bid on even the next seat.

The general tendency is very much better, according to those who are interested in the work, and a successful financial season is predicted by many of the prominent bidders.

Fof a moment this morning Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, the Symphony's new conductor, dropped in at the auction.

Many olds friends recongized him from afar as he stood at the door, but there was only time for a nod in all directions, and he rushed to the window commanding the ticket office, where Mr. Ellis and Mr. Comee were busy checking off the sold seats.

After an animated chat lasting a minute and a half Mr. Gericke dashed out of the hall and away, looking very spick and span and up to date.

Those who never had seen him before were surprised to find him to be under middle height and of stocky build. In appearance he looks like a very successful business man or a banker who had stock where dividends of a large figure were of frequent occurrence.

His hair and beard are of a fine iron gray. His pointed beard is fastidiously trimmed, his eyes are very bright, and he has the ruddy color that bespeaks a lover of nature.

Another distinguished visitor at the office window was Mrs. J. L. Gardner. At first she was only known to the onlookers as the veiled lady, for she was in black from head to toe, and the thick black veil absolutely concealed her features.

But when she put her hands behind her and talked there was an indiscribable manner all her own, and then everybody noted the trim, tailor-made gown that looked like a riding habit.

It was handsomely braided, and the collarless neck was just V enough in the back to reveal the plump neck that has shown off to advantage such heaps of diamonds.

Her hat was a small black toque, as simple as could be, and her veil was as the pall of night.

After giving her orders for her favorite seats Mrs. Gardner went to the gallery above and there watched the sale for some time.

Among the early buyers were Gen. W. W. Blackmar, J. C. R. Peabody, Dr. Marion, who has just returned from the front, Capt. Driver, Howard Ticknor, and scores of other well-known faces.

A symphony auction is always next in order to the sociability of a tea. On this occasion there was, as usual, much elation on the part of those who secured the very seats they wanted early.

A feature of a Symphony sale is the visiting from person to person of the black and white cat that has by long association become a part of Music Hall.

Although many society women attend all the concerts, the one on Friday afternoon is the only one that calls them out in great numbers. It was evident that most of the people had just come in to the auction from the country and shore, for they were as brown as berries.

If Paul Veronese were alive today and in Boston seeking a subject for his famous picture, "Industry," I am sure he would have received the necessary inspiration if he had yesterday attended the Symphony auction sale at Music Hall. There sat, where the light was good, a beautiful young woman patiently waiting until her choice of seats was auctioned off. Not idly did she sit, for her embroidery needle flashed in and out the finest of snowy line whereon the most exquisite of flowers were slowly but surely blooming. Although she embroidered she lost none of the sights, and not a single price of all the seats escaped her.

There were others who had taken their books along and quietly read. One part of the auction audience looked like a section of the Athenaeum. None of the readers were lost to the world though, and they managed to put the bids in as lively as those who did nothing but fasten their eyes on the chart.

"Without doubt," said an ancient Symphony habitue, "the return of Conductor Gericke is the source of the enthusiasm that has caused so many people to send in unlimited orders. That is what has made the price of tickets run so high.

"People know by experience that Gericke will get through on time, so that trains can be caught, and that fact alone is worth a good many dollars."

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 27, 1898.

SYMPHONY SEAT FOR $337.

Highest Premium Known Attained Yesterday.

Broker Wadsworth Was the Purchaser, but for Whom Not Known.

Others Were After the Seat and Rivalry Cause1 Lively Bidding.

The highest premium ever given for any seat in the history of the auction sales of seats for the Symphony orchestra public rehearsals was paid yesterday morning.

The premium was $325 and the seat No. 18 in row G, on the left of the center aisle.

The seat was bought by Mr Wadsworth, a broker, on the order of a person who sent in word to buy it at any price. Evidently somebody else had either given the same kind of an order to other brokers or else were present in person to try to get it, for the bidding was intensely exciting.

After the $100 mark had been passed each one of the bidders seemed so determined to secure the seat that raises of $25 were made up to $300, and then $10 and $5 bids followed, until it fell to Mr Wadsworth at $325. The ordinary price of the seat was $12 for the course, making the cost of the seat foot up to $337.

Rivalry for that particular seat is what forced up the premium so high, for another seat in the same row sold for a premium of $19.

There was more excitement when the center seats in the next row were reached. Mr James Connelly bought seat 17 in that row for $310. The seat across the aisle, and directly back of the one that realized $325, brought a premium of $1.50.

The seats in that part of the hall brought by far the highest prices of the day. H 19 was run up to $101, and H 20 $80. I 16 brought $101.

The sale began at 10 o'clock in Music hall. A large plan of the $12 seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals was erected on the platform, and the auctioneer began by selling the first seat in the first row. All were sold in regular order.

The hall was very well filled with people, greater interest than for the past few years being manifested. To the return of Mr Gericke as conductor is attributed one of the reasons for this deeper interest.

Mr Gericke dropped into the hall for a few moments during the progress of the sale, but there were few people who recognized him. He appeared at one of the entrances, stood for a few moments to watch the lively bidding, and then went away.

The first premium was for $5 for seat A 2, and then the prices ranged from that figure up to $19. Last year the range was from $8 to $15.

Premiums for the second row ran from $10.50 to $30, as compared with $12 to $17 last year.

In the third row the prices were from $13.50 to $31. Last year the range was from $12 to $21.

The fourth row brought premiums running from $13.50 to $61, against $18 to $29 last year. The limit of $61 was reached again in the fifth row, against $43 last year.

In the sixth row only $51 was reached, but this was just the lull before the storm, for it was on the seventh row that the bidding became so wild and exciting, and raised the premium to $325.

There was very lively competition then for the next six or seven rows, quite often a seat reaching $80, $90 and even $100.

After that bidding was steady, but good, the prices ranging from $20 to $60, but the average being from $30 to $40.

There was no recess. The auctioneer stood on the platform until after 3 o'clock, disposing of 1000 seats during that time.

[23]

INCOMPLETE

GERICKE HERE.

He Returns to His Work as Conductor of the Symphony.

Wilhelm Gericke, who, in three weeks, will begin his second term as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, came to Boston late Saturday afternoon, after an absence that lasted not far from 10 years.

Mr. Gericke, with his wife, his little daughter Katie, and Mrs. Flamm, his wife's mother, reached New York on the Kaiser Friedrich last Wednesday. Mr. Comee welcomed Mr. Gericke and his family back to Boston on behalf of Mr. Higginson, and near by were Mr. Franz Kneisel, Mr. Otto Svecenski, Mrs. J. L. Gardner and other friends.

"For more than a year after I left Boston," said he, "I could not turn my attention to music. I went to the opera two or three times, but all I could see was an act, or, at the most, two acts. Overwork had drained my nerves of their strength. I had neither the taste nor the ambition to work. So I gave up music entirely.

"At the end of a year or so I resumed the conductorship of the Gesselschaft concerts. The Gesselschaft is a choral society that I led for some time before I first came to this country. I had another offer from the Philharmonic Society of Berlin, but at the time it was made I was in no condition to consider it.

"I remained with the Gesselschaft choral five years, then I left for a year, but went back again.

"How long will I remain? At least three years. That is the term that I have engaged myself for, and if my condition be good at the end of it I shall remain still longer. Nothing but my ill condition drew me away from here before."

"What are your plans?" the reporter asked.

"Well, the first few programmes you can see for yourself. You see among them only familiar names. There's the 'Euryanthe' overture, by Weber. I put that on the first programme, because it was on the last that I conducted with the orchestra alone when I was here before. There are the old masters, and there are some moderns—Tchaikowsky, Richard Strauss and Chadwick. I selected Mr. Chadwick's 'Melpomene' because I conducted it before. It is dedicated to me, in fact. He is one of your foremost composers. I know also the composition of MacDowell and Paine, and Foote, and at least one by Whiting—Arthur Whiting, who is now in New York.

"Among the novelties that I have chosen are symphonies by Bruckner, Sinding and Gilson. Gilson is a young Frenchman whose compositions have met with great success in France.

"Speaking of choral music, my plan is to conduct some symphonies with chorus. 'Manfred,' Liszt's 'Faust' and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven are the ones I have in mind. I would not give the Ninth Symphony without the last movement. If I cannot get a suitable chorus—although I do not doubt that I will—and good soloists, it will not be given. The Ninth Symphony without that last semi-choral movement would be like—well, a person with one leg. It would be imperfection.

"I think that Boston, and the world at large, owes a great deal to Mr. Higginson (the proprietor of the Symphony Orchestra). His work is unique, and therefore all the more praiseworthy."

Mr. Gericke since leaving Boston has joined the ranks of the married. His wife was Miss Flamm of Vienna. She loves music, is an excellent amateur pianist, and, naturally enough, is deeply interested in her husband's new work in an old field.

BIG PRICES.

Highest Premiums on Symphony Seats

Ever Realized in Boston History.

The auction of tickets for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was opened in Music Hall at 10 a.m. A fairly large crowd was present when the bidding was opened and immediately entered into the spirit of the occasion. The general tendency seemed to be firmer and higher than last year and the seats were sold rapidly.

With the beginning of row G the bidding began to assume record breaking tendencies and reached its climax on seat 18 upon which a spirited contest soon held the premium at $325, which with the regular price of $12 places the value of G 18 at $337, a value unprecedented in the history of concert seats in Boston. This seat was purchased by Mrs. Wadsworth.

The record was almost equalled by Mr. Connolly on the sale of number 17 in the following row which brought a premium of $310.

Other seats of remarkable premiums were 16, 17 and 18 in row I at $152.50, and 16, 17, 18, 19 in row L at $115, while there were many ranging from $65 to $90 and located as far back as row M on the entire first section.

Bids were still prompt at this time and a great many were waiting for the more moderately valued seats of the second section.

the right and left hand sections of first row premiums ranged from on the extreme side seats to $19

The real life of the bidding began on the second section, representative premmiums being on 11 and 12, $18; 19 and 20, $27, and 16-17, $30. Row C opened very strong, ranging from $31 as high as $34, and with a tendency as the seats became more choice to be higher.

There was no lagging in the bids and everything moved promptly.

The general values at which seats from G to M ranged may be seen from these figures representing the maximum and minimum premiums offered in each row: G, $325 to $39; H, $310 to 34; I, $152.50 to $14; J. $70 to $31; K, $64 to $39; L, $115 to $40; M, $91 to $31.

This completed the entire first section, and a noted fall in the estimates was the result. The higher values given choice seats was in many cases the result of private rivalry for choice sections, and was not influential in determining the bid on even the next seat.

The general tendency is very much better, according to those who are interested in the work, and a successful financial season is predicted by many of the prominent bidders.

MR. GERICKE DROPS IN.

Fof a moment this morning Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, the Symphony's new conductor, dropped in at the auction.

Many olds friends recongized him from afar as he stood at the door, but there was only time for a nod in all directions, and he rushed to the window commanding the ticket office, where Mr. Ellis and Mr. Comee were busy checking off the sold seats.

After an animated chat lasting a minute and a half Mr. Gericke dashed out of the hall and away, looking very spick and span and up to date.

Those who never had seen him before were surprised to find him to be under middle height and of stocky build. In appearance he looks like a very successful business man or a banker who had stock where dividends of a large figure were of frequent occurrence.

His hair and beard are of a fine iron gray. His pointed beard is fastidiously trimmed, his eyes are very bright, and he has the ruddy color that bespeaks a lover of nature.

Another distinguished visitor at the office window was Mrs. J. L. Gardner. At first she was only known to the onlookers as the veiled lady, for she was in black from head to toe, and the thick black veil absolutely concealed her features.

But when she put her hands behind her and talked there was an indiscribable manner all her own, and then everybody noted the trim, tailor-made gown that looked like a riding habit.

It was handsomely braided, and the collarless neck was just V enough in the back to reveal the plump neck that has shown off to advantage such heaps of diamonds.

Her hat was a small black toque, as simple as could be, and her veil was as the pall of night.

After giving her orders for her favorite seats Mrs. Gardner went to the gallery above and there watched the sale for some time.

THE EARLY BUYERS.

Among the early buyers were Gen. W. W. Blackmar, J. C. R. Peabody, Dr. Marion, who has just returned from the front, Capt. Driver, Howard Ticknor, and scores of other well-known faces.

A symphony auction is always next in order to the sociability of a tea. On this occasion there was, as usual, much elation on the part of those who secured the very seats they wanted early.

A feature of a Symphony sale is the visiting from person to person of the black and white cat that has by long association become a part of Music Hall.

Although many society women attend all the auctions, the one on Friday afternoon is the only one that calls them out in great numbers. It was evident that most of the people had just come in to the auction from the country and shore, for they were as brown as berries.

Boston Transcript

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1898

SALE OF SYMPHONY SEATS

Good Prices Realized at the Auction of Rehearsal Seats Today

This morning at ten o'clock the auction of the $7.50 seats for the rehearsals of the Symphony Orchestra took place in Music Hall. There was a good-sized crowd present, the greater part being composed of ladies. The floor of the hall fairly buzzed with them, as they discussed the seats they wanted and the prices they wanted to pay. The plans of the seats that the management had scattered over the hall seemed to be plain enough, but proved to be too difficult for many of the ladies to understand, and the gentlemen in attendance were kept busy making explanations. In the balconies there were many ladies, who tried different seats to satisfy themselves as to the acoustic properties.

It was a little after ten when the auctioneer took his stand on the platform and announced that the sale would begin. The first seats put up were those on the floor, in the rear of the hall. They proved not very popular, and although No. 1151 brought $13.50, the remainder averaged but $6 premium.

The balcony seats brought out more spirited bidding. These seats were the favorites with the ladies, who bought many of them. One young lady bid on eight different seats, and each time stopped at $13. Each time she was overbid. On the ninth seat, however, the auctioneer took pity on her and knocked down the seat to her. The highest premium paid for any of these seats was $158, paid for No. 139 and three others. Several brought $30, but the average was $15.

The last seats to be sold, and every one put up found a purchaser, were those in the rear of the first balcony. They brought from $8 to $16, and went off with very little bidding. Thursday morning at ten o'clock the $12 seats for the concert will be sold, and on Friday the $7.50 seats.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.

TUESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 27, 1898.

SYMPHONY SEATS

Brought The Highest Premiums Of any Auction Sale Before.

The auction of tickets for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was opened in Music Hall yesterday. A fairly large crowd was present when the bidding was opened and immediately entered into the spirit of the occasion. The general tendency seemed to be firmer and higher than last year and the seats were sold rapidly.

With the beginning of row G the bidding began to assume record breaking tendencies and reached its climax on seat 18 upon which a spirited contest soon held the premium at $325, which with the regular price of $12 places the value of G 18 at $337, a value unprecedented in the history of concert seats in Boston. This seat was purchased by Mr. Wadsworth.

The record was almost equalled by Mr. Connolly on the sale of number 17 in the following row which brought a premium of $310.

Other seats of remarkable premiums were 16, 17 and 18 in row I at $152.50, and 16, 17, 18, 19 in row L at $115, while there were many ranging from $65 to $90 and located as far back as row M on the entire first section.

Bids were still prompt at this time and a great many were waiting for the more moderately valued seats of the second section.

In the right and left hand sections of the first row premiums ranged from $13.50 on the extreme side seats to $19 and $20 on the inner ones.

The real life of the bidding began on the second section, representative premmiums being on 11 and 12, $18; 19 and 20, $27, and 16-17, $30. Row C opened very strong, ranging from $31 as high as $34, and with a tendency as the seats became more choice to be higher.

There was no lagging in the bids and everything moved promptly.

The general values at which seats from G to M ranged may be seen from these figures representing the maximum and minimum premiums offered in each row: G, $325 to $39; H, $310 to 34; I, $152.50 to $14; J. $70 to $31; K, $64 to $39; L, $115 to $40; M, $91 to $31.

This completed the entire first section, and a noted fall in the estimates was the result. The higher values given choice seats was in many cases the result of private rivalry for choice sections, and was not influential in determining the bid on even the next seat.

The general tendency is very much better, according to those who are interested in the work, and a successful financial season is predicted by many of the prominent bidders.

Fof a moment this morning Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, the Symphony's new conductor, dropped in at the auction.

Many olds friends recongized him from afar as he stood at the door, but there was only time for a nod in all directions, and he rushed to the window commanding the ticket office, where Mr. Ellis and Mr. Comee were busy checking off the sold seats.

After an animated chat lasting a minute and a half Mr. Gericke dashed out of the hall and away, looking very spick and span and up to date.

Those who never had seen him before were surprised to find him to be under middle height and of stocky build. In appearance he looks like a very successful business man or a banker who had stock where dividends of a large figure were of frequent occurrence.

His hair and beard are of a fine iron gray. His pointed beard is fastidiously trimmed, his eyes are very bright, and he has the ruddy color that bespeaks a lover of nature.

Another distinguished visitor at the office window was Mrs. J. L. Gardner. At first she was only known to the onlookers as the veiled lady, for she was in black from head to toe, and the thick black veil absolutely concealed her features.

But when she put her hands behind her and talked there was an indiscribable manner all her own, and then everybody noted the trim, tailor-made gown that looked like a riding habit.

It was handsomely braided, and the collarless neck was just V enough in the back to reveal the plump neck that has shown off to advantage such heaps of diamonds.

Her hat was a small black toque, as simple as could be, and her veil was as the pall of night.

After giving her orders for her favorite seats Mrs. Gardner went to the gallery above and there watched the sale for some time.

Among the early buyers were Gen. W. W. Blackmar, J. C. R. Peabody, Dr. Marion, who has just returned from the front, Capt. Driver, Howard Ticknor, and scores of other well-known faces.

A symphony auction is always next in order to the sociability of a tea. On this occasion there was, as usual, much elation on the part of those who secured the very seats they wanted early.

A feature of a Symphony sale is the visiting from person to person of the black and white cat that has by long association become a part of Music Hall.

Although many society women attend all the concerts, the one on Friday afternoon is the only one that calls them out in great numbers. It was evident that most of the people had just come in to the auction from the country and shore, for they were as brown as berries.

ONE WOMAN'S CHAT.

If Paul Veronese were alive today and in Boston seeking a subject for his famous picture, "Industry," I am sure he would have received the necessary inspiration if he had yesterday attended the Symphony auction sale at Music Hall. There sat, where the light was good, a beautiful young woman patiently waiting until her choice of seats was auctioned off. Not idly did she sit, for her embroidery needle flashed in and out the finest of snowy line whereon the most exquisite of flowers were slowly but surely blooming. Although she embroidered she lost none of the sights, and not a single price of all the seats escaped her.

There were others who had taken their books along and quietly read. One part of the auction audience looked like a section of the Athenaeum. None of the readers were lost to the world though, and they managed to put the bids in as lively as those who did nothing but fasten their eyes on the chart.

"Without doubt," said an ancient Symphony habitue, "the return of Conductor Gericke is the source of the enthusiasm that has caused so many people to send in unlimited orders. That is what has made the price of tickets run so high.

"People know by experience that Gericke will get through on time, so that trains can be caught, and that fact alone is worth a good many dollars."

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 27, 1898.

SYMPHONY SEAT FOR $337.

Highest Premium Known Attained Yesterday.

Broker Wadsworth Was the Purchaser, but for Whom Not Known.

Others Were After the Seat and Rivalry Caused Lively Bidding.

The highest premium ever given for any seat in the history of the auction sales of seats for the Symphony orchestra public rehearsals was paid yesterday morning.

The premium was $325 and the seat No. 18 in row G, on the left of the center aisle.

The seat was bought by Mr Wadsworth, a broker, on the order of a person who sent in word to buy it at any price. Evidently somebody else had either given the same kind of an order to other brokers or else were present in person to try to get it, for the bidding was intensely exciting.

After the $100 mark had been passed each one of the bidders seemed so determined to secure the seat that raises of $25 were made up to $300, and then $10 and $5 bids followed, until it fell to Mr Wadsworth at $325. The ordinary price of the seat was $12 for the course, making the cost of the seat foot up to $337.

Rivalry for that particular seat is what forced up the premium so high, for another seat in the same row sold for a premium of $19.

There was more excitement when the center seats in the next row were reached. Mr James Connelly bought seat 17 in that row for $310. The seat across the aisle, and directly back of the one that realized $325, brought a premium of $1.50.

The seats in that part of the hall brought by far the highest prices of the day. H 19 was run up to $101, and H 20 $60. I 16 brought $101.

The sale began at 10 o'clock in Music hall. A large plan of the $12 seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals was erected on the platform, and the auctioneer began by selling the first seat in the first row. All were sold in regular order.

The hall was very well filled with people, greater interest than for the past few years being manifested. To the return of Mr Gericke as conductor is attributed one of the reasons for this deeper interest.

Mr Gericke dropped into the hall for a few moments during the progress of the sale, but there were few people who recognized him. He appeared at one of the entrances, stood for a few moments to watch the lively bidding, and then went away.

The first premium was for $5 for seat A 2, and then the prices ranged from that figure up to $19. Last year the range was from $8 to $15.

Premiums for the second row ran from $10.50 to $30, as compared with $12 to $17 last year.

In the third row the prices were from $13.50 to $31. Last year the range was from $12 to $21.

The fourth row brought premiums running from $13.50 to $61, against $18 to $29 last year. The limit of $61 was reached again in the fifth row, against $43 last year.

In the sixth row only $51 was reached, but this was just the lull before the storm, for it was on the seventh row that the bidding became so wild and exciting, and raised the premium to $325.

There was very lively competition then for the next six or seven rows, quite often a seat reaching $80, $90 and even $100.

After that bidding was steady, but good, the prices ranging from $20 to $60, but the average being from $30 to $40.

There was no recess. The auctioneer stood on the platform until after 3 o'clock, disposing of 1000 seats during that time.

FADED TEXT

The Boston Traveler

PUBLISHED BY THE
BOSTON TRAVELER CO.,
TORREY E. WARDNER, President.

Seventy-sixth year—Vol. LIV. No. 151

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1898.

THE SYMPHONY SALE

Today's Auction of the $7.50 Rehearsal Seats Brings Higher Prices.

The auction sale of the $7.50 seats for the Symphony rehearsals proceeded with vigor at Music Hall today, and a general advance on last year's prices was noted. Seats in the fourth row under the balcony ranged from $8 to $13 in premiums, and from those figures down to $5 and less as the extreme rear of the hall was reached.

The balcony seats went briskly and at good figures. A seat on the right sold at a premium of $39, the highest at the sale, compared with the highest premium paid last year of $33 for a seat in practically the same location on the opposite balcony.

The highest premiums were paid in the right balcony, comprising the rear row of seats. The range of premiums on the rear row of seats on left balcony was between $16.50 and $30.

Seats in the balcony centre, first row of $7.50 seats, sold at premiums of $10.50 to $15, and even the places against the rear wall brought an average price of $10.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIV., NO. 89.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 27, 1898.

SYMPHONY HIGH PRICES.

Big Premiums Paid for Seats in the Balcony and in the Rear of the Hall.

The sale, today, of balcony seats and seats in the rear of the hall for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was a distinct success, and the premiums paid were high. Every seat offered was taken, the premiums ranging from $8 to $40. For the most part the bidding was spirited, there being about 300 ladies and gentlemen present, most of whom were active buyers.

SYMPHONY TICKETS.

It is certainly not the fault of the founder of the Symphony concerts that his original purpose of furnishing high-class music here in Boston at low prices has failed to achieve that end. The class of entertainment provided has had an effect to make the competition for the possession of tickets very brisk, until now the premiums paid for the more desirable seats are the highest ever obtained. This is highly creditable to Boston's sense of appreciation of high-class music, but it is a condition of things that relegates to the region of the back rows those who are unable to pay high prices for the entertainment provided.

Mr. Gericke will find the Symphony orchestra all right. With the exception of the new men, perhaps, they are in perfect condition for the most masterful conducting. See if they are not!

Music hath charms to secure unprecedentedly big premiums on Symphony tickets likewise.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 27, 1898.

SPIRITED BIDDING AT MUSIC HALL.

$7.50 Seats for Friday Afternoon Rehearsals Brought Premiums Ranging From $10 to $40.

At the auction sale this morning in Music hall of the Boston symphony orchestra $7.50 seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals there was some spirited bidding. It was a fine sale and soon over. There were nearly 300 present. The seats offered for sale were the last six rows on the floor, the last three rows in the balcony center, the last row on the balcony sides and the entire second balcony.

The premiums paid ranged from $10 to $40. For the first seat sold a premium of $13 was paid.

Every seat in the hall is now sold, and at prices averaging higher than last year.

The public sale of seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be held Thursday and Friday next.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State.

The Official Paper of the City.

DNESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 28, 1898.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

All the seats for the Friday matinees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been sold, and there is every indication that the demand for tickets for the Saturday evening concerts will be quite as large, the evening performances being in many respects the more brilliant occasions. The tickets for the evening series will be sold at Music Hall tomorrow and Friday. MM. Longy, Marquarre and Selmer, the French artists engaged to fill the vacancies in the orchestra, arrived from Paris yesterday. [illegible]

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 18

WILHELM GERICKE, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who arrived here on Tuesday evening last, as already announced in these columns, left for Boston on Saturday. Mr. Gericke tells us that to him the greatest satisfaction is found in the permanency of the orchestral system in Boston; the retention, practically, of the same forces, the resulting esprit de corps, the advantage all of this offers to capable musicians in the shape of a definite and fixed income and an enviable social position, leaving aside entirely the enormous gain for art as represented by the permanent orchestra. Mr. Gericke has nearly all of his programs arranged.

Emil Paur, director of the New York Philharmonic Society, reached this city with his wife and children last week, and has succeeded in establishing his household. Mr. Paur has completed his Philharmonic program scheme. The soloist for the first Philharmonic will be the pianist Miss Adele Aus der Ohe, who reached New York from Europe last week. For the second Philharmonic the soloist will be Willy Burmester, the violinist, and Madame Schumann-Heinck, the German mezzo-soprano dramatico, will sing at the third concert.

Mr. Paur will conduct the Astoria subscription concerts and the opening concert of Sauer, the piano virtuoso, which is to take place at the Metropolitan Opera House on January 10. Mr. Paur's engagements here will be very numerous, and he will also conduct concerts in Boston, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, Washington and other cities.

Besides these two eminent conductors, who called at the sanctum of THE COURIER, we also had the pleasure of a call from Symphony Conductor Fritz Scheel, of San Francisco, and ex-assistant conductor of the Thomas Orchestra, Arthur Mees. After this we should know how to beat time.

PROGRAMS OF BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The programs for the first four concerts are as follows:

FIRST CONCERT, OCTOBER 15.

Overture, Euryanthe............................Weber
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte......................Bach
String Orchestra.
Variations on a Theme by Haydn (Chorale Sancti Antoni), op. 56.........................Brahms
Symphony No. 5, in C minor, op. 67..........Beethoven

SECOND CONCERT, OCTOBER 22.

Overture, Melpomene........................Chadwick
Concerto for violin in A minor, op. 28..........Goldmark
Franz Kneisel.
Symphonic poem, Vysehrad (My Country)......Smetana
Symphony No. 2, in C major, op. 61..........Schumann

THIRD CONCERT, OCTOBER 29.

Overture, Im Fruhling (In the Spring), op. 36..Goldmark
Song—
Madame Gadski (song not given).
Symphony Pathetique, No. 6, in B minor, op. 74.............................Tschaikowsky
Song—
Madame Gadski (song not given).
Menuet and Fugue from the Quartet No. 9, op. 59.................................Beethoven
String Orchestra.
Hungarian Rhapsody No. 1.......................Liszt

FOURTH CONCERT, NOVEMBER 5.

Symphony No. 3, in F major, op. 90.............Brahms
Piano concerto—
Mr. Rosenthal (concerto not given).
Tone poem, Don Juan, op. 20...........Richard Strauss
Prelude and closing scene from Tristan and Isolde..Wagner

The concerts are given in response to requests from very many members of the Institute who are lovers of music, and who desire to attend concerts that are not only enjoyable, but are also instructive.

III. Five popular Friday matinee Philharmonic concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Wilhelm Gericke, conductor, in the Academy of Music, Borough of Brooklyn, on Friday afternoons, November 11, December 16, January 20, February 24, March 24, at half-past three (3:30) o'clock.

IV. Five Saturday evening Philharmonic concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Wilhelm Gericke, conductor, in the Academy of Music, on the following Saturday evenings: November 12, December 17, January 21, February 25, March 25, at a quarter past eight (8:15) o'clock.

The soloists invited to assist at the Philharmonic concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the season in Brooklyn include the following: Ben Davies, baritone; Moriz Rosenthal, pianist; Mme. Teresa Carreño, pianist; Franz Kneisel, violin; Willy Burmester, violin; Alwin Schroeder, 'cello. Other soloists will be announced later.

Moriz Rosenthal will be the soloist at the opening matinee concert on Friday, November 11, and at the opening concert on Saturday, November 12.

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.

$40 PREMIUM

Highest Figure Bid at Sale of $7.50 Symphony Seats.

The auction of $7.50 seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was held in Music Hall this morning.

The general values, as compared with last year, are about the same, although varying in different sections of the house.

The seats that had been listed as included in this value were the last section on the floor under the balcony, the last row in the first balcony and the rear section of seats near the entrance in the first balcony.

Bids on the floor seats were light, ranging from $19 and $20 premium in the first row of the section to $8 in the last. The balcony values were somewhat better and called forth some spirited bidding.

Premiums ranged from $16 as high as $40 along the side rows, with a marked decrease in the rear.

Almost as many were present at the auction of these seats as were at the sale of the $12 seats yesterday, and many were unable to secure seats in the places they desired.

The sale has been so active and strong this year thus far, that many predict a scarcity of seats at any price, for both afternoon rehearsals and evening concerts.

The demand for a larger building to accommodate the crowds is apparent.

Various causes were assigned to the exceeding difficulty to obtain choice seats at the Symphony rehearsal auction. A great many expressed their belief that it was the double assurance of exceptionally good concerts given by the advertised personnel. A great many others, however, and among them the professional ticket brokers, assigned the results to an exceedingly large number of tickets demanded by responsible patrons who placed unlimited means of bidding in their reach. For this reason the room for a time had the appearance of an open exchange.

* * * * *

[illegible]

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28

FAIRLY HIGH PREMIUMS.

Sale of $7 50 Seats for the Symphony Rehearsals at Music Hall.

Fair premiums were obtained on the $7 50 Symphony rehearsal seats, which were sold at Music Hall yesterday. The bidding was lively.

It looked at first as though the phenomenal average made Monday on the $12 seats was to be reflected in Tuesday's sale. The first seat brought $13 50, and that was about the price that extended across the whole aisle. The seats way back on the floor, up against the maroon wall, all drew a premium. Generally it was $4 or $4 50.

The high price scare began when the first balcony seat, at the end of the second row, over the stage, sold for $31 50. But it was only a momentary flight. The price soon fell $10 or so and varied no more than a few dollars until a seat half-way down the back row was reached, and, although it cuddles up against one of the pilasters, it cost its buyer $39 50. That was the highest price of the day.

Some of the seats in the back row on the other side of the hall were sold for $30, and $28, and thereabout, making a very high average for $7 50 seats. The last seat sold on that side, opposite Hamilton Place, in the second row, on the aisle that runs up from the corner of the stage, brought $36. That was the second highest premium.

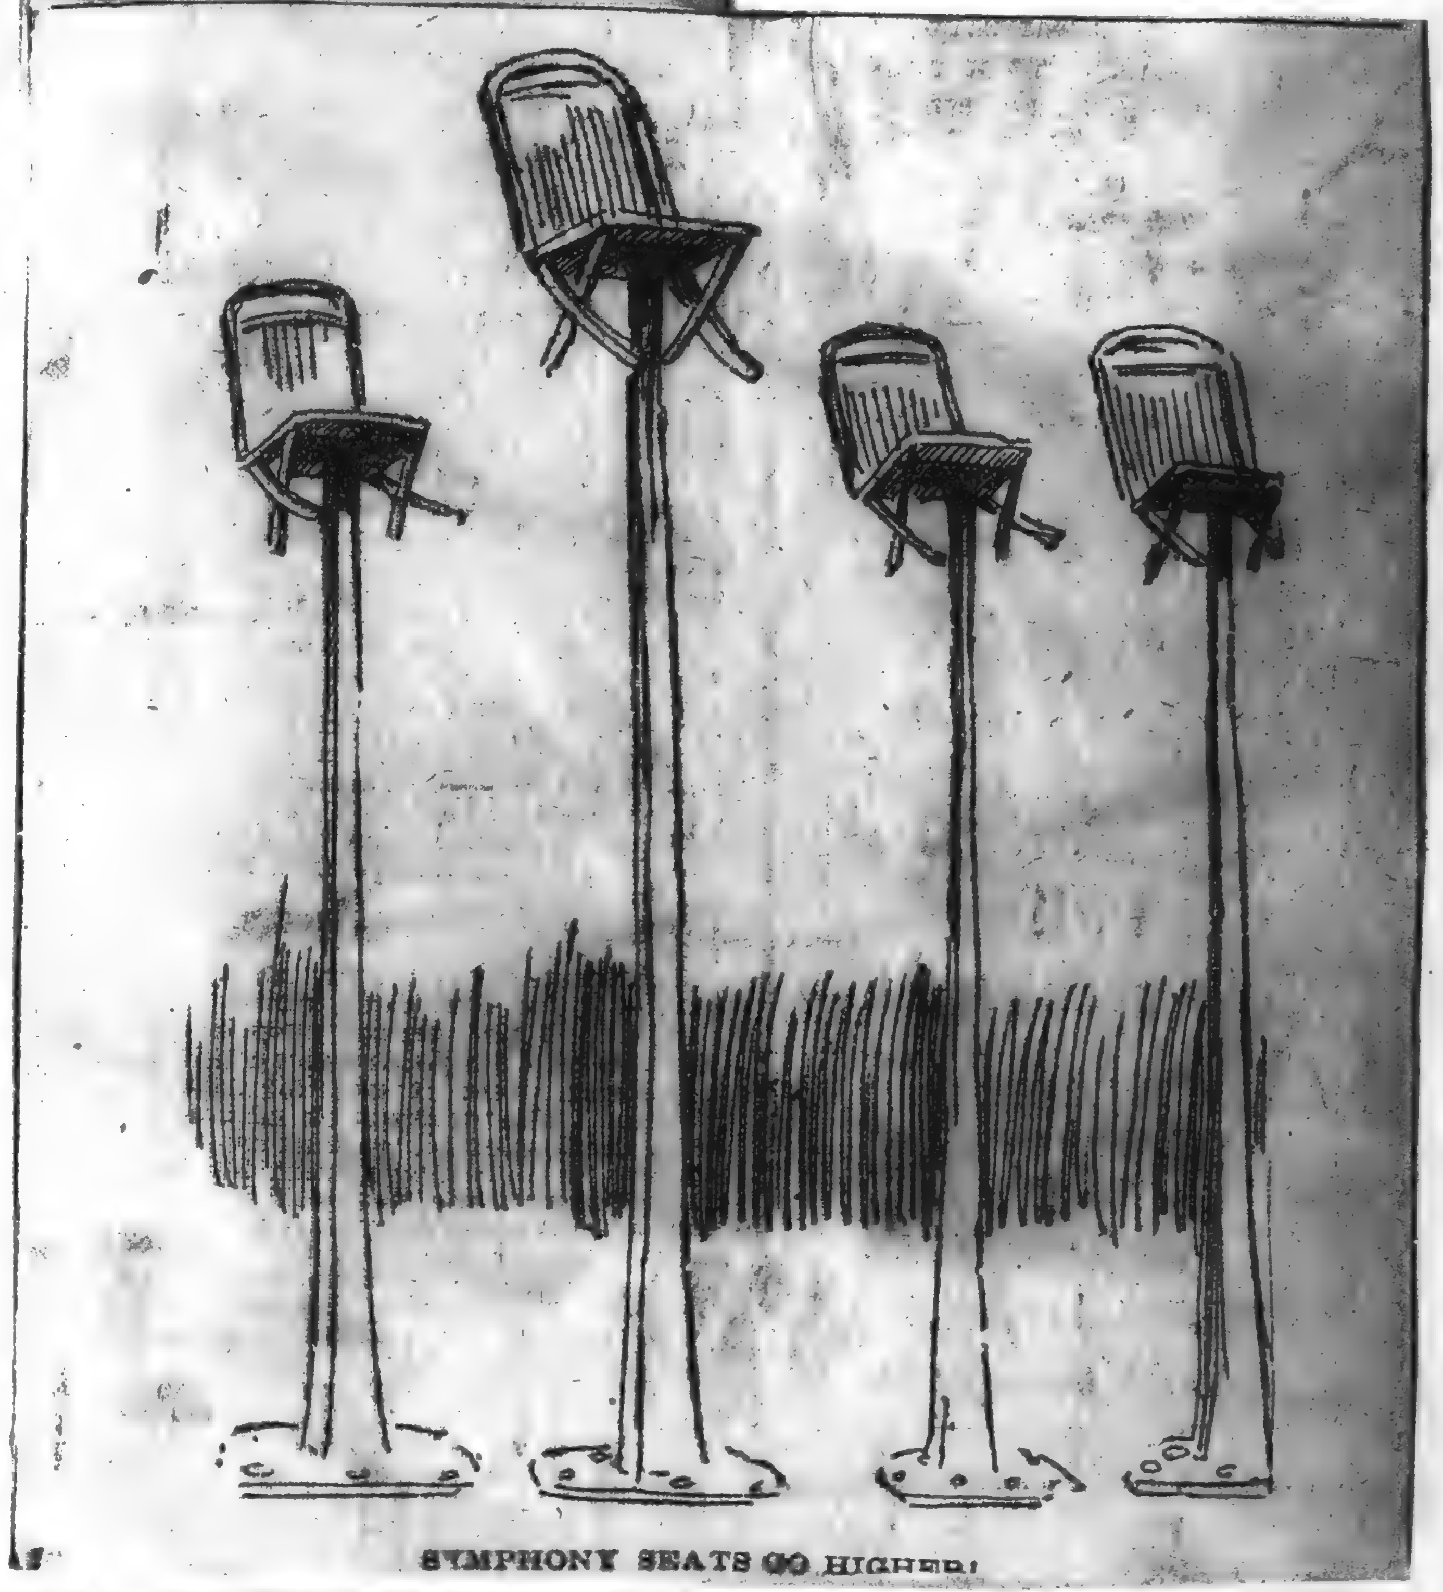
The seats in the rear of the first balcony, behind the clock, averaged $15 in the first row sold, and about $12 in the row next to the wall.

The $12 concert seats will be sold Thursday.

In conversation with a Journal reporter, Mr. Charles F. Ellis, the manager of the Symphony Orchestra, said that if the sale should continue on the lines set thus far it will probably eclipse all the records. We attribute the remarkable sale partly to the stimulation caused by Mr. Gericke's return and partly to business prosperity.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The tickets for the evening series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will be sold at Music Hall tomorrow and Friday. Messrs. Longy, Marquarre and Selmer, the French artists engaged to fill the vacancies in the orchestra, arrived from Paris yesterday.



SYMPHONY SEATS GO HIGHER!

BOSTON POST, 28
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The sale of season tickets covering all the reserved seats in Music Hall for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra indicates the remarkable attractiveness of the performances of this fine organization. The matinee houses are made up largely of people living out of town, while the Saturday evening concerts attract the representative Boston audiences and are in some respects the more brilliant occasions. The tickets for the evening series will be sold at Music Hall tomorrow and Friday. Messrs. Longy, Marquarre and Selmer, the French artists engaged to fill the vacancies in the orchestra, arrived from Paris yesterday.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIV., NO. 90.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 28, 1898.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

All the seats for the Friday matinees of the Boston Symphony orchestra have been sold, and there is every indication that the demand for tickets for the Saturday evening concerts will be quite as large, the evening performances being in many respects the more brilliant occasions. The tickets for the evening series will be sold at Music Hall tomorrow and Friday.

Messrs. Longy, Marquarre and Selmer, the French artists engaged to fill the vacancies in the orchestra, arrived from Paris yesterday. The concerts will begin on Oct. 14.

A $[illegible] Symphony rehearsal ticket is something to frame and hang up at the end of the season.

FADED TEXT

The Boston Traveler

PUBLISHED BY THE
BOSTON TRAVELER CO.,
TORREY E. WARDNER, President.

Seventy-sixth year—Vol. LIV. No. 151

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 27, 1898.

THE SYMPHONY SALE

Today's Auction of the $7.50 Rehearsal Seats Brings Higher Prices.

The auction sale of the $7.50 seats for the Symphony rehearsals proceeded with vigor at Music Hall today, and a general advance on last year's prices was noted. Seats in the fourth row under the balcony ranged from $8 to $13 in premiums, and from these figures down to $5 and less as the extreme rear of the hall was reached.

The balcony seats went briskly and at good figures. A seat on the right sold at a premium of $39, the highest at the sale, compared with the highest premium paid last year of $33 for a seat in practically the same location on the opposite balcony.

The highest premiums were paid in the right balcony, comprising the rear row of seats. The range of premiums on the rear row of seats on left balcony was between $16.50 and $30.

Seats in the balcony centre, first row of $7.50 seats, sold at premiums of $10.50 to $15, and even the places against the rear wall brought an average price of $10.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIV., NO. 89.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 27, 1898.

SYMPHONY HIGH PRICES.

Big Premiums Paid for Seats in the Balcony and in the Rear of the Hall.

The sale, today, of balcony seats and seats in the rear of the hall for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony orchestra, was a distinct success, and the premiums paid were high. Every seat offered was taken, the premiums ranging from $8 to $40. For the most part the bidding was spirited, there being about 300 ladies and gentlemen present, most of whom were active buyers.

SYMPHONY TICKETS.

It is certainly not the fault of the founder of the Symphony concerts that his original purpose of furnishing high-class music here in Boston at low prices has failed to achieve that end. The class of entertainment provided has had an effect to make the competition for the possession of tickets very brisk, until now the premiums paid for the more desirable seats are the highest ever obtained. This is highly creditable to Boston's sense of appreciation of high-class music, but it is a condition of things that relegates to the region of the back rows those who are unable to pay high prices for the entertainment provided.

Mr. Gericke will find the Symphony orchestra all right. With the exception of the new men, perhaps, they are in perfect condition for the most masterful conducting. See if they are not!

Music hath charms to secure unprecedentedly big premiums on Symphony tickets likewise.

Boston Daily Globe.

TUESDAY, SEPT. 27, 1898.

SPIRITED BIDDING AT MUSIC HALL.

$7.50 Seats for Friday Afternoon Rehearsals Brought Premiums Ranging From $10 to $40.

At the auction sale this morning in Music hall of the Boston symphony orchestra $7.50 seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals there was some spirited bidding. It was a fine sale and soon over. There were nearly 300 present. The seats offered for sale were the last six rows on the floor, the last three rows in the balcony center, the last row on the balcony sides and the entire second balcony.

The premiums paid ranged from $10 to $40. For the first seat sold a premium of $13 was paid.

Every seat in the hall is now sold, and at prices averaging higher than last year.

The public sale of seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be held Thursday and Friday next.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State.

The Official Paper of the City.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 28, 1898.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

All the seats for the Friday matinees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been sold, and there is every indication that the demand for tickets for the Saturday evening concerts will be quite as large, the evening performances being, in many respects the more brilliant occasions. The tickets for the evening series will be sold at Music Hall tomorrow and Friday. MM. Longy, Marquarre and Selmer, the French artists engaged to fill the vacancies in the orchestra, arrived from Paris yesterday. The concerts will begin on Oct. 14.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 18

WILHELM GERICKE, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who arrived here on Tuesday evening last, as already announced in these columns, left for Boston on Saturday. Mr. Gericke tells us that to him the greatest satisfaction is found in the permanency of the orchestral system in Boston; the retention, practically, of the same forces, the resulting esprit de corps, the advantage all of this offers to capable musicians in the shape of a definite and fixed income and an enviable social position, leaving aside entirely the enormous gain for art as represented by the permanent orchestra. Mr. Gericke has nearly all of his programs arranged.

Emil Paur, director of the New York Philharmonic Society, reached this city with his wife and children last week, and has succeeded in establishing his household. Mr. Paur has completed his Philharmonic program scheme. The soloist for the first Philharmonic will be the pianist Miss Adele Aus der Ohe, who reached New York from Europe last week. For the second Philharmonic the soloist will be Willy Burmester, the violinist, and Madame Schumann-Heinck, the German mezzo-soprano dramatico, will sing at the third concert.

Mr. Paur will conduct the Astoria subscription concerts and the opening concert of Sauer, the piano virtuoso, which is to take place at the Metropolitan Opera House on January 10. Mr. Paur's engagements here will be very numerous, and he will also conduct concerts in Boston, Philadelphia, Brooklyn, Washington and other cities.

Besides these two eminent conductors, who called at the sanctum of THE COURIER, we also had the pleasure of a call from Symphony Conductor Fritz Scheel, of San Francisco, and ex-assistant conductor of the Thomas Orchestra, Arthur Mees. After this we should know how to beat time.

PROGRAMS OF BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The programs for the first four concerts are as follows:

FIRST CONCERT, OCTOBER 15.

Overture, Euryanthe..............................Weber
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte......................Bach
String Orchestra.
Variations on a Theme by Haydn (Chorale Sancti Antoni), op. 56..............................Brahms
Symphony No. 5, in C minor, op. 67..........Beethoven

SECOND CONCERT, OCTOBER 22.

Overture, Melpomene........................Chadwick
Concerto for violin in A minor, op. 28..........Goldmark
Franz Kneisel.
Symphonic poem, Vysehrad (My Country)......Smetana
Symphony No. 2, in C major, op. 61...........Schumann

THIRD CONCERT, OCTOBER 29.

Overture, Im Fruhling (In the Spring), op. 36..Goldmark
Song—
Madame Gadski (song not given).
Symphony Pathetique, No. 6, in B minor, op. 74..............................Tschaikowsky
Song—
Madame Gadski (song not given).
Menuet and Fugue from the Quartet No. 9, op. 59..................................Beethoven
String Orchestra.
Hungarian Rhapsody No. 1..............................Liszt

FOURTH CONCERT, NOVEMBER 5.

Symphony No. 3, in F major, op. 90.............Brahms
Piano concerto—
Mr. Rosenthal (concerto not given).
Tone poem, Don Juan, op. 20............Richard Strauss
Prelude and closing scene from Tristan and Isolde. Wagner

The concerts are given in response to requests from very many members of the Institute who are lovers of music, and who desire to attend concerts that are not only enjoyable, but are also instructive.

III. Five popular Friday matinee Philharmonic concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Wilhelm Gericke, conductor, in the Academy of Music, Borough of Brooklyn, on Friday afternoons, November 11, December 16, January 20, February 24, March 24, at half-past three (3:30) o'clock.

IV. Five Saturday evening Philharmonic concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Wilhelm Gericke, conductor, in the Academy of Music, on the following Saturday evenings: November 12, December 17, January 21, February 25, March 25, at a quarter past eight (8:15) o'clock.

The soloists invited to assist at the Philharmonic concerts with the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the season in Brooklyn include the following: Ben Davies, baritone; Moriz Rosenthal, pianist; Mme. Teresa Carreño, pianist; Franz Kneisel, violin; Willy Burmester, violin; Alwin Schroeder, 'cello. Other soloists will be announced later.

Moriz Rosenthal will be the soloist at the opening matinee concert on Friday, November 11, and at the opening concert on Saturday, November 12.

"This Country with its Institutions, Belongs to the People who Inhabit It."

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.

$40 PREMIUM

Highest Figure Bid at Sale of $7.50 Symphony Seats.

The auction of $7.50 seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was held in Music Hall this morning.

The general values, as compared with last year, are about the same, although varying in different sections of the house.

The seats that had been listed as included in this value were the last section on the floor under the balcony, the last row in the first balcony and the rear section of seats near the entrance in the first balcony.

Bids on the floor seats were light, ranging from $19 and $20 premium in the first row of the section to $3 in the last. The balcony values were somewhat better and called forth some spirited bidding.

Premiums ranged from $16 as high as $40 along the side rows, with a marked decrease in the rear.

Almost as many were present at the auction of these seats as were at the sale of the $12 seats yesterday, and many were unable to secure seats in the places they desired.

The sale has been so active and strong this year thus far, that many predict a scarcity of seats at any price, for both afternoon rehearsals and evening concerts.

The demand for a larger building to accommodate the crowds is apparent.

Various causes were assigned to the exceeding difficulty to obtain choice seats at the Symphony rehearsal auction. A great many expressed their belief that it was the double assurance of exceptionally good concerts given by the advertised personnel. A great many others, however, and among them the professional ticket brokers, assigned the results to an exceedingly large number of tickets demanded by responsible patrons who placed unlimited means of bidding in their reach. For this reason the room for a time had the appearance of an open exchange.

* * * * *

Boston Journal.

WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1898.

FAIRLY HIGH PREMIUMS.

Sale of $7 50 Seats for the Symphony Rehearsals at Music Hall.

Fair premiums were obtained on the $7 50 Symphony rehearsal seats, which were sold at Music Hall yesterday. The bidding was lively.

It looked at first as though the phenomenal average made Monday on the $12 seats was to be reflected in Tuesday's sale. The first seat brought $13 50, and that was about the price that extended across the whole aisle. The seats way back on the floor, up against the maroon wall, all drew a premium. Generally it was $4 or $4 50.

The high price scare began when the first balcony seat, at the end of the second row, over the stage, sold for $31 50. But it was only a momentary flight. The price soon fell $10 or so, and varied no more than a few dollars until a seat half-way down the back row was reached, and, although it cuddles up against one of the pilasters, it cost its buyer $39 50. That was the highest price of the day.

Some of the seats in the back row on the other side of the hall were sold for $30, and $28, and thereabout, making a very high average for $7 50 seats. The last seat sold on that side, opposite Hamilton Place, in the second row, on the aisle that runs up from the corner of the stage, brought $36. That was the second highest premium.

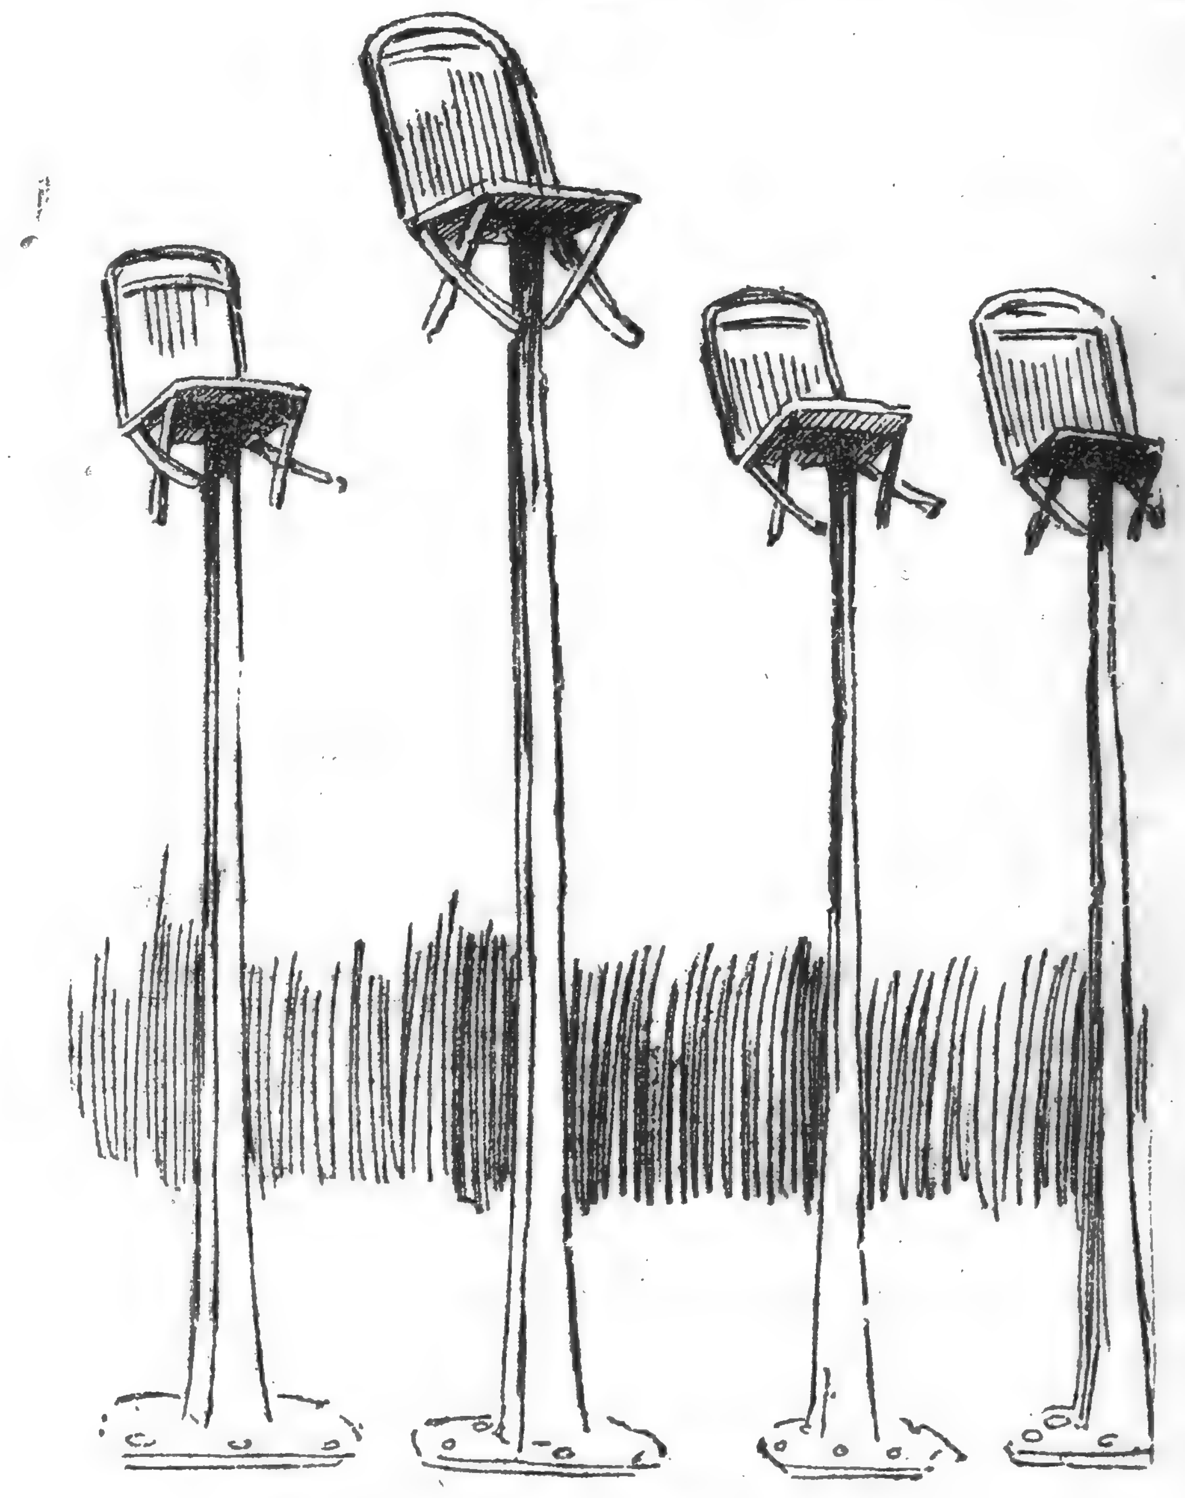
The seats in the rear of the first balcony, behind the clock, averaged $15 in the first row sold, and about $12 in the row next to the wall.

The $12 concert seats will be sold Thursday.

In conversation with a Journal reporter, Mr. Charles E. Ellis, the manager of the Symphony Orchestra, said that if the sale should continue on the lines set thus far it will probably eclipse all the records. We attribute the remarkable sale partly to the stimulation caused by Mr. Gericke's return and partly to business prosperity.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The tickets for the evening series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts will be sold at Music Hall tomorrow and Friday. Messrs. Longy, Marquarre and Selmer, the French artists engaged to fill the vacancies in the orchestra, arrived from Paris yesterday.



SYMPHONY SEATS GO HIGHER!

BOSTON POST, 28
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The sale of season tickets covering all the reserved seats in Music Hall for the Friday afternoon public rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra indicates the remarkable attractiveness of the performances of this fine organization. The matinee houses are made up largely of people living out of town, while the Saturday evening concerts attract the representative Boston audiences and are in some respects the more brilliant occasions. The tickets for the evening series will be sold at Music Hall tomorrow and Friday. Messrs. Longy, Marquarre and Selmer, the French artists engaged to fill the vacancies in the orchestra, arrived from Paris yesterday.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIV., NO. 90.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 28, 1898.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

All the seats for the Friday matinees of the Boston Symphony orchestra have been sold, and there is every indication that the demand for tickets for the Saturday evening concerts will be quite as large, the evening performances being in many respects the more brilliant occasions. The tickets for the evening series will be sold at Music Hall tomorrow and Friday.

Messrs. Longy, Marquarre and Selmer, the French artists engaged to fill the vacancies in the orchestra, arrived from Paris yesterday. The concerts will begin on Oct. 14.

A $325 Symphony rehearsal ticket is something to frame and hang up at the end of the season.

Boston Daily Globe.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 28, 1898.

BROUGHT BIG PREMIUMS.

Sale of Seats for Friday Afternoon Symphony Rehearsals.

At the auction sale yesterday in Music hall of the Boston symphony orchestra $7.50 seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals there was some spirited bidding. It was a fine sale and soon over. There were nearly 300 present. The seats offered for sale were the last six rows on the floor, the last three rows in the balcony center, the last row on the balcony sides and the entire second balcony.

The premiums paid ranged from $10 to [illegible]. For the first seat sold a premium of $13 was paid.

Every seat in the hall is now sold, and at prices averaging higher than last year.

The public sale of seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be held Thursday and Friday next.

HOME JOURNAL.

NEW YORK:
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1898.

Boston Symphony Ticket Prices.—At the auction sale of tickets on Monday for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Music Hall, Boston, the prices paid for seats—nominal price, $12.00—were the highest in the history of the organization. The largest sum paid as premium was $325 for a seat in the seventh row of the orchestra. The next seat drew a premium of $310, and the next $150. Just back of these, three seats brought $152.50. It is expected that the sale of evening concert seats will bring still higher prices.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 29, 1898.

PREMIUMS RUN UP TO $65.

First Day's Sale at Music Hall of Symphony Concert Seats—Goodly Attendance and Spirited Bidding.

Music hall was given over to trade and traffic today, but the business transacted was no desecration of this temple of music—rather it was the highest tribute that could be given of the entire devotion to the tuneful art—as exemplified by the performances of the Symphony, admittedly the highest orchestral organization in the civilized world.

"Money talks," and dollars added to dollars, in premiums for seats, furnished irrefragible proof that the people of this city fully appreciate their great musical privilege in the possession of the Symphony, and are liberal and cheerful in its support.

It was the first day of the sale of the "concert" seats. The sale of the rehearsal tickets was finished yesterday, and at an advance in premiums over those obtained in preceding seasons. Yesterday's good results were better than duplicated today as a whole.

There was a goodly attendance of buyers, including some speculators, of course, and also persons commissioned to procure tickets for others. The bidding was spirited, and although the progressive "raises" were made in relatively small sums, yet finally the successful competitor was obliged to pay a handsome amount as a bonus for choice of location.

The solo recitative part in the sale fell to auctioneer Jackson. He was in perfect voice and both letter and figure perfect in his score, as was naturally to be expected from his years of practice. Unlike vocal artists in general, he showed no irritation by interruptions from the floor, which came in the form of monosyllables and dissyllables from all part of the building. He, on the contrary, seemed to enjoy it, and did everything in his power to continue and increase it.

And not in vain he pleaded,
And all the tempter heeded,
However sore they needed
Their funds for other use.

For music's most delightful,
To lack it would be frightful,
In Boston 'tis a rightful
Enjoyment, not abuse.

The sale began shortly after 10. The bidding was for choice of locations only, and added to the price of the course ticket. The lower floor was sold today.

The first seat sold at $1.75 premium. Premiums in row A (first row) ranged between $1.75 and $3.75. Last year $1 to $4.

Premiums in second row (B) ranged between $2.75 and $11; in third row, from $3.50 to $12; in fourth row, between $6 and $20. Some other premiums were: $10 for No. 10 in row B, $30 for No. 26 in row H, $12 for No. 30 in row J, $65 for No. 19 in row J, $21 for No. 20 in row J.

The New York Times

"All the News That's Fit to Print."

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.

NEW YORK, THURSDAY, SEPT. 29, 1898.

$350 for One Symphony Ticket.

From The Boston Herald.

It is certainly not the fault of the founder of the Symphony concerts that his original purpose of furnishing high-class music here in Boston at low prices has failed to achieve that end. The class of entertainment provided has had an effect to make the competition for the possession of tickets very brisk, until now the premiums paid for the more desirable seats are the highest ever attained. This is highly creditable to Boston's sense of appreciation of high-class music, but it is a condition of things that relegates to the region of the back rows those who are unable to pay high prices for the entertainment provided.

[illegible]

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.

$64 PREMIUM

Highest Paid at Continued Sale of $12 Symphony Seats.

The sale at auction of symphony concert tickets was resumed in Music Hall this morning. The offerings were the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts.

There was a good number of prospective buyers present, several hundred persons occupying seats in the first section. All the ticket agencies were represented and their commissions made them the heaviest buyers.

There were no fancy prices bid up to noon when the choicest section of seats was passed, but premiums ranged steadily high—perhaps 10 to 12 p. c. higher than last year.

Few if any premiums that ranged under $10 up to that time, even for seats in undesirable places. The best premiums were realized on the rows beginning with F or G.

The four center seats in G—16, 17, 18 and 19—brought a premium of $37 each being bought by an agent for a patron. A single seat in G brought a premium of $51.

H row was a favorite, side seats bringing $20 premium; seats on the side aisles $30; and seats in the center aisle $40.

Mr. Wadsworth purchased 17, 18 and 19 at the latter figure. Mr. Endicott bought 10, 11 and 12 at $30 premium.

Row I also brought good prices. Seats 5, 6, 7 and 8, on the right side aisle brought $25 premium each, and the better seats commanded correspondingly better prices.

Row J was the row in which the best price was realized. Two seats on the center aisle were sold to Mr. Farnsworth for $64 premium each, and a single seat in the center aisle to Herrick for $52.

Herrick also bought the center in K for $33. Connolly made purchases in E, F, G and H, at prices ranging from $10 to $38.

--It is noticeable this year that more commissions than ever are being executed by the brokers. The result has been less fancy prices—in spite of the record breaking of Monday—but a generally higher level price at which seats are valued by the buyers.

MORE

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1898

HIGHEST PRICE WAS $64

Premiums Were Not Sensational for the Symphony Concerts

As usual much higher premiums were paid for seats at the Symphony Orchestra's rehearsals than for the Saturday evening concerts. At the sale of the $12 rehearsal seats on Monday morning the premiums averaged more than $50; while this morning the same seats for the concerts fell far below that figure. For $15 a person could obtain a good seat, while for $25 or $30 a choice of the best could be had. There was little spirited bidding this morning. The greater number of seats went off quietly, with little excitement. There were only a few $40 bids, two of $50 and the highest price was reached when a gentleman paid $64 for seats 18 and 19 in row J.

Not more than two hundred people could be counted in the great hall when the first seat was put up, but during the forenoon undoubtedly five or six hundred passed in and out. There were a great number of seats to be sold, and they went off so slowly, in spite of the efforts of the auctioneer, that by one o'clock the balcony seats had not been reached and the auctioneer's voice began to show the strain.

At ten by the great clock in the rear of the hall, the first seat, No. 1, row A, was auctioned off and all it brought was $1.75. The next one was sold for a little more, but the average of the first three rows was hardly $6. A $15 premium was very high, until seat 18, row E, was reached—an aisle seat, excellently located. Then the bidding started briskly, and the seat was finally sold for $41 to a young lady, after an interesting contest. Four seats in G, 16 to 18, brought $37 apiece, while three in H, 17-19, cost the bidder $40 each. Seats in J were very popular, the first dozen averaging $25. No sooner was No. 17 put up than it became the bone of contention between two bidders, and when it was sold it brought in $52. Hardly had those present recovered from their astonishment at so high bidding, than seats 18 and 19 were contended for fiercely and brought the highest premium of any seat on the floor, $64 each.

In rows K and L the premiums took a drop, the best seats bringing less than $15, but rose appreciably in the suceeding rows, only to fall when the rear seats were put on sale.

At 1.30 P. M. a recess of twenty minutes was taken, after which the balcony seats were sold.

TOWN TOPICS

NEW YORK, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1898.

MRS. SKINNER seemed a much younger woman than her years would show, and was distinguished looking in bearing and dress. The funeral services were on Saturday, at the town house, on Beacon street. Singularly enough, at the time of Mrs. Skinner's death, which was wholly unexpected, her brother, John L. Gardner, was cruising homeward from Portland on Mayflower with a party, and Mrs. Jack had just returned from Westbury, L. I., where she has been visiting Mrs. Tom Hitchcock, Jr., and that very afternoon had taken a jolly party to the Readville races. This family affliction, however, did not prevent the lady from being at the station an hour or two after the funeral services on Saturday, where she was seen in her mourning robes walking up and down the platform between her rural protegé, George Proctor, a pianist, and Kneisel, first violin of the Symphony Orchestra. The two awaited the train bearing Herr Gericke and his family to Boston after their recent arrival from Germany. In the meantime it had been noised abroad that this chatting and unusual looking lady was Mrs. Jack Gardner, so, by the time the distinguished conductor arrived, a motley crowd of station employees, cabmen and general hangers-on were curiously watching the scene. Herr Gericke, when he was leader of the Orchestra some years ago, consented to become a protegé of Mrs. Jack's. Now he returns, an older and wiser man, his handsome black hair and beard turned gray, with a bright-eyed and plump wife who looks fully able to take care of him, their clever little five-year old daughter and the inevitable German mother, who make up the Gericke ménage, he seems to be pretty well fenced in from any of the outside allurements such as always beset the Boston Symphony Orchestra leader, as well as the first violins, Tim Adamowski of the latter furnishing the most notable example.

The Boston Traveler

PUBLISHED BY THE
BOSTON TRAVELER CO.,
TORREY E. WARDNER, President.

Seventy-sixth year—Vol. LIV. No. 153

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1898.

THE SYMPHONY SALE

Prices for the $12 Evening Concert Seats Are Higher Than Last Year's.

Another large gathering was seated in Music Hall at 10 this morning when Auctioneer Jackson began the sale of the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts of the Symphony Orchestra. There were more leal music-lovers on hand, since the evening entertainments are not such society events as the Friday afternoon rehearsals.

The sale began briskly and well. A1, the first seat, sold at $1.75 premium. Premiums in this row ranged between $1.75 and $3.75, compared with range for same row last year of $1 to $4. Prices began to run higher as the centre of the hall was reached. Premiums for row B ranged between $2.75 and $11; for row C, $3.50 to $12; for row D, $6 and $20. As the choice rows were reached the prices mounted until $40 and $50 was a common thing. The rear floor seats, of course, went very cheap, but the balconies brought stiff prices.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIV., NO. 92.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 30, 1898.

NO HIGH PREMIUMS.

Low Prices for the $7.50 Tickets for the Saturday Evening Symphony Concerts.

The fourth and last day's sale of Symphony concert tickets opened in Music Hall this morning with a large attendance. The seats disposed of were the $7.50 tickets for the Saturday evening concerts. The bidding throughout the morning dragged considerably, the tendency being to start the offers very low, with advances of not more than 50 cents a bid. In this way, it was a long time before even the few remaining floor seats were sold, and the sale of first balcony seats begun.

None of the seats brought extravagant figures. There was little or no rivalry for choice positions, and the highest bid of the day was for a premium of $20. The general average was between $5 and $8 per seat, and a large number, mostly seats on the floor in the extreme rear of the hall, went as low as 50 cents premium.

Seat 51, in row 11, was the first one put up, shortly after 10 o'clock. It was knocked down at a premium of $5. The remaining floor seats all went at about the same figure, none bringing as high a premium as $7.

First balcony seats back of the front row were next put up, and brought fair prices. The range of offers was wide, varying from $2 to $18, according to location.

All of the second balcony seats are included in the $7.50 rate. It was 12:30 before the first of these was offered for sale, and the bidding, which had perceptibly lagged on the rear row seats, immediately became lively when the choice front row positions in the upper tier were reached. The first few seats went low, owing to their location over the stage. Getting nearer to the centre of the hall, competition grew warm, and a number went for as high as $20, the highest figure paid up to that time during the day.

There was a noticable lack of bidding from the speculators today, their traffic being apparently confined to the $12 seats. The bidding was done almost altogether by persons seeking fair seats at fair prices. Many of the bidders were women.

Manager Comee was asked by a Boston Herald man how the people were taking hold of this season's tickets. He replied: "The extremely low figure at which seats were sold today and yesterday has pleased everyone, especially those concert goers who cannot afford to pay fancy prices for seats. The seats for the concerts this year are lower than they were last year."

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.

FRIDAY MORNING, SEPT. 30, 1898.

THE SYMPHONY SALE.

The sale at auction of symphony concert tickets was resumed in Music Hall yesterday. The offerings were the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts.

There was a good number of prospective buyers present, several hundred persons occupying seats in the first section. All the ticket agencies were represented and their commissions made them the heaviest buyers.

There were no fancy prices bid up to noon when the choicest section of seats was passed, but premiums ranged steadily high—perhaps 10 to 12 p. c. higher than last year.

Few if any premiums that ranged under $10 up to that time, even for seats in undesirable places. The best premiums were realized on the rows beginning with F or G.

The four center seats in G—16, 17, 18 and 19—brought a premium of $37 each being bought by an agent for a patron. A single seat in G brought a premium of $51.

H row was a favorite, side seats bringing $20 premium; seats on the side aisles $30; and seats in the center aisle $40.

Mr. Wadsworth purchased 17, 18 and 19 at the latter figure. Mr. Endicott bought 10, 11 and 12 at $30 premium.

Row I also brought good prices. Seats 5, 6, 7 and 8, on the right side aisle brought $25 premium each, and the better seats commanded correspondingly better prices.

Row J was the row in which the best price was realized. Two seats on the center aisle were sold to Mr. Farnsworth for $64 premium each, and a single seat in the center aisle to Herrick for $52.

Herrick also bought the center in K for $33. Connolly made purchases in E, F, G and H, at prices ranging from $10 to $38.

It is noticeable this year that more commissions than ever are being executed by the brokers. The result has been less fancy prices—in spite of the record breaking of Monday—but a generally higher level price at which seats are valued by the buyers.

Boston Daily Globe.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 30, 1898.

PREMIUMS NOT OVER $70.

Sale of Seats for Symphony Concerts Continued at Music Hall.

Music hall was given over to trade and traffic yesterday, but the business transacted was no desecration of this temple of music—rather it was the highest tribute that could be given of the entire devotion to the tuneful art—as exemplified by the performances of the Symphony, admittedly the highest orchestral organization in the civilized world.

It was the first day of the sale of the "concert" seats. The sale of the rehearsal tickets was finished Wednesday, and at an advance in premiums over those obtained in preceding seasons. Wednesday's good results were better than duplicated yesterday as a whole.

There was a goodly attendance of buyers, including some speculators, of course, and also persons commissioned to procure tickets for others. The bidding was spirited, and although the progressive "raises" were made in relatively small sums, yet finally the successful competitor was obliged to pay a handsome amount as a bonus for choice of location.

The sale began shortly after 10. The bidding was for choice of locations only, and added to the price of the course ticket. The lower floor was sold yesterday.

The first seat sold at $1.75 premium. Premiums in row A (first row) ranged between $1.75 and $3.75. Last year $1 to $4.

Premiums in second row (B) ranged between $2.75 and $11; in third row, from $3.50 to $12; in fourth row, between $6 and $20. Some other premiums were: $10 for No. 10 in row B, $30 for No. 26 in row H, $13 for No. 30 in row J, $65 for No. 19 in row J, $21 for No. 20 in row J.

The highest premium obtained yesterday did not exceed $70, though many seats were taken at figures well up towards that extreme sum. Today, beginning at 10 a m, the sale will be of the $7.50 series, including the whole of the second balcony and rear seats in first balcony.

Boston Daily Globe.

WEDNESDAY, SEPT. 28, 1898

BROUGHT BIG PREMIUMS.

Sale of Seats for Friday Afternoon Symphony Rehearsals.

At the auction sale yesterday in Music hall of the Boston symphony orchestra $7.50 seats for the Friday afternoon rehearsals there was some spirited bidding. It was a fine sale and soon over. There were nearly 300 present. The seats offered for sale were the last six rows on the floor, the last three rows in the balcony center, the last row on the balcony sides and the entire second balcony.

The premiums paid ranged from $10 to $40. For the first seat sold a premium of $13 was paid.

Every seat in the hall is now sold, and at prices averaging higher than last year.

The public sale of seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be held Thursday and Friday next.

HOME JOURNAL.

NEW YORK:
WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 28, 1898.

Boston Symphony Ticket Prices.—At the auction sale of tickets on Monday for the Friday afternoon rehearsals of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Music Hall, Boston, the prices paid for seats—nominal price, $12.00—were the highest in the history of the organization. The largest sum paid as premium was $325 for a seat in the seventh row of the orchestra. The next seat drew a premium of $310, and the next $150. Just back of these, three seats brought $152.50. It is expected that the sale of evening concert seats will bring still higher prices.

Boston Daily Globe.

THURSDAY, SEPT. 29, 1898.

PREMIUMS RUN UP TO $65.

First Day's Sale at Music Hall of Symphony Concert Seats—Goodly Attendance and Spirited Bidding.

Music hall was given over to trade and traffic today, but the business transacted was no desecration of this temple of music—rather it was the highest tribute that could be given of the entire devotion to the tuneful art—as exemplified by the performances of the Symphony, admittedly the highest orchestral organization in the civilized world.

"Money talks," and dollars added to dollars, in premiums for seats, furnished irrefragible proof that the people of this city fully appreciate their great musical privilege in the possession of the Symphony, and are liberal and cheerful in its support.

It was the first day of the sale of the "concert" seats. The sale of the rehearsal tickets was finished yesterday, and at an advance in premiums over those obtained in preceding seasons. Yesterday's good results were better than duplicated today as a whole.

There was a goodly attendance of buyers, including some speculators, of course, and also persons commissioned to procure tickets for others. The bidding was spirited, and although the progressive "raises" were made in relatively small sums, yet finally the successful competitor was obliged to pay a handsome amount as a bonus for choice of location.

The solo recitative part in the sale fell to auctioneer Jackson. He was in perfect voice and both letter and figure perfect in his score, as was naturally to be expected from his years of practice. Unlike vocal artists in general, he showed no irritation by interruptions from the floor, which came in the form of monosyllables and dissyllables from all part of the building. He, on the contrary, seemed to enjoy it, and did everything in his power to continue and increase it.

> And not in vain he pleaded,
> And all the tempter heeded,
> However sore they needed
> Their funds for other use.
>
> For music's most delightful,
> To lack it would be frightful,
> In Boston 'tis a rightful
> Enjoyment, not abuse.

The sale began shortly after 10. The bidding was for choice of locations only, and added to the price of the course ticket. The lower floor was sold today.

The first seat sold at $1.75 premium. Premiums in row A (first row) ranged between $1.75 and $3.75. Last year $1 to $4.

Premiums in second row (B) ranged between $2.75 and $11; in third row, from $3.50 to $12; in fourth row, between $6 and $20. Some other premiums were: $10 for No. 10 in row B, $30 for No. 26 in row H, $13 for No. 30 in row J, $65 for No. 19 in row J, $21 for No. 20 in row J.

The New York Times

"All the News That's Fit to Print."

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.

NEW YORK, THURSDAY, SEPT. 29, 1898.

$350 for One Symphony Ticket.

From The Boston Herald.

It is certainly not the fault of the founder of the Symphony concerts that his original purpose of furnishing high-class music here in Boston at low prices has failed to achieve that end. The class of entertainment provided has had an effect to make the competition for the possession of tickets very brisk, until now the premiums paid for the more desirable seats are the highest ever obtained. This is highly creditable to Boston's sense of appreciation of high-class music, but it is a condition of things that relegates to the region of the back rows those who are unable to pay high prices for the entertainment provided.

"This Country, with its Institutions, belongs to the People who inhabit It."

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.

$64 PREMIUM

Highest Paid at Continued Sale of $12 Symphony Seats.

The sale at auction of symphony concert tickets was resumed in Music Hall this morning. The offerings were the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts.

There was a good number of prospective buyers present, several hundred persons occupying seats in the first section. All the ticket agencies were represented and their commissions made them the heaviest buyers.

There were no fancy prices bid up to noon when the choicest section of seats was passed, but premiums ranged steadily high—perhaps 10 to 12 p. c. higher than last year.

Few if any premiums that ranged under $10 up to that time, even for seats in undesirable places. The best premiums were realized on the rows beginning with F or G.

The four center seats in G—16, 17, 18 and 19—brought a premium of $37 each being bought by an agent for a patron. A single seat in G brought a premium of $51.

H row was a favorite, side seats bringing $20 premium; seats on the side aisles $30; and seats in the center aisle $40.

Mr. Wadsworth purchased 17, 18 and 19 at the latter figure. Mr. Endicott bought 10, 11 and 12 at $30 premium.

Row I also brought good prices. Seats 5, 6, 7 and 8, on the right side aisle brought $25 premium each, and the better seats commanded correspondingly better prices.

Row J was the row in which the best price was realized. Two seats on the center aisle were sold to Mr. Farnsworth for $64 premium each, and a single seat in the center aisle to Herrick for $52.

Herrick also bought the center in K for $33. Connolly made purchases in E, F, G and H, at prices ranging from $10 to $38.

--It is noticeable this year that more commissions than ever are being executed by the brokers. The result has been less fancy prices—in spite of the record breaking of Monday—but a generally higher level price at which seats are valued by the buyers.

MORE

Boston Transcript

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1898

HIGHEST PRICE WAS $64

Premiums Were Not Sensational for the Symphony Concerts

As usual much higher premiums were paid for seats at the Symphony Orchestra's rehearsals than for the Saturday evening concerts. At the sale of the $12 rehearsal seats on Monday morning the premiums averaged more than $50; while this morning the same seats for the concerts fell far below that figure. For $15 a person could obtain a good seat, while for $25 or $30 a choice of the best could be had. There was little spirited bidding this morning. The greater number of seats went off quietly, with little excitement. There were only a few $40 bids, two of $50 and the highest price was reached when a gentleman paid $64 for seats 18 and 19 in row J.

Not more than two hundred people could be counted in the great hall when the first seat was put up, but during the forenoon undoubtedly five or six hundred passed in and out. There were a great number of seats to be sold, and they went off so slowly, in spite of the efforts of the auctioneer, that by one o'clock the balcony seats had not been reached and the auctioneer's voice began to show the strain.

At ten by the great clock in the rear of the hall, the first seat, No. 1, row A, was auctioned off and all it brought was $1.75. The next one was sold for a little more, but the average of the first three rows was hardly $6. A $15 premium was very high, until seat 18, row E, was reached—an aisle seat, excellently located. Then the bidding started briskly, and the seat was finally sold for $41 to a young lady, after an interesting contest. Four seats in G, 16 to 18, brought $37 apiece, while three in H, 17-19, cost the bidder $40 each. Seats in J were very popular, the first dozen averaging $25. No sooner was No. 17 put up than it became the bone of contention between two bidders, and when it was sold it brought in $52. Hardly had those present recovered from their astonishment at so high bidding, than seats 18 and 19 were contended for fiercely and brought the highest premium of any seat on the floor, $64 each.

In rows K and L the premiums took a drop, the best seats bringing less than $15, but rose appreciably in the suceeding rows, only to fall when the rear seats were put on sale.

At 1.30 P. M. a recess of twenty minutes was taken, after which the balcony seats were sold.

TOWN TOPICS

NEW YORK, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1898.

MRS. SKINNER seemed a much younger woman than her years would show, and was distinguished looking in bearing and dress. The funeral services were on Saturday, at the town house, on Beacon street. Singularly enough, at the time of Mrs. Skinner's death, which was wholly unexpected, her brother, John L. Gardner, was cruising homeward from Portland on Mayflower with a party, and Mrs. Jack had just returned from Westbury, L. I., where she has been visiting Mrs. Tom Hitchcock, Jr., and that very afternoon had taken a jolly party to the Readville races. This family affliction, however, did not prevent the lady from being at the station an hour or two after the funeral services on Saturday, where she was seen in her mourning robes walking up and down the platform between her rural protegé, George Proctor, a pianist, and Kneisel, first violin of the Symphony Orchestra. The two awaited the train bearing Herr Gericke and his family to Boston after their recent arrival from Germany. In the meantime it had been noised abroad that this chatting and unusual looking lady was Mrs. Jack Gardner, so, by the time the distinguished conductor arrived, a motley crowd of station employees, cabmen and general hangers-on were curiously watching the scene. Herr Gericke, when he was leader of the Orchestra some years ago, consented to become a protegé of Mrs Jack's. Now he returns, an older and wiser man, his handsome black hair and beard turned gray, with a bright-eyed and plump wife who looks fully able to take care of him, their clever little five-year old daughter and the inevitable German mother, who make up the Gericke ménage, he seems to be pretty well fenced in from any of the outside allurements such as always beset the Boston Symphony Orchestra leader, as well as the first violins, Tim Adamowski of the latter furnishing the most notable example.

The Boston Traveler

PUBLISHED BY THE
BOSTON TRAVELER CO.,
TORREY E. WARDNER, President.

Seventy-sixth year—Vol. LIV. No. 153

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 29, 1898.

THE SYMPHONY SALE

Prices for the $12 Evening Concert Seats Are Higher Than Last Year's.

Another large gathering was seated in Music Hall at 10 this morning when Auctioneer Jackson began the sale of the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts of the Symphony Orchestra. There were more leal music-lovers on hand, since the evening entertainments are not such society events as the Friday afternoon rehearsals.

The sale began briskly and well. A1, the first seat, sold at $1.75 premium. Premiums in this row ranged between $1.75 and $3.75, compared with range for same row last year of $1 to $4. Prices began to run higher as the centre of the hall was reached. Premiums for row B ranged between $2.75 and $11; for row C, $3.50 to $12; for row D, $6 and $20. As the choice rows were reached the prices mounted until $40 and $50 was a common thing. The rear floor seats, of course, went very cheap, but the balconies brought stiff prices.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIV., NO. 92.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 30, 1898.

NO HIGH PREMIUMS.

Low Prices for the $7.50 Tickets for the Saturday Evening Symphony Concerts.

The fourth and last day's sale of Symphony concert tickets opened in Music Hall this morning with a large attendance. The seats disposed of were the $7.50 tickets for the Saturday evening concerts. The bidding throughout the morning dragged considerably, the tendency being to start the offers very low, with advances of not more than 50 cents a bid. In this way, it was a long time before even the few remaining floor seats were sold, and the sale of first balcony seats begun.

None of the seats brought extravagant figures. There was little or no rivalry for choice positions, and the highest bid of the day was for a premium of $20. The general average was between $5 and $8 per seat, and a large number, mostly seats on the floor in the extreme rear of the hall, went as low as 50 cents premium.

Seat 51, in row 11, was the first one put up, shortly after 10 o'clock. It was knocked down at a premium of $5. The remaining floor seats all went at about the same figure, none bringing as high a premium as $7.

First balcony seats back of the front row were next put up, and brought fair prices. The range of offers was wide, varying from $2 to $18, according to location.

All of the second balcony seats are included in the $7.50 rate. It was 12:30 before the first of these was offered for sale, and the bidding, which had perceptibly lagged on the rear row seats, immediately became lively when the choice front row positions in the upper tier were reached. The first few seats went low, owing to their location over the stage. Getting nearer to the centre of the hall, competition grew warm, and a number went for as high as $20, the highest figure paid up to that time during the day.

There was a noticable lack of bidding from the speculators today, their traffic being apparently confined to the $12 seats. The bidding was done almost altogether by persons seeking fair seats at fair prices. Many of the bidders were women.

Manager Comee was asked by a Boston Herald man how the people were taking hold of this season's tickets. He replied: "The extremely low figure at which seats were sold today and yesterday has pleased everyone, especially those concert goers who cannot afford to pay fancy prices for seats. The seats for the concerts this year are lower than they were last year."

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.

FRIDAY MORNING, SEPT. 30, 1898.

THE SYMPHONY SALE.

The sale at auction of symphony concert tickets was resumed in Music Hall yesterday. The offerings were the $12 seats for the Saturday evening concerts.

There was a good number of prospective buyers present, several hundred persons occupying seats in the first section. All the ticket agencies were represented and their commissions made them the heaviest buyers.

There were no fancy prices bid up to noon when the choicest section of seats was passed, but premiums ranged steadily high—perhaps 10 to 12 p. c. higher than last year.

Few if any premiums that ranged under $10 up to that time, even for seats in undesirable places. The best premiums were realized on the rows beginning with F or G.

The four center seats in G—16, 17, 18 and 19—brought a premium of $37 each being bought by an agent for a patron. A single seat in G brought a premium of $51.

H row was a favorite, side seats bringing $20 premium; seats on the side aisles $30; and seats in the center aisle $40.

Mr. Wadsworth purchased 17, 18 and 19 at the latter figure. Mr. Endicott bought 10, 11 and 12 at $30 premium.

Row I also brought good prices. Seats 5, 6, 7 and 8, on the right side aisle brought $25 premium each, and the better seats commanded correspondingly better prices.

Row J was the row in which the best price was realized. Two seats on the center aisle were sold to Mr. Farnsworth for $64 premium each, and a single seat in the center aisle to Herrick for $52.

Herrick also bought the center in K for $33. Connolly made purchases in E, F, G and H, at prices ranging from $10 to $38.

It is noticeable this year that more commissions than ever are being executed by the brokers. The result has been less fancy prices—in spite of the record breaking of Monday—but a generally higher level price at which seats are valued by the buyers.

Boston Daily Globe.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 30, 1898.

PREMIUMS NOT OVER $70.

Sale of Seats for Symphony Concerts Continued at Music Hall.

Music hall was given over to trade and traffic yesterday, but the business transacted was no desecration of this temple of music—rather it was the highest tribute that could be given of the entire devotion to the tuneful art—as exemplified by the performances of the Symphony, admittedly the highest orchestral organization in the civilized world.

It was the first day of the sale of the "concert" seats. The sale of the rehearsal tickets was finished Wednesday, and at an advance in premiums over those obtained in preceding seasons. Wednesday's good results were better than duplicated yesterday as a whole.

There was a goodly attendance of buyers, including some speculators, of course, and also persons commissioned to procure tickets for others. The bidding was spirited, and although the progressive "raises" were made in relatively small sums, yet finally the successful competitor was obliged to pay a handsome amount as a bonus for choice of location.

The sale began shortly after 10. The bidding was for choice of locations only, and added to the price of the course ticket. The lower floor was sold yesterday.

The first seat sold at $1.75 premium. Premiums in row A (first row) ranged between $1.75 and $3.75. Last year $1 to $4.

Premiums in second row (B) ranged between $2.75 and $11; in third row, from $3.50 to $12; in fourth row, between $6 and $20. Some other premiums were: $10 for No. 10 in row B, $30 for No. 26 in row H, $13 for No. 30 in row J, $65 for No. 19 in row J, $21 for No. 20 in row J.

The highest premium obtained yesterday did not exceed $70, though many seats were taken at figures well up towards that extreme sum. Today, beginning at 10 a m, the sale will be of the $7.50 series, including the whole of the second balcony and rear seats in first balcony.

PUBLISHED BY THE
BOSTON TRAVELER CO.
[illegible] E. WARDNER, President.
Seventy-sixth year—Vol. LIV. No. 154
[illegible]DAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1898.

SYMPHONY SALE

The $7.50 Seats for Saturday Evening Go About as Last Year.

The fourth and concluding auction of Symphony orchestra seats was held in Music Hall this morning. The seats auctioned were the $7.50 places for the Saturday evening concerts.

Premiums for seats today are practically the same as last year. The prices paid for the first row of seats offered ranged between $3 and $7. The seats are located in the rear of the hall, under the balcony. The premiums for seats in the last two rows of the balcony ranged between $4.50 and $6.50.

Boston Transcript
FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1898

CLOSING AUCTION SALE

The $7.50 Seats for the Saturday Evening Concerts by the Symphony Orchestra Were Sold Today

Bidding was not very lively this morning in Music Hall when the $7.50-seats for the Saturday evening concerts of the Symphony Orchestra were sold by auction. A larger crowd of prospective buyers was present at the opening than on the previous days, to compete for the first seats offered. The seats sold today were those in the rear of the floor and the first balcony and the entire second balcony. The average premium on the floor seats was $3, and the highest amount paid was $7.50 for No. 172, just under the first balcony. In the back rows a number of the seats brought only fifty cents above the fixed price.

It was not until the balcony sections were reached that any spirit was shown in the competition, and, as a starter, No. 103, in the second row on the right of the first balcony, brought $17, and further along towards the centre of the hall the prices ranged from $15 to $25. The sale, which has been one of the most successful ever held, was brought to a close with the selling of the second balcony seats, the price for the best ones rarely going higher than $7.

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIV., NO. 92.
FRIDAY, SEPT. 30, 1898.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The demand for tickets for the Symphony concerts is very large, but the sale of a few seats at extraordinary prices should not mislead concertgoers with limited means.

Over 1000 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be offered this morning. These are represented by the $7.50 tickets, many of which are certain to sell at small premiums, bringing the cost of 24 concerts to an exceedingly small sum.

The sale this morning will begin at 10 o'clock.

BOSTON POST, 30
Sept
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SYMPHONY PREMIUMS DROP.

As usual, much higher premiums were paid for seats at the Symphony Orchestra's rehearsals than for the Saturday evening concerts. At the sale of the $12 rehearsal seats on Monday morning the premiums averaged more than $50; while yesterday the same seats for the concerts fell far below that figure. For $15 a person could obtain a good seat, while for $25 or $30 a choice of the best could be had. There was little spirited bidding. The highest price was $64 for seats 18 and 19 in row J.

Over 1000 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be offered this morning. These are represented by the $7.50 tickets, many of which are certain to sell at small premiums, bringing the cost of twenty-four superb concerts to an exceedingly small sum. The sale this morning will begin at 10 o'clock.

Boston Journal.
FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1898.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The demand for tickets for the Symphony Concerts is very large, as was to be expected when the fine quality of these entertainments is considered. Over 1000 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be offered this morning. These are represented by the $7 50 tickets, many of which are certain to sell at small premiums, bringing the cost of 24 superb concerts to an exceedingly small sum. The sale this morning will begin at 10 o'clock.

HARPER'S WEEKLY
(TWENTY-FOUR PAGES)
NEW YORK CITY, OCTOBER 1, 1898

In another article details can be set forth, and still with timeliness. But it is of immediate interest to notice that many of the incidents of coming months are the result of escapes from last spring's unexpected and—in at least one matter—saddening perplexities. Mr. Seidl's death brought a group of the most significant affairs of this winter into serious quandary. The abrupt severing of Mr. Paur's connection with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Grau's prudent list of "ifs" and "buts" where his opera in the Metropolitan was in question, Mr. Walter Damrosch's retirement from the Symphony Society of New York—were all factors of change and uncertainty in 1897–8 for the outlook on 1898–9. But it is now September. Things have smoothed down and peace is here, and many matters are settled with a judgment and probable success quite as praiseworthy as clashing engagements, internal intrigues, and musical politics well could allow. The highest musical interests of New York never—or at most but once, and that a good while ago—really depended on one man. Regrets for a deep loss ought not to set sensible men and women to talking as if our orchestral paralysis were at hand, and inviting everybody to rally to make it as dismally complete as possible. Mr. Seidl's successor as the Philharmonic Society's conductor and as the head of the fashionable Astoria Concerts will be Mr. Paur. Though we may dispute the need of all Mr. Paur's professional gestures, his capability is established. Just how Mr. Paur will get on with the material now constituting the Philharmonic's orchestra perhaps is another story. We will wait to read it. To the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which New York almost considers its own after eleven winters' visits, returns Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, one of the very best conductors living, persona grata to the band, and remembered by many of us as a great factor—I might have written the great factor—in its attaining its perfection. This is truth; even in our recalling that Mr. Nikisch was Mr. Gericke's successor, and that the making up of the orchestra's ranks has been gradually much strengthened. By-the-bye, Mr. Nikisch himself and the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra will come here on a visit in the latter part of the season. As to opera at the Metropolitan, offering nearly eighty representations, Mr. Franz Schalk, a new-comer, will take Mr. Seidl's post under Mr. Grau's management. Mr. Schalk is a young and successful leader of opera on German stages, and lately connected with Buda-Pesth's admirable National Opera—whence, in fact, Mr. Grau hurriedly borrowed him for an emergency during Covent Garden performances. The Oratorio Society has decided to live, and will be very busy, and Mr. Frank Damrosch takes his brother's place—an excellent leader in choral work. Mr. Walter Damrosch almost firmly has kept to his declaration to retire for a while from conducting, and only as to certain performances of Mr. Ellis's opera company will make much of a breach in that resolution.

WILHELM GERICKE,
Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

So much for an outline of what we may call the season's personal aspects and arrangements to date. Only, in pointing them out, the enormous overflowing content of performance, day by day, week by week, month by month, from November to May, is loosely defined and colored. But how imperfectly, compared with what will be its actual freightage of arts and artists! It will be noticed by those whose interest leads them to study comparatives in such things that our 1898–9 season will be different from one or another of its famous predecessors chiefly in results of the lively cotillon of conductors—a sort of sudden "all hands round," or puss-in-the-corner, such, indeed, as we have not had in many years, in the return of something like a just balance between opera and concert events, because of the Metropolitan's preparations for a long and popular campaign, instead of locking its doors, as was the case last year; and in the retirement of one old orchestral society. The real aggregate of concerts of the first, second, or third class will not be much greater than in various winters past. The most significant addition to these, by-the-bye, comes in the decision of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to add five matinées to its scheme of New York engagements, and in the proposed visit of the Berlin Philharmonic.

SUNDAY HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CIV., NO. 101.
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1898.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The first rehearsal and the first concert of the season by the Boston Symphony orchestra will be given on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of this week. The programme is:

Overture, "Euryanthe" .... Weber
Prelude, adagio and gavotte, string orchestra .... Bach
Variations on a theme by Haydn, op. 56.. Brahms
Symphony No. 5, C minor .... Beethoven

The return of Mr. Gericke to the position he formerly held as conductor of the orchestra has given an immense impetus to interest in these concerts, and the season promises to be one of [illegible]

NO HIGH PREMIUMS.

Low Prices for Seats for the Symphony Concerts Prevailed Yesterday.

The fourth and last day's sale of Symphony Concert tickets opened in Music Hall yesterday with a large attendance. The seats disposed of were the $7 50 tickets for the Saturday evening concerts. The bidding throughout the morning dragged considerably, the tendency being to start the offers very low, with advances of not more than 50 cents a bid. In this way, it was a long time before even the few remaining floor seats were sold, and the sale of first balcony seats begun.

None of the seats brought extravagant figures. There was little or no rivalry for choice positions, and the highest bid of the day was for a premium of $20. The general average was between $5 and $8 per seat, and a large number, mostly seats on the floor in the extreme rear of the hall, went as low as 50 cents premium.

First balcony seats back of the front row were next put up, and brought fair prices. The range of offers was wide, varying from $2 to $18, according to location.

All of the second balcony seats are included in the $7 50 rate.

SUNDAY HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CIV., NO. 94.
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1898.

Mr. and Mrs. Gericke, with their bright-eyed 5-year-old daughter, Kate, and the grandmother, Frau Flamm, were greeted by a number of Mr. Gericke's old friends when they arrived on the train from New York Saturday afternoon a week ago, with Mr. F. R. Comee, who went on to receive them and escort them to Boston.

Conspicuous among those awaiting their arrival was Mrs. John L. Gardner in her deep mourning, having come from

Mr. Winthrop Coffin, Miss Helen Ranney, Miss Abby Hunt, Miss Alice Parker, Mr. George J. Parker, Mr. William Johnson, Mr. Vinton, Mr. Frank Jackson, Mrs. Humphrey Allen, Mrs. Ephriam Lombard, Miss H. S. Whittier, Miss Wendell, Mr. Clayton Johns, Mr. Oliver Stevens, Prof. J. B. Hills, Mrs. Cyrus Brigham, Miss Kate Eaton, Mrs. S. B. Field, Mrs. Charles W. Weil and Maj. Hyde. All through the week there were almost as many buyers and much the same enthusiasm.

To those recalling the terrible Bourgogne disaster, it will be of interest to learn that the three new members of the Symphony orchestra who will take the places of Messrs. Pourtau, Jacquet and Weiss, arrived in Boston last Tuesday. They came from France with Mr. Pierre Muller, the first trumpet of the orchestra for many years. Mr. Muller tried his best to go on the same steamer with his confreres who were lost, but luckily, was unable to secure a stateroom. The new men, MM. Selmer, Maquarre and Longy, have brought their wives with them, and will join the little musical colony in Jamaica Plain.

HE WASHINGTON POST.
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 2.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Arrangements for Washington Patrons of Baltimore Concerts.

The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has issued a circular to the Washington patrons of that organization relative to the Baltimore concerts, as follows:

The growing popularity of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York has led the management to give an additional series of concerts in that city during the coming season. As the entire week of the monthly tournees of the orchestra was already filled, this decision made it imperative to give up either the Baltimore or Washington series. An evening performance is always preferable to a matinee, for obvious reasons; and because a suitable audience-room cannot be secured for evening performances in Washington the series in that city must be abandoned. In view of the generous patronage of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Washington during the past thirteen seasons, the management take this action with much regret.

It may be of interest to Washington patrons to know that a train, via the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, leaving Washington at 6:20 p. m., arrives in Baltimore at 7:20 p. m., at the Mount Royal station, directly across the square from Music Hall, where the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are held. After the concert a train leaving from the same station at 10:41 p. m. reaches Washington at 11:41 p. m.

The five Baltimore concerts are on Tuesday evenings, November 8, December 13, January 17, February 21, and March 21. The season tickets are $7 and $5, according to location. The soloists will be Mme. Gadski, soprano; Lady Halle (Norman Neruda), and Willy Burmester, violinists; Mme. Carreno and Emil Sauer, pianists.

Mr. H. F. Guzman, 925 Pennsylvania avenue, is authorized to receive subscriptions, and will attend the sale of season tickets in Baltimore to personally secure desired locations. Special rates will be secured from the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, the entire benefit of which will be given to patrons. No fee will be charged by Mr. Guzman, who will be paid by the management of the orchestra.

[illegible]
[illegible]DAY, OCT 9, 1898.

Symphony Season.

The symphony season will open in Music hall this week with the regular Friday afternoon rehearsal and Saturday evening concert. Mr Gericke, the newly appointed conductor, requires no words of introduction, for his ability as a director became well known during his former leadership of the orchestra, 1884-1890. The first program is as follows:

Weber, overture, Euryanthe.
Bach, prelude, Adagio and Gavotte, string orchestra.
Brahms, variations on a theme by Haydn (Chorale Sancti Antoni), op. 56.
Beethoven, symphony No. 5, in C minor, op. 67.

The list of soloists this season includes Mme Gadski, Lady Halle (Norman Neruda), Mme Carreño, Miss Aus der Ohe, Rosenthal, Sauer, Willy Burmester, Sahla, Ben Davies, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski and Schroeder. Mr Kneisel will be the soloist next week, playing Goldmark's violin concerto in A minor.

In Bremen this season, Nikisch, Mottl, Richard Strauss, as well as Georg Schumann and Weingartner will conduct the Philharmonic orchestra. How would it be if Thomas, Paur, Van der Stucken were invited to appear as "guests" during the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

The regimental bands in Italy have been cut down from 112 to 48. This will save about $600,000 a year. These figures seem exaggerated, but I quote from a foreign journal of good repute.

Some wonder where Mr. Carl Löwenstein will find the money for the Waldorf-Astoria concerts, led by Mr. Paur. He is purveyor of sweet-breads to that inn. As for that matter John Britton, who provided 36 years for concerts in London, was a coal-seller, and you may see his portrait in the British Museum. Perhaps Mr. Löwenstein's portrait, painted by Vinton or Lockwood, may yet enlarge the splendor of the Metropolitan Museum, New York.

Philip Hale.

HOME JOURNAL.
NEW YORK:
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1898.

Wilhelm Gericke, since last assuming the baton as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is again to play under his direction this season, has conducted the Gesselschaft concerts, and was offered a similar post with the Berlin Philharmonic. Speaking of his plans for the season, he says: "The 'Euryanthe' overture, by Weber, I put on the first programme, because it was on the last that I conducted with the orchestra alone, when I was here before. There are the old masters, and there are some moderns—Tschaikowsky, Richard Strauss, and Chadwick. I select Mr. Chadwick's 'Melpomene,' because I conducted it before. It is dedicated to me. He is one of your foremost composers. I know also the composition of MacDowell and Paine and Foote, and at least one by Whiting—Arthur Whiting, who is now in New York. Among the novelties that I have chosen are symphonies by Bruckner, Sinding, and Gilson. Gilson is a young Frenchman, whose compositions have met with great success in France. Speaking of choral music, my plan is to conduct some symphonies with chorus. 'Manfred,' Liszt's 'Faust,' and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven are the ones I have in mind. I would not give the Ninth Symphony without the last movement." Mr. Gericke is of middle height and stocky build. In appearance he looks like a very successful business man or a banker. His hair and beard are of a fine iron gray. His pointed beard is fastidiously trimmed, his eyes are very bright, and he has the ruddy color that bespeaks a lover of nature. He is now married; his wife loves music, and is an excellent amateur pianist. The Boston Symphony will give five matinée and five evening concerts at Carnegie Hall, the former at two o'clock on Wednesday afternoons, November 9, December 14, January 18, February 22, and March 22; the evening concerts at 8.15 on Thursdays, November 10, December 15, January 19, February 23, and March 23. The programmes of the afternoon entertainments will be wholly different from those of the evening performances. The soloists will be Moritz Rosenthal, pianist; Willie Burmeister, violinist; Lady Hallé, violinist; Alvarez, tenor; and Teresa Carreno, pianist.

BOSTON HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIV., NO. 106.
FRIDAY, OCT. 14, 1898.

Today is the first Symphony rehearsal of the season, and all the world's agog—that is, the world comprising Boston and its environs. Mr. Gericke will have a warm reception, of course, but the fine flower of musical society will be quite as much interested in seeing itself as in seeing him. It is only natural, so do not let any one lift an eyebrow in surprise at such an idea. We know the rehearsal girl.

The Boston Traveler

PUBLISHED BY THE
BOSTON TRAVELER CO.,
TORREY E. WARDNER, President.

Seventy-sixth year—Vol. LIV. No. 154

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1898.

THE SYMPHONY SALE

The $7.50 Seats for Saturday Evening Go About as Last Year.

The fourth and concluding auction of Symphony orchestra seats was held in Music Hall this morning. The seats auctioned were the $7.50 places for the Saturday evening concerts.

Premiums for seats today are practically the same as last year. The prices paid for the first row of seats offered ranged between $3 and $7. The seats are located in the rear of the hall, under the balcony. The premiums for seats in the last two rows of the balcony ranged between $4.50 and $6.50.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1898

CLOSING AUCTION SALE

The $7.50 Seats for the Saturday Evening Concerts by the Symphony Orchestra Were Sold Today

Bidding was not very lively this morning in Music Hall when the $7.50-seats for the Saturday evening concerts of the Symphony Orchestra were sold by auction. A larger crowd of prospective buyers was present at the opening than on the previous days, to compete for the first seats offered. The seats sold today were those in the rear of the floor and the first balcony and the entire second balcony. The average premium on the floor seats was $3, and the highest amount paid was $7.50 for No. 1172, just under the first balcony. In the back rows a number of the seats brought only fifty cents above the fixed price.

It was not until the balcony sections were reached that any spirit was shown in the competition, and, as a starter, No. 103, in the second row on the right of the first balcony, brought $17, and further along towards the centre of the hall the prices ranged from $15 to $25. The sale, which has been one of the most successful ever held, was brought to a close with the selling of the second balcony seats, the price for the best ones rarely going higher than $7.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIV., NO. 92.

FRIDAY, SEPT. 30, 1898.

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The demand for tickets for the Symphony concerts is very large, but the sale of a few seats at extraordinary prices should not mislead concertgoers with limited means.

Over 1000 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be offered this morning. These are represented by the $7.50 tickets, many of which are certain to sell at small premiums, bringing the cost of 24 concerts to an exceedingly small sum.

The sale this morning will begin at 10 o'clock.

BOSTON POST, 30

The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SYMPHONY PREMIUMS DROP.

As usual, much higher premiums were paid for seats at the Symphony Orchestra's rehearsals than for the Saturday evening concerts. At the sale of the $12 rehearsal seats on Monday morning the premiums averaged more than $50; while yesterday the same seats for the concerts fell far below that figure. For $15 a person could obtain a good seat, while for $25 or $30 a choice of the best could be had. There was little spirited bidding. The highest price was $64 for seats 18 and 19 in row J.

Over 1000 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be offered this morning. These are represented by the $7.50 tickets, many of which are certain to sell at small premiums, bringing the cost of twenty-four superb concerts to an exceedingly small sum. The sale this morning will begin at 10 o'clock.

Boston Journal.

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 30, 1898.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The demand for tickets for the Symphony Concerts is very large, as was to be expected when the fine quality of these entertainments is considered. Over 1000 seats for the Saturday evening concerts will be offered this morning. These are represented by the $7 50 tickets, many of which are certain to sell at small premiums, bringing the cost of 24 superb concerts to an exceedingly small sum. The sale this morning will begin at 10 o'clock.

HARPER'S WEEKLY

(TWENTY-FOUR PAGES)

NEW YORK CITY, OCTOBER 1, 1898

In another article details can be set forth, and still with timeliness. But it is of immediate interest to notice that many of the incidents of coming months are the result of escapes from last spring's unexpected and—in at least one matter—saddening perplexities. Mr. Seidl's death brought a group of the most significant affairs of this winter into serious quandary. The abrupt severing of Mr. Paur's connection with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Grau's prudent list of "ifs" and "buts" where his opera in the Metropolitan was in question, Mr. Walter Damrosch's retirement from the Symphony Society of New York—were all factors of change and uncertainty in 1897–8 for the outlook on 1898–9. But it is now September. Things have smoothed down and peace is here, and many matters are settled with a judgment and probable success quite as praiseworthy as clashing engagements, internal intrigues, and musical polities well could allow. The highest musical interests of New York never—or at most but once, and that a good while ago—really depended on one man. Regrets for a deep loss ought not to set sensible men and women to talking as if our orchestral paralysis were at hand, and inviting everybody to rally to make it as dismally complete as possible. Mr. Seidl's successor as the Philharmonic Society's conductor and as the head of the fashionable Astoria Concerts will be Mr. Paur. Though we may dispute the need of all Mr. Paur's professional gestures, his capability is established. Just how Mr. Paur will get on with the material now constituting the Philharmonic's orchestra perhaps is another story. We will wait to read it. To the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which New York almost considers its own after eleven winters' visits, returns Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, one of the very best conductors living, persona grata to the band, and remembered by many of us as a great factor—I might have written the great factor—in its attaining its perfection. This is truth; even in our recalling that Mr. Nikisch was Mr. Gericke's successor, and that the making up of the orchestra's ranks has been gradually much strengthened. By-the-bye, Mr. Nikisch himself and the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra will come here on a visit in the latter part of the season. As to opera at the Metropolitan, offering nearly eighty representations, Mr. Franz Schalk, a new-comer, will take Mr. Seidl's post under Mr. Grau's management. Mr. Schalk is a young and successful leader of opera on German stages, and lately connected with Buda-Pesth's admirable National Opera—whence, in fact, Mr. Grau hurriedly borrowed him for an emergency during Covent Garden performances. The Oratorio Society has decided to live, and will be very busy, and Mr. Frank Damrosch takes his brother's place—an excellent leader in choral work. Mr. Walter Damrosch almost firmly has kept to his declaration to retire for a while from conducting, and only as to certain performances of Mr. Ellis's opera company will make much of a breach in that resolution.

WILHELM GERICKE,
Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

So much for an outline of what we may call the season's personal aspects and arrangements to date. Only, in pointing them out, the enormous overflowing content of performance, day by day, week by week, month by month, from November to May, is loosely defined and colored. But how imperfectly, compared with what will be its actual freightage of arts and artists! It will be noticed by those whose interest leads them to study comparatives in such things that our 1898–9 season will be different from one or another of its famous predecessors chiefly in results of the lively cotillon of conductors—a sort of sudden "all hands round," or puss-in-the-corner, such, indeed, as we have not had in many years, in the return of something like a just balance between opera and concert events, because of the Metropolitan's preparations for a long and popular campaign, instead of locking its doors, as was the case last year; and in the retirement of one old orchestral society. The real aggregate of concerts of the first, second, or third class will not be much greater than in various winters past. The most significant addition to these, by-the-bye, comes in the decision of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to add five matinées to its scheme of New York engagements, and in the proposed visit of the Berlin Philharmonic.

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CIV., NO. 101.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 9, 1898.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

The first rehearsal and the first concert of the season by the Boston Symphony orchestra will be given on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening of this week. The programme is:

Overture, "Euryanthe" .... Weber
Prelude, adagio and gavotte, string orchestra .... Bach
Variations on a theme by Haydn, op. 56.. Brahms
Symphony No. 5, C minor .... Beethoven

The return of Mr. Gericke to the position he formerly held as conductor of the orchestra has given an immense impetus to interest in these concerts, and the season promises to be one of the most brilliant and attractive that the organization has ever known.

Boston Journal.

SATURDAY, OCTOBER 1, 1898.

NO HIGH PREMIUMS.

Low Prices for Seats for the Symphony Concerts Prevailed Yesterday.

The fourth and last day's sale of Symphony Concert tickets opened in Music Hall yesterday with a large attendance. The seats disposed of were the $7 50 tickets for the Saturday evening concerts. The bidding throughout the morning dragged considerably, the tendency being to start the offers very low, with advances of not more than 50 cents a bid. In this way, it was a long time before even the few remaining floor seats were sold, and the sale of first balcony seats begun.

None of the seats brought extravagant figures. There was little or no rivalry for choice positions, and the highest bid of the day was for a premium of $20. The general average was between $5 and $8 per seat, and a large number, mostly seats on the floor in the extreme rear of the hall, went as low as 50 cents premium.

First balcony seats back of the front row were next put up, and brought fair prices. The range of offers was wide, varying from $2 to $18, according to location.

All of the second balcony seats are included in the $7 50 rate.

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CIV., NO. 94.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 2, 1898.

Mr. and Mrs. Gericke, with their bright-eyed 5-year-old daughter, Kate, and the grandmother, Frau Flamm, were greeted by a number of Mr. Gericke's old friends when they arrived on the train from New York Saturday afternoon a week ago, with Mr. F. R. Comee, who went on to receive them and escort them to Boston.

Conspicuous among those awaiting their arrival was Mrs. John L. Gardner in her deep mourning, having come from

Mr. Winthrop Coffin, Miss Helen Ranney, Miss Abby Hunt, Miss Alice Parker, Mr. George J. Parker, Mr. William Johnson, Mr. Vinton, Mr. Frank Jackson, Mrs. Humphrey Allen, Mrs. Ephriam Lombard, Miss H. S. Whittier, Miss Wendell, Mr. Clayton Johns, Mr. Oliver Stevens, Prof. J. B. Hills, Mrs. Cyrus Brigham, Miss Kate Eaton, Mrs. S. B. Field, Mrs. Charles W. Weil and Maj. Hyde. All through the week there were almost as many buyers and much the same enthusiasm.

To those recalling the terrible Bourgogne disaster, it will be of interest to learn that the three new members of the Symphony orchestra who will take the places of Messrs. Pourtau, Jacquet and Weiss, arrived in Boston last Tuesday. They came from France with Mr. Pierre Muller, the first trumpet of the orchestra for many years. Mr. Muller tried his best to go on the same steamer with his confreres who were lost, but luckily, was unable to secure a stateroom. The new men, MM. Selmer, Maquarre and Longy, have brought their wives with them, and will join the little musical colony in Jamaica Plain.

HE WASHINGTON POST.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 2.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Arrangements for Washington Patrons of Baltimore Concerts.

The management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has issued a circular to the Washington patrons of that organization relative to the Baltimore concerts, as follows:

The growing popularity of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York has led the management to give an additional series of concerts in that city during the coming season. As the entire week of the monthly tournees of the orchestra was already filled, this decision made it imperative to give up either the Baltimore or Washington series. An evening performance is always preferable to a matinee, for obvious reasons; and because a suitable audience-room cannot be secured for evening performances in Washington the series in that city must be abandoned. In view of the generous patronage of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Washington during the past thirteen seasons, the management take this action with much regret.

It may be of interest to Washington patrons to know that a train, via the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, leaving Washington at 6:20 p. m., arrives in Baltimore at 7:20 p. m., at the Mount Royal station, directly across the square from Music Hall, where the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are held. After the concert a train leaving from the same station at 10:41 p. m. reaches Washington at 11:41 p. m.

The five Baltimore concerts are on Tuesday evenings, November 8, December 13, January 17, February 21, and March 21. The season tickets are $7 and $5, according to location. The soloists will be Mme. Gadski, soprano; Lady Halle (Norman Neruda), and Willy Burmester, violinists; Mme. Carreno and Emil Sauer, pianists.

Mr. E. F. Guzman, 925 Pennsylvania avenue, is authorized to receive subscriptions, and will attend the sale of season tickets in Baltimore to personally secure desired locations. Special rates will be secured from the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, the entire benefit of which will be given to patrons. No fee will be charged by Mr. Guzman, who will be paid by the management of the orchestra.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, OCT 9, 1898.

Symphony Season.

The symphony season will open in Music hall this week with the regular Friday afternoon rehearsal and Saturday evening concert. Mr Gericke, the newly appointed conductor, requires no words of introduction, for his ability as a director became well known during his former leadership of the orchestra, 1884-1890. The first program is as follows:

Weber, overture, Euryanthe.
Bach, prelude, Adagio and Gavotte, string orchestra.
Brahms, variations on a theme by Haydn (Chorale Sancti Antoni), op. 56.
Beethoven, symphony No. 5, in C minor, op. 67.

The list of soloists this season includes Mme Gadski, Lady Halle (Norman Neruda), Mme Carreno, Miss Aus der Ohe, Rosenthal, Sauer, Willy Burmester, Sahla, Ben Davies, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski and Schroeder. Mr Kneisel will be the soloist next week, playing Goldmark's violin concerto in A minor.

In Bremen this season, Nikisch, Mottl, Richard Strauss, as well as Georg Schumann and Weingartner will conduct the Philharmonic orchestra. How would it be if Thomas, Paur, Van der Stucken were invited to appear as "guests" during the coming season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra?

The regimental bands in Italy have been cut down from 112 to 48. This will save about $600,000 a year. These figures seem exaggerated, but I quote from a foreign journal of good repute.

Some wonder where Mr. Carl Löwenstein will find the money for the Waldorf-Astoria concerts, led by Mr. Paur. He is purveyor of sweet-breads to that inn. As for that matter John Britton, who provided 36 years for concerts in London, was a coal-seller, and you may see his portrait in the British Museum. Perhaps Mr. Löwenstein's portrait, painted by Vinton or Lockwood, may yet enlarge the splendor of the Metropolitan Museum, New York.

Philip Hale.

HOME JOURNAL.

NEW YORK:
WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1898.

Wilhelm Gericke, since last assuming the baton as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which is again to play under his direction this season, has conducted the Gesselschaft concerts, and was offered a similar post with the Berlin Philharmonic. Speaking of his plans for the season, he says: "The 'Euryanthe' overture, by Weber, I put on the first programme, because it was on the last that I conducted with the orchestra alone, when I was here before. There are the old masters, and there are some moderns—Tchaikowsky, Richard Strauss, and Chadwick. I select Mr. Chadwick's 'Melpomene,' because I conducted it before. It is dedicated to me. He is one of your foremost composers. I know also the composition of MacDowell and Paine and Foote, and at least one by Whiting—Arthur Whiting, who is now in New York. Among the novelties that I have chosen are symphonies by Bruckner, Sinding, and Gilson. Gilson is a young Frenchman, whose compositions have met with great success in France. Speaking of choral music, my plan is to conduct some symphonies with chorus. 'Manfred,' Liszt's 'Faust,' and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven are the ones I have in mind. I would not give the Ninth Symphony without the last movement." Mr. Gericke is of middle height and stocky build. In appearance he looks like a very successful business man or a banker. His hair and beard are of a fine iron gray. His pointed beard is fastidiously trimmed, his eyes are very bright, and he has the ruddy color that bespeaks a lover of nature. He is now married; his wife loves music, and is an excellent amateur pianist. The Boston Symphony will give five matinée and five evening concerts at Carnegie Hall, the former at two o'clock on Wednesday afternoons, November 9, December 14, January 18, February 22, and March 22; the evening concerts at 8.15 on Thursdays, November 10, December 15, January 19, February 23, and March 23. The programmes of the afternoon entertainments will be wholly different from those of the evening performances. The soloists will be Moritz Rosenthal, pianist; Willie Burmeister, violinist; Lady Hallé, violinist; Alvarez, tenor; and Teresa Carreno, pianist.

BOSTON HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIV., NO. 106.

FRIDAY, OCT. 14, 1898.

Today is the first Symphony rehearsal of the season, and all the world's agog—that is, the world comprising Boston and its environs. Mr. Gericke will have a warm reception, of course, but the fine flower of musical society will be quite as much interested in seeing itself as in seeing him. It is only natural, so do not let any one lift an eyebrow in surprise at such an idea. We know the rehearsal girl.

WILHELM GERICKE.

IN the seventeen years' existence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, founded in 1881, (in which time 1,600 performances have been given by this organization,) there have been but four conductors—Mr. George Henschel, for the first three years; Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, for the next five years, then Mr. Arthur Nikisch for four years, and for the last five years Mr. Emil Paur. And now that Mr. Gericke returns to assume his former position, the announcement that he arrived in New York Sept. 20 on the Kaiser Friedrich will arouse unusual interest in musical circles.

The first performance of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in New York was Feb. 14, 1887, with Mr. Gericke as the conductor, and to him justly belongs the credit of having raised the standard of the orchestra to such a point as to demand recognition in all the musical centres of this country. At this time Mr. Gericke had been conducting the orchestra for four years in Boston, during which time he laid the foundation so vital to every enduring organization and so essential to his successors in accomplishing results well nigh impossible under other conditions. While comparisons are odious, it is yet safe to say that for steadfast loyalty to a high ideal, to reach which he spared neither the orchestra nor himself, Mr. Gericke has never been excelled by any of his fellow-conductors.

At the early age of fifteen, beginning his musical career at the Vienna Conservatory, Mr. Gericke's progress was so complete that immediately upon leaving the conservatory he accepted the position as one of the three leaders of the orchestra at the Imperial Opera.

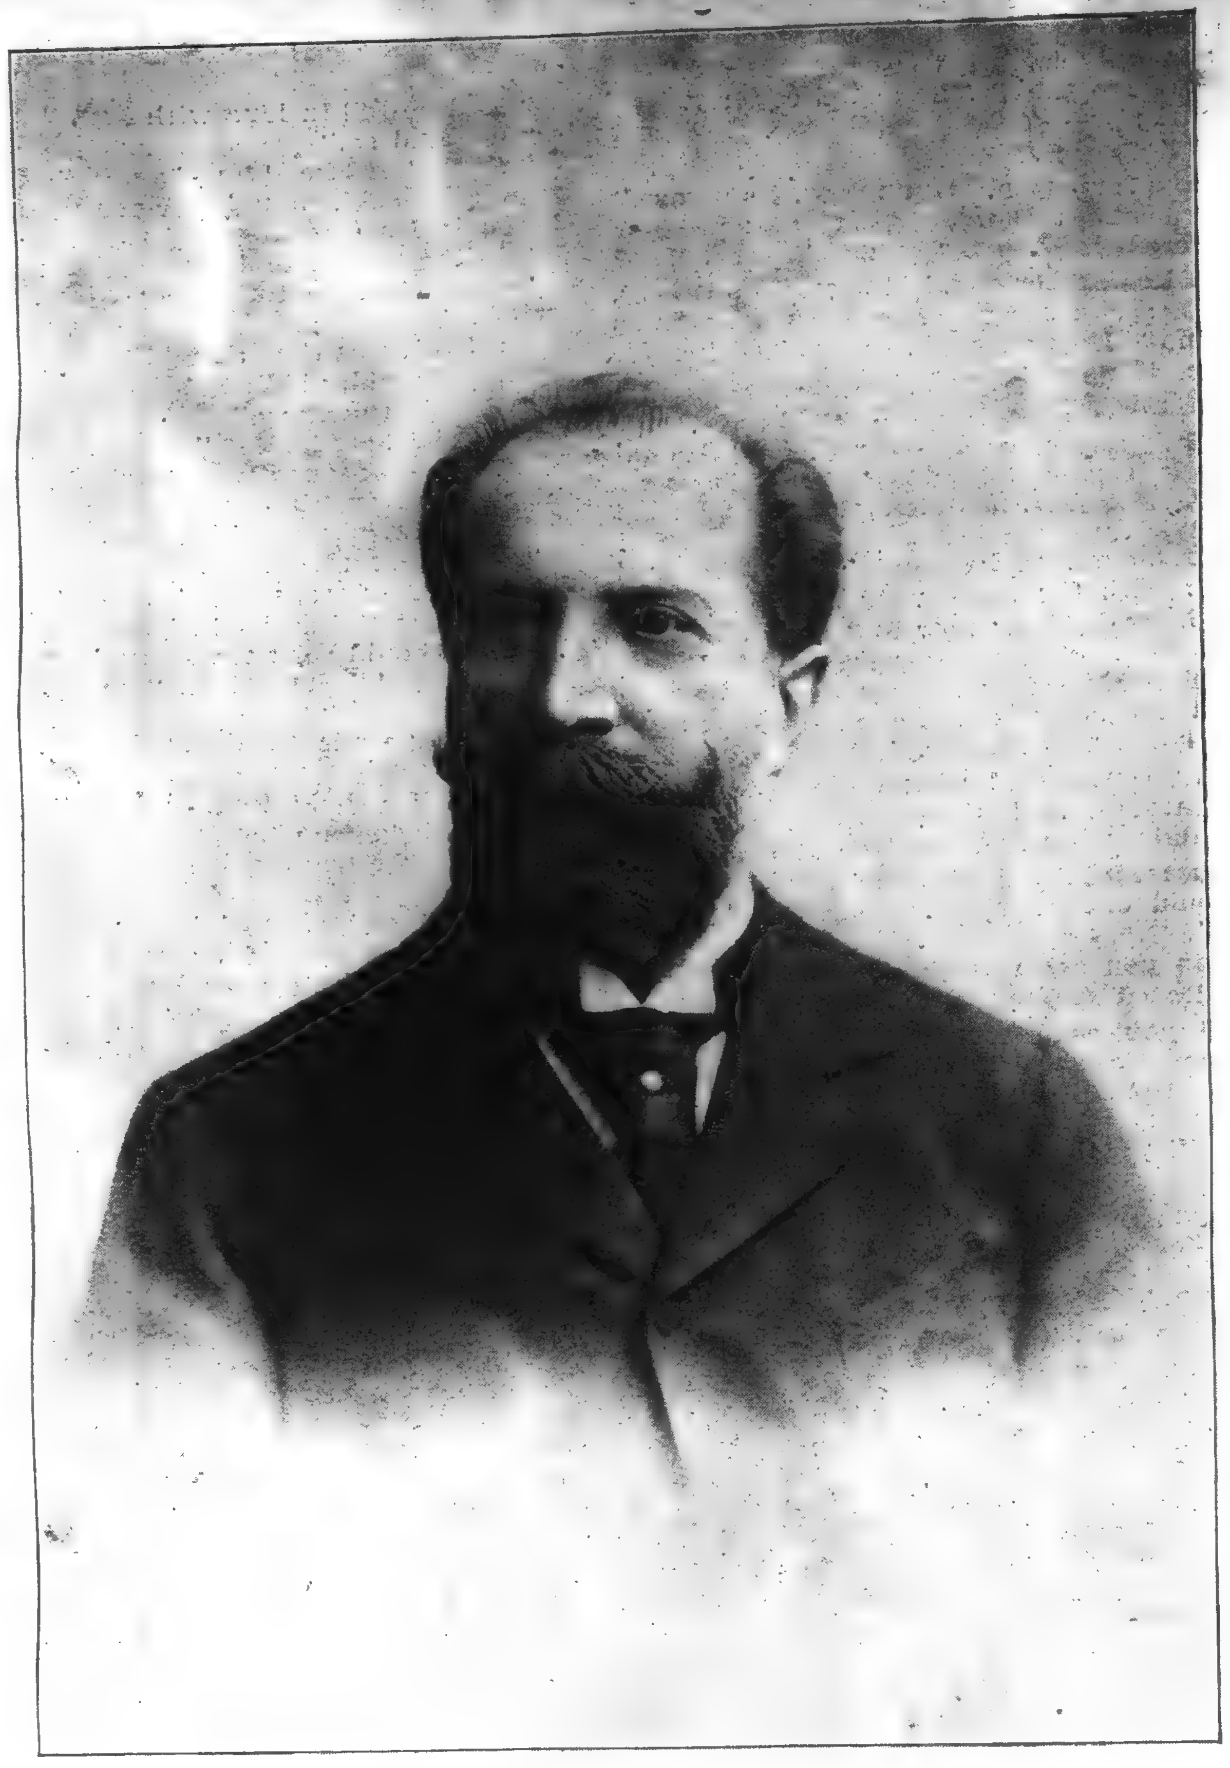
On the evening of Oct. 20, 1884, Mr. Henry L. Higginson, the founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, was in Vienna and attended a performance at the Grand Opera House. The opera was "Aïda," and Mr. Gericke was the conductor. So favorable an impression was made by this performance that two days later it was satisfactorily arranged that Mr. Gericke should go to Boston as the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

A year or more after his arrival in Boston Mr. Gericke reorganized the orchestra, introducing several new and younger members from Vienna, and it is striking evidence of the unchanged personnel of the orchestra that the great majority of these new members will welcome his return to the conductor's desk the coming season.

During his previous stay in Boston Mr. Gericke proved himself an eclectic, selecting the best music wherever it could be found, and giving a proper recognition of all worthy composers regardless of nationality. It is also worthy of note that, whether Beethoven or Brahms, Mozart or Schumann, he always gave to each work the interpretation its composer meant it to have, never intruding sensational effects of his own in the mistaken effort to improve upon a master.

There were two memorable performances in Boston under Mr. Gericke's direction outside of the regular series of concerts. One was the performance on Tuesday evening and Wednesday afternoon, April 10 and 11, 1888, of Mozart's Requiem, when a very handsome sum was realized in aid of the fund to erect a monument to Mozart in Vienna. The soloists were Mme. Lilli Lehmann, Miss Louise Meisslinger, Mr. Paul Kalisch, and Mr. Emil Fischer. The second was Mr. Gericke's farewell concert on Thursday evening, May 23, 1889, when the introduction and Good Friday Spell from Wagner's "Parsifal" and the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven were given. On this latter occasion, quoting from one of Boston's leading dailies, "The scene of the entrance of Mr. Gericke, when orchestra, chorus, and audience rose in his honor, was more than equaled in that which followed the finale of the symphony. The audience rose to its feet and applauded the conductor to the echo.

On the programmes of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Mr. Gericke's name appeared four times as the composer of a "Serenade for Strings," a "Concert Overture," a "Chorus of Homage," and two songs for soprano.



WILHELM GERICKE,
Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.

REDUCTION

RATIO

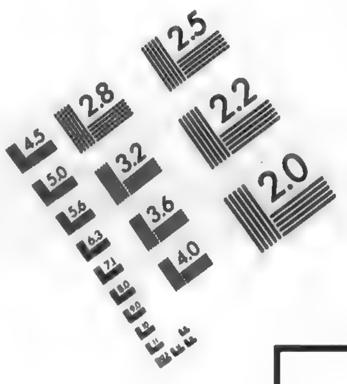
13x

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

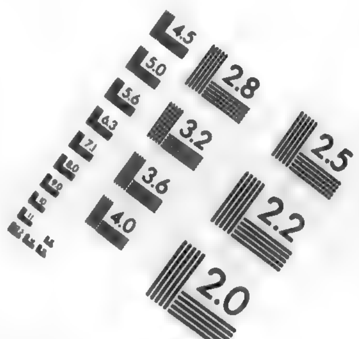
2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

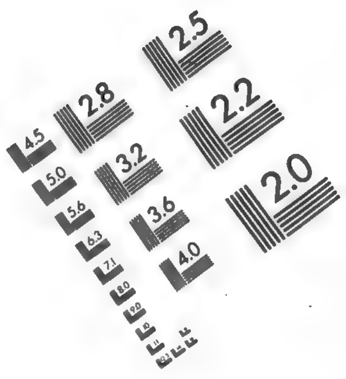
PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



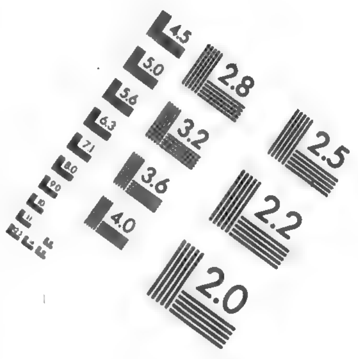
2.5
2.8
2.2
4.5
5.0
3.2
2.0
5.6
3.6
4.0



4.5
5.0
2.8
3.2
2.5
3.6
2.2
4.0
2.0



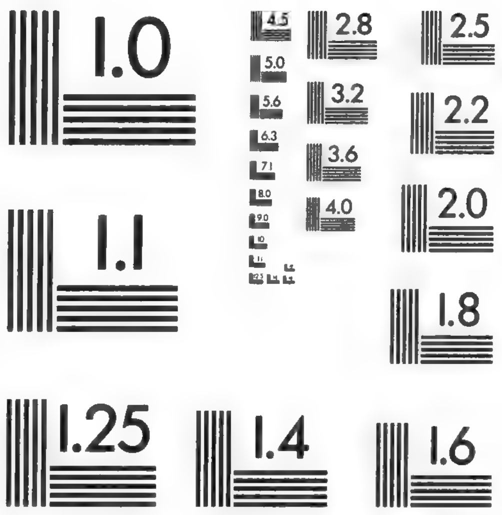
2.5
2.8
2.2
4.5
5.0
3.2
2.0
3.6
4.0



4.5
5.0
2.8
3.2
2.5
3.6
2.2
4.0
2.0

150 mm

100 mm



1.0
4.5
2.8
2.5
5.0
3.2
2.2
5.6
3.6
6.3
4.0
2.0
1.1
1.8
1.25
1.4
1.6

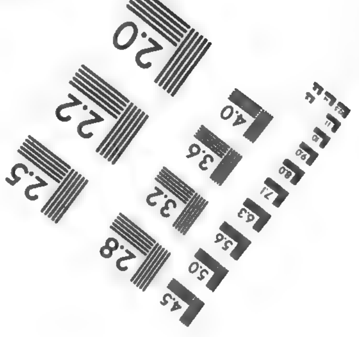
1.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

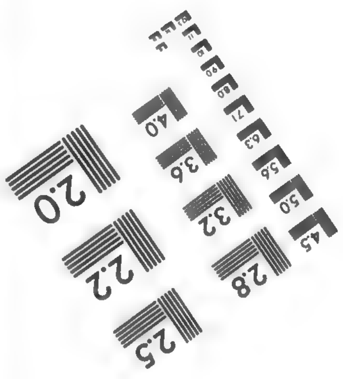
2.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

A5

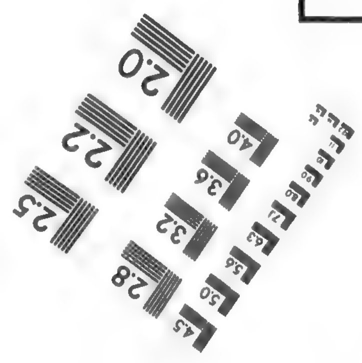


2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8
5.0
4.5

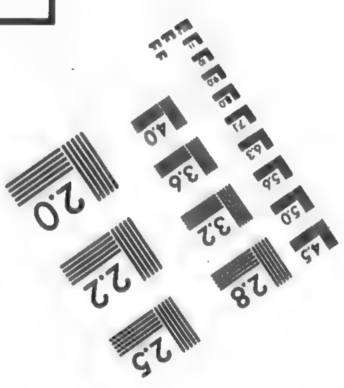


4.0
3.6
2.0
3.2
5.0
2.2
2.8
4.5
2.5

A4



2.0
2.2
4.0
3.6
2.5
3.2
2.8
5.0
4.5



4.0
3.6
2.0
3.2
5.0
2.2
2.8
4.5
2.5

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

TO PLAY CHAMBER MUSIC,

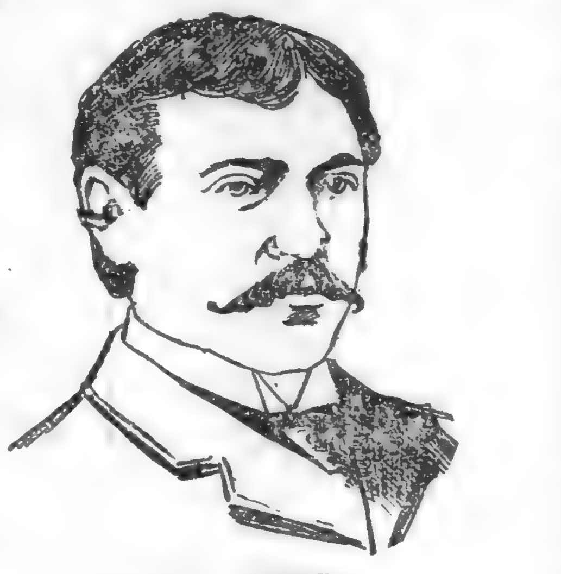
Eagle —— Oct. 9

Some Fine Artists Engaged by the Brooklyn Institute.

FIVE CONCERTS ARRANGED.

Quartets, Led by Messrs. Kneisel and Adamowski of Boston, Kaltenborn of New York and Spiering of Chicago, Will Appear—Richard Arnold's String Sextet an Attraction—A List of Competent Assisting Artists.

The chamber music concerts are yearly given by the Department of Music of the Brooklyn Institute in the expectation that the taste for such events will grow until they become self supporting. The experience of the past has been that American music lovers will crowd to hear a noted singer or pianist and will fill an opera house or an academy at some stage event or concert by a big orchestra. If a concert of stringed instruments is announced, they will very likely pass by on the other side.



FRANZ KNEISEL,
First Violin of the Kneisel String Quartet.

There seems to be no good reason why this should be so. To be sure, the strings lack the personal quality of the human voice, nor does a small concert afford the feast to the eye of a big scenic event. To those, however, to whom music makes an inner appeal, there are few things more satisfying than the rendering of the great works of Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann and others by a small company of trained musicians. Such hearers, as a rule, disdain external aids, preferring the free play of fancy to all the gorgeous art of the stage painter and all the dramatic suggestions of a living personality. Education along these lines is going on. Organizations like the Kneisel, Spiering and Kaltenborn quartets are now in considerable demand and find good audiences to play to. But there is still much to be done.

In looking over the artists secured by the Institute for the series of concerts beginning Wednesday evening, October 26, it will be observed that each organization has certain interesting features to commend it to the attention of Brooklynites. The first concert will be given by Messrs. Kneisel, Roth, Svecenski and Schroeder of the Kneisel String Quartet, assisted by Arthur Whiting, pianist. Their most remarkable number will be Smetana's famous quartet in E minor, "Out of My Life," in which the Bohemian composer endeavors to present musically certain passages in his life history. In the first movement Smetana's youthful love of music, his predisposition to romanticism, his longing for the inexpressible and vaguely defined, together with the curious premonition he had of his future deafness are each suggested. The second movement is full of the joy and passion of youth and the third recalls the happy period of love for the woman who became his wife. In the fourth and last movement are expressed the composer's later interests and trials, his absorption in the national Bohemian music and the terrible calamity which came upon him in the loss of his hearing. The playing of this work will test the abilities of the Kneisel men, as the style is revolutionary and the second movement, particularly, bristles with difficulties of the so called orchestral order. Their other selections will be an eighteenth century sonata for 'cello, with piano accompaniment, by the Italian Locatelli, and Schumann's quartet in E flat major, op. 44.

At the second concert, Wednesday evening, November 16, the Kaltenborn String Quartet of Manhattan, assisted by six other musicians on the double bass, flute, clarionet, oboe, bassoon and horn, will give an interesting programme consisting of a nonette in F major by Louis Spohr, a quartet for strings in C major by the local composer, August Walther, and Schubert's octet in F. major. Mr. Kaltenborn's organization is the only one of its kind in which the late Anton Seidl was interested. Seidl's friendly co-operation was undoubtedly due to his esteem for the quartet's leader, who played in Seidl's orchestra and was a great favorite of his. Perhaps the most signal mark of the great conductor's interest was when he arranged "A Siegfried Idyll" for piano and strings and brought it out at the Lotos Club, New York, in conjunction with the quartet, himself assuming the piano part. Professor MacDowell is another prominent musician who has made frequent use of Mr. Kaltenborn's musicians in his educational work.

Franz Kaltenborn, leader of the quartet, is only 32 years of age. He undoubtedly has a brilliant future before him. Born in Hamburg, April 16, 1865, he has been in America since his 6th year, and most of the intervening period has been given to music. When 6 years old he took up the violin and since the age of 13 he has been in orchestral work continuously. It was singularly appropriate, in view of Mr. Kaltenborn's close relations to Seidl, that he should be called upon to conduct the Seidl memorial concert in the Academy of Music last May.

The Spiering Quartet party, which will play on the evening of December 7, comes from the breezy West. They are artists rather than hack musicians. All the members have been trained in Theodore Thomas' Chicago Orchestra. Their playing discloses intelligent study, is manly, warm and straightforward and errs, if at all, on the side of strength rather than that of sentimentality or affectation. The repertory for their coming is so extensive as to include works by Beethoven, Haydn, Mozart, Schubert, Schumann, Brahms, Cherubini, Dvorak, Herzogenberg, Gradener, Grieg and Tschaikowsky. For the concert of December 7 they will be assisted by Miss Katharine Linn, pianiste, and the programme includes a Haydn quartet in D major, trio by Gade for piano, violin and 'cello, and Beethoven's Quartet in C, op. 59, No. 3.

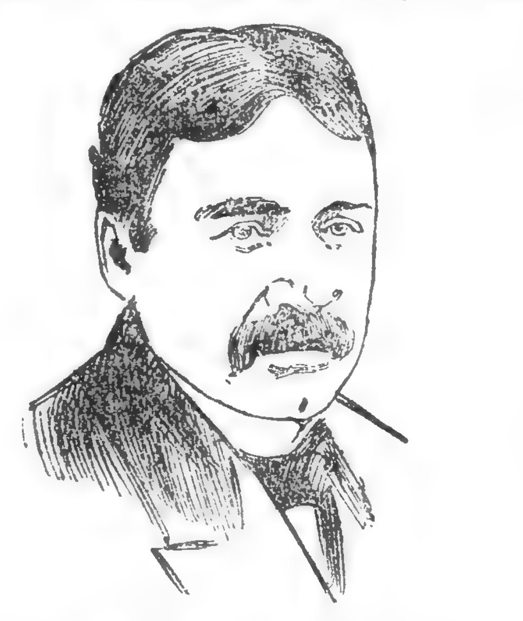
The last two concerts will be given on Thursday evening, December 29, and on Wednesday evening, January 11, by the Adamowski String Quartet of Boston and the Arnold String Quartet of New York. As Seidl's name is identified with the Kaltenborn party so is that of Paderewski with the organization to which the brothers Adamowski belong. It will be remembered that when the Polish pianist was making his triumphal tour of the United States he complimented the quartet on more than one occasion by appearing with it in chamber music programmes. The act was a doubly graceful one, from the fact that the Adamowskis were fellow countrymen and the additional circumstance that Paderewski was the teacher in piano of Mrs. Josef Adamowski (Antoinette Szumowska). The two brothers are described as being good foils to each other; the violinist, Timothee, being a most brilliant and dashing player, while Josef, the 'cellist, as befits the nature of his instrument, is sober and thoughtful, but full of genuine musical feeling. On Monday, September 20, 1897, the members of the Adamowski family were summoned to Spala and played by imperial command before the Czar and Czarina of Russia, achieving a marked success.

At the Adamowski concert of December 29 Mr. Arthur Foote, the well known Boston pianist, will assist, and one of his original compositions—a quartet for piano and strings—will be played. The final concert will call into requisition the services of eight artists, comprising beside the Richard Arnold String Sextet, performers on the flute, oboe and horn, and Mr. Alexander Lambert of the New York College of Music. Although actively engaged in teaching during the last few years Mr. Lambert ranks high as a piano virtuoso. A native of Warsaw, Poland, he was sent by the advice of Rubinstein to be educated at Vienna. Later he studied with Liszt at Weimar and subsequently appeared in concerts with Joachim, Sarasate, Teresina Tua and other eminent artists. He is a man of wide general culture and of a fraternal spirit toward struggling brother musicians. The performers on the strings and minor instruments at this concert are all of good caliber. Mr. Arnold, the leader, is concert master of the New York Philharmonic Society, and several of his comrades have long been identified with the Philharmonic concerts across the river.

The following is a birdseye view of the chamber music series:

Wednesday evening, October 26—Concert by the Kneisel String Quartet of Boston, Franz Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; Louis Svedenski, viola; Alwin Schroeder, 'cello, assisted by Arthur Whiting, piano. Programme, quartet in E minor ("Aus Meinem Leben"), Smetana, for string quartet, allegro vivo appassionato, allegro moderato, a la polka, largo sostenuto, Vivace; sonata for 'cello with piano accompaniment, Pietro Locatelli, accompaniment arranged by Alfredo Piatti, 1693-1764; quintet in E flat major, op. 44, Schumann, for piano and string quartet, allegro brillante, in modo d'una marcia (un poco largamento), scherzo (molto vivace), allegro ma non troppo.

Wednesday evening, November 16—Concert by the Kaltenborn String Quartet of New York, Franz Kaltenborn, first violin; Edwin Walter, second violin; Ernst Bauer, viola; H. Beyer-Hane, 'cello, assisted by August Kalkhof, double bass; Ernest Wagner, flute; Carl Rheinecke, clarinet; Joseph Eller, oboe; Fedor Bernhardi, bassoon; Herman Dutschke, horn. Programme, nonette in F major, op. 31, Louis Spohr, for violin, viola, 'cello, bass flute, clarinet oboe bassoon and horn; allegro scherzo (allegro), adagio, finale (vivace); quartet in C major, for strings, August Walther (second and fourth movements), adagio (molto cantabile), allegro vivace (finale); octette in F major, op. 166, Franz Schubert, for string quartet, bass, clarinet bassoon and horn, adagio (allegro), andante un poco mosso, scherzo (allegro vivace), andante (con variazioni), menuetto (allegretto), andante molto, allegro, andante molto, allegro molto.

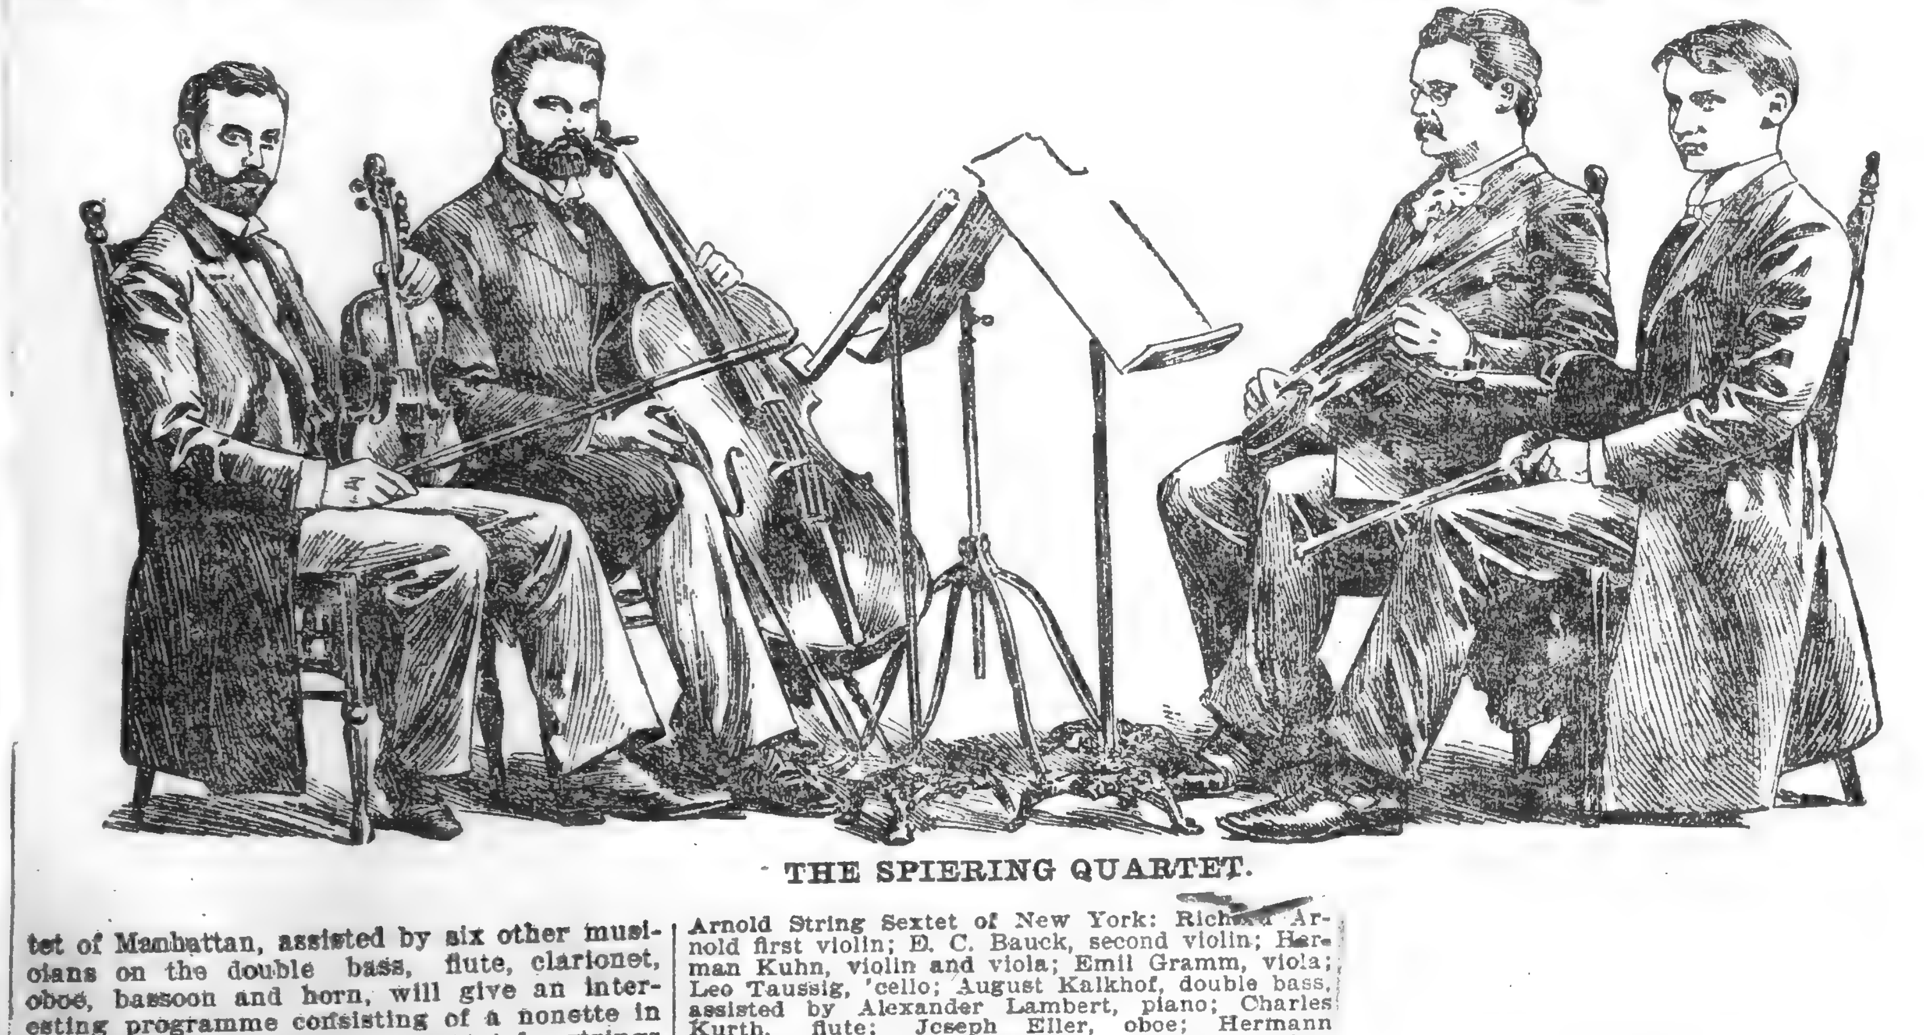


TIMOTHEE ADAMOWSKI,
First Violin of the Adamowski String Quartet.

Wednesday evening, December 7, concert by the Spiering String Quartet of Chicago. Mr. Theodore Spiering, first violin; Mr. Otto Roehrborn, second violin; Mr. Adolph Wedig, viola; Mr. Herman Diestel, 'cello, assisted by Miss Katherine Linn, piano. Programme: Quartet in D major, Op. 64, No. 5, for strings, Haydn; allegro moderato, adagio cantabile, menuetto (allegretto), finale, presto; Novelleten in A minor, Op. 29, trio for piano, violin and 'cello, Gade; allegro scherzando, andante con moto, moderato, larghetto con moto, finale, allegro; quartet in C, Op. 59, No. 3, Beethoven; andante con moto, allegro vivace, andante con moto quasi allegretto, menuetto, grazioso, allegro molto.

Thursday evening, December 29—Concert by the Adamowski String Quartet of Boston. Mr. Timothee Adamowski, first violin; Mr. Arnold Moldauer, second violin; Mr. Max Zach, viola; Mr. Josef Adamowski, 'cello, assisted by Mr. Arthur Foote, piano. Programme: Quartet in F major, Op 18, No. 1, for strings, Beethoven; allegro con brio, adagio molto, menuetto, finale, allegretto; trio for violin, 'cello and piano, Paine; quintet in F minor, Op. 34, Brahms, for piano and strings, two movements; andante; piano forte quartet for piano and strings, in C major, Op. 23, Foote; allegro con modo (poco animato), scherzo (allegro vivace), adagio non troppo, finale, allegro menuetto.

Wednesday evening, January 11, concert by the Arnold String Sextet of New York: Richard Arnold first violin; E. C. Bauck, second violin; Herman Kuhn, violin and viola; Emil Gramm, viola; Leo Taussig, 'cello; August Kalkhof, double bass, assisted by Alexander Lambert, piano; Charles Kurth, flute; Joseph Eller, oboe; Hermann Dutschke, horn. Programme—Grand trio in B flat, Op. 52, Rubinstein, for piano, violin and 'cello, Moderato Assai, Andante, Allegro Moderato, Moderato, Finale; aria in E, for String Sextet, J. S. Bach; minuet in E flat, for String Sextet, Boccherini; Gavotte, "Le Tambourin," in E minor for String Sextet, Rameau; Grand Septet, Op. 74 Hummel, for piano, flute, oboe, horn, viola, 'cello and bass, Allegro con Spirito, Menuetto e Scherzo (Allegro), Andante con Variazioni, Finale (Vivace).



THE SPIERING QUARTET.

GERICKE'S IDEA OF MUSIC.

Eagle —— Oct. 9

An Interview Which Gives a Pretty Good Idea of What the Conductor Will Do With the Boston Orchestra.

William Gericke, who is again to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra this winter, was profusely interviewed in Boston as a part of his welcome home. The following from the Boston Journal interview gives some idea of Mr. Gericke's nine years' absence in Europe and of the work he proposes to do here with the great orchestra:

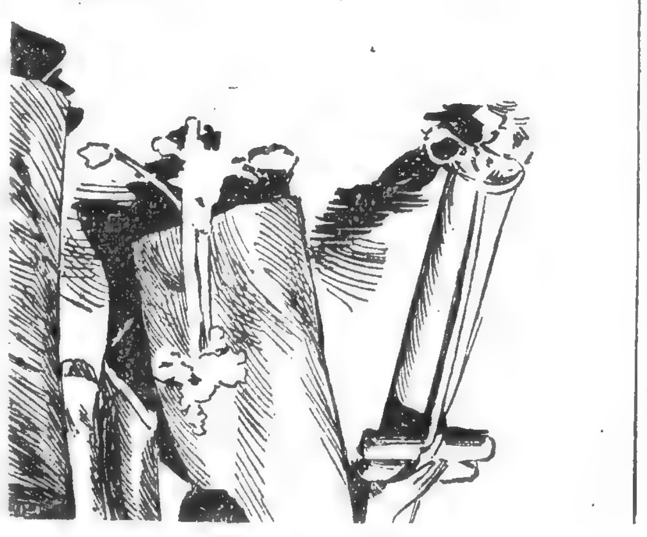
The distinguished Austrian is the same as ever, as the uplanders say. His figure is unchanged, moderately formed and well. Some gray hairs have crept into the sides of his beard, but his bearing is as erect and elastic and vigorous, and his manner as courteous and kind as though the intervention of time had been only momentary.

"Glad—glad to get back?" He let the interrogation echo in the room, as though listening to it. "Indeed I am. It is no exaggeration to say that Boston is a second home to me. I left it primarily because health drove me home. For more than a year after I left Boston I could not turn my attention to music. I went to the opera two or three times, but all I could see was an act, or, at the most, two acts. Overwork had drained my nerves of their strength. I had neither the taste nor the ambition to work. So I gave up music entirely. At the end of a year or so I resumed the conductorship of the Gesselschaft concerts. The Gesselschaft is a choral society that I led for some time before I first came to this country. I had had another offer from the Philharmonic Society of Berlin, but at the time it was made I was in no condition to consider it. I remained with the Gesselschaft choral five years, then I left for a year, but went back again, and I was in Vienna up to the time that I left for this country.

"How long will I remain? At least three years. That is the term that I have engaged myself for, and if my condition be good at the end of it I shall remain still longer. Nothing but my ill condition drew me away from here before."

"What are your plans?" the reporter asked.

"Well, the first few programmes you can see for yourself. You see among them only familiar names. There's the



TO PLAY CHAMBER MUSIC.

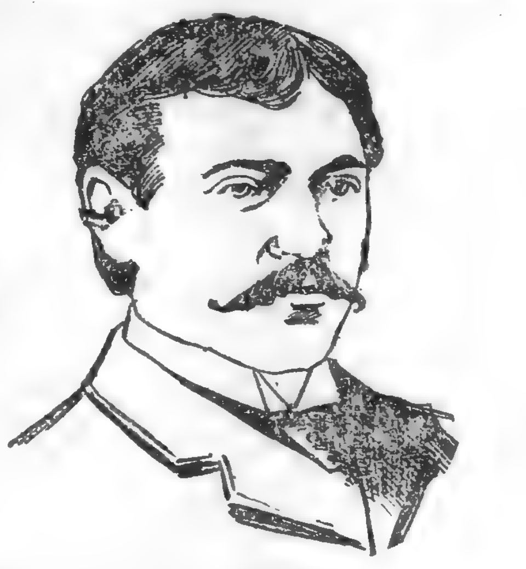
Eagle — Oct. 9

Some Fine Artists Engaged by the Brooklyn Institute.

FIVE CONCERTS ARRANGED.

Quartets, Led by Messrs. Kneisel and Adamowski of Boston, Kaltenborn of New York and Spiering of Chicago, Will Appear—Richard Arnold's String Sextet an Attraction—A List of Competent Assisting Artists.

The chamber music concerts are yearly given by the Department of Music of the Brooklyn Institute in the expectation that the taste for such events will grow until they become self supporting. The experience of the past has been that American music lovers will crowd to hear a noted singer or pianist and will fill an opera house or an academy at some stage event or concert by a big orchestra. If a concert of stringed instruments is announced, they will very likely pass by on the other side.

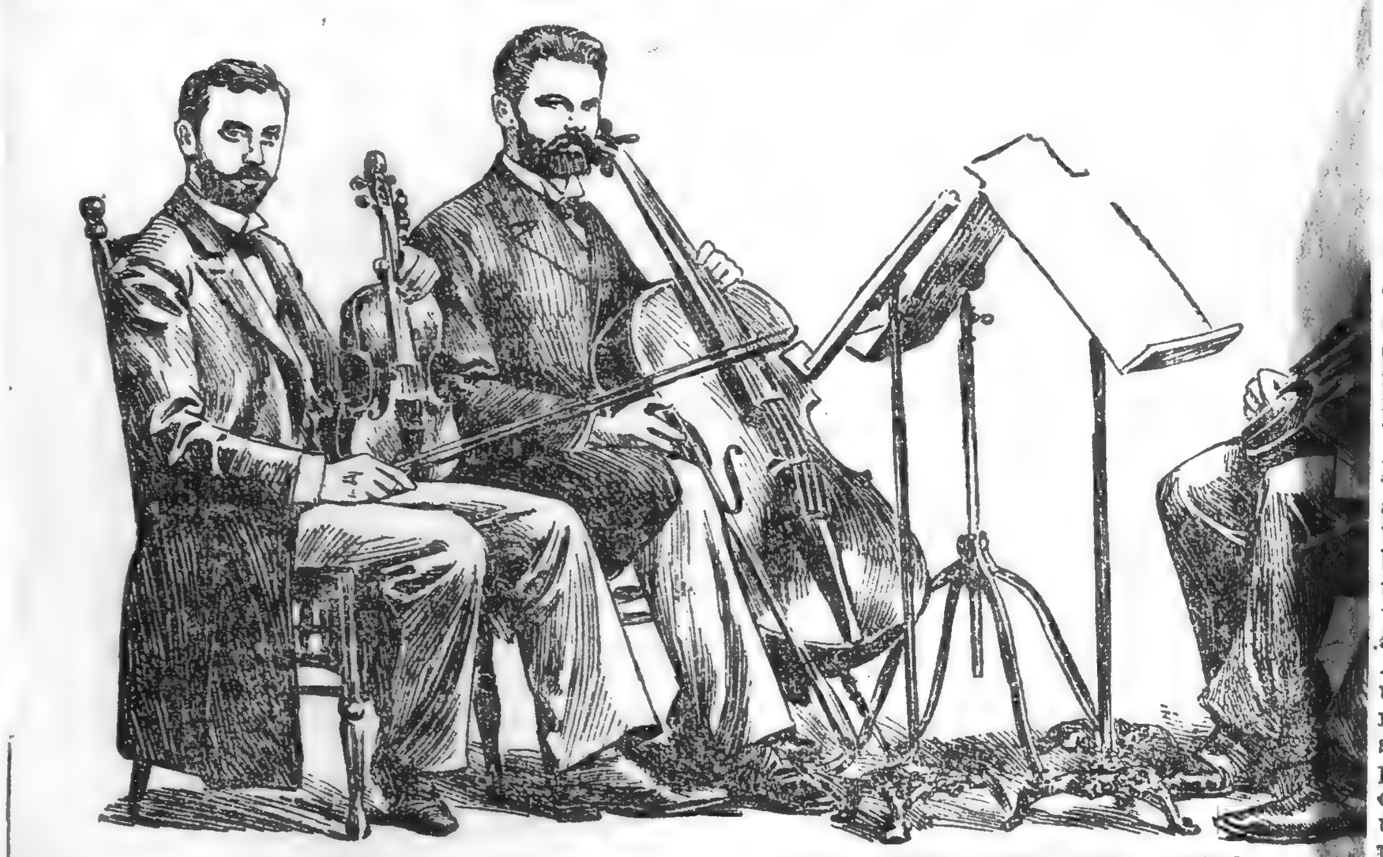


FRANZ KNEISEL,
First Violin of the Kneisel String Quartet.

There seems to be no good reason why this should be so. To be sure, the strings lack the personal quality of the human voice, nor does a small concert afford the feast to the eye of a big scenic event. To those, however, to whom music makes an inner appeal, there are few things more satisfying than the rendering of the great works of Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann and others by a small company of trained musicians. Such hearers, as a rule, disdain external aids, preferring the free play of fancy to all the gorgeous art of the stage painter and all the dramatic suggestions of a living personality. Education along these lines is going on. Organizations like the Kneisel, Spiering and Kaltenborn quartets are now in considerable demand and find good audiences to play to. But there is still much to be done.

In looking over the artists secured by the Institute for the series of concerts beginning Wednesday evening, October 26, it will be observed that each organization has certain interesting features to commend it to the attention of Brooklynites. The first concert will be given by Messrs. Kneisel, Roth, Svecenski and Schroeder of the Kneisel String Quartet, assisted by Arthur Whiting, pianist. Their most remarkable number will be Smetana's famous quartet in E minor, "Out of My Life," in which the Bohemian composer endeavors to present musically certain passages in his life history. In the first movement Smetana's youthful love of music, his predisposition to romanticism, his longing for the inexpressible and vaguely defined, together with the curious premonition he had of his future deafness are each suggested. The second movement is full of the joy and passion of youth and the third recalls the happy period of love for the woman who became his wife. In the fourth and last movement are expressed the composer's later interests and trials, his absorption in the national Bohemian music and the terrible calamity which came upon him in the loss of his hearing. The playing of this work will test the abilities of the Kneisel men, as the style is revolutionary and the second movement, particularly, bristles with difficulties of the so called orchestral order. Their other selections will be an eighteenth century sonata for 'cello, with piano accompaniment, by the Italian Locatelli, and Schumann's quartet in E flat major, op. 44.

At the second concert, Wednesday evening, November 16, the Kaltenborn String Quartet of Manhattan, assisted by six other musicians on the double bass, flute, clarionet, oboe, bassoon and horn, will give an interesting programme consisting of a nonette in F major by Louis Spohr, a quartet for strings in C major by the local composer, August Walther, and Schubert's octet in F. major. Mr. Kaltenborn's organization is the only one of its kind in which the late Anton Seidl was interested. Seidl's friendly co-operation was undoubtedly due to his esteem for the quartet's leader, who played in Seidl's orchestra and was a great favorite of his. Perhaps the most signal mark of the great conductor's interest was when he arranged "A Siegfried Idyll" for piano and strings and brought it out at the Lotos Club, New York, in conjunction with the quartet, himself assuming the piano part. Professor MacDowell is another prominent musician who has made frequent use of Mr. Kaltenborn's musicians in his educational work.



THE SPIERING QUARTET.

Franz Kaltenborn, leader of the quartet, is only 32 years of age. He undoubtedly has a brilliant future before him. Born in Hamburg, April 16, 1865, he has been in America since his 6th year, and most of the intervening period has been given to music. When 6 years old he took up the violin and since the age of 15 he has been in orchestral work continuously. It was singularly appropriate, in view of Mr. Kaltenborn's close relations to Seidl, that he should be called upon to conduct the Seidl memorial concert in the Academy of Music last May.

The Spiering Quartet party, which will play on the evening of December 7, comes from the breezy West. They are artists rather than hack musicians. All the members have been trained in Theodore Thomas' Chicago Orchestra. Their playing discloses intelligent study, is manly, warm and straightforward and errs, if at all, on the side of strength rather than that of sentimentality or affectation. The repertory for their coming is so extensive as to include works by Beethoven, Haydn, Mozart, Schubert, Schumann, Brahms, Cherubini, Dvorak, Herzogenberg, Gradener, Grieg and Tschaikowsky. For the concert of December 7 they will be assisted by Miss Katharine Linn, pianiste, and the programme includes a Haydn quartet in D major, trio by Gade for piano, violin and 'cello, and Beethoven's Quartet in C, op. 59, No. 3.

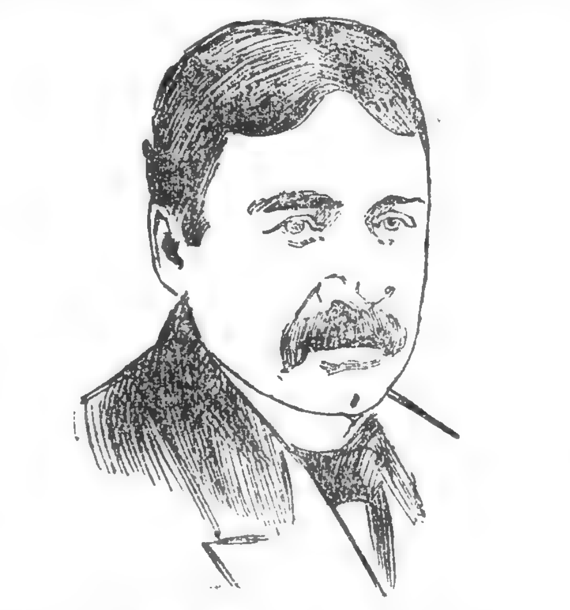
The last two concerts will be given on Thursday evening, December 29, and on Wednesday evening, January 11, by the Adamowski String Quartet of Boston and the Arnold String Quartet of New York. As Seidl's name is identified with the Kaltenborn party so is that of Paderewski with the organization to which the brothers Adamowski belong. It will be remembered that when the Polish pianist was making his triumphal tour of the United States he complimented the quartet on more than one occasion by appearing with it in chamber music programmes. The act was a doubly graceful one, from the fact that the Adamowskis were fellow countrymen and the additional circumstance that Paderewski was the teacher in piano of Mrs. Josef Adamowski (Antoinette Szumowska). The two brothers are described as being good foils to each other; the violinist, Timothee, being a most brilliant and dashing player, while Josef, the 'cellist, as befits the nature of his instrument, is sober and thoughtful, but full of genuine musical feeling. On Monday, September 20, 1897, the members of the Adamowski family were summoned to Spala and played by imperial command before the Czar and Czarina of Russia, achieving a marked success.

At the Adamowski concert of December 29 Mr. Arthur Foote, the well known Boston pianist, will assist, and one of his original compositions—a quartet for piano and strings—will be played. The final concert will call into requisition the services of eight artists, comprising beside the Richard Arnold String Sextet, performers on the flute, oboe and horn, and Mr. Alexander Lambert of the New York College of Music. Although actively engaged in teaching during the last few years Mr. Lambert ranks high as a piano virtuoso. A native of Warsaw, Poland, he was sent by the advice of Rubinstein to be educated at Vienna. Later he studied with Liszt at Weimar and subsequently appeared in concerts with Joachim, Sarasate, Teresina Tua and other eminent artists. He is a man of wide general culture and of a fraternal spirit toward struggling brother musicians. The performers on the strings and minor instruments at this concert are all of good caliber. Mr. Arnold, the leader, is concert master of the New York Philharmonic Society, and several of his comrades have long been identified with the Philharmonic concerts across the river.

The following is a birdseye view of the chamber music series:

Wednesday evening, October 26—Concert by the Kneisel String Quartet of Boston, Franz Kneisel, first violin; Otto Roth, second violin; Louis Svedenski, viola; Alwin Schroeder, 'cello, assisted by Arthur Whiting, piano. Programme, quartet in E minor ("Aus Meinem Leben"), Smetana, for string quartet, allegro vivo appassionato, allegro moderato, a la polka, largo sostenuto, Vivace; sonata for 'cello with piano accompaniment, Pietro Locatelli, accompaniment arranged by Alfredo Piatti, 1693-1764; quintet in E flat major, op. 44, Schumann, for piano and string quartet, allegro brillante, in modo d'una marcia (un poco largamento), scherzo (molto vivace), allegro ma non troppo.

Wednesday evening, November 16—Concert by the Kaltenborn String Quartet of New York, Franz Kaltenborn, first violin; Edwin Walter, second violin; Ernst Bauer, viola; H. Beyer-Hane, 'cello, assisted by August Kalkhof, double bass; Ernest Wagner, flute; Carl Rheinecke, clarinet; Joseph Eller, oboe; Fedor Bernhardi, bassoon; Herman Dutschke, horn. Programme, nonette in F major, op. 31, Louis Spohr, for violin, viola, 'cello, bass flute, clarinet oboe bassoon and horn; allegro scherzo (allegro), adagio, finale (vivace); quartet in C major, for strings, August Walther (second and fourth movements), adagio (molto cantabile), allegro vivace (finale); octette in F major, op. 166, Franz Schubert, for string quartet, bass, clarinet bassoon and horn, adagio (allegro), andante un poco mosso, scherzo (allegro vivace), andante (con variazioni), menuetto (allegretto), andante molto, allegro, andante molto, allegro molto.



TIMOTHEE ADAMOWSKI,
First Violin of the Adamowski String Quartet.

Wednesday evening, December 7, concert by the Spiering String Quartet of Chicago. Mr. Theodore Spiering, first violin; Mr. Otto Roehrborn, second violin; Mr. Adolph Wedig, viola; Mr. Herman Diestel, 'cello, assisted by Miss Katherine Linn, piano. Programme: Quartet in D major, Op. 64, No. 5, for strings, Haydn; allegro moderato, adagio cantabile, menuetto (allegretto), finale, presto; Noveileten in A minor, Op. 29, trio for piano, violin and 'cello, Gade, allegro scherzando, andante con moto, moderato, larghetto con moto, finale, allegro; quartet in C, Op. 59, No. 3, Beethoven; andante con moto, allegro vivace, andante con moto quasi allegretto, menuetto, grazioso, allegro molto.

Thursday evening, December 29—Concert by the Adamowski String Quartet of Boston. Mr. Timothee Adamowski, first violin; Mr. Arnold Moldauer, second violin; Mr. Max Zach, viola; Mr. Josef Adamowski, 'cello, assisted by Mr. Arthur Foote, piano. Programme: Quartet in F major, Op 18, No. 1, for strings, Beethoven; allegro con brio, adagio molto, menuetto, finale, allegretto; trio for violin, 'cello and piano, Paine; quintet in F minor, Op. 34. Brahms, for piano and strings, two movements; andante; piano forte quartet for piano and strings, in C major, Op. 23, Foote; allegro con modo (poco animato), scherzo (allegro vivace), adagio non troppo, finale, allegro menuetto.

Wednesday evening, January 11, concert by the Arnold String Sextet of New York: Richard Arnold first violin; D. C. Bauck, second violin; Herman Kuhn, violin and viola; Emil Gramm, viola; Leo Taussig, 'cello; August Kalkhof, double bass, assisted by Alexander Lambert, piano; Charles Kurth, flute; Joseph Eller, oboe; Hermann Dutschke, horn. Programme—Grand trio in B flat, Op. 52, Rubinstein, for piano, violin and 'cello, Moderato Assai, Andante, Allegro Moderato, Moderato, Finale; aria in E, for String Sextet, J. S. Bach; minuet in E flat, for String Sextet, Boccherini; Gavotte, "Le Tambourin," in E minor for String Sextet, Rameau; Grand Septet, Op. 74, Hummel, for piano, flute, oboe, horn, viola, 'cello and bass, Allegro con Spirito, Menuetto e Scherzo (Allegro), Andante con Variazioni, Finale (Vivace).

GERICKE'S IDEA OF MUSIC.

Eagle — Oct. 9

An Interview Which Gives a Pretty Good Idea of What the Conductor Will Do With the Boston Orchestra.

William Gericke, who is again to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra this winter, was profusely interviewed in Boston as a part of his welcome home. The following from the Boston Journal interview gives some idea of Mr. Gericke's nine years' absence in Europe and of the work he proposes to do here with the great orchestra:

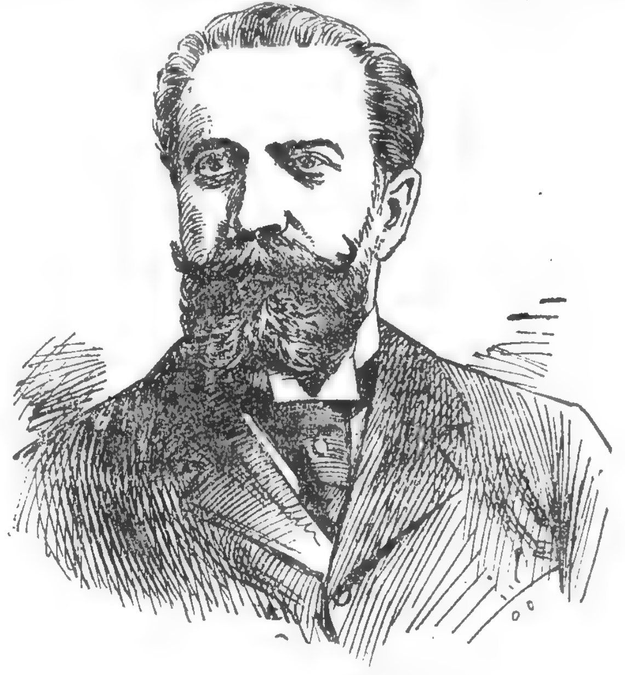
The distinguished Austrian is the same as ever, as the uplanders say. His figure is unchanged, moderately formed and well. Some gray hairs have crept into the sides of his beard, but his bearing is as erect and elastic and vigorous, and his manner as courteous and kind as though the intervention of time had been only momentary.

"Glad—glad to get back?" He let the interrogation echo in the room, as though listening to it. "Indeed I am. It is no exaggeration to say that Boston is a second home to me. I left it primarily because health drove me home. For more than a year after I left Boston I could not turn my attention to music. I went to the opera two or three times, but all I could see was an act, or, at the most, two acts. Overwork had drained my nerves of their strength. I had neither the taste nor the ambition to work. So I gave up music entirely. At the end of a year or so I resumed the conductorship of the Gesselschaft concerts. The Gesselschaft is a choral society that I led for some time before I first came to this country. I had had another offer from the Philharmonic Society of Berlin, but at the time it was made I was in no condition to consider it. I remained with the Gesselschaft choral five years, then I left for a year, but went back again, and I was in Vienna up to the time that I left for this country.

"How long will I remain? At least three years. That is the term that I have engaged myself for, and if my condition be good at the end of it I shall remain still longer. Nothing but my ill condition drew me away from here before."

"What are your plans?" the reporter asked.

"Well, the first few programmes you can see for yourself. You see among them only familiar names. There's the 'Euryanthe' overture, by Weber. I put that on the first programme because it was on the last that I conducted with the orchestra alone when I was here before. There are the old masters, and there are some moderns—Tchaikowsky, Richard Strauss and Chadwick. I selected Mr. Chadwick's 'Melpomene' because I conducted it before. It is dedicated to me, in fact. He is one of your foremost composers. I know also the composition of MacDowell and Paine and Foote, and at least one by Whiting—Arthur Whiting, who is now in New York.



WILLIAM GERICKE,
Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Among the novelties that I have chosen are symphonies by Bruckner, Sinding and Gilson. Gilson is a young Frenchman whose compositions have met with great success in France. Tchaikowsky, one of whose symphonies is already on the programme, was one of the great modern writers. Richard Strauss—well his first symphonic poems merited the success that was given them. They were very fine works indeed. But his late work is too—too—what shall I say?—overtoned—complicated. There is too much dissonance to it. You hear too many counter sounds. It is like three orchestras playing together in different keys. I know that some regard his work as a new form of writing. As for me, I say the day may come when we shall accustom our ears to all that mixture.

"But that is not my idea of music; not by any means. To my mind, music should be clear, comprehensive, as varied and as difficult, as formal or as original as you wish, but always clear and full of the meaning that the composer intends to convey. In other words, music should be so written that the listener will be sure of what the composer is saying.

"To me the great, inspired musician was Bach. Think of his work, its abundance and grandeur. Merely to have written what he did required extraordinary ease and facility. Then there was Beethoven, who sets the standard for symphonies; and Mozart and Schumann, and others. Everyone interested in music is more or less acquainted with the master writers of the past. "Nowadays, well, I must say the work is disappointing. All the writers of music are laboring industriously, but, as a rule, what they do is not always satisfactory. It may be that they write too fast, or with too little care, it may be. Rubenstein, for example, was one of the great composers of our time whose work was spoiled by the want of care. He wrote and wrote and never looked at his writing. As fast as he could do his work, off it went, unimproved and unpolished. Now that was not the way in which Beethoven, on the other side, worked. When he had finished a composition he put it by, and when the thought of it was off his mind, so to speak, took it up again and went over it diligently and patiently. Hence his wonderful finish. It is hard to compare the new and the old works, their form, I will call it, is so different, and their purposes.

"Speaking of choral music, my plan is to conduct some symphonies with chorus. 'Manfred,' Liszt's 'Faust' and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven are the ones I have in mind. I would not give the Ninth Symphony without the last movement. If I cannot get a suitable chorus—although I do not doubt that I will—and good soloists, it will not be given. The Ninth Symphony without that last semi-choral movement would be like—well, a person with one leg. It would be imperfection.

"I think that Boston, and the world at large, owes a great deal to Mr. Higginson, the proprietor of the Symphony Orchestra. His work is unique, and, therefore, all the more praiseworthy."

It will interest those who know Mr. Gericke to read that since leaving Boston he has joined the ranks of the married. His wife was Miss Flamm of Vienna. She loves music, is an excellent amateur pianist, and, naturally enough, is deeply interested in her husband's new work in an old field. Their daughter is about 5½ years old.

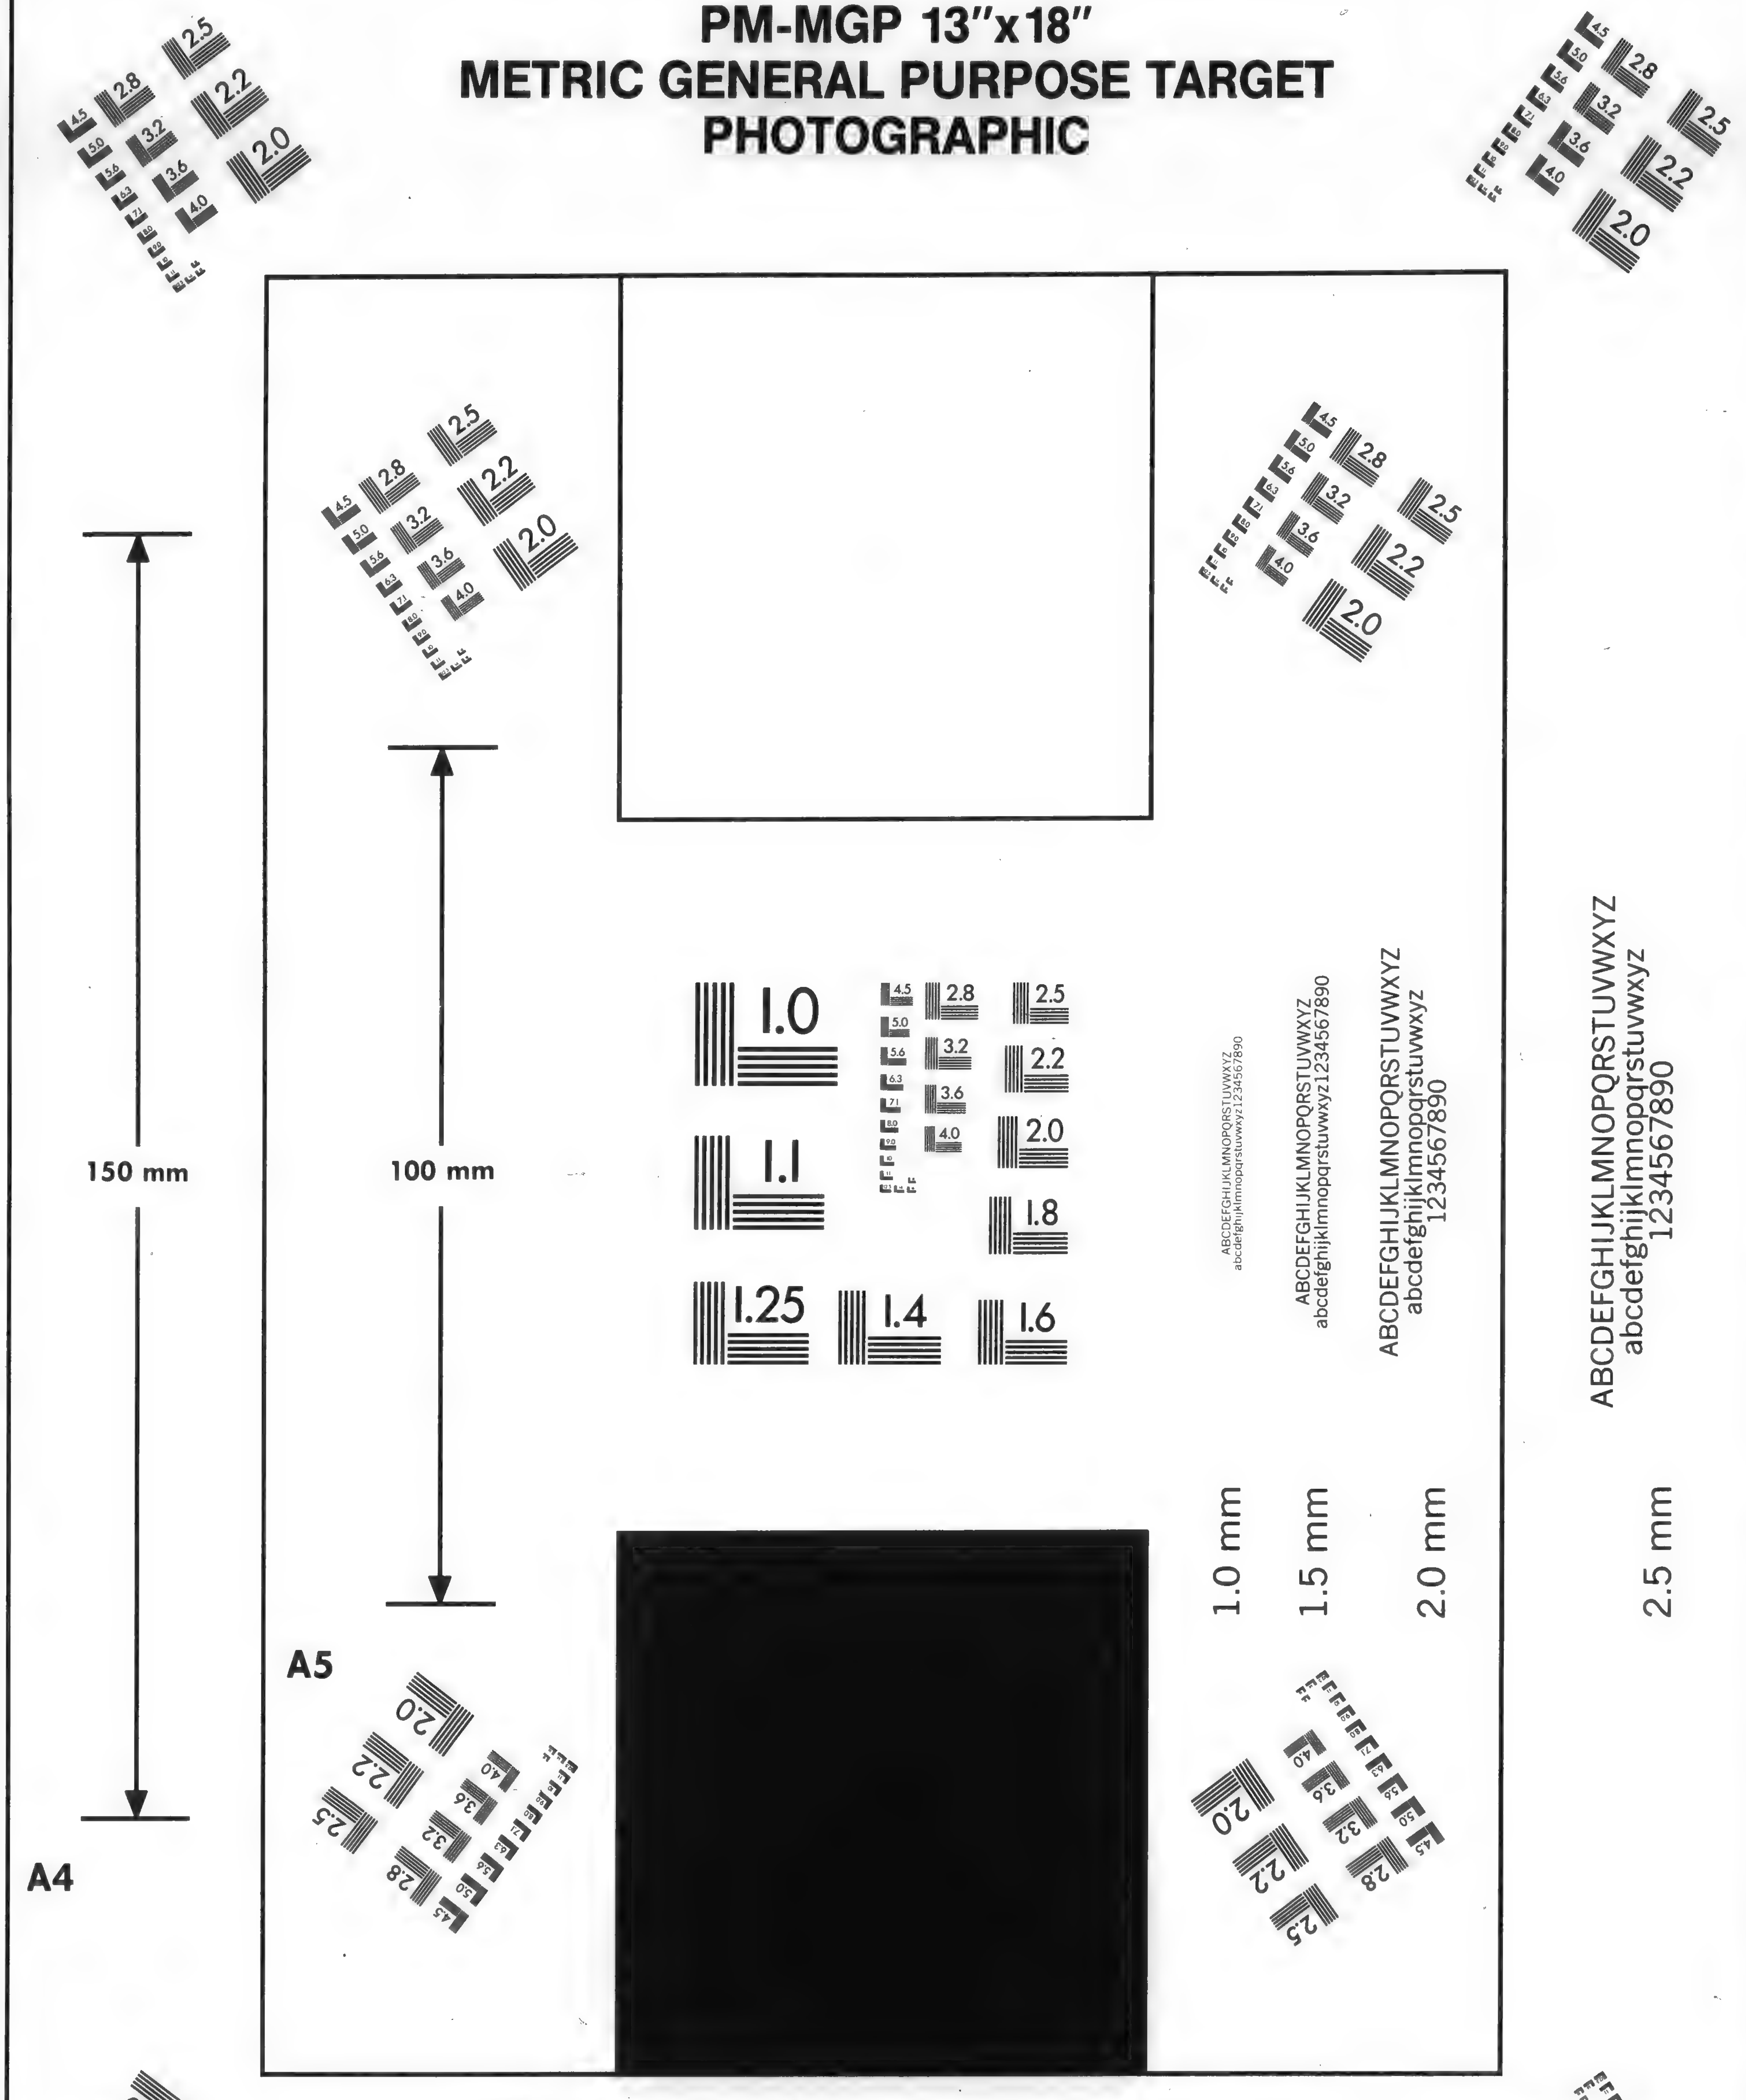
REDUCTION
RATIO
12x

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

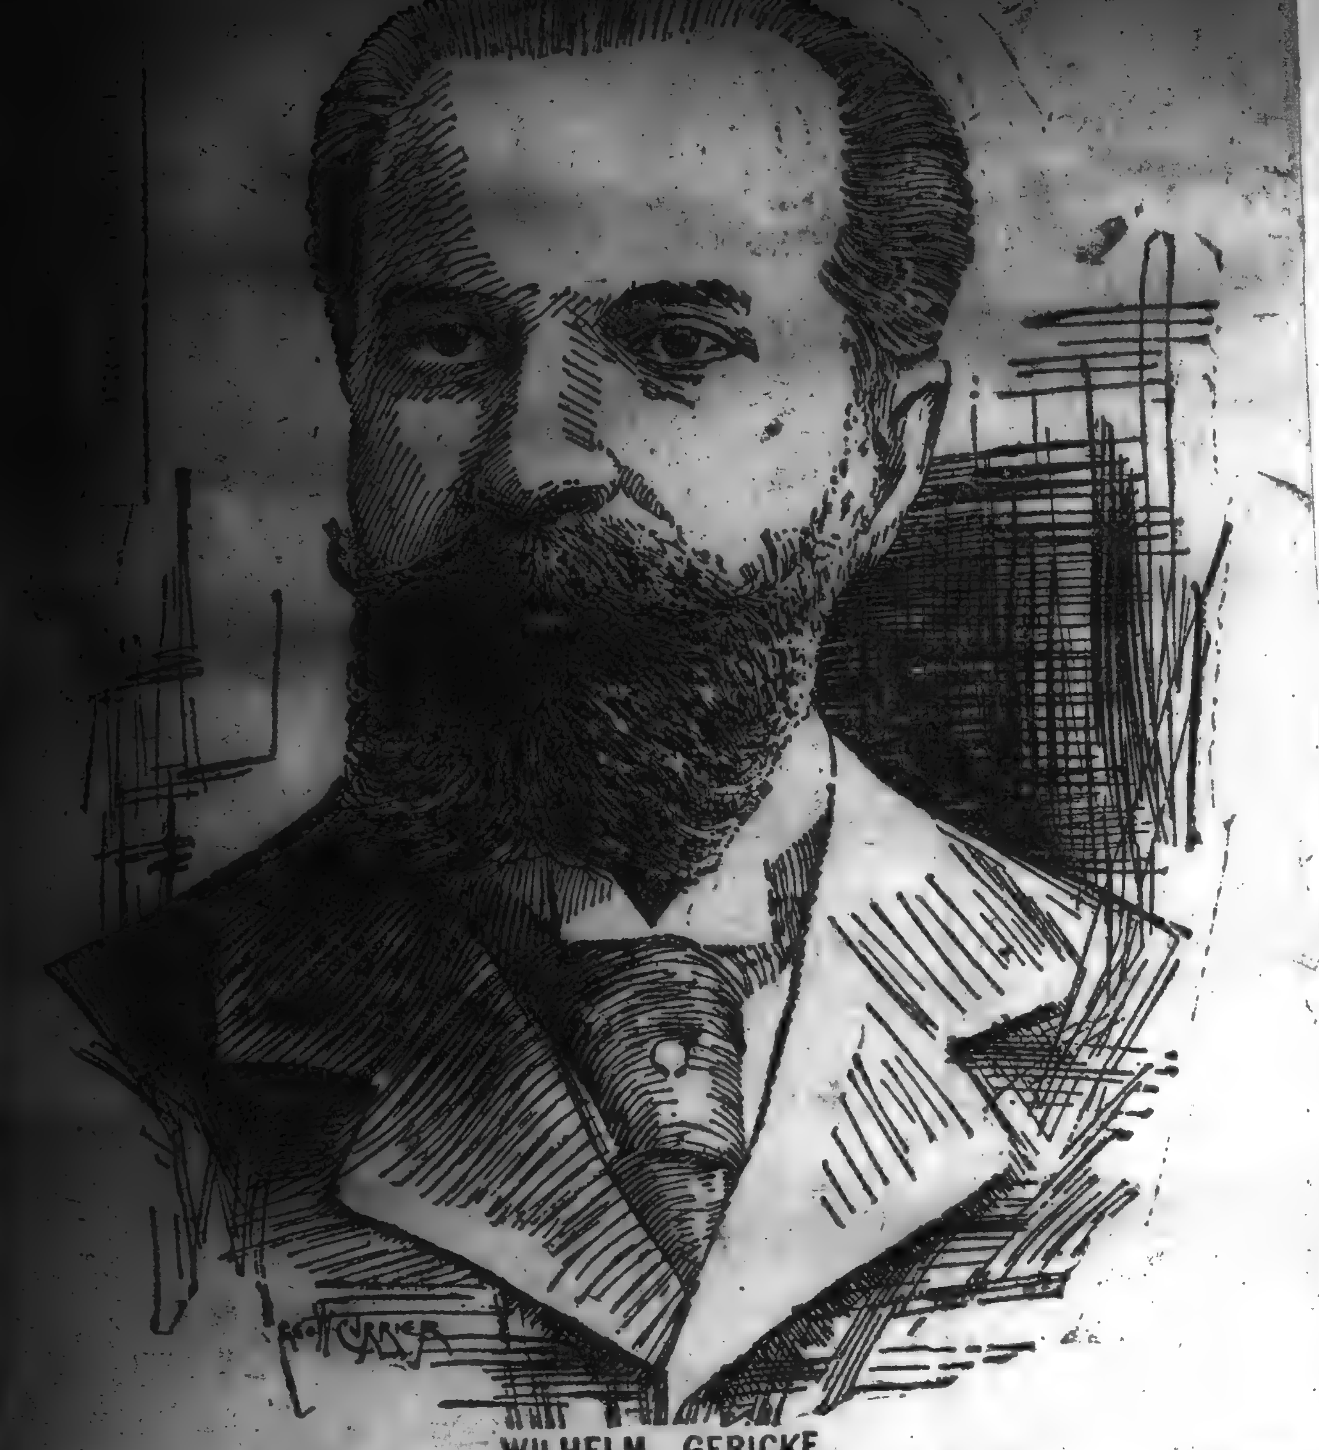
PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

THE SYMPHONY LEADER.



WILHELM GERICKE.

Who Returns to the Scene of His Former Triumphs After an Absence of Nine Years.

Wilhelm Gericke, who next Friday afternoon will again stand before the Boston Symphony Orchestra armed with the baton of conductor, is, of course, no stranger to Boston. From 1884 to 1889 he was the admired leader of the organization, and no one questions that his magnificent ability laid the foundation, at least, upon which the orchestra has builded so nobly. That he will bring out all that is best in the band is as well assured.

The story of Mr. Gericke's first engagement as conductor of the Symphony is interesting, as showing the entire absence of puffery or self-seeking in the transaction. It seems that Mr. Higginson, the founder, was in Vienna in the autumn of 1884, and attended a performance of "Aida" at the magnificent Grand Opera House. The conductor of that performance was Wilhelm Gericke, and so superbly was his work done that a great impression was made on the American patron of music. In two days Gericke was engaged as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Gericke's qualities as a drillmaster immediately began to have effect on the orchestra. Things were straightened out amazingly, and in a year or more a general organization of the band was made for its own good. The finest of players were brought from Europe by Mr. Gericke, and most of them are still with us. It is a remarkable fact that more than half of the players who now greet Mr. Gericke were under his baton during his first term.

In 1889 somewhat failing health and broken nerves told Mr. Gericke that he ought to rest. The farewell concert in his honor, on the evening of May 23, was a memorable one. Audience, chorus and orchestra united in unprecedented demonstations of esteem, and the conductor returned to Vienna firmly convinced of the warmth of American music-lovers. For a year he took life easily and built up his health. After that he resumed the conductorship of the Gesselschaft concerts, which position he held for five years. He spent a year in Dresden, and then returned to Vienna, where he was living at the time of his re-engagement.

Mr. Gericke does not promise many novelties for the coming season. The chief unfamiliar works will be a symphony by Bruckner and one by Sinding. Other smaller new works may be given, with perhaps an American representation. But the fact that Gericke has returned in the prime of life and full of bodily vigor is of sufficient interest to the vast majority of Symphony-goers.

Boston Daily Globe.

SATURDAY, OCT. 15, 1898.

The following program will be played at the Boston symphony concert in Music hall this evening: Overture to "Euryanthe," Weber; prelude, Adagio and Gavotte en Rondeau (for string orchestra), Bach; variations on a theme by Haydn, Brahms; symphony No. 5, C minor, op 67, Beethoven.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1898

WILHELM GERICKE

"Great poets can, without the aid
Of kindred mind,
Reveal to us the secrets laid
On them to find;
But music kings need ministries
To sound their hidden harmonies.

For showing us the inmost heart
Of these great kings,
And making clear with wondrous art
Their wanderings,
We thank thee, while we tender here
A 'bon voyage' to home's loved sphere."

[illegible] said we nine short years ago
To him who now
Comes back to us, again to show
The why and how
Of music's holy wanderings
The heart of her own chosen kings.

All hail, rare leader, tuned to know
[illegible] ministry!
Through orchestra of thine must flow
[illegible] harmony!
Welcome again to friendly shores!
We follow where thy vision soars.
[Elizabeth Porter Gould.
Time and the Hour.]

SATURDAY EVENING
Gazette
ESTABLISHED 1813.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1898.

The Symphony Concert.

With the first public symphony concert the musical season in Boston began, and the occasion was a social as well as a musical success. Every body was there, looking for everybody else. The weather was not all that could be desired, and there was evidence that music lovers could not always decide whether the season belonged to summer, autumn or winter, but the enthusiasm was unbounded. Conductor Gericke was greeted with fine applausive warmth, the matinee girl assuming her Paderewski enthusiasm, and applauding with fine fervor, while intently engaged in noting what attire her neighbors were wearing.

The programme was:
Overture to "Euryanthe" .... Weber
Prelude, adagio and gavotte (arranged for string orchestra by Sigismund Bachrich) .... Bach
Variations on a theme by Haydn (Chorale Sancti Antoni), op. 56A .... Brahms
Symphony No. 5, in C minor, op. 67.... Beethoven

The orchestra was in its happiest mood. and the Weber overture was played with a brilliancy and dash as delightful as it was unexpected. In the Bach arrangement the strings had their opportunity, and they took full advantage of it, playing with rare grace, spirit and delicacy. The orchestra and Mr. Gericke, however, reached their full height in the Beethoven symphony, and recalled the present conductor's success in the good days of old. It was a virile, dignified and most impressive interpretation, classic without the rigidity that is supposed to belong to the word, brilliant without a descent into feverish and romantic wildness—in a word, a most adequate interpretation of a masterpiece.

Only words of highest praise can be given to the new members of the orchestra, and this highest praise is that they seem to adequately replace the artists who were so unexpectedly and so cruelly removed by death. Mr. Gericke is to be congratulated on the brilliancy, artistic worth and finish of his first concert, and that his work was fully appreciated is shown by the hearty and repeated applause with which his labors were greeted. His old triumphs were equalled, and even excelled.

The programme for the second concert is: Chadwick, overture, "Melpomene"; Goldmark, concerto for violin in A minor, op. 28; Smetana, symphonic poem, "Vysehrad"; Schumann, symphony No. 2, in C major, op. 61; soloist, Mr. Franz Kneisel.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 16, 1898.

THE FIRST SYMPHONY—MR. GERICKE'S RE-ENTRANCE—THE KNEISEL SEASON

It was all well known music which was offered for the first programme of the new Symphony season—music which could only occupy most of its hearers with considerations of performance, although each and all of its four numbers must naturally have been strange to some portion of the public, coming newly into acquaintance with great orchestral composition.

The selections were: Weber's "Euryanthe" overture, with its familiar contrasts of impetuosity and calm; Bachrich's arrangement for strings of three movements from several works written for a solo violin by Bach—the prelude, adagio and gavotte which are generally presented together; Brahms's set of variations on a chorale by Haydn—variations which soon work their way elaborately and laboriously so far from the theme that one needs a telescope to see them and a balloon to reach them, and which represent more the composer's proud satisfaction in his complicated achievement than any real joy on the part of the listener; and Beethoven's fifth symphony.

This was a selection which the Harvard Musical Association could have presented; and with the exception of Brahms, the old Boston Academy might have claimed the composers for its own. Yet it was not ill chosen as a vehicle for bringing Mr. Gericke back to the public and the band whose assembly in face of each other from year to year is so largely the result of his previous labor and influence; and its performance gave immediate content and confidence. Breadth, decision in accent, justice and purity of phrase, dignity and certainty, prevailed throughout; and while there were fine delicacy and restraint in the lighter, softer and more thoughtful passages, there were a greater abandon, freedom and expansiveness (particularly shown in the freedom accorded to the brass choir) than were wont to be found under Mr. Gericke's former regime, which almost always held something back just when players and listeners were alike eager for every iota of full pure tone which could be. The readings were standard and consistent, and the conductor's enthusiastic reception was matched with the earnest applause which followed the close of the concert and of several individual movements. The programme gave no opportunity for prominence to the ability of the new wood-wind players, unless it might be in a few passages for the oboe; but the new man at the tinpani showed a fine taste in tone and a due sense of proportion.

Next Saturday's programme will be: Chadwick, Overture, "Melpomene;" Goldmark, Concerto for Violin in A minor, Op. 28, Mr. Kneisel, soloist; Smetana, Symphonic Poem, "Vysehrad;" Schumann, Symphony No. 2, in C major, Op. 61.

The subscription for the next series of eight Kneisel concerts will open on Monday morning at the Music Hall; and the evenings will be Mondays, as usual, and the room will be Association Hall. The scheme of the season includes many important new works, together with interesting selections from the standard repertory. The assisting artists already announced are the pianists Joseffy, Rosenthal, Scharwenka, Siloti and Whiting; and in the larger works the new members of the Symphony orchestra will participate. The season ticket costs but eight dollars, in spite of the varied and even costly nature of the concerts.

The usual preparation for music in the Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, has been made, providing for ten symphony concerts and ten chamber concerts; the latter under the musical supervision of Professor Paine. Boston people are not excluded from enjoying these peculiarly delightful evenings, and any application addressed to Mr. Cone, a Music Hall, will receive attention.

HOWARD MALCOM TICKNOR.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, OCTORBER 16, 1898.
(Copyright, 1898, Post Publishing Company.)

THE SYMPHONIES BEGIN.

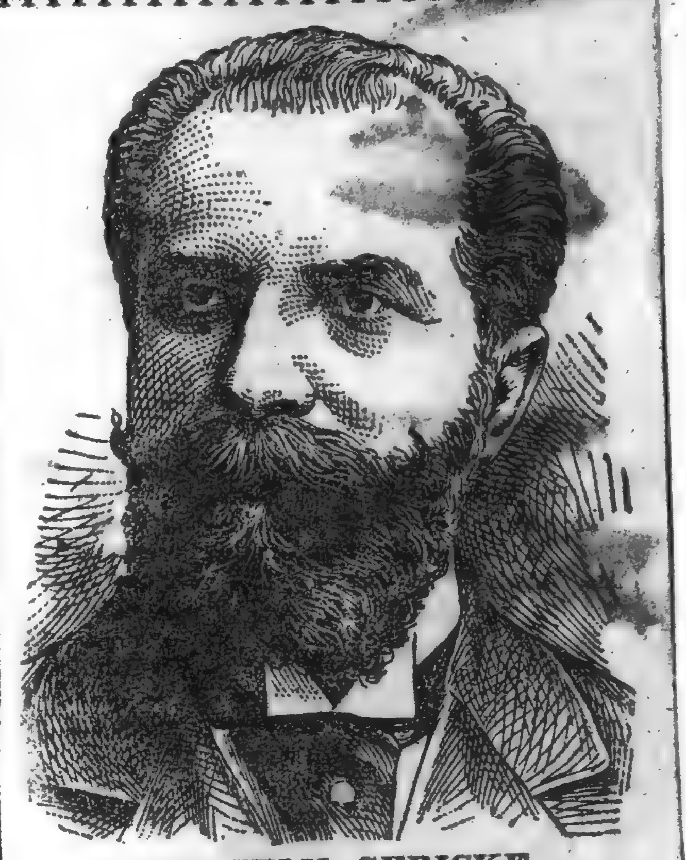
Opening of the Eighteenth Season in Music Hall Last Evening—Return of Wilhelm Gericke as Conductor.

Last evening the eighteenth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was inaugurated in Music Hall, opening also the musical year in this city. This event is always noteworthy in Boston, but this year it was especially so, for it marked the return, after an absence of some ten years, of Wilhelm Gericke to the leadership of the orchestra. This gentleman was exceedingly popular during his former regime, and if last evening's performance may be taken as a guide, he will quickly resume his place in public regard.

An unusually large audience was present, and when Mr. Gericke took his place on the platform, he was given a perfect ovation. Even the orchestra joined in a musical salute, and it was fully a minute before he could begin his duties.

Time has dealt leniently with Mr. Gericke. There may be a tinge of gray here and there, and possibly a little thinning of the hair on the crown of his head, but his figure is as erect as ever, his leading as full of force and fire, and the control he exercised over his men was as firm as of old.

He has started a pleasing innovation in his programme beginning with the shorter numbers and ending with the heavier symphony. Although nothing in the form of a novelty, the following will indicate that the programme was an exceptionally pleasing one: Weber's overture to "Euryanthe," Bach's prelude, adagio and gavotte, arranged by Bachrich; Brahms's variations on a theme by Haydn and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. There was certainly sufficient variety, and each selection was in turn warmly received. It also afforded an opportunity of studying Mr. Gericke's various methods of reading, notably in the Bachrich arrangement, which was given with excellent taste. "Euryanthe," too, was delightfully performed, showing that the conductor has already thoroughly summed up his forces. The Beethoven symphony was given in a masterly manner, concluding an unusually pleasant programme. For this week's rehearsal and concert there will be Chadwick's overture, "Melpomene"; Goldmark's concerto for the violin, Smetana's symphonic poem, "Vysehrad," and Schumann's symphony No. 2. Franz Kneisel will be the soloist.



WILHELM GERICKE.

There was the usual gathering of Symphony patrons, as well as many new faces, and the season's inaugural was more than usually brilliant.

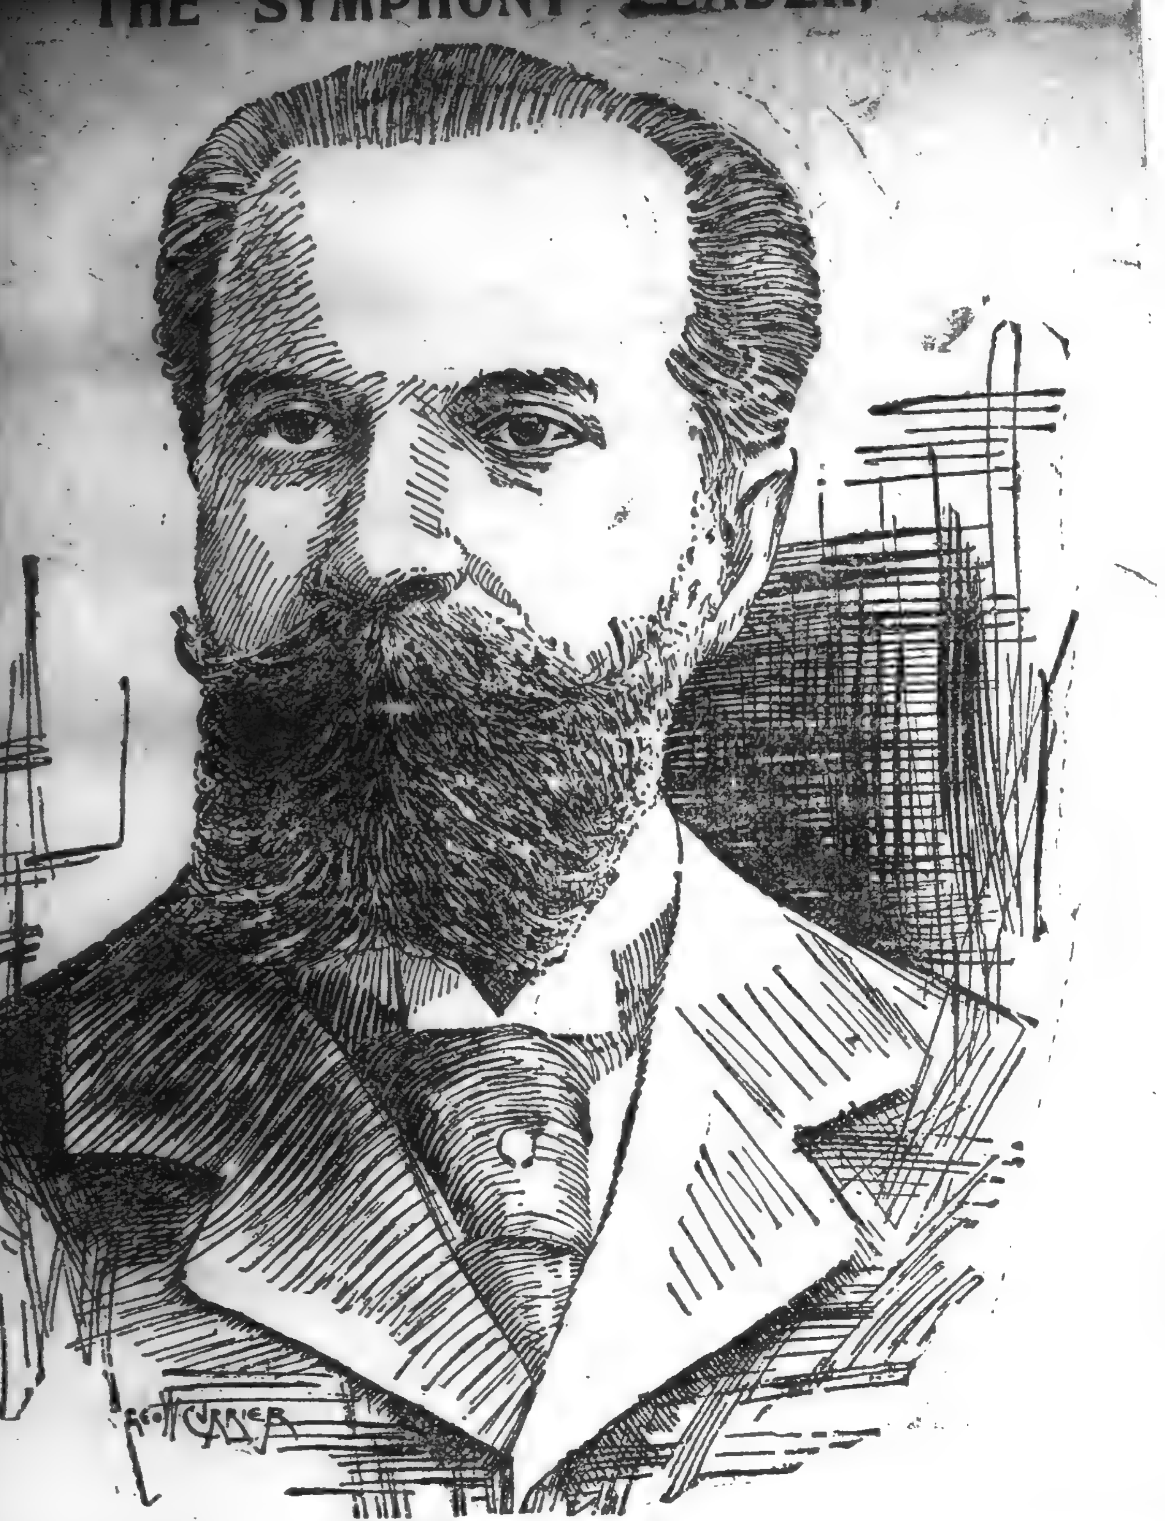
ELEGANT LADIES' WEAR.

Boston has a school of fashion. It is located on Tremont street, and the prin-

[29]

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 7, 1898.

THE SYMPHONY LEADER,



WILHELM GERICKE,

Who Returns to the Scene of His Former Triumphs After an Absence of Nine Years.

Wilhelm Gericke, who next Friday afternoon will again stand before the Boston Symphony Orchestra armed with the baton of conductor, is, of course, no stranger to Boston. From 1884 to 1889 he was the admired leader of the organization, and no one questions that his magnificent ability laid the foundation, at least, upon which the orchestra has builded so nobly. That he will bring out all that is best in the band is as well assured.

The story of Mr. Gericke's first engagement as conductor of the Symphony is interesting, as showing the entire absence of puffery or self-seeking in the transaction. It seems that Mr. Higginson, the founder, was in Vienna in the autumn of 1884, and attended a performance of "Aida" at the magnificent Grand Opera House. The conductor of that performance was Wilhelm Gericke, and so superbly was his work done that a great impression was made on the American patron of music. In two days Gericke was engaged as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Gericke's qualities as a drillmaster immediately began to have effect on the orchestra. Things were straightened out amazingly, and in a year or more a general organization of the band was made for its own good. The finest of players were brought from Europe by Mr. Gericke, and most of them are still with us. It is a remarkable fact that more than half of the players who now greet Mr. Gericke were under his baton during his first term.

In 1889 somewhat failing health and broken nerves told Mr. Gericke that he ought to rest. The farewell concert in his honor, on the evening of May 23, was a memorable one. Audience, chorus and orchestra united in unprecedented demonstations of esteem, and the conductor returned to Vienna firmly convinced of the warmth of American music-lovers. For a year he took life easily and built up his health. After that he resumed the conductorship of the Gesselschaft concerts, which position he held for five years. He spent a year in Dresden, and then returned to Vienna, where he was living at the time of his re-engagement.

Mr. Gericke does not promise many novelties for the coming season. The chief unfamiliar works will be a symphony by Bruckner and one by Sinding. Other smaller new works may be given, with perhaps an American representation. But the fact that Gericke has returned in the prime of life and full of bodily vigor is of sufficient interest to the vast majority of Symphony-goers.

Boston Daily Globe.

SATURDAY, OCT. 15, 1898.

The following program will be played at the Boston symphony concert in Music hall this evening: Overture to "Euryanthe," Weber; prelude, Adagio and Gavotte en Rondeau (for string orchestra), Bach; variations on a theme by Haydn, Brahms; symphony No. 5, C minor, op 67, Beethoven.

Boston Transcript

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 14, 1898

WILHELM GERICKE

"Great poets can, without the aid
Of kindred mind,
Reveal to us the secrets laid
On them to find;
But music kings need ministries
To sound their hidden harmonies.

For showing us the inmost heart
Of these great kings,
And making clear with wondrous art
Their wanderings,
We thank thee, while we tender here
A 'bon voyage' to home's loved sphere."

So said we nine short years ago
To him who now
Comes back to us, again to show
The why and how
Of Music's holy wanderings
In heart of her own chosen kings.

All hail, rare leader, tuned to know
Such ministry!
Through orchestra of thine must flow
Pure harmony!
Welcome again to friendly shores!
We follow where thy vision soars.

[Elizabeth Porter Gould.
Time and the Hour.

SATURDAY EVENING
Gazette
ESTABLISHED 1813.

BOSTON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1898.

The Symphony Concert.

With the first public symphony concert the musical season in Boston began, and the occasion was a social as well as a musical success. Every body was there, looking for everybody else. The weather was not all that could be desired, and there was evidence that music lovers could not always decide whether the season belonged to summer, autumn or winter, but the enthusiasm was unbounded. Conductor Gericke was greeted with fine applausive warmth, the matinee girl assuming her Paderewski enthusiasm, and applauding with fine fervor, while intently engaged in noting what attire her neighbors were wearing.

The programme was:
Overture to "Euryanthe"..................Weber
Prelude, adagio and gavotte (arranged for string orchestra by Sigismund Bachrich) ....Bach
Variations on a theme by Haydn (Chorale Sancti Antoni), op. 56A..............Brahms
Symphony No. 5, in C minor, op. 67....Beethoven

The orchestra was in its happiest mood, and the Weber overture was played with a brilliancy and dash as delightful as it was unexpected. In the Bach arrangement the strings had their opportunity, and they took full advantage of it, playing with rare grace, spirit and delicacy. The orchestra and Mr. Gericke, however, reached their full height in the Beethoven symphony, and recalled the present conductor's success in the good days of old. It was a virile, dignified and most impressive interpretation, classic without the rigidity that is supposed to belong to the word, brilliant without a descent into feverish and romantic wildness—in a word, a most adequate interpretation of a masterpiece.

Only words of highest praise can be given to the new members of the orchestra, and this highest praise is that they seem to adequately replace the artists who were so unexpectedly and so cruelly removed by death. Mr. Gericke is to be congratulated on the brilliancy, artistic worth and finish of his first concert, and that his work was fully appreciated is shown by the hearty and repeated applause with which his labors were greeted. His old triumphs were equalled, and even excelled.

The programme for the second concert is: Chadwick, overture, "Melpomene"; Goldmark, concerto for violin in A minor, op. 28; Smetana, symphonic poem, "Vysehrad"; Schumann, symphony No. 2, in C major, op. 61; soloist, Mr. Franz Kneisel.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 16, 1898.

THE FIRST SYMPHONY—MR. GERICKE'S RE-ENTRANCE—THE KNEISEL SEASON

It was all well known music which was offered for the first programme of the new Symphony season—music which could only occupy most of its hearers with considerations of performance, although each and all of its four numbers must naturally have been strange to some portion of the public, coming newly into acquaintance with great orchestral composition.

The selections were: Weber's "Euryanthe" overture, with its familiar contrasts of impetuosity and calm; Bachrich's arrangement for strings of three movements from several works written for a solo violin by Bach—the prelude, adagio and gavotte which are generally presented together; Brahms's set of variations on a chorale by Haydn—variations which soon work their way elaborately and laboriously so far from the theme that one needs a telescope to see them and a balloon to reach them, and which represent more the composer's proud satisfaction in his complicated achievement than any real joy on the part of the listener; and Beethoven's fifth symphony.

This was a selection which the Harvard Musical Association could have presented; and with the exception of Brahms, the old Boston Academy might have claimed the composers for its own. Yet it was not ill chosen as a vehicle for bringing Mr. Gericke back to the public and the band whose assembly in face of each other from year to year is so largely the result of his previous labor and influence; and its performance gave immediate content and confidence. Breadth, decision in accent, justice and purity of phrase, dignity and certainty, prevailed throughout; and while there were fine delicacy and restraint in the lighter, softer and more thoughtful passages, there were a greater abandon, freedom and expansiveness (particularly shown in the freedom accorded to the brass choir) than were wont to be found under Mr. Gericke's former regime, which almost always held something back just when players and listeners were alike eager for every iota of full pure tone which could be. The readings were standard and consistent, and the conductor's enthusiastic reception was matched with the earnest applause which followed the close of the concert and of several individual movements. The programme gave no opportunity for prominence to the ability of the new wood-wind players, unless it might be in a few passages for the oboe; but the new man at the tinpani showed a fine taste in tone and a due sense of proportion.

Next Saturday's programme will be: Chadwick, Overture, "Melpomene;" Goldmark, Concerto for Violin in A minor, Op. 28, Mr. Kneisel, soloist; Smetana, Symphonic Poem, "Vysehrad;" Schumann, Symphony No. 2, in C major, Op. 61.

The subscription for the next series of eight Kneisel concerts will open on Monday morning at the Music Hall; and the evenings will be Mondays, as usual, and the room will be Association Hall. The scheme of the season includes many important new works, together with interesting selections from the standard repertory. The assisting artists already announced are the pianists Joseffy, Rosenthal, Scharwenka, Siloti and Whiting; and in the larger works the new members of the Symphony orchestra will participate. The season ticket costs but eight dollars, in spite of the varied and even costly nature of the concerts.

The usual preparation for music in the Sanders Theatre, Cambridge, has been made, providing for ten symphony concerts and ten chamber concerts; the latter under the musical supervision of Professor Paine. Boston people are not excluded from enjoying these peculiarly delightful evenings, and any application addressed to Mr. Cone, a Music Hall, will receive attention.

HOWARD MALCOM TICKNOR.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, OCTORBER 16, 1898.
(Copyright, 1898, Post Publishing Company.)

THE SYMPHONIES BEGIN.

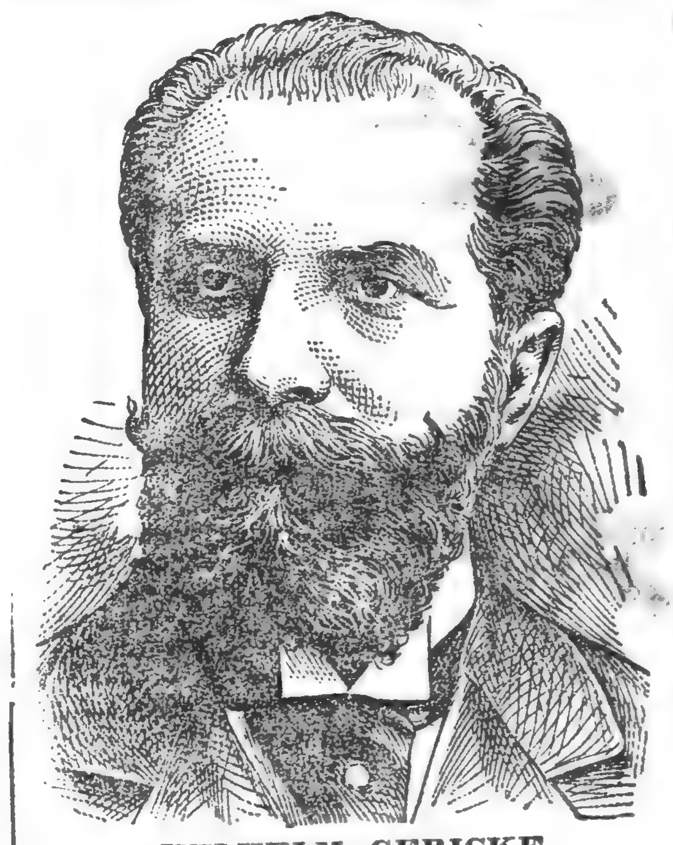
Opening of the Eighteenth Season in Music Hall Last Evening—Return of Wilhelm Gericke as Conductor.

Last evening the eighteenth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was inaugurated in Music Hall, opening also the musical year in this city. This event is always noteworthy in Boston, but this year it was especially so, for it marked the return, after an absence of some ten years, of Wilhelm Gericke to the leadership of the orchestra. This gentleman was exceedingly popular during his former regime, and if last evening's performance may be taken as a guide, he will quickly resume his place in public regard.

An unusually large audience was present, and when Mr. Gericke took his place on the platform, he was given a perfect ovation. Even the orchestra joined in a musical salute, and it was fully a minute before he could begin his duties.

Time has dealt leniently with Mr. Gericke. There may be a tinge of gray here and there, and possibly a little thinning of the hair on the crown of his head, but his figure is as erect as ever, his leading as full of force and fire, and the control he exercised over his men was as firm as of old.

He has started a pleasing innovation in his programme beginning with the shorter numbers and ending with the heavier symphony. Although nothing in the form of a novelty, the following will indicate that the programme was an exceptionally pleasing one: Weber's overture to "Euryanthe," Bach's prelude, adagio and gavotte, arranged by Bachrich; Brahms's variations on a theme by Haydn and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. There was certainly sufficient variety, and each selection was in turn warmly received. It also afforded an opportunity of studying Mr. Gericke's various methods of reading, notably in the Bachrich arrangement, which was given with excellent taste. "Euryanthe," too, was delightfully performed, showing that the conductor has already thoroughly summed up his forces. The Beethoven symphony was given in a masterly manner, concluding an unusually pleasant programme. For this week's rehearsal and concert there will be Chadwick's overture, "Melpomene"; Goldmark's concerto for the violin, Smetana's symphonic poem, "Vysehrad," and Schumann's symphony No. 2. Franz Kneisel will be the soloist.



WILHELM GERICKE.

There was the usual gathering of Symphony patrons, as well as many new faces, and the season's inaugural was more than usually brilliant.

ELEGANT LADIES' WEAR.

Boston has a school of fashion. It is located on Tremont street, and the prin-

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Retrospect of Col. Higginson's Great Artistic Benefaction —An Appreciation of Gericke and Other Conductors —The Orchestra's Past and Its Prospects.

Year by year the prospectus of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's season is published. The press expatiates upon the announcements, remarks upon the soloists, the conductor, and individual members of the orchestra, but seldom is a word said regarding the source whence all these blessings flow.

As far as public comment is concerned, the identity of Henry L. Higginson is an almost unknown quantity—and yet, had it not been for his benevolent conception and generous impulse, these exceptional opportunities would not exist. If there is a genuinely modest man in existence it is Henry L. Higginson, and he is the last person in the world who would court public attention.

From the beginning to the end of the season he does not interfere in the least with the working of this large organization, leaving its weekly routine entirely in the hands of the conductor and the business manager, his only admonition to the members being that upon all occasions, in private or public, none shall ever refer to the organization otherwise than as the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Thomas' Orchestra, Seidl's Orchestra, Damrosch's Orchestra, if you please, but no Nikisch's, Paur's, Gericke's or Higginson's orchestra, under penalty of exciting his displeasure. This organization was instituted as the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it is endowed as such and will be perpetuated as such.

Let it be known that, were it not for the munificence of Mr. Higginson in the dual consideration of art and the welfare of his fellow-townsmen, we in Boston would still be restricted to infrequent opportunities for hearing orchestral music, instead of enjoying, as we now do, the rich and frequent occasions offered us in the performances of a superb organization.

Now to consider for a moment what Mr. Higginson has done: He has organized and supported an orchestra of eighty of the most proficient performers that can be obtained, and has sustained the benefaction through all these years—this season now beginning being the eighteenth—by going down deep into his pocket and paying the losses incidental to its liberal support. It must be remembered that Mr. Higginson has done this single-handed. Neither was it an experiment upon his part. It has been a steady purpose. There has been no combination of wealthy men, no syndicate of speculators, as in the case of other well-known musical enterprises, to foot the bills for a season or two, and then drop the scheme. Neither has the financial distress that has prevailed in business circles, and disturbed the plans of even the wealthiest, ever caused the founder of this organization to falter in his noble purpose.

Only once has Colonel Higginson considered the question of disbanding the orchestra, and that was when the Musicians' Union of New York attempted to prevent Nikisch from entering the country. If they had succeeded in their undertaking, the orchestra would have been disbanded.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is unique in that it was conceived and has been sustained by one generous and resolute man. The same generosity and public spirit stops not with this magnificent gift, but is extended in many directions.

During the four years of the Civil War Colonel Higginson's business interests were set aside while he devoted himself to the demands of his country, sufferings the hardships and taking the chances of life or death that fall to the lot of the soldier in active service. With military honors he returned to his peaceful avocations and devoted his life to hard work and good deeds.

I am free to say that the first emotion that stirs me as I sit waiting for the beginning of each Boston Symphony concert is a sense of deep gratitude towards the noble benefactor who made these occasions possible. It is well that the communities benefited by the exceptional advantages offered in the superb performances of the Orchestra should be reminded that to one person alone are they indebted for these blessings—a modest citizen, a brave soldier, a noble benefactor. Such is Henry L. Higginson. How many such are there in our musical world to-day?

At the time Mr. Higginson instituted the Boston Symphony Orchestra (1881) orchestral bodies were in a queer way in Boston. The old Harvard Orchestra had about expired of dry rot; the Philharmonic Orchestra, a mutual society of players, had been giving infrequent concerts at a loss, the men getting nothing for their services, and Theodore Thomas' splendid organization had failed to make its visits profitable. Things orchestral had come to a standstill. Henschel was an attraction in Boston at that time, as a singer, and at a concert of the old orchestra conducted the performance of one of his own works with such success that he was regarded as a suitable man to direct the new organization, and he was appointed to the position of conductor. Henschel, however, was a comparative novice as a conductor, and learned his trade with the material Mr. Higginson furnished. At the end of his second year Mr. Higginson hoped to have supplanted him with a more competent conductor, but, the effort to engage such a one failing, Henschel remained another year. To Henschel's credit it must be said that his catholic taste enabled him to present the most varied and interesting programmes given as yet by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In 1884 came Gericke, who had been suggested to Mr. Higginson by Hans Richter. Gericke was at that time attached to the Vienna Royal Opera as fourth conductor. In a few weeks only the playing of the Orchestra under his able direction became as different from that under Henschel's leading as light from darkness. He put an iron yoke upon the necks of the players at rehearsals, and at concerts as well, and, as one of his players remarked, after these occasions were over "he took it off and was as good as pie."

◆ ◆ ◆

Gericke spared no one in the rigidity of his discipline, not even himself. He put his iron grip on the men, and each player became only one-eightieth of the band. One principal player who had been addicted to talking at rehearsals a great deal was nipped at once by Gericke and told that "he was hired to play and not to talk." When asked afterwards how he liked Gericke as a conductor, he replied: "I tell you we don't have some picnics mit him, you bet."

Gericke treated the players all alike, however. One day, when he was explaining to the band how he wished something to be played, upon looking about to see that every man was listening, he discovered his concertmaster busy marking the bowing in some violin parts. Gericke lit on him and raked him down after the most approved manner for setting such an example to the other players.

Gericke's alertness was evident in his grabbing up Sautet, the oboist, and Molé, the flutist, when, through the burning of the Opéra Comique in Paris, these excellent players found themselves "out of a job." Sautet still remains, but Molé left last season. Molé had some dispute about salary with the management and, the latter not yielding, he finally succumbed, though too late, for another player had been engaged—Ah! woe was me when Molé departed, for he was a great artist, and the only one I ever heard who ennobled the "doodling pipe," as someone has termed the dulcet flute.

To the everlasting credit of Gericke in his fining and perfecting process let it be said he squelched the roof-lifting brass-players of the band. Strange to relate, most critics used to howl in those days for "more freedom of the brass." Normal tone production didn't seem to sufficiently ravish their musical souls. These same gentlemen would rip a pianist up the back who pounded even a little, and yet they would call for the brass to be "let out" like a savage bulldog on his helpless victim. They would praise the delicacy of the strings, and the wood wind, but from the brass it was gore they wanted, regardless of musical proportions and proprieties.

Gericke failed only as a programme-maker, for he did not exhibit a catholic taste. He relied too much upon the classics at first, but improved a little in this respect as he went on in his engagement. However, all that the Boston Symphony Orchestra is today is due wholly to the efforts of Gericke's discipline during his term of five years as its conductor.

Mr. Higginson begged Gericke to renew his contract for another term of five years, but as his health was not of the best, and fearing he could not do the work demanded of him without breaking down completely, he declined Mr. Higginson's flattering offer.

Speaking for myself, I think that, with the advent of Nikisch, the high standard of the Orchestra fell. Nikisch left before the end of his fourth year, and Kneisel took the baton and finished the season with eminent success upon the western tour of the Orchestra, the former thereby forfeiting five thousand dollars, as per contract. Upon the exit of Nikisch, Mr. Higginson tried to induce Hans Richter to take the position of conductor; failing in that, he tried to get Gericke to come back for a second term, and, not being successful in that, invited Theodore Thomas to come to Boston. Thomas accepted, providing he could get his release from the Chicago organization. The latter readily granted his release, refusing, however, to keep the players whose engagement with Thomas was for one more season. With that praiseworthy integrity that has always marked Thomas' treatment of his men, he consequently declined Mr. Higginson's liberal offer and remained in Chicago with his players.

There is no man in the world who would respect Thomas' decision more than Henry L. Higginson.

Emil Paur got the position—a conscientious musician, if one ever existed. I could not discover that Paur had any grip upon the Orchestra, for, regardless of his efforts, the Orchestra played well or slovenly as it chose. He allowed the brass to overblow, and let the drummer pound the drums with infernal vehemence.

Paur used to make sad havoc of Schumann's music, and he played Haydn and Mozart in a coarse and boisterous manner. I was glad when he went and do not begrudge him his job with the New York Philharmonic Band.

Well, all of this is passed, and on October 12 the new order of things began under Gericke's second administration. We shall soon see what results will be gained, and if he still possesses that inflexible grip which so eminently marked his command over the players during his first term.

Not to speak of Mr. Charles A. Ellis in conjunction with the career of this now famous Orchestra would be to omit to mention a most potent factor in its existence. Mr. Ellis has been to Mr. Higginson an invaluable aid, all details of business and of the movements of the Orchestra having devolved upon him and his able assistant, Mr. Fred C. Cornee. The foresight and integrity of the former and the devotion of the latter in all matters other than the musical direction of the organization have resulted in a most successful carrying out of Mr. Higginson's design.

WARREN A. DAVENPORT.

Besides the five concerts to be given in New York by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Carnegie Hall, there will be five public rehearsals on the afternoons of the previous days. The dates of the concerts are the following—November 10, December 15, January 19, February 23 and March 23.

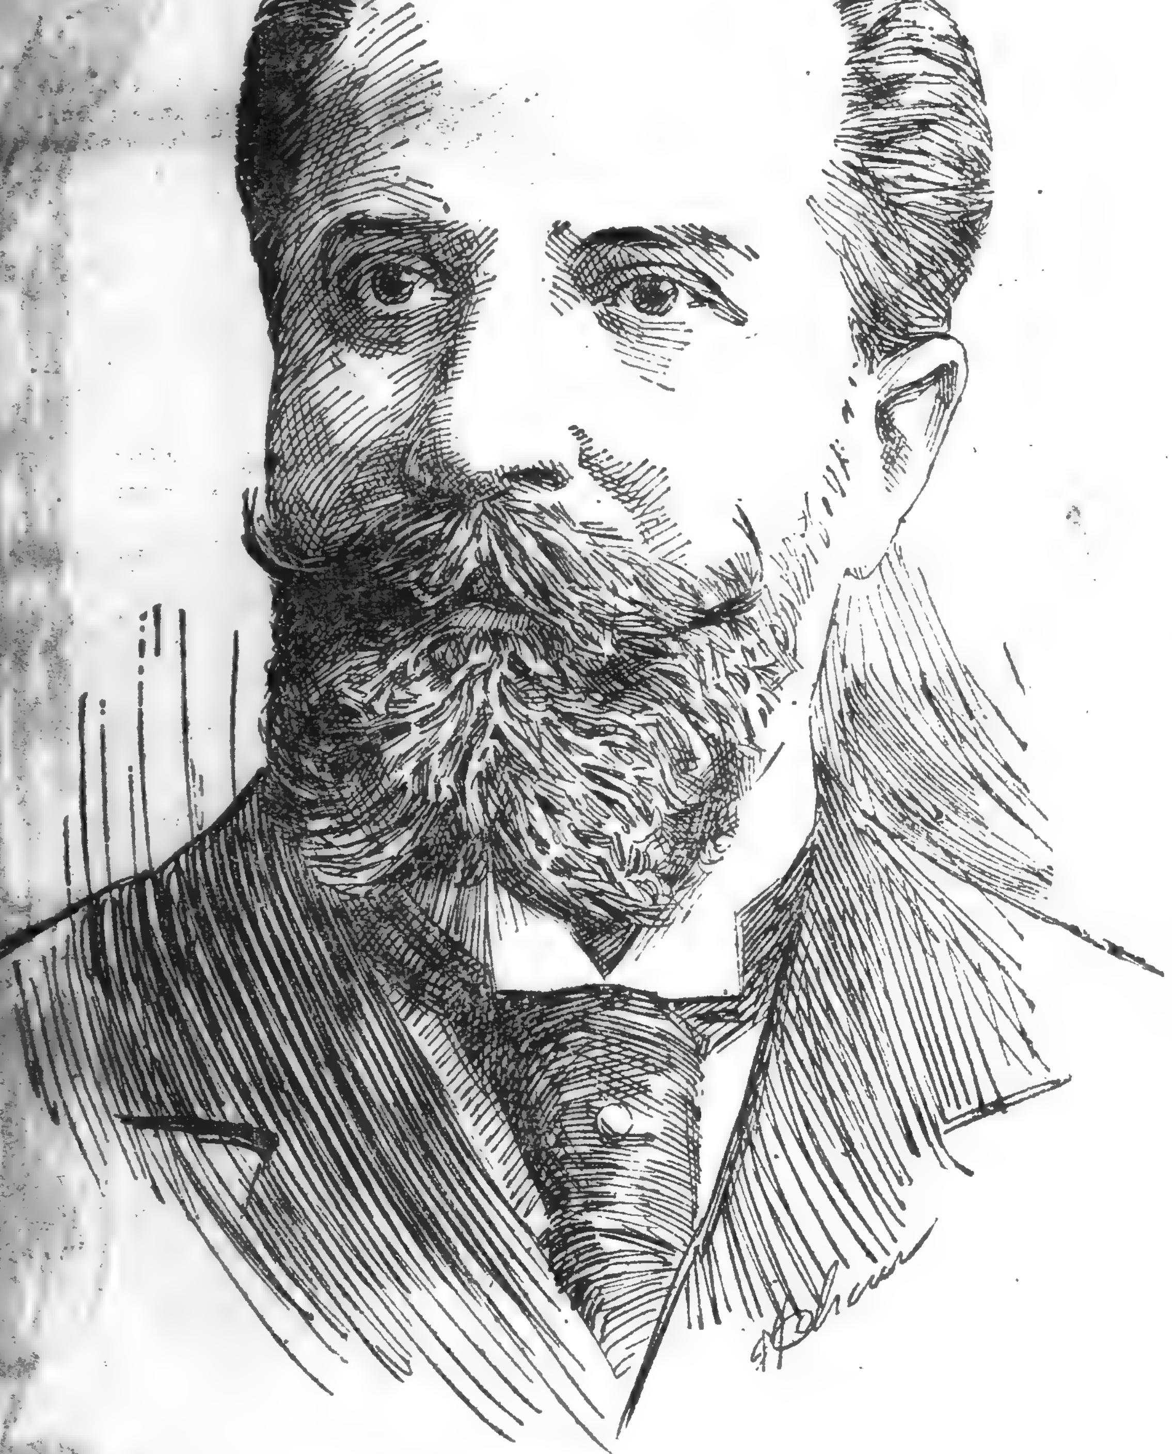
The influence of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke will add an extra interest to these occasions. Gericke's methods are so entirely different from those of his immediate predecessor that undoubtedly an interesting comparison will be evoked.

◆ ◆ ◆

The Boston Symphony will be heard in five concerts in Philadelphia this season. Among the soloists to appear are: Mme. Norman-Neruda, or Lady Hallé, as she is known; Moritz Rosenthal, Theresa Carreño and Willy Burmester.

W. C. CAWLEY.

SUNDAY HERALD.
PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CIV., NO. 108.
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1898.



MR. WILHELM GERICKE,
Conductor of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

SYMPHONY SEASON OPENS.

First Concert of the Eighteenth Season in Music Hall.

Return of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke to the Post of Conductor—He Was Given a Most Hearty Welcome—Concert an Artistic Success for Conductor and His Players.

The first concert of the 18th season of the Boston Symphony orchestra was given in Music Hall last evening. The programme was:

Overture, "Euryanthe"..................Weber
Prelude, adagio and gavotte........J. S. Bach
Arranged for strings, S. Bachrich.
Variations on a theme by Haydn.......Brahms
Symphony No. 5, C-minor..........Beethoven

A solid and well considered programme with which to open the Symphony season worthily and interestingly, and sufficiently varied in character to prove gratifying in that respect. There was a very large audience, the hall being completely filled, and all the available standing room being occupied.

The beginning of a new season of the Symphony orchestra is always a pleasureable event, but this year it had a specially marked interest in the return of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke to the post of conductor, which he vacated nine years ago, after having brought the orchestra to that state of brilliant efficiency which raised it to the rank of one of the finest organizations of its kind in existence. He has always been remembered gratefully, and with the warmest esteem for his high worth, personally and professionally. The audience last evening was prolific in those to whose pleasure and edification he had ministered so well and so successfully nearly a decade ago, and the hearty fervor, the excited spontaneity and the prolonged ardor of the welcome back that they accorded him must have convinced him beyond all peradventure that his long absence had not dulled the fine edge of their friendship and admiration for him.

It was a tremendous reception, in which a right royal fanfare from the brass in the orchestra mingled with the stormy plaudits of the audience. Time has dealt kindly by Mr. Gericke. It has thinned his locks somewhat and flecked his beard and mustache slightly with a frosty touch, but otherwise his appearance is unchanged.

The orchestra remains substantially the same, some mutations that it has undergone having painful associations that the occasion brought sadly to mind again. The strangers all made a wholly favorable impression, and, judged by what was heard of them last evening, are really valuable acquisitions to the orchestra. The new first oboe has a superb tone, full, resonant, pure and of an exquisitely sympathetic quality, and he plays with the skill and taste of a thorough artist.

The new first flute is to be similarly commended for the volume, richness and sonority of his tone. The first clarinet had little to do that afforded an opportunity to judge how well he would fill the position of the lamented M. Pourtau, but the smoothness and the purity of his tone made themselves felt, and were full of comforting promise. The first trumpet appears to be decidedly the best that the orchestra has ever had, while the new tympanist is fairly a revelation of the possibilities of the drums as musical instruments, instead of mere noise-makers. Those of the newcomers are of larger make than the orchestra has previously had, and have a noble sonority, and as he treats them lovingly and tunes them perfectly and the brutal sound of a hard drumstick is never heard banging vindictively on the drumhead without even the suggestion of a musical tone, the artist, for a tympani player may be an artist, he is an innováion to be welcomed as a treasure and cherished accordingly.

Mr. Gericke's conducting is the same as it was in the past. It is undemonstrative, never coming between the hearer and the music with disturbing effect, but it is none the less effective and with a relentless down beat from which there is no escape, and which holds the orchestra firmly under control. His readings of the various selections were conservative, but always just and interesting. There was in them nothing of the prevalent seeking after insignificant somethings that had not been sought before; nothing that suggested glorification of the conductor at the expense of the composer. Their spirit was healthy, their results were sane.

Notably topical and satisfying were his tempi, especially in the symphony. Fate did not knock at the door in the opening movement, as if its sole object were to make a violent burglarious entrance. The andante was taken at the proper graceful pace instead of dragged out to tiresomeness, and the entrance of the triumphal strain of the finale was made with imposing and thrilling majesty The Bach suite was read with delightful and delighting animation, and the Brahms variations have never been heard here when they were accorded so genial and so piquant an interpretation nor more rich and beautiful coloring.

The orchestra played throughout con amore, and in its very best manner. The unequalled strings were never heard to better advantage. It is not yet time to make comparisons; nor, indeed, does it seem necessary to do so to any marked extent. It may perhaps be noticed that there was something more of precision and of unity than has been the rule in the attack of the wood wind, and the same may be said of the brass; and it seemed that there was more of a willing and an enthusiastic spirit than has been observable of late in the playing generally; but the orchestra is a perfect instrument, and it is to be doubted if Mr. Gericke found that it had deteriorated perceptibly since it left his hands. It is not impossible that in some essentials he discovered an advance.

The concert was a complete artistic success for the conductor and his players. By and by, when he shall have impressed his individuality on it, there will be more to say of it. In any case, the season opened brilliantly and satisfyingly, and there is every promise that it will be one of exceptional interest.

The programme for the next concert is: Overture, "Melpomene," G. W. Chadwick; concerto for violin in A minor, Goldmark; symphonic poem, "Vysehrad," Smetana; symphony No. 2, in C major, Schumann. Mr. Franz Kneisel is to be the soloist.

Mr. Gericke must have felt as if time and space had been annihilated when he stood upon the conductor's stand on the Music Hall platform Friday afternoon with the same baton in his hand, with very many of the same people before him giving him a tremendous welcome, and the old hall looking exactly as it did when he left it, and with the same musicians around him, with few exceptions. And in the eminent conductor himslf, who has come back to us so happily, one could note, after careful scrutiny, but very little change. His step is as light, his form as erect and his face as young as of old, and he wields his baton with the same easy grace as before. The only difference seemed to be that in one of the seats near the platform sat for the first time a Mrs. Gericke, her eyes carefully following every movement of her husband, a most interesting and attractive listener. Although the floor and first balcony were almost filled, and all the standing space occupied, with the usual crush in the second balcony, there were a number of vacant seats, for many of the subscribers are still out of town. It was a splendid audience, however, and the bright colors in the costumes of the young people lightened up the old hall delightfully.

A few noted in their accustomed places were Col. and Mrs. Henry L. Higginson, Mr. and Mrs. Charles P. Curtis, Mrs. James Jackson, Mr. Frank Jackson, Mrs. S. Parkman Blake, Mr. and Mrs. Lothrop Thorndike, Miss Katherine Fay, in a dark cloth costume, with an exceedingly becoming picture hat loaded with purple plumes, shading from light to dark; Mr. John Lyman, Mrs. John L. Gardner, her mourning brightened by a huge bunch of fragrant violets; Mrs. Frederick Warren, Mr. and Mrs. Elliot Pratt, Mrs. Seth Sprague, Mr. E. D. Jordan and his young son, Dr. Sturgis Bigelow, who, with Miss Mary Bigelow, Mr. and Mrs. Templeman Coolidge, Jr., Miss Charlotte Dana and Mr. Edmund Dwight, have the same seats in the balcony which they have had for several seasons, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Grew, Mrs. William Hooper, Miss Adele Thayer, Mrs. Robert Gould Shaw, Miss Susan Shaw, Mrs. Hunnewell, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Grew, Mr. and Mrs. Boylston Beal, Mrs. George F. Putnam, Mrs. E. E. Hale, Miss Helen Burnham, Mrs. Hall Curtis, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Van Brunt, Miss Fitz, Miss Channing, Mrs. Charles Marsh, Mrs. E. M. Binney, Mrs. Francis H. Peabody, Mrs. R. M. Field, Mrs. J. W. Kenney, Miss May Kenney, Mrs. J. Foster White, Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Wheelwright, Mrs. George Morgan, Mr. Franklin P. Abbott, Mr. George Barnard, Mrs. George P. Sanger, Mrs. Phineas Adams, Prof. W. W. Nolan, Mr. and Mrs. William B. Merrill, Mrs. Francis R. Allen and Miss Allen, Mrs. W. W. Blackmar and her sister Miss Brewer, Mrs. Caleb Bradlee, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Woodworth, Mr. and Mrs. B. F. Redfern, Mrs. Edward Farnsworth, Mrs. Edward Hodges, Mr. Charles Vaille, Mrs. Walter Cowing and Miss Cowing, Mrs. Louis Whiting, Dr. Lawrence, the Rev. Father Bodfish, Mrs. William Lindsey, Linzee Tilden and Mr. and Mrs. H. M. Ticknor, Mrs. John Osborn, Miss Alice Ward, Mr. John D. Williams, Mr. Greenleaf, Mr. James R. Poor and Miss Maude Adams, the actress, looking extremely smart in gray cloth, the fashionable color this year, and a close black toque.

Two thousand applications for admission to the first Symphony rehearsal were made in vain. Every place was taken days before. Such an assemblage as greeted the first appearance of the conductor must have flattered him, and it certainly rejoiced the promoter of these concerts, for a more fashionable or a more musical audience never jammed into old Music Hall. Last night duplicated it, but that very feminine and youthful element marking Friday's crowd had somewhat changed. If these two splendidly typical audiences are an index of the coming season, Boston will outdo itself in music patronage.

I want to congratulate the Music Hall management on the extra freshness of the petticoats on the electric lights, and that new wooden fence round the ticket takers! The latter arrangement is rather tempting to an impatient, long-limbed person, because it looks easy to "take," but it is hoped nobody will jump over, except in a case of fire. Yet, if people do so forget themselves, Mr. Comee can have the top covered with broken glass or a barbed wire, such as city householders nail on their back-yard fences to prevent the depredations of boys and cats.

Mr. Gericke has changed in appearance, and for the better. Rehearsalina, who vaguely recalls the time when she was taken to Music Hall by her mamma to hear the Symphony orchestra, "that her taste might be cultivated," says she would not know him. Yet her elder sister, Rehearsaletta, declares he is just the same. But, then, Rehearsaletta is 10 years older, and has been going to the Kneisel concerts for three seasons! Of course, her judgment is of more weight than a young snip's, who was a debutante last winter, and who has no classical music experience to back up her opinions. Be this as it may, the Gericke head is a trifle more bald; a few white lines also add a distinguishing touch to the Gericke beard, which was always arranged to a hair, but there is more of gracious warmth in the conductor's glance. In short, Mr. Gericke is greatly improved in manner, while his dress is as faultlessly correct as when Rehearsaletta saw him last, nine years ago. All this speaks well for Mrs. Gericke, now a factor in the social attributes of Boston's most musical congregation. But the Viennese wife of our new-old conductor must be considered later on, when people know her better. She is, however, a pretty woman, speaking English perfectly, and that should be reason enough for her welcome by her husband's old friends.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.
MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 17, 1898.

The Opening Symphony Concert of the Season.

Gericke Again Conducting—City Orchestral Concert.

It is said that republics are ungrateful. On Saturday Boston proved that municipalities are not, for the return of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke to the director's stand after nine years of absence was signalized by the attendance of a great audience and a heartiness of reception that was a fitting pendant to the wonderful farewell concert that was given him in 1889.

It is just that Mr. Gericke should be thus heartily welcomed back to the field of his labors; the Boston Symphony Orchestra is in a peculiar sense his own; he planted the seeds that have given us our musical harvest; as one gazes over the ranks and sees Kneisel, Svecenski, Roth, Sautet, Muller, etc., etc., one is forcibly reminded that the personnel of the orchestra dates chiefly from the time when this firm ruler took the reins of government. He rooted up the weeds in the garden so thoroughly that subsequent directors found the orchestra an instrument ready made to their hand, and few subsequent changes were necessary.

There was also a tinge of sorrow in looking at the orchestra on Saturday, for some unavoidable changes had been made, and new faces brought to mind how much the disaster of the steamship La Bourgogne had cost us.

The 18th season had a very conservative beginning; a Weber overture, a Bach arrangement, a set of Brahms variations and a Beethoven symphony were very simple fare to set before a public that had been featsing on Russian viands and modern dissonances; yet the conservatism was a healthy one and in no wise allied to timidity; the Brahms variations have been played by other conductors sufficiently to make the number almost a gauntlet thrown down to comparative criticism, and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony has plenty of difficulties with which to display the technique of an orchestra that has been off on a protracted vacation.

Weber's "Euryanthe" (at least in its overture) contradicts the French wits who nicknamed it "Ennuyante," for it seems to have perpetual charm. Weber's overtures are sui generis, not only in their very dramatic effects (the smell of the footlights is in all of them) but in their form. While Mozart established the classical overture in sonata-allegro form and Rossini accustomed the world to a string of tunes taken from the opera itself, to serve as a "medley overture," it remained for Weber to combine the two ideas; while taking his overture themes from his operas, he develops them in the classical manner, not an easy thing to do, for few opera melodies are fit for sonata treatment. One may suspect that in writing some of his song-melodies he was thinking of material for his overtures.

At all events the form is especially effective in connection with the opera, and does not weaken the overture for concert performance; no wonder that Wagner followed it in his great "Tannhaeuser" overture.

The opening overture began without the heavy introductory rappings to which Boston has become accustomed, and the reading was decidedly less emphatic than some recent interpretations of the work. It is evident that the new dispensation is to be a reign of refinement rather than of explosive force.

The audience became gratefully enthusiastic over the performance of this number, and to the very end of the concert showed that they were in closest sympathy with the conductor. There never was a Weber orchestral work in which the horns did not have a lion's share of the work, and these instruments deserve praise for their performance in the number. The orchestra showed by its precision that it has been in safe hands for the past five years, and Mr. Gericke has acknowledged the good condition in which he found his forces.

The three Bach selections which followed were for string orchestra and showed the strength of this noble department of our orchestra. It may not be quite just to seek flaws in a first performance, but one may intimate that the first violins were somewhat exuberant in their display of power. We commend to them the words of Isabella in "Measure for Measure"—"O! it is excellent to have a giant's strength, but it is tyrannous to use it like a giant;" in the Gavotte they almost obliterated their humbler companions.

The Brahms Variations on a Chorale by Haydn were superbly played, even the most intricate contrapuntal devices being given with crystal clearness. It is rather early to pass judgment upon the new members of the orchestra, but the first oboe showed his artistic mettle in this work and subsequently confirmed the good impression by the pure style in which he gave the little cadenza in the chief theme of the recapitulation in the first movement of the symphony. The crisp attacks of the woodwind, the calm reserve and authority of the director's beat, the steadiness of the ensemble, were points which one might dilate upon with praise.

Then came the smyphony to end. Mr. Gericke's idea (which he constantly adhered to in the concerts from 1884 to 1889) being to allow the effect of a masterwork to remain undisturbed by any lesser composition, to permit the audience to depart with the impression made by the symphony as the climax of the concert.

It certainly was the climax on this occasion, for Beethoven's Fifth symphony had a very effective performance. The great first figure and its development was given with adequate breadth. It is odd to think that Beethoven's first conception of this symphony had nothing of the majesty which is now the chief characteristic of the first movement.

[illegible] the door," said the composer when he first heard the work performed; and straightway the anecdote-mongers give the impression of Beethoven swayed by the mightiest thoughts when he began the work; as a matter of fact, it was a very chattering and inconsequential Destiny that began it, for the chief theme, as it first appears in Beethoven's memorandum-book is of the liveliest rondo character.

It is but another proof of Genius being only the capacity for taking pains; the pretty prattling theme went no further than Beethoven's note-book, the mighty result came through a series of improvements upon the unpromising original.

The horn passage that begins the subordinate theme, might have been louder; we would have liked it better in a more explosive style, for Beethoven must have meant something by his "FF" and "Sfz" marks at this point. The beautiful antiphony in the development (of this same figure), consisting of responses between woodwind and strings, was very finely given. The excellent oboe cadenza at the return of chief theme has already been alluded to.

Excellent, too, was the charming bit in the coda, where, after a series of crashes of the whole orchestra, the horn inverts the little four-noted figure, and gives to the imperative and powerful motive a timid and questioning character. The new kettle-drummer at once proved himself less muscular and more musical than his predecessor, and produced tones instead of earthquakes upon his instrument.

In the Andante, the pizzicato of the contrabasses was rather faint, (we always imagine that our orchestra would be better for two more contrabasses), but the violoncellos and violas gave the theme charmingly, and the bassoon played its coda passage with subtle beauty.

The Scherzo is chiefly a contrabass number, at least these growling instruments have the chief work to do in it. Possibly Beethoven elevated these deep instruments into prominence as a defiance to Weber, who had keenly satirized the difficult contrabass passages in the last measures of the Fourth Symphony. The trying passages of the Trio of this Scherzo were played clearly, and the contrabasses, (united to the violoncellos), made the Scherzo memorable.

The finale was broad and virile enough to show that Mr. Gericke is not going to roar as gently as any sucking dove, nor will he fear a fortissimo.

Altogether, the concert was a keen enjoyment from first to last, and our old conductor, (who has scarcely grown old at all), has resumed his sway over musical Boston in a most auspicious manner.

Louis C. Elson.

ston Journal.
DAY, OCTOBER 16, 1898.

MR. GERICKE

Enthusiastically Welcomed in Music Hall.

Familiar Pieces and Several New Players.

A View of the Audience That Was Present.

The program of the first concert of the 18th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Gericke, conductor, was as follows:

Overture to "Euryanthe" .... Weber
Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte en Rondeau ...... Bach
(Arranged for string orchestra by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Variations on a theme by Haydn...... Brahms
(Chorale Sancti Antoni.)
Symphony No. 5.......................... Beethoven

Mr. Gericke may well be proud of the welcome given him last night in Music Hall by a very large, distinguished, and also curious audience. This welcome was spontaneous, hearty, long-continued, honest. The music lovers of Boston were glad to see his face again, to see him walk across the shabby stage to the conductor's stand. They remembered—many of them—the pioneer work of Henschel; they remembered brilliant performances led by Nikisch and Paur; and they were grateful toward these men, not caring to dwell upon their occasional musical short-comings. But they also remembered that it was under Mr. Gericke that the Boston Symphony Orchestra first gained the reputation that is now a civic glory; they remembered that he by indefatigable labor, native and acquired talent, just firmness, and cool sanity moulded the orchestra according to his will, and gave to it a technic that put it in the very first rank. They also remembered Mr. Gericke as a conductor whose ideals were high, whose sense of the responsibility and the dignity of his position was so keen, that no friend could induce him to admit to a concert, singer, player or composition that in his judgment was unworthy. They remembered all these things. Furthermore they remembered gratefully and affectionately the man himself. They welcomed the musician, the conductor, the gentleman.

⁂

When I come to consider the concert itself I am handicapped by certain things. First of all, I was not in Boston during the years of the reign of Mr. Gericke. I heard one concert, by accident, when he led. It is therefore impossible for me to draw a comparison between the Mr. Gericke of those years and the Mr. Gericke of last night.

Secondly: When Mr. Gericke left this city on account of his health, the orchestra was stamped by his convictions, experience, individuality. The orchestra was his obedient child. Players had touched elbows for many rehearsals and concerts. Last night certain players—men of reputation in this country and in France—played together with the others for the first time. The first oboe, the first flute, the first clarinet, the first trumpet, the second trombone, the kettle-drum man were new to the orchestra, the hall, the audience. However distinguished their talent may be, every musician knows the difficulties in the attack, and the sense of proportion under such conditions. Mr. Gericke held rehearsals only last week.

Does this sound like an apology for Mr. Gericke? There is none needed. On the contrary there should be the warmest praise for the performance that followed these rehearsals. There was a precision of attack in wood-wind and brass that has not been observed by me since I attended the first concert given by Mr. Nikisch. Under his reign, carelessness in this matter crept in, and under Mr. Paur the playing of the wood-wind, brilliant as several of the players individually were, was too often slovenly. Last night the results of the few rehearsals were surprising.

Nor were these results due to Mr. Gericke alone. It is a great pleasure to welcome the men who take the places of the lamented dead. The oboist proved himself to be a virtuoso of the very first rank, and I use the word virtuoso in its better sense. The flute player has a full, beautiful tone, and the clarinetist played with skill and distinction. Nor should the admirable playing of the first trumpet and the kettle-drum man be passed over in silence. The strings are practically unchanged.

These are impressions, only impressions. They will no doubt be confirmed and strengthened by repeated hearings, when the new comers are thoroughly at home in their respective positions.

⁂

To say that the concert last night was without flaw, that it was ideal, would be to say the thing which is not.

Naturally there was nervousness in the orchestra, and this was shown occasionally in the overture, as well as in the symphony. The attack of the ensemble was not always rigidly precise, and once or twice—as in the variations by Brahms—there was a slight difference of opinion concerning ritards. Too often the first violins were carried away by frenzy of tone, but Mr. Gericke, I hope, will repress the enthusiasm, the exulting in strength that bears sound dangerously near noise. On the other hand, there were so many delightful and impressive moments that the few flaws may well be passed over.

⁂

Mr. Gericke led with a firm, unmistakable beat; with marked appreciation of nuances; with sane musical knowledge and feeling; and with kindly but strict authority. There were no unnecessary gestures; there was, of course, no display of affectation, no desire to impress the audience, except by interpretation of the composer's music. Nor did Mr. Gericke lead like a mere drill-master. He conducted like a musician who has the gift of conveying quietly his wish and purpose to the players; nor was he ever guilty of improvising an interpretation.

⁂

The pieces played are so familiar that it would be impertinent to discuss them at length. The Variations, as conducted by him, were for the most part as well defined in structure as though the diagrams of their anatomy were in full sight; and only one or two of the vari [illegible] work i' th' ground so fast?" The relation of some of these variations to the theme recalls the dictum of von Bülow: "The theme in a set of variations has not much more significance than the title page of a book has to do with the text."

I preferred Mr. Gericke's reading of these variations to his reading as a whole of the symphony. Thus I fail to see the effect of his slight crescendo during the opening of the scherzo. Nor was the reading of the andante con moto wholly free from the reproach of over-precision. But it was a concert that gave much immediate pleasure as well as a sure promise of a season of unusual distinction.

⁂

The program-book, speaking of the "Euryanthe" overture, says:

"Now we come upon one of the most originally poetic episodes in all Weber. The passage is borrowed from the scene in the forest in the second act of the opera. In slow Largo eight violins soli e con sordini play the most mysterious sustained harmonies in scarcely audible pianissimo, the violas soon entering beneath them with a subdued tremolo, like the soft rustling of leaves."

The passage, on the contrary, is found in the first act and not in any forest. It forms the accompaniment to Euryanthe's recitative "Die ihr der Liebe," where she tells to Eglantine the speech of Emma's ghost. The forest scene, by the way, is in the third act.

⁂

The program of the concert next Saturday evening will be as follows:

Overture, "Melpomene"............... Chadwick
Concerto for violin in A minor, Op. 28 ...... Goldmark
Mr. Kneisel.
Symphonic Poem, "Vysehrad" ...... Smetana
Symphony No. 2....................... Schumann

Philip Hale.

THE BALTIMORE NEWS.
MONDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 17, 1898.

SYMPHONY SEASON SALE.

It Opens Today With a Good Attendance—Mr. Comee in Town.

The sale of season tickets for the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra opened this morning with a good demand on the part of the public. Albert's ticket office was kept busy all the forenoon and frequently there was a line formed. Among the first to secure tickets were Mr. Geo. T. Gibson, president of the Oratorio Society; Professor Helmendahl of the Harmonie Singing Society, Mr. Jeffrey R. Brackett and the Rev. Dr. Babcock. Director Harold Randolph of the Peabody Conservatory arrived in good time to reserve a block of seats for a party from the Peabody. He got a good position and the prospects are that many of the students of the conservatory will attend. A special rate has been made for them.

Assistant Manager Frederick R. Comee of the Orchestra and Manager Strakosch of Music Hall were both on hand to see the sale well under way. Mr. Comee arrived yesterday and will leave tonight. The Orchestra is also selling seats in Washington for the Baltimore concerts, having given up its series there. It was said a large number of Washingtonians will come to Baltimore to attend the concerts.

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, OCT 16, 1898.

GREETINGS TO GERICKE.

Symphony Orchestra Leader Back After Eight Years.

Boston's Musical Woman, with a Capital W, Accords Him Rapt Attention.

Interesting Scenes at Friday's and Saturday's Concerts with Gericke Leading

Boston has welcomed Wilhelm Gericke back to the leadership of the Symphony orchestra with the dignified enthusiasm of two typical symphony audiences.

His return, after an absence of eight years, was signalized at the orchestra's first rehearsal and concert, Friday afternoon, and again at the first regular concert last evening, by most enthusiastic greetings, of the intense, direct, Boston kind, quite devoid of frivolity and nonsense.

The scenes in Music hall on these two occasions were such as might be witnessed in no other American city. They partook of the character of a festival of reason of the ancients, when some new philosopher appeared on the rostrum. Musically they were, in a measure, what the Wagnerian gatherings are to Germany. They showed Boston in its most seriously cultured vein, and quite on its musical mettle.

The Symphony Woman was there—the typical one who should have the honor of a capital W. She is the brain of the Symphony concert audience. She goes every year. She knows music, and takes the same delight in seeing how certain passages of Beethoven are bowed and fingered by the violinists as an earnest student would take in watching a master painter limn the human form on canvas.

She is a breathing temple of reason, and she makes or unmakes the leader of the orchestra in the end. Her tribute is all that is needed to make the difference between success and failure, at least it would appear so from the box office standpoint, were the pinnacle of the Symphony's fame less exalted.

No leader has ever been credited with getting better results rom the symphony orchestra than Gericke. His reputation here as a master has long been secure. His return showed that he has not been forgotten. The outburst of applause that greeted him on his entrance to the stage of Music hall Friday was evidence that musically, as in other ways, "absence makes the heart grow fonder."

Not a seat of the large hall was vacant. People stood three deep along the sides of the building before the hour of beginning of the concert. At the doors the crowd was dense for three-quarters of an hour before 2.30, the program hour for the starting of the music within. Out in Tremont st the symphony worshipers mingled with throngs of shoppers and promenaders, and gave the thoroughfare a festive appearance from the very numbers of people, though the skies were dull, an east wind made the air chilly and there was seriousness noted in the faces of all who set themselves to the business of getting into Music hall.

While the throng of ticket holders came in and were seated, amid a rising hum of conversation as old friends and former symphony acquaintances greeted one another or discussed the program, there was a swelling volume of harmonies and discords filling the hall from the stage as the players tuned their instruments, all at the same time.

The plaintive whine of the violins, the gruff complaining of the viols and the mellow coo of the reed instruments all grew and swelled into one volume of sound that filled the hall with minor tones, and mingled with the hum of talk in a great, unclassified, improvised symphony not on the bills.

The players had been long in their seats, the last instrument was tuned, and everything was ready for the start when Gericke stepped out of the small door at stage right, and after his long absence again crossed the stage to swing the baton over the orchestra he had once handled so ably.

Hardly had he appeared when a volley of hand clapping began to crackle in the front rows of seats on the right side of the hall, and extended with a sweep over the house, from the sides of the stage, where the women without seats fringed the platform by sitting on the stairs, up to the back of the top gallery, to the farthest seat, under the extended arm of Apollo.

Gericke began to bow as he crossed the stage, first with a little half bow to his orchestra, then with a more formal one to the audience. He stepped up to the leader's platform, bowing to the house again as he did so. The applause was kept up, and he was obliged to bow again and again, which he did with surpassing gravity, first to right, then to left and then straight ahead, finally mounting the stand, where he bowed again.

Then, the applause dying out somewhat, he took a pair of gold-bowed spectacles from his music rack and adjusted them on his nose, tucking the bows back of his ears.

The music rack was decorated with a bunch of chrysanthemums at base and top, one tied with pink and the other with white ribbons. On the rack lay the music for von Weber's overture to "Euryanthe," and a light-colored baton.

Gericke turned his broad back to the audience, preparatory to picking up the baton. It was noted that years had added a little to the solidity of his frame, which, clad in a long frock coat, looked very sturdy and Teutonic. His dark hair showed a tonsure worn by the tooth of time. It had been noticed that his beard looked no grayer than when he was here formerly. His head showed where to look for the flight of years.

As Gericke picked up his baton and raised his arms as if invoking the "heavenly muse," there was a hush in the house. Every player was alert, his instrument ready to play, the whole orchestra being attuned, men and instruments alike, to the pitch of the moment.

Down in the seats, on the stairs beside the platform, along the walls where women stood three deep, there was a riveting of attention on the leader of the orchestra. The lines of the serious faces of the women became set. Their eyes took on a fixed expression of intense interest. The supreme moment of the year's musical calendar was to them at hand.

A second Gericke held his baton aloft, then with a swift movement of the forearm he gave the signal to his musicians, and the great orchestra dashed into the brilliant opening of Weber's masterful overture.

Probably half the audience had seen Gericke before and had heard the orchestra he is credited with building up play under his leadership. The others had heard of his fame, and were there ready to fall quickly under the spell of his presence.

Gericke cannot be called a magnetic leader. He gets effects from his men more by incisive methods of leadership than by personal magnetism, it would appear. With the audience, too, he appeals more by his masterful bearing than any of the personal charms that made Nikisch, for example, the idol of the women who attended the Symphony concerts led by him. Less graceful than Nikisch, and more so than Paur, his predecessor, Gericke might be classed as a medium of the two.

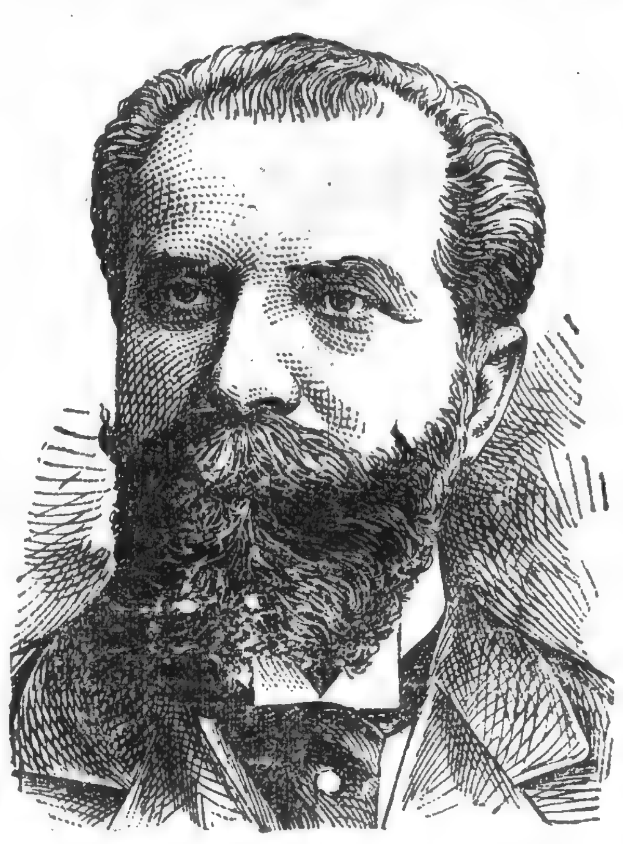
Gericke's method of conducting is peculiar to himself. He works the forearm much, and carries along his men by conspicuous use of both hands, the left hand extended in a paternal way, while the baton in the right makes sharp little jabs whenever a decided movement is desired.

As to the merits of Gericke's method, it were heresy to say aught but point to the effect. The orchestra works as one man. The audience applauds. What can a leader, back from over the seas to the scenes of earlier triumphs, desire more?

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL.
PUBLISHED BY THE
PROVIDENCE JOURNAL COMPANY
Nos. 203 and 213 Westminster St.
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 16, 1898.

Symphony Orchestra.

THE management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announces a series of eight concerts for the coming season, at Infantry Hall, on Wednesday evenings, Nov. 2 and 30, Dec. 28, Jan. 11, Feb. 1, March 8 and 29 and April 19. Special attention is again called to the fact that the performances will begin at 8 o'clock sharp. This will be the 18th season of the orchestra and its 17th in Providence. The first concert in the series, on Wednesday evening, Nov. 2, will be the 1604th performance of the orchestra and its 66th in this city. It seems hardly necessary to assure the public of Providence that the high standard of performance of the past will be maintained. The management also refers with pride to the scale of prices for tickets, which actually affords the public of Providence an opportunity to hear this orchestra at prices lower than those received at home.



WILHELM GERICKE,
Conductor of Symphony Orchestra.

The first concert given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Providence was on Thursday evening, Nov. 16, 1882. Three concerts were given that season, with Mr. Georg Henschel as conductor. During the five years, from 1884 to 1889, that Mr. Gericke was the conductor of the orchestra, several concerts were given in Providence, and now, after an absence of nine years, Mr. Gericke returns to resume his former position. While comparisons are often odious and unfair, it is but simple justice to Mr. Gericke to say that to him belongs the credit of first placing this orchestra in the foremost rank of similar organizations, and his great ability as a conductor, his fine musicianship and sincerity of purpose, lend to concerts under his direction a dignity and an attractiveness which have never been surpassed.

One most potent factor in the continued success of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been the integrity of its personnel, and over one-half of the members of the orchestra in 1889, when Mr. Gericke left, will welcome his return to the conductor's desk the coming season. To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer in the membership of the orchestra, there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra, and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist whom Mr. Gericke brings with him. There have also been engaged, Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra, making a total of only nine changes in a membership of 87.

Of late years there has been a growing tendency on the part of the clientele of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to regard the orchestra itself as the attraction, rather than the soloist. Yet, in deference to those patrons who are interested in the appearance of soloists, the following excellent list has been already secured, with others equally attractive to be announced later: Mme. Gadski will be very pleasantly remembered from her appearance here last season. Miss Aus der Ohe is always welcome, and the same is equally true of Mme. Teresa Carreno. The announcement that Mr. Ben Davies will appear during the latter part of the season will be warmly welcomed by his many admirers in this city. Another great artist, the announcement of whose name—although a new-comer to this country—will arouse the greatest interest, is Lady Halle, the violinist, perhaps better known as Norman Neruda, who will make her first appearance in Providence.

The sale of season tickets for the eight concerts will open at Infantry Hall on Monday morning, Oct. 24, at 9 o'clock.

Transcript

MONDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1898

Music Hall: Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its eighteenth season in the Music Hall, last Saturday evening, with the following programme:

Weber: Overture to "Euryanthe."
Bach: Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte, arranged for strings by S. Bachrich.
Brahms: Variations in B-flat major on a Theme by Haydn, opus 56a.
Beethoven: Symphony No. 5, in C minor, opus 67.

There was a rousing welcome to Mr. Gericke as he stepped forward on the platform; one of those hearty, prolonged fits of hand-clapping that bespeak genuine enthusiasm. One could see that the memory of the man and of what he had done in years past, was still fresh in the minds and hearts of a large part of the audience, and that they were unfeignedly glad to have him back. Nor were the younger ones, who knew him only by hearsay, less fervid in their greeting; it meant plainly: "Ah; now, at last, we are to see and hear him about whom we have heard so much!"

Fate delights in playing tricks. For years these younger ones had heard that our Symphony Orchestra was Wilhelm Gericke's work, that he had practically formed it, taught it, made it what it was; that he could almost say: "Cet orchestre, c'est moi!" But that wretched La Bourgogne tragedy had intervened, so that, for the first time in years, Mr. Gericke, on this first reappearance at the conductor's desk, could no longer properly [illegible] The orchestra was no longer his—not, in fact, anyone else's; so many important new elements had been introduced that it was hardly an organic orchestra at all. No doubt it can be said that, of the admirable artists who went down in La Bourgogne, not one was here in Mr. Gericke's day; indeed, he himself has said that, when he determined upon accepting his old post here again, one of his pleasantest expectations was to have to do with certain players of whom he had heard so much in high praise; but, whether under Mr. Nikisch or Mr. Paur, these artists had become, as it were, welded into an orchestra which was still essentially Mr. Gericke's, and had insensibly sucked in many of his traditions. But now, with their places filled by wholly new men, no matter how capable, the orchestra is no longer an organic body. Mr. Gericke cannot take up his work just where he left it, nine years ago, but must, to a considerable extent, begin over again. Well, he is the man for that!

It is common to speak of "the orchestra being brought together for the first time after its long vacation," in noticing the first symphony concert of a season—almost as invariable as to begin an after-dinner speech with "Mr. Chairman and gentlemen." The first concert is generally accepted as the occasion for making allowances. This one was doubly a fit occasion for this. But it is seldom that one can make allowances with so good a grace as now. Last Saturday evening the shortcomings one had to condone, in common justice, had, for the most part, their accompanying good side—often fit to make exculpation turn to praise. One could note well-meant attempts in directions which one had grown to think well-nigh obsolete, attempts at things that had long seemed past praying for. Attempts, too, so nearly successful that the half-inch of failure seemed the most trustworthy earnest of future triumph.

That holding-out of the "holds" in the first movement of the C minor symphony, holding them out fortissimo, "long and terrible," as Wagner once put it, throughout their whole duration, was one fine point. Unquestionably there was some wavering in the tone, one could feel the "change of bow" in the strings, there was something of a gasp at the end—as if the orchestra had held its breath almost beyond endurance. But the noble idea was palpably there; the orchestra showed that they had caught it; what was lacking in technical perfection of carrying out must come with time, it is as sure as Fate! Yet how much better this little technical roughness, how much more musically a success this partial failure, than the half-hearted diminuendo that has heretofore, almost without exception, let all the life leak out of these grand "holds!"

Take again that occasionally more tenuous and delicate tone of the violins in cantabile phrases; that, too, was a mighty advance! True, one got too little of it, it would swell too soon and lose its graceful slenderness; but at times, at least, it was recognizably there; we shall have more of it by-and-by. One of the most serious faults of our orchestra, during the last nine years, has really been but the "vice" of its most conspicuous virtue; the monotonously strong and brilliant tone of the first violins in cantilena. That glorious, warm brilliance of tone, to which our orchestra owed its high fame perhaps more than to anything else, seemed to have gone to the players' heads; they seemed to have fallen too dotingly in love with it, and, as the mad French chef could not find it in his heart to refrain from deluging every dish he served with his favorite sauce, so could our otherwise admirable first violins never refrain from applying that famous tone of theirs to every possible scrap of cantabile melody that came their way. All distinction between sentiment and passion was thus wiped out, and every second theme was played "passionately." It is no easy matter to make men, so enamoured of a soul-compelling vibrato, quit their true-love, even for a moment. But Mr. Gericke has already found the crack for his entering wedge; he has made his first violins give us at least some cantabile phrases, or beginnings of phrases, in a true, delicate mezza voce; the old reign of perpetual passion may be considered as virtually over!

Another point we noticed with the sincerest pleasure, all the more that we had expected that it would take far longer even to begin to overcome an old difficulty. This was the sureness and simultaneity of attack in the wind department, and the generally superior clearness of playing on the part of all concerned. The programme presented little that could arouse enthusiasm [illegible] orchestral players; apart from that the average modern player would not rather have been excused from than play. Yet the orchestra played with a carefulness such as it has not often exhibited, except on occasions when it had to do with some new work by Tchaikovsky, Rimski-Korsakoff, or Richard Strauss. There was not a suspicion of "off night" laisser aller; the music was played with devotion. And what entrancing beauty of tone resulted from this clearness, this unanimity of playing! Our orchestra has got the fog well out of its throat. Well, an orchestra which cannot follow Mr. Gericke's beat can follow no beat under the sun!

We do not care to go through each performance in detail; enough that a certain rare sanity and nobility of conception made itself felt throughout, a tendency to turn glittering theatricality out of doors, to let musical phrasing take the place of vulgar strenuousness of accent, to oust mere noise, so that a grand vigor of tone should reign in its stead. With all this, not a shade of preciosity, of musical dandyism and milksoppishness; the lightning struck home—but as lightning, not as mere ear-quelling thunder.

Of the new men, one and all made a fine impression. If we were more especially impressed by the beauty of tone, phrasing and general artistship of the new first oboe, first trumpet and kettledrums, this was probable mostly owing to the opportunities afforded them by the music; we await the chance which future programmes cannot fail to give their fellows. But that our wind department is, upon the whole, in better trim than ever before seems highly probable—and no shame to the memory of the superb players who have been taken from us; if their places have been filled with apparent adequacy, it should be remembered that several former weak spots in the orchestra have been conspicuously strengthened. If some of the changes could not, in the nature of things, have been for the better, others have been much for the better. Upon the whole, a grand beginning of a season!

The next programme is: Chadwick, dramatic overture, "Melpomene;" Goldmark, violin concerto in A minor, opus 28; Smetana, symphonic poem, "Vysehrad;" Schumann, symphony No. 2, in C major, opus 61. Mr. Franz Kneisel will be the voilinist.

The Boston Traveler

Oct 17

Sev[illegible] Year—Vol. [illegible]IV. No. 168.

THE SYMPHONY.

Warm Welcome Home to Mr. Gericke—A Fine Concert Finely Played.

Eighteenth season Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, conductor First concert. The programme:

Overture to "Euryanthe"................Weber
Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte.............Bach
(Arranged for string orchestra by Sigismund Bachrich.)
Variations on a Theme by Haydn.......Brahms
Symphony No. 5, in C-minor.........Beethoven

The return of Wilhelm Gericke to the conductor's desk of the Symphony Orchestra was made memorable by the presence of a magnificent audience that testified its esteem and admiration for the man in the warmest possible manner. The Gericke of 1898 must have looked back to the Gericke of 1889 with emotion. It is no slight thing to have joined the two so securely by a bridge of the people's affection; to have gone away laurel-crowned and to return as much a conqueror as if the nine years had never been. Indeed, they have left very little physical impress. There is a slight thinning and silvering of hair, but the same face, the same firm poise of the body and the same quiet beat, with perhaps a trifle more of freedom and grace.

Reviving impressions that had become rather faint—since I saw him conduct only a few times in the old days—it seems to me that Mr. Gericke holds the orchestra more securely in his hand than did either Mr. Nikisch or Mr. Paur. Whether he has it within him to call out better things than they did is another matter, and not one to be settled off-hand at a first concert. Nor should we forget that the orchestra is a finer instrument than when he left it.

Putting aside comparisons, speculations and theories, the performance was a very excellent one, giving honest pleasure at almost every point. Mr. Gericke's readings were wholly free from affectation or striving for novel effects, as was to have been expected. Yet there was plenty of dash and fervor, as the brilliant playing of the "Euryanthe" overture at once gave evidence. Even Brahms' scholastic torturings of Haydn's simple and lovely theme—what grievance had Johannes against Josef that he should treat him so?—were mostly enjoyable, while the Bach pieces for strings were nobly and exquisitely played.

The Fifth Symphony has now come to be regarded as a conductor's show-piece, the test of his wares, and I think it very likely that Mr. Gericke chose it for his re-appearance with a purpose. If I remember aright, Mr. Nikisch made it his first Beethoven symphony in Boston, and what he did with it is a matter of musical history. He made it very exciting, very thrilling, but took grave liberties in so doing. It was magnificent, but it wasn't Beethoven. Mr. Gericke's reading is conservative, of course; but it is sympathetic and interesting. The andante receives just the right suggestion of briskness while the triumphal outburst of the finale is read with massive and moving dignity.

Judging from what we heard of the new oboe, clarinet and flute players, they are artists of fine ability. The total effect of the wood-wind is superb. And there is now a kettle-drum player who knows that noise is not music, and who, even in fortissimo passages, produces a mellow tone with an appreciable pitch. This is a blessing for which we had long prayed in vain.

WILDER D. QUINT.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In announcing the eighteenth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and its fourteenth with a total of forty-eight concerts in this city, there is every indication that the coming season will be the most successful ever given. The usual five concerts will be given—not on the same evening as heretofore, but on Tuesday evenings, November 8, December 13, January 17, February 21 and March 21. Ever since the first concert by this organization in Baltimore, on April 12, 1886, the same high standard of performance has been maintained, a flattering proof of which is shown in the fact that the great majority of the patrons of fourteen years ago are the patrons today. To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer, there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra; and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist, whom Mr. Gericke brings with him. There have also been engaged Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra.

The lists of soloists for the Baltimore concerts includes at present Mme. Gadski, Mr. Willy Burmester, Mr. Emil Sauer, Lady Halle (perhaps, better known as Norman Neruda), and Mme. Teresa Carreno. Of these, three will make their first appearance in Baltimore—Lady Halle, Emil Sauer and Willy Burmester.

Lady Halle, violinist, has never visited this country. Wilma Maria Franciska Neruda was her maiden name, and she was born at Brunn, March 29, 1839. At the age of seven she appeared in public with her sister, Amalie, a pianist, in Vienna. In 1888 she married Sir Charles Halle, who died in 1895.

Emil Sauer, pianist, also visits the United States for the first time. He was born at Hamburg, October 8, 1862. He has played throughout Europe with remarkable success, and he is ranked among the very first of pianists.

Willy Burmester, violinist, was also born at Hamburg, in 1869. With his sister, Johanna, pianist, he made his first appearance in Berlin, November 10, 1891. It is his custom to play music by Paganini whenever he appears for the first time in any city—because it brings him luck.

MUSIC HALL.

EMIL SAUER, of Germany, the new Paderewski, is the present piano idol, and is pronounced by European critics, the greatest genius of the day. He will appear at the New Music Hall in this city early in the coming year.

Unless all signs fail, the 14th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Baltimore will be a most successful one in every particular. As has already been noted in the Herald, the five concerts will be given in the Music Hall, not on Wednesday evenings as heretofore, but on Tuesday evenings, November 8, December 13, January 17, February 21 and March 21.

On April 12, 1886, the Boston Symphony Orchestra made its debut in Baltimore, and the conductor at that concert, Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, now returns, after an absence of nine years, to resume his old position. When Mr. Gericke left this country in 1889 he rested for a year and then resumed his position as conductor of the Gesselschaft Choral Concerts in Vienna, which position he held for five years. During this time Mr. Gericke declined a very flattering offer from the Philharmonic Society of Berlin, and just prior to accepting his present position with the Boston Symphony Orchestra he also received other very complimentary offers. Mr. Gericke is welcomed back with much enthusiasm, because to him belongs the credit of first placing the orchestra in a position to command attention and respect in every city where it appeared.

To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer in the membership of the orchestra there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra, and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist whom Mr. Gericke brings with him. There have also been engaged: Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra, making a total of only nine changes in a membership of 87.

The list of soloists announced for Baltimore includes Mme. Gadski, Mr. Willy Burmester, Mr. Emil Sauer, Lady Halle (perhaps better known as Norman Neruda), and Mme. Teresa Carreno. Of these, three will make their first appearance in Baltimore—Lady Halle, Emil Sauer and Willy Burmester.

Lady Halle, violinist, has never visited this country. Wilma Maria Franciska Neruda was her maiden name and she was born at Brunn, March 29, 1839. Her father was a church organist. She first studied under Jansa. At the age of 7 she appeared in public with her sister Amalie, a pianist, in Vienna. With their father and their brother Franz, a 'cellist, they gave concerts in Germany and appeared in 1849 at a Philharmonic concert in London. She played in Paris in 1864, and married there Ludwig Normann (1831-1885), a Swedish conductor. Separated from him in 1869, she made London her home, appearing in many chamber and orchestral concerts. In 1888 she married Sir Charles Halle, who died in 1895.

Emil Sauer, pianist, also visits the United States for the first time. He was born in Hamburg October 8, 1862. His mother was his first teacher, and the boy appeared in public in Hamburg December 13, 1873. Rubinstein heard him two or three years later and recommended him to his brother Nikolaus. Sauer studied in Moscow until 1881. Then he played in cities of Northern Germany and the Rhineland, and in 1882 he played in London. The next year he went to Italy and Spain. In 1884 he was a few months with Liszt, and the next year he appeared in Berlin. Since then he has played throughout Europe with remarkable success, and is ranked among the very first of pianists.

Willy Burmester, violinist, was also born at Hamburg, in 1869. He was first taught by his father; then for four years he studied with Joachim. For three years afterward he worked by himself at Helsingfors, in Finland. With his sister Johanna, pianist, he made his first appearance in Berlin, November 10, 1891. He reappeared there in 1894. His first appearance in London was March 14, 1895.

* * *

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In announcing the eighteenth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and its fourteenth, with a total of forty-eight concerts in this city, there is every indication that the coming season will be the most successful ever given. The usual five concerts will be given on Tuesday evenings, November 8, December 13, January 17, February 21 and March 21. To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer, there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra, and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist, whom Mr. Gericke brings with him.

The list of soloists for the Baltimore concerts includes at present Mme. Gadski, Mr. Willy Burmester, Mr. Emil Sauer, Lady Halle (perhaps better known as Norman Neruda), and Mme. Teresa Carreno. Of these, three will make their first appearance in Baltimore—Lady Halle, Emil Sauer and Willy Burmester.

Tickets on sale at Albert's.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, OCTOBER 17, 1898

Music Hall: Symphony Orchestra

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its eighteenth season in the Music Hall, last Saturday evening, with the following programme:

Weber: Overture to "Euryanthe."
Bach: Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte, arranged for strings by S. Bachrich.
Brahms: Variations in B-flat major on a Theme by Haydn, opus 56a.
Beethoven: Symphony No. 5, in C minor, opus 67.

There was a rousing welcome to Mr. Gericke as he stepped forward on the platform; one of those hearty, prolonged fits of hand-clapping that bespeak genuine enthusiasm. One could see that the memory of the man and of what he had done in years past, was still fresh in the minds and hearts of a large part of the audience, and that they were unfeignedly glad to have him back. Nor were the younger ones, who knew him only by hearsay, less fervid in their greeting; it meant plainly: "Ah; now, at last, we are to see and hear him about whom we have heard so much!"

Fate delights in playing tricks. For years these younger ones had heard that our Symphony Orchestra was Wilhelm Gericke's work, that he had practically formed it, taught it, made it what it was; that he could almost say: "Cet orchestre, c'est moi!" But that wretched La Bourgogne tragedy had intervened, so that, for the first time in years, Mr. Gericke, on this first reappearance at the conductor's desk, could no longer properly say so. The orchestra was no longer his—not, in fact, anyone else's; so many important new elements had been introduced that it was hardly an organic orchestra at all. No doubt it can be said that, of the admirable artists who went down in La Bourgogne, not one was here in Mr. Gericke's day; indeed, he himself has said that, when he determined upon accepting his old post here again, one of his pleasantest expectations was to have to do with certain players of whom he had heard so much in high praise; but, whether under Mr. Nikisch or Mr. Paur, these artists had become, as it were, welded into an orchestra which was still essentially Mr. Gericke's, and had insensibly sucked in many of his traditions. But now, with their places filled by wholly new men, no matter how capable, the orchestra is no longer an organic body. Mr. Gericke cannot take up his work just where he left it, nine years ago, but must, to a considerable extent, begin over again. Well, he is the man for that!

It is common to speak of "the orchestra being brought together for the first time after its long vacation," in noticing the first symphony concert of a season—almost as invariable as to begin an after-dinner speech with "Mr. Chairman and gentlemen." The first concert is generally accepted as the occasion for making allowances. This one was doubly a fit occasion for this. But it is seldom that one can make allowances with so good a grace as now. Last Saturday evening the shortcomings one had to condone, in common justice, had, for the most part, their accompanying good side—often fit to make exculpation turn to praise. One could note well-meant attempts in directions which one had grown to think well-nigh obsolete, attempts at things that had long seemed past praying for. Attempts, too, so nearly successful that the half-inch of failure seemed the most trustworthy earnest of future triumph.

That holding-out of the "holds" in the first movement of the C minor symphony, holding them out fortissimo, "long and terrible," as Wagner once put it, throughout their whole duration, was one fine point. Unquestionably there was some wavering in the tone, one could feel the "change of bow" in the strings, there was something of a gasp at the end—as if the orchestra had held its breath almost beyond endurance. But the noble idea was palpably there; the orchestra showed that they had caught it; what was lacking in technical perfection of carrying out must come with time, it is as sure as Fate! Yet how much better this little technical roughness, how much more musically a success this partial failure, than the half-hearted diminuendo that has heretofore, almost without exception, let all the life leak out of these grand "holds!"

Take again that occasionally more tenuous and delicate tone of the violins in cantabile phrases; that, too, was a mighty advance! True, one got too little of it, it would swell too soon and lose its graceful slenderness; but at times, at least, it was recognizably there; we shall have more of it by-and-by. One of the most serious faults of our orchestra, during the last nine years, has really been but the "vice" of its most conspicuous virtue; the monotonously strong and brilliant tone of the first violins in cantilena. That glorious, warm brilliance of tone, to which our orchestra owed its high fame perhaps more than to anything else, seemed to have gone to the players' heads; they seemed to have fallen too dotingly in love with it, and, as the mad French chef could not find it in his heart to refrain from deluging every dish he served with his favorite sauce, so could our otherwise admirable first violins never refrain from applying that famous tone of theirs to every possible scrap of cantabile melody that came their way. All distinction between sentiment and passion was thus wiped out, and every second theme was played "passionately." It is no easy matter to make men, so enamoured of a soul-compelling vibrato, quit their true-love, even for a moment. But Mr. Gericke has already found the crack for his entering wedge; he has made his first violins give us at least some cantabile phrases, or beginnings of phrases, in a true, delicate mezza voce; the old reign of perpetual passion may be considered as virtually over!

Another point we noticed with the sincerest pleasure, all the more that we had expected that it would take far longer even to begin to overcome an old difficulty. This was the sureness and simultaneity of attack in the wind department, and the generally superior clearness of playing on the part of all concerned. The programme presented little that could arouse enthusiasm in modern orchestral players; apart from the Brahms variations, there was nothing that the average modern player would not rather have been excused from than play. Yet the orchestra played with a carefulness such as it has not often exhibited, except on occasions when it had to do with some new work by Tchaikovsky, Rimski-Korsakoff, or Richard Strauss. There was not a suspicion of "off night" laisser aller; the music was played with devotion. And what entrancing beauty of tone resulted from this clearness, this unanimity of playing! Our orchestra has got the fog well out of its throat. Well, an orchestra which cannot follow Mr. Gericke's beat can follow no beat under the sun!

We do not care to go through each performance in detail; enough that a certain rare sanity and nobility of conception made itself felt throughout, a tendency to turn glittering theatricality out of doors, to let musical phrasing take the place of vulgar strenuousness of accent, to oust mere noise, so that a grand vigor of tone should reign in its stead. With all this, not a shade of preciosity, of musical dandyism and milksoppishness; the lightning struck home—but as lightning, not as mere ear-quelling thunder.

Of the new men, one and all made a fine impression. If we were more especially impressed by the beauty of tone, phrasing and general artistship of the new first oboe, first trumpet and kettledrums, this was probable mostly owing to the opportunities afforded them by the music; we await the chance which future programmes cannot fail to give their fellows. But that our wind department is, upon the whole, in better trim than ever before seems highly probable—and no shame to the memory of the superb players who have been taken from us; if their places have been filled with apparent adequacy, it should be remembered that several former weak spots in the orchestra have been conspicuously strengthened. If some of the changes could not, in the nature of things, have been for the better, others have been much for the better. Upon the whole, a grand beginning of a season!

The next programme is: Chadwick, dramatic overture, "Melpomene;" Goldmark, violin concerto in A minor, opus 28; Smetana, symphonic poem, "Vysehrad;" Schumann, symphony No. 2, in C major, opus 61. Mr. Franz Kneisel will be the voilinist.

The Boston Traveler

Oct 17

Seventy-sixth Year—Vol. LIV. No. 168.

THE SYMPHONY.

Warm Welcome Home to Mr. Gericke—A Fine Concert Finely Played.

Eighteenth season Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, conductor First concert. The programme:

Overture to "Euryanthe"	Weber
Prelude, Adagio, and Gavotte (Arranged for string orchestra by Sigismund Bachrich.)	Bach
Variations on a Theme by Haydn	Brahms
Symphony No. 5, in C-minor	Beethoven

The return of Wilhelm Gericke to the conductor's desk of the Symphony Orchestra was made memorable by the presence of a magnificent audience that testified its esteem and admiration for the man in the warmest possible manner. The Gericke of 1898 must have looked back to the Gericke of 1889 with emotion. It is no slight thing to have joined the two so securely by a bridge of the people's affection; to have gone away laurel-crowned and to return as much a conqueror as if the nine years had never been. Indeed, they have left very little physical impress. There is a slight thinning and silvering of hair, but the same face, the same firm poise of the body and the same quiet beat, with perhaps a trifle more of freedom and grace.

Reviving impressions that had become rather faint—since I saw him conduct only a few times in the old days—it seems to me that Mr. Gericke holds the orchestra more securely in his hand than did either Mr. Nikisch or Mr. Paur. Whether he has it within him to call out better things than they did is another matter, and not one to be settled off-hand at a first concert. Nor should we forget that the orchestra is a finer instrument than when he left it.

Putting aside comparisons, speculations and theories, the performance was a very excellent one, giving honest pleasure at almost every point. Mr. Gericke's readings were wholly free from affectation or striving for novel effects, as was to have been expected. Yet there was plenty of dash and fervor, as the brilliant playing of the "Euryanthe" overture at once gave evidence. Even Brahms' scholastic torturings of Haydn's simple and lovely theme—what grievance had Johannes against Josef that he should treat him so?—were mostly enjoyable, while the Bach pieces for strings were nobly and exquisitely played.

The Fifth Symphony has now come to be regarded as a conductor's show-piece, the test of his wares, and I think it very likely that Mr. Gericke chose it for his re-appearance with a purpose. If I remember aright, Mr. Nikisch made it his first Beethoven symphony in Boston, and what he did with it is a matter of musical history. He made it very exciting, very thrilling, but took grave liberties in so doing. It was magnificent, but it wasn't Beethoven. Mr. Gericke's reading is conservative, of course; but it is sympathetic and interesting. The andante receives just the right suggestion of briskness while the triumphal outburst of the finale is read with massive and moving dignity.

Judging from what we heard of the new oboe, clarinet and flute players, they are artists of fine ability. The total effect of the wood-wind is superb. And there is now a kettle-drum player who knows that noise is not music, and who, even in fortissimo passages, produces a mellow tone with an appreciable pitch. This is a blessing for which we had long prayed in vain.

WILDER D. QUINT.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In announcing the eighteenth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and its fourteenth with a total of forty-eight concerts in this city, there is every indication that the coming season will be the most successful ever given. The usual five concerts will be given—not on the same evening as heretofore, but on Tuesday evenings, November 8, December 13, January 17, February 21 and March 21. Ever since the first concert by this organization in Baltimore, on April 12, 1886, the same high standard of performance has been maintained, a flattering proof of which is shown in the fact that the great majority of the patrons of fourteen years ago are the patrons today. To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer, there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra; and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist, whom Mr. Gericke brings with him. There have also been engaged Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra.

The lists of soloists for the Baltimore concerts includes at present Mme. Gadski, Mr. Willy Burmester, Mr. Emil Sauer, Lady Halle (perhaps, better known as Norman Neruda), and Mme. Teresa Carreno. Of these, three will make their first appearance in Baltimore—Lady Halle, Emil Sauer and Willy Burmester.

Lady Halle, violinist, has never visited this country. Wilma Maria Franciska Neruda was her maiden name, and she was born at Brunn, March 29, 1839. At the age of seven she appeared in public with her sister, Amalie, a pianist, in Vienna. In 1888 she married Sir Charles Halle, who died in 1895.

Emil Sauer, pianist, also visits the United States for the first time. He was born at Hamburg, October 8, 1862. He has played throughout Europe with remarkable success, and he is ranked among the very first of pianists.

Willy Burmester, violinist, was also born at Hamburg, in 1869. With his sister, Johanna, pianist, he made his first appearance in Berlin, November 10, 1891. It is his custom to play music by Paganini whenever he appears for the first time in any city—because it brings him luck.

MUSIC HALL.

EMIL SAUER, of Germany, the new Paderewski, is the present piano idol, and is pronounced by European critics, the greatest genius of the day. He will appear at the New Music Hall in this city early in the coming year.

Unless all signs fail, the 14th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Baltimore will be a most successful one in every particular. As has already been noted in the Herald, the five concerts will be given in the Music Hall, not on Wednesday evenings as heretofore, but on Tuesday evenings, November 8, December 13, January 17, February 21 and March 21.

On April 12, 1886, the Boston Symphony Orchestra made its debut in Baltimore, and the conductor at that concert, Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, now returns, after an absence of nine years, to resume his old position. When Mr. Gericke left this country in 1889 he rested for a year and then resumed his position as conductor of the Gesselschaft Choral Concerts in Vienna, which position he held for five years. During this time Mr. Gericke declined a very flattering offer from the Philharmonic Society of Berlin, and just prior to accepting his present position with the Boston Symphony Orchestra he also received other very complimentary offers. Mr. Gericke is welcomed back with much enthusiasm, because to him belongs the credit of first placing the orchestra in a position to command attention and respect in every city where it appeared.

To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer in the membership of the orchestra there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra, and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist whom Mr. Gericke brings with him. There have also been engaged: Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra, making a total of only nine changes in a membership of 87.

The list of soloists announced for Baltimore includes Mme. Gadski, Mr. Willy Burmester, Mr. Emil Sauer, Lady Halle (perhaps better known as Norman Neruda), and Mme. Teresa Carreno. Of these, three will make their first appearance in Baltimore—Lady Halle, Emil Sauer and Willy Burmester.

Lady Halle, violinist, has never visited this country. Wilma Maria Franciska Neruda was her maiden name and she was born at Brunn, March 29, 1839. Her father was a church organist. She first studied under Jansa. At the age of 7 she appeared in public with her sister Amalie, a pianist, in Vienna. With their father and their brother Franz, a 'cellist, they gave concerts in Germany and appeared in 1849 at a Philharmonic concert in London. She played in Paris in 1864, and married there Ludwig Normann (1831-1885), a Swedish conductor. Separated from him in 1869, she made London her home, appearing in many chamber and orchestral concerts. In 1888 she married Sir Charles Halle, who died in 1895.

Emil Sauer, pianist, also visits the United States for the first time. He was born in Hamburg October 8, 1862. His mother was his first teacher, and the boy appeared in public in Hamburg December 13, 1873. Rubinstein heard him two or three years later and recommended him to his brother Nikolaus. Sauer studied in Moscow until 1881. Then he played in cities of Northern Germany and the Rhineland, and in 1882 he played in London. The next year he went to Italy and Spain. In 1884 he was a few months with Liszt, and the next year he appeared in Berlin. Since then he has played throughout Europe with remarkable success, and is ranked among the very first of pianists.

Willy Burmester, violinist, was also born at Hamburg, in 1869. He was first taught by his father; then for four years he studied with Joachim. For three years afterward he worked by himself at Helsingfors, in Finland. With his sister Johanna, pianist, he made his first appearance in Berlin, November 10, 1891. He reappeared there in 1894. His first appearance in London was March 14, 1895.

* * *

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

In announcing the eighteenth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and its fourteenth, with a total of forty-eight concerts in this city, ther is every indication that the comin season will be the most successful eve given. The usual five concerts will b given on Tuesday evenings, November 8, December 13, January 17, February 21 and March 21. To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer, there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra, and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist, whom Mr. Gericke brings with him.

The list of soloists for the Baltimore concerts includes at present Mme. Gadski, Mr. Willy Burmester, Mr. Emil Sauer, Lady Halle (perhaps better known as Norman Neruda), and Mme. Teresa Carreno. Of these, three will make their first appearance in Baltimore—Lady Halle, Emil Sauer and Willy Burmester.

Tickets on sale at Albert's.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1898.

Music in Boston

BOSTON, Mass., October 16, 1898.

THE long and interesting agony is over. The Boston Symphony public has seen Wilhelm Gericke again at the conductor's stand, from which he retired voluntarily nine years ago, with the profound esteem of the whole musical community and a radiantly effulgent halo of success. A halo is a fragile thing, apt to dissipate speedily unless it be worn by a duly authorized saint; but Mr. Gericke has doubtless taken great care of the one accorded him in Boston, and will, in due season, bring it forth again, undimmed in lustre, to wear it with characteristic modesty and tipped to the proper and most becoming angle. Boston is generous in respect to halos. It gave Mr. Nikisch a halo, not as fine perhaps as that which it bestowed on Mr. Gericke, and, perhaps, also not of such good quality; but, still, a halo. Many of the donors grieved over their impulsive generosity, after his departure; but they recovered as soon as they heard that he had been given a more showy one abroad. Mr. Paur likewise carried away a halo of excellent material and durability, but it is more than likely that he has put it away in his trunk in anticipation of receiving a more expensive and more elaborate specimen in New York. In which event Boston will wonder what it means.

In no direction was delight at the return of Mr. Gericke more fervently expressed than it was by the orchestra, especially those members of it who served under him before. You will find it hard to credit me when I tell you that the why and the wherefore of this pleasure is a firmly rooted belief that rehearsals will be more exacting, discipline more relentless and work harder generally than it has been at any time since he went back to Vienna nine years ago. Think of this, ye New York musicians, who fret under long rehearsals because you have lessons to give or have matinee performances in theatre orchestras, and who put stumbling blocks in the paths of conductors instead of removing them, and who, if report does not malign you, pack up your instruments and depart incontinently from rehearsals when you think they have lasted long enough for your comfort or your convenience.

There was an enormous audience in Music Hall last evening when the musical season opened with the first concert in this year's series of performances by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. This, however, was not unusual, for the opening concert is always given to a crowded house, but on this occasion the company assembled was in an uncommon flutter of excitement in anticipation of Mr. Gericke's appearance on the stage. When at last he did come forward he was welcomed with a tremendously fervent and prolonged handclapping and an accompaniment of approving smiles, which, could they have been arranged end to end in a continuous line, would, according to a trustworthy enthusiast, both ardent and skilled in such curious and valuable statistics, have extended along a plane surface equal to the whole length of the subway, with a liberal superfluity for repairs to meet an emergency. I have been informed that at least one society leader who attended the concerts during Mr. Gericke's earlier régime was seen for a brief moment with her handkerchief at her eyes; but as I did not witness this myself I do not vouch for it.

Between Mr. Gericke's departure and his return the orchestra played under the respective batons of Arthur Nikisch and Emil Paur. When the former took charge of the organization it was at the highest point of efficiency to which it had attained since it came into existence. In fact, as is familiar to all who have followed the career of the orchestra, it was Mr. Gericke who molded it into shape, who set it squarely on its feet and prepared fitly to win for itself the foremost place it holds among the great orchestras of the world. Under his successors many changes were made in the methods he had followed and impressed on the orchestra. It was inevitable that this should be so, for temperaments differ, and, besides, we live in an age in which it has not been quite determined whether it is the conductor or the master-composer who is the real prophet; whether the conductor is the statue and the composer the pedestal, or vice versa. However, under Mr. Gericke's successors something of finish was lost here; something of precision disappeared there. In one regard artistic discretion and conscience yielded to the bane of what may be called "up to date" conducting—the unappeasable craving, born of an unhealthy appetite, to force the music of the old school into taking on a modern aspect. In brief, the orchestra suffered temporarily from conductoritis; but the foundations laid with such care and solidity by Mr. Gericke were never weakened.

When he took charge of it again last week he found it in no very demoralized condition, and he must have recognized that in some essentials it had advanced during his absence. Such a splended body of musicians, artistically intelligent, able, self-reliant, enthusiastic for their art and devoted to what is best and noblest in it, does not stand still and does not degenerate. The instrument is perfect. Everything depends upon how the conductor plays on it. Sometimes an orchestra plays on a conductor.

The program last night was Weber's "Euryanthe" overture, the Prelude, Adagio and Gavot pasticcio from Bach, arranged for string orchestra by Sigismund Bachrich; the Brahms variations on a theme by Haydn, and Beethoven's C minor symphony. A brilliant spirit pervaded the work of the orchestra throughout. It played as if its heart were wholly in its task and as if it were resolutely bent on showing how thoroughly it felt the inspiration with which the conductor filled it and how they reveled in it. Mr. Gericke's readings were conservative in the best sense of the word. His quiet and unobtrusive use of the baton was in striking contrast with the more demonstrative methods of his predecessors. One was never disturbed by the figure at the conductor's stand, but was left at perfect ease to listen to the music. A decisive and irresistible down beat was always to be found where it belonged, and the orchestra played with none the less precision on that account. It cannot be said that its performances were any better than it has accustomed us to expect from it. The only innovation that was to be noted was something more of unity in attack on the part of the wind instruments.

There have been some few changes in the members of the orchestra, some of them rendered sadly imperative owing to the lamentable Bourgogne disaster, in which the splendid clarinetist, M. Pourtau, and the admirable flutist, M. Jacquet, were lost. The qualities of the new clarinet player had but slight opportunity for their display, but what was heard of them brought to light a smooth and refined tone of excellent volume. Of the new first oboe too much cannot be said in the way of praise. His tone is large, pure and firm, and of beautiful sympathetic quality, and his playing is that of an artist of the first order. The new first flute is, perhaps, on the whole, the best that the orchestra has ever had. His tone is broad, rich and sonorous through its whole compass. The new first trumpet is a genuine prize; but the new tympani player is a revelation. He treats his drums as if they were musical instruments, instead of mere conveniences for making a noise, and we may rejoice that the reckless banging in which the hard whack of the drumstick was heard before and above the note sound, has disappeared from the orchestra, and, relief of reliefs, we may also rejoice in drums tuned to the proper pitch. Mr. Gericke begins his new reign with the best material that the orchestra has ever had. In this estimate I am sure you will agree when you hear it in New York.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

In announcing the eighteenth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and its fourteenth, with a total of forty-eight concerts in this city, there is every indication that the coming season will be the most successful ever given. The usual five concerts will be given—not on the same evening as heretofore, but on Tuesday evenings, November 8, December 13, January 17, February 21 and March 21. Ever since the first concert by this organization in Baltimore, on April 12, 1886, the same high standard of performance has been maintained, a flattering proof of which is shown in the fact that the great majority of the patrons of fourteen years ago are the same patrons today. To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer, there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra; and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist, whom Mr. Gericke brings with him. There have also been engaged Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra.

MME. GADSKI.

The lists of soloists for the Baltimore concerts, includes at present Mme. Gadski, Mr. Willy Burmester, Mr. Emil Sauer, Lady Halle (perhaps better known as Norman Neruda), and Mme. Teresa Carreno. Of these, three will make their first appearance in Baltimore—Lady Halle, Emil Sauer and Willy Burmester.

A musical treat will be offered Baltimoreans when the Boston Symphony Orchestra gives its concerts here during the fall and coming winter. The first appearance will be on Tuesday evening, November 8, with others following on December 13, January 17, February 21, and March 21, at 8 o'clock.

Music Hall. ❋ Mount Royal Ave.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

MR. WILHELM GERICKE, Conductor.

FIVE CONCERTS.—Tuesday Evenings, Nov. 8, Dec. 13, Jan. 17, Feb. 21, March 21, at 8 o'clock.

Solo Artists.—Mme. GADSKI, Mr. WILLIE BURMESTER, Mr. EMIL SAUER, LADY HALLE (Norman Neruda), Mme. TERESA CARRENO.

Season tickets, with reserved seats for the series of five concerts, $7.00 and $5.00, according to location. The sale of tickets will open Monday morning, October 17, at Albert's, 13 North Charles street. Programme books, with descriptive notes on the works to be performed, will be mailed in advance of each concert to purchasers of season tickets.

C. A. ELLIS, Manager.

F. R. COMEE, Assistant Manager.

Interest to the Local Lyric World.

[illegible] AT WORK IN EARNEST

Members of the Maryland Musical Association Determined to Make Their Venture a Success—Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Members of the Maryland Musical Association are now hard at work in an endeavor to demonstrate the resources and possibilities of this city as a great musical centre. They seem determined that the stigma plegma and ultra-conservatism shall be lifted if it lies in their power to do so.

The objects and ambitions of this organization were first told exclusively in The Morning Herald, as was also the results of the first rehearsal held in the Music Hall one evening last week. Upon this occasion Prof. David Melamet, who has been chosen director of the association, was apprised of the fact that he was surrounded by a corps of conscientious and intelligent workers. The singers took hold of the difficult Mascagni chorus with a vim and with such a display of musicianship as to assure the conductor that they were thoroughly conversant with the work before them, and well equipped with these requirements necessary to make the venture in its entirety an absolute success.

In this rather Herculean task they require all the aid the business men and lovers of good music in this city can give them. This can be done by subscriptions to the capital stock of the association, by the purchase of season tickets for the 10 concerts, and by liberally patronizing the concert soon to be given in honor of the Maryland soldiers and sailors, who so far have had but scant honors since their return from the perils of the field, camp and hospital..

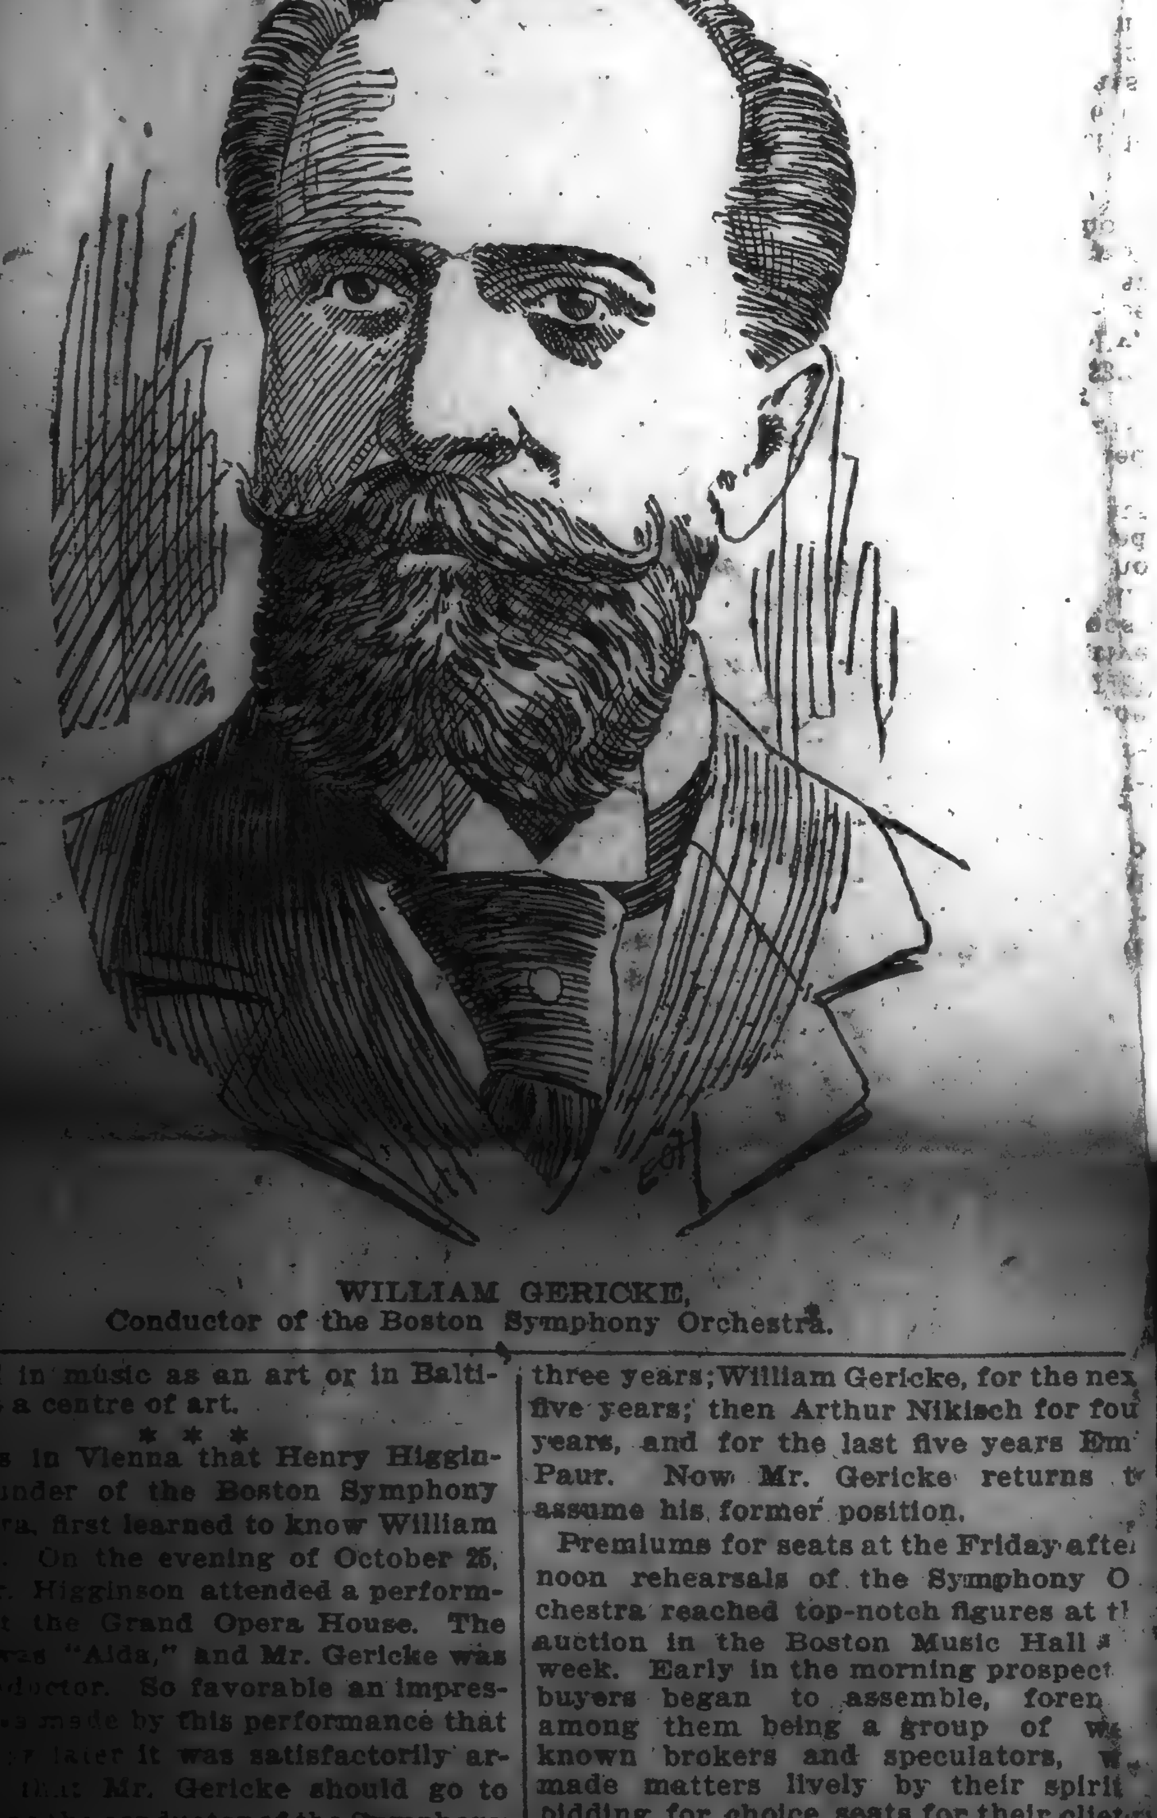
While Baltimore has more than doubled in size in the last 25 years, it has not advanced as it should have done in musical art and culture. Baltimore was the first American city to extend support to the pioneer Germania Orchestra, which came over from Europe. It was the first city to form a purely orchestral organization, as it did in the Haydn Society. It had the Peabody concerts annually for 29 years, and was the only city which honored Arthur Sullivan when he visited America. Baltimore gave a handsome sum to the Lee Monument in Richmond, Va., from a festival here, gotten up by its musical people. It has sent out many musical artists, teachers and composers.

But it has at present no permanent orchestral organization, although it has many first-class musicians willing to give their best efforts for only fair compensation. We have good soloists of all kinds, piano and organ factories; in fact, all the elements of a great musical centre. Nothing is needed now but united effort and enterprise on the part of public-spirited citizens.

The Maryland Musical Association has begun its rehearsals, and is already uniting all the elements. It will have a large orchestra, a grand double chorus of over 500, and one specially important and novel feature, a chorus of the best boy voices in the city. These will be heard on several occasions, first in the Alleluias of the "Cavalleria Rusticana," to be given in the third concert.

The programme of the first concert, given in honor of Maryland's soldiers and sailors, and to celebrate the return of peace, will be worthy of the occasion. The first number will be Beethoven's immortal Heroic Symphony, to be followed by his chorus, "The Heavens Praise the Lord," Taubert's musical setting of Schiller's poem, "The Bells," will be given, illustrated by tableaux, representing the departure and the return of the soldier. The chorus will sing the "Star-Spangled Banner," and Hubert's grand orchestral fantasy on American national airs will close the concert, giving not only a patriotic, but at the same time a thoroughly artistic programme that can be appreciated by all good citizens who like music.

The association invites all who are interested in music as an art or in Baltimore as a centre of art.



WILLIAM GERICKE,
Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

* * *

It was in Vienna that Henry Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, first learned to know William Gericke. On the evening of October 25, [illegible] Higginson attended a performance at the Grand Opera House. The [illegible] was "Aida," and Mr. Gericke was conductor. So favorable an impression was made by this performance that [illegible] later it was satisfactorily arranged that Mr. Gericke should go to [illegible] the conductor of the Symphony [illegible].

[illegible] or more after his arrival in Boston Gericke reorganized the orchestra, [illegible] several new and younger [illegible] from Vienna, and it is striking [illegible] of the unchanged personnel [illegible] that the great majority [illegible] members will welcome his [illegible] conductor's desk the coming [illegible].

[illegible] stay in Boston Mr. [illegible] eclectic select[illegible] it could be [illegible] recognition of [illegible] regardless of nationality. It is also worthy of note that, whether Beethoven or Brahms, Mozart or Schumann, he always gave to each work the interpretation its composer meant it to have, never intruding sensational effects of his own in the mistaken effort to improve upon a master.

There were two memorable performances in Boston under Mr. Gericke's direction outside of the regular series of concerts. One was the performance on Tuesday evening and Wednesday afternoon, April 10 and 11, 1888, of Mozart's "Requiem," when a very handsome sum was realized in aid of the fund to erect a monument to Mozart at Vienna. The second was Mr. Gericke's farewell concert on Thursday evening, May 23, 1889, when the introduction and "Good Friday Spell" from Wagner's "Parsifal" and the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven were given.

On the programmes of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Mr. Gericke's name appeared four times as the composer of a "Serenade for Strings," a "Concert Overture," a "Chorus of Homage" and two songs for soprano.

In the 17 years' existence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, founded in 1881 (in which 1,600 performances have been given), there have been but four conductors—George Henschel, for the first three years; William Gericke, for the nex five years; then Arthur Nikisch for fou years, and for the last five years Em Paur. Now Mr. Gericke returns t assume his former position.

Premiums for seats at the Friday afte noon rehearsals of the Symphony O chestra reached top-notch figures at t auction in the Boston Music Hall week. Early in the morning prospect buyers began to assemble, foren among them being a group of w known brokers and speculators, w made matters lively by their spirit bidding for choice seats for their clie later in the day.

The high-water mark was reach by a bid of $325, made by Agent Wa worth, who, it is said, was buying Eben Jordan. Another seat brought the offer being made by C. J. Conne who was buying on an order. Thre seats went for $152.50 each, the large net price paid on one bid during the The lowest bid was for $5. Among t present was Mrs. Jack Gardner, who cured her seats through an agent.

The sale of seats, which began a A. M., was continued until nearly the evening. Even the balcony se which went last, brought fancy price averaging at least $50 each for fr

---

NEWS, SATURDA

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Five Concerts to Be Given at Music Hall on Tuesday Evenings.

The 14th annual announcement by the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra includes the usual series of five concerts at Music Hall, not on Wednesday evenings, as heretofore, but on Tuesday evenings, November 8, December 13, January 17, February 21 and March 21. In all these 14 years the scale of prices has remained the same, and the organization actually makes the journey from Boston to Baltimore and gives the same high standard of performances as at home at a price, which, because of the high premiums paid in Boston by the patrons of the concerts desirous of retaining their regular seats, is less than in Boston.

At the first concert given by the orchestra in this city, on April 12, 1886, Mr. Wilhelm Gericke was the conductor. Succeeding Mr. George Henschel, the first conductor of the orchestra, Mr. Gericke held the position for five years, from 1884 to 1889, and now returns after an absence of nine years to resume his former position.

To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer in the membership of the orchestra, there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra, and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist whom Mr. Gericke brings with him. There have also been engaged Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra.

The list of soloists for Baltimore includes Mme. Gadski, Mr. Willy Burmester, Mr. Emil Sauer, Lady Halle (perhaps better known as Norman Neruda), and Mme. Teresa Carreno. Of these, three will make their first appearance in Baltimore—Lady Halle, Emil Sauer and Willy Burmester. Lady Halle, violinist, has never visited this country. She was born at Brunn March 29, 1839. Her father was a church organist. She first studied under Jansa. She first appeared in public with her sister Amalie, a pianist, in Vienna, at the age of 7. At the age of 10 she appeared at a Philharmonic concert in London. She played in Paris in 1864. Later she made London her home, appearing in many chamber and orchestral concerts. In 1888 she married Sir Charles Halle, who died in 1895. Emil Sauer, pianist, also visits the United States for the first time. He was born in Hamburg October 8, 1862. Rubinstein heard him and recommended him to his brother, Nikolaus. In 1884 he was a few months with Liszt. He has played throughout Europe with remarkable success. Willy Burmester, violinist, was also born at Hamburg, in 1869. He was first taught by his father; then for four years he studied with Joachim. He made his first appearance in Berlin November 10, 1891.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert.

Gericke! The name has a magnetism about it that attracts attention from every musical ear in the city. Mr. Gericke, after several years absence, comes again to Baltimore as the leader of the far famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, which gives its first concert of the season Tuesday evening, November 8. This is the eighteenth season of the orchestra and the fourteenth of its seasons in Baltimore. With Mr. Gericke again directing this superb organization a reborn enthusiasm will be ushered in. The concerts this year are set for Tuesday evenings, November 8, December 13, January 18, February 21 and March 21. To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer, there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra: Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra; and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist, whom Mr. Gericke brings with him. There have also been engaged Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra. The list of soloists for the Baltimore concerts includes at present Mme. Gadski, Mr. Willy Burmester, Mr. Emil Sauer, Lady Halle (perhaps, better known as Norman Neruda), and Mme. Teresa Carreno. Of these, three will make their first appearance in Baltimore—Lady Halle, Emil Sauer and Willy Burmester.

Lady Halle, violinist, has never visited this country. Wilma Maria Franciska Neruda was her maiden name, and she was born at Brunn, March 29, 1839. At the age of seven she appeared in public with her sister, Amalie, a pianist, in Vienna. In 1888 she married Sir Charles Halle, who died in 1895.

Emil Sauer, pianist, also visits the United States for the first time. He was born at Hamburg, October 8, 1862. He has played throughout Europe with remarkable success, and he is ranked among the very first of pianists.

Willy Burmester, violinist, was also born at Hamburg, in 1869. With his sister, Johanna, pianist, he made his first appearance in Berlin, November 10, e891. It is his custom to play music by Paganini whenever he appears for the first time in any city—because it brings him luck.

The Boston Orchestra Again Under Gericke's Leadership.

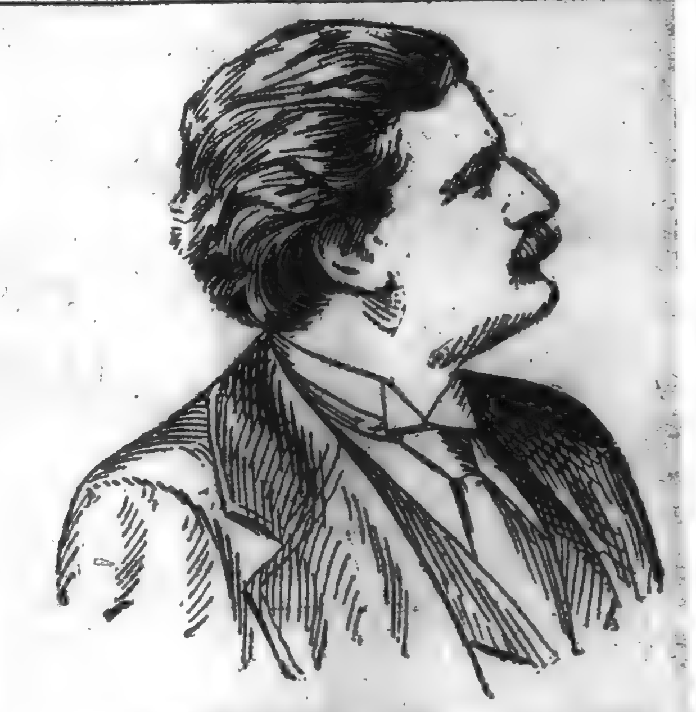
THE INSTITUTE SERIES.

Soloists Who Will Appear in Connection With the Orchestra—Some Incidents Concerning the Career of Lady Halle, Who Will Make Her Debut in This Country.

The Department of Music of the Brooklyn Institute makes attractive announcement this week of the Boston Symphony orchestral concerts, under the leadership of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, in the Academy of Music. The ten concerts will be given on Nov. 1 and 12, Dec. 16 and 17, Jan. 21 and 22, Feb. 24 and 25 and March 24 and 25. Moriz Rosenthal and Mme. Teresa Carreno, pianists; Lady Halle, Willy Burmester and Franz Kneisel, violin, and Alwin Schroeder, violoncello, are the soloists already engaged. Others will be announced later.

After an absence of nine years Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, the second conductor of the orchestra from 1884 to 1889, returns to resume his former position. While comparisons are often unfair, it is but simple justice to Mr. Gericke to say that to him belongs the credit of first placing this orchestra in the foremost rank of similar organizations, and his great ability as a conductor, his fine musicianship and sincerity of purpose lend to concerts under his direction a dignity and attractiveness which have never been surpassed.

One most potent factor in the continued success of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been the integrity of its personnel, and over one-half of the members of the orchestra in 1889, when Mr. Gericke left, will welcome his return to the conductor's desk the coming season. To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer, there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, of the Colonne Orchestra, and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz from the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist whom Mr. Gericke brings with him. There have also been engaged Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra, making a total of only nine changes in a membership of of eighty-seven.



MORITZ ROSENTHAL.

Lady Halle, the violinist, has never visited this country. Wilma Maria Franciska Neruda was her maiden name, and she was born at Brunn, March 29, 1839. Her father was a church organist. She first studied under Jansa. At the age of seven she appeared in public with her sister, Amalie, a pianist, in Vienna. With their father and their brother, Franz, a 'cellist, they gave concerts in Germany, and appeared in 1849 at a philharmonic concert in London. She played in Paris in 1864, and married there Ludwig Normann (1831-1885), a Swedish conductor. Separated from him in 1869, she made London her home, appearing in many chamber and orchestral concerts. In 1888 she married Sir Charles Halle, who died in 1895.

Willy Burmester, who will also be heard as a violinist, was born at Hamburg, in 1869. He was first taught by his father; then for four years he studied with Joachim. For three years afterward he worked by himself at Nelsingfors, in Finland. With his sister, Johanna, pianist, he made his first appearance in Berlin, Nov. 10, 1891. He reappeared there in 1894. His first appearance in London was March 14, 1895, when he played a concerto and some variations by Paganini.

The opening sale of seats will be held at No. 174 Montague street next Tuesday evening, at 8 o'clock. To accredited students of local institutions a limited number of tickets to the five matinee concerts will be sold at the reduced price of $2. Application should be made at the office of the Institute from Oct. 22 to Oct. 29, inclusive.

[35]

RMONY'S REALM

ems of Interest to the Local Lyric World.

NOW AT WORK IN EARNEST

Members of the Maryland Musical Association Determined to Make Their Venture a Success—Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Members of the Maryland Musical Association are now hard at work in an endeavor to demonstrate the resources and possibilities of this city as a great musical centre. They seem determined that the stigma plegma and ultra-conservatism shall be lifted if it lies in their power to do so.

The objects and ambitions of this organization were first told exclusively in the Morning Herald, as was also the results of the first rehearsal held in the Music Hall one evening last week. Upon this occasion Prof. David Melamet, who has been chosen director of the association, was apprised of the fact that he was surrounded by a corps of conscientious and intelligent workers. The singers took hold of the difficult Mascagni chorus with a vim and with such a display of musicianship as to assure the conductor that they were thoroughly conversant with the work before them, and well equipped with these requirements necessary to make the venture in its entirety an absolute success.

In this rather Herculean task they require all the aid the business men and lovers of good music in this city can give them. This can be done by subscriptions to the capital stock of the association, by the purchase of season tickets for the 10 concerts, and by liberally patronizing the concert soon to be given in honor of the Maryland soldiers and sailors, who so far have had but scant honors since their return from the perils of the field, camp and hospital..

While Baltimore has more than doubled in size in the last 25 years, it has not advanced as it should have done in musical art and culture. Baltimore was the first American city to extend support to the pioneer Germania Orchestra, which came over from Europe. It was the first city to form a purely orchestral organization, as it did in the Haydn Society. It had the Peabody concerts annually for 29 years, and was the only city which honored Arthur Sullivan when he visited America. Baltimore gave a handsome sum to the Lee Monument in Richmond, Va., from a festival here, gotten up by its musical people. It has sent out many musical artists, teachers and composers.

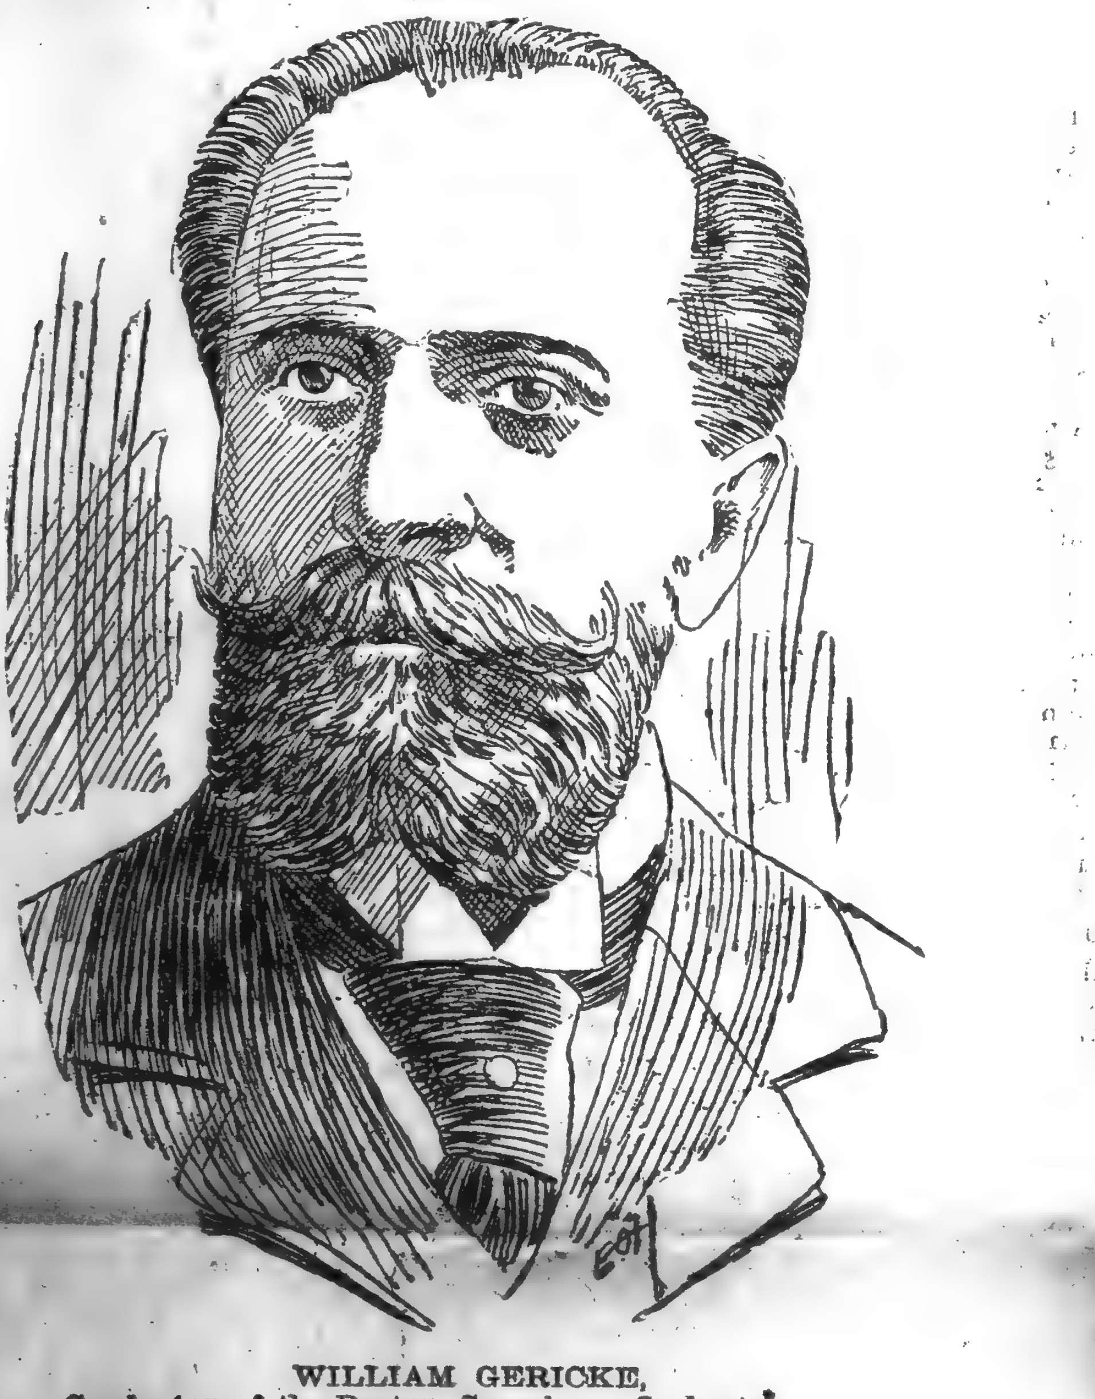
But it has at present no permanent orchestral organization, although it has many first-class musicians willing to give their best efforts for only fair compensation. We have good soloists of all kinds, piano and organ factories; in fact, all the elements of a great musical centre. Nothing is needed now but united effort and enterprise on the part of public-spirited citizens.

The Maryland Musical Association has begun its rehearsals, and is already uniting all the elements. It will have a large orchestra, a grand double chorus of over 500, and one specially important and novel feature, a chorus of the best boy voices in the city. These will be heard on several occasions, first in the alleluias of the "Cavalleria Rusticana," to be given in the third concert.

The programme of the first concert, given in honor of Maryland's soldiers and sailors, and to celebrate the return of peace, will be worthy of the occasion. The first number will be Beethoven's immortal Heroic Symphony, to be followed by his chorus, "The Heavens Praise the Lord," Taubert's musical setting of Schiller's poem, "The Bells," will be given, illustrated by tableaux, representing the departure and the return of the soldier. The chorus will sing the "Star-Spangled Banner," and Hubert's grand orchestral fantasy on American national airs will close the concert, giving not only a patriotic, but at the same time a thoroughly artistic programme that can be appreciated by all good citizens who like music.

The association invites all who are interested in music as an art or in Baltimore as a centre of art.

* * *



WILLIAM GERICKE,
Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

It was in Vienna that Henry Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, first learned to know William Gericke. On the evening of October 25, 1884, Mr. Higginson attended a performance at the Grand Opera House. The opera was "Aida," and Mr. Gericke was the conductor. So favorable an impression was made by this performance that two days later it was satisfactorily arranged that Mr. Gericke should go to Boston as the conductor of the Symphony Orchestra.

A year or more after his arrival in Boston Mr. Gericke reorganized the orchestra, introducing several new and younger members from Vienna, and it is striking evidence of the unchanged personnel of the orchestra that the great majority of these new members will welcome his return to the conductor's desk the coming season.

During his previous stay in Boston Mr. Gericke proved himself an eclectic, selecting the best music wherever it could be found, and giving proper recognition of [illegible] worthy composers, regardless of nationality. It is also worthy of note that, whether Beethoven or Brahms, Mozart or Schumann, he always gave to each work the interpretation its composer meant it to have, never intruding sensational effects of his own in the mistaken effort to improve upon a master.

There were two memorable performances in Boston under Mr. Gericke's direction outside of the regular series of concerts. One was the performance on Tuesday evening and Wednesday afternoon, April 10 and 11, 1888, of Mozart's "Requiem," when a very handsome sum was realized in aid of the fund to erect a monument to Mozart at Vienna. The second was Mr. Gericke's farewell concert on Thursday evening, May 23, 1889, when the introduction and "Good Friday Spell" from Wagner's "Parsifal" and the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven were given.

On the programmes of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Mr. Gericke's name appeared four times as the composer of a "Serenade for Strings," a "Concert Overture," a "Chorus of Homage" and two songs for soprano.

In the 17 years' existence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, founded in 1881 (in which 1,600 performances have been given), there have been but four conductors—George Henschel, for the first three years; William Gericke, for the nex five years; then Arthur Nikisch for fou years, and for the last five years Em Paur. Now Mr. Gericke returns t assume his former position.

Premiums for seats at the Friday afte noon rehearsals of the Symphony O chestra reached top-notch figures at t auction in the Boston Music Hall week. Early in the morning prospec buyers began to assemble, foren among them being a group of we known brokers and speculators, w made matters lively by their spirit bidding for choice seats for their clien later in the day.

The high-water mark was reach by a bid of $325, made by Agent Wa worth, who, it is said, was buying Eben Jordan. Another seat brought the offer being made by C. J. Conne who was buying on an order. Thre seats went for $152.50 each, the large net price paid on one bid during the The lowest bid was for $5. Among t present was Mrs. Jack Gardner, who cured her seats through an agent.

The sale of seats, which began a A. M., was continued until nearly the evening. Even the balcony se which went last, brought fancy price averaging at least $50 each for fro rows and $35 for those further back.

NEWS, SATURDAY.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Five Concerts to Be Given at Music Hall on Tuesday Evenings.

The 14th annual announcement by the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra includes the usual series of five concerts at Music Hall, not on Wednesday evenings, as heretofore, but on Tuesday evenings, November 8, December 13, January 17, February 21 and March 21. In all these 14 years the scale of prices has remained the same, and the organization actually makes the journey from Boston to Baltimore and gives the same high standard of performances as at home at a price, which, because of the high premiums paid in Boston by the patrons of the concerts desirous of retaining their regular seats, is less than in Boston.

At the first concert given by the orchestra in this city, on April 12, 1886, Mr. Wilhelm Gericke was the conductor. Succeeding Mr. George Henschel, the first conductor of the orchestra, Mr. Gericke held the position for five years, from 1884 to 1889, and now returns after an absence of nine years to resume his former position.

To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer in the membership of the orchestra, there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra, and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist whom Mr. Gericke brings with him. There have also been engaged Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra.

The list of soloists for Baltimore includes Mme. Gadski, Mr. Willy Burmester, Mr. Emil Sauer, Lady Halle (perhaps better known as Norman Neruda), and Mme. Teresa Carreno. Of these, three will make their first appearance in Baltimore—Lady Halle, Emil Sauer and Willy Burmester. Lady Halle, violinist, has never visited this country. She was born at Brunn March 29, 1839. Her father was a church organist. She first studied under Jansa. She first appeared in public with her sister Amalie, a pianist, in Vienna, at the age of 7. At the age of 10 she appeared at a Philharmonic concert in London. She played in Paris in 1864. Later she made London her home, appearing in many chamber and orchestral concerts. In 1888 she married Sir Charles Halle, who died in 1895. Emil Sauer, pianist, also visits the United States for the first time. He was born in Hamburg October 8, 1862. Rubinstein heard him and recommended him to his brother, Nikolaus. In 1884 he was a few months with Liszt. He has played throughout Europe with remarkable success. Willy Burmester, violinist, was also born at Hamburg, in 1869. He was first taught by his father; then for four years he studied with Joachim. He made his first appearance in Berlin November 10, 1891.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert.

Gericke! The name has a magnetism about it that attracts attention from every musical ear in the city. Mr. Gericke, after several years absence, comes again to Baltimore as the leader of the far famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, which gives its first concert of the season Tuesday evening, November 8. This is the eighteenth season of the orchestra and the fourteenth of its seasons in Baltimore. With Mr. Gericke again directing this superb organization a reborn enthusiasm will be ushered in. The concerts this year are set for Tuesday evenings, November 8, December 13, January 18, February 21 and March 21. To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer, there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra: Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra; and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist, whom Mr. Gericke brings with him. There have also been engaged Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra. The list of soloists for the Baltimore concerts includes at present Mme. Gadski, Mr. Willy Burmester, Mr. Emil Sauer, Lady Halle (perhaps, better known as Norman Neruda), and Mme. Teresa Carreno. Of these, three will make their first appearance in Baltimore —Lady Halle, Emil Sauer and Willy Burmester.

Lady Halle, violinist, has never visited this country. Wilma Maria Franciska Neruda was her maiden name, and she was born at Brunn, March 29, 1839. At the age of seven she appeared in public with her sister, Amalie, a pianist, in Vienna. In 1888 she married Sir Charles Halle, who died in 1895.

Emil Sauer, pianist, also visits the United States for the first time. He was born at Hamburg, October 8, 1862. He has played throughout Europe with remarkable success, and he is ranked among the very first of pianists.

Willy Burmester, violinist, was also born at Hamburg, in 1869. With his sister, Johanna, pianist, he made his first appearance in Berlin, November 10, 1891. It is his custom to play music by Paganini whenever he appears for the first time in any city—because it brings him luck.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Citizen Oct. 16

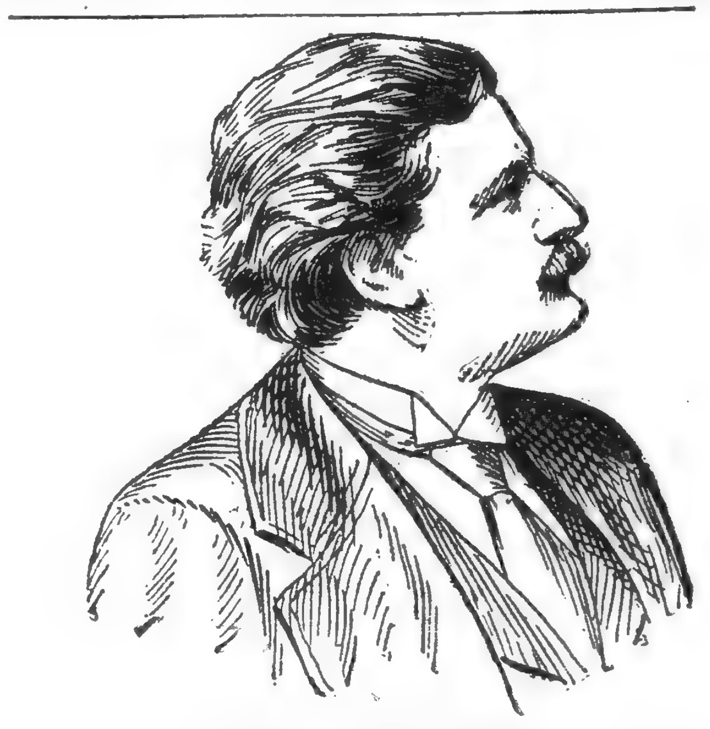
The Boston Orchestra Again Under Gericke's Leadership.

THE INSTITUTE SERIES.

Soloists Who Will Appear in Connection With the Orchestra—Some Incidents Concerning the Career of Lady Halle, Who Will Make Her Debut in This Country.

The Department of Music of the Brooklyn Institute makes attractive announcement this week of the Boston Symphony orchestral concerts, under the leadership of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, in the Academy of Music. The ten concerts will be given on Nov. 1 and 12, Dec. 16 and 17, Jan. 21 and 22, Feb. 24 and 25 and March 24 and 25. Moriz Rosenthal and Mme. Teresa Carreno, pianists; Lady Halle, Willy Burmester and Franz Kneisel, violin, and Alwin Schroeder, violoncello, are the soloists already engaged. Others will be announced later.

After an absence of nine years Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, the second conductor of the orchestra from 1884 to 1889, returns to resume his former position. While comparisons are often unfair, it is but simple justice to Mr. Gericke to say that to him belongs the credit of first placing this orchestra in the foremost rank of similar organizations, and his great ability as a conductor, his fine musicianship and sincerity of purpose lend to concerts under his direction a dignity and attractiveness which have never been surpassed.



MORITZ ROSENTHAL.

One most potent factor in the continued success of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been the integrity of its personnel, and over one-half of the members of the orchestra in 1889, when Mr. Gericke left, will welcome his return to the conductor's desk the coming season. To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer, there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, of the Colonne Orchestra, and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz from the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist whom Mr. Gericke brings with him. There have also been engaged Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra, making a total of only nine changes in a membership of of eighty-seven.

Lady Halle, the violinist, has never visited this country. Wilma Maria Franciska Neruda was her maiden name, and she was born at Brunn, March 29, 1839. Her father was a church organist. She first studied under Jansa. At the age of seven she appeared in public with her sister, Amalie, a pianist, in Vienna. With their father and their brother, Franz, a 'cellist, they gave concerts in Germany, and appeared in 1849 at a philharmonic concert in London. She played in Paris in 1864, and married there Ludwig Normann (1831-1885), a Swedish conductor. Separated from him in 1869, she made London her home, appearing in many chamber and orchestral concerts. In 1888 she married Sir Charles Halle, who died in 1895.

Willy Burmester, who will also be heard as a violinist, was born at Hamburg, in 1869. He was first taught by his father; then for four years he studied with Joachim. For three years afterward he worked by himself at Nelsingfors, in Finland. With his sister, Johanna, pianist, he made his first appearance in Berlin, Nov. 10, 1891. He reappeared there in 1894. His first appearance in London was March 14, 1895, when he played a concerto and some variations by Paganini.

The opening sale of seats will be held at No. 174 Montague street next Tuesday evening, at 8 o'clock. To accredited students of local institutions a limited number of tickets to the five matinee concerts will be sold at the reduced price of $2. Application should be made at the office of the Institute from Oct. 22 to Oct. 29, inclusive.

[35]

HARMONY'S REALM

tems of Interest to the Local Lyric World.

NOW AT WORK IN EARNEST

Members of the Maryland Musical Association Determined to Make Their Venture a Success—Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Members of the Maryland Musical Association are now hard at work in an endeavor to demonstrate the resources and possibilities of this city as a great musical centre. They seem determined that the stigma plegma and ultra-conservatism shall be lifted if it lies in their power to do so.

The objects and ambitions of this organization were first told exclusively in the Morning Herald, as was also the results of the first rehearsal held in the Music Hall one evening last week. Upon this occasion Prof. David Melamet, who has been chosen director of the association, was apprised of the fact that he was surrounded by a corps of conscientious and intelligent workers. The singers took hold of the difficult Mascagai chorus with a vim and with such a display of musicianship as to assure the conductor that they were thoroughly conversant with the work before them, and well equipped with these requirements necessary to make the venture in its entirety an absolute success.

In this rather Herculean task they require all the aid the business men and lovers of good music in this city can give them. This can be done by subscriptions to the capital stock of the association, by the purchase of season tickets for the 10 concerts, and by liberally patronizing the concert soon to be given in honor of the Maryland soldiers and sailors, who so far have had but scant honors since their return from the perils of the field, camp and hospital..

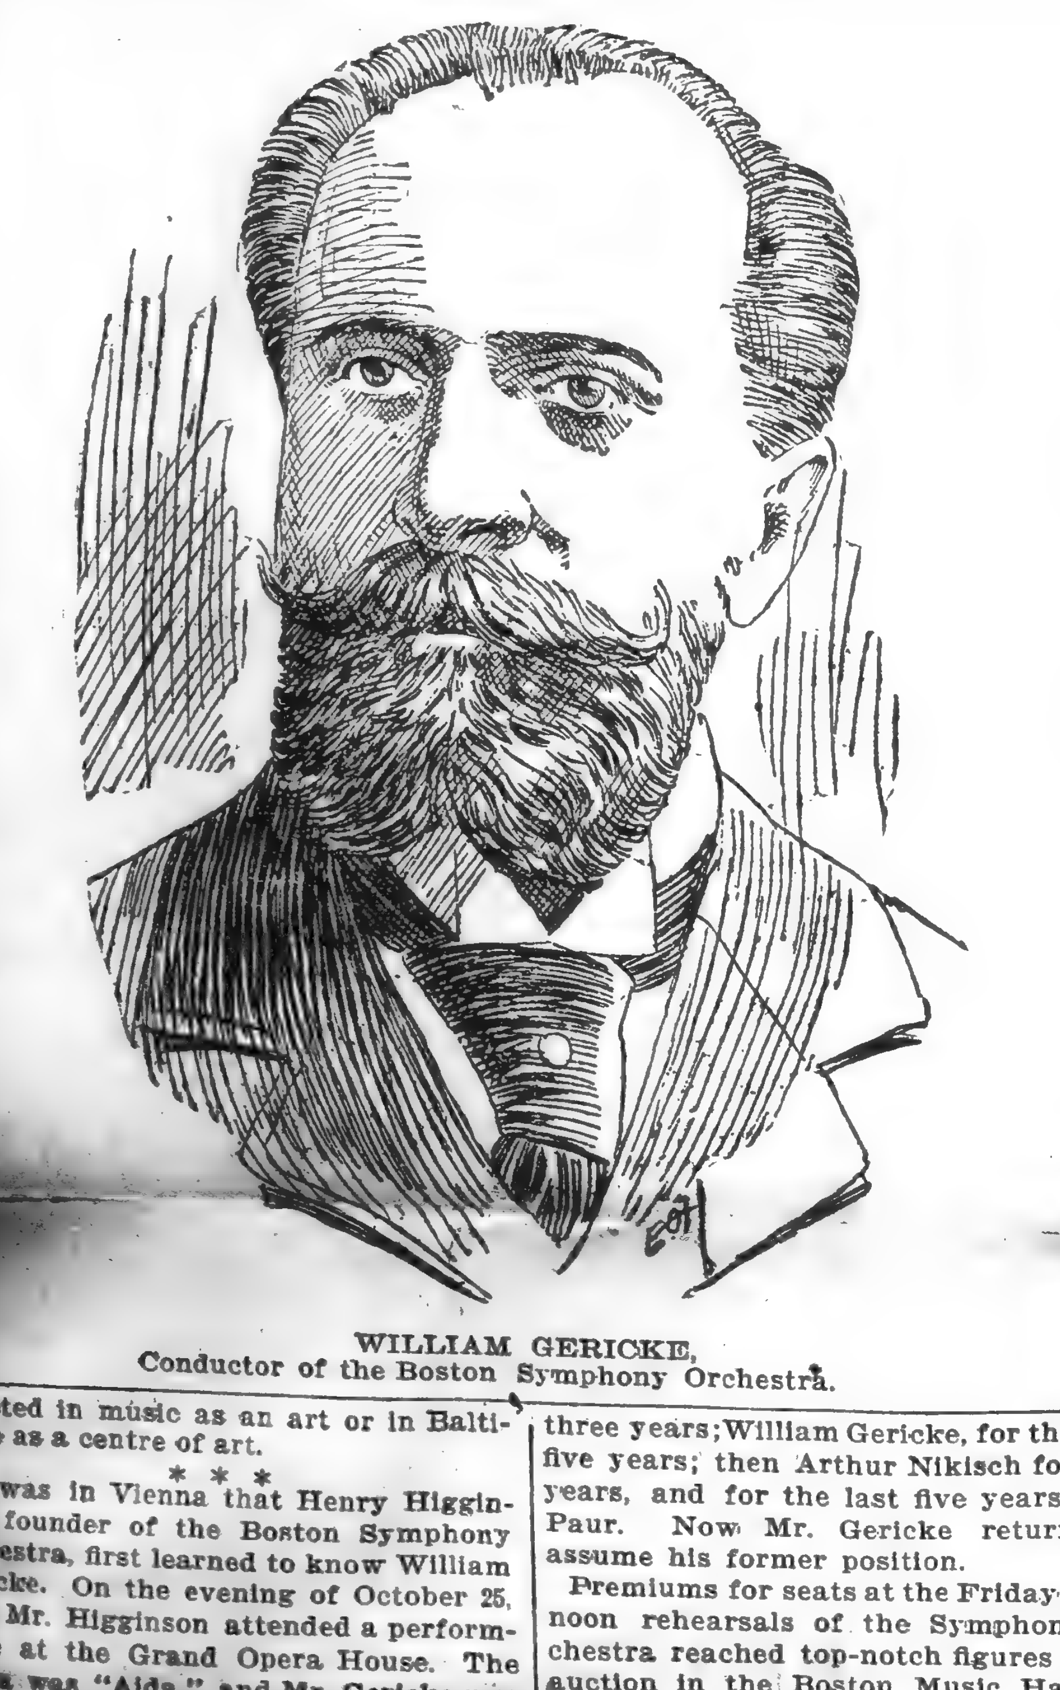
While Baltimore has more than doubled in size in the last 25 years, it has not advanced as it should have done in musical art and culture. Baltimore was the first American city to extend support to the pioneer Germania Orchestra, which came over from Europe. It was the first city to form a purely orchestral organization, as it did in the Haydn Society. It had the Peabody concerts annually for 29 years, and was the only city which honored Arthur Sullivan when he visited America. Baltimore gave a handsome sum to the Lee Monument in Richmond, Va., from a festival here, gotten up by its musical people. It has sent out many musical artists, teachers and composers.

But it has at present no permanent orchestral organization, although it has many first-class musicians willing to give their best efforts for only fair compensation. We have good soloists of all kinds, piano and organ factories; in fact, all the elements of a great musical centre. Nothing is needed now but united effort and enterprise on the part of public-spirited citizens.

The Maryland Musical Association has begun its rehearsals, and is already uniting all the elements. It will have a large orchestra, a grand double chorus of over 500, and one specially important and novel feature, a chorus of the best boy voices in the city. These will be heard on several occasions, first in the alleluias of the "Cavalleria Rusticana," to be given in the third concert.

The programme of the first concert, given in honor of Maryland's soldiers and sailors, and to celebrate the return of peace, will be worthy of the occasion. The first number will be Beethoven's immortal Heroic Symphony, to be followed by his chorus, "The Heavens Praise the Lord," Taubert's musical setting of Schiller's poem, "The Bells," will be given, illustrated by tableaux, representing the departure and the return of the soldier. The chorus will sing the "Star-Spangled Banner," and Hubert's grand orchestral fantasy on American national airs will close the concert, giving not only a patriotic, but at the same time a thoroughly artistic programme that can be appreciated by all good citizens who like music.

The association invites all who are interested in music as an art or in Baltimore as a centre of art.



WILLIAM GERICKE,
Conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

* * *

It was in Vienna that Henry Higginson, founder of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, first learned to know William Gericke. On the evening of October 25, 1884, Mr. Higginson attended a performance at the Grand Opera House. The opera was "Aida," and Mr. Gericke was the conductor. So favorable an impression was made by this performance that two days later it was satisfactorily arranged that Mr. Gericke should go to Boston as the conductor of the Symphony Orchestra.

A year or more after his arrival in Boston Mr. Gericke reorganized the orchestra, introducing several new and younger members from Vienna, and it is striking evidence of the unchanged personnel of the orchestra that the great majority of these new members will welcome his return to the conductor's desk the coming season.

During his previous stay in Boston Mr. Gericke proved himself an eclectic, selecting the best music wherever it could be found, and giving proper recognition of all worthy composers, regardless of nationality. It is also worthy of note that, whether Beethoven or Brahms, Mozart or Schumann, he always gave to each work the interpretation its composer meant it to have, never intruding sensational effects of his own in the mistaken effort to improve upon a master.

There were two memorable performances in Boston under Mr. Gericke's direction outside of the regular series of concerts. One was the performance on Tuesday evening and Wednesday afternoon, April 10 and 11, 1888, of Mozart's "Requiem," when a very handsome sum was realized in aid of the fund to erect a monument to Mozart at Vienna. The second was Mr. Gericke's farewell concert on Thursday evening, May 23, 1889, when the introduction and "Good Friday Spell" from Wagner's "Parsifal" and the Fifth Symphony of Beethoven were given.

On the programmes of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Mr. Gericke's name appeared four times as the composer of a "Serenade for Strings," a "Concert Overture," a "Chorus of Homage" and two songs for soprano.

In the 17 years' existence of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, founded in 1881 (in which 1,600 performances have been given), there have been but four conductors—George Henschel, for the first three years; William Gericke, for the nex five years; then Arthur Nikisch for fou years, and for the last five years Em Paur. Now Mr. Gericke returns t assume his former position.

Premiums for seats at the Friday afte noon rehearsals of the Symphony O chestra reached top-notch figures at t auction in the Boston Music Hall week. Early in the morning prospec buyers began to assemble, foren among them being a group of we known brokers and speculators, w made matters lively by their spirit bidding for choice seats for their clie later in the day.

The high-water mark was reach by a bid of $325, made by Agent Wa worth, who, it is said, was buying Eben Jordan. Another seat brought the offer being made by C. J. Conne who was buying on an order. Thre seats went for $152.50 each, the large net price paid on one bid during the The lowest bid was for $5. Among t present was Mrs. Jack Gardner, who cured her seats through an agent.

The sale of seats, which began a A. M., was continued until nearly the evening. Even the balcony se which went last, brought fancy price averaging at least $50 each for fro rows and $35 for those further back.

NEWS, SATURDAY.

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

Five Concerts to Be Given at Music Hall on Tuesday Evenings.

The 14th annual announcement by the management of the Boston Symphony Orchestra includes the usual series of five concerts at Music Hall, not on Wednesday evenings, as heretofore, but on Tuesday evenings, November 8, December 13, January 17, February 21 and March 21. In all these 14 years the scale of prices has remained the same, and the organization actually makes the journey from Boston to Baltimore and gives the same high standard of performances as at home at a price, which, because of the high premiums paid in Boston by the patrons of the concerts desirous of retaining their regular seats, is less than in Boston.

At the first concert given by the orchestra in this city, on April 12, 1886, Mr. Wilhelm Gericke was the conductor. Succeeding Mr. George Henschel, the first conductor of the orchestra, Mr. Gericke held the position for five years, from 1884 to 1889, and now returns after an absence of nine years to resume his former position.

To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer in the membership of the orchestra, there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra, and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist whom Mr. Gericke brings with him. There have also been engaged Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra.

The list of soloists for Baltimore includes Mme. Gadski, Mr. Willy Burmester, Mr. Emil Sauer, Lady Halle (perhaps better known as Norman Neruda), and Mme. Teresa Carreno. Of these, three will make their first appearance in Baltimore—Lady Halle, Emil Sauer and Willy Burmester. Lady Halle, violinist, has never visited this country. She was born at Brunn March 29, 1839. Her father was a church organist. She first studied under Jansa. She first appeared in public with her sister Amalie, a pianist, in Vienna, at the age of 7. At the age of 10 she appeared at a Philharmonic concert in London. She played in Paris in 1864. Later she made London her home, appearing in many chamber and orchestral concerts. In 1888 she married Sir Charles Halle, who died in 1895. Emil Sauer, pianist, also visits the United States for the first time. He was born in Hamburg October 8, 1862. Rubinstein heard him and recommended him to his brother, Nikolaus. In 1884 he was a few months with Liszt. He has played throughout Europe with remarkable success. Willy Burmester, violinist, was also born at Hamburg, in 1869. He was first taught by his father; then for four years he studied with Joachim. He made his first appearance in Berlin November 10, 1891.

Boston Symphony Orchestra Concert.

Gericke! The name has a magnetism about it that attracts attention from every musical ear in the city. Mr. Gericke, after several years absence, comes again to Baltimore as the leader of the far famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, which gives its first concert of the season Tuesday evening, November 8. This is the eighteenth season of the orchestra and the fourteenth of its seasons in Baltimore. With Mr Gericke again directing this superb organization a reborn enthusiasm will be ushered in. The concerts this year are set for Tuesday evenings, November 8, December 13, January 18, February 21 and March 21. To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer, there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra: Longy, oboe, of the Colonne Orchestra; and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz, of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist, whom Mr. Gericke brings with him. There have also been engaged Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra. The list of soloists for the Baltimore concerts includes at present Mme. Gadski, Mr. Willy Burmester, Mr. Emil Sauer, Lady Halle (perhaps, better known as Norman Neruda), and Mme. Teresa Carreno. Of these, three will make their first appearance in Baltimore —Lady Halle, Emil Sauer and Willy Burmester.

Lady Halle, violinist, has never visited this country. Wilma Maria Franciska Neruda was her maiden name, and she was born at Brunn, March 29, 1839. At the age of seven she appeared in public with her sister, Amalie, a pianist, in Vienna. In 1888 she married Sir Charles Halle, who died in 1895.

Emil Sauer, pianist, also visits the United States for the first time. He was born at Hamburg, October 8, 1862. He has played throughout Europe with remarkable success, and he is ranked among the very first of pianists.

Willy Burmester, violinist, was also born at Hamburg, in 1869. With his sister, Johanna, pianist, he made his first appearance in Berlin, November 10, 1891. It is his custom to play music by Paganini whenever he appears for the first time in any city—because it brings him luck.

SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Citizen Oct. 16

The Boston Orchestra Again Under Gericke's Leadership.

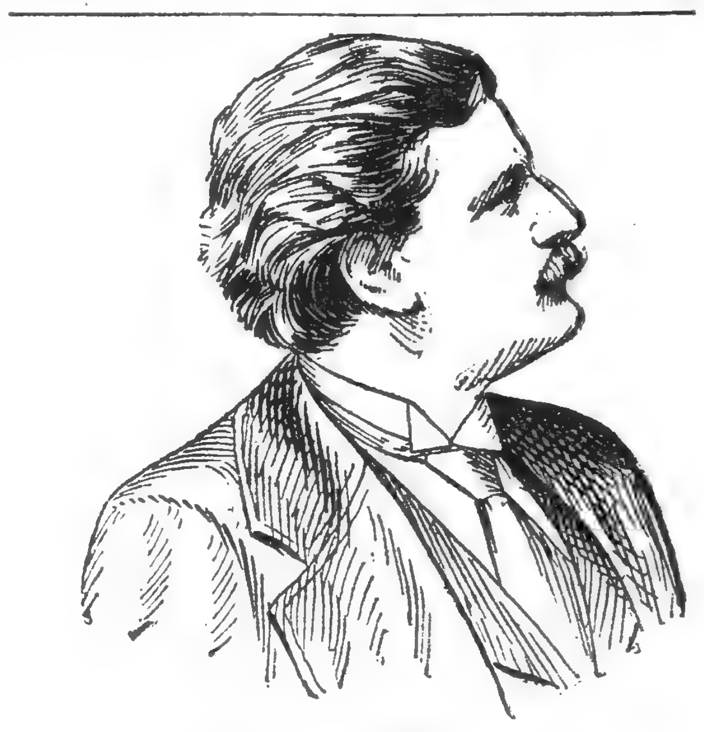
THE INSTITUTE SERIES.

Soloists Who Will Appear in Connection With the Orchestra—Some Incidents Concerning the Career of Lady Halle, Who Will Make Her Debut in This Country.

The Department of Music of the Brooklyn Institute makes attractive announcement this week of the Boston Symphony orchestral concerts, under the leadership of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, in the Academy of Music. The ten concerts will be given on Nov. 1 and 12, Dec. 16 and 17, Jan. 21 and 22, Feb. 24 and 25 and March 24 and 25. Moriz Rosenthal and Mme. Teresa Carreno, pianists; Lady Halle, Willy Burmester and Franz Kneisel, violin, and Alwin Schroeder, violoncello, are the soloists already engaged. Others will be announced later.

After an absence of nine years Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, the second conductor of the orchestra from 1884 to 1889, returns to resume his former position. While comparisons are often unfair, it is but simple justice to Mr. Gericke to say that to him belongs the credit of first placing this orchestra in the foremost rank of similar organizations, and his great ability as a conductor, his fine musicianship and sincerity of purpose lend to concerts under his direction a dignity and attractiveness which have never been surpassed.

One most potent factor in the continued success of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been the integrity of its personnel, and over one-half of the members of the orchestra in 1889, when Mr. Gericke left, will welcome his return to the conductor's desk the coming season. To fill the vacancies that have occurred during the summer, there have been engaged Messrs. Maquarre, flute, of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, of the Colonne Orchestra, and Selmer, clarinet, of the Lamoureux Orchestra. The only changes in the string department will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz from the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and a 'cellist whom Mr. Gericke brings with him. There have also been engaged Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani, of the New York Symphony Orchestra, making a total of only nine changes in a membership of of eighty-seven.



MORITZ ROSENTHAL.

Lady Halle, the violinist, has never visited this country. Wilma Maria Franciska Neruda was her maiden name, and she was born at Brunn, March 29, 1839. Her father was a church organist. She first studied under Jansa. At the age of seven she appeared in public with her sister, Amalie, a pianist, in Vienna. With their father and their brother, Franz, a 'cellist, they gave concerts in Germany, and appeared in 1849 at a philharmonic concert in London. She played in Paris in 1864, and married there Ludwig Normann (1831-1885), a Swedish conductor. Separated from him in 1869, she made London her home, appearing in many chamber and orchestral concerts. In 1888 she married Sir Charles Halle, who died in 1895.

Willy Burmester, who will also be heard as a violinist, was born at Hamburg, in 1869. He was first taught by his father; then for four years he studied with Joachim. For three years afterward he worked by himself at Nelsingfors, in Finland. With his sister, Johanna, pianist, he made his first appearance in Berlin, Nov. 10, 1891. He reappeared there in 1894. His first appearance in London was March 14, 1895, when he played a concerto and some variations by Paganini.

The opening sale of seats will be held at No. 174 Montague street next Tuesday evening, at 8 o'clock. To accredited students of local institutions a limited number of tickets to the five matinee concerts will be sold at the reduced price of $2. Application should be made at the office of the Institute from Oct. 22 to Oct. 29, inclusive.

REDUCTION

RATIO

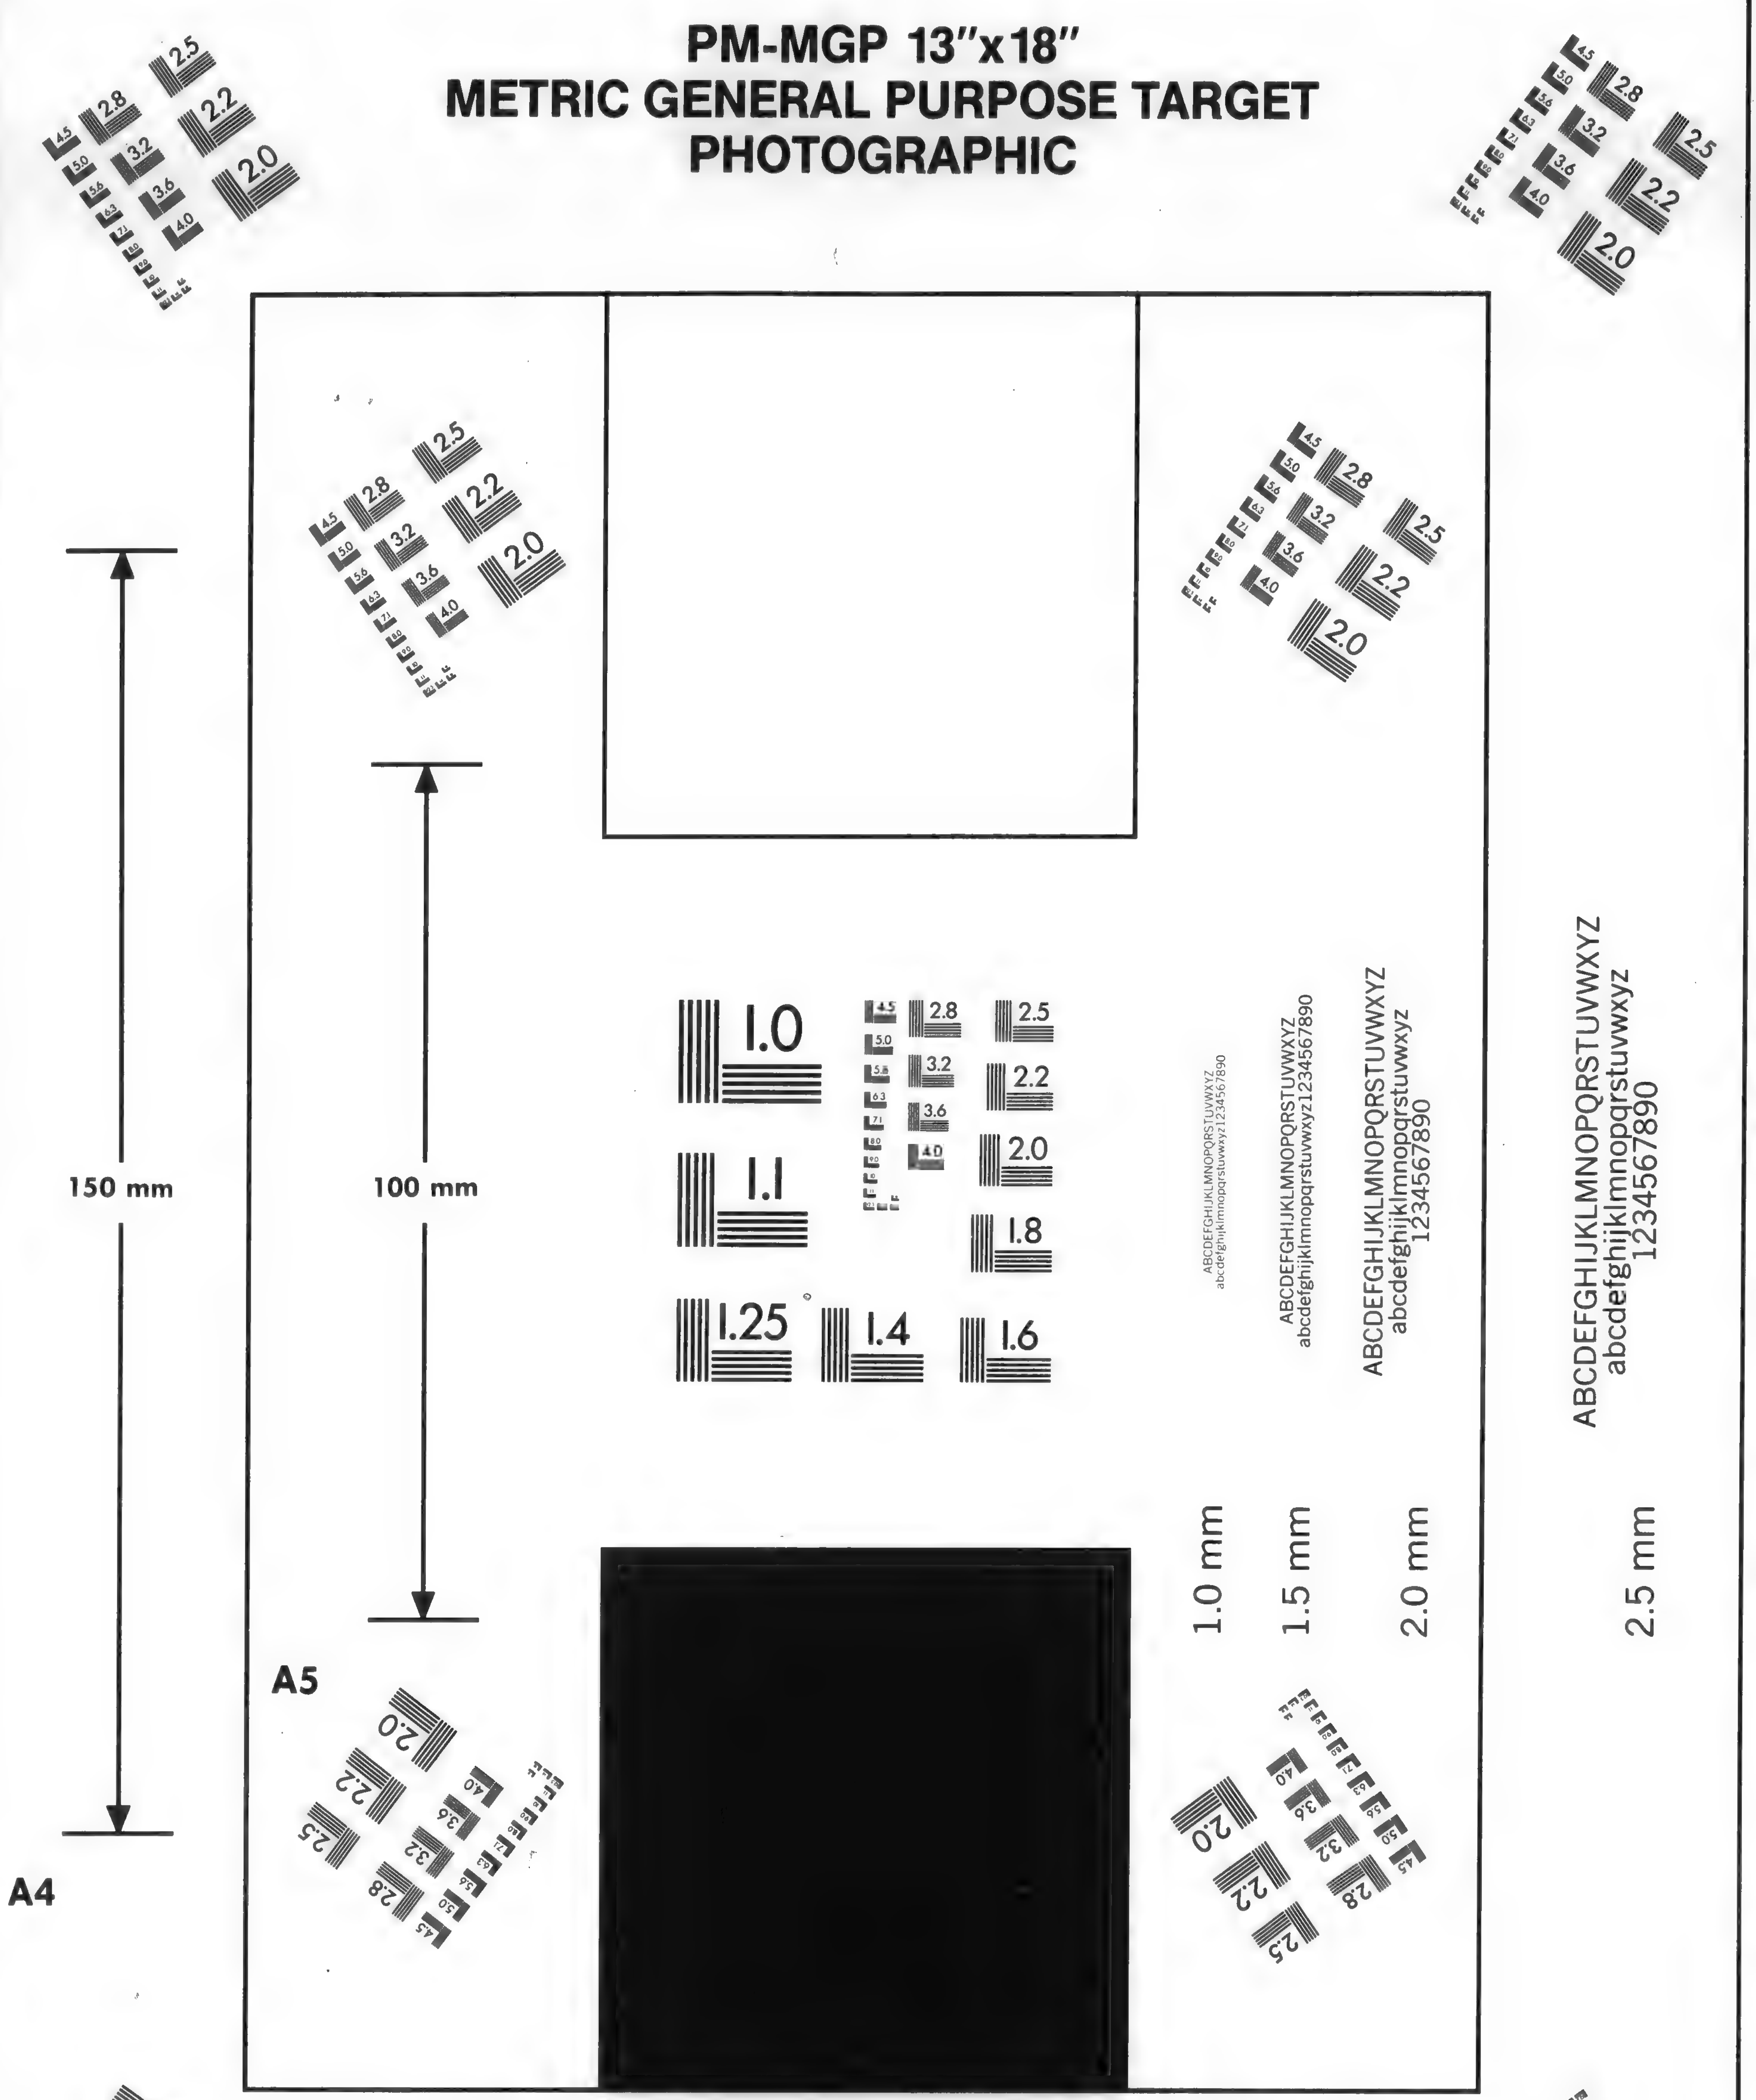
13x

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13″x18″
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC



150 mm
100 mm
A5
A4
1.0
1.1
1.25
1.4
1.6
1.8
2.0
2.2
2.5
2.8
3.2
3.6
4.0
4.5
5.0
1.0 mm
1.5 mm
2.0 mm
2.5 mm
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

OBSCURED TEXT

CONCERTS.

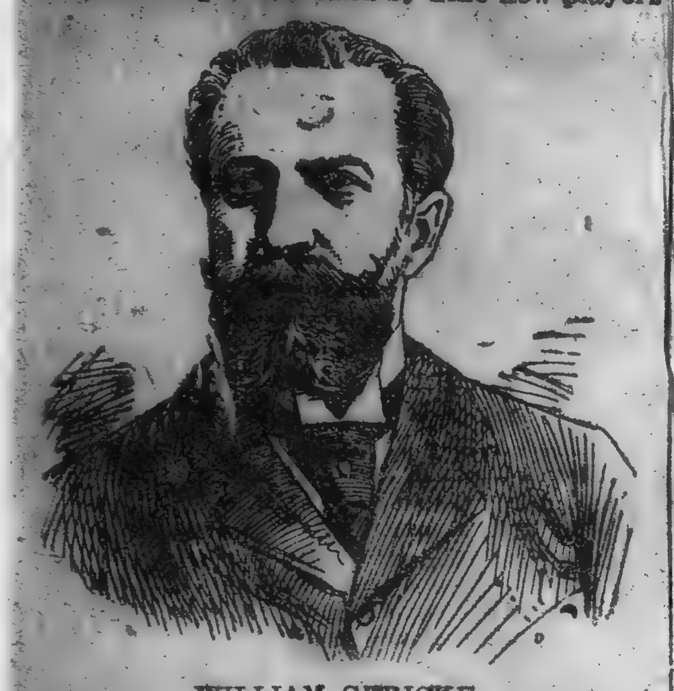
Oct. 15

Orchestra Will Give Ten Performances in Brooklyn.

FIRST ONE TO BE HELD NOV. 11.

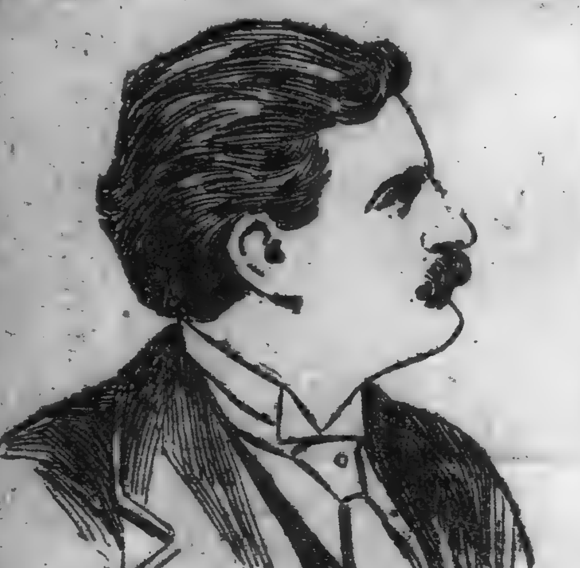
Some Changes in the Personnel of the Orchestra, Owing to the Drowning of Three of the Members — Something of Rosenthal, Who Arrives Early in the Week and of Lady Halle.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the season in the Academy of Music on November 11 and 12, with two concerts, conducted by Mr. Gericke and employing Moriz Rosenthal as the soloist. Every indication points to the conclusion that the season inaugurated will be memorable in the annals of the orchestra. Mr. Gericke's return, the strengthening of the band by nine new players to fill a similar number of vacancies, and the engagement of soloists like Rosenthal, Mme. Carreno, Lady Halle and Willy Burmester, may all be accepted as favorable auguries.



WILLIAM GERICKE,
Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.

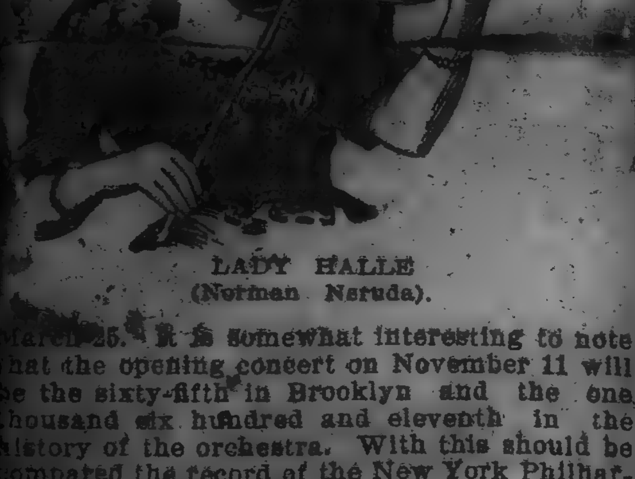
One most potent factor in the continued success of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been the integrity of its personnel, and over one-half the members of the orchestra in 1889, when Mr. Gericke left, will welcome his return to the conductor's desk. The present season will witness a few changes in the body of the orchestra. Three of its most efficient members were drowned in the frightful disaster to the French line steamer last July. To take their places and to fill vacancies caused by other changes, there have been engaged Maquarre, flute of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe of the Colonne Orchestra, and Sellmer, clarinet of the Lamoureux Orchestra. In the string department there will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz from the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra and a 'cellist whom Mr. Gericke brings with him. There have also been engaged Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rottberg, tympani of the New York Symphony Orchestra, making up with the others a full complement of eighty-seven musicians.



MORITZ ROSENTHAL.

Conductor Gericke has not yet sent on his Brooklyn programmes, but those recently issued in Boston show a wide and generous selection of works and a recognition of composers of almost every school. A point specially urged in Gericke's favor by his admirers in his sincere and faithful conception of master works. Whether a composition is by Beethoven or Brahms, Mozart or Schumann, this leader always brings out the meaning the composer meant to have brought out and never intrudes sensational effects of his own. Says a representative Bostonian who is well qualified to speak: "Since Mr. Gericke left the orchestra we have never had a performance which fell to the level of mediocrity, while the great majority wei admirable, enjoyable and often beyond reproach. But it is equally noteworthy that for steadfast loyalty to a high ideal Wilhelm Gericke stands facile princeps among his fellow conductors."

The ten concerts in Brooklyn will be on the following dates: Friday matinees, November 11, December 16, January 20, February 24, March 24. Saturday evening concerts, November 12, December 17, January 21, February 25, March 25. It is somewhat interesting to note that the opening concert on November 11 will be the sixty-fifth in Brooklyn and the one thousand six hundred and eleventh in the history of the orchestra. With this should be compared the record of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, the parent organization, which has not given in fifty-eight years half as many concerts as the Boston men have in seventeen years. The disparity is due, of course, to the greater number of concerts given each year by the latter organization. Recent ticket sales in Boston and across the East River would indicate that the public taste had been whetted rather than dulled



LADY HALLE
(Norman Neruda).

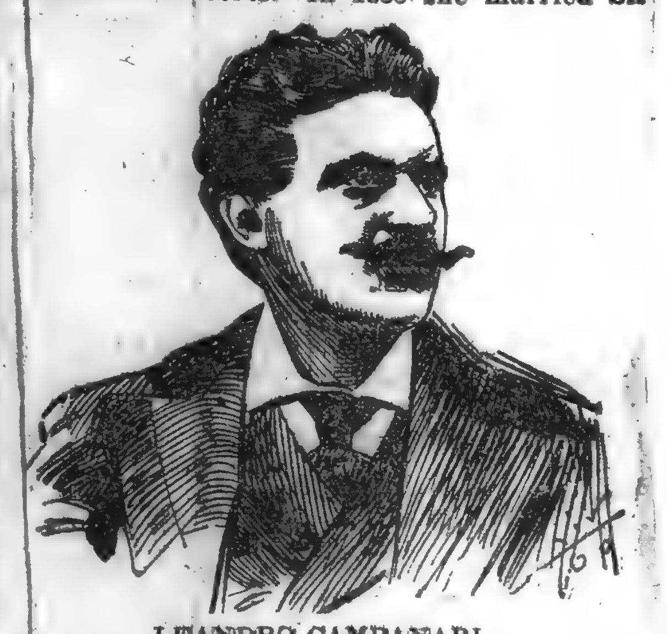
MME. TERESA CARRENO.

[illegible] opportunity to hear a sterling [illegible]

[illegible] concerning the artist [illegible] or virtuosi of world-wide preeminence, like Rosenthal. In a recent sketch of the latter artist, Rosenthal is spoken of as "the great Roumanian pianist," and is cited as an instance of the endurance of the child prodigy. Beginning his musical education at the age of 4, the turning point of the boy's career came when, in his 10th year, he walked all the way from Lemberg to Vienna to call upon Joseffy and gravely consult with him about his own future. Joseffy good naturedly took the boy in hand and taught him piano-forte, while at the same time young Rosenthal was pursuing a philosophical and literary course in the Gymnasium and University of Vienna. His winning of the mastership of arts and his keen interest in the lectures of Zimmerman, Brentano and Hanslick revealed a mind ambitious of general cultivation as well as of pianistic excellence. A secret of Rosenthal's continued progress along the lines of his art has been has capacity for unflagging toil. "He spends a great deal of time in Vienna and at Ischl," says an observer, "but it is at his charming little home at Abazzio, near Trieste, that one sees him at his best. There he lives in seclusion, with his beloved piano, and spends from eight to ten hours daily in practice. He is an early riser, and after taking his matutinal plunge he immediately proceeds to the instrument. Seated in a comfortable chair, he receives visitors, chats and transacts his business without even allowing his finger to wander away from the keyboard. It is a difficult matter sometimes to convince him that there is such a thing as food and that he must stop long enough to eat."

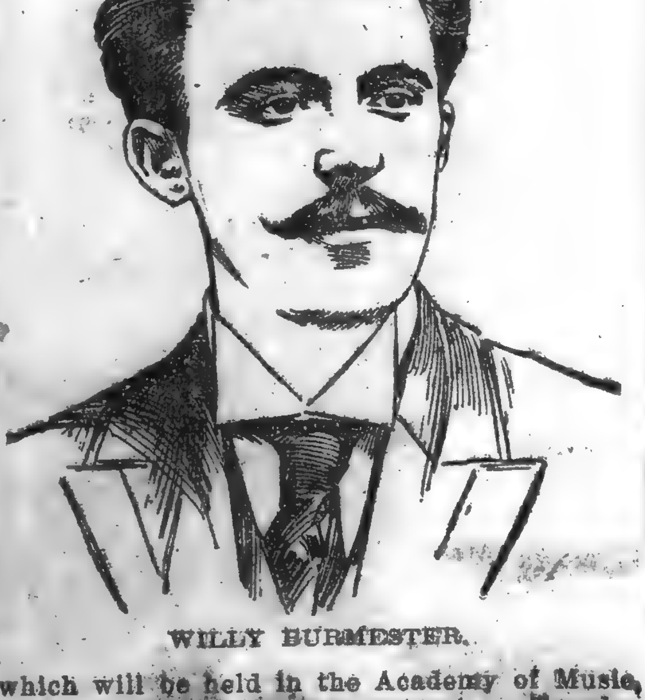
Now that Rosenthal has learned to speak English quite fluently—the result of numerous professional visits to London—he will enjoy his present trip to America much more than his previous ones. He was expected to sail on the Kaiser Friedrich on Wednesday and is therefore due in this city early in the week. After a few days' rest he will make his debut in Manhattan and will thence proceed to Boston for a number of concerts, returning to complete a large eastern and western circuit, California and Mexico being included in his widely extended tour.

Of the new artists Lady Halle, the violinist, has long been a favorite in the musical circles of the English capital. Wilma Maria Franciska Neruda was her maiden name and she was born at Brunn March 29, 1839, her father being a church organist. She first studied under Jansa and at the age of 7 appeared in public with her sister Amalie, a pianiste, in Vienna. With their father and their brother, a 'cellist, the child musicians gave a concert in German and appeared in 1849 in London. Wilma Neruda played in Paris in 1864 and married there Ludwig Normann (1831-1885), a Swedish conductor. Separated from him in 1869, she made London her home, appearing there in many chamber and orchestral concerts. In 1888 she married Sir Charles Halle, who died in 1895. Willy Burmester is another artist who is very popular in London. He was born in Brahms, City of Hamburg, in 1869, and was first taught by his father, studying later under Joachim at Berlin. One of the first to discover his talent was the great Hans von Bulow, who devoted many hours to duet playing with the young violinist. Bent on perfecting himself in his art, Burmester spent three years in seclusion at Helsingfors, Finland, where he practiced on the average from eight to ten hours daily. His first appearance in Berlin was with his his sister, Johanna, a pianist, November 10, 1891. A second appearance was made in 1894. He accomplished his London debut on March 14, 1895, when he played a concerto and variations by Paganini. The enormous difficulties of the piece were surmounted with such skill and ease as to place him, in the estimation of the critics, among the best technicians of the day. Mme. Teresa Carreno has played with the orchestra and at recitals before the Institute to the delight of Brooklynites, and it will be pleasant news that she is again expected in January, 1899. Her piano playing, as well as the solo work promised by Franz Kneisel, the concert master and first violin, and Alwin Schroeder, the sterling 'cellist, will add much to the eclat of the concerts.



LEANDRO CAMPANARI.

The sale of seats for the ten events, all of which will be held in the Academy of Music, will open at 174 Montague street on Tuesday evening next, and will be continued at Chandler's music store and the office of the Institute, 502 Fulton street. A limited number of students' tickets will be sold at the reduced rate of $2 for the five matinee concerts. Application should be made from October 24 to October 29, inclusive.



WILLY BURMESTER.

Eagle

Prominent People Who Purchased Course Tickets for the Orchestral Concerts.

The sale of course tickets for the afternoon and evening concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the Academy of Music, took place in the Art Building at 6 o'clock yesterday afternoon. A small army of messenger boys headed the line, representing those patrons of the concerts who were desirous of getting the pick of the house. Some of the little fellows had dangled their legs over the settees in the hallway since 7 o'clock in the morning, and other recruits had dropped in through the day. After the messengers had been provided for came the great mass of ordinary folk, members of the Institute and admirers of the orchestra, whose desire to hear the concerts had been whetted by the announcement that Wilhelm Gericke was to lead. There was an unusual demand for boxes, and it was evident that society would take a keen interest in the concerts. Henry K. Sheldon of Columbia heights rented Box B for all of the ten concerts; Miss Mary Benson, also of Columbia heights, rented Box D, afternoon and evening. Mrs. Andrew Jacobs of Amity street took Box E for the matinees and Box G for the evening events. George H. Prentice of First place took Box F, and Miss Chauncey of Joralemon street took Box H. The total receipts aggregated $2,502.50, an amount nearly equal to the banner sale of four years ago, when Melba and other celebrated vocalists were announced to appear. The list of subscribers includes many well known names, and is as folllows:

John S. James, E. H. Kidder, Benjamin T. Frothingham, J. S. Frothingham, J. Luck, Mrs. Slack, H. F. Noyes, Mrs. Edwin Beers, Mrs. S. B. Chandler, Sarah S. Dickinson, J. H. Bates, C. Zabriskie, Mrs. M. G. Jeffreys, Frank Reynolds, J. S. Connell, S. R. Probasco, N. J. Bishoprick, L. E. Berger, Lowell M. Palmer, Thomas Potts, Mrs. Journeay, T. Perkins, Mrs. Beekman, Mrs. Chauncey, Carll H. De Silver, Colonel Robert B. Woodward, John F. Anderson, Franklin W. Hooper, N. R. Hunt, H. F. Crosby, F. B. Campbell, E. D. Newman, S. A. Osborne, H. A. Jones, James C. Cropsey, C. P. Williamson, A. M. Mansfield, William C. Stimpson, Bryan H. Smith, T. E. Smith, Mrs. John Thallon, Mrs. Samuel L. Nash, Charles A. Sackett, N. H. Hentz, M. J. Morrill, Martin Joost, A. Augustus Healy, A. M. Shaw, N. B. Hoxie, jr.; Mrs. C. F. Iddings, Miss E. S. Hoxie, E. D. Fowler, Adrian Paradis, Arthur G. Stone, Mrs. George H. Stone, Mrs. William L. Smith, Richard P. Bruff, Lucien F. Sullivan, Augusta E. Muehlau, General C. T. Christensen, Mrs. L. H. Buckingham, Miss I. M. Grier, H. C. Bick, William A. Lee, jr.; Washington Hull, Miss M. T. Dickinson, Miss A. Dinsmore, Mrs. J. H. Keep, Miss M. Vidaud, H. N. Congdon, Dr. F. W. Wunderlich, Dr. T. R. French, James N. Brown, Mrs. C. Hawkins, Mrs. D. B. Lester, Mrs. George A. Price, Mrs. S. G. Day, D. H. Prentice, Mrs. D. Sanborn, C. R. Bangs, Frederick Rose, Dr. E. H. Squibb, A. I. Ormsbee, Mrs. W. A. [illegible] M. Rushmore, Mrs. K. M. Wiley, I. A. Lewis, Miss E. B. Estes, Dr. A. T. Bristow, E. C. Platt, John Pills, Milton J. Platt, Albert L. Nash, Mrs. W. S. Shrigley, Otto A. Draudt, Frederick Ilgen, Mrs. John D. Moll, William P. Sullivan, Miss G. Hall, Principal W. T. B. S. Imlay, Charles F. Garlichs, E. P. Van Nadroff, Miss F. E. Rogers, A. T. Brombacher, P. Denesmore, Miss McWilliams, T. J. Warburton, Dr. H. W. Skerry, William L. Van Sinderan, H. F. Swift, Miss Jean Sinclair, Walter S. Carter, D. A. Van Ingen, B. F. Graves, Irving T. Bush, John E. Tousey, James L. Morgan, jr.; Miss Schmids, Dr. Bonnell, Mrs. G. F. Bulley, Mrs. Stanniford, Mrs. A. Klipstein, H. C. Folzer, jr.; Miss H. P. Parker, jr.; F. M. Adams and John E. Jenkins.

BOSTON SATURDAY EVENING
Gazette
ESTABLISHED 1813.

The programme for the second symphony concert was:

Overture, "Melpomene"……. Chadwick
Concerto for violin, in A minor, op. 28 ……………………. Goldmark
Symphonic Poem, "Vysehrad," (No. 1 in the Cyclus "Ma Vlast") Smetana
Symphony No. 2, in C Major, op. 61 ……… ……………… Schumann
Soloist: Mr. Franz Kneisel.

Mr. Gericke received a warm greeting, and from the enthusiasm and spontaneity of the applause that greeted him at every available opportunity, it is evident that he has speedily become a special favorite with the public. The work of the orchestra remained generally at the high mark reached at the first concert; the readings of the overture and symphony were large, broad and dignified, but there was some monotony in the frequency with which pianissimo was followed by fortissimo and vice versa. It was somewhat rare to hear the normal musical tone, and, as the rule the fortissimos were not well prepared, they were sudden, abrupt and sometimes startling.

Mr. Kneisel was greeted with much enthusiasm and he gave a most delightful interpretation of the sonata; it was faultless in taste and exquisite in finish and the charming second movement was given with the sweetest grace and finest feeling. As for the technical side, it goes without saying that the artist showed his consummate mastery of the instrument; his ease suggested that he was almost unconscious of the difficulties his fingers were conquering, and this artistic unobtrusiveness allowed the music lover to devote his entire attention to the music. Mr. Kneisel's fine work was the feature of the programme and he was recalled again and again by the delighted audience. The programe for the third concert is: Goldmark, overture, "Im Fruhling," op. 36; Weber, Aria from "Oberon;" Tschaikowsky, symphony No. 6 (Pathetique); Wagner, Elizabeth's Aria from "Tannhauser;" Liszt, Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 1; soloist, Mme. Gadski.

BROOKLYN LIFE

THE sale of course tickets last Tuesday for the series of ten Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute was in its financial success a gratifying evidence not only of general interest in the series, but of the social character of the prospective audience. The demand for boxes was especially pleasing, empty seats in that part of the Academy so often being the rule. Box B. was taken by Mr. Henry K. Sheldon; Box D., by Miss Mary Benson, of Columbia Heights; Box F., by Mr. George H. Prentiss, of First place; Box H., by Miss Chauncey, of Joralemon street; all for the ten concerts, I believe. Mrs. Andrew Jacobs took Box E. for the afternoon concerts and Box C. for the evening. Among the subscribers for seats for the season were: Mr. Carll H. De Silver, Colonel Robert B. Woodward, Mr. John S. James, Mr. A. Augustus Healy, Mrs. George A. Price, Mr. William L. Van Sinderen, Mr. John E. Tousey, Mr. Benjamin T. Frothingham, Mrs. Henry P. Journeay and Mr. C. Zabriskie.

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, OCT 23, 1898.

Second Symphony Concert.

Mr Franz Kneisel was the soloist at the second symphony concert, and the following program was offered by Mr Gericke: Overture, "Melpomene," Chadwick; concerto for violin in A minor, Goldmark; symphonic poem, "Vysehrad," Smetana; symphony No. 2, in C major, op 61, Schumann. Mr Chadwick's score is dedicated to Mr Gericke. The overture is a composition which has been accredited high praise for its scholarly conception and originality, and the orchestration ranks with the best that the gifted American musician has yet given to the musical world. Mr Gericke's treatment of the work was in the heartiest sympathy with the ideas of the composer, and an effective interpretation was the result. The forceful staccato chords following the introduction possibly might have been smoother, but the similar fortissimo in the finale was flawless. In the fantasie the brasses were in excellent form, and the subsequent crescendo and diminuendo was a splendid example of harmonious team work, each contingent preserving its proper relations with the other parts of the orchestra.

In the second and third movements of the Goldmark concerto for violin and orchestra Mr Kneisel acquitted himself admirably. The solo part in the first movement was correctly played, but appeared to be lacking in breadth and tonal force to be thoroughly satisfactory. The beautiful melodic figurations in the second movement were artistically developed by Mr Kneisel, and his tones were as liquid and pure as the violin is capable of giving forth. In fact Mr Kniesel seems invariably true to pitch, no matter what the finger difficulties are, and in the brilliant third movement his dance themes and long extended coda were each perfect in tonality. He was tumultuously applauded, returning several times to the platform to bow acknowledgments.

Smetana's symphonic poem, "Vysehrad," was given in the most passionate manner, but not in a hurry-skurry style. The scenes of carnage were stirringly depicted and the sad refrain of the finale, with the joyless song of the singer-prince was notably impressive and mournful. The Schumann symphony was splendidly interpreted, Mr Gericke securing the Schumannesque effects without undue accentuation and contrasts. In the second part the high quality of the violin body was made conspicuous by the unison work, and special mention is due the whole orchestra for the magnificent ensemble preserved in the finale.

Mme Gadski will be the soloist this week. The program will be as follows: Overture, "Im Fruhling," op. 36, Goldmark; aria from "Oberon," Weber; symphony No. 6 (Pathetique), Tschaikowsky; Elizabeth's aria from "Tannhauser," Wagner; Hungarian rhapsody, No. 1, Liszt.

—Among those noticed in the audience on the opening of the symphony concerts were Mr and Mrs Henry L. Higginson, Mr Alexander Higginson, Miss Rosamund Tudor, Mr and Mrs Robert G. Shaw 2d, Dr William Sturgis Bigelow, Mr William P. Blake, Miss Annie Blake, Mr Wallace Goodrich, Mr and Mrs Alexander Steinert, Prof Horatio W. Parker, Prof Samuel Sanford, Prof. Royce of Harvard, Mr T. Russell Sullivan, Mrs J. G. Blake, Mr Henry Burnett, Mrs John L. Gardner, Mr Alexander, Mr George Proctor, Mr Augusto Rotoli, Mr and Mrs B. J. Lang, Miss Margaret Ruthven Lang, Mr and Mrs Arthur Foote, Mr Robert Cushing, Miss Cushing, Miss Chandler, Mr and Mrs Charles R. Adams, Mr and Mrs George Goddard, Mrs Ogden Codman and family, Mr Benjamin Crowninshield, Mr W. S. Blake, Mr and Mrs George W. Chadwick, Mr and Mrs W. L. Whitney, Mr Carl Baerman, Mr Richard Heard, Mr and Mrs William F. Apthorp, Mr Allen A. Brown, Mr Henry W. Swift, Mr and Mrs Charles R. Merse, Dr Edwin Jack, Miss Louise Rohwagen, Mr S. Thorndike Lathrop, Dr and Mrs J. W. Farlow, Mr and Mrs S. Parkman Blake, Miss Blake, Mr Carl Faelten, Mr and Mrs Richard H. Dana, Mr Charles Warren and Mr H. G. Tucker.

OBSCURED TEXT

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

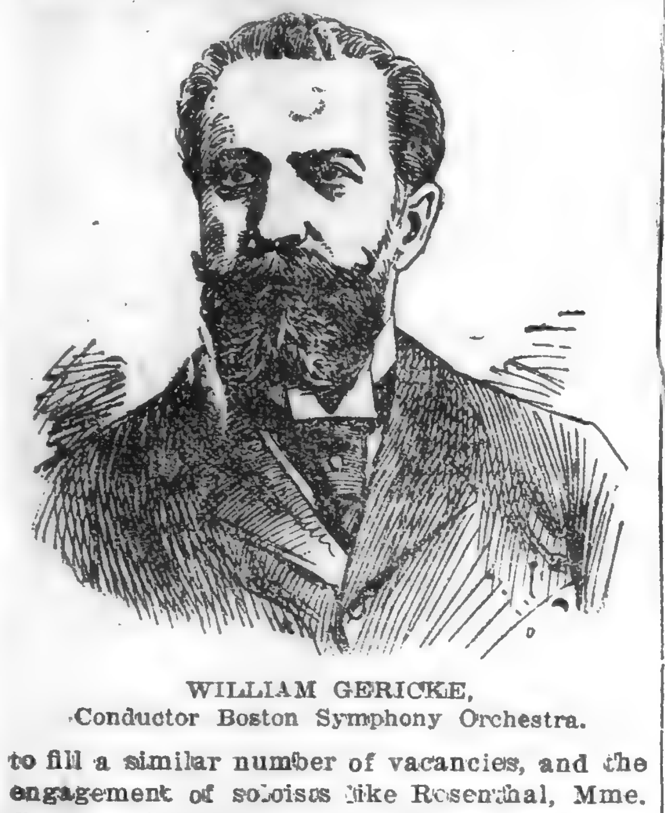
Eagle — Oct. 16

Boston Orchestra Will Give Ten Performances in Brooklyn.

FIRST ONE TO BE HELD NOV. 11.

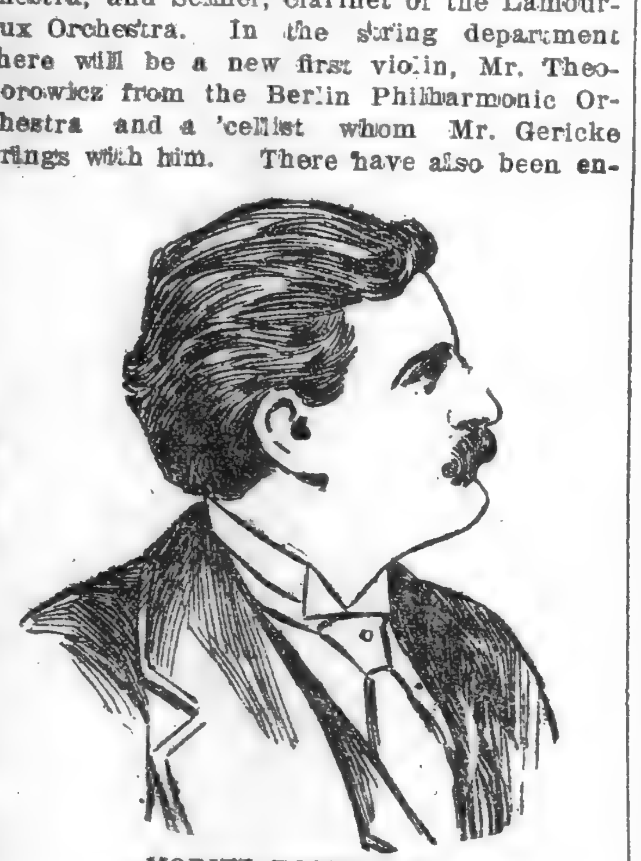
Some Changes in the Personnel of the Orchestra, Owing to the Drowning of Three of the Members — Something of Rosenthal, Who Arrives Early in the Week and of Lady Halle.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the season in the Academy of Music on November 11 and 12, with two concerts, conducted by Mr. Gericke and employing Moriz Rosenthal as the soloist. Every indication points to the conclusion that the season inaugurated will be memorable in the annals of the orchestra. Mr. Gericke's return, the strengthening of the band by nine new players to fill a similar number of vacancies, and the engagement of soloists like Rosenthal, Mme. Carreno, Lady Halle and Willy Burmester, may all be accepted as favorable auguries.



WILLIAM GERICKE,
Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.

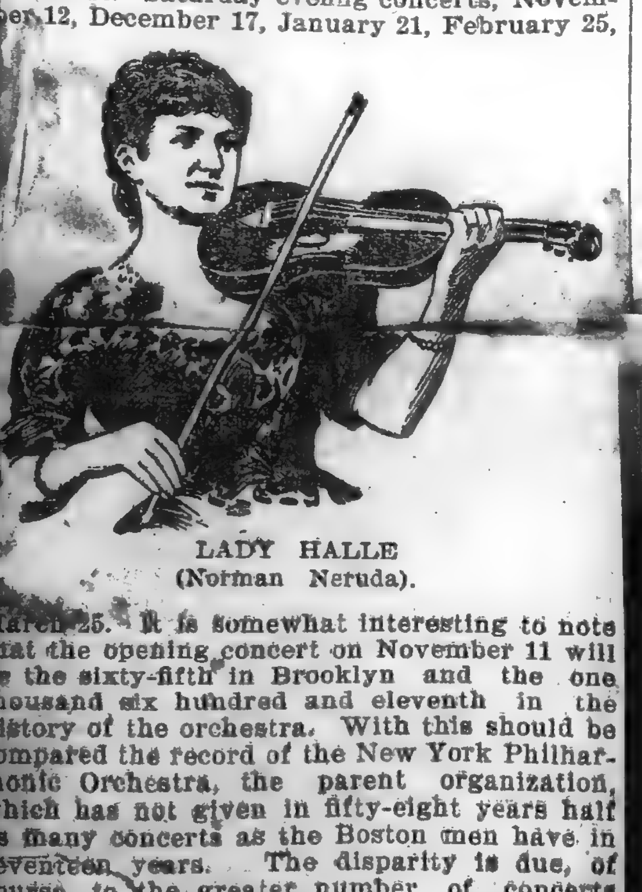
One most potent factor in the continued success of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been the integrity of its personnel, and over one-half the members of the orchestra in 1889, when Mr. Gericke left, will welcome his return to the conductor's desk. The present season will witness a few changes in the body of the orchestra. Three of its most efficient members were drowned in the frightful disaster to the French line steamer last July. To take their places and to fill vacancies caused by other changes, there have been engaged Maquarre, flute of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe of the Colonne Orchestra, and Selmer, clarinet of the Lamoureux Orchestra. In the string department there will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz from the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra and a 'cellist whom Mr. Gericke brings with him. There have also been engaged Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rettberg, tympani of the New York Symphony Orchestra, making up with the others a full complement of eighty-seven musicians.



MORITZ ROSENTHAL.

Conductor Gericke has not yet sent on his Brooklyn programmes, but those recently issued in Boston show a wide and generous selection of works and a recognition of composers of almost every school. A point specially urged in Gericke's favor by his admirers in his sincere and faithful conception of master works. Whether a composition is by Beethoven or Brahms, Mozart or Schumann, this leader always brings out the meaning the composer meant to have brought out and never intrudes sensational effects of his own. Says a representative Bostonian who is well qualified to speak: "Since Mr. Gericke left the orchestra we have never had a performance which fell to the level of mediocrity, while the great majority wel admirable, enjoyable and often beyond reproach. But it is equally noteworthy that for steadfast loyalty to a high ideal Wilhelm Gericke stands facile princeps among his fellow conductors."

The ten concerts in Brooklyn will be on the following dates: Friday matinees, November 11, December 16, January 20, February 24, March 24. Saturday evenng concerts, November 12, December 17, January 21, February 25, March 25. It is somewhat interesting to note that the opening concert on November 11 will be the sixty-fifth in Brooklyn and the one thousand six hundred and eleventh in the history of the orchestra. With this should be compared the record of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, the parent organization, which has not given in fifty-eight years half as many concerts as the Boston men have in seventeen years. The disparity is due, of course, to the greater number of concerts given each year by the latter organization. Recent ticket sales in Boston and across the East River would indicate that the public taste had been whetted rather than dulled by the frequent opportunity to hear a sterling, progressive orchestra.



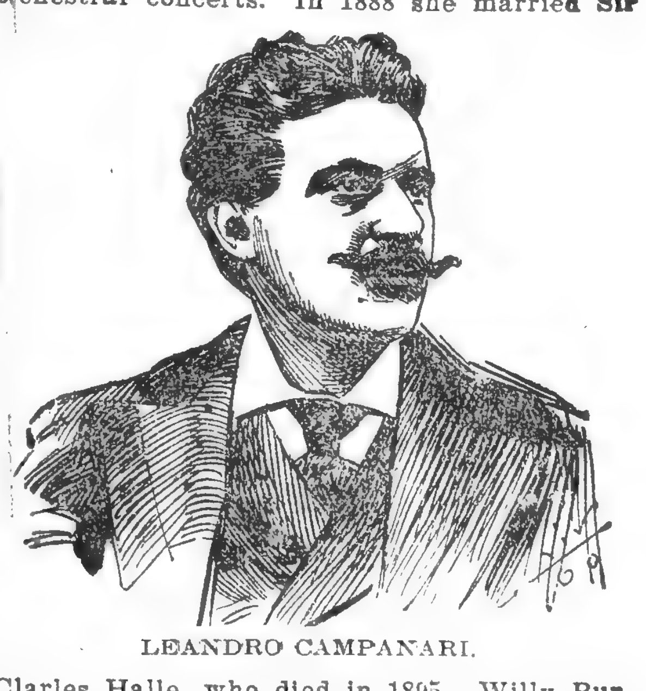
LADY HALLE
(Norman Neruda).

MME. TERESA CARRENO.

Biographical material concerning the artists who will play with the orchestra is abundant. Selection will be made of that bearing on newcomers, or virtuosi of world-wide preëminence, like Rosenthal. In a recent sketch of the latter artist, Rosenthal is spoken of as "the great Roumanian pianist," and is cited as an instance of the endurance of the child prodigy. Beginning his musical education at the age of 4, the turning point of the boy's career came when, in his 10th year, he walked all the way from Lemberg to Vienna to call upon Joseffy and gravely consult with him about his own future. Joseffy good naturedly took the boy in hand and taught him piano-forte, while at the same time young Rosenthal was pursuing a philosophical and literary course in the Gymnasium and University of Vienna. His winning of the mastership of arts and his keen interest in the lectures of Zimmerman, Brentano and Hanslick revealed a mind ambitious of general cultivation as well as of pianistic excellence. A secret of Rosenthal's continued progress along the lines of his art has been has capacity for unflagging toil. "He spends a great deal of time in Vienna and at Ischl," says an observer, "but it is at his charming little home at Abazzio, near Trieste, that one sees him at his best. There he lives in seclusion, with his beloved piano, and spends from eight to ten hours daily in practice. He is an early riser, and after taking his matutinal plunge he immediately proceeds to the instrument. Seated in a comfortable chair, he receives visitors, chats and transacts his business without even allowing his finger to wander away from the keyboard. It is a difficult matter sometimes to convince him that there is such a thing as food and that he must stop long enough to eat."

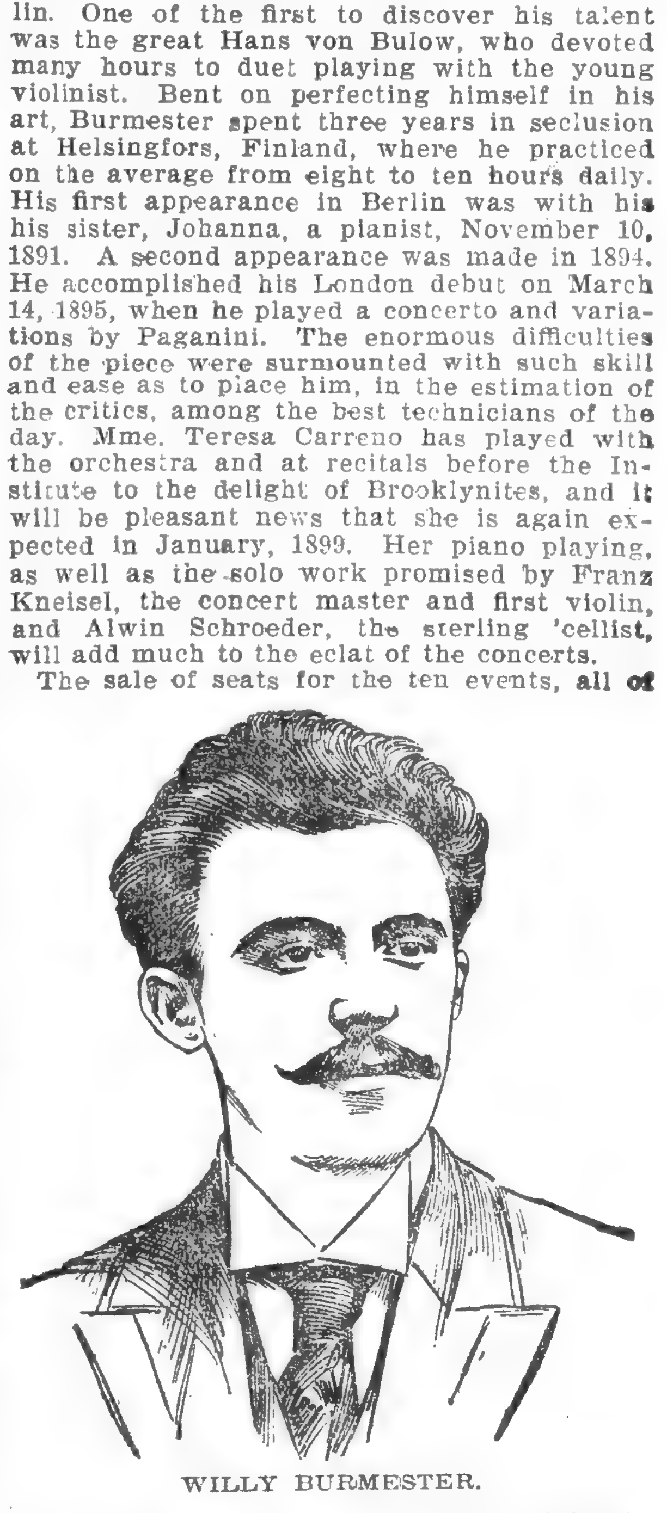
Now that Rosenthal has learned to speak English quite fluently—the result of numerous professional visits to London—he will enjoy his present trip to America much more than his previous ones. He was expected to sail on the Kaiser Friedrich on Wednesday and is therefore due in this city early in the week. After a few days' rest he will make his debut in Manhattan and will thence proceed to Boston for a number of concerts, returning to complete a large eastern and western circuit, California and Mexico being included in his widely extended tour.

Of the new artists Lady Halle, the violinist, has long been a favorite in the musical circles of the English capital. Wilma Maria Franciska Neruda was her maiden name and she was born at Brunn March 29, 1839, her father being a church organist. She first studied under Jansa and at the age of 7 appeared in public with her sister Amalie, a pianiste, in Vienna. With their father and their brother, a 'cellist, the child musicians gave a concert in German and appeared in 1849 in London. Wilma Neruda played in Paris in 1864 and married there Ludwig Normann (1831-1885), a Swedish conductor. Separated from him in 1869, she made London her home, appearing there in many chamber and orchestral concerts. In 1888 she married Sir Clarles Halle, who died in 1895. Willy Burmister is another artist who is very popular in London. He was born in Brahms, City of Hamburg, in 1869, and was first taught by his father, studying later under Joachim at Berlin. One of the first to discover his talent was the great Hans von Bulow, who devoted many hours to duet playing with the young violinist. Bent on perfecting himself in his art, Burmester spent three years in seclusion at Helsingfors, Finland, where he practiced on the average from eight to ten hours daily. His first appearance in Berlin was with his his sister, Johanna, a pianist, November 10, 1891. A second appearance was made in 1894. He accomplished his London debut on March 14, 1895, when he played a concerto and variations by Paganini. The enormous difficulties of the piece were surmounted with such skill and ease as to place him, in the estimation of the critics, among the best technicians of the day. Mme. Teresa Carreno has played with the orchestra and at recitals before the Institute to the delight of Brooklynites, and it will be pleasant news that she is again expected in January, 1899. Her piano playing, as well as the solo work promised by Franz Kneisel, the concert master and first violin, and Alwin Schroeder, the sterling 'cellist, will add much to the eclat of the concerts.



LEANDRO CAMPANARI.

The sale of seats for the ten events, all of which will be held in the Academy of Music, will open at 174 Montague street on Tuesday evening next, and will be continued at Chandler's music store and the office of the Institute, 502 Fulton street. A limited number of students' tickets will be sold at the reduced rate of $2 for the five matinee concerts. Application should be made [illegible] October 22 to October 29, inclu[illegible]



WILLY BURMESTER.

[36]

THE SYMPHONY SEAT SALE.

Eagle — Oct. 17

Prominent People Who Purchased Course Tickets for the Orchestral Concerts.

The sale of course tickets for the afternoon and evening concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the Academy of Music, took place in the Art Building at 8 o'clock yesterday afternoon. A small army of messenger boys headed the line, representing those patrons of the concerts who were desirous of getting the pick of the house. Some of the little fellows had dangled their legs over the settees in the hallway since 7 o'clock in the morning, and other recruits had dropped in through the day. After the messengers had been provided for came the great mass of ordinary folk, members of the Institute and admirers of the orchestra, whose desire to hear the concerts had been whetted by the announcement that Wilhelm Gericke was to lead. There was an unusual demand for boxes, and it was evident that society would take a keen interest in the concerts. Henry K. Sheldon of Columbia heights rented Box B for all of the ten concerts; Miss Mary Benson, also of Columbia heights, rented Box D, afternoon and evening. Mrs. Andrew Jacobs of Amity street took Box E for the matinees and Box G for the evening events. George H. Prentice of First place took Box F, and Miss Chauncey of Joralemon street took Box H. The total receipts aggregated $2,502.50, an amount nearly equal to the banner sale of four years ago, when Melba and other celebrated vocalists were announced to appear. The list of subscribers includes many well known names, and is as folllows:

John S. James, E. H. Kidder, Benjamin T. Frothingham, J. S. Frothingham, J. Luck, Mrs. Slack, H. F. Noyes, Mrs. Edwin Beers, Mrs. S. B. Chandler, Sarah S. Dickinson, J. H. Bates, C. Zabriskie, Mrs. M. G. Jeffreys, Frank Reynolds, J. S. Connell, S. R. Probasco, N. J. Bishoprick, L. E. Berger, Lowell M. Palmer, Thomas Potts, Mrs. Journeay, T. Perkins, Mrs. Beekman, Mrs. Chauncey, Carll H. De Silver, Colonel Robert B. Woodward, John F. Anderson, Franklin W. Hooper, N. R. Hunt, H. F. Crosby, F. B. Campbell, E. D. Newman, S. A. Osborne, H. A. Jones, James C. Cropsey, C. P. Williamson, A. M. Mansfield, William C. Stimpson, Bryan H. Smith, T. E. Smith, Mrs. John Thallon, Mrs. Samuel L. Nash, Charles A. Sackett, N. H. Hentz, M. J. Morrill, Martin Joost, A. Augustus Healy, A. M. Shaw, N. B. Hoxie, jr.; Mrs. C. F. Iddings, Miss E. S. Hoxie, E. D. Fowler, Adrian Paradis, Arthur G. Stone, Mrs. George H. Stone, Mrs. William L. Smith, Richard P. Bruff, Lucien F. Sullivan, Augusta E. Muehlau, General C. T. Christensen, Mrs. L. H. Buckingham, Miss I. M. Grier, H. C. Bick, William A. Lee, jr.; Washington Hull, Miss M. T. Dickinson, Miss A. Dinsmore, Mrs. J. H. Keep, Miss M. Vidaud, H. N. Congdon, Dr. F. W. Wunderlich, Dr. T. R. French, James N. Brown, Mrs. C. Hawkins, Mrs. D. B. Lester, Mrs. George A. Price, Mrs. S. G. Day, D. H. Prentice, Mrs. D. Sanborn, C. R. Bangs, Frederick Rose, Dr. E. H. Squibb, A. I. Ormsbee, Mrs. W. A. Ross, M. Rushmore, Mrs. K. M. Wiley, I. A. Lewis, Miss E. B. Estes, Dr. A. T. Bristow, E. C. Platt, John Pills, Milton J. Platt, Albert L. Nash, Mrs. W. S. Shrigley, Otto A. Draudt, Frederick Ilgen, Mrs. John D. Moll, William P. Sullivan, Miss G. Hall, Principal W. T. B. S. Imlay, Charles F. Garlichs, E. P. Van Nadroff, Miss F. E. Rogers, A. T. Brombacher, P. Densmore, Miss McWilliams, T. J. Warburton, Dr. H. W. Skerry, William L. Van Sinderan, H. F. Swift, Miss Jean Sinclair, Walter S. Carter, D. A. Van Ingen, B. F. Graves, Irving T. Bush, John E. Tousey, James L. Morgan, jr.; Miss Schmid's, Dr. Bonnell, Mrs. G. F. Bulley, Mrs. Stanniford, Mrs. A. Klipstein, H. C. Folzer, jr.; Miss H. P. Parker, jr.; F. M. Adams and John E. Jenkins.

BOSTON SATURDAY EVENING
Gazette
ESTABLISHED 1813.

The programme for the second symphony concert was:

Overture, "Melpomene"……Chadwick
Concerto for violin, in A minor, op. 28……Goldmark
Symphonic Poem, "Vyschrad," (No. 1 in the Cyclus "Ma Vlast") Smetana
Symphony No. 2, in C Major, op. 61……Schumann
Soloist: Mr. Franz Kneisel.

Mr. Gericke received a warm greeting, and from the enthusiasm and spontaneity of the applause that greeted him at every available opportunity, it is evident that he has speedily become a special favorite with the public. The work of the orchestra remained generally at the high mark reached at the first concert; the readings of the overture and symphony were large, broad and dignified, but there was some monotony in the frequency with which pianissimo was followed by fortissimo and vice versa. It was somewhat rare to hear the normal musical tone, and, as the rule the fortissimos were not well prepared, they were sudden, abrupt and sometimes startling.

Mr. Kneisel was greeted with much enthusiasm and he gave a most delightful interpretation of the sonata; it was faultless in taste and exquisite in finish and the charming second movement was given with the sweetest grace and finest feeling. As for the technical side, it goes without saying that the artist showed his consummate mastery of the instrument; his ease suggested that he was almost unconscious of the difficulties his fingers were conquering, and this artistic unobtrusiveness allowed the music lover to devote his entire attention to the music. Mr. Kneisel's fine work was the feature of the programme and he was recalled again and again by the delighted audience. The programme for the third concert is: Goldmark, overture, "Im Fruhling," op. 36; Weber, Aria from "Oberon;" Tschaikowsky, symphony No. 6 (Pathetique); Wagner, Elizabeth's Aria from "Tannhauser;" Liszt, Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 1; soloist, Mme. Gadski.

BROOKLYN LIFE.

THE sale of course tickets last Tuesday for the series of ten Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute was in its financial success a gratifying evidence not only of general interest in the series, but of the social character of the prospective audience. The demand for boxes was especially pleasing, empty seats in that part of the Academy so often being the rule. Box B. was taken by Mr. Henry K. Sheldon; Box D., by Miss Mary Benson, of Columbia Heights; Box F., by Mr. George H. Prentiss, of First place; Box H., by Miss Chauncey, of Joralemon street; all for the ten concerts, I believe. Mrs. Andrew Jacobs took Box E. for the afternoon concerts and Box C. for the evening. Among the subscribers for seats for the season were: Mr. Carll H. De Silver, Colonel Robert B. Woodward, Mr. John S. James, Mr. A. Augustus Healy, Mrs. George A. Price, Mr. William L. Van Sinderen, Mr. John E. Tousey, Mr. Benjamin T. Frothingham, Mrs. Henry P. Journeay and Mr. C. Zabriskie.

Boston Sunday Globe.
SUNDAY, OCT 23, 1898.

Second Symphony Concert.

Mr Franz Kneisel was the soloist at the second symphony concert, and the following program was offered by Mr Gericke: Overture, "Melpomene," Chadwick; concerto for violin in A minor, Goldmark; symphonic poem, "Vyseh-rad," Smetana; symphony No. 2, in C major, op 61, Schumann. Mr Chadwick's score is dedicated to Mr Gericke. The overture is a composition which has been accredited high praise for its scholarly conception and originality, and the orchestration ranks with the best that the gifted American musician has yet given to the musical world. Mr Gericke's treatment of the work was in the heartiest sympathy with the ideas of the composer, and an effective interpretation was the result. The forceful staccato chords following the introduction possibly might have been smoother, but the similar fortissimo in the finale was flawless. In the fantasie the brasses were in excellent form, and the subsequent crescendo and diminuendo was a splendid example of harmonious team work, each contingent preserving its proper relations with the other parts of the orchestra.

In the second and third movements of the Goldmark concerto for violin and orchestra Mr Kneisel acquitted himself admirably. The solo part in the first movement was correctly played, but appeared to be lacking in breadth and tonal force to be thoroughly satisfactory. The beautiful melodic figurations in the second movement were artistically developed by Mr Kneisel, and his tones were as liquid and pure as the violin is capable of giving forth. In fact Mr Kneisel seems invariably true to pitch, no matter what the finger difficulties are, and in the brilliant third movement his dance themes and long extended coda were each perfect in tonality. He was tumultuously applauded, returning several times to bow acknowledgments.

Smetana's symphonic poem, "Vyseh-rad," was given in the most passionate manner, but not in a hurry-skurry style. The scenes of carnage were stirringly depicted and the sad refrain of the finale, with the joyless song of the singer-prince was notably impressive and mournful. The Schumann symphony was splendidly interpreted, Mr Gericke securing the Schumannesque effects without undue accentuation and contrasts. In the second part the high quality of the violin body was made conspicuous by the unison work, and special mention is due the whole orchestra for the magnificent ensemble preserved in the finale.

Mme Gadski will be the soloist this week. The program will be as follows: Overture, "Im Fruhling," op. 36, Goldmark; aria from "Oberon," Weber; symphony No. 6 (Pathetique), Tschaikowsky; Elizabeth's aria from "Tannhauser," Wagner; Hungarian rhapsody, No. 1, Liszt.

—Among those noticed in the audience on the opening of the symphony concerts were Mr and Mrs Henry L. Higginson, Mr Alexander Higginson, Miss Rosamund Tudor, Mr and Mrs Robert G. Shaw 2d, Dr William Sturgis Bigelow, Mr William P. Blake, Miss Annie Blake, Mr Wallace Goodrich, Mr and Mrs Alexander Steinert, Prof Horatio W. Parker, Prof Samuel Sanford, Prof Royce of Harvard, Mr T. Russell Sullivan, Mrs J. G. Blake, Mr Henry Burnett, Mrs John L. Gardner, Mr Alexander, Mr George Proctor, Mr Augusto Rotoli, Mr and Mrs B. J. Lang, Miss Margaret Ruthven Lang, Mr and Mrs Arthur Foote, Mr Robert Cushing, Miss Cushing, Miss Chandler, Mr and Mrs Charles R. Adams, Mr and Mrs George Goddard, Mrs Ogden Codman and family, Mr Benjamin Crowninshield, Mr W. S. Blake, Mr and Mrs George W. Chadwick, Mr and Mrs W. L. Whitney, Mr Carl Baerman, Mr Richard Heard, Mr and Mrs William F. Apthorp, Mr Allen A. Brown, Mr Henry W. Swift, Mr and Mrs Charles R. Morse, Dr Edwin Jack, Miss Louise Rollwagen, Mr S. Thorndike Lathrop, Dr and Mrs J. W. Farlow, Mr and Mrs S. Parkman Blake, Miss Blake, Mr Carl Faelten, Mr and Mrs Richard H. Dana, Mr Charles Warren and Mr H. G. Tucker.

OBSCURED TEXT

THE SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

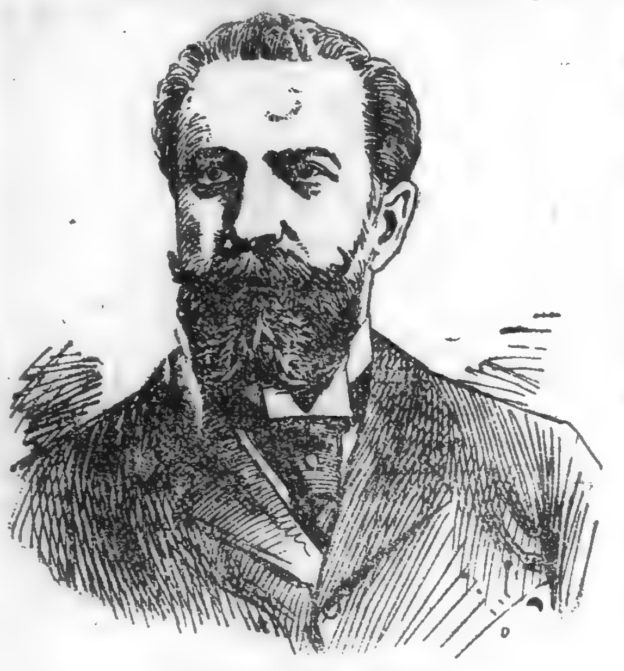
Eagle —— Oct. 16

Boston Orchestra Will Give Ten Performances in Brooklyn.

FIRST ONE TO BE HELD NOV. 11.

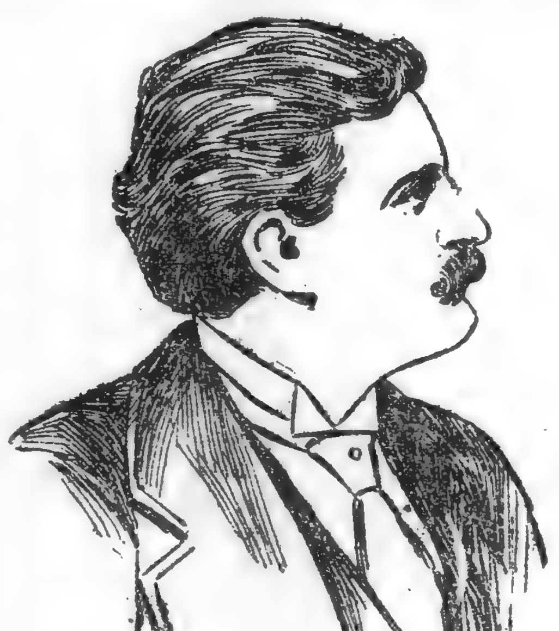
Some Changes in the Personnel of the Orchestra, Owing to the Drowning of Three of the Members — Something of Rosenthal, Who Arrives Early in the Week and of Lady Halle.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the season in the Academy of Music on November 11 and 12, with two concerts, conducted by Mr. Gericke and employing Moriz Rosenthal as the soloist. Every indication points to the conclusion that the season inaugurated will be memorable in the annals of the orchestra. Mr. Gericke's return, the strengthening of the band by nine new players to fill a similar number of vacancies, and the engagement of soloists like Rosenthal, Mme. Carreno, Lady Halle and Willy Burmester, may all be accepted as favorable auguries.



WILLIAM GERICKE,
Conductor Boston Symphony Orchestra.

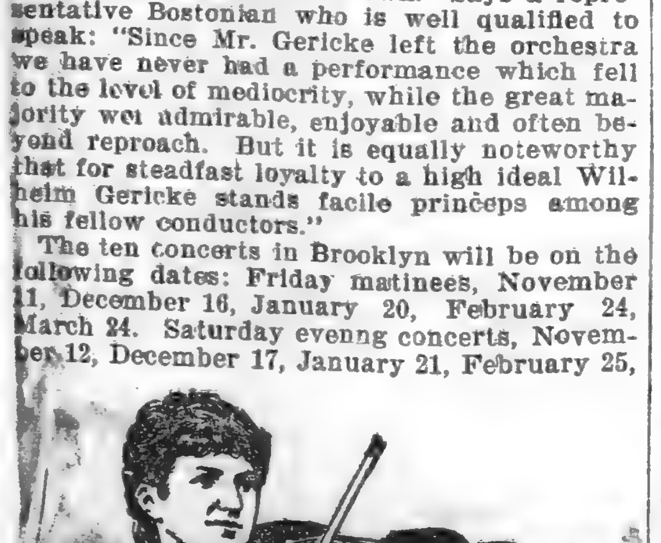
One most potent factor in the continued success of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has been the integrity of its personnel, and over one-half the members of the orchestra in 1889, when Mr. Gericke left, will welcome his return to the conductor's desk. The present season will witness a few changes in the body of the orchestra. Three of its most efficient members were drowned in the frightful disaster to the French line steamer last July. To take their places and to fill vacancies caused by other changes, there have been engaged Maquarre, flute of the Lamoureux Orchestra; Longy, oboe of the Colonne Orchestra, and Selmer, clarinet of the Lamoureux Orchestra. In the string department there will be a new first violin, Mr. Theodorowicz from the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra and a 'cellist whom Mr. Gericke brings with him. There have also been engaged Kloepfel, trumpet; Mausebach, trombone; Thomae, tuba, and Rottberg, tympani of the New York Symphony Orchestra, making up with the others a full complement of eighty-seven musicians.



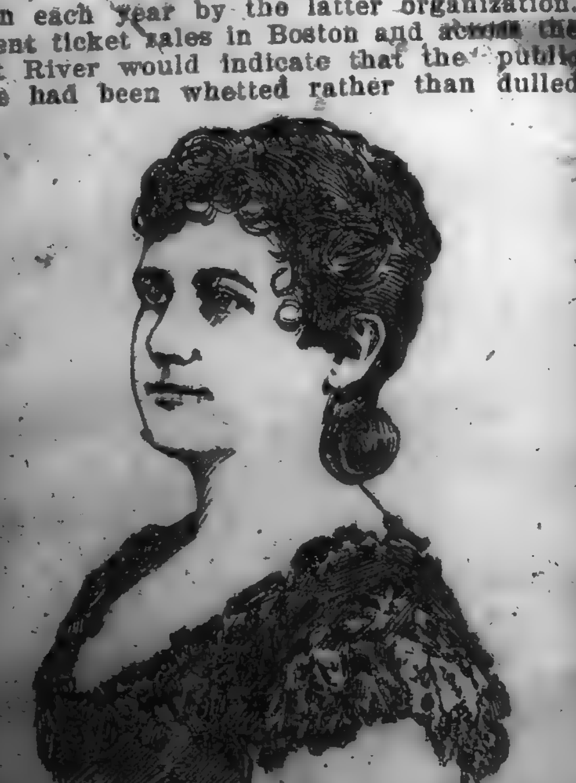
MORITZ ROSENTHAL.

Conductor Gericke has not yet sent on his Brooklyn programmes, but those recently issued in Boston show a wide and generous selection of works and a recognition of composers of almost every school. A point specially urged in Gericke's favor by his admirers in his sincere and faithful conception of master works. Whether a composition is by Beethoven or Brahms, Mozart or Schumann, this leader always brings out the meaning the composer meant to have brought out and never intrudes sensational effects of his own. Says a representative Bostonian who is well qualified to speak: "Since Mr. Gericke left the orchestra we have never had a performance which fell to the level of mediocrity, while the great majority wet admirable, enjoyable and often beyond reproach. But it is equally noteworthy that for steadfast loyalty to a high ideal Wilhelm Gericke stands facile princeps among his fellow conductors."

The ten concerts in Brooklyn will be on the following dates: Friday matinees, November 11, December 16, January 20, February 24, March 24. Saturday evenng concerts, November 12, December 17, January 21, February 25, March 25. It is somewhat interesting to note that the opening concert on November 11 will be the sixty-fifth in Brooklyn and the one thousand six hundred and eleventh in the history of the orchestra. With this should be compared the record of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, the parent organization, which has not given in fifty-eight years half as many concerts as the Boston men have in seventeen years. The disparity is due, of course, to the greater number of concerts given each year by the latter organization. Recent ticket sales in Boston and across the East River would indicate that the public taste had been whetted rather than dulled by the frequent opportunity to hear a sterling, progressive orchestra.



LADY HALLE
(Norman Neruda).

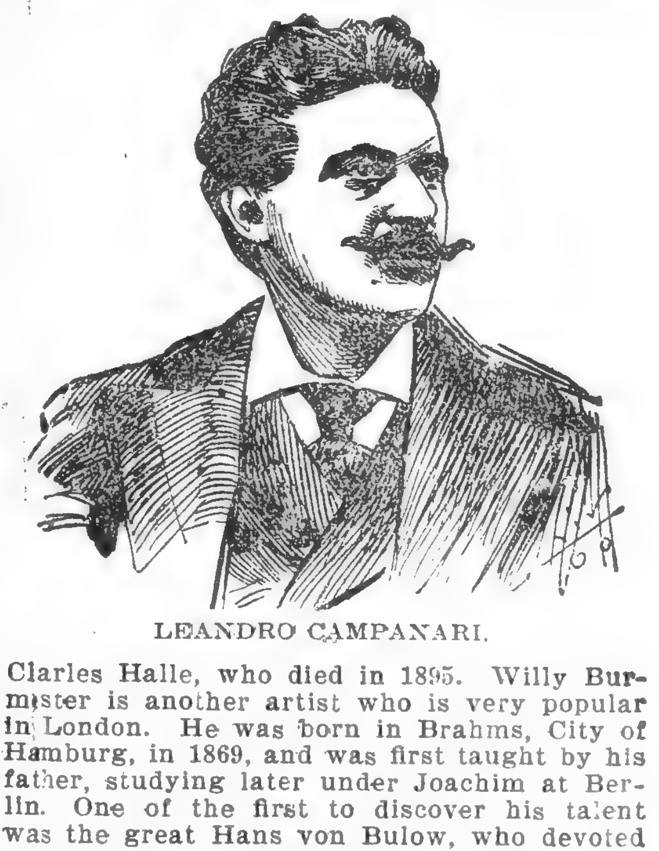


MME. TERESA CARRENO.

Biographical material concerning the artists who will play with the orchestra is abundant. Selection will be made of that bearing on newcomers or virtuosi of world-wide preeminence, like Rosenthal. In a recent sketch of the latter artist, Rosenthal is spoken of as "the great Roumanian pianist," and is cited as an instance of the endurance of the child prodigy. Beginning his musical education at the age of 4, the turning point of the boy's career came when, in his 10th year, he walked all the way from Lemberg to Vienna to call upon Joseffy and gravely consult with him about his own future. Joseffy good naturedly took the boy in hand and taught him piano-forte, while at the same time young Rosenthal was pursuing a philosophical and literary course in the Gymnasium and University of Vienna. His winning of the mastership of arts and his keen interest in the lectures of Zimmerman, Brentano and Hanslick revealed a mind ambitious of general cultivation as well as of pianistic excellence. A secret of Rosenthal's continued progress along the lines of his art has been has capacity for unflagging toil. "He spends a great deal of time in Vienna and at Ischl," says an observer, "but it is at his charming little home at Abazzio, near Trieste, that one sees him at his best. There he lives in seclusion, with his beloved piano, and spends from eight to ten hours daily in practice. He is an early riser, and after taking his matutinal plunge he immediately proceeds to the instrument. Seated in a comfortable chair, he receives visitors, chats and transacts his business without even allowing his finger to wander away from the keyboard. It is a difficult matter sometimes to convince him that there is such a thing as food and that he must stop long enough to eat."

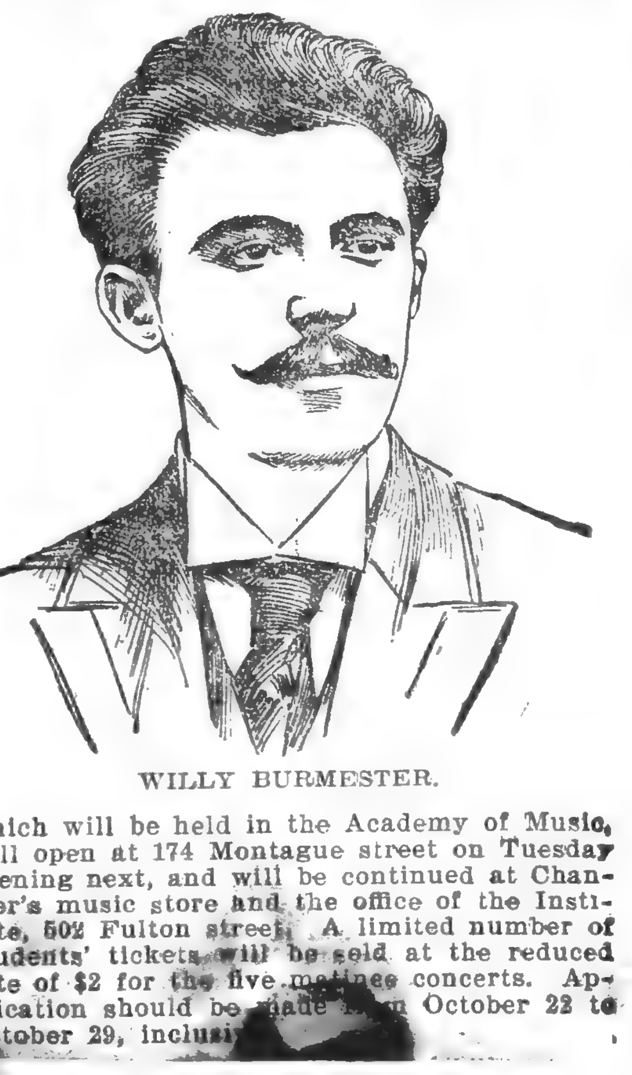
Now that Rosenthal has learned to speak English quite fluently—the result of numerous professional visits to London—he will enjoy his present trip to America much more than his previous ones. He was expected to sail on the Kaiser Friedrich on Wednesday and is therefore due in this city early in the week. After a few days' rest he will make his debut in Manhattan and will thence proceed to Boston for a number of concerts, returning to complete a large eastern and western circuit, California and Mexico being included in his widely extended tour.

Of the new artists Lady Halle, the violinist, has long been a favorite in the musical circles of the English capital. Wilma Maria Franciska Neruda was her maiden name and she was born at Brunn March 29, 1839, her father being a church organist. She first studied under Jansa and at the age of 7 appeared in public with her sister Amalie, a pianiste, in Vienna. With their father and their brother, a 'cellist, the child musicians gave a concert in German and appeared in 1849 in London. Wilma Neruda played in Paris in 1864 and married there Ludwig Normann (1831-1885), a Swedish conductor. Separated from him in 1869, she made London her home, appearing there in many chamber and orchestral concerts. In 1888 she married Sir Clarles Halle, who died in 1895. Willy Burmister is another artist who is very popular in London. He was born in Brahms, City of Hamburg, in 1869, and was first taught by his father, studying later under Joachim at Berlin. One of the first to discover his talent was the great Hans von Bulow, who devoted many hours to duet playing with the young violinist. Bent on perfecting himself in his art, Burmester spent three years in seclusion at Helsingfors, Finland, where he practiced on the average from eight to ten hours daily. His first appearance in Berlin was with his his sister, Johanna, a pianist, November 10, 1891. A second appearance was made in 1894. He accomplished his London debut on March 14, 1895, when he played a concerto and variations by Paganini. The enormous difficulties of the piece were surmounted with such skill and ease as to place him, in the estimation of the critics, among the best technicians of the day. Mme. Teresa Carreno has played with the orchestra and at recitals before the Institute to the delight of Brooklynites, and it will be pleasant news that she is again expected in January, 1899. Her piano playing, as well as the solo work promised by Franz Kneisel, the concert master and first violin, and Alwin Schroeder, the sterling 'cellist, will add much to the eclat of the concerts.



LEANDRO CAMPANARI.

The sale of seats for the ten events, all of which will be held in the Academy of Music, will open at 174 Montague street on Tuesday evening next, and will be continued at Chandler's music store and the office of the Institute, 502 Fulton street. A limited number of students' tickets will be sold at the reduced rate of $2 for the five matinee concerts. Application should be made [illegible] October 22 to October 29, inclusi[illegible]



WILLY BURMESTER.

THE SYMPHONY SEAT SALE.

Eagle —— Oct. 14

Prominent People Who Purchased Course Tickets for the Orchestral Concerts.

The sale of course tickets for the afternoon and evening concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, in the Academy of Music, took place in the Art Building at 8 o'clock yesterday afternoon. A small army of messenger boys headed the line, representing those patrons of the concerts who were desirous of getting the pick of the house. Some of the little fellows had dangled their legs over the settees in the hallway since 7 o'clock in the morning, and other recruits had dropped in through the day. After the messengers had been provided for came the great mass of ordinary folk, members of the Institute and admirers of the orchestra, whose desire to hear the concerts had been whetted by the announcement that Wilhelm Gericke was to lead. There was an unusual demand for boxes, and it was evident that society would take a keen interest in the concerts. Henry K. Sheldon of Columbia heights rented Box B for all of the ten concerts; Miss Mary Benson, also of Columbia heights, rented Box D, afternoon and evening. Mrs. Andrew Jacobs of Amity street took Box E for the matinees and Box G for the evening events. George H. Prentice of First place took Box F, and Miss Chauncey of Joralemon street took Box H. The total receipts aggregated $2,502.50, an amount nearly equal to the banner sale of four years ago, when Melba and other celebrated vocalists were announced to appear. The list of subscribers includes many well known names, and is as folllows:

John S. James, E. H. Kidder, Benjamin T. Frothingham, J. S. Frothingham, J. Luck, Mrs. Slack, H. F. Noyes, Mrs. Edwin Beers, Mrs. S. B. Chandler, Sarah S. Dickinson, J. H. Bates, O. Zabriskie, Mrs. M. G. Jeffreys, Frank Reynolds, J. S. Connell, S. R. Probasco, N. J. Bishoprick, L. E. Berger, Lowell M. Palmer, Thomas Potts, Mrs. Journeay, T. Perkins, Mrs. Beekman, Mrs. Chauncey, Carll H. De Silver, Colonel Robert B. Woodward, John F. Anderson, Franklin W. Hooper, N. R. Hunt, H. F. Crosby, F. B. Campbell, E. D. Newman, S. A. Osborne, H. A. Jones, James C. Cropsey, C. P. Williamson, A. M. Mansfield, William C. Stimpson, Bryan H. Smith, T. E. Smith, Mrs. John Thallon, Mrs. Samuel L. Nash, Charles A. Sackett, N. H. Hentz, M. J. Morrill, Martin Joost, A. Augustus Healy, A. M. Shaw, N. B. Hoxie, jr.; Mrs. C. F. Iddings, Miss E. S. Hoxie, E. D. Fowler, Adrian Paradis, Arthur G. Stone, Mrs. George H. Stone, Mrs. William L. Smith, Richard P. Bruff, Lucien F. Sullivan, Augusta E. Muehlau, General C. T. Christensen, Mrs. L. H. Buckingham, Miss I. M. Grier, H. C. Bick, William A. Lee, jr.; Washington Hull, Miss M. T. Dickinson, Miss A. Dinsmore, Mrs. J. H. Keep, Miss M. Vidaud, H. N. Congdon, Dr. F. W. Wunderlich, Dr. T. R. French, James N. Brown, Mrs. C. Hawkins, Mrs. D. B. Lester, Mrs. George A. Price, Mrs. S. G. Day, D. H. Prentice, Mrs. D. Sanborn, C. R. Bangs, Frederick Rose, Dr. E. H. Squibb, A. I. Ormsbee, Mrs. W. A. Ross, M. Rushmore, Mrs. K. M. Wiley, I. A. Lewis, Miss E. B. Estes, Dr. A. T. Bristow, E. C. Platt, John Pills, Milton J. Platt, Albert L. Nash, Mrs. W. S. Shrigley, Otto A. Draudt, Frederick Ilgen, Mrs. John D. Moll, William P. Sullivan, Miss G. Hall, Principal W. T. B. S. Imlay, Charles F. Garlichs, E. P. Van Nadroff, Miss F. E. Rogers, A. T. Brombacher, P. Densmore, Miss McWilliams, T. J. Warburton, Dr. H. W. Skerry, William L. Van Sinderan, H. F. Swift, Miss Jean Sinclair, Walter S. Carter, D. A. Van Ingen, B. F. Graves, Irving T. Bush, John E. Tousey, James L. Morgan, jr.; Miss Schmids, Dr. Bonnell, Mrs. G. F. Bulley, Mrs. Stanniford, Mrs. A. Klipstein, H. C. Folzer, jr.; Miss H. P. Parker, jr.; F. M. Adams and John E. Jenkins.

BOSTON SATURDAY EVENING Gazette

ESTABLISHED 1813.

The programme for the second symphony concert was:

Overture, "Melpomene"……Chadwick
Concerto for violin, in A minor, op. 28 ……Goldmark
Symphonic Poem, "Vysehrad," (No. 1 in the Cyclus "Ma Vlast") Smetana
Symphony No. 2, in C Major, op. 61 ……Schumann

Soloist: Mr. Franz Kneisel.

Mr. Gericke received a warm greeting, and from the enthusiasm and spontaneity of the applause that greeted him at every available opportunity, it is evident that he has speedily become a special favorite with the public. The work of the orchestra remained generally at the high mark reached at the first concert; the readings of the overture and symphony were large, broad and dignified, but there was some monotony in the frequency with which pianissimo was followed by fortissimo and vice versa. It was somewhat rare to hear the normal musical tone, and, as the rule the fortissimos were not well prepared, they were sudden, abrupt and sometimes startling.

Mr. Kneisel was greeted with much enthusiasm and he gave a most delightful interpretation of the sonata; it was faultless in taste and exquisite in finish and the charming second movement was given with the sweetest grace and finest feeling. As for the technical side, it goes without saying that the artist showed his consummate mastery of the instrument; his ease suggested that he was almost unconscious of the difficulties his fingers were conquering, and this artistic unobtrusiveness allowed the music lover to devote his entire attention to the music. Mr. Kneisel's fine work was the feature of the programme and he was recalled again and again by the delighted audience. The programe for the third concert is: Goldmark, overture, "Im Fruhling," op. 36; Weber, Aria from "Oberon;" Tschaikowsky, symphony No. 6 (Pathetique); Wagner, Elizabeth's Aria from "Tannhauser;" Liszt, Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 1; soloist, Mme. Gadski.

BROOKLYN LIFE.

THE sale of course tickets last Tuesday for the series of ten Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute was in its financial success a gratifying evidence not only of general interest in the series, but of the social character of the prospective audience. The demand for boxes was especially pleasing, empty seats in that part of the Academy so often being the rule. Box B. was taken by Mr. Henry K. Sheldon; Box D., by Miss Mary Benson, of Columbia Heights; Box F., by Mr. George H. Prentiss, of First place; Box H., by Miss Chauncey, of Joralemon street; all for the ten concerts, I believe. Mrs. Andrew Jacobs took Box E. for the afternoon concerts and Box C. for the evening. Among the subscribers for seats for the season were: Mr. Carll H. De Silver, Colonel Robert B. Woodward, Mr. John S. James, Mr. A. Augustus Healy, Mrs. George A. Price, Mr. William L. Van Sinderen, Mr. John E. Tousey, Mr. Benjamin T. Frothingham, Mrs. Henry P. Journeay and Mr. C. Zabriskie.

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, OCT 23, 1898.

Second Symphony Concert.

Mr Franz Kneisel was the soloist at the second symphony concert, and the following program was offered by Mr Gericke: Overture, "Melpomene," Chadwick; concerto for violin in A minor, Goldmark; symphonic poem, "Vysehrad," Smetana; symphony No. 2, in C major, op 61, Schumann. Mr Chadwick's score is dedicated to Mr Gericke. The overture is a composition which has been accredited high praise for its scholarly conception and originality, and the orchestration ranks with the best that the gifted American musician has yet given to the musical world. Mr Gericke's treatment of the work was in the heartiest sympathy with the ideas of the composer, and an effective interpretation was the result. The forceful staccato chords following the introduction possibly might have been smoother, but the similar fortissimo in the finale was flawless. In the fantasie the brasses were in excellent form, and the subsequent crescendo and diminuendo was a splendid example of harmonious team work, each contingent preserving its proper relations with the other parts of the orchestra.

In the second and third movements of the Goldmark concerto for violin and orchestra Mr Kneisel acquitted himself admirably. The solo part in the first movement was correctly played, but appeared to be lacking in breadth and tonal force to be thoroughly satisfactory. The beautiful melodic figurations in the second movement were artistically developed by Mr Kneisel, and his tones were as liquid and pure as the violin is capable of giving forth. In fact Mr Kniesel seems invariably true to pitch, no matter what the finger difficulties are, and in the brilliant third movement his dance themes and long extended coda were each perfect in tonality. He was tumultuously applauded, returning several times to the platform to bow acknowledgments.

Smetana's symphonic poem, "Vysehrad," was given in the most passionate manner, but not in a hurry-skurry style. The scenes of carnage were stirringly depicted and the sad refrain of the finale, with the joyless song of the singer-prince was notably impressive and mournful. The Schumann symphony was splendidly interpreted, Mr Gericke securing the Schumannesque effects without undue accentuation and contrasts. In the second part the high quality of the violin body was made conspicuous by the unison work, and special mention is due the whole orchestra for the magnificent ensemble preserved in the finale.

Mme Gadski will be the soloist this week. The program will be as follows: Overture, "Im Fruhling," op. 36, Goldmark; aria from "Oberon," Weber; symphony No. 6 (Pathetique), Tschaikowsky; Elizabeth's aria from "Tannhauser," Wagner; Hungarian rhapsody, No. 1, Liszt.

—Among those noticed in the audience on the opening of the symphony concerts were Mr and Mrs Henry L. Higginson, Mr Alexander Higginson, Miss Rosamund Tudor, Mr and Mrs Robert G. Shaw 2d, Dr William Sturgis Bigelow, Mr William P. Blake, Miss Annie Blake, Mr Wallace Goodrich, Mr and Mrs Alexander Steinert, Prof Horatio W. Parker, Prof Samuel Sanford, Prof Royce of Harvard, Mr T. Russell Sullivan, Mrs J. G. Blake, Mr Henry Burnett, Mrs John L. Gardner, Mr Alexander, Mr George Proctor, Mr Augusto Rotoli, Mr and Mrs B. J. Lang, Miss Margaret Ruthven Lang, Mr and Mrs Arthur Foote, Mr Robert Cushing, Miss Cushing, Miss Chandler, Mr and Mrs Charles R. Adams, Mr and Mrs George Goddard, Mrs Ogden Codman and family, Mr Benjamin Crowninshield, Mr W. S. Blake, Mr and Mrs George W. Chadwick, Mr and Mrs W. L. Whitney, Mr Carl Baerman, Mr Richard Heard, Mr and Mrs William F. Apthorp, Mr Allen A. Brown, Mr Henry W. Swift, Mr and Mrs Charles R. Morse, Dr Edwin Jack, Miss Louise Rollwagen, Mr S. Thorndike Lathrop, Dr and Mrs J. W. Farlow, Mr and Mrs S. Parkman Blake, Miss Blake, Mr Carl Faelten, Mr and Mrs Richard H. Dana, Mr Charles Warren and Mr H. G. Tucker.

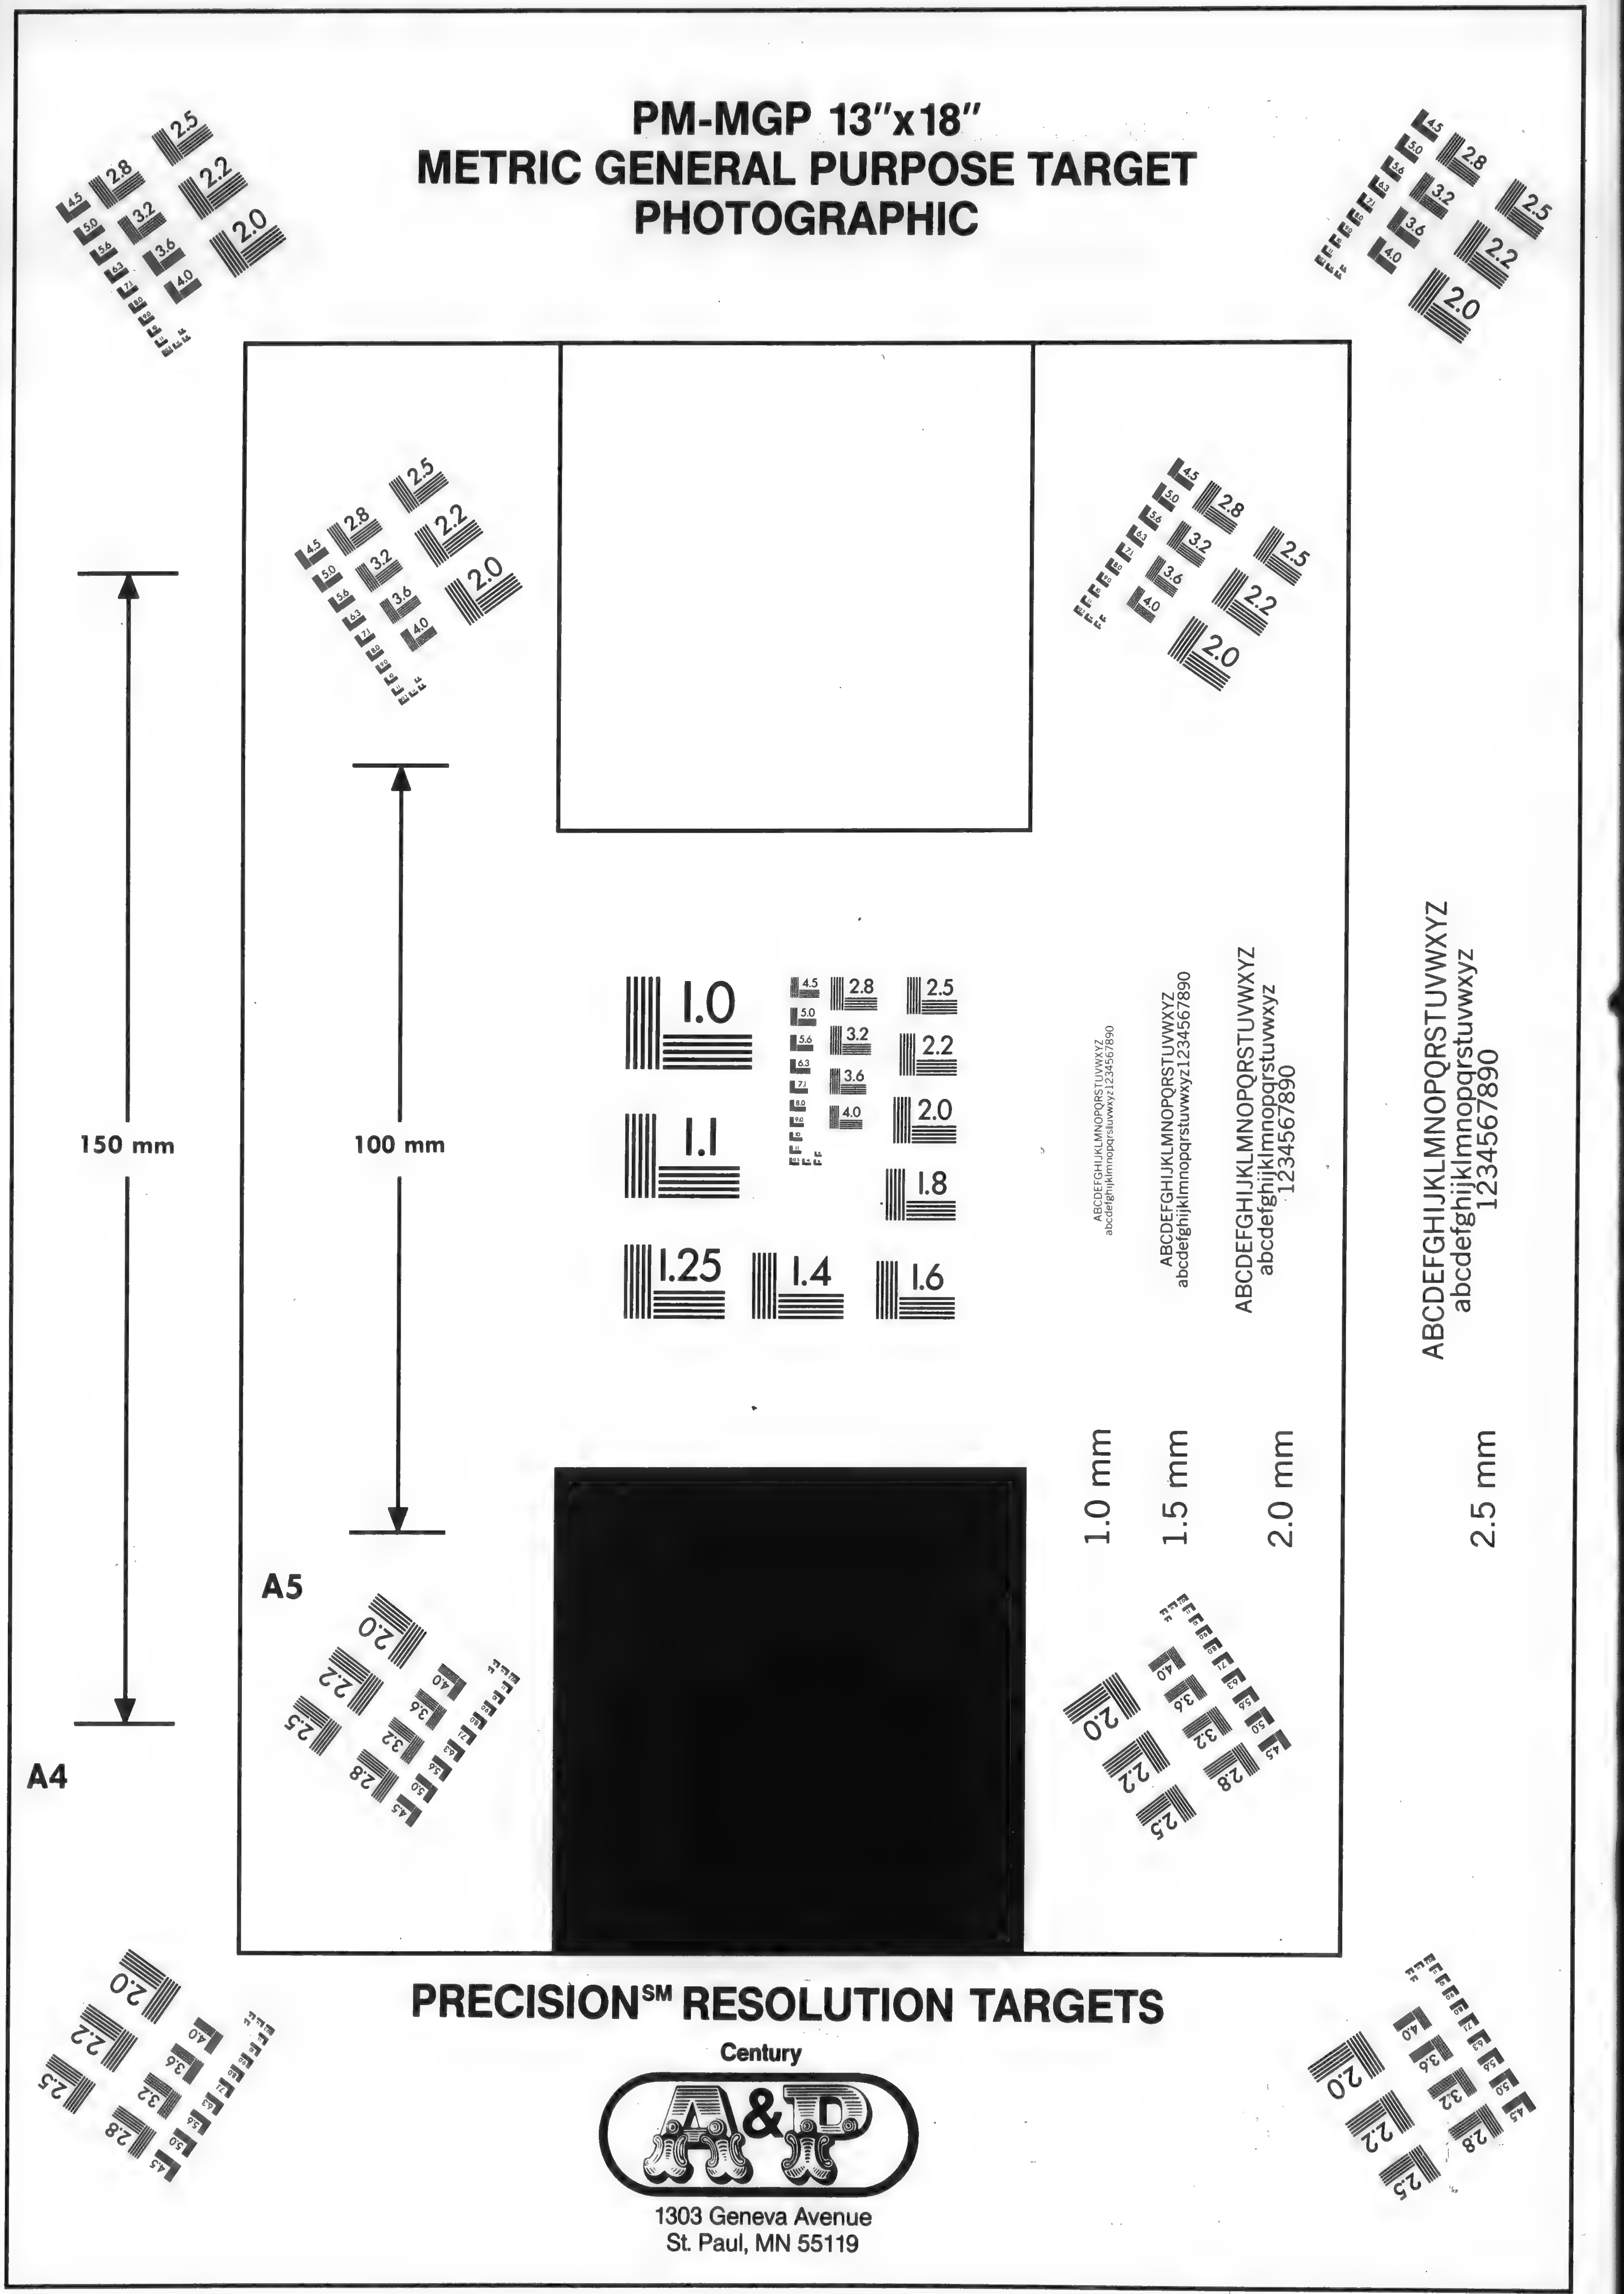
REDUCTION
RATIO
12x

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18" METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET PHOTOGRAPHIC



1.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

2.0 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

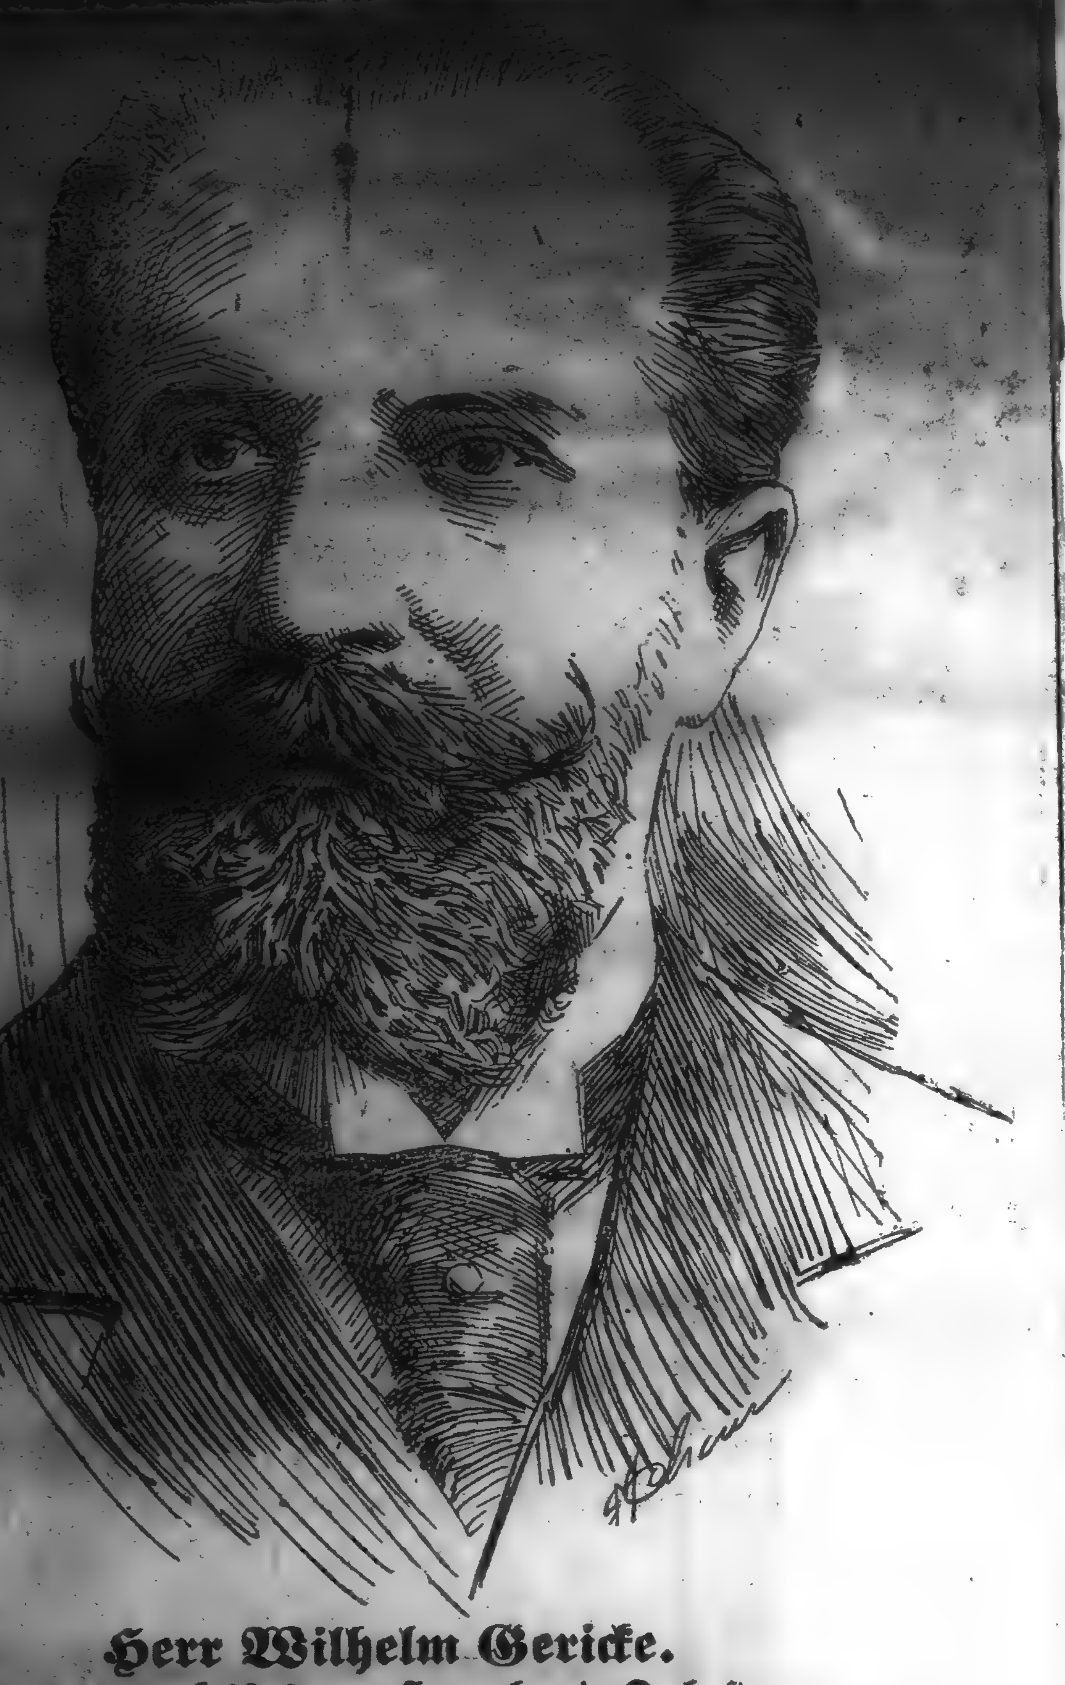
PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century
A&P
1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

Donnerſtag, den 20. [illegible]



Herr Wilhelm Gericke.

Dirigent des „Boſtoner Symphonie-Orcheſters.

[Das obige Bild iſt uns durch die Freundlichkeit des „Bo ſton Herald" überlaſſen worden.]

Der neue geniale Leiter des Symphonie-Orcheſters, Herr Wilhelm Gericke, hat am letzten Freitag nach achtjähriger Pauſe zum erſten Male wieder den Taktſtock vor dem muſikliebenden Auditorium Boſtons in Muſic Hall zur Hand genommen und mit dem Zeichen des Einſatzes zur Euryanthe-Ouvertüre von Weber, ſich wieder wie ehedem einen feſten Platz in den Herzen ſeiner zahlloſen Verehrer und Freunde geſichert. Eigentlich ſollten wir Sonnabend anſtatt Freitag als den wahren offiziellen Tag ſeines Wiedereinzuges nennen. Freitag iſt nur der Tag der General-Probe, während am Sonnabend Abend das eigentliche Konzert ſtattfindet. Zu ihm findet ſich ganz Boſton ein, Reichthum und Toiletten, bezaubernde Damenwelt und muſikgierige Enthuſiaſten, Kenner und Liebhaber für die Gebilde im Reiche der Töne, welche unſer Symphonie-Orcheſter wie kein zweites in Amerika wiedergiebt. Als das Stimmen- und Tongewirre, das Raſcheln und Kniſtern der Programme, das Rauſchen der Damen-Toiletten und der Klang der geſtimmten Inſtrumente abzuſterben begonnen, als die 87 Muſiker in der Erwartung ihres Dirigenten die Inſtrumente bereit zum Spiel in der Hand, und das ganze Auditorium, das Auge voll Intereſſe und Ungeduld auf die Thür gerichtet, aus welcher in der nächſten Minute Herr Gericke auf das Podium treten mußte, da fühlte Jeder, daß ein Moment kommen würde, der dem neuen und doch ſchon an Bekanntſchaft alten Dirigenten ſagen ſollte, daß ihn Boſton und ſeine muſikliebenden Stammgäſte von Herzen willkommen heißen. Und Gericke trat ein, wie er vor acht Jahren geſchieden war. Daſſelbe Geſicht, die Haare vielleicht auf dem Scheitel ein wenig lichter, der Bart noch wie damals, die Geſtalt um Rücken und Bruſt etwas breiter — ſicher, ruhig. Ein Beifallsſturm empfing ihn, wie ihn die alte Muſikhalle ſelten erlebt. Keine Muſkel zuckte in dem Antlitz des Dirigenten, als er ſich wieder und wieder vor dem glänzenden Hauſe verbeugen mußte, ſein blumengeſchmückter Pult zur Seite mußte geduldig harren, bis er endlich von Herrn Gericke beſtiegen wurde. Aber auch dort dauerten die Verneigungen noch fort, und erſt als ſich der geniale Leiter raſch wendete und ſeinen Taktſtock ergriff, ſchwieg die Kundgebung und machte der tiefſten Stille Platz. Hatten vorher die Augen geſprochen, ſo nahm das Ohr der Zuhörerſchaft jetzt ſeine Rechte in Anſpruch, noch ein tiefer Athemzug durch das Auditorium, der Taktſtock hebt ſich, die Stille wird zur Starre, dann ein leichtes Neigen des Stabes und die Klänge zur „Euryanthe" ſetzen ein, wie damals, als Herr Gericke uns verließ. Herr Gericke hat ſein Orcheſter feſt im Zügel. Seiner eigenſten Intention, den ſchwierigſten Nuancen folgt der Orcheſterkörper wie aufgegangen in der Abſicht des Meiſters. Das iſt Herr Gericke, deſſen Bild wir heute bringen und der uns für die kommenden Jahre Genüſſe reinſter muſikaliſcher Schönheiten ſchaffen wird.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 23, 1898.

THE SECOND SYMPHONY AND OTHER CONCERTS.

Mr. Gericke's second programme was hardly less conservative than his first, although there was a recognition of the work of our day in his heading it with Mr. Chadwick's "Melpomene" overture, which has enough scholarship, solidity and sensibility to maintain steadily the position it has gained among the standard compositions of its kind. Of course Goldmark and Smetana, who were represented respectively by the A-minor violin concerto and the symphonic poem "Vysehrad," are also men of the day; but they have long been accepted as belonging to the whole world of music and not to any nationality or school. The other number—Schumann's second symphony—is a classic. The programme was judicious, well balanced and gave a wider scope to the virtuosity, the good sense and the high spirit of the orchestra than the initial one. The men rose to the full height of the occasion, and for many passages the strongest words of admiring praise would not be extravagant. The new players—some of whom are still at a disadvantage because they speak neither German nor English—are beginning to get into true touch with their fellows and to understand the conductor's desires and directions, while the general body feels and responds to his absoluteness of intention and requisition. The scherzo of the symphony was almost intensely brilliant, its "motto" phrase broad and simple, its adagio tender and its great coda splendid; the gloomy romanticism of the overture was gravely tragic and the swelling sentimentality of the poem rose and fell with the sweep of the subject; and in the concerto there was often a real mezza voce taken and maintained. Mr. Gericke's readings were unexceptionable in discretion, taste, firmness and freedom. One feels how he has grown in spirit and confidence therein when he lets the fullness of a great climax burst so richly and sonorously as he now does, and permits the brass choir to round out its resonant volume so long as it breaks into no blare. It would not be easy to give a greater pulse to any just enthusiasm than he caused many times in this concert. There was still little opportunity for the new men to make themselves specially heard, except through the drums and oboe, but the general effect was fine and smooth.

Mr. Kneisel's playing is fairly "hors concours," and to praise the beauty of his tone, his perfect execution and his true and tasteful phrasing is but to repeat a more than twice-told tale. Yet he seemed to go beyond his own standard in portions of the concerto, playing the serious parts with more warmth, and the lighter ones with more flash and dash than he always concedes. He was most warmly received and greatly applauded.

Next week the orchestra will play Goldmark's "Spring" overture, Tschaikowsky's "pathetic" symphony and Liszt's first Hungarian Rhapsody. Mme. Gadski will be the soloist, singing the "Ocean" scene from Weber's "Oberon," and the "Hall of Song" from "Tannhauser."

[illegible] OCTOBER 23, [illegible]

This was probably one of the novelties which Mr. Gericke, Mr. Van der Stucken and other conductors heard in Europe and did not think worth bringing to this country. If our English brethren's judgment may be trusted, it would hardly be worth the trouble. Speaking of Mr. Gericke, he appears to have re-entered the hearts of the people of Boston without difficulty. The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra took place last Saturday night, and thus discourseth Mr. B. E. Woolf of The Boston Herald:

"The orchestra remains substantially the same, some mutations that it has undergone having painful associations that the occasion brought sadly to mind again. The strangers all made a wholly favorable impression, and, judged by what was heard of them last evening, are really valuable acquisitions to the orchestra. The new first oboe has a superb tone, full, resonant, pure, and of an exquisitely sympathetic quality, and he plays with the skill and taste of a thorough artist.

"The new first flute is to be similarly commended for the volume, richness, and sonority of his tone. The first clarionet had little to do that afforded an opportunity to judge how well he would fill the position of the lamented M. Pourtau, but the smoothness and the purity of his tone made themselves felt, and were full of comforting promise. The first trumpet appears to be decidedly the best that the orchestra has ever had, while the new tympanist is fairly a revelation of the possibilities of the drums as musical instruments, instead of mere noise makers. Those of the newcomers are of larger make than the orchestra has previously had, and have a noble sonority, and as he treats them lovingly and tunes them perfectly and the brutal sound of a hard drumstick is never heard banging vindictively on the drumhead without even the suggestion of a musical tone, the artist, for a tympani player may be an artist, he is an innovation to be welcomed as a treasure and cherished accordingly.

"Mr. Gericke's conducting is the same as it was in the past. It is undemonstrative, never coming between the hearer and the music with disturbing effect, but it is none the less effective and with a relentless down beat from which there is no escape, and which holds the orchestra firmly under control. His readings of the various selections were conservative, but always just and interesting. There was in them nothing of the prevalent seeking after insignificant somethings that had not been sought before; nothing that suggested glorification of the conductor at the expense of the composer. Their spirit was healthy, their results were sane.

"Notably topical and satisfying were his tempi, especially in the symphony. Fate did not knock at the door in the opening movement, as if its sole object were to make a violent burglarious entrance. The andante was taken at the proper graceful pace instead of dragged out of tiresomeness, and the entrance of the triumphal strain of the finale was made with imposing and thrilling majesty. The Bach suite was read with delightful and delighting animation, and the Brahms variations have never been heard here when they were accorded so genial and so piquant an interpretation nor more rich and beautiful coloring."

This is informing criticism and is, therefore, valuable. The excellence of the new members of the orchestra is something that will fill lovers of this organization with great pleasure. In a short time the band will give its first concerts in this city, and no doubt Mr. Gericke will be warmly welcomed here.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has already begun its concerts in Boston, where Mr. Gericke, its newly appointed conductor, has been welcomed with great warmth, both by the public and the members of the orchestra, whose respect he possesses in a remarkable degree. This organization will give its first concerts in this city at Carnegie Hall on Wednesday afternoon and Thursday evening, Nov. 9 and 10. Mr. Rosenthal will be soloist on both occasions, but will not play the same concerto, as the programmes will be entirely different. Other solo artists who will be heard in this series of concerts are Mr. Willy Burmester, Lady Hallé, (Norman Neruda,) M. Alvarez, and Mme. Carreno.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Pape
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 23, 1898.
(Copyright, 1898, Post Publishing Company.)

SECOND SYMPHONY CONCERT

One local composer was represented on the programme of the second of this season's Symphony concerts at Music Hall last night, George W. Chadwick, whose "Melpomene" overture was the first on the list. It was beautifully played and received most liberal applause at its close.

The first soloist to be heard this season was from the band's own ranks, Mr. Kneisel. On this occasion he played the Goldmark concerto for violin and orchestra, A minor. Mr. Kneisel was never heard to better advantage than on this occasion. His work was well nigh faultless and after each movement, and particularly at the finish of the concerto, he was received with a perfect storm of applause, being recalled a half dozen times.

Other numbers on the programme were Smetana's symphonic poem, "Vysehrad," which gave Mr. Schuecker an opportunity to be heard in some charming harp solos during the early part, and the Schumann symphony No. 2, which was beautifully played by the band.

At the next concert the famous Tschaikowsky symphony No. 6 (always well received at these concerts) will be played and the soloist will be Mme. Gadski.

NEW YORK HERALD,
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 23,

There is every reason to believe that Mr. Emil Paur will be a prominent figure in the musical life of New York this season. Not only will he conduct the Philharmonic concerts, but as leader of the recently organized New York Orchestra he will lead the Waldorf-Astoria fortnightly subscription concerts, besidts a series of five public symphony rethearsals and concerts at Carnegie Hall and twenty-two Sunday night concerts at the same place. Evidently Mr. Paur is going to be a very busy man.

He gives an introductory concert with the New York Orchestra at Carnegie Hall next Saturday, which will be his first appearance as a local conductor. The programme is not severe, but rather more on the Waldorf-Astoria order—Weber's "Freischütz," overture; Beethoven's "Eroica," symphony; a "Capriccio Espagnol," by Rimsky-Korsakoff (new) and Wagner's "Rienzi," overture.

It is noteworthy that about the only important concerts in this city which Mr. Paur will not conduct are those of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which he led for several seasons past, but of which Mr. Wilhelm Gericke is now the conductor. The first concert of this orchestra will be given at Carnegie Hall on November 9, when Rosenthal will be the soloist.

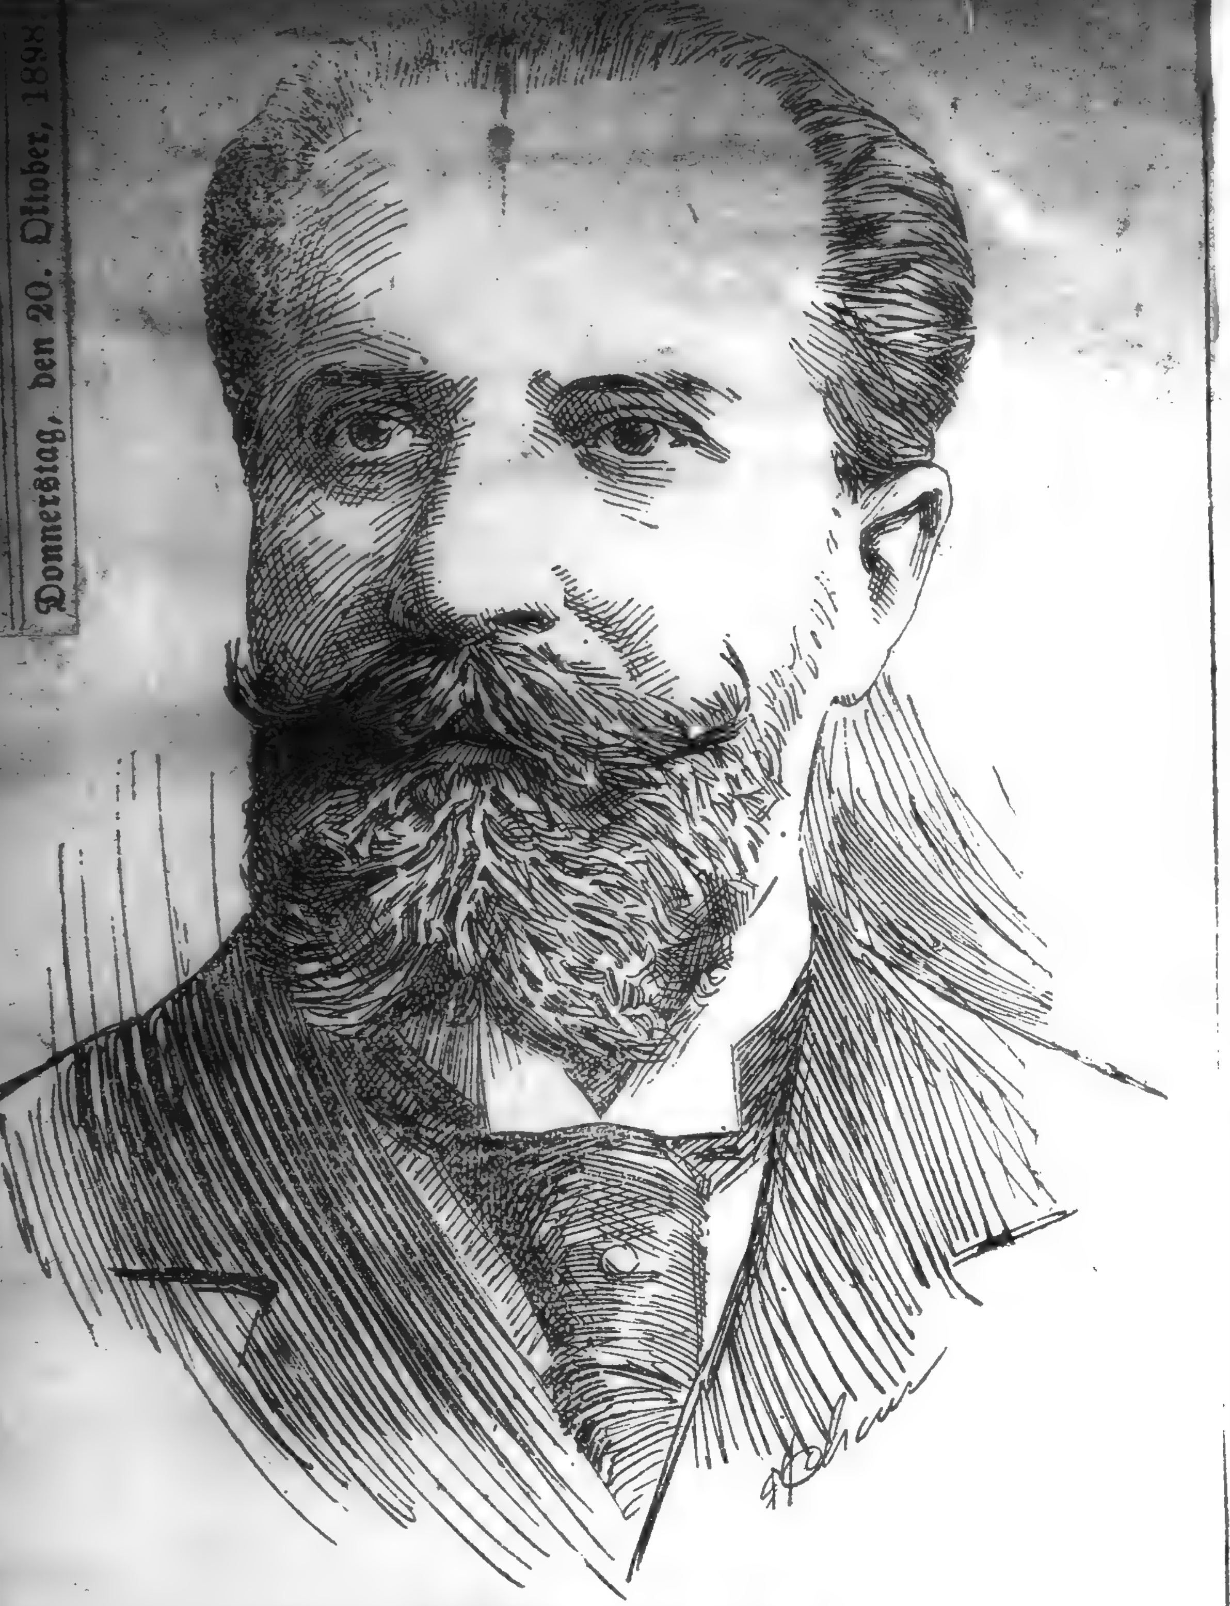
The public will certainly be interested in comparing these conductors this season and will doubtless end by congratulating itself that two such notable musicians as Paur and Gericke are giving orchestral concerts here.

THE SUN, SUNDAY,
OCTOBER 23, 1898.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its season under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke at Carnegie Hall, on Nov. 9. Rosenthal will be the soloist. At subsequent concerts Willy Burmester, Lady Halle, Alvarez and Teresa Carreno will be heard. The dates selected for the rest of the season are Dec. 14 and 15, Jan. 18 and 19, Feb. 22 and 23, and March 22 and 23. The afternoon concerts are held on Thursdays and the evening concerts on Fridays. The programmes are all to be different.

Stadt und [illegible]

Donnerstag, den 20. Oktober, 1898.



Herr Wilhelm Gericke.

Dirigent des „Boſtoner Symphonie-Orcheſters.

[Das obige Bild iſt uns durch die Freundlichkeit des „Boſton Herald" überlaſſen worden.]

Der neue geniale Leiter des Symphonie-Orcheſters, Herr Wilhelm Gericke, hat am letzten Freitag nach achtjähriger Pauſe zum erſten Male wieder den Taktſtock vor dem muſikliebenden Auditorium Boſtons in Muſic Hall zur Hand genommen und mit dem Zeichen des Einſatzes zur Euryanthe-Ouvertüre von Weber, ſich wieder wie ehedem einen feſten Platz in den Herzen ſeiner zahlloſen Verehrer und Freunde geſichert. Eigentlich ſollten wir Sonnabend anſtatt Freitag als den wahren offiziellen Tag ſeines Wiedereinzuges nennen. Freitag iſt nur der Tag der General-Probe, während am Sonnabend Abend das eigentliche Konzert ſtattfindet. Zu ihm findet ſich ganz Boſton ein, Reichthum und Toiletten, bezaubernde Damenwelt und muſikgierige Enthuſiaſten, Kenner und Liebhaber für die Gebilde im Reiche der Töne, welche unſer Symphonie-Orcheſter wie kein zweites in Amerika wiedergiebt. Als das Stimmen- und Tongewirre, das Raſcheln und Kniſtern der Programme, das Rauſchen der Damen-Toiletten und der Klang der geſtimmten Inſtrumente abzuſterben begonnen, als die 87 Muſiker in der Erwartung ihres Dirigenten die Inſtrumente bereit zum Spiel in der Hand, und das ganze Auditorium, das Auge voll Intereſſe und Ungeduld auf die Thür gerichtet, aus welcher in der nächſten Minute Herr Gericke auf das Podium treten mußte, da fühlte Jeder, daß ein Moment kommen würde, der dem neuen und doch ſchon an Bekanntſchaft alten Dirigenten ſagen ſollte, daß ihn Boſton und ſeine muſikliebenden Stammgäſte von Herzen willkommen heißen. Und Gericke trat ein, wie er vor acht Jahren geſchieden war. Daſſelbe Geſicht, die Haare vielleicht auf dem Scheitel ein wenig lichter, der Bart noch wie damals, die Geſtalt um Rücken und Bruſt etwas breiter — ſicher, ruhig. Ein Beifallsſturm empfing ihn, wie ihn die alte Muſikhalle ſelten erlebt. Keine Muskel zuckte in dem Antlitz des Dirigenten, als er ſich wieder und wieder vor dem glänzenden Hauſe verbeugen mußte, ſein blumengeſchmückter Pult zur Seite mußte geduldig harren, bis er endlich von Herrn Gericke beſtiegen wurde. Aber auch dort dauerten die Verneigungen noch fort, und erſt als ſich der geniale Leiter raſch wendete und ſeinen Taktſtock ergriff, ſchwieg die Kundgebung und machte der tiefſten Stille Platz. Hatten vorher die Augen geſprochen, ſo nahm das Ohr der Zuhörerſchaft jetzt ſeine Rechte in Anſpruch, noch ein tiefer Athemzug durch das Auditorium, der Taktſtock hebt ſich, die Stille wird zur Starre, dann ein leichtes Neigen des Stabes und die Klänge zur „Euryanthe" ſetzen ein, wie damals, als Herr Gericke uns verließ. Herr Gericke hat ſein Orcheſter feſt im Zügel. Seiner eigenſten Intention, den ſchwierigſten Nuancen folgt der Orcheſterkörper wie aufgegangen in der Abſicht des Meiſters. Das iſt Herr Gericke, deſſen Bild wir heute bringen und der uns für die kommenden Jahre Genüſſe reinſter muſikaliſcher Schönheiten ſchaffen wird.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 23, 1898.

THE SECOND SYMPHONY AND OTHER CONCERTS.

Mr. Gericke's second programme was hardly less conservative than his first, although there was a recognition of the work of our day in his heading it with Mr. Chadwick's "Melpomene" overture, which has enough scholarship, solidity and sensibility to maintain steadily the position it has gained among the standard compositions of its kind. Of course Goldmark and Smetana, who were represented respectively by the A-minor violin concerto and the symphonic poem "Vysehrad," are also men of the day; but they have long been accepted as belonging to the whole world of music and not to any nationality or school. The other number--Schumann's second symphony—is a classic. The programme was judicious, well balanced and gave a wider scope to the virtuosity, the good sense and the high spirit of the orchestra than the initial one. The men rose to the full height of the occasion, and for many passages the strongest words of admiring praise would not be extravagant. The new players—some of whom are still at a disadvantage because they speak neither German nor English—are beginning to get into true touch with their fellows and to understand the conductor's desires and directions, while the general body feels and responds to his absoluteness of intention and requisition. The scherzo of the symphony was almost intensely brilliant, its "motto" phrase broad and simple, its adagio tender and its great coda splendid; the gloomy romanticism of the overture was gravely tragic and the swelling sentimentality of the poem rose and fell with the sweep of the subject; and in the concerto there was often a real mezza voce taken and maintained. Mr. Gericke's readings were unexceptionable in discretion, taste, firmness and freedom. One feels how he has grown in spirit and confidence therein when he lets the fullness of a great climax burst so richly and sonorously as he now does, and permits the brass choir to round out its resonant volume so long as it breaks into no blare. It would not be easy to give a greater pulse to any just enthusiasm than he caused many times in this concert. There was still little opportunity for the new men to make themselves specially heard, except through the drums and oboe, but the general effect was fine and smooth.

Mr. Kneisel's playing is fairly "hors concours," and to praise the beauty of his tone, his perfect execution and his true and tasteful phrasing is but to repeat a more than twice-told tale. Yet he seemed to go beyond his own standard in portions of the concerto, playing the serious parts with more warmth, and the lighter ones with more flash and dash than he always concedes. He was most warmly received and greatly applauded.

Next week the orchestra will play Goldmark's "Spring" overture, Tschaikowsky's "pathetic" symphony and Liszt's first Hungarian Rhapsody. Mme. Gadski will be the soloist, singing the "Ocean" scene from Weber's "Oberon," and the "Hall of Song" from "Tannhauser."

NEW YORK TIMES

OCTOBER 23, 1898

This was probably one of the novelties which Mr. Gericke, Mr. Van der Stucken, and other conductors heard in Europe and did not think worth bringing to this country. If our English brethren's judgment may be trusted, it would hardly be worth the trouble. Speaking of Mr. Gericke, he appears to have re-entered the hearts of the people of Boston without difficulty. The first concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra took place last Saturday night, and thus discourseth Mr. B. E. Woolf of The Boston Herald:

"The orchestra remains substantially the same, some mutations that it has undergone having painful associations that the occasion brought sadly to mind again. The strangers all made a wholly favorable impression, and, judged by what was heard of them last evening, are really valuable acquisitions to the orchestra. The new first oboe has a superb tone, full, resonant, pure, and of an exquisitely sympathetic quality, and he plays with the skill and taste of a thorough artist.

"The new first flute is to be similarly commended for the volume, richness, and sonority of his tone. The first clarionet had little to do that afforded an opportunity to judge how well he would fill the position of the lamented M. Pourtau, but the smoothness and the purity of his tone made themselves felt, and were full of comforting promise. The first trumpet appears to be decidedly the best that the orchestra has ever had, while the new tympanist is fairly a revelation of the possibilities of the drums as musical instruments, instead of mere noise makers. Those of the newcomers are of larger make than the orchestra has previously had, and have a noble sonority, and as he treats them lovingly and tunes them perfectly and the brutal sound of a hard drumstick is never heard banging vindictively on the drumhead without even the suggestion of a musical tone, the artist, for a tympani player may be an artist, he is an innovation to be welcomed as a treasure and cherished accordingly.

"Mr. Gericke's conducting is the same as it was in the past. It is undemonstrative, never coming between the hearer and the music with disturbing effect, but it is none the less effective and with a relentless down beat from which there is no escape, and which holds the orchestra firmly under control. His readings of the various selections were conservative, but always just and interesting. There was in them nothing of the prevalent seeking after insignificant somethings that had not been sought before; nothing that suggested glorification of the conductor at the expense of the composer. Their spirit was healthy, their results were sane.

"Notably topical and satisfying were his tempi, especially in the symphony. Fate did not knock at the door in the opening movement, as if its sole object were to make a violent burglarious entrance. The andante was taken at the proper graceful pace instead of dragged out of tiresomeness, and the entrance of the triumphal strain of the finale was made with imposing and thrilling majesty. The Bach suite was read with delightful and delighting animation, and the Brahms variations have never been heard here when they were accorded so genial and so piquant an interpretation nor more rich and beautiful coloring."

This is informing criticism and is, therefore, valuable. The excellence of the new members of the orchestra is something that will fill lovers of this organization with great pleasure. In a short time the band will give its first concerts in this city, and no doubt Mr. Gericke will be warmly welcomed here.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has already begun its concerts in Boston, where Mr. Gericke, its newly appointed conductor, has been welcomed with great warmth, both by the public and the members of the orchestra, whose respect he possesses in a remarkable degree. This organization will give its first concerts in this city at Carnegie Hall on Wednesday afternoon and Thursday evening, Nov. 9 and 10. Mr. Rosenthal will be soloist on both occasions, but will not play the same concerto, as the programmes will be entirely different. Other solo artists who will be heard in this series of concerts are Mr. Willy Burmester, Lady Hallé, (Norman Neruda,) M. Alvarez, and Mme. Carreno.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Pape
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 23, 1898.
(Copyright, 1898, Post Publishing Company.)

SECOND SYMPHONY CONCERT

One local composer was represented on the programme of the second of this season's Symphony concerts at Music Hall last night, George W. Chadwick, whose "Melpomene" overture was the first on the list. It was beautifully played and received most liberal applause at its close.

The first soloist to be heard this season was from the band's own ranks, Mr. Kneisel. On this occasion he played the Goldmark concerto for violin and orchestra, A minor. Mr. Kneisel was never heard to better advantage than on this occasion. His work was well nigh faultless and after each movement, and particularly at the finish of the concerto, he was received with a perfect storm of applause, being recalled a half dozen times.

Other numbers on the programme were Smetana's symphonic poem, "Vysehrad," which gave Mr. Schuecker an opportunity to be heard in some charming harp solos during the early part, and the Schumann symphony No. 2, which was beautifully played by the band.

At the next concert the famous Tschaikowsky symphony No. 6 (always well received at these concerts) will be played and the soloist will be Mme. Gadski.

NEW YORK HERALD,
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 23,

There is every reason to believe that Mr. Emil Paur will be a prominent figure in the musical life of New York this season. Not only will he conduct the Philharmonic concerts, but as leader of the recently organized New York Orchestra he will lead the Waldorf-Astoria fortnightly subscription concerts, besidts a series of five public symphony rethearsals and concerts at Carnegie Hall and twenty-two Sunday night concerts at the same place. Evidently Mr. Paur is going to be a very busy man.

He gives an introductory concert with the New York Orchestra at Carnegie Hall next Saturday, which will be his first appearance as a local conductor. The programme is not severe, but rather more on the Waldorf-Astoria order—Weber's "Freischütz," overture; Beethoven's "Eroica," symphony; a "Capriccio Espagnol," by Rimsky-Korsakoff (new) and Wagner's "Rienzi," overture.

It is noteworthy that about the only important concerts in this city which Mr. Paur will not conduct are those of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which he led for several seasons past, but of which Mr. Wilhelm Gericke is now the conductor. The first concert of this orchestra will be given at Carnegie Hall on November 9, when Rosenthal will be the soloist.

The public will certainly be interested in comparing these conductors this season and will doubtless end by congratulating itself that two such notable musicians as Paur and Gericke are giving orchestral concerts here.

THE SUN, SUNDAY,
OCTOBER 23, 1898.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin its season under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke at Carnegie Hall, on Nov. 9. Rosenthal will be the soloist. At subsequent concerts Willy Burmester, Lady Halle, Alvarez and Teresa Carreno will be heard. The dates selected for the rest of the season are Dec. 14 and 15, Jan. 18 and 19, Feb. 22 and 23, and March 22 and 23. The afternoon concerts are held on Thursdays and the evening concerts on Fridays. The programmes are all to be different.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Mr. Kneisel Plays the Goldmark Concerto—An Old Program Brilliantly Performed.

The program of the second Symphony concert last night in Music Hall, Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, conductor, was as follows:

Overture, "Melpomene" ....Chadwick
Concerto for violin in A minor......Goldmark
Symphonic Poem, "Vysehrad".......Smetana
Symphony No. 2, in C major........Schumann

The air in Music Hall was hot, foul, stifling. Attempts at ventilation were crude and pneumonic. And yet in spite of most unfavorable atmospheric conditions, the performance was brilliant.

Mr. Chadwick's noble work was read by Mr. Gericke with profound care and intense dramatic spirit. The work itself well repays such attention. It has the antique tragic note, yet is it modern in the expression of classic feeling. The self-concentration of the composer is without dryness or austerity. The expression is dramatic without extravagance. The mould in which this expression is cast is one of ripe scholarship, without a flaw of pedantry. And a work that breathes the classic spirit and at the same time appeals irresistibly to a man of this generation, that binds together firmly fluent technic with individually imaginative thought may justly be called noble.

Mr. Kneisel played with loving interest and with all his admirable intelligence, taste and skill the concerto by Goldmark. The long-continued and richly deserved applause was for the violinist and not the work itself—I may say justly that it was in spite of the work. Goldmark of "The Queen of Sheba," Goldmark the Oriental, and Goldmark the composer of the overtures inspired by Grecian legends, is one man; the composer of the violin concerto is sadly inferior. The themes are not of marked beauty or strength, the development of them is generally uninteresting, and there is the constant thought of wearisome padding. To me the concerto is one of his weakest works.

Mr. Apthorp in the program-book has much to say in derision of "Herbeck's" arrangement of the air from Handel's "Serse," the air that is now known as "Handel's Largo." I suppose he had in mind Hellmesberger's arrangement, which, I regret to say, was played not long ago at a Symphony concert. I wish that instead of emptying vials of wrath on "Herbeck's" head, he had told us more about Smetana's "Vysehrad"; for he would have then spared some of us the trouble of exploration. "Vysehrad" was the first of the six symphonic poems that the patriotic Bohemian wrote from desire to celebrate musically his country. It was written in 1874, and the original score bears this melancholy line: "In a condition of ear-suffering." The second poem, "Vltava," written later in 1874, has the legend, "Completely deaf." "Vysehrad" is the "Hochburg," the acropolis of Prague. Lumir, to whom reference is made, was a sort of Bohemian Orpheus. The very simplicity, the monotony—if you please—of this work is extremely effective. The very repetition of the chief theme, which, by the way, is the chief theme of the whole cyclus, becomes the musical characterization of a nation. True, so far as absolute music is concerned, the piece might bear the title "Ireland," "Poland," "Fate"; for to us that are not Bohemians, this symphonic poem suggests through music only contrasts of great lamentation and festal pride. As Emanuel Chvála well puts it, Smetana was a poet, a program-composer, a painter in words, a romanticist in the true meaning of the word. He was moved to music by thoughts outside of music. The performance was superb.

And all in all the performance of the symphony was great and long to be remembered. To me it is by no means the greatest of Schumann's symphonies, and the dry and abhorrent orchestration peculiar to the man—an ill-cut, drab garment clumsily worn by a man of wonderfully intimate thought and curious experiments in rhythm—is constantly between you and his thoughts, although you may finally accept the clothes for the sake of the wearer. Perhaps the slow movement was a little swollen beyond its real estate; for it is contemplative rather than passionate. But with this exception, it would be hard to find fault with either the reading or the performance. The orchestra is fast becoming an instrument on which Mr. Gericke plays at will. Let us be thankful that this will is sanely controlled, that it is not caprice, that is not used merely to startle an audience.

* * *

The program of the concert Saturday will be:

Overture, "In Spring"...............Goldmark
Aria from "Oberon"......................Weber
Mrs. Gadski.
Symphony No. 6...................Tschaikowsky
Aria from "Tannhauser"..............Wagner
Mrs. Gadski.
Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 3...............Liszt

Philip Hale.

Almost every one who had any social aspiration in Boston or its vicinity crowded into Music Hall on Friday or Saturday of last week to set his or her personal stamp on the fact that the season of 1898-1899 had begun. There was a time when Boston prided herself upon being a literary centre—that day is passed. Now—today—music reigns supreme.

Music has always been more or less fashionable here, and now much more than less. We think that we are the musical centre of the United States, and if other cities do not all fall down before us, crowning us with the victorious musical laurel, yet they do respect our musical knowledge and allow that in no other city in our country is music so fashionable.

Thirty years ago music—good classical music—had a distinct fashionable following; but although the "Harvard" concerts attracted the best men and women Boston had to offer, yet our aristocracy in those days was too small to support any entertainments and too quiet and reserved to draw the masses to follow in their steps. As society has [illegible] As the Prince and Princess of Wales make a fashion in London, so did our uncrowned queens of society in Boston, in later days, decide that music should be "the thing."

Crowded as the concert room is, both on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, yet we cannot help missing the presence of many men and women who have done so much to make music more than a fad here in Boston. The last thirty years have in their passage left many gaps in our ranks, and we vainly look for the faces of Theodore Chase, C. C. Perkins, J. S. Dwight, Otto Dressel, Charles R. Hayden, Mrs. James Lodge, Mrs Ware, Mrs. John A. Andrew and, indeed, of more than we can enumerate.

The sympathy and interest of those who have gone before have done much to make the musician's life here more than comfortable; for not only were hands held out, but houses were opened, and a social position was therefore attained here earlier than in, perhaps, any other American city.

As the younger generations grew up and stepped upon society's stage, musicians were found already there. So that now, not only do pianists, singers and conductors go into society, but so also do even many of the first violinists of the Symphony Orchestra. Indeed, it has several times been rumored that some Boston girl was about to join her fate to that of a violinist, but as yet only one, and she a suburbanite, came to the point and was really married.

In place of the once familiar faces, we see now in Music Hall on Saturday nights, chief amongst the supporters of all good concerts, a bevy of pretty or stylish women and a large number of fashionable male amateurs and poseurs. This set is always in full evidence, although perhaps the true music lovers keep in the background. These men and women know the artists and musicians, and try to keep thoroughly en rapport with them, although they deal out their favors and patronage with somewhat of an unequal hand.

On the other hand, on Friday afternoons, we find quite a different audience. Here are all of the sub-buds, the buds and the girls of a few seasons, and naturally in their train follow the young men who are devoted to society, whether they care for music or not. It is a pretty sight to see such a sea of attractive faces and "smart" hats as we saw last Friday, and we could not help believing that some of the music seeds there sown would bear fruit; although it is a fact that the girls cared more to see each other, their "men friends" and the popular violinists than they did to listen to the music. For this reason it is a fact that the atmosphere is really more musical at the concerts than at the rehearsals.

It is much more fashionable to go to the rehearsals than to the concerts, and this fact is proved by the far larger prices paid for Friday's rehearsals. Everything is sacrificed to give the girls tickets; for without a good seat for the season a pretty girl feels quite out of society. She has to learn a certain musical jargon for her future Boston life—no matter whether she cannot distinguish "America" from Lohengrin's "Swan Song" or not—and where can she be better instructed than at Music Hall, surrounded by her own "smart" set?

It is too early to predict the belles amongst the coming debutantes, but a glimpse at the rehearsals assured us that the girls are pretty enough surely. Before the season is over, one of these girls may develop into a professional beauty; although Boston has not often produced that rara avis. Within the last 20 years we can recall but Mrs. De Forest Danielson, Mrs. Oliver Ames, Miss Eleanor Winslow, Mrs. Fiske Warren and Mrs. Joseph S. Fay, 3d. Although there are many women who, in our opinion, have really far more beauty, yet the others somehow never gained the reputation for beauty, which remains even, perhaps, when the beauty has begun to wane.

Although often, on a Saturday night, we can catch a glimpse, as it were, of the good old musicale times, when we see Mrs. Bell, Mrs. Pratt, Mrs. Whitman, Miss Frothingham, Mrs. W. B. Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Dixey, Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Bradlee—when they are home from abroad; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Beebe, Messrs. Pierson and Frank Beebe, Mr. Frank Bartlett, Mr. Henry Sayles, Mrs. J. T. Eldridge, Mrs. Charles Homans, Mr. Frank Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Lang, and once in a while Mr. Charles How, yet we realize these are the exceptions. A handful, so to speak, of these men and women only recalls the good old days, and makes it more evident that a new set has risen up with the Symphony Concerts, in whose hands is the present and perhaps the future of fashionable musical Boston.

Of course, today Mrs. Gardner and Mrs. Sears are the musical arbiters, and although both of these ladies are now in mourning, yet they will doubtless not give up their patronage and influence. Indeed, Mrs. Gardner has appeared at the concerts already, so she is to be counted upon as powerful as ever during the coming season. No one person can do more for an artist in Boston than can Mrs. Gardner; but even she cannot turn a mediocrity into a lasting success.

Mrs. Fiske Warren, although she is not really musical, yet she can be counted upon as one of the musical patronesses, as can, in rather a timid way, Mrs. Charles Inches. Mrs. W. F. Apthorp is announced to have a musical salon on Sunday nights, and from her husband's position she is able to show off many a musical lion. Mrs. Arthur Foote, after her long absence abroad, is settled in Dedham, so is out of the running; yet she is apt to be on hand for any special Saturday night. Mr. [illegible] able artists, as can also Dr. and Mrs. Monks. Miss Candler is quite a personage, too, in the real musical world, and so is Miss Evelyn Ames. Russell Sullivan, William Blake, Clayton Johns, Charles Sampson and William Richardson are familiar figures at the concerts, and are all interested in music and the musicians; and also are a pleasant contrast to the "little boys" brought by some of the fashionable matrons as escorts. So that, after all, if the old musical days are no more, the present day is not quite so bad as we had feared.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.
MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 24, 1898.

The Second Symphony Concert—Chadwick's "Melpomene."

Kneisel's Violin Playing—A Work by Smetana.

The American Muse made her entrance early this season, being represented by Chadwick's "Melpomene" overture at the second symphony concert, given on Saturday.

Mr. Chadwick's overtures have become standard works on both sides of the Atlantic and are probably his most widely-known compositions. His first orchestral hearing in this country, years ago, was in the form of an overture, and even then he showed a firm grasp upon the classical side of this musical form.

"Melpomene" is a work full of suggestion, a spur to the imagination and poetry of the auditor, without being absolutely "programme-music." We are glad that it does not cross the border-line, for "programme-music," the instrumental music that paints a definite picture, that tells a definite story, is the weakest side of our art; when instrumental music becomes fixed in meaning it is far less graphic than Poetry or Painting, yet it is just this expression of Music that the uncultured mass is constantly craving; Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony is at the same time his weakest and his most popular symphony; here the auditor has a tangible thunder-storm, a real cuckoo, a brook that can be heard to purl, and he imagines, because he senses these things, that he is "understanding music."

Not of this objective character is this overture; it suggests a tragedy but allows the auditor to fill in the details; the English horn, (instrument of brooding melancholy), and the oboe (instrument of pathos), establish a gloomy mood even in the beginning of the introduction; a catastrophe of some sort is evident in the crash of kettle-drum and bass drum and the impressive pause thereafter, but of definite story there is none; the work remains subjective,—a stimulus to such poetry as the auditor may have within him.

Ample justice was done to the dignified work and the applause following it was emphatic enough to recall the conductor to the stand to acknowledge the enthusiasm.

Goldmark's violin concerto followed, with Mr. Franz Kneisel as the soloist. It was not a night for violin-playing; the weather was damp and sultry, just the night for the production of "dead" tones and the snapping of E strings.

Fortunately no mishap overtook the solo violin, although many an orchestral violin was rendered "hors de combat."

The concerto itself is not the most effective of works; it begins with Wagner and ends with Lalo; it promises heroism and leads to sentiment.

The classical form does not sit easily on Goldmark; even in his symphonies he goes over into the freer domain of suite and in his contrapuntal touches he is almost certain to leave the strict path; just as, in his second symphony, his fugato gives its answer in the sub-dominant instead of dominant (become a "fugue by imitation" of instead of a true fugue) so in this concerto he juggles with the fugal form in some degree. His canonic touches, however, are not without some beauty. The finale of the concerto is the most popular movement, a lively bolero which is easily grasped and followed, but by no means so easy to play.

Mr. Kneisel won a great success, phenomenal when one considers the added difficulties of unfavorable atmosphere. There is a constant charm in the surety with which he displays; auditorial anxiety, that dreadful bar to the enjoyment of difficult numbers, never exists when Franz Kneisel is performing the work.

The cadenza of the finale was a swift whirl of difficulties; double-stopping, harmonics in all profusion, skips without end, bridge tones ("sul ponticello") and every other species of violin fireworks. Of course at the end of it all the soloist received recall after recall; he certainly won the ovation fairly.

Now followed one of the patriotic pictures of Bohemia by that great pioneer of the music of new Bohemia,—Smetana.

Music is often the child of Sorrow, either national or individual; with Smetana it was the offspring of both. To the brooding over the fallen state of a country whose artistic voice was scourged into silence during the great religious wars, there was added grief for family bereavements and dejection because of a total deafness that settled down upon the composer; finally came insanity and the life of the founder of a noble school, the teacher of Dvorak, went out in darkness.

Smetana's works often stand related to Bohemia in the same manner that Chopin's are bound to, and inspired by Poland. There is therefore a great interest, albeit tinged with melancholy, attaching to all his national subject. "Vysehrad" (the ancient Bohemian fortress) was the subject of the number given. It is called a "Symphonic poem," but only deserves the term if we take the adjective in its French sense, "Symphonique," meaning only "Orchestral," the work being far removed from the symmetrical form of symphony.

It is Ossianic in its character, splendor and regret being intertwined in a remarkable manner. Its bardic preluding (and Mr. Schuecker gave the harp passages with commendable abandon) was an impressive and fitting introduction to such a picture. Its melancholy is not unlike the lonely sadness which Mendelssohn expressed so finely in the finale of the Scotch symphony. The trumpets deserve a word of especial commendation for the smooth tone and excellent shading attained.

Decidedly Mr. Gericke has changed since he was last with us! It seemed strange to see him signalling for more force to the orchestra; he is no longer afraid of a powerful brass tone; in the old days the trombone-players used to say: "He sits on the bells of our instruments!" There was ample power, yet none too much, in the interpretation of this martial work.

[illegible] mann's [illegible] it is full of [illegible] Beethoven's E flat symphony [illegible] it excels in its finale. This second symphony (really Schumann's [illegible]) has the merit of growing steadily stronger to its end; it is the most coherent and shapely of Schumann's four symphonies (or five if we count the "Overture, Scherzo and Finale" as a symphony) and the constant reappearance of the first figure of the introduction, a species of fanfare, in all the subsequent movements, gives a peculiar charm of continuity.

It begins with a great introduction, spite of the saying of an English critic that "it sounds like very bad improvising," a prelude in which coming events cast their shadows before in a most impressive manner.

The Scherzo was taken at a rattling pace and its chief theme was not entirely clear, but its Trios were excellently played. It is a wonder that Beethoven did not think of this idea of giving two Trios to a single Scherzo when one bears in mind the fact that he had this succession—Scherzo, Trio, Scherzo, Trio, Scherzo,—in his Seventh symphony, and something exactly like it in his fourth symphony and in one of his string quartettes, but always with a single Trio. Schumann undoubtedly derived the idea of his double trio from these works.

Oboe and flute deserve honorable mention for their work in the slow movement; the orchestra evidently has not retrograded here, but we fear that the phenomenal clarinette tone of M. Pourtau will never be replaced.

The finale, to us the gem of the work, was magnificently played. Here is a scene of combat which may stand beside the gusts of passion and power which are found in the development of Beethoven's third symphony. As the combat is not made merely by dissonances but by a constant opposition of two rhythms, 2-2 and 3-2, it is a very difficult affair to give clearly; it was intelligible in its every measure on this occasion. The concert began and ended with kettle-drum passages.

It is one of the boldest touches in Schumann's symphony, the giving of the two rhythms above mentioned, as a kettle-drum solo, at the very end of the coda of the symphony. This is a case where muscularity is permissible and the notes were given with appropriate power.

It is pleasant to note that the audiences are of the largest and that even those who are standing remain to the very last notes of the concerts; the symphony programmes were probably never better appreciated than at present. Louis C. Elson.

THE FOLLOWING ARTICLE APPEARED
THE CONCERT-GOER
SUCCESSOR TO
THE SONG JOURNAL
UNDER DATE OF
Oct 189

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The season will begin October 14 and promises to be one of the most brilliant ever given by the organization. Mr. Gericke, the newly appointed conductor, needs no words of introduction. His qualities as a conductor became well known during the five years (1884-1889) that he held the position. Mr. Gericke returned to Boston a few days ago, and will call the orchestra together for rehearsals at the beginning of October. He spent the summer months in making preparations for the season's concerts, and carefully examined the scores of a large number of new orchestral works. He found little, however, in the way of novelties which he considered worthy of a place on his programs. The only important new works to be given are symphonies by Sinding and Bruckner. Other notable performances will be Schumann's "Manfred," with chorus, soloists and reader, and Beethoven's Ninth (Choral) Symphony.

The list of soloists includes Mme. Gadski, Lady Halle (Norman Neruda), Mme. Carreno, Miss Aus der Ohe, Rosenthal, Sauer, Willy Burmester, Sahla, Ben Davies, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski, Schroeder and others.

The programs for the first four concerts are as follows:

FIRST CONCERT—Oct. 15.
Weber: Overture, "Euryanthe."
Bach: Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte.
String Orchestra.
Brahms: Variations on a Theme by Haydn (Chorale Sancti Antoni), op. 56.
Beethoven: Symphony No. 5, in C minor, op. 67.

SECOND CONCERT—Oct. 22.
Chadwick: Overture, "Melpomene."
Goldmark: Concerto for Violin in A minor, op. 28.
Mr. Franz Kneisel.
Smetana: Symphonic poem, "Vysehrad" (My Country.)
Schumann: Symphony No. 2, in C. major, op. 61.

THIRD CONCERT—Oct. 29.
Goldmark: Overture, "Im Fruehling" (In the Spring), op. 36.
Song.
Mme. Gadski.
Tschaikovsky: Symphony "Pathetique," No. 6, in B minor, op. 74.
Song.
Mme. Gadski.
Beethoven: Menuet and Fugue from the Quartet No. 9, op. 59.
String Orchestra.
Liszt: Hungarian Rhapsody No. 1.

FOURTH CONCERT—Nov. 5.
Brahms: Symphony No. 3, in F major, op. 90. Piano concerto.
Mr. Rosenthal.
Richard Strauss: Tone poem, "Don Juan," op. 20.
Wagner: Prelude and Closing Scene from "Tristan and Isolde."

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1898.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Mr. Kneisel Plays the Goldmark Concerto—An Old Program Brilliantly Performed.

The program of the second Symphony concert last night in Music Hall, Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, conductor, was as follows:

Overture, "Melpomene"..............Chadwick
Concerto for violin in A minor......Goldmark
Symphonic Poem, "Vysehrad".......Smetana
Symphony No. 2, in C major........Schumann

The air in Music Hall was hot, foul, stifling. Attempts at ventilation were crude and pneumonic. And yet in spite of most unfavorable atmospheric conditions, the performance was brilliant.

Mr. Chadwick's noble work was read by Mr. Gericke with profound care and intense dramatic spirit. The work itself well repays such attention. It has the antique tragic note, yet is it modern in the expression of classic feeling. The self-concentration of the composer is without dryness or austerity. The expression is dramatic without extravagance. The mould in which this expression is cast is one of ripe scholarship, without a flaw of pedantry. And a work that breathes the classic spirit and at the same time appeals irresistibly to a man of this generation, that binds together firmly fluent technic with individually imaginative thought may justly be called noble.

Mr. Kneisel played with loving interest and with all his admirable intelligence, taste and skill the concerto by Goldmark. The long-continued and richly deserved applause was for the violinist and not the work itself—I may say justly that it was in spite of the work. Goldmark of "The Queen of Sheba," Goldmark the Oriental, and Goldmark the composer of the overtures inspired by Grecian legends, is one man; the composer of the violin concerto is sadly inferior. The themes are not of marked beauty or strength, the development of them is generally uninteresting, and there is the constant thought of wearisome padding. To me the concerto is one of his weakest works.

Mr. Apthorp in the program-book has much to say in derision of "Herbeck's" arrangement of the air from Handel's "Serse," the air that is now known as "Handel's Largo." I suppose he had in mind Hellmesberger's arrangement, which, I regret to say, was played not long ago at a Symphony concert. I wish that instead of emptying vials of wrath on "Herbeck's" head, he had told us more about Smetana's "Vysehrad"; for he would have then spared some of us the trouble of exploration. "Vysehrad" was the first of the six symphonic poems that the patriotic Bohemian wrote from desire to celebrate musically his country. It was written in 1874, and the original score bears this melancholy line: "In a condition of ear-suffering." The second poem, "Vltava," written later in 1874, has the legend, "Completely deaf." "Vysehrad" is the "Hochburg," the acropolis of Prague. Lumir, to whom reference is made, was a sort of Bohemian Orpheus. The very simplicity, the monotony—if you please—of this work is extremely effective. The very repetition of the chief theme, which, by the way, is the chief theme of the whole cyclus, becomes the musical characterization of a nation. True, so far as absolute music is concerned, the piece might bear the title "Ireland," "Poland," "Fate"; for to us that are not Bohemians, this symphonic poem suggests through music, only contrasts of great lamentation and festal pride. As Emanuel Chvála well puts it, Smetana was a poet, a program-composer, a painter in words, a romanticist in the true meaning of the word. He was moved to music by thoughts outside of music. The performance was superb.

And all in all the performance of the symphony was great and long to be remembered. To me it is by no means the greatest of Schumann's symphonies, and the dry and abhorrent orchestration peculiar to the man—an ill-cut, drab garment clumsily worn by a man of wonderfully intimate thought and curious experiments in rhythm—is constantly between you and his thoughts, although you may finally accept the clothes for the sake of the wearer. Perhaps the slow movement was a little swollen beyond its real estate; for it is contemplative rather than passionate. But with this exception, it would be hard to find fault with either the reading or the performance. The orchestra is fast becoming an instrument on which Mr. Gericke plays at will. Let us be thankful that this will is sanely controlled, that it is not caprice, that is not used merely to startle an audience.

* * *

The program of the concert Saturday will be:

Overture, "In Spring"...............Goldmark
Aria from "Oberon"......................Weber
Mrs. Gadski.
Symphony No. 6.................Tschaikowsky
Aria from "Tannhauser"............Wagner
Mrs. Gadski.
Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 3.............Liszt

Philip Hale.

Almost every one who had any social aspiration in Boston or its vicinity crowded into Music Hall on Friday or Saturday of last week to set his or her personal stamp on the fact that the season of 1898-1899 had begun. There was a time when Boston prided herself upon being a literary centre—that day is passed. Now—today—music reigns supreme.

Music has always been more or less fashionable here, and now much more than less. We think that we are the musical centre of the United States, and if other cities do not all fall down before us, crowning us with the victorious musical laurel, yet they do respect our musical knowledge and allow that in no other city in our country is music so fashionable.

Thirty years ago music—good classical music—had a distinct fashionable following; but although the "Harvard" concerts attracted the best men and women Boston had to offer, yet our aristocracy in those days was too small to support any entertainments and too quiet and reserved to draw the masses to follow in their steps. As society has grown and the "Four Hundred" has sprung into existence, all this has changed. As the Prince and Princess of Wales make a fashion in London, so did our uncrowned queens of society in Boston, in later days, decide that music should be "the thing."

Crowded as the concert room is, both on Friday afternoons and Saturday evenings, yet we cannot help missing the presence of many men and women who have done so much to make music more than a fad here in Boston. The last thirty years have in their passage left many gaps in our ranks, and we vainly look for the faces of Theodore Chase, C. C. Perkins, J. S. Dwight, Otto Dressel, Charles R. Hayden, Mrs. James Lodge, Mrs Ware, Mrs. John A. Andrew and, indeed, of more than we can enumerate.

The sympathy and interest of those who have gone before have done much to make the musician's life here more than comfortable; for not only were hands held out, but houses were opened, and a social position was therefore attained here earlier than in, perhaps, any other American city.

As the younger generations grew up and stepped upon society's stage, musicians were found already there. So that now, not only do pianists, singers and conductors go into society, but so also do even many of the first violinists of the Symphony Orchestra. Indeed, it has several times been rumored that some Boston girl was about to join her fate to that of a violinist, but as yet only one, and she a suburbanite, came to the point and was really married.

In place of the once familiar faces, we see now in Music Hall on Saturday nights, chief amongst the supporters of all good concerts, a bevy of pretty or stylish women and a large number of fashionable male amateurs and poseurs. This set is always in full evidence, although perhaps the true music lovers keep in the background. These men and women know the artists and musicians, and try to keep thoroughly en rapport with them, although they deal out their favors and patronage with somewhat of an unequal hand.

On the other hand, on Friday afternoons, we find quite a different audience. Here are all of the sub-buds, the buds and the girls of a few seasons, and naturally in their train follow the young men who are devoted to society, whether they care for music or not. It is a prety sight to see such a sea of attractive faces and "smart" hats as we saw last Friday, and we could not help believing that some of the music seeds there sown would bear fruit; although it is a fact that the girls cared more to see each other, their "men friends" and the popular violinists than they did to listen to the music. For this reason it is a fact that the atmosphere is really more musical at the concerts than at the rehearsals.

It is much more fashionable to go to the rehearsals than to the concerts, and this fact is proved by the far larger prices paid for Friday's rehearsals. Everything is sacrificed to give the girls tickets; for without a good seat for the season a pretty girl feels quite out of society. She has to learn a certain musical jargon for her future Boston life—no matter whether she cannot distinguish "America" from Lohengrin's "Swan Song" or not—and where can she be better instructed than at Music Hall, surrounded by her own "smart" set?

It is too early to predict the belles amongst the coming debutantes, but a glimpse at the rehearsals assured us that the girls are pretty enough surely. Before the season is over, one of these girls may develop into a professional beauty; although Boston has not often produced that rara avis. Within the last 20 years we can recall but Mrs. De Forest Danielson, Mrs. Oliver Ames, Miss Eleanor Winslow, Mrs. Fiske Warren and Mrs. Joseph S. Fay, 3d. Although there are many women who, in our opinion, have really far more beauty, yet the others somehow never gained the reputation for beauty, which remains even, perhaps, when the beauty has begun to wane.

Although often, on a Saturday night, we can catch a glimpse, as it were, of the good old musicale times, when we see Mrs. Bell, Mrs. Pratt, Mrs. Whitman, Miss Frothingham, Mrs. W. B. Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Dixey, Mr. and Mrs. Josiah Bradlee—when they are home from abroad; Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Beebe, Messrs. Pierson and Frank Beebe, Mr. Frank Bartlett, Mr. Henry Sayles, Mrs. J. T. Eldridge, Mrs. Charles Homans, Mr. Frank Jackson, Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Lang, and once in a while Mr. Charles How, yet we realize these are the exceptions. A handful, so to speak, of these men and women only recalls the good old days, and makes it more evident that a new set has risen up with the Symphony Concerts, in whose hands is the present and perhaps the future of fashionable musical Boston.

Of course, today Mrs. Gardner and Mrs. Sears are the musical arbiters, and although both of these ladies are now in mourning, yet they will doubtless not give up their patronage and influence. Indeed, Mrs. Gardner has appeared at the concerts already, so she is to be counted upon as powerful as ever during the coming season. No one person can do more for an artist in Boston than can Mrs. Gardner; but even she cannot turn a mediocrity into a lasting success.

Mrs. Fiske Warren, although she is not really musical, yet she can be counted upon as one of the musical patronesses, as can, in rather a timid way, Mrs. Charles Inches. Mrs. W. F. Apthorp is announced to have a musical salon on Sunday nights, and from her husband's position she is able to show off many a musical lion. Mrs. Arthur Foote, after her long absence abroad, is settled in Dedham, so is out of the running; yet she is apt to be on hand for any special Saturday night. Mr. and Mrs. Franz Zerrahn are regular attendants, and can do much for fashionable artists, as can also Dr. and Mrs. Monks. Miss Candler is quite a personage, too, in the real musical world, and so is Miss Evelyn Ames. Russell Sullivan, William Blake, Clayton Johns, Charles Sampson and William Richardson are familiar figures at the concerts, and are all interested in music and the musicians; and also are a pleasant contrast to the "little boys" brought by some of the fashionable matrons as escorts. So that, after all, if the old musical days are no more, the present day is not quite so bad as we had feared.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.

MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 24, 1898.

The Second Symphony Concert —Chadwick's "Melpomene."

Kneisel's Violin Playing—A Work by Smetana.

The American Muse made her entrance early this season, being represented by Chadwick's "Melpomene" overture at the second symphony concert, given on Saturday.

Mr. Chadwick's overtures have become standard works on both sides of the Atlantic and are probably his most widely-known compositions. His first orchestral hearing in this country, years ago, was in the form of an overture, and even then he showed a firm grasp upon the classical side of this musical form.

"Melpomene" is a work full of suggestion, a spur to the imagination and poetry of the auditor, without being absolutely "programme-music." We are glad that it does not cross the border-line, for "programme-music," the instrumental music that paints a definite picture, that tells a definite story, is the weakest side of our art; when instrumental music becomes fixed in meaning it is far less graphic than Poetry or Painting, yet it is just this expression of Music that the uncultured mass is constantly craving; Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony is at the same time his weakest and his most popular symphony; here the auditor has a tangible thunder-storm, a real cuckoo, a brook that can be heard to purl, and he imagines, because he senses these things, that he is "understanding music."

Not of this objective character is this overture; it suggests a tragedy but allows the auditor to fill in the details; the English horn, (instrument of brooding melancholy), and the oboe (instrument of pathos), establish a gloomy mood even in the beginning of the introduction; a catastrophe of some sort is evident in the crash of kettle-drum and bass drum and the impressive pause thereafter, but of definite story there is none; the work remains subjective,—a stimulus to such poetry as the auditor may have within him.

Ample justice was done to the dignified work and the applause following it was emphatic enough to recall the conductor to the stand to acknowledge the enthusiasm.

Goldmark's violin concerto followed, with Mr. Franz Kneisel as the soloist. It was not a night for violin-playing; the weather was damp and sultry, just the night for the production of "dead" tones and the snapping of E strings.

Fortunately no mishap overtook the solo violin, although many an orchestral violin was rendered "hors de combat."

The concerto itself is not the most effective of works; it begins with Wagner and ends with Lalo; it promises heroism and leads to sentiment.

The classical form does not sit easily on Goldmark; even in his symphonies he goes over into the freer domain of suite and in his contrapuntal touches he is almost certain to leave the strict path; just as, in his second symphony, his fugato gives its answer in the sub-dominant instead of dominant (become a "fugue by imitation" of instead of a true fugue) so in this concerto he juggles with the fugal form in some degree. His canonic touches, however, are not without some beauty. The finale of the concerto is the most popular movement, a lively bolero which is easily grasped and followed, but by no means so easy to play.

Mr. Kneisel won a great success, phenomenal when one considers the added difficulties of unfavorable atmosphere. There is a constant charm in the surety with which he displays; auditorial anxiety, that dreadful bar to the enjoyment of difficult numbers, never exists when Franz Kneisel is performing the work.

The cadenza of the finale was a swift whirl of difficulties; double-stopping, harmonics in all profusion, skips without end, bridge tones ("sull' ponticello") and every other species of violin fireworks. Of course at the end of it all the soloist received recall after recall; he certainly won the ovation fairly.

Now followed one of the patriotic pictures of Bohemia by that great pioneer of the music of new Bohemia,—Smetana.

Music is often the child of Sorrow, either national or individual; with Smetana it was the offspring of both. To the brooding over the fallen state of a country whose artistic voice was scourged into silence during the great religious wars, there was added grief for family bereavements and dejection because of a total deafness that settled down upon the composer; finally came insanity and the life of the founder of a noble school, the teacher of Dvorak, went out in darkness.

Smetana's works often stand related to Bohemia in the same manner that Chopin's are bound to, and inspired by Poland. There is therefore a great interest, albeit tinged with melancholy, attaching to all his national subject. "Vysehrad" (the ancient Bohemian fortress) was the subject of the number given. It is called a "Symphonic poem," but only deserves the term if we take the adjective in its French sense, "Symphonique," meaning only "Orchestral," the work being far removed from the symmetrical form of symphony.

It is Ossianic in its character, splendor and regret being intertwined in a remarkable manner. Its bardic preluding (and Mr. Schuecker gave the harp passages with commendable abandon) was an impressive and fitting introduction to such a picture. Its melancholy is not unlike the lonely sadness which Mendelssohn expressed so finely in the finale of the Scotch symphony. The trumpets deserve a word of especial commendation for the smooth tone and excellent shading attained.

Decidedly Mr. Gericke has changed since he was last with us! It seemed strange to see him signalling for more force to the orchestra; he is no longer afraid of a powerful brass tone; in the old days the trombone-players used to say: "He sits on the bells of our instruments!" There was ample power, yet none too much, in the interpretation of this martial work.

Then came the symphony, the C major by Schumann. [illegible] performance altogether. One might call this work Schumann's "Heroic" symphony, for it is full of combat as Beethoven's E flat symphony, which it excels in its finale. This second symphony (really Schumann's third) has the merit of growing steadily stronger to its end; it is the most coherent and shapely of Schumann's four symphonies (or five if we count the "Overture, Scherzo and Finale" as a symphony) and the constant reappearance of the first figure of the introduction, a species of fanfare, in all the subsequent movements, gives a peculiar charm of continuity.

It begins with a great introduction, spite of the saying of an English critic that "it sounds like very bad improvising," a prelude in which coming events cast their shadows before in a most impressive manner.

The Scherzo was taken at a rattling pace and its chief theme was not entirely clear, but its Trios were excellently played. It is a wonder that Beethoven did not think of this idea of giving two Trios to a single Scherzo when one bears in mind the fact that he had this succession—Scherzo, Trio, Scherzo, Trio, Scherzo,—in his Seventh symphony, and something exactly like it in his fourth symphony and in one of his string quartettes, but always with a single Trio. Schumann undoubtedly derived the idea of his double trio from these works.

Oboe and flute deserve honorable mention for their work in the slow movement; the orchestra evidently has not retrograded here, but we fear that the phenomenal clarinette tone of M. Pourtau will never be replaced.

The finale, to us the gem of the work, was magnificently played. Here is a scene of combat which may stand beside the gusts of passion and power which are found in the development of Beethoven's third symphony. As the combat is not made merely by dissonances but by a constant opposition of two rhythms, 2-2 and 3-2, it is a very difficult affair to give clearly; it was intelligible in its every measure on this occasion. The concert began and ended with kettle-drum passages.

It is one of the boldest touches in Schumann's symphony, the giving of the two rhythms above mentioned, as a kettle-drum solo, at the very end of the coda of the symphony. This is a case where muscularity is permissible and the notes were given with appropriate power.

It is pleasant to note that the audiences are of the largest and that even those who are standing remain to the very last notes of the concerts; the symphony programmes were probably never better appreciated than at present.

Louis C. Elson.

THE FOLLOWING ARTICLE APPEARED
THE CONCERT-GOER
SUCCESSOR TO
THE SONG JOURNAL
UNDER DATE OF 189

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The season will begin October 14 and promises to be one of the most brilliant ever given by the organization. Mr. Gericke, the newly appointed conductor, needs no words of introduction. His qualities as a conductor became well known during the five years (1884-1889) that he held the position. Mr. Gericke returned to Boston a few days ago, and will call the orchestra together for rehearsals at the beginning of October. He spent the summer months in making preparations for the season's concerts, and carefully examined the scores of a large number of new orchestral works. He found little, however, in the way of novelties which he considered worthy of a place on his programs. The only important new works to be given are symphonies by Sinding and Bruckner. Other notable performances will be Schumann's "Manfred," with chorus, soloists and reader, and Beethoven's Ninth (Choral) Symphony.

The list of soloists includes Mme. Gadski, Lady Halle (Norman Neruda), Mme. Carreno, Miss Aus der Ohe, Rosenthal, Sauer, Willy Burmester, Sahla, Ben Davies, Kneisel, Loeffler, Adamowski, Schroeder and others.

The programs for the first four concerts are as follows:

FIRST CONCERT—Oct. 15.
Weber: Overture, "Euryanthe."
Bach: Prelude, Adagio and Gavotte.
String Orchestra.
Brahms: Variations on a Theme by Haydn (Chorale Sancti Antoni), op. 56.
Beethoven: Symphony No. 5, in C minor, op. 67.

SECOND CONCERT—Oct. 22.
Chadwick: Overture, "Melpomene."
Goldmark: Concerto for Violin in A minor, op. 28.
Mr. Franz Kneisel.
Smetana: Symphonic poem, "Vysehrad" (My Country.)
Schumann: Symphony No. 2, in C. major, op. 61.

THIRD CONCERT—Oct. 29.
Goldmark: Overture, "Im Fruehling" (In the Spring), op. 36.
Song.
Mme. Gadski.
Tschaikovsky: Symphony "Pathetique," No. 6, in B minor, op. 74.
Song.
Mme. Gadski.
Beethoven: Menuet and Fugue from the Quartet No. 9, op. 59.
String Orchestra.
Liszt: Hungarian Rhapsody No. 1.

FOURTH CONCERT—Nov. 5.
Brahms: Symphony No. 3, in F major, op. 90. Piano concerto.
Mr. Rosenthal.
Richard Strauss: Tone poem, "Don Juan," op. 20.
Wagner: Prelude and Closing Scene from "Tristan and Isolde."

[illegible] HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CIV., NO. 115.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1898.

SECOND SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Long Programme Rendered in a Masterly Manner.

Schumann's Symphonie No. 2, in C Major, Given with Magnificent Spirit—Goldmarke's Concerto for the Violin a Perfect Medium for Mr. Kneisel's Genius.

The second of this season's concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra was given in Music Hall last evening, the selections being:

Overture, "Melpomene" .... Chadwick
Concerto for violin, op. 28 .... Goldmark
Symphonic poem, "Vyschrad" .... Smetana
Symphony No. 2, in C major .... Schumann

Mr. Franz Kneisel was the soloist.

The playing of this long programme throughout was even finer than that of the first concerts. Again was felt the splendid precision that has been restored to the orchestra and still more impressively than before.

The symphony was given with magnificent spirit, especially the scherzo and the finale. It is, perhaps, the least interesting of Schumann's works in its class, with the exception of the lovely adago, which is among the most beautiful things that the composer ever produced, and this was read and played exquisitely. The strings were heard at their highest perfection and brilliancy in the finale. Mr. Gericke's reading of the work was faultless. It would be difficult to conceive and unreasonable to expect a more satisfactory interpretation than he accorded it.

Notably fine also was the rendering of Mr. Chadwick's strong, dramatic and thoughtful overture, in some respects the most solid and masterly of his orchestral works.

The Smetana symphonic poem is not remarkable in its themes nor its harmonic treatment, and what it says is more interesting for the naivete with which it is said, and for its frank simplicity, than for the substance of its utterances. It has the merits of clearness and a fiery and massive climax, but taken altogether, it has little that holds the attention or maintains any firm grasp on one's interest.

The Goldmark work deserves a foremost place among latter-day concertos. It is always lofty in inspiration, pure in taste and noble in style, and is essentially the artist's as contrasted with the mere virtuoso's concerto. There is little in it of display for display's sake, and yet it is immensely exacting in the demands it makes on the performer. Its themes are singularly chaste in character and dignified in treatment, the slow movement in particular being delightfully chaste in its principal theme and of indescribably tender grace of oriental feeling.

The warmth, finish and refined elegance of style that so pleasingly mark Mr. Kneisel's playing found a perfect medium for their display in this work. It would be supererogatory at this late date to dwell on the fluent and masterly technique, the flawless intonation, the artistic sentiment and the fidelity with which he adheres to what is most admirable in his art. It will suffice to state that they were all present at their very best in his rendering of the concerto, and that he was lustily and long applauded and frequently recalled with the heartiest appreciation. There was much enthusiasm for Mr. Gericke and for the performances generally.

The programme for the next concert is: "Im Fruehling," Goldmark; Elizabeth's aria from "Tannhauser," Wagner; Symphony "Pathetique," Tschaikowsky; aria from "Oberon," Weber, and Hungarian rhapsody No. 2, in D [illegible], Liszt. Mme. Gadski is to be the [illegible]

At the second rehearsal of the Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon the rain made no difference in the attendance, for there was a splendid audience. Naturally on account of the weather the women were more quietly gowned than on the first afternoon a week ago, when it was almost like summer. Mrs. William Hooper was one of the best dressed women there, in her severe tailor-made, with her high linen collar and black cravat and black walking hat, and Mrs. P. V. R. Ely looked exceedingly fit also. Mrs. Oliver Ames was a little less severe in style, and her toque was brightened with color. The Montgomery Sears' seats were empty on account of Mrs. Sears' recent affliction, and Mrs. Gardner was absent from hers. One felt like thanking those young women in the right-hand balcony who made a welcome bit of sunshine with their yellow silk shirts. Others there not noted the week before were Mr. Andrew Wheelwright and Miss Wheelwright, Mrs. William A. French, Mrs. B. F. Nourse, Mrs. Arthur Cheney, Mrs. A. M. Newton, Miss Constance Tippett, Miss Elizabeth Eustis, Mr. and Mrs. [illegible] M. Baker, Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher [illegible], Mrs. Charles P. Hemenway, Miss Hemenway, Mrs. Joshua Crane, Mr. and Mrs. Dana Estes, Mr. and Mrs. Franz Zerrhan, Mrs. Frank S. Chick, Mrs. William A. Tucker, Mrs. Frank Morison, Mr. and Mrs. Philip M. Little, Mrs. Philip Dexter, Mrs. Harry S. Hall, Miss Elinor Curtis, with her guest, Mrs. [illegible] of Virginia, Mr. and Mrs. William [illegible] Kellen, Mr. R. Mason Winthrop, Mr. Edward D. Brigham and Mrs. Arthur M. Milliken. Mr. Kneisel was called out five times after his masterly solo. As Gadski sings this week every seat and all the standing tickets were [illegible] by Friday night.

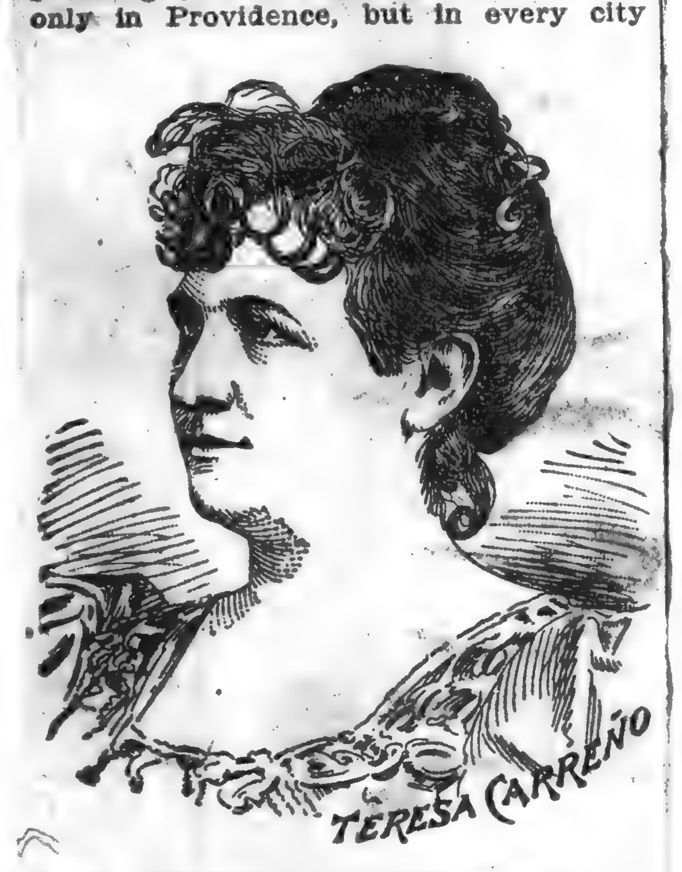
At the first concert of the Symphony Orchestra, a week ago Saturday night, the hall was even more densely filled than at the rehearsal the afternoon before, and Mr. Gericke's welcome as he [illegible] beside the rose and smilax wreathed desk, which Mrs. Henry L. [illegible] possible, more hearty and prolonged. Mrs. Gericke sat with Prof. John K. Paine and Mrs. Kneisel, and was the object of much interest for those around her who knew who she was.

In the vast audience were noted among the regular subscribers Mr. and Mrs. Higginson and Mr. Alexander Higginson, who had with them the latter's fiancee, Miss Rosamond Tudor; Mr. Robert M. Cushing and Miss Cushing, just up from Newport; Mrs. Ogden Codman and family, Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Lang and Miss Lang, Mr. W. P. Blake, Mr. and Mrs. Robert G. Shaw, 2d, Miss Annie Blake, Mrs. John L. Gardner and Mr. George Proctor, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Foote, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Goddard, Mr. Benjamin Crowninshield, Mr. S. Lothrup Thorndike, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Dana of Cambridge, Mr. and Mrs. S. Parkman Blake, Mr. Russell Sullivan, Mr. Harry Burnett, Sig. and Mme. Rotoli, Mr. and Mrs. George Chadwick, Prof. Baermann, Mr. Henry W. Swift, Mr. and Mrs. Apthorp, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Profs. Horatio Parker and Samuel Sanford of Yale, Prof. Royce of Cambridge, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Morse, Dr. E. E. Jack and Mr. H. G. Tucker. Mr. Gericke held quite a reception after the concert in the artist's room, when he presented many of his old friends to his wife.

TELEGRAM, PROVIDENCE.

OCTOBER 23, 1898

The sale of season tickets for the eight concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra opens tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock at the box office, Infantry hall. Providence divides with Harvard university, Cambridge, the distinction of having heard the Boston Symphony orchestra for a period of sixteen years—the longest period of any city outside of Boston. It is a great tribute to the standing of this organization that, not only in Providence, but in every city where concerts are given, the clientele of sixteen years ago can still be found in the audiences, with everywhere a steadily growing patronage. It is worthy of note that eight concerts are given in this city at the same price which is charged for only five in other cities.



MME. TERESA CARRENO, WHO APPEARS HERE WITH THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The question of the success of Conductor Gericke was entirely dissipated by the remarkable reception accorded him at the opening concert in Boston on Saturday evening, Oct. 15. Rarely has such a great ovation been witnessed in Boston, in which a resounding fanfare from the brasses in the orchestra was clearly heard above the loud applause of the audience. The personnel of the orchestra is practically the same, and it is quite evident that the newcomers have made a most delightful impression. The list of soloists for the coming season is an exceptionally fine one, including artists who have already established themselves as strong favorites in Providence. Mme. Gadski scored a most brilliant success last season, and is sure of a warm welcome at the first concert on Wedneday evening, Nov. 2.

It may be of general interest to know that the season ticket sale in Philadelphia last Monday surpassed all previous records and reached the absolute limit, every seat in the house, boxes and all, being sold for the entire season in three hours.

MUSICAL AMERICA

New York, October 22, 1898.

THE MUSICAL SEASON OPENS.

BOSTON, MASS., Oct. 17, 1898.

The musical season in this town was inaugurated Saturday evening, October 15, at the Music Hall (which, by the way, is now a dingy, uncomfortable, in fact a disgraceful auditorium for a city like Boston, that boasts of its musical culture and high artistic standard generally), by the initial concert of the series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, whose reappearance as the conductor of the famous organization was the cause of a most tumultuous and prolonged ovation upon the part of the audience assembled, an audience that filled every seat and occupied every inch of standing room.

Time has dealt gently with Conductor Gericke since his departure from this city nine years ago. There are fewer hairs to be counted upon his head, to be sure, and there are streaks of gray in his beard, but otherwise, excepting that he now wears spectacles when he conducts, he has changed very little in personal appearance—the same erect posture, dignified presence and positive command being still strongly marked in his present attitude.

The audience that so enthusiastically received Gericke was a most brilliant one, including the musical lights, patrons of musical art and, generally, the elect of the town.

When the tremendous spontaneous greeting of the audience was over, Conductor Gericke turned to his stand, to find it beautifully decorated with roses and smilax, an offering by Mrs. Henry L. Higginson.

The programme was as follows: Overture to "Euryanthe," Weber; prelude, adagio and gavotte for strings, Bach; variations on a theme by Haydn, Brahms; and symphony, No. 5, Beethoven. This in my judgment was not a model programme. Its dominant characteristic was monotony.

In fairness to Gericke, let us hope he had two reasons for such a selection of material. One being that it was easy of rehearsal, the other, that it was a facsimile of the programme of the last concert of the Symphony series that he conducted before his departure nine years ago.

Of the performance it can be said that the master hand was manifest from the first to last. To begin with, there was that firm, simple, intelligent beat that is the fundamental element in the art of conducting. Generally there was a near approximation to good attack, precision, dynamic contrast and normal tone production, something that has been conspicuous by its absence since Gericke departed at the end of his first term.

But the results obtained, rare as they were, did not compare with those so familiar to the critical listeners to his earlier efforts, for there were times on this occasion when the attack somewhat faltered and unity of movement was slightly disturbed.

Then, again, there was a too forcible effort apparent in the violins which stopped but little short of rasping, and the trumpets grew fierce at times, while occasionally the wood-wind was overloud and harsh to a degree that surprised me.

But these comparisons are made with the standard in mind that Gericke established in his earlier efforts after he had drilled and disciplined his players. It must be remembered that this orchestra during the past nine years has "grabbed the bits" and run at its own sweet will.

There was not much opportunity to judge of the ability of the new members engaged this season. It may be said, however, that Mr. Longy, the first oboe, late of Colonne's Orchestra, revealed, in the little he had of prominence to do, a fine, pungent tone and a marked command of his instrument. Mr. Marquarre, flute, of the Lamoureau Orchestra, had very little opportunity for displaying his powers, but what little I heard did not impress me with the quality of his intonation. The weak link in the orchestral chain since Molé left has been the first flute. It is to be hoped that Mr. Marquarre will rise above nervousness and present his best efforts, if that is the obstacle to be overcome.

The new first clarinet, Mr. Selmer, has a most ungrateful task on hand in that he must follow the lamented Pourtau, whose playing was the acme of artistic effort. Shall we ever look upon his like again? Well, we must not anticipate Mr. Selmer's opportunity with anything but the most hopeful encouragement.

For the new drummer, Mr. Rettberg—God be praised!—he had ample opportunity to prove his worth on this occasion. To speak of the readings of the works by Gericke is to praise the lofty, consciencious, if rather conservative interpretations of the compositions. The Bach piece however was a revelation and was by far the most marked effort of the evening. The audience was thrilled with its performance and Gericke was recalled to acknowledge the enthusiastic applause it evoked.

After the concert Mr. Gericke held a reception in the ante-room and presented his talented wife to a host of his old friends and admirers. Mrs. Gericke and Mrs. Kneisel sat with Prof. John K. Paine, the eminent composer, during the concert.

Well, the eighteenth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is launched, thanks to the generosity of Henry L. Higginson, and upon November 9 and 10 you will have an opportunity in New York to judge if its standard remains the same or has been raised under the command of Gericke's baton.

WARREN DAVENPORT.

Boston Symphony Concerts.—This orchestra will give two series of concerts in New York, at Carnegie Hall, on Wednesday afternoons, November 9, December 14, January 18, February 22 and March 22 and on Thursday evenings November 10, December 15, January 19, February 23 and March 23.

Fine String Sextet.—The Richard Arnold String Sextet, of New York, this season comprises Richard Arnold, violin; Emil Gramm, viola and violin;

MUSICAL BALTIMORE.

BALTIMORE, October 15, 1898.

The musical season which is about to begin is likely to determine whether Baltimore is to be reckoned among the really musical American cities.

If it is possible to sustain all the enterprises that are at present being talked of, this city will immediately take an important position. Never has there been so much promise, never have the conditions been more favorable to success.

During the summer months it seemed as though the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the monthly visits of which have been for the past ten years the most interesting musical events of the season, had shaken the dust of Baltimore from its feet and were going to retire permanently from this unfruitful field. The shock of this announcement served to bring the public to its senses, and a few—financially as well as musically—prominent men put their heads together. There was a pooling of purses as well as of ideas. The result was a guarantee fund and the assurance that the Bostonians would call again, with the proviso that if the public was not good and did not come to the concerts in larger numbers, Baltimore would be stricken from its visiting list.

Washington has suffered such a disgrace this year, and the people from Washington are expected to come over here to hear the Symphony concerts in the same way that they were compelled to come to Baltimore to see the actor Booth, who, since the assasination of Lincoln, had always omitted the capital city on his tournée.

Then there are rumors, at present somewhat undefined, that the doughty Paur will bring his cohorts from the Waldorf-Astoria and attack the fashionable musical circle of Baltimore.

Thomas promises one concert, which ought to be the occasion of a great gathering, for his concert here last season might be considered "epoch-making."

The Boston Traveler

THE SYMPHONY. 24

An Excellent Concert, With Mr. Kneisel as the Soloist—Chadwick's Fine Overture.

Eighteenth season Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, conductor. Mr. Kneisel, soloist. The programme: Overture, "Melpomene," Chadwick; concerto for violin, in A minor, Goldmark; symphonic poem, "Vysehrad," Smetana; Symphony No. 2, in C major, Schumann.

It was a pleasure to hear again Mr. Chadwick's noble "Melpomene" overture. Such works thrill us with a very pardonable pride in our American composers, but at the same time make us wish that a greater output of really great things would show itself at the present time. The piece was played with a sombre elegance that well befitted it.

Mr. Kneisel was in fine form for the Goldmark concerto; that is to say, he played the rather dull work with exquisite care and taste. He still lacks, and always will lack, the power to thrill. No passion lies in his perfect intonation, his clean and beautiful execution, his charming grace. In his line he is everything desirable, but that line does not form itself into the rounded circle. However, his playing was delightful, and he was deservedly called out twice or thrice. Mr. Gericke's perfection of accompaniment leading was noticeable.

The "Vysehrad" of that curious genius Smetana was given with just a shade too much of restraint, it seemed to me. However, it was irreproachably played in all other respects. The Schumann symphony showed at once Mr. Gericke's freer manner in this year of '98. The brasses came forth gloriously, and there was less square-cut classicism than of old in the whole work. It was fine in every way, and that last grand movement was more stirring and uplifting than for many a day at these concerts.

WILDER D. QUINT.

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CIV., NO. 115.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1898.

SECOND SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Long Programme Rendered in a Masterly Manner.

Schumann's Symphonie No. 2, in C Major, Given with Magnificent Spirit—Goldmarke's Concerto for the Violin a Perfect Medium for Mr. Kneisel's Genius.

The second of this season's concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra was given in Music Hall last evening, the selections being:

Overture, "Melpomene"	Chadwick
Concerto for violin, op. 28	Goldmark
Symphonic poem, "Vyschrad"	Smetana
Symphony No. 2, in C major	Schumann

Mr. Franz Kneisel was the soloist.

The playing of this long programme throughout was even finer than that of the first concerts. Again was felt the splendid precision that has been restored to the orchestra and still more impressively than before.

The symphony was given with magnificent spirit, especially the scherzo and the finale. It is, perhaps, the least interesting of Schumann's works in its class, with the exception of the lovely adago, which is among the most beautiful things that the composer ever produced, and this was read and played exquisitely. The strings were heard at their highest perfection and brilliancy in the finale. Mr. Gericke's reading of the work was faultless. It would be difficult to conceive and unreasonable to expect a more satisfactory interpretation than he accorded it.

Notably fine also was the rendering of Mr. Chadwick's strong, dramatic and thoughtful overture, in some respects the most solid and masterly of his orchestral works.

The Smetana symphonic poem is not remarkable in its themes nor its harmonic treatment, and what it says is more interesting for the naivete with which it is said, and for its frank simplicity, than for the substance of its utterances. It has the merits of clearness and a fiery and massive climax, but taken altogether, it has little that holds the attention or maintains any firm grasp on one's interest.

The Goldmark work deserves a foremost place among latter-day concertos. It is always lofty in inspiration, pure in taste and noble in style, and is essentially the artist's as contrasted with the mere virtuoso's concerto. There is little in it of display for display's sake, and yet it is immensely exacting in the demands it makes on the performer. Its themes are singularly chaste in character and dignified in treatment, the slow movement in particular being delightfully chaste in its principal theme and of indescribably tender grace of oriental feeling.

The warmth, finish and refined elegance of style that so pleasingly mark Mr. Kneisel's playing found a perfect medium for their display in this work. It would be supererogatory at this late date to dwell on the fluent and masterly technique, the flawless intonation, the artistic sentiment and the fidelity with which he adheres to what is most admirable in his art. It will suffice to state that they were all present at their very best in his rendering of the concerto, and that he was lustily and long applauded and frequently recalled with the heartiest appreciation. There was much enthusiasm for Mr. Gericke and for the performances generally.

The programme for the next concert is: "Im Fruehling," Goldmark; Elizabeth's aria from "Tannhauser," Wagner; Symphony "Pathetique," Tschaikowsky; aria from "Oberon," Weber, and Hungarian rhapsody No. 3, in D minor, Liszt. Mme. Gadski is to be the soloist.

At the second rehearsal of the Symphony Orchestra Friday afternoon the rain made no difference in the attendance, for there was a splendid audience. Naturally on account of the weather the women were more quietly gowned than on the first afternoon a week ago, when it was almost like summer. Mrs. William Hooper was one of the best dressed women there, in her severe tailor-made, with her high linen collar and black cravat and black walking hat, and Mrs. P. V. R. Ely looked exceedingly fit also. Mrs. Oliver Ames was a little less severe in style, and her toque was brightened with color. The Montgomery Sears' seats were empty on account of Mrs. Sears' recent affliction, and Mrs. Gardner was absent from hers. One felt like thanking those young women in the right-hand balcony who made a welcome bit of sunshine with their yellow silk shirts. Others there not noted the week before were Mr. Andrew Wheelwright and Miss Wheelwright, Mrs. William A. French, Mrs. B. F. Nourse, Mrs. Arthur Cheney, Mrs. A. M. Newton, Miss Constance Tippett, Miss Elizabeth Eustis, Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Baker, Mr. and Mrs. Fletcher Ranney, Mrs. Charles P. Hemenway, Miss Hemenway, Mrs. Joshua Crane, Mr. and Mrs. Dana Estes, Mr. and Mrs. Franz Zerrhan, Mrs. Frank S. Chick, Mrs. William A. Tucker, Mrs. Frank Morison, Mr. and Mrs. Philip M. Little, Mrs. Philip Dexter, Mrs. Harry S. Hall, Miss Elinor Curtis, with her guest, Mrs. Minor of Virginia, Mr. and Mrs. William Vail Kellen, Mr. R. Mason Winthrop, Mr. Edward D. Brigham and Mrs. Arthur M. Milliken. Mr. Kneisel was called out five times after his masterly solo. As Gadski sings this week every seat and all the standing tickets were sold by Friday night.

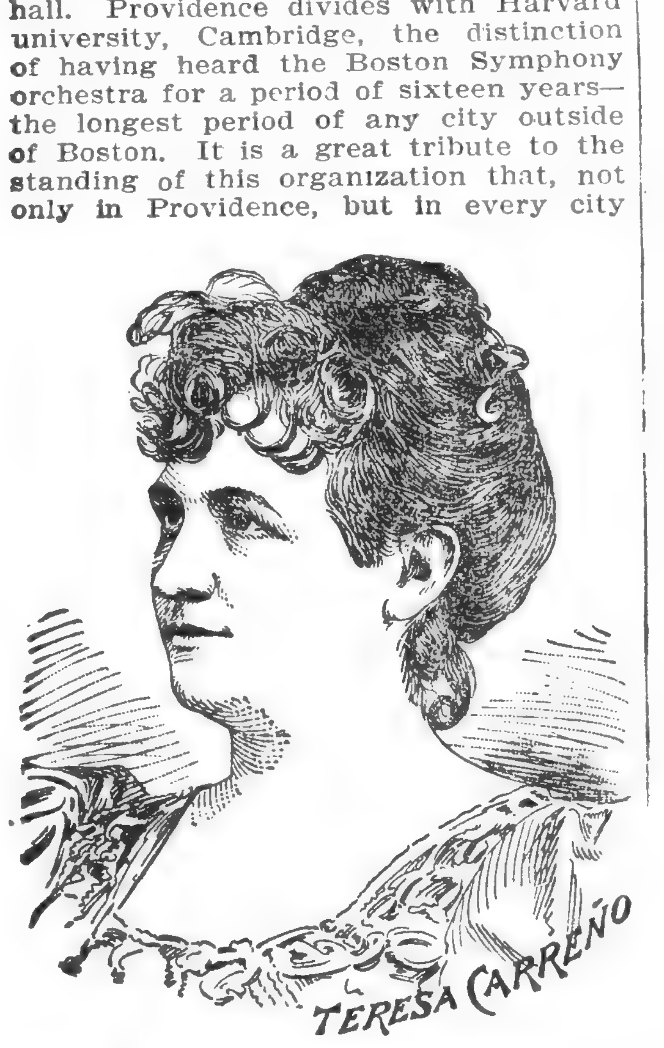
At the first concert of the Symphony orchestra, a week ago Saturday night, the hall was even more densely filled than at the rehearsal the afternoon before, and Mr. Gericke's welcome as he stood beside the rose and smilax wreathed desk, which Mrs. Henry L. Higginson had trimmed for him, was, if possible, more hearty and prolonged. Mrs. Gericke sat with Prof. John K. Paine and Mrs. Kneisel, and was the object of much interest for those around her who knew who she was.

In the vast audience were noted among the regular subscribers Mr. and Mrs. Higginson and Mr. Alexander Higginson, who had with them the latter's fiancee, Miss Rosamond Tudor; Mr. Robert M. Cushing and Miss Cushing, just up from Newport; Mrs. Ogden Codman and family, Mr. and Mrs. B. J. Lang and Miss Lang, Mr. W. P. Blake, Mr. and Mrs. Robert G. Shaw, 2d, Miss Annie Blake, Mrs. John L. Gardner and Mr. George Proctor, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Foote, Mr. and Mrs. George A. Goddard, Mr. Benjamin Crowninshield, Mr. S. Lothrup Thorndike, Mr. and Mrs. R. H. Dana of Cambridge, Mr. and Mrs. S. Parkman Blake, Mr. Russell Sullivan, Mr. Harry Burnett, Sig. and Mme. Rotoli, Mr. and Mrs. George Chadwick, Prof. Baermann, Mr. Henry W. Swift, Mr. and Mrs. Apthorp, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Steinert, Profs. Horatio Parker and Samuel Sanford of Yale, Prof. Royce of Cambridge, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Morse, Dr. E. E. Jack and Mr. H. G. Tucker. Mr. Gericke held quite a reception after the concert in the artist's room, when he presented many of his old friends to his wife.

TELEGRAM, PROVIDENCE.

OCTOBER 23, 1898

The sale of season tickets for the eight concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra opens tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock at the box offce, Infantry hall. Providence divides with Harvard university, Cambridge, the distinction of having heard the Boston Symphony orchestra for a period of sixteen years—the longest period of any city outside of Boston. It is a great tribute to the standing of this organization that, not only in Providence, but in every city where concerts are given, the clientele of sixteen years ago can still be found in the audiences, with everywhere a steadily growing patronage. It is worthy of note that eight concerts are given in this city at the same price which is charged for only five in other cities.



MME. TERESA CARRENO, WHO APPEARS HERE WITH THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA.

The question of the success of Conductor Gericke was entirely dissipated by the remarkable reception accorded him at the opening concert in Boston on Saturday evening, Oct. 15. Rarely has such a great ovation been witnessed in Boston, in which a resounding fanfare from the brasses in the orchestra was clearly heard above the loud applause of the audience. The personnel of the orchestra is practically the same, and it is quite evident that the newcomers have made a most delightful impression. The list of soloists for the coming season is an exceptionally fine one, including artists who have already established themselves as strong favorites in Providence. Mme. Gadski scored a most brilliant success last season, and is sure of a warm welcome at the first concert on Wedneday evening, Nov. 2.

It may be of general interest to know that the season ticket sale in Philadelphia last Monday surpassed all previous records and reached the absolute limit, every seat in the house, boxes and all, being sold for the entire season in three hours.

MUSICAL AMERICA

EDITED BY JOHN C FREUND

PUBLISHED AT 27 UNION SQUARE NEW YORK

New York, October 22, 1898.

THE MUSICAL SEASON OPENS.

BOSTON, MASS., Oct. 17, 1898.

The musical season in this town was inaugurated Saturday evening, October 15, at the Music Hall (which, by the way, is now a dingy, uncomfortable, in fact a disgraceful auditorium for a city like Boston, that boasts of its musical culture and high artistic standard generally), by the initial concert of the series of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Wilhelm Gericke, whose reappearance as the conductor of the famous organization was the cause of a most tumultuous and prolonged ovation upon the part of the audience assembled, an audience that filled every seat and occupied every inch of standing room.

Time has dealt gently with Conductor Gericke since his departure from this city nine years ago. There are fewer hairs to be counted upon his head, to be sure, and there are streaks of gray in his beard, but otherwise, excepting that he now wears spectacles when he conducts, he has changed very little in personal appearance—the same erect posture, dignified presence and positive command being still strongly marked in his present attitude.

The audience that so enthusiastically received Gericke was a most brilliant one, including the musical lights, patrons of musical art and, generally, the elect of the town.

When the tremendous spontaneous greeting of the audience was over, Conductor Gericke turned to his stand, to find it beautifully decorated with roses and smilax, an offering by Mrs. Henry L. Higginson.

The programme was as follows: Overture to "Euryanthe," Weber; prelude, adagio and gavotte for strings, Bach; variations on a theme by Haydn, Brahms; and symphony, No. 5, Beethoven. This in my judgment was not a model programme. Its dominant characteristic was monotony.

In fairness to Gericke, let us hope he had two reasons for such a selection of material. One being that it was easy of rehearsal, the other, that it was a facsimile of the programme of the last concert of the Symphony series that he conducted before his departure nine years ago.

Of the performance it can be said that the master hand was manifest from the first to last. To begin with, there was that firm, simple, intelligent beat that is the fundamental element in the art of conducting. Generally there was a near approximation to good attack, precision, dynamic contrast and normal tone production, something that has been conspicuous by its absence since Gericke departed at the end of his first term.

But the results obtained, rare as they were, did not compare with those so familiar to the critical listeners to his earlier efforts, for there were times on this occasion when the attack somewhat faltered and unity of movement was slightly disturbed.

Then, again, there was a too forcible effort apparent in the violins which stopped but little short of rasping, and the trumpets grew fierce at times, while occasionally the wood-wind was overloud and harsh to a degree that surprised me.

But these comparisons are made with the standard in mind that Gericke established in his earlier efforts after he had drilled and disciplined his players. It must be remembered that this orchestra during the past nine years has "grabbed the bits" and run at its own sweet will.

There was not much opportunity to judge of the ability of the new members engaged this season. It may be said, however, that Mr. Longy, the first oboe, late of Colonne's Orchestra, revealed, in the little he had of prominence to do, a fine, pungent tone and a marked command of his instrument. Mr. Marquarre, flute, of the Lamoureau Orchestra, had very little opportunity for displaying his powers, but what little I heard did not impress me with the quality of his intonation. The weak link in the orchestral chain since Molé left has been the first flute. It is to be hoped that Mr. Marquarre will rise above nervousness and present his best efforts, if that is the obstacle to be overcome.

The new first clarinet, Mr. Selmer, has a most ungrateful task on hand in that he must follow the lamented Pourtau, whose playing was the acme of artistic effort. Shall we ever look upon his like again? Well, we must not anticipate Mr. Selmer's opportunity with anything but the most hopeful encouragement.

For the new drummer, Mr. Rettberg—God be praised!—he had ample opportunity to prove his worth on this occasion. To speak of the readings of the works by Gericke is to praise the lofty, consciencious, if rather conservative interpretations of the compositions. The Bach piece however was a revelation and was by far the most marked effort of the evening. The audience was thrilled with its performance and Gericke was recalled to acknowledge the enthusiastic applause it evoked.

After the concert Mr. Gericke held a reception in the ante-room and presented his talented wife to a host of his old friends and admirers. Mrs. Gericke and Mrs. Kneisel sat with Prof. John K. Paine, the eminent composer, during the concert.

Well, the eighteenth season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is launched, thanks to the generosity of Henry L. Higginson, and upon November 9 and 10 you will have an opportunity in New York to judge if its standard remains the same or has been raised under the command of Gericke's baton.

WARREN DAVENPORT.

Boston Symphony Concerts.—This orchestra will give two series of concerts in New York, at Carnegie Hall, on Wednesday afternoons, November 9, December 14, January 18, February 22 and March 22 and on Thursday evenings November 10, December 15, January 19, February 23 and March 23.

Fine String Sextet.—The Richard Arnold String Sextet, of New York, this season comprises Richard Arnold, violin; Emil Gramm, viola and violin;

MUSICAL BALTIMORE.

BALTIMORE, October 15, 1898.

The musical season which is about to begin is likely to determine whether Baltimore is to be reckoned among the really musical American cities.

If it is possible to sustain all the enterprises that are at present being talked of, this city will immediately take an important position. Never has there been so much promise, never have the conditions been more favorable to success.

During the summer months it seemed as though the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the monthly visits of which have been for the past ten years the most interesting musical events of the season, had shaken the dust of Baltimore from its feet and were going to retire permanently from this unfruitful field. The shock of this announcement served to bring the public to its senses, and a few—financially as well as musically—prominent men put their heads together. There was a pooling of purses as well as of ideas. The result was a guarantee fund and the assurance that the Bostonians would call again, with the proviso that if the public was not good and did not come to the concerts in larger numbers, Baltimore would be stricken from its visiting list.

Washington has suffered such a disgrace this year, and the people from Washington are expected to come over here to hear the Symphony concerts in the same way that they were compelled to come to Baltimore to see the actor Booth, who, since the assasination of Lincoln, had always omitted the capital city on his tournée.

Then there are rumors, at present somewhat undefined, that the doughty Paur will bring his cohorts from the Waldorf-Astoria and attack the fashionable musical circle of Baltimore.

Thomas promises one concert, which ought to be the occasion of a great gathering, for his concert here last season might be considered "epoch-making."

The Boston Traveler

THE SYMPHONY.

An Excellent Concert, With Mr. Kneisel as the Soloist—Chadwick's Fine Overture.

Eighteenth season Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mr. Wilhelm Gericke, conductor. Mr. Kneisel, soloist. The programme: Overture, "Melpomene," Chadwick; concerto for violin, in A minor, Goldmark; symphonic poem, "Vysehrad," Smetana; Symphony No. 2, in C major, Schumann.

It was a pleasure to hear again Mr. Chadwick's noble "Melpomene" overture. Such works thrill us with a very pardonable pride in our American composers, but at the same time make us wish that a greater output of really great things would show itself at the present time. The piece was played with a sombre elegance that well befitted it.

Mr. Kneisel was in fine form for the Goldmark concerto; that is to say, he played the rather dull work with exquisite care and taste. He still lacks, and always will lack, the power to thrill. No passion lies in his perfect intonation, his clean and beautiful execution, his charming grace. In his line he is everything desirable, but that line does not form itself into the rounded circle. However, his playing was delightful, and he was deservedly called out twice or thrice. Mr. Gericke's perfection of accompaniment leading was noticeable.

The "Vysehrad" of that curious genius Smetana was given with just a shade too much of restraint, it seemed to me. However, it was irreproachably played in all other respects. The Schumann symphony showed at once Mr. Gericke's freer manner in this year of '98. The brasses came forth gloriously, and there was less square-cut classicism than of old in the whole work. It was fine in every way, and that last grand movement was more stirring and uplifting than for many a day at these concerts.

WILDER D. QUINT.

OCTOBER 24, 1898

Music Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The programme of the second Symphony concert, given in the Music Hall last Saturday evening, was:

Chadwick: Overture, "Melpomene."
Goldmark: Concerto for Violin, in A minor, opus 28.
Smetana: Symphonic Poem, "Vysehrad" (No. 1 in the Cyclus "Ma Vlast").
Schumann: Symphony No. 2, in C major, opus 61.
Mr. Franz Kneisel was the violinist.

A concert to be marked on the records with a white stone! Mr. Gericke's work with the orchestra is telling more and more. Moreover, he is giving evidence of the effect the last eight years or so have had upon himself. Always a strict martinet, an incomparable technician, a virtuoso with the baton, also an exceptionally solid musician, he now shows the effects of having, so to speak, changed places with the public for a considerable period, of having had the leisure to listen to a great deal of music and ponder thereon, free from the contracting and depressing harassments of daily executive routine. In a word, his relations to music during the last eight years have been mainly of the poetic, higher artistic sort, untinged with merely technical considerations; and now that he has returned to professional executive work, he evinces an inspiring resiliency of mind and spirit, a nervous energy—which is not the same thing as nervous irritability—that, combined with his other high qualities, make him an ideal interpreter of works of true genius. It is the difference between Gericke sick and Gericke well; between Gericke tired out bodily and mentally with the hard labor of building up a matchless orchestra—out of sometimes recalcitrant material—and Gericke refreshed with a thorough rest, at the head of an already nearly perfect orchestra which asks nothing better than to obey.

The performance of Mr. Chadwick's "Melpomene" was nothing short of ideal. Mr. Gericke's keen musical insight pierced straight to the very heart of the work; never was a finer piece of summing-up, of detecting the chief characteristic of a composition and making that characteristic vividly predominant in the performance. To our mind this cardinal trait in Mr. Chadwick's "Melpomene" is well indicated by the sub-title he originally intended to give to the overture—unless we are misinformed—taking it as a pendant to his earlier "Thalia," which he called "an overture to an imaginary comedy." The "Melpomene" was, in a similar sense, to have been "an overture to an imaginary tragedy;" and here we have the hint. By "tragedy" the composer plainly understood something quite as specific as is implied in the French word "tragédie"—a tragedy in the higher, classical sense of the term; a tragic play that was not in the least a melodrama. In this overture Mr. Chadwick has indeed thrown off his usual romantic habit; one finds in the music a certain stately grandeur, a noble reserve in expression, such as are essentially tragic and classic. And this characteristic trait of the music Mr. Gericke threw into the finest relief; no one could mistake the work for "an overture to an imaginary melodrama."

From the "Melpomene" to Smetana's "Vysehrad" is a longish leap; there is no tinge of classicism to Smetana's symphonic poem; it breathes forth the purest spirit of romanticism, of poetic and picturesque suggestion. One could not but recall how the work produced no impression at all, when it was first given here, some years ago; how it seemed merely flimsy and, as the Germans say, nichtssagend. Last Saturday evening, it seemed not particularly strong, perhaps, as pure music, but full of compelling emotional fire and of the most inspiring poetic imagery. The performance was superb at every point; what a tone came from the combined brass in fortissimo!—a true fortissimo, both mellow and brilliant, more soul-compelling than strident noise. One has heard a good deal about conductors being "poets;" one has even got rather tired of the phrase, which, judging from some examples, seemed to mean something more poetic than musical. In conducting the "Vysehrad," Mr. Gericke stood forth as a true poet—who had not forgotten to be a musician.

And the Schumann symphony? Well, if the palm is to be given to any one performance at this memorable concert, let it be to that of the symphony—especially of the first movement. One felt like calling Schumann up from his grave and bidding him listen—to return more than satisfied! The symphony actually sounded as if it had been a masterly piece of scoring! And yet the peculiar individuality of Schumann's orchestration was nowhere obscured! This point is worth considering a little. Schumann has—and with no little justice—been considered an essentially poor scorer; the facts that his orchestration was thoroughly individual and that no re-scoring of his orchestral works, even by the most skilful masters of the art, would do at all, do not, in the end, help to quash this adverse criticism. Still it is none the less to be said that Schumann's handling of the orchestra was weak from one point of view only: from that of purely technical skill. He was an ignorant, clumsy scorer, if you will; but he was distinctly not a common-place nor obtuse one. Indeed his sense for orchestral color was exceptionally fine; his scores teem with bits of the finest, the most original color-inspiration—only he could seldom succeed fully in putting this inspiration upon paper, he was too ignorant of the technical means. His scoring, as a rule, told only half the tale. The result is that, though the technical difficulty of his orchestral works seems, in one way, as nothing to modern players, up to cracking all the hard nuts in Tchaikovsky or Richard Strauss, there is still a difficulty of another sort in Schumann's orchestral writing which makes the adequate performance of a symphony of his one of the severest technical tasks going. The orchestra must do what Schumann failed to do; it must, by hook or by crook, make the [illegible] sound as Schumann heard it in his [illegible] this hard task our orchestra succeeded beyond compare! The perfect clearness of the playing, the beauty of tone and vigor of accent, showed the noble music in its true colors. Mr. Gericke's conception of the work struck us as impeccable—only in the adagio did we feel an occasional too passionate touch (if everybody had given the theme that beautiful expression of calm ecstasy that the first oboe gave it, all would have been well!)—thoroughly Schumannesque, the conception of a man who had striven to find out what the composer meant to say, not what he himself could possibly make him say.

Mr. Kneisel is a master of several things: of his bow, of his left hand, of his instrument, of the music he plays, of himself. But he is not a master of the weather. We forget just how many times in succession he has had a damp, muggy, string-stretching and string-breaking night for his solo at the symphony concerts—but it is a good many! Saturday night was just the very worst weather for a violinist; luckily his own strings held out to the end of the concerto; but E strings went snapping all around him with a frequency and sonority of crack that made one almost suspect that the "effect" must be down in the score. And it is no joke to play a concerto in the midst of such a running fire of broken strings, fearing every moment that it will be your turn next.

But, in spite of this disadvantage, Mr. Kneisel played superbly at every point; indeed, we cannot recall his ever playing better. Beauty of tone and phrasing, virtuosity, brilliancy of effect were all beyond praise. Goldmark's concerto itself we cannot like; there are spots of beautiful color-effect in it, but too little else; neither does it seem to us really congenial to the instrument. It bristles with difficulties that do not pay. Ah! ye masterly violinists, composers have treated you with all-too step-mother unkindness; or is it that, since Mendelssohn, your instrument puts inspiration to flight? Great artists deserve better material whereon to exercise their genius than nine out of ten existing violin concertos! Mr. Kneisel was applauded and recalled, as he richly deserved; he rose superior to his task, and his playing told upon his hearers in a way that was unmistakable.

The next programme is: Goldmark, overture, "Im Frühling," opus 36; Weber, scena and aria, "Ozean! Du Ungeheuer!" from "Oberon;" Tchaikovsky, symphony No. 6, in B minor, "Pathétique," opus 74; Wagner, Elisabeth's Greeting, from "Tannhäuser;" Liszt, Rhapsodie hongroise No. 3 (first time at these concerts). Mme. Johanna Gadski will be the singer.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1898.

BOSTON, Mass., October 23, 1898.

TWO weeks have passed without any abatement in the enthusiasm of the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the return of Mr. Gericke, which, as petted and wayward orchestras fond of having their own way, go, may be fairly considered as a very encouraging sign. The jubilant purple and gold tinted emotion that thrilled the symphony public into ecstasy at the opening concert was again displayed at the second, last evening, and seemed to be of fast colors, warranted not to fade. Everybody is contented and consequently very happy. Gerickeolatry is the order of the day, and the musical millennium appears to have arrived. The pros lie down with the cons and daggers are turned into tuning forks. It is all very extraordinary and very comforting, and long may it wave.

There was another large audience in Music Hall last evening, and the reception it accorded Mr. Gericke was as spontaneous as cordial, and as affectionate as that with which he was greeted a week before. The program was:

Overture, Melpomene	G. W. Chadwick
Concerto for violin in A minor, op. 28	Goldmark
Symphonic Poem, Vysehrad	Smetana
Symphony, No. 2, in C major, op. 61	Schumann

The soloist was Franz Kneisel.

It was a large concert, that is, for Boston, the performance, extending some twenty minutes after the regulation hour, 9:30. The consequence was an excited exodus after the first movement of the symphony, and a like diminution after the scherzo and the andante respectively, so that the finale was listened to by an audience that had melted away at least one-third. It is doubtful if the Medes and the Persians, whose reputation for making immutable laws is proverbial, could have enacted any law stringent enough to compel a Boston symphony audience to remain in its seats, intact, after the hands of the clock denoted the sacred hour. Is this the result of superior civilization? Or is it pure Bostonese? Or are the two things interchangeable? Or what? Probably what!

Mr. Chadwick's solidly wrought, strong and powerfully dramatic overture wears admirably. It is decidedly the finest of his orchestral works, and is, it seems to me, the most notable composition of its kind that has yet come from a native composer. I cannot recall when it has been played as thorough and as interesting an interpretation as Mr. Gericke gave it last evening. The symphony is, to me, the least interesting of Schumann's achievements in its class. With the exception of the adagio, which is of immortal beauty and loveliness, I could be well content to wish that we might be better strangers to each other. This is probably rank heresy, but let me hasten to offer the excuse that my backsliding is merely a matter of purely personal rather than of critical feeling. I am simply in the position of the perplexed rhymester, who entertained an inexplicable antipathy to Dr. Fell.

Very beautiful in every way were the reading and the performance of the symphony. Nothing could have been more sympathetic than was Mr. Gericke's treatment of it, and nothing more perfect than the playing of the orchestra, the incomparable virtuosity of the wonderful strings, especially in the scherzo and the finale, standing out with extraordinary brilliancy and effect. I cannot say that the work, as a whole, has not been given quite as well under other conductors of the orchestra. I am not acquainted with the whole of the Smetana cycle, but if the other movements are of the same quality as the movement given last night I feel very much inclined to congratulate myself that I have not heard them.

Mr. Kneisel's playing of the Goldmark concerto was delightfully characterized by that fine artistic conscience, exquisite purity of taste, graceful warmth of style and flawless intonation that always make listening to him a pleasure without the remotest trace of alloy.

* * *

I hear that Mr. Gericke could, if he were so inclined, stand knee deep in the orchestral scores with which the native composer has flooded him. Also that the number of vocalists who wish him to hear them sing is rapidly swelling to alarming dimensions. As he is exceedingly amiable few of these solicitations are refused. The conductor's life is not a happy one. I wonder if he ever inclines to the grewsome desire of old Colley Cibber to pinch the pipes of these young singing birds.

* * *

There is no surer indication of the fine development towards a serious appreciation of great music in this country than the interest everywhere aroused by the announcement that Wilhelm Gericke has returned to America as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Gericke's fame is inseparably connected with the greatness of this superb body of instrumentalists, and the superlative place that the organization has attained in the sphere of harmony is largely due to the admirable talents of this eminent musician. Mr. Gericke has been away from America for nearly ten years and reached New York on the steamship Kaiser Friedrich. Mr. F. R. Comee, assistant manager of the orchestra, representing Mr. Higginson, the founder of the organization, welcomed Mr. Gericke again to America. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will continue under the management of Mr. Charles A. Ellis, who has been the chief figure in its business administration since it was founded by Mr. Higginson seventeen years ago.

FELL TO DEATH.

James W. Phinney Dropped From Music Hall Fire Escape.

HIS SKULL FRACTURED.

Emergency Hospital Doctors Do Not Expect Him to Live.

HE BELONGS IN MILTON.

The last sad strains of the intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" had just died away in Music Hall last night, and the applause at the ever popular number was at its height, when a young colored man in one of the front rows of the balcony arose in his seat and stepped into the hall. He went to a window at the north end of the corridor and stepped out upon the fire escape. This was about 10:15.

Twenty minutes later he was found on the cobble stones of the alley below bruised and unconscious, and at the Emergency Hospital, where he was taken, it is said that the front of his skull is badly fractured, and, while he has a chance of life, it is only a chance.

He has not regained consciousness, but upon him the police found letters addressed to James W. Phinney, Butler street, Milton, and this is supposed to be the name of the unfortunate man.

There is no telling how long Phinney, if it is he, might have lain unnoticed in the dark alley which runs in from Bromfield street, had it not been for John H. Chamberlin, who during the evening had sat next to him.

Just before Phinney left his seat, says Mr. Chamberlin, he said: "That sort of music makes one want to be alone," and so saying, stepped into the corridor.

The "Pop" concert proceeded, but Phinney did not come back, and during the last number on the programme Chamberlin stepped into the hall and looked about for the man with whom he had become somewhat acquainted during the evening.

Upon inquiry, he was told that a man had been seen to step out upon the fire escape a little while before. Chamberlin went to the window, and, seeing no one, raised the sash and stepped out upon the iron balcony.

He looked about and then down, and started back as he saw upon the cobblestones, twenty-five feet below him, what looked like the form of a man. He rushed in and told a Division 2 officer, who ran pluckily into the alley and there found the young man groaning feebly.

The fire escape balcony from which he fell is the same one upon which on Sept. 26, last year, early in the morning, James Hughes, one of the Williams delegates who "held the fort" in Music Hall, fell.

About fifteen feet below this fire escape balcony is another of the same sort. Beside Phinney as he lay on the ground were a number of pieces of iron which showed that in the force of his fall the man had broken through the lower balcony and then down ten feet more to the ground, which he struck, it would seem, head first.

Phinney is about 28 years old.

New-York Daily Tribune.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1898.

The subscription for both the afternoon and evening series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has assumed very large proportions, and it is within the bounds of probability that the time will soon arrive when all the seats in Carnegie Hall will be taken for the season, a happy state of affairs that exists for this organization both in Boston and Philadelphia, where no single seats can be bought for any of its concerts. The orchestra will make its first appearances here under Mr. Gericke on November 9 and 10. Mr. Rosenthal will be the solo performer on both occasions, but will not play the same concerto, as the programmes will be entirely different. Other solo artists who will be heard in these concerts during the season are Willy Burmester, Lady Hallé (Norman Neruda), Alvarez and Mme. Carreño.

[40]

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, OCTOBER 24, 1898

Music Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

The programme of the second Symphony concert, given in the Music Hall last Saturday evening, was:

Chadwick: Overture, "Melpomene."
Goldmark: Concerto for Violin, in A minor, opus 28.
Smetana: Symphonic Poem, "Vysehrad" (No. 1 in the Cyclus "Ma Vlast").
Schumann: Symphony No. 2, in C major, opus 61.
Mr. Franz Kneisel was the violinist.

A concert to be marked on the records with a white stone! Mr. Gericke's work with the orchestra is telling more and more. Moreover, he is giving evidence of the effect the last eight years or so have had upon himself. Always a strict martinet, an incomparable technician, a virtuoso with the baton, also an exceptionally solid musician, he now shows the effects of having, so to speak, changed places with the public for a considerable period, of having had the leisure to listen to a great deal of music and ponder thereon, free from the contracting and depressing harassments of daily executive routine. In a word, his relations to music during the last eight years have been mainly of the poetic, higher artistic sort, untinged with merely technical considerations; and now that he has returned to professional executive work, he evinces an inspiring resiliency of mind and spirit, a nervous energy—which is not the same thing as nervous irritability—that, combined with his other high qualities, make him an ideal interpreter of works of true genius. It is the difference between Gericke sick and Gericke well; between Gericke tired out bodily and mentally with the hard labor of building up a matchless orchestra—out of sometimes recalcitrant material—and Gericke refreshed with a thorough rest, at the head of an already nearly perfect orchestra which asks nothing better than to obey.

The performance of Mr. Chadwick's "Melpomene" was nothing short of ideal. Mr. Gericke's keen musical insight pierced straight to the very heart of the work; never was a finer piece of summing-up, of detecting the chief characteristic of a composition and making that characteristic vividly predominant in the performance. To our mind this cardinal trait in Mr. Chadwick's "Melpomene" is well indicated by the sub-title he originally intended to give to the overture—unless we are misinformed—taking it as a pendant to his earlier "Thalia," which he called "an overture to an imaginary comedy." The "Melpomene" was, in a similar sense, to have been "an overture to an imaginary tragedy;" and here we have the hint. By "tragedy" the composer plainly understood something quite as specific as is implied in the French word "tragédie"—a tragedy in the higher, classical sense of the term; a tragic play that was not in the least a melodrama. In this overture Mr. Chadwick has indeed thrown off his usual romantic habit; one finds in the music a certain stately grandeur, a noble reserve in expression, such as are essentially tragic and classic. And this characteristic trait of the music Mr. Gericke threw into the finest relief; no one could mistake the work for "an overture to an imaginary melodrama."

From the "Melpomene" to Smetana's "Vysehrad" is a longish leap; there is no tinge of classicism to Smetana's symphonic poem; it breathes forth the purest spirit of romanticism, of poetic and picturesque suggestion. One could not but recall how the work produced no impression at all, when it was first given here, some years ago; how it seemed merely flimsy and, as the Germans say, nichtssagend. Last Saturday evening, it seemed not particularly strong, perhaps, as pure music, but full of compelling emotional fire and of the most inspiring poetic imagery. The performance was superb at every point; what a tone came from the combined brass in fortissimo!—a true fortissimo, both mellow and brilliant, more soul-compelling than strident noise. One has heard a good deal about conductors being "poets;" one has even got rather tired of the phrase, which, judging from some examples, seemed to mean something more poetic than musical. In conducting the "Vysehrad," Mr. Gericke stood forth as a true poet—who had not forgotten to be a musician.

And the Schumann symphony? Well, if the palm is to be given to any one performance at this memorable concert, let it be to that of the symphony—especially of the first movement. One felt like calling Schumann up from his grave and bidding him listen—to return more than satisfied! The symphony actually sounded as if it had been a masterly piece of scoring! And yet the peculiar individuality of Schumann's orchestration was nowhere obscured! This point is worth considering a little. Schumann has—and with no little justice—been considered an essentially poor scorer; the facts that his orchestration was thoroughly individual and that no re-scoring of his orchestral works, even by the most skilful masters of the art, would do at all, do not, in the end, help to quash this adverse criticism. Still it is none the less to be said that Schumann's handling of the orchestra was weak from one point of view only: from that of purely technical skill. He was an ignorant, clumsy scorer, if you will; but he was distinctly not a common-place nor obtuse one. Indeed his sense for orchestral color was exceptionally fine; his scores teem with bits of the finest, the most original color-inspiration—only he could seldom succeed fully in putting this inspiration upon paper, he was too ignorant of the technical means. His scoring, as a rule, told only half the tale. The result is that, though the technical difficulty of his orchestral works seems, in one way, as nothing to modern players, up to cracking all the hard nuts in Tchaikovsky or Richard Strauss, there is still a difficulty of another sort in Schumann's orchestral writing which makes the adequate performance of a symphony of his one of the severest technical tasks going. The orchestra must do what Schumann failed to do; it must, by hook or by crook, make the music sound as Schumann heard it in his mind's ear, complete what his lack of technical skill left [illegible]. And in this hard task our orchestra succeeded beyond compare! The perfect clearness of the playing, the beauty of tone and vigor of accent, showed the noble music in its true colors. Mr. Gericke's conception of the work struck us as impeccable—only in the adagio did we feel an occasional too passionate touch (if everybody had given the theme that beautiful expression of calm ecstasy that the first oboe gave it, all would have been well!)—thoroughly Schumannesque, the conception of a man who had striven to find out what the composer meant to say, not what he himself could possibly make him say.

Mr. Kneisel is a master of several things: of his bow, of his left hand, of his instrument, of the music he plays, of himself. But he is not a master of the weather. We forget just how many times in succession he has had a damp, muggy, string-stretching and string-breaking night for his solo at the symphony concerts—but it is a good many! Saturday night was just the very worst weather for a violinist; luckily his own strings held out to the end of the concerto; but E strings went snapping all around him with a frequency and sonority of crack that made one almost suspect that the "effect" must be down in the score. And it is no joke to play a concerto in the midst of such a running fire of broken strings, fearing every moment that it will be your turn next.

But, in spite of this disadvantage, Mr. Kneisel played superbly at every point; indeed, we cannot recall his ever playing better. Beauty of tone and phrasing, virtuosity, brilliancy of effect were all beyond praise. Goldmark's concerto itself we cannot like; there are spots of beautiful color-effect in it, but too little else; neither does it seem to us really congenial to the instrument. It bristles with difficulties that do not pay. Ah! ye masterly violinists, composers have treated you with all-too step-mother unkindness; or is it that, since Mendelssohn, your instrument puts inspiration to flight? Great artists deserve better material whereon to exercise their genius than nine out of ten existing violin concertos! Mr. Kneisel was applauded and recalled, as he richly deserved; he rose superior to his task, and his playing told upon his hearers in a way that was unmistakable.

The next programme is: Goldmark, overture, "Im Frühling," opus 36; Weber, scena and aria, "Ozean! Du Ungeheuer!" from "Oberon;" Tchaikovsky, symphony No. 6, in B minor, "Pathétique," opus 74; Wagner, Elisabeth's Greeting, from "Tannhäuser;" Liszt, Rhapsodie hongroise No. 3 (first time at these concerts). Mme. Johanna Gadski will be the singer.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1898.

BOSTON, Mass., October 23, 1898.

TWO weeks have passed without any abatement in the enthusiasm of the Boston Symphony Orchestra over the return of Mr. Gericke, which, as petted and wayward orchestras fond of having their own way, go, may be fairly considered as a very encouraging sign. The jubilant purple and gold tinted emotion that thrilled the symphony public into ecstasy at the opening concert was again displayed at the second, last evening, and seemed to be of fast colors, warranted not to fade. Everybody is contented and consequently very happy. Gerickeolatry is the order of the day, and the musical millennium appears to have arrived. The pros lie down with the cons and daggers are turned into tuning forks. It is all very extraordinary and very comforting, and long may it wave.

There was another large audience in Music Hall last evening, and the reception it accorded Mr. Gericke was as spontaneous as cordial, and as affectionate as that with which he was greeted a week before. The program was:

Overture, Melpomene	G. W. Chadwick
Concerto for violin in A minor, op. 28	Goldmark
Symphonic Poem, Vysehrad	Smetana
Symphony, No. 2, in C major, op. 61	Schumann

The soloist was Franz Kneisel.

It was a large concert, that is, for Boston, the performance, extending some twenty minutes after the regulation hour, 9:30. The consequence was an excited exodus after the first movement of the symphony, and a like diminution after the scherzo and the andante respectively, so that the finale was listened to by an audience that had melted away at least one-third. It is doubtful if the Medes and the Persians, whose reputation for making immutable laws is proverbial, could have enacted any law stringent enough to compel a Boston symphony audience to remain in its seats, intact, after the hands of the clock denoted the sacred hour. Is this the result of superior civilization? Or is it pure Bostonese? Or are the two things interchangeable? Or what? Probably what!

Mr. Chadwick's solidly wrought, strong and powerfully dramatic overture wears admirably. It is decidedly the finest of his orchestral works, and is, it seems to me, the most notable composition of its kind that has yet come from a native composer. I cannot recall when it had as thorough and as interesting an interpretation as Mr. Gericke gave it last evening. The symphony is, to me, the least interesting of Schumann's achievements in its class. With the exception of the adagio, which is of immortal beauty and loveliness, I could be well content to wish that we might be better strangers to each other. This is probably rank heresy, but let me hasten to offer the excuse that my backsliding is merely a matter of purely personal rather than of critical feeling. I am simply in the position of the perplexed rhymester, who entertained an inexplicable antipathy to Dr. Fell.

Very beautiful in every way were the reading and the performance of the symphony. Nothing could have been more sympathetic than was Mr. Gericke's treatment of it, and nothing more perfect than the playing of the orchestra, the incomparable virtuosity of the wonderful strings, especially in the scherzo and the finale, standing out with extraordinary brilliancy and effect. I cannot say that the work, as a whole, has not been given quite as well under other conductors of the orchestra. I am not acquainted with the whole of the Smetana cycle, but if the other movements are of the same quality as the movement given last night I feel very much inclined to congratulate myself that I have not heard them.

Mr. Kneisel's playing of the Goldmark concerto was delightfully characterized by that fine artistic conscience, exquisite purity of taste, graceful warmth of style and flawless intonation that always make listening to him a pleasure without the remotest trace of alloy.

* * *

I hear that Mr. Gericke could, if he were so inclined, stand knee deep in the orchestral scores with which the native composer has flooded him. Also that the number of vocalists who wish him to hear them sing is rapidly swelling to alarming dimensions. As he is exceedingly amiable few of these solicitations are refused. The conductor's life is not a happy one. I wonder if he ever inclines to the grewsome desire of old Colley Cibber to pinch the pipes of these young singing birds.

* * *

There is no surer indication of the fine development towards a serious appreciation of great music in this country than the interest everywhere aroused by the announcement that Wilhelm Gericke has returned to America as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Gericke's fame is inseparably connected with the greatness of this superb body of instrumentalists, and the superlative place that the organization has attained in the sphere of harmony is largely due to the admirable talents of this eminent musician. Mr. Gericke has been away from America for nearly ten years and reached New York on the steamship Kaiser Friedrich. Mr. F. R. Comee, assistant manager of the orchestra, representing Mr. Higginson, the founder of the organization, welcomed Mr. Gericke again to America. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will continue under the management of Mr. Charles A. Ellis, who has been the chief figure in its business administration since it was founded by Mr. Higginson seventeen years ago.

0 6

FELL TO DEATH.

James W. Phinney Dropped From Music Hall Fire Escape.

HIS SKULL FRACTURED.

Emergency Hospital Doctors Do Not Expect Him to Live.

HE BELONGS IN MILTON.

The last sad strains of the intermezzo from "Cavalleria Rusticana" had just died away in Music Hall last night, and the applause at the ever popular number was at its height, when a young colored man in one of the front rows of the balcony arose in his seat and stepped into the hall. He went to a window at the north end of the corridor and stepped out upon the fire escape. This was about 10:15.

Twenty minutes later he was found on the cobble stones of the alley below bruised and unconscious, and at the Emergency Hospital, where he was taken, it is said that the front of his skull is badly fractured, and, while he has a chance of life, it is only a chance.

He has not regained consciousness, but upon him the police found letters addressed to James W. Phinney, Butler street, Milton, and this is supposed to be the name of the unfortunate man.

There is no telling how long Phinney, if it is he, might have lain unnoticed in the dark alley which runs in from Bromfield street, had it not been for John H. Chamberlin, who during the evening had sat next to him.

Just before Phinney left his seat, says Mr. Chamberlin, he said: "That sort of music makes one want to be alone," and so saying, stepped into the corridor.

The "Pop" concert proceeded, but Phinney did not come back, and during the last number on the programme Chamberlin stepped into the hall and looked about for the man with whom he had become somewhat acquainted during the evening.

Upon inquiry, he was told that a man had been seen to step out upon the fire escape a little while before. Chamberlin went to the window, and, seeing no one, raised the sash and stepped out upon the iron balcony.

He looked about and then down, and started back as he saw upon the cobblestones, twenty-five feet below him, what looked like the form of a man. He rushed in and told a Division 2 officer, who ran pluckily into the alley and there found the young man groaning feebly.

The fire escape balcony from which he fell is the same one upon which on Sept. 26, last year, early in the morning, James Hughes, one of the Williams delegates who "held the fort" in Music Hall, fell.

About fifteen feet below this fire escape balcony is another of the same sort. Beside Phinney as he lay on the ground were a number of pieces of iron which showed that in the force of his fall the man had broken through the lower balcony and then down ten feet more to the ground, which he struck, it would seem, head first.

Phinney is about 26 years old.

New-York Daily Tribune.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 23, 1898.

The subscription for both the afternoon and evening series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra has assumed very large proportions, and it is within the bounds of probability that the time will soon arrive when all the seats in Carnegie Hall will be taken for the season, a happy state of affairs that exists for this organization both in Boston and Philadelphia, where no single seats can be bought for any of its concerts. The orchestra will make its first appearances here under Mr. Gericke on November 9 and 10. Mr. Rosenthal will be the solo performer on both occasions, but will not play the same concerto, as the programmes will be entirely different. Other solo artists who will be heard in these concerts during the season are Willy Burmester, Lady Hallé (Norman Neruda), Alvarez and Mme. Carreño.

EVENING RECORD.

OR SPITE.

africain's Rejection y Musical Union.

Outcome of Labor Organization Troubles.

The action of the New York Musical Protective Union in rejecting E. N. Lafricain, who was taken to New York by Emil Paur to play first trumpet in the Philharmonic and New York orchestra, has caused the greatest indignation among his friends here in Boston.

After yesterday morning's Symphony rehearsal the members of the orchestra, of which Mr. Lafricain was a member for [illegible] years, discussed the matter pretty freely and the opinion of the majority is that the affair is a disgrace and a blot on the musical profession.

The trouble lies deeper than the consideration of Mr. Lafricain's ability as a musician; that is well known and generally acknowledged, some of his friends going so far as to pronounce him the best player of the cornet and trumpet in the country.

The explanation, generally accepted, is that Mr. Lafricain has been made to feel the opposition of the New York union for the reason that he belongs to the Boston Musical Union, an organization said not to be in good standing with the National League of Musicians.

Further than that, his rejection is believed to have been prompted partly through spite toward Mr. Paur, who invited Mr. Lafricain to go to New York as he had previously invited Leo Schulz and Mr. Mann, both well-known Symphony players.

E. N. LAFRICAIN, CORNET VIRTUOSO.

This was entirely contrary to the ideas of the New York Musical Union, whose committee considered the action unnecessary, as they thought that equally as good players in need of employment could be engaged in New York. And so they protested.

Mr. Paur's influence proved patent in the case of Mr. Schulz, who went before the examining committee of the New York union and passed an examination on the cello, which was prepared with intent to defeat him if possible, in a very creditable manner. Mr. Mann finally concluded not to go in the face of the opposition.

Mr. Lafricain joined the local union sometime ago and went to New York to take his examination on the trumpet, taking with him his certificate of membership.

APPLIED FOR MEMBERSHIP.

The local union applied for membership in the National League of Musicians about a year ago, but Pres. Braemer of the league was opposed to admitting it on the ground that its membership did not consist of Boston's representative musicians, and also because it was allied with the Federation of Labor.

Pressure was brought to bear on Mr. Braemer and the local union was finally admitted and given a charter on the agreement being made that its connection with the Federation of Labor would be severed. This was done. The charter was secured and then the union went back to the Federation of Labor.

This was in part what caused the opposition of the New York union which is closely allied with the National League of Musicians, and so when Mr. Lafricain presented his certificate of membership in the local organization he found that it was worthless for the union had been dropped from membership in the league.

A week ago he took the examination on the trumpet, passed, and was told to come again and try the examination on the cornet. Returning to Boston he expressed the opinion to his friends that an attempt was to be made to throw him down and his views proved correct.

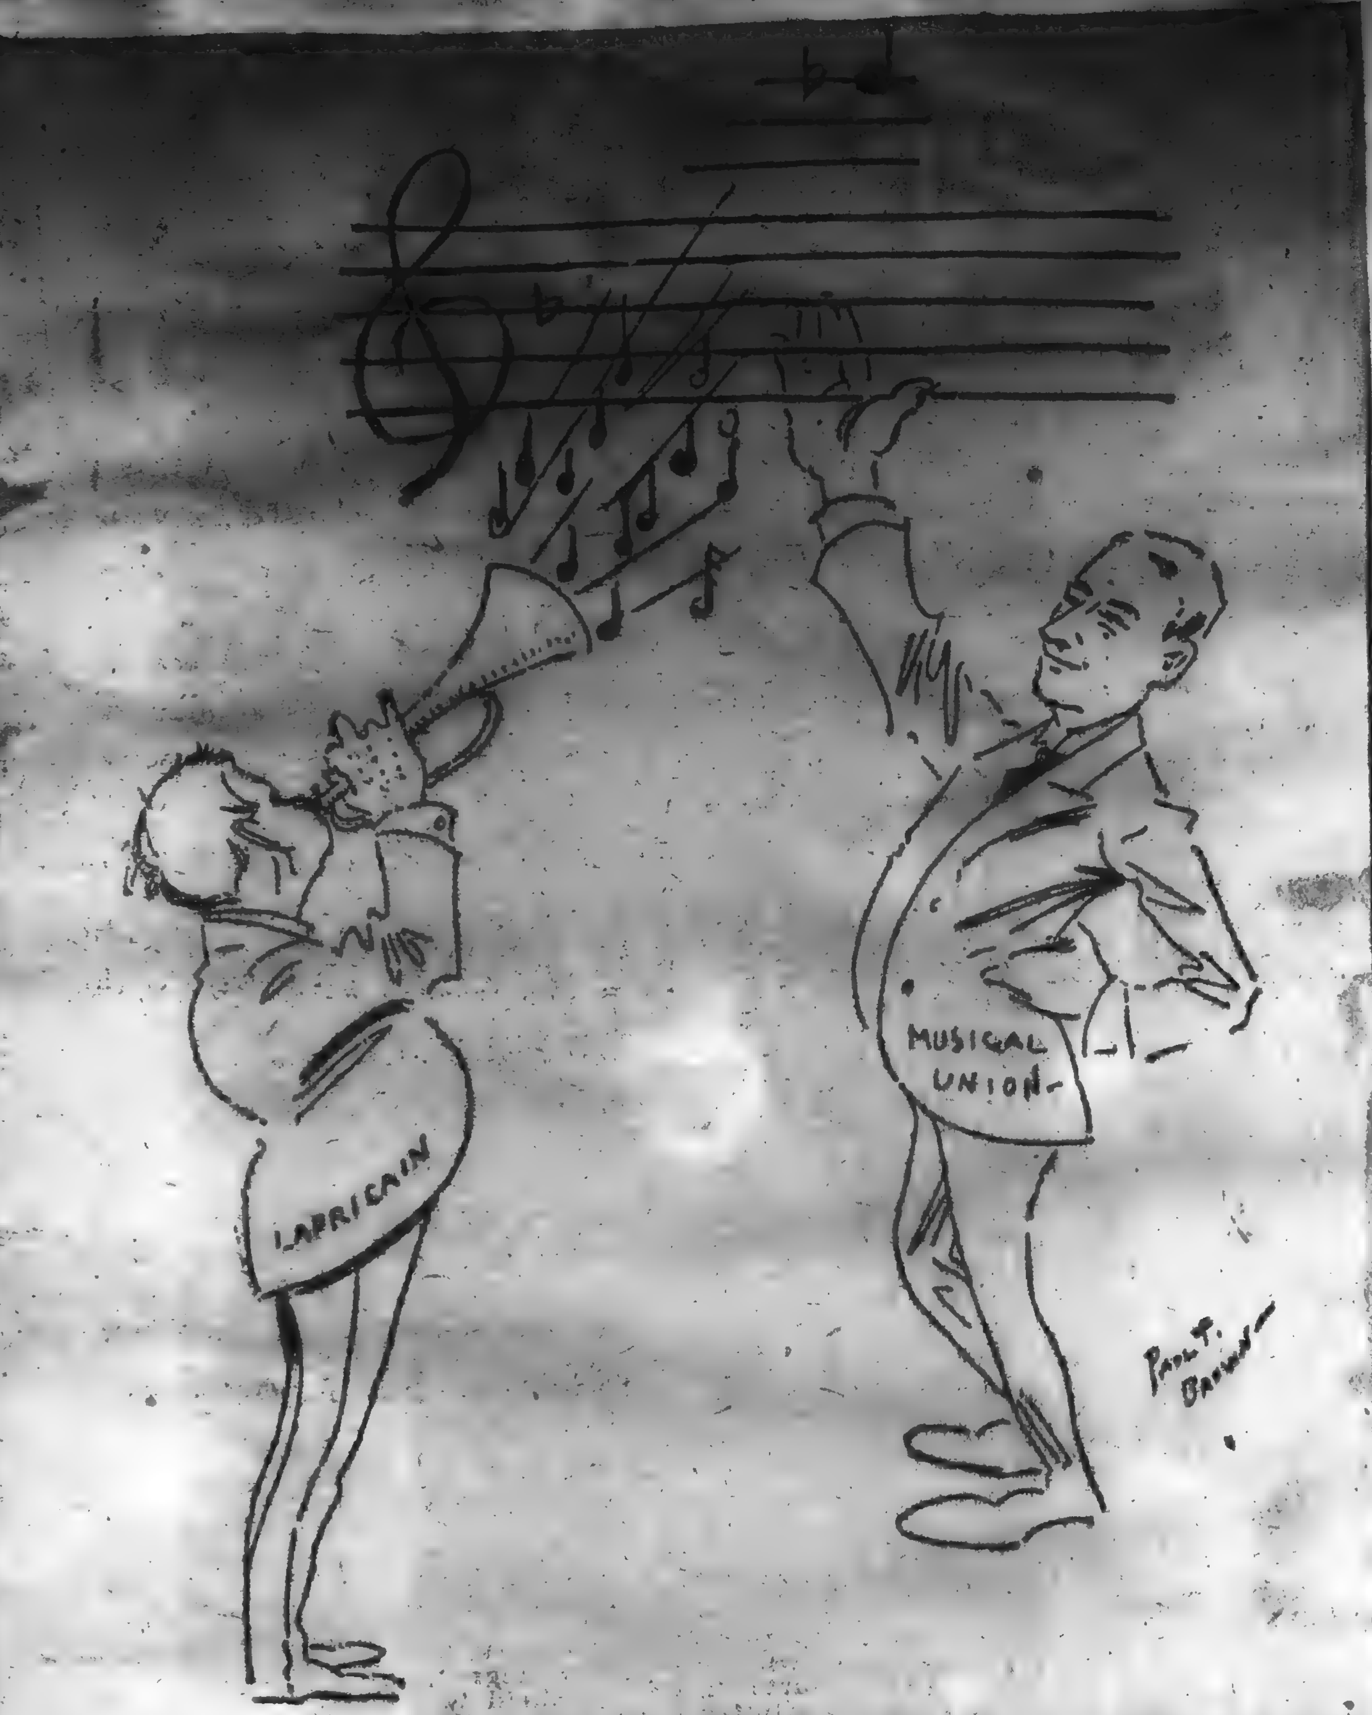
Just what the examination was is not known, but judging by the one which Mr. Schulz was obliged to take it was full of traps and pitfalls and really no criterion of his ability. Had Mr. Lafricain passed the examination his friends say the examining committee would have found some other excuse for turning him down and Mr. Paur's influence would count for but little.

IS ALL POWERFUL.

The New York union is apparently all powerful and composed of a set of men who are bound to keep players from other cities from securing New York engagements.

Mr. Lafricain's musical achievements in Boston are well known. Connected with the Symphony Orchestra until two years ago for a period of 15 years, he won the [illegible] of such men as Nikisch, Paur, and [illegible] by his painstaking work. He organized the Naval Battalion Band in 1891, and has brought it to its present state of perfection. The Boston Orchestral Club is also his creation.

[illegible] office in the Music Hall building [illegible] it was not known when he will [illegible]. His friends, though rather despondent at the prospect of his success in [illegible] his rights, hint at the possibility [illegible] being taken to the courts.



The latest "Union Scale" as applied by the Freeze-Out Musical Union of New York, to Lafricain.

New-York Daily Tribune.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1898.

THE NEW-YORK ORCHESTRA.

The New-York Orchestra, newest of the organizations that are to participate in the present musical season, gave the first of a projected series of concerts last evening in Carnegie Hall. It served not only to launch the new organisation, but to introduce Mr. Emil Paur, as a New-York musician. The need for another orchestra such as this one, at this juncture, does not, perhaps, require present discussion; the attendance last evening was not such as to encourage belief in that necessity, for the seats in Carnegie Hall were but sparsely filled. It was an audience, however, energetic in its manifestation of pleasure at the results presented for its consideration, which indeed had many claims to challenge respectful consideration.

The New-York Orchestra, notwithstanding its recent origin as an organization, is no more a stranger to the New-York musical public than Mr. Paur himself is. His methods and ideals are pretty familiar to New-York from his work for five years at the head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, made known by its regular visits to this city; and the men he directed last night have, many of them, been familiar figures in symphony concerts in this city for varying periods of time. They are an excellent body of musicians. The orchestra is strong in numbers and Mr. Paur has succeeded in inspiring it with a remarkable vigor and fire.

It played the overture to "Der Freischütz" last evening with a splendid dramatic power. In the "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven it showed the need of the polishing that ought to come from further playing together and more rehearsal. Mr. Paur's style of playing these works is well known to the New-York musical public—his are strenuous readings, in which all possible shades of contrast are anxiously sought out and exploited, all varieties of color lavishly applied. Whatever they may be in the classical works of an older age they admirably suit such compositions as Rimsky Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnol," Op. 34, given last night for the first time here. This is a series of five tonal pictures, connected without a break and marked respectively "Alborada," "Variazioni," "Alborada," "Scena e Canto Gitano" and "Fandango Asturiano." Those familiar with the Russian composer's custom expected a revel of color and of insistent rhythm; and they were not disappointed. The palette of orchestral pigment is exhausted and Spanish dance movements are amply exploited. The piece has the attraction of a barbarous glitter and glow, but is far from equalling in musical significance other and more seriously considered works of the same composer that have been heard here. Volkmann's Serenade for strings, in D minor, in which Mr. Leo Schulz played the 'cello obbligato with admirable taste and discretion, and Wagner's overture to "Rienzi" formed the remaining numbers on the programme. The serenade proved once more the musicality of the string band that Mr. Paur has to work with.

GERICKE RETURNS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Conductor Tells of His Plans

There is no surer indication of the fine development towards a serious appreciation of great music in this country than the interest everywhere aroused by the announcement that Wilhelm Gericke has returned to America, as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Gericke's fame is inseparably connected with the greatness of this superb body of instrumentalists, and the superlative place that the organization has attained in the sphere of harmony is largely due to the admirable talents of this eminent musician.

Mr. Gericke arrived a few days ago from Europe, and an indication of the manner in which Bostonians evidenced their delight at his return is found in the fact that the highest premium paid for one seat for the series of afternoon rehearsals of the orchestra in Boston Music Hall amounted to $325. Not in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has the bidding for seats been as remarkable as it was during the opening of this sale.

Mr. Gericke has been away from America for nearly ten years, and reached New York on the steamship Kaiser Friedrich. Mr. F. R. Comee, assistant manager of the orchestra, representing Mr. Higginson, the founder of the organization, welcomed Mr. Gericke again to America. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will continue under the management of Mr. Charles A. Ellis, who has been the chief figure in its business administration since it was founded by Mr. Higginson seventeen years ago.

Mr. Gericke submitted to an interview, during which he said:

"For more than a year after I left Boston," said he, "I could not turn my attention to music. I went to the opera two or three times, but all I could see was an act, or, at the most, two acts. Overwork had drained my nerves of their strength. I had neither the taste nor the ambition to work. So I gave up music entirely.

"At the end of a year or so I resumed the conductorship of the Gesselschaft concerts. The Gesselschaft is a choral society that I led for some time before I first came to this country. I had another offer from the Philharmonic Society of Berlin, but at the time it was made I was in no condition to consider it.

"I remained with the Gesselschaft choral five years, then I left for a year, but went back again.

"How long will I remain? At least three years. This is the term that I have engaged myself for, and if my condition be good at the end of it I shall remain still longer. Nothing but my ill condition drew me away from here before."

"What are your plans?" the reporter asked.

"Well, the first few programs you can see for yourself. You see among them only familiar names. There's the 'Euryanthe' overture, by Weber. I put that on the first program, because it was on the last that I conducted with the orchestra alone when I was here before. There are the old masters, and there are some moderns—Tchaikowsky, Richard Strauss and Chadwick. I selected Mr. Chadwick's 'Melpomene' because I conducted it before. It is dedicated to me, in fact. He is one of your foremost composers. I know also the composition of MacDowell and Paine, and Foote, and at least one by Whiting—Arthur Whiting, who is now in New York.

"Among the novelties that I have chosen are symphonies by Bruckner, Sinding and Gilson. Gilson is a young Frenchman, whose compositions have met with great success in France.

"Speaking of choral music, my plan is to conduct some symphonies with chorus. 'Manfred,' Liszt's 'Faust,' and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven are the ones I have in mind. I would not give the Ninth Symphony without the last movement. If I cannot get a suitable chorus—although I do not doubt that I will—and good soloists, it will not be given. The Ninth Symphony without that last semi-choral movement would be like—well, a person with one leg. It would be imperfection.

"I think that Boston and the world at large, owes a great deal to Mr. Higginson (the proprietor of the Symphony Orchestra). His work is unique, and therefore all the more praiseworthy."

Mr. Gericke since leaving Boston has joined the ranks of the married. His wife was Miss Flamm, of Vienna. She loves music, is an excellent amateur pianist, and, naturally enough, is deeply interested in her husband's new work in an old field.

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR
VOL. CIV., NO. 122.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1898.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Attracted Immense Audience to Music Hall.

Overture "Im Fruehling" Proves a Delightful Selection—A Few Imperfections in the Presentation of the Symphony, "Pathetic"—Work of the Soloists.

The programme for the third concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, in Music Hall, last evening, was:

Overture, "Im Fruehling"	Goldmark
Aria, "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster!"	Weber
Symphony, "Pathetic"	Tschaikowsky
Aria, "Dich, Theure Halle"	Wagner
Rhapsodie Hongroise, No. 3	Liszt

The soloist was Mme. Johanna Gadski. The audience packed the house, even to all the available standing room.

The bright, genial and melodious Goldmark overture deserves a more frequent performance than has been accorded it here. It is not as powerful a work as is the "Sakuntala," nor is it as deep, but it is pervaded by a noble grace, is strong in a masterful individuality, and these, with its brilliancy and solid sincerity, make it wholly delightful in the hearing. It has all the joyousness of spring—not a New England one, perhaps, but the buoyant and vivifying spring of which the poets chant—all sunshine and buoyancy.

Mr. Gericke's reading of the overture was finely sympathetic, and the playing was fascinating in its warmth, its unity of spirit and the beauty of its technical finish.

It did not seem that Mr. Gericke was quite as felicitous in his reading of the symphony. It was unquestionably a thoughtful one, but it appeared to be over-labored and to have imparted something of dryness, not to say stiffness, to the work. But, however, in the opening adagio, which was given with searching dignity of sentiment, nor in the third movement which produced all of its earlier effect under the treatment to which it was subjected; but the first allegro hung fire generally, and the early flow and lightness of the charming 5-4 movement almost disappeared under a dragging pace, and an excess of accentuation deprived it of its accustomed fluent grace and imparted to it an air of heaviness.

Something also was lost of the profound and affecting pathos of the wonderful closing adagio through an extreme elaboration of nuance which clouded the broad simplicity that is the source of its moving impressiveness. Purity of taste was never lacking, but the interpretation, as a whole, was wanting in emotional interest, and made a cold appeal to the interest. The orchestra was, of course, thoroughly familiar with its task, and performed it faultlessly.

The Liszt rhapsody No. 3 is not the best of its composer's efforts in kind, and is less effective in the orchestra than are any others of the series that have been instrumented. It is more thoroughly at home on the piano, for which it was written, and the more massive setting that has been given it merely emphasizes its flimsiness and its innate vulgarity into greater prominence.

The orchestration, however, is exceedingly brilliant, and afforded the new flautist, oboeist and clarinettist admirable opportunities for the display of their tone and technique to brilliant advantage. Both reading and performance were full of fire, color and effectiveness.

Mme. Gadski declaimed the exacting air from "Oberon" with fine dramatic power and in a large and thoroughly artistic style. Her intonation was now and then at fault, and toward the end of the aria her voice manifested signs of exhaustion, but the effort showed a vigorous and intelligent conception of the composer's meaning, and drew forth a great outburst of applause and several recalls.

In the Wagner aria the artist was brilliantly successful, and again met with the heartiest favor of her hearers.

Mr. Gericke's accompanying of these two selections demand special recognition for their perfection.

The programme for the next concert is: Symphony No. 3, Brahms; concerto for piano, Scharwenka; tone poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss, and "Prelude and Lone Death" from "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner. Rosenthal is to be the soloist.

MUSICAL AMERICA
EDITED BY JOHN C FREUND
PUBLISHED AT 27 UNION SQUARE NEW YORK

New York, October 29, 1898.

Mr. Fred R. Comee, the assistant manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, informs me that the sale of tickets for the series of concerts of the orchestra in New York has already exceeded any former sale and promises extremely satisfactory results, while in Philadelphia every box and seat has already been taken.

Although Mr. Comee is nominally assistant manager, practically he is the manager, for during the past two years Mr. Ellis has had to turn his attention to other important matters occupying his time to such a degree that the duties of manager of the orchestra have devolved upon Mr. Comee, and, let it be said, without any diminution in efficient results.

"This Country, with its Institutions, Belongs to the People who Inhabit It."

BOSTON EVENING RECORD.

FOR SPITE.

Lafricain's Rejection by Musical Union.

Outcome of Labor Organization Troubles.

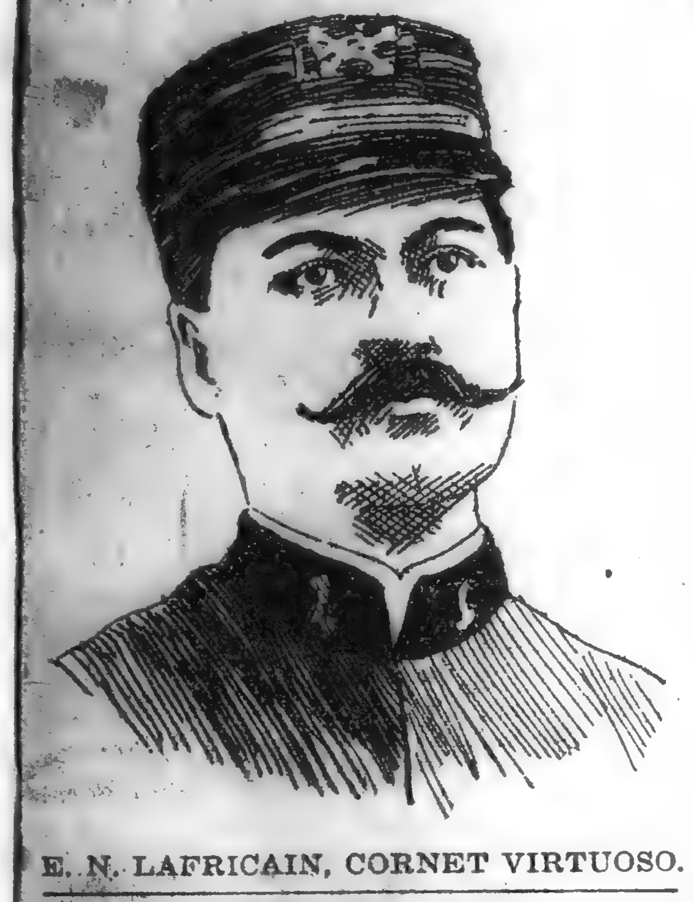
The action of the New York Musical Protective Union in rejecting E. N. Lafricain, who was taken to New York by Emil Paur to play first trumpet in the Philharmonic and New York orchestra, has caused the greatest indignation among his friends here in Boston.

After yesterday morning's Symphony rehearsal the members of the orchestra, of which Mr. Lafricain was a member for 15 years, discussed the matter pretty freely and the opinion of the majority is that the affair is a disgrace and a blot on the musical profession.

The trouble lies deeper than the consideration of Mr. Lafricain's ability as a musician; that is well known and generally acknowledged, some of his friends going so far as to pronounce him the best player of the cornet and trumpet in the country.

The explanation, generally accepted, is that Mr. Lafricain has been made to feel the opposition of the New York union for the reason that he belongs to the Boston Musical Union, an organization said not to be in good standing with the National League of Musicians.

Further than that, his rejection is believed to have been prompted partly through spite toward Mr. Paur, who invited Mr. Lafricain to go to New York as he had previously invited Leo Schulz and Mr. Mann, both well-known Symphony players.



E. N. LAFRICAIN, CORNET VIRTUOSO.

This was entirely contrary to the ideas of the New York Musical Union, whose committee considered the action unnecessary, as they thought that equally as good players in need of employment could be engaged in New York. And so they protested.

Mr. Paur's influence proved patent in the case of Mr. Schulz, who went before the examining committee of the New York union and passed an examination on the cello, which was prepared with intent to defeat him if possible, in a very creditable manner. Mr. Mann finally concluded not to go in the face of the opposition.

Mr. Lafricain joined the local union sometime ago and went to New York to take his examination on the trumpet, taking with him his certificate of membership.

APPLIED FOR MEMBERSHIP.

The local union applied for membership in the National League of Musicians about a year ago, but Pres. Braemer of the league was opposed to admitting it on the ground that its membership did not consist of Boston's representative musicians, and also because it was allied with the Federation of Labor.

Pressure was brought to bear on Mr. Braemer and the local union was finally admitted and given a charter on the agreement being made that its connection with the Federation of Labor would be severed. This was done. The charter was secured and then the union went back to the Federation of Labor.

This was in part what caused the opposition of the New York union which is closely allied with the National League of Musicians, and so when Mr. Lafricain presented his certificate of membership in the local organization he found that it was worthless for the union had been dropped from membership in the league.

A week ago he took the examination on the trumpet, passed, and was told to come again and try the examination on the cornet. Returning to Boston he expressed the opinion to his friends that an attempt was to be made to throw him down and his views proved correct.

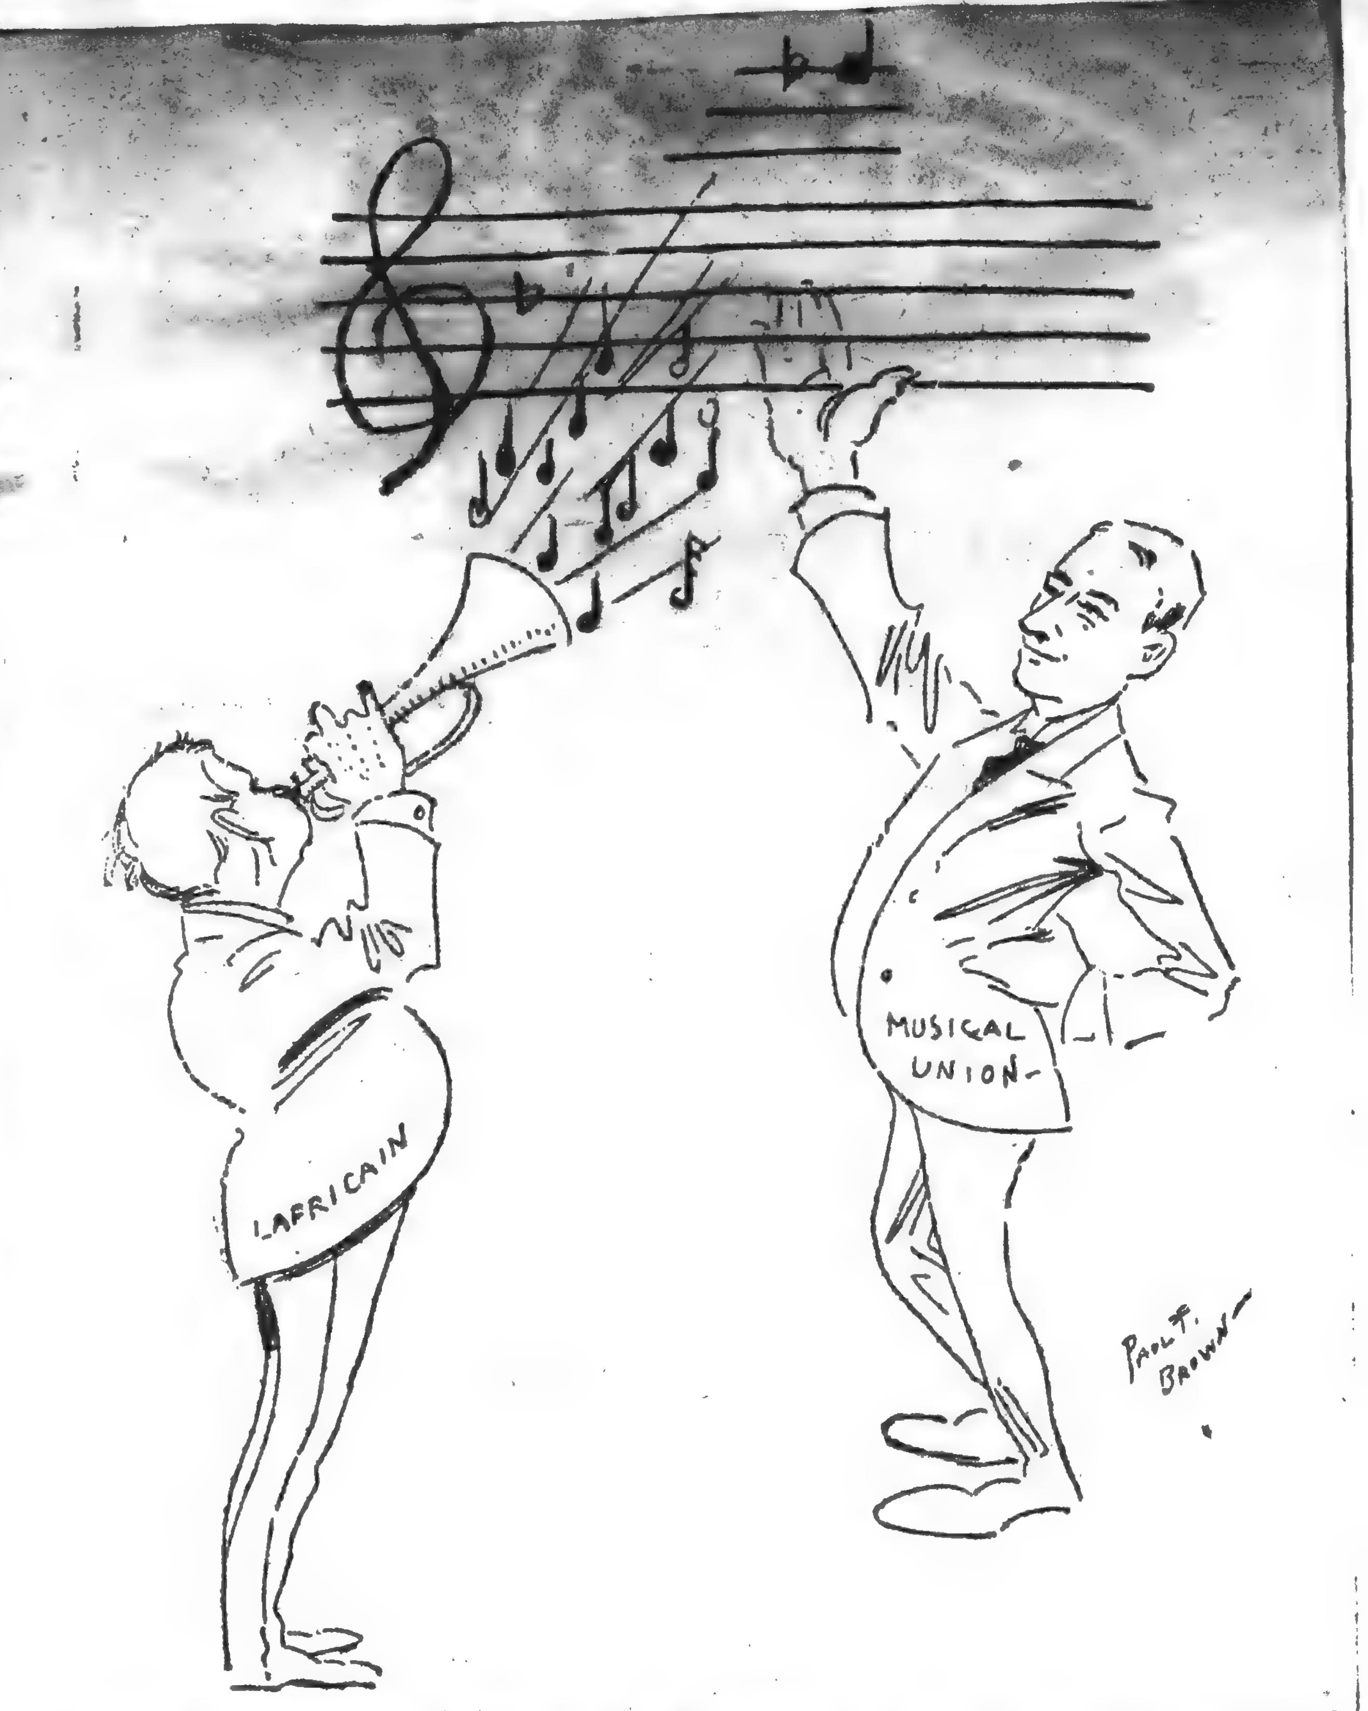
Just what the examination was is not known, but judging by the one which Mr. Schulz was obliged to take it was full of traps and pitfalls and really no criterion of his ability. Had Mr. Lafricain passed the examination his friends say the examining committee would have found some other excuse for turning him down and Mr. Paur's influence would count for but little.

IS ALL POWERFUL.

The New York union is apparently all powerful and composed of a set of men who are bound to keep players from other cities from securing New York engagements.

Mr. Lafricain's musical achievements in Boston are well known. Connected with the Symphony Orchestra until two years ago for a period of 15 years, he won the regard of such men as Nikisch, Paur, and Gericke by his painstaking work. He organized the Naval Battalion Band in 1891, and has brought it to its present state of perfection. The Boston Orchestral Club was also his creation.

At his office in the Music Hall building yesterday it was not known when he will return. His friends, though rather despondent at the prospect of his success in securing his rights, hint at the possibility of the case being taken to the courts.



The latest "Union Scale" as applied by the Freeze-Out Musical Union of New York, to Lafricain.

New-York Daily Tribune.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1898.

THE NEW-YORK ORCHESTRA.

The New-York Orchestra, newest of the organizations that are to participate in the present musical season, gave the first of a projected series of concerts last evening in Carnegie Hall. It served not only to launch the new organization, but to introduce Mr. Emil Paur, as a New-York musician. The need for another orchestra such as this one, at this juncture, does not, perhaps, require present discussion; the attendance last evening was not such as to encourage belief in that necessity, for the seats in Carnegie Hall were but sparsely filled. It was an audience, however, energetic in its manifestation of pleasure at the results presented for its consideration, which indeed had many claims to challenge respectful consideration.

The New-York Orchestra, notwithstanding its recent origin as an organization, is no more a stranger to the New-York musical public than Mr. Paur himself is. His methods and ideals are pretty familiar to New-York from his work for five years at the head of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, made known by its regular visits to this city; and the men he directed last night have, many of them, been familiar figures in symphony concerts in this city for varying periods of time. They are an excellent body of musicians. The orchestra is strong in numbers and Mr. Paur has succeeded in inspiring it with a remarkable vigor and fire.

It played the overture to "Der Freischütz" last evening with a splendid dramatic power. In the "Eroica" symphony of Beethoven it showed the need of the polishing that ought to come from further playing together and more rehearsal. Mr. Paur's style of playing these works is well known to the New-York musical public—his are strenuous readings, in which all possible shades of contrast are anxiously sought out and exploited, all varieties of color lavishly applied. Whatever they may be in the classical works of an older age they admirably suit such compositions as Rimsky Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnol," Op. 34, given last night for the first time here. This is a series of five tonal pictures, connected without a break and marked respectively "Alborada," "Variazioni," "Alborada," "Scena e Canto Gitano" and "Fandango Asturiano." Those familiar with the Russian composer's custom expected a revel of color and of insistent rhythm; and they were not disappointed. The palette of orchestral pigment is exhausted and Spanish dance movements are amply exploited. The piece has the attraction of a barbarous glitter and glow, but is far from equalling in musical significance other and more seriously considered works of the same composer that have been heard here. Volkmann's Serenade for strings, in D minor, in which Mr. Leo Schulz played the 'cello obbligato with admirable taste and discretion, and Wagner's overture to "Rienzi" formed the remaining numbers on the programme. The serenade proved once more the muscularity of the string band that Mr. Paur has to work with.

GERICKE RETURNS

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Conductor Tells of His Plans

There is no surer indication of the fine development towards a serious appreciation of great music in this country than the interest everywhere aroused by the announcement that Wilhelm Gericke has returned to America, as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Gericke's fame is inseparably connected with the greatness of this superb body of instrumentalists, and the superlative place that the organization has attained in the sphere of harmony is largely due to the admirable talents of this eminent musician.

Mr. Gericke arrived a few days ago from Europe, and an indication of the manner in which Bostonians evidenced their delight at his return is found in the fact that the highest premium paid for one seat for the series of afternoon rehearsals of the orchestra in Boston Music Hall amounted to $325. Not in the history of the Boston Symphony Orchestra has the bidding for seats been as remarkable as it was during the opening of this sale.

Mr. Gericke has been away from America for nearly ten years, and reached New York on the steamship Kaiser Friedrich. Mr. F. R. Comee, assistant manager of the orchestra, representing Mr. Higginson, the founder of the organization, welcomed Mr. Gericke again to America. The Boston Symphony Orchestra will continue under the management of Mr. Charles A. Ellis, who has been the chief figure in its business administration since it was founded by Mr. Higginson seventeen years ago.

Mr. Gericke submitted to an interview, during which he said:

"For more than a year after I left Boston," said he, "I could not turn my attention to music. I went to the opera two or three times, but all I could see was an act, or, at the most, two acts. Overwork had drained my nerves of their strength. I had neither the taste nor the ambition to work. So I gave up music entirely.

"At the end of a year or so I resumed the conductorship of the Gesselschaft concerts. The Gesselschaft is a choral society that I led for some time before I first came to this country. I had another offer from the Philharmonic Society of Berlin, but at the time it was made I was in no condition to consider it.

"I remained with the Gesselschaft choral five years, then I left for a year, but went back again.

"How long will I remain? At least three years. This is the term that I have engaged myself for, and if my condition be good at the end of it I shall remain still longer. Nothing but my ill condition drew me away from here before."

"What are your plans?" the reporter asked.

"Well, the first few programs you can see for yourself. You see among them only familiar names. There's the 'Euryanthe' overture, by Weber. I put that on the first program, because it was on the last that I conducted with the orchestra alone when I was here before. There are the old masters, and there are some moderns—Tchaikowsky, Richard Strauss and Chadwick. I selected Mr. Chadwick's 'Melpomene' because I conducted it before. It is dedicated to me, in fact. He is one of your foremost composers. I know also the composition of MacDowell and Paine, and Foote, and at least one by Whiting—Arthur Whiting, who is now in New York.

"Among the novelties that I have chosen are symphonies by Bruckner, Sinding and Gilson. Gilson is a young Frenchman, whose compositions have met with great success in France.

"Speaking of choral music, my plan is to conduct some symphonies with chorus. 'Manfred,' Liszt's 'Faust,' and the Ninth Symphony of Beethoven are the ones I have in mind. I would not give the Ninth Symphony without the last movement. If I cannot get a suitable chorus—although I do not doubt that I will—and good soloists, it will not be given. The Ninth Symphony without that last semi-choral movement would be like—well, a person with one leg. It would be imperfection.

"I think that Boston and the world at large, owes a great deal to Mr. Higginson (the proprietor of the Symphony Orchestra). His work is unique, and therefore all the more praiseworthy."

Mr. Gericke since leaving Boston has joined the ranks of the married. His wife was Miss Flamm, of Vienna. She loves music, is an excellent amateur pianist, and, naturally enough, is deeply interested in her husband's new work in an old field.

SUNDAY HERALD.

PUBLISHED EVERY SUNDAY IN THE YEAR.
VOL. CIV., NO. 122.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1898.

THE SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Attracted Immense Audience to Music Hall.

Overture "Im Fruehling" Proves a Delightful Selection—A Few Imperfections in the Presentation of the Symphony, "Pathetic"—Work of the Soloists.

The programme for the third concert of the Boston Symphony orchestra, in Music Hall, last evening, was:

Overture, "Im Fruehling"	Goldmark
Aria, "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster!"	Weber
Symphony, "Pathetic"	Tschaikowsky
Aria, "Dich, Theure Halle"	Wagner
Rhapsodie Hongroise, No. 3	Liszt

The soloist was Mme. Johanna Gadski. The audience packed the house, even to all the available standing room.

The bright, genial and melodious Goldmark overture deserves a more frequent performance than has been accorded it here. It is not as powerful a work as is the "Sakuntala," nor is it as deep, but it is pervaded by a noble grace, is strong in a masterful individuality, and these, with its brilliancy and solid sincerity, make it wholly delightful in the hearing. It has all the joyousness of spring—not a New England one, perhaps, but the buoyant and vivifying spring of which the poets chant—all sunshine and buoyancy.

Mr. Gericke's reading of the overture was finely sympathetic, and the playing was fascinating in its warmth, its unity of spirit and the beauty of its technical finish.

It did not seem that Mr. Gericke was quite as felicitous in his reading of the symphony. It was unquestionably a thoughtful one, but it appeared to be over-labored and to have imparted something of dryness, not to say stiffness, to the work. But, however, in the opening adagio, which was given with searching dignity of sentiment, nor in the third movement which produced all of its earlier effect under the treatment to which it was subjected; but the first allegro hung fire generally, and the early flow and lightness of the charming 5-4 movement almost disappeared under a dragging pace, and an excess of accentuation deprived it of its accustomed fluent grace and imparted to it an air of heaviness.

Something also was lost of the profound and affecting pathos of the wonderful closing adagio through an extreme elaboration of nuance which clouded the broad simplicity that is the source of its moving impressiveness. Purity of taste was never lacking, but the interpretation, as a whole, was wanting in emotional interest, and made a cold appeal to the interest. The orchestra was, of course, thoroughly familiar with its task, and performed it faultlessly.

The Liszt rhapsody No. 3 is not the best of its composer's efforts in kind, and is less effective in the orchestra than are any others of the series that have been instrumented. It is more thoroughly at home on the piano, for which it was written, and the more massive setting that has been given it merely emphasizes its flimsiness and its innate vulgarity into greater prominence.

The orchestration, however, is exceedingly brilliant, and afforded the new flautist, oboeist and clarinettist admirable opportunities for the display of their tone and technique to brilliant advantage. Both reading and performance were full of fire, color and effectiveness.

Mme. Gadski declaimed the exacting air from "Oberon" with fine dramatic power and in a large and thoroughly artistic style. Her intonation was now and then at fault, and toward the end of the aria her voice manifested signs of exhaustion, but the effort showed a vigorous and intelligent conception of the composer's meaning, and drew forth a great outburst of applause and several recalls.

In the Wagner aria the artist was brilliantly successful, and again met with the heartiest favor of her hearers.

Mr. Gericke's accompanying of these two selections demand special recognition for their perfection.

The programme for the next concert is: Symphony No. 3, Brahms; concerto for piano, Scharwenka; tone poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss, and "Prelude and Lone Death" from "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner. Rosenthal is to be the soloist.

MUSICAL AMERICA

EDITED BY JOHN C FREUND

PUBLISHED AT 27 UNION SQUARE NEW YORK

New York, October 29, 1898.

Mr. Fred R. Comee, the assistant manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, informs me that the sale of tickets for the series of concerts of the orchestra in New York has already exceeded any former sale and promises extremely satisfactory results, while in Philadelphia every box and seat has already been taken.

Although Mr. Comee is nominally assistant manager, practically he is the manager, for during the past two years Mr. Ellis has had to turn his attention to other important matters occupying his time to such a degree that the duties of manager of the orchestra have devolved upon Mr. Comee, and, let it be said, without any diminution in efficient results.

[illegible] Paper of the State.

[illegible] Paper of the City.

[illegible]

[illegible]'s Return--Tschaikowsky's "Symphonie Pathetique."

Music Hall Crowded at the Symphony Concert.

We dare not flatter ourselves that it was Tschaikowsky's symphony that crowded Music Hall in every part on Saturday; the tremendous audience showed that the public pins its faith on the motto, "Vox, et praeterea nihil," that a prima donna far outweighs sounding brass or tinkling cymbal.

The concert began with Goldmark's "Spring" overture, a dainty bit of music in proper classical form, a half-way house between Beethoven and Mendelssohn. Of course it pictured a Spring of which the New Englander is ignorant; the rustic oboe pictured the delights of outdoor life and the musical poultry-yard was heard piping gently upon the flute, not quite so weak in its style as Beethoven's "By the Brook" ("Pastoral Symphony"), where cuckoo and nightingale make ornithological remarks and Quail on Oboe is served. The reading was a delightful one and the work is a strong contrast to Goldmark's usual overtures of dissonance and passion.

This was but the prelude to the popular triumph of the evening, for Mme. Gadski followed with Weber's "Ocean, thou mighty monster." The ocean was in a storm and the ship labored heavily, but fortunately did not founder. Mme. Gadski has been heard to much better advantage; it seemed as if she desired to reach an impossible degree of force and this led to an insecure and tremulous tone that detracted from the enjoyment of the number; from the reviewer's enjoyment only, however, for the vast audience went wild with delight and recalled the singer with great enthusiasm.

The subsequent number, Elizabeth's "Greeting to the Hall," from "Tannhaeuser," was much better and very brilliant in its ending, while the orchestral accompaniment deserves the highest praise.

Of the orchestral number of the evening the "Symphonie Pathetique" deserves the most extended mention, for in spite of its many performances its interest is not waning, and on this occasion it became a measuring tape to compare conductors.

Of recent years we have had this symphony as regularly as the "Messiah" itself, so that there is really very little to say about its familiar measures. Mr. Gericke placed it in the centre of the programme, for the same reason that he places Brahms' Third Symphony at the beginning of the next concert, because its quiet, whispered ending would be lost at the end of a programme when auditors reach for umbrellas and rush for doors.

The symphony is one of the manifestations of the modern direction of art and a much more legitimate direction than the musical metaphysics of Richard Strauss or the unnatural dissonances of the composer's modern compatriots.

Mr. Gericke gave a very clear presentation of the first movement with its peculiar development and its slow episodes; if ever there was a "slow Allegro" it is this one; its introduction seems to dominate its entire spirit, and this same introduction plunges into medias res with a suddenness that is remarkable in itself.

The woodwind (of which the composer is a superb master) begins the poem of sorrow with startling preliminary groans. The climaxes were wrought up finely by the orchestra, and the clarinettes did impressive work both in this and in the final number of the programme.

The conflict of major and minor modes was finely brought out, and suggested the similar element of struggle in Beethoven's Sonata Pathetique first movement. We also found much to commend in the strange 5-4 movement which followed; the odd and persistent organ-point of the kettle-drum was not too aggressive.

This unusual rhythm is in reality a succession of even and uneven rhythms and pictures unrest most graphically. Wagner has used almost the same means to achieve the same purpose when in the third act of "Tristan and Isolde" he suggests the feverish uneasiness of the hero by a succession of 2-2 and 3-2 rhythms in alternation.

The third movement is full of combat and triumph, but the triumph is to be evanescent; we have already expressed the opinion that

"The paths of Glory lead but to the Grave"

[illegible] be the true motto for the last two movements, and these two contrasted portions of the work are the nub of the whole symphony.

Here we have a decided departure from the accustomed symphonic succession; the third movement has all the splendor of a symphonic finale; the real finale comes at last as a pathetic surprise; it is as if one transferred the Funeral March of the Heroic Symphony (changing it from C minor) to the end of that warlike work.

The military movement was given with all possible splendor; Mr. Gericke did not force the climaxes and there was nothing of vulgar blatancy in his reading, but there was force enough and sufficient majesty to give every point that the composer intended to convey. The trumpets deserve commendation for the clear and [illegible] character of their fanfares.

The finale is the most impressive movement of this novel symphony; the taste of [illegible] is in it from the beginning and one [illegible] not need the ever-weakening pizzicati of the contra-basses to tell us that the [illegible] the once sought glory has ceased to [illegible]

The [illegible] baleful tone of the muted horns [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] Liszt's Rhapsodie Hongroise, No. 3, in D major, is No. 6 of the piano set. In the piano version it stands in D flat, but as all keys are not free and equal in orchestral scoring, and as D flat would be a very awkward matter for some of the wind instruments, the composition was raised a semi-tone from its original estate.

It is an essentially ugly work with a very brilliant setting, like a very ill-favored female in a magnificent gown. All kinds of percussive instruments are used in its score, even a Czimbalom, or Schlag-Zither (a species of dulcimer like the Zither, but played with a mallet instead of being plucked), being called for. On this occasion this savage instrument was replaced by a steel-wired harp, we believe.

After the Pathetic Symphony this Rhapsody seemed rather empty, or rather it was full of "sound and fury, signifying nothing." It held the devout attention of the audience to the very end, scarcely even a standee leaving the hall until the last explosion was reached.

Louis C. Elson.

The New York Times

"All the News That's Fit to Print."

PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.

NEW YORK, SUNDAY, OCT. 30, 1898.

A DAY OF GOOD MUSIC.

Emil Paur Makes His Debut as a New York Conductor—First Concert of a New Band.

Emil Paur has come to town, and music lovers in New York ought to give thanks with sackbut and psaltery and harps and cymbals. No one acquainted with the world of music needs to be told who Mr. Paur is, because he has for five years been conducting the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his visits to New York have not been infrequent and certainly not unwelcome. Last Spring Mr. Paur severed his connection with the Boston organization, and Wilhelm Gericke, one of its former conductors, was chosen to succeed him. A great gap was made in the musical forces of the metropolis by the untimely and lamented death of Anton Seidl, and the Philharmonic Society led Mr. Paur into the breach by electing him its conductor. But a conductor cannot live by philharmonic concerts alone, so Mr. Paur was engaged by Carl Löwenstein to conduct the Astoria concerts and other entertainments to be given by a new organization called the New York Orchestra. It was for the purpose of introducing Mr. Paur and his New York Orchestra that a concert was given at Carnegie Hall last night.

One part of the purpose of the concert was defeated by the increase of the band beyond the size which it is to have as a rule. Yet this gave us some chance to estimate what Mr. Paur might do with an occasional orchestra, such as that of the Philharmonic Society. For it was really the conductor who was on trial last night. There are several new faces in the orchestra, but the bulk of it is composed of material familiar to our concert rooms, and heaven has mercifully preserved for us our own acrid aggregation of wood wind, without which we might think that we were lost indeed. What would Mr. Paur do with a New York orchestra? That was the question, and it was equal to asking whether Mr. Paur possessed the essential equipments of a genuine conductor. In the Boston Symphony Orchestra he had a perfect instrument, and we all knew it; but we had grown into a habit of looking upon our own players as very much inferior. Well, the New York orchestra is not a rival of the Boston galaxy, but it is already a convincing proof that our musicians can play if there is some one to make them do it.

The new orchestra, as revealed last night, is strong in its strings. They gave out a big, rich, sonorous body of tone, which had that satisfying solidity alone possessed by the fundamental diapason of an orchestra. The wood wind, as before intimated, was not always perfectly in tune, but it was substantital in quality and sufficient in power. Of the brass the horns are admirable, the trombones almost equally so, and the trumpets by no means so good. But, on the whole, there is satisfactory material in the new orchestra, and the men showed themselves last night to be earnest, vigorous in style, and responsive to their conductor's demands.

Mr. Paur selected as his introductory numbers Weber's "Freischütz" overture, Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, Volkmann's serenade in D minor, Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnol," (played for the first time here,) and Wagner's "Rienzi" overture. Of these numbers the symphony was accorded the most finished performance. Mr. Paur's reading of the work is well known and deservedly admired. It was fairly set forth last night. The Volkmann serenade showed to advantage the quality of the strings, the Rimsky-Korsakoff kaleidoscope of color exhibited the virtuosity of the band, and the Wagner overture displayed its enormous sonority. But the symphony revealed the highest qualities of the instrumental choir. In phrasing alone, this performance was without question the best that the present generation of concertgoers has heard from any local orchestra. Something is yet lacking in precision, and a good deal in smoothness, in the New York Orchestra; but there can be no doubt that it has already acquired some valuable ideas about attack, about nuancing, and about the handling of rinforzandi. Nothing illustrated this better than the reading of the first two movements of the symphony, while the aplomb and certainty with which the scherzo was given must have delighted every hearer. The finale was performed with fine breadth and power and with feeling.

In short, this introductory concert gave stimulating promise of good things to come. This orchestra is to play together under Mr. Paur all Winter. We may confidently look forward to large improvement in its precision, while sufficient rehearsals will undoubtedly enable Mr. Paur to give us more good readings of familiar symphonies. If last night's concert meant anything, it meant that the new conductor is a great gain to the musical life of the metropolis, and, if prejudice does not operate against him, he will be admired by all music lovers.

Boston Journal.

SUNDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1898.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" Played With Too Much Attention to the Detail—Johanna Gadski Not at Her Best.

The program of the third Symphony concert in Music Hall last evening, Mr. Gericke, conductor, was as follows:

Overture, "In the Spring" ....Goldmark
"Ocean! Du Ungeheuer," from "Oberon" ....Weber
Mrs. Gadski.
Symphony No. 6, in B minor, "Pathetique," .... Tschaikowsky
"Dich, theure Halle," from "Tannhaeuser," ....Wagner
Mrs. Gadski.
Hungarian Rhapsody No. 3 ....Liszt
(Scored for orchestra by Liszt and Doppler.)

Goldmark's melodious and spontaneous overture was played delightfully. We have no spring in New England, and therefore, perhaps, we welcome the more eagerly all allusions to it by poets and musicians; hence, also, the popularity of the Pastoral Symphony, with its cuckoo and other ornithological adornments. Goldmark has here succeeded happily in suggesting the thought of spring without becoming merely panoramic or stepping too far into Siegfried's forest. On the whole, the performance of this overture was the feature of the concert.

⁂

Mrs. Gadski will do well in future to leave the great aria from "Oberon" alone, if at the beginning of a season she labors so heavily in the performance of it. She is not cast in the heroic mould, and "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster"—why, oh why did she not sing it in the original language?—demands a more robust voice. Indeed I know of hardly a soprano today that can sing it with the fitting breadth and dignity. At the Worcester Festival Mrs. Gadski was more fortunate with this aria, although her intonation was then not always perfectly true. Last night she forced her voice deliberately and painfully, and her intonation was frequently and distressingly false. In piano passages the tones were, for once, thin and uncontrollable. She sang her consonants violently. I have at sundry times and places sounded the praises of this amiable singer. There are certain operas in which she is charming—in such parts as Sieglinde and Senta; and her Hester is still the one pleasant recollection when in sweat-compelling nightmare I listen to Mr. Damrosch's "Scarlet Letter." I, therefore, entreat her not to go the way that so many have gone before her. I beg her to refrain from forcing tone. An audience will always applaud as long as there is vocal sound and fury; and the same audience, after it has encouraged the singer to shout and strain, will say after the voice is ruined and the singer still appears: "She's played out; I wonder why they hired her." The aria of Elisabeth was better sung, though it was delivered none too well. The accompaniments were most discreet and sympathetic.

⁂

The performance of the Pathetic Symphony was to me a great disappointment. It was careful, but too careful. There was infinite attention paid to the detail, but it was at the expense of breadth and passion. Do you say, "But look at Tschaikowsy's score?" I have looked at it. Sir or Madam, I have studied it, and I am tolerably familiar with it. I know how punctiliously the composer indicated the nuances. I admit that in former performances the "t's" were not always crossed and the "i's" were not always dotted; but those former performances were palpitating with life and glowing with color. The performance of last night was elegant and academic. There was finish to the last degree; even the finger nails of Tschaikowsky's loving, struggling, crowned, and dying man were polished so they glistened. I missed the intense individuality, the amazing humanity of the thing. For once the second theme of the first movement, the theme of dreaming, amorous, ineffable recollection, the thought of youth and all that the word means was not sung straight to the heart. The performance of the second movement with its ghastly attempt at gaiety and the inexorable reminder that time is fleeting was almost perfunctory.

It has been said that former performances of the third movement were "vulgar." The movement should not be played without giving rise to the suspicion of vulgarity. This much abused, misunderstood march-scherzo—or whatever you are pleased to call it—is the excuse, the pretext for the final lamentation. The man triumphs, as a returning general. He has the whole of earthly fame. Success, as Victor Hugo says, is hideous. The blare of trumpets, the shouts of the crowd may drown the sneers of envy; but at the coronation of Tsar, or at the inauguration of President, or at the sight of Tasso with the laurel wreath or great Pompey passing Roman streets, Death grins, for He knows the vulgarity and the emptiness of what this world calls success. Last night the third movement did not make the composer's irresistible contrast, and it was for once without authority. To me, the lamentation that is the end of every man's desire was read with more appreciation and sympathy by Mr. Gericke than were the preceding movements.

⁂

The program-books says that Liszt wrote 15 Hungarian rhapsodies for the piano. He did; he wrote 20, and of these 19 at least are published. The one played last night—No. 6 of the piano pieces—No. 3 of the orchestral arrangements—is cheap and nasty. The score calls for a zymbala—or czimbalom. This characteristic Hungarian-Oriental instrument was replaced by a piano-harp arrangement, I believe, which was played by Mr. Zach. It would have been an interesting experiment if a genuine zymbola had been borrowed from the Eden Musee. Probably the player at that place of amusement does not read music, whether it be in fine or coarse print.

⁂

The hall was crowded, and applause was at its height.

⁂

The program of the Symphony concert Saturday night will be as follows:

Symphony No. 3 ....Brahms
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 1....Scharwenka
Mr. Rosenthal.
Tone Poem, "Don Juan" ....Strauss
Prelude and Love Death from "Tristan and Isolde" ....Wagner

Philip Hale.

Boston Courier.

SUNDAY MORNING, [illegible], 1898.

The performance of Mr. Gericke's third programme proved luminously and potently that the Symphony orchestra has absorbed and assimilated its new elements, and that the master's mind and will and hand have more than regained their old supremacy. Many people had doubts as to whether his return were wise—whether he might have stood still while they had altered their views; whether his successors might not have altered local tastes and predilections; whether his conservatism, his inclination toward severity and his extreme care for shapeliness of form and polish of detail might not now appear academic, narrow and limited; whether he could have grown throughout the years in which he had less call to step forward and be a leader. But as was said in this column, Mr. Gericke is a man who may rest, but who would not be idle; while, as the Transcript said well, the opportunity and necessity of being himself more often a listener, an observer and a judge, would make him study and profit by the effects presented before him by other men.

So it is; and this performance was equal to the highest demands and the highest standards. There were the absolute exactude of detail; the even graduation of degree after degree; the perfect attack, in which the brass choir participated with as smooth and sharp a unity as the best men in that virtuoso Banda Rossa had; the great resonance which was never roar or rattle; the complete accord in accent, phrase, motion and feeling, and that mastery of swell and emphasis in passages of minor volume and force which has hitherto been almost entirely lacking. And all this was obtained without nervousness, restlessness, excitement or anxiety, yet with no lack of almost imperious vigor when the great moment came.

The orchestral numbers were: Goldmark's "Spring" overture, so fresh and encouraging in its temper, so bright, rich and genial in its orchestration, and so chary of the fantastic or cloying qualities of which this composer is so fond; the "Pathetic" symphony of Tschaikowsky, which had full emotion without passionateness, lightness without levity and an admirable individualization of its much contrasted movements; and the third in Liszt's orchestral settings from his own Hungarian rhapsodies, comparatively tranquil and suave in its beginning, but expanded and hastened into one of those exciting prestos wherein Mr. Gericke was ever skilful. For the first time the clarinet player had a full chance to be heard, both the symphony and the rhapsody presenting quite long uncovered passages for him. His tone is certainly very beautiful—round, smooth, soft and even his scale unbroken into anything like registers, and his lower notes (The "Chalumeau") deep and firm without jar or harshness. The flutist, also being brought into a little more prominence, gave an excellent account of himself. It was agreeable to perceive that the former drum-player, who is esteemed as a good musician and excellent man, has not been left quite out in the cold, but has been assigned to the cymbals.

Mme. Gadski, who was in fine voice and spirits, sang in a broad dramatic manner, declaiming solidly, emphasing decisively and yet touching the gentler phrases with grace. Her selections were Weber's "Ocean" scene from "Oberon," which has its suggestions of the "Der Freischutz" scene, and the "Hall of Song" from "Tannhauser." She was received warmly, heard with evident pleasure and several times recalled by great applause.

The next programme stands: Brahms, Symphony No. 3; Scharwenka, Concerto for pianoforte, soloist, Mr. Rosenthal; Richard Strauss, Tone Poem, "Don Juan"; Wagner, Prelude and Love Death from "Tristan and Isolde."

HOWARD MALCOM TICKNOR.

MUSICAL AMERICA

EDITED BY JOHN C FREUND

PUBLISHED AT 27 UNION SQUARE NEW YORK

Devoted to Music, Drama and the Arts.

New York, October 29, 1898.

MUSICAL BROOKLYN.

BROOKLYN, Oct. 24, 1898.

The advance sale of seats for the series of ten concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give in Brooklyn under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute, shows a great increase over the advance sale of last year. In fact, the music department of the Institute is progressing in every branch.

It is a curious and unfortunate fact that concert-givers are becoming more prone to neglect singers as soloists. In the attractive Peabody list there are only three vocalists in a list of fifteen. The proportion is the same in the announcement of the soloists of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Mme. Gadski, Burmester, Sauer, Lady Hallé and Carreño—two pianists, two violinists and one singer.

Mr. Comee, of the Boston Orchestra, told me last season that the announcement of a singer caused a difference of several hundred dollars in the receipts. Then why not give us more vocalists?

In Europe there is a good reason for the preponderance of instrumentalists at symphony concerts. But in America, where is the opera for every city? What are the opportunities for hearing good singing if the concert managers disregard the popular demands?

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.
Established 1813.
The Official Paper of the State.
The Official Paper of the City.
MONDAY MORNING, OCT. 31, 1898.

Gadski's Return--Tschaikowsky's "Symphonie Pathetique."

Music Hall Crowded at the Symphony Concert.

We dare not flatter ourselves that it was Tschaikowsky's symphony that crowded Music Hall in every part on Saturday; the tremendous audience showed that the public pins its faith on the motto, "Vox, et praeterea nihil," that a prima donna far outweighs sounding brass or tinkling cymbal.

The concert began with Goldmark's "Spring" overture, a dainty bit of music in proper classical form, a half-way house between Beethoven and Mendelssohn. Of course it pictured a Spring of which the New Englander is ignorant; the rustic oboe pictured the delights of outdoor life and the musical poultry-yard was heard piping gently upon the flute, not quite so weak in its style as Beethoven's "By the Brook" ("Pastoral Symphony"), where cuckoo and nightingale make ornithological remarks and Quail on Oboe is served. The reading was a delightful one and the work is a strong contrast to Goldmark's usual overtures of dissonance and passion.

This was but the prelude to the popular triumph of the evening, for Mme. Gadski followed with Weber's "Ocean, thou mighty monster." The ocean was in a storm and the ship labored heavily, but fortunately did not founder. Mme. Gadski has been heard to much better advantage; it seemed as if she desired to reach an impossible degree of force and this led to an insecure and tremulous tone that detracted from the enjoyment of the number; from the reviewer's enjoyment only, however, for the vast audience went wild with delight and recalled the singer with great enthusiasm.

The subsequent number, Elizabeth's "Greeting to the Hall," from "Tannhaeuser," was much better and very brilliant in its ending, while the orchestral accompaniment deserves the highest praise.

Of the orchestral number of the evening the "Symphonie Pathetique" deserves the most extended mention, for in spite of its many performances its interest is not waning, and on this occasion it became a measuring tape to compare conductors.

Of recent years we have had this symphony as regularly as the "Messiah" itself, so that there is really very little to say about its familiar measures. Mr. Gericke placed it in the centre of the programme, for the same reason that he places Brahms' Third Symphony at the beginning of the next concert, because its quiet, whispered ending would be lost at the end of a programme when auditors reach for umbrellas and rush for doors.

The symphony is one of the manifestations of the modern direction of art and a much more legitimate direction than the musical metaphysics of Richard Strauss or the unnatural dissonances of the composer's modern compatriots.

Mr. Gericke gave a very clear presentation of the first movement with its peculiar development and its slow episodes; if ever there was a "slow Allegro" it is this one; its introduction seems to dominate its entire spirit, and this same introduction plunges into medias res with a suddenness that is remarkable in itself.

The woodwind (of which the composer is a superb master) begins the poem of Sorrow with startling preliminary groans. The climaxes were wrought up finely by the orchestra, and the clarinettes did impressive work both in this and in the final number of the programme.

The conflict of major and minor modes was finely brought out, and suggested the similar element of struggle in Beethoven's Sonata Pathetique first movement. We also found much to commend in the strange 5-4 movement which followed; the odd and persistent organ-point of the kettle-drum was not too aggressive.

This unusual rhythm is in reality a succession of even and uneven rhythms and pictures unrest most graphically. Wagner has used almost the same means to achieve the same purpose when in the third act of "Tristan and Isolde" he suggests the feverish uneasiness of the hero by a succession of 2-2 and 3-2 rhythms in alternation.

The third movement is full of combat and triumph, but the triumph is to be evanescent; we have already expressed the opinion that would be the true motto for the last two movements, and these two contrasted portions of the work are the nub of the whole symphony.

> "The paths of Glory lead but to the Grave"

Here we have a decided departure from the accustomed symphonic succession; the third movement has all the splendor of a symphonic finale; the real finale comes at last as a pathetic surprise; it is as if one transferred the Funeral March of the Heroic Symphony (changing it from C minor) to the end of that warlike work.

The military movement was given with all possible splendor; Mr. Gericke did not force the climaxes and there was nothing of vulgar blatancy in his reading, but there was force enough and sufficient majesty to give every point that the composer intended to convey. The trumpets deserve commendation for the clear and effective character of their fanfares.

The finale is the most impressive movement of this novel symphony, the taste of death is in it from the beginning and one does not need the ever-weakening pizzicato of the contra-basses to tell us that the heart that once sought glory has ceased to beat.

The baleful tone of the muted horns (the ugliest tone-color that one can elicit from the orchestra) and the stroke of the tamtam, darkly indicate the approach of the King of Terrors. The deeper tones of the horns were not effective in this performance and there seemed to be a little too much of precision in making the dramatic touches; the art of concealing art [illegible] movement was so worthy that [illegible] applause of the audience, calling the conductor to the stand to acknowledge it, was well deserved.

The banquet ended with a mixture of Goulasch, Tokay and Paprika, chiefly the latter. Liszt's Rhapsodie Hongroise, No. 3, in D major, is No. 6 of the piano set. In the piano version it stands in D flat, but as all keys are not free and equal in orchestral scoring, and as D flat would be a very awkward matter for some of the wind instruments, the composition was raised a semi-tone from its original estate.

It is an essentially ugly work with a very brilliant setting, like a very ill-favored female in a magnificent gown. All kinds of percussive instruments are used in its score, even a Czimbalom, or Schlag-Zither (a species of dulcimer like the Zither, but played with a mallet instead of being plucked), being called for. On this occasion this savage instrument was replaced by a steel-wired harp, we believe.

After the Pathetic Symphony this Rhapsody seemed rather empty, or rather it was full of "sound and fury, signifying nothing." It held the devout attention of the audience to the very end, scarcely even a standee leaving the hall until the last explosion was reached. Louis C. Elson.

The New York Times
"All the News That's Fit to Print."
PUBLISHED EVERY DAY IN THE YEAR.
NEW YORK, SUNDAY, OCT. 30, 1898.

A DAY OF GOOD MUSIC.

Emil Paur Makes His Debut as a New York Conductor—First Concert of a New Band.

Emil Paur has come to town, and music lovers in New York ought to give thanks with sackbut and psaltery and harps and cymbals. No one acquainted with the world of music needs to be told who Mr. Paur is, because he has for five years been conducting the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his visits to New York have not been infrequent and certainly not unwelcome. Last Spring Mr. Paur severed his connection with the Boston organization, and Wilhelm Gericke, one of its former conductors, was chosen to succeed him. A great gap was made in the musical forces of the metropolis by the untimely and lamented death of Anton Seidl, and the Philharmonic Society led Mr. Paur into the breach by electing him its conductor. But a conductor cannot live by philharmonic concerts alone, so Mr. Paur was engaged by Carl Löwenstein to conduct the Astoria concerts and other entertainments to be given by a new organization called the New York Orchestra. It was for the purpose of introducing Mr. Paur and his New York Orchestra that a concert was given at Carnegie Hall last night.

One part of the purpose of the concert was defeated by the increase of the band beyond the size which it is to have as a rule. Yet this gave us some chance to estimate what Mr. Paur might do with an occasional orchestra, such as that of the Philharmonic Society. For it was really the conductor who was on trial last night. There are several new faces in the orchestra, but the bulk of it is composed of material familiar to our concert rooms, and heaven has mercifully preserved for us our own acrid aggregation of wood wind, without which we might think that we were lost indeed. What would Mr. Paur do with a New York orchestra? That was the question, and it was equal to asking whether Mr. Paur possessed the essential equipments of a genuine conductor. In the Boston Symphony Orchestra he had a perfect instrument, and we all knew it; but we had grown into a habit of looking upon our own players as very much inferior. Well, the New York orchestra is not a rival of the Boston galaxy, but it is already a convincing proof that our musicians can play if there is some one to make them do it.

The new orchestra, as revealed last night, is strong in its strings. They gave out a big, rich, sonorous body of tone, which had that satisfying solidity alone possessed by the fundamental diapason of an orchestra. The wood wind, as before intimated, was not always perfectly in tune, but it was substantital in quality and sufficient in power. Of the brass the horns are admirable, the trombones almost equally so, and the trumpets by no means so good. But, on the whole, there is satisfactory material in the new orchestra, and the men showed themselves last night to be earnest, vigorous in style, and responsive to their conductor's demands.

Mr. Paur selected as his introductory numbers Weber's "Freischütz" overture, Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, Volkmann's serenade in D minor, Rimsky-Korsakoff's "Capriccio Espagnol," (played for the first time here,) and Wagner's "Rienzi" overture. Of these numbers the symphony was accorded the most finished performance. Mr. Paur's reading of the work is well known and deservedly admired. It was fairly set forth last night. The Volkmann serenade showed to advantage the quality of the strings, the Rimsky-Korsakoff kaleidoscope of color exhibited the virtuosity of the band, and the Wagner overture displayed its enormous sonority. But the symphony revealed the highest qualities of the instrumental choir. In phrasing alone, this performance was without question the best that the present generation of concertgoers has heard from any local orchestra. Something is yet lacking in precision, and a good deal in smoothness, in the New York Orchestra; but there can be no doubt that it has already acquired some valuable ideas about attack, about nuancing, and about the handling of rinforzandi. Nothing illustrated this better than the reading of the first two movements of the symphony, while the aplomb and certainty with which the scherzo was given must have delighted every hearer. The finale was performed with fine breadth and power and with feeling.

In short, this introductory concert gave stimulating promise of good things to come. This orchestra is to play together under Mr. Paur all Winter. We may confidently look forward to large improvement in its precision, while sufficient rehearsals will undoubtedly enable Mr. Paur to give us more good readings of familiar symphonies. If last night's concert meant anything, it meant that the new conductor is a great gain to the musical life of the metropolis, and, if prejudice does not operate against him, he will be admired by all music lovers.

Boston Journal.
SUNDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1898.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Tschaikowsky's "Pathetic" Played With Too Much Attention to the Detail—Johanna Gadski Not at Her Best.

The program of the third Symphony concert in Music Hall last evening, Mr. Gericke, conductor, was as follows:

Overture, "In the Spring" ....Goldmark
"Ozean! Du Ungeheuer," from "Oberon" ....Weber
Mrs. Gadski.
Symphony No. 6, in B minor, "Pathetique," .... Tschaikowsky
"Dich, theure Halle," from "Tannhaeuser," .... Wagner
Mrs. Gadski.
Hungarian Rhapsody No. 3 ....Liszt
(Scored for orchestra by Liszt and Doppler.)

Goldmark's melodious and spontaneous overture was played delightfully. We have no spring in New England, and therefore, perhaps, we welcome the more eagerly all allusions to it by poets and musicians; hence, also, the popularity of the Pastoral Symphony, with its cuckoo and other ornithological adornments. Goldmark has here succeeded happily in suggesting the thought of spring without becoming merely panoramic or stepping too far into Siegfried's forest. On the whole, the performance of this overture was the feature of the concert.

⁂

Mrs. Gadski will do well in future to leave the great aria from "Oberon" alone, if at the beginning of a season she labors so heavily in the performance of it. She is not cast in the heroic mould, and "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster"—why, oh why did she not sing it in the original language?—demands a more robust voice. Indeed I know of hardly a soprano today that can sing it with the fitting breadth and dignity. At the Worcester Festival Mrs. Gadski was more fortunate with this aria, although her intonation was then not always perfectly true. Last night she forced her voice deliberately and painfully, and her intonation was frequently and distressingly false. In piano passages the tones were, for once, thin and uncontrollable. She sang her consonants violently. I have at sundry times and places sounded the praises of this amiable singer. There are certain operas in which she is charming—in such parts as Sieglinde and Senta; and her Hester is still the one pleasant recollection when in sweat-compelling nightmare I listen to Mr. Damrosch's "Scarlet Letter." I, therefore, entreat her not to go the way that so many have gone before her. I beg her to refrain from forcing tone. An audience will always applaud as long as there is vocal sound and fury; and the same audience, after it has encouraged the singer to shout and strain, will say after the voice is ruined and the singer still appears: "She's played out; I wonder why they hired her." The aria of Elisabeth was better sung, though it was delivered none too well. The accompaniments were most discreet and sympathetic.

⁂

The performance of the Pathetic Symphony was to me a great disappointment. It was careful, but too careful. There was infinite attention paid to the detail, but it was at the expense of breadth and passion. Do you say, "But look at Tschaikowsy's score?" I have looked at it. Sir or Madam, I have studied it, and I am tolerably familiar with it. I know how punctiliously the composer indicated the nuances. I admit that in former performances the "t's" were not always crossed and the "i's" were not always dotted; but those former performances were palpitating with life and glowing with color. The performance of last night was elegant and academic. There was finish to the last degree; even the finger nails of Tschaikowsky's loving, struggling, crowned, and dying man were polished so they glistened. I missed the intense individuality, the amazing humanity of the thing. For once the second theme of the first movement, the theme of dreaming, amorous, ineffable recollection, the thought of youth and all that the word means was not sung straight to the heart. The performance of the second movement with its ghastly attempt at gaiety and the inexorable reminder that time is fleeting was almost perfunctory.

It has been said that former performances of the third movement were "vulgar." The movement should not be played without giving rise to the suspicion of vulgarity. This much abused, misunderstood march-scherzo—or whatever you are pleased to call it—is the excuse, the pretext for the final lamentation. The man triumphs, as a returning general. He has the whole of earthly fame. Success, as Victor Hugo says, is hideous. The blare of trumpets, the shouts of the crowd may drown the sneers of envy; but at the coronation of Tsar, or at the inauguration of President, or at the sight of Tasso with the laurel wreath or great Pompey passing Roman streets, Death grins, for He knows the vulgarity and the emptiness of what this world calls success. Last night the third movement did not make the composer's irresistible contrast, and it was for once without authority. To me, the lamentation that is the end of every man's desire was read with more appreciation and sympathy by Mr. Gericke than were the preceding movements.

⁂

The program-books says that Liszt wrote 15 Hungarian rhapsodies for the piano. He did; he wrote 20, and of these 19 at least are published. The one played last night—No. 6 of the piano pieces—No. 3 of the orchestral arrangements—is cheap and nasty. The score calls for a zymbala—or czimbalom. This characteristic Hungarian-Oriental instrument was replaced by a piano-harp arrangement, I believe, which was played by Mr. Zach. It would have been an interesting experiment if a genuine zymbola had been borrowed from the Eden Musee. Probably the player at that place of amusement does not read music, whether it be in fine or coarse print.

⁂

The hall was crowded, and applause was at its height.

⁂

The program of the Symphony concert Saturday night will be as follows:

Symphony No. 3 ....Brahms
Concerto for Pianoforte No. 1....Scharwenka
Mr. Rosenthal.
Tone Poem, "Don Juan" ....Strauss
Prelude and Love Death from "Tristan and Isolde" ....Wagner

Philip Hale.

Boston Courier.
SUNDAY MORNING, OCT. 30, 1898.

The performance of Mr. Gericke's third programme proved luminously and potently that the Symphony orchestra has absorbed and assimilated its new elements, and that the master's mind and will and hand have more than regained their old supremacy. Many people had doubts as to whether his return were wise—whether he might have stood still while they had altered their views; whether his successors might not have altered local tastes and predilections; whether his conservatism, his inclination toward severity and his extreme care for shapeliness of form and polish of detail might not now appear academic, narrow and limited; whether he could have grown throughout the years in which he had less call to step forward and be a leader. But as was said in this column, Mr. Gericke is a man who may rest, but who would not be idle; while, as the Transcript said well, the opportunity and necessity of being himself more often a listener, an observer and a judge, would make him study and profit by the effects presented before him by other men.

So it is; and this performance was equal to the highest demands and the highest standards. There were the absolute exactude of detail; the even graduation of degree after degree; the perfect attack, in which the brass choir participated with as smooth and sharp a unity as the best men in that virtuoso Banda Rossa had; the great resonance which was never roar or rattle; the complete accord in accent, phrase, motion and feeling, and that mastery of swell and emphasis in passages of minor volume and force which has hitherto been almost entirely lacking. And all this was obtained without nervousness, restlessness, excitement or anxiety, yet with no lack of almost imperious vigor when the great moment came.

The orchestral numbers were: Goldmark's "Spring" overture, so fresh and encouraging in its temper, so bright, rich and genial in its orchestration, and so chary of the fantastic or cloying qualities of which this composer is so fond; the "Pathetic" symphony of Tschaikowsky, which had full emotion without passionateness, lightness without levity and an admirable individualization of its much contrasted movements; and the third in Liszt's orchestral settings from his own Hungarian rhapsodies, comparatively tranquil and suave in its beginning, but expanded and hastened into one of those exciting prestos wherein Mr. Gericke was ever skilful. For the first time the clarinet player had a full chance to be heard, both the symphony and the rhapsody presenting quite long uncovered passages for him. His tone is certainly very beautiful—round, smooth, soft and even his scale unbroken into anything like registers, and his lower notes (The "Chalumeau") deep and firm without jar or harshness. The flutist, also being brought into a little more prominence, gave an excellent account of himself. It was agreeable to perceive that the former drum-player, who is esteemed as a good musician and excellent man, has not been left quite out in the cold, but has been assigned to the cymbals.

Mme. Gadski, who was in fine voice and spirits, sang in a broad dramatic manner, declaiming solidly, emphasing decisively and yet touching the gentler phrases with grace. Her selections were Weber's "Ocean" scene from "Oberon," which has its suggestions of the "Der Freischutz" scene, and the "Hall of Song" from "Tannhauser." She was received warmly, heard with evident pleasure and several times recalled by great applause.

The next programme stands: Brahms, Symphony No. 3; Scharwenka, Concerto for pianoforte, soloist, Mr. Rosenthal; Richard Strauss, Tone Poem, "Don Juan"; Wagner, Prelude and Love Death from "Tristan and Isolde."

HOWARD MALCOM TICKNOR.

MUSICAL AMERICA
EDITED BY JOHN C FREUND
PUBLISHED AT 27 UNION SQUARE NEW YORK
Devoted to Music, Drama and the Arts.
New York, October 29, 1898.

MUSICAL BROOKLYN.

BROOKLYN, Oct. 24, 1898.

The advance sale of seats for the series of ten concerts which the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give in Brooklyn under the auspices of the Brooklyn Institute, shows a great increase over the advance sale of last year. In fact, the music department of the Institute is progressing in every branch.

It is a curious and unfortunate fact that concert-givers are becoming more prone to neglect singers as soloists. In the attractive Peabody list there are only three vocalists in a list of fifteen. The proportion is the same in the announcement of the soloists of the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Mme. Gadski, Burmester, Sauer, Lady Hallé and Carreño—two pianists, two violinists and one singer.

Mr. Comee, of the Boston Orchestra, told me last season that the announcement of a singer caused a difference of several hundred dollars in the receipts. Then why not give us more vocalists?

In Europe there is a good reason for the preponderance of instrumentalists at symphony concerts. But in America, where is the opera for every city? What are the opportunities for hearing good singing if the concert managers disregard the popular demands?

Boston Sunday Globe.

SUNDAY, OCT 30, 1898.

Third Symphony Concert.

Mr Gericke's third symphony program was as follows: Overture, "Im Fruhling," op 36, Goldmark; aria from "Oberon," Weber; symphony No. 6 (Pathetique), Tschaikowsky; Elizabeth's aria from "Tannhauser," Wagner; Hungarian rhapsody, No. 3, Liszt. Mme Johanna Gadski was the soloist, and the attendance at Music hall appeared to be even larger than that at the opening concert. The graceful "Spring" overture is written in Goldmark's happiest vein, modern in construction and with many little "catch" phrases introduced for different divisions of the orchestra, melodic quirks which invariably arouse a smile and specially amuse the less critical auditor. There is no need of criticizing the brilliant performance given by the orchestra for the difficulties in the score are comparatively slight and the men played with requisite animation and followed Mr Gericke's beat with promptness. The concluding themes in the introduction were very smoothly taken up by the various contingents, possibly their work could not be improved, and the dramatic finale of the overture was another charming bit of interpretation.

Probably Mme Gadski's appearance was the cause of the large attendance, for the popular soprano was welcomed and applauded with the greatest vehemence. Always a conscientious artist, she has steadily improved each season, and her return to Boston now shows that since her last appearance here she has gained somewhat in purity of tonality without loss of dramatic power. The excerpt from Weber's "Oberon" was sung with a dramatic intensity and rapturous fervor that fairly thrilled the auditors and caused the recall of the artist to the platform several times. Elizabeth's greeting from "Tannhauser" was given in the same effective manner familiar to patrons of German opera in which Mme Gadski's has achieved one of her great successes in the Elizabeth role. Her voice sounded specially clear by reason of the singer being in the foreground, and not, as in opera, singing over the orchestra.

Tschaikowsky's superb "Pathetique" symphony was splendidly interpreted, the sad and somber-colored first movement closing with the mournful andante being given with grand effect. The quaintness of the vivacious second part was carefully illustrated without undue harshness, and the musical turmoil of the third movement never descended into meaningless blare and bluster. The closing was as solemn and impressive as one could conceive in musical expression, and the difficult work given the muted horns in this part was admirably done. The finale is of wonderful beauty, and it was most beautifully played. The overture elicited great applause. The Liszt "Rhapsody" went well, but its appearance of triviality was intensified by contrast with the previous number, and except for correctness and vivacity in execution, and the proper "local" color introduced by the "czimbalon," calls for no special mention.

Mr Rosenthal will be the soloist at this week's concerts. The program will be as follows: Symphony No. 3, Brahms; concerto for pianoforte, Scharwenka; tone poem, "Don Juan," Richard Strauss; prelude and Love Death from "Tristan and Isolde," Wagner.

BOSTON POST,
The Representative Democratic Paper
OF NEW ENGLAND.

SUNDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 30, 1898.
[illegible] Post Publishing Company.)

THIRD SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Mme. Gadski, the Soloist, Creates Great Enthusiasm.

Though a rainy night, there was an enormous crowd at the Symphony last night, drawn thither by the appearance of Mme. Gadski as the soloist of the evening. The enthusiasm, both on her appearance and exit, was most marked, and after each number she was called back several times.

Her selections were the aria "Ocean, Thou Mighty Mother," from Weber's "Oberon," which she sang with a grand volume of tone and clearness of enunciation. Mme. Gadski's voice was altogether in excellent condition, and it seemed last night that she had gained materially since heard here last spring in grand opera. Her second number, "Elizabeth's Greeting," from Wagner's "Tannhauser," was magnificently sung. In this, probably more than in her previous selection, the purity of her tones was especially apparent. Her delivery of this aria was such as to make her audience regret that it is all too short, so enjoyable is it when so admirably sung as by Mme. Gadski. The ease and breadth of her delivery of the high B in the finale of this selection were most satisfying and wholly enjoyable.

It was a genuine treat to again listen to the grand Tchaikowsky symphony "Pathetique," with its curious though always interesting orchestration. To many of the audience it was interesting to compare last year's rendition of it (when it was heard twice) under Mr. Paur's leadership, and this time under Mr. Gericke. In spots it seemed as though the latter conductor got more out of the movements, but the second, which is of the scherzo character, and the third, which ends with a stirring march theme, seemed to take on new beauties last night.

The symphony was loudly applauded at the finish, and it is hoped it may be heard again before the end of the season. The other two numbers on the programme were Goldmark's overture "In the Spring" and Liszt's Hungarian Rhapsody No. 3, both of which were beautifully played, the latter introducing the czimbalon (a Hungarian instrument) in little tremolo passages.

NEW YORK HERALD.

NEW YORK, SUNDAY, OCTOBER 30, 1898.

MR. PAUR'S FIRST CONCERT.

Mr. Emil Paur, erstwhile of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, made his first bow as a full fledged New York conductor at Carnegie Hall last evening. The occasion was styled an introductory concert. The programme might have been considered a trifle light by cultured Boston, but New York, which can like even such things as don't have to be looked at through spectacles, found it very agreeable. For there was a large audience and much applause.

The pièce de résistance—which was it? Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony or the Rimski-Korsoroff "Spanish Suite?" To the conservatives the former; to the moderns the latter. The next best thing to killing two birds with one stone is killing them with two. And Mr. Paur made up his programme accordingly.

His reading of the "Eroica" was not modern, according to the most advanced ideas; yet advanced enough, according to old standards. And isn't that, after all, a happy medium which adds a pinch of original salt to the good that time and tradition have already seasoned?

As for the "Spanish Suite"—it is highly entertaining. If asked what business a man named Rimski-Korsoroff has composing a Spanish suite, the suite itself might answer, "Look at me. I'm so interesting!" And so it is. It has characteristic rhythm, warm, voluptuous and snappy melody and a lot of those tricksy instrumental surprises which are the delight of orchestral virtuosos. The orchestra played it brilliantly.

Mr. Paur's new organization, the New York Orchestra, cannot be expected to become a Boston Symphony at a bound, but that it is a well drilled, responsive body of players it showed in the selections named, in the "Freyschütz" and "Rienzi" overtures, and in the Volkmann serenade, in which Leo Schulz, a 'cellist, whom Mr. Paur has brought from Boston, played the obligato charmingly.

NEW YORK HERALD.
HERALD SQUARE.
NEW YORK, TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 1, 1898.

LOEWENSTEIN HAS ENOUGH.

Will Let Some One Else Take His Place as an Impresario.

A brief twelve months has satisfied Mr. Carl Loewenstein's ambition to achieve fame as a musical impresario.

It was Mr. Loewenstein who conceived the idea last winter of giving a series of concerts at the Waldorf-Astoria, at which, under the directorship of Anton Seidl, art and fashion might meet on a common plane, and Wagner be served with water ices, Mendelssohn with mineral water and Tschaikowski with chocolate and cake.

Mr. Loewenstein gave his patrons good music and no one could take exception to the incidental creature comforts which were furnished. The orchestra got its salary and the public got its entertainment, but when at the end of the series of twelve concerts Mr. Loewenstein figured up—"Receipts, $3,600; expenses, $3,600," he naturally asked himself, "Where am I at?"

Nothing daunted, however, Mr. Loewenstein laid his plans for another series of swell incidental refreshment concerts at the Astoria this winter, with Mr. Emil Paur as director. He also arranged for a series of symphony concerts at Carnegie Hall under the same director. The first of these latter was given last Saturday night, and Mr. Loewenstein's losses were little short of $2,000.

He promptly made up his mind that he had had enough of the impresario business.

"Mr. Loewenstein," said his lawyer, Mr. Julius Lehmann, last night, "has withdrawn from the musical managerial world. The Astoria concerts will be given, but under other auspices. He made no money last Winter and he lost money last Saturday. His health is poor and would not warrant his going on with the work. All his contracts will be kept. He has had enough of it, and that's all there is to be said."

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL.
PUBLISHED BY THE
PROVIDENCE JOURNAL COMPANY,
Nos. 209 and 213 Westminster St.
DAILY JOURNAL (Morning), $6.00 per annum, $1.50 for three months, 50 cents one month.
SUNDAY JOURNAL $2.00 per annum.
MANUFACTURERS AND FARMERS JOURNAL (Mondays and Thursdays), $1.00 per annum in advance.
THE EVENING BULLETIN, $6.00 per annum.
☞ Postage free to mail subscribers whose payment of subscription is made in advance.

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1898.

Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The first in the series of eight concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Infantry Hall is announced for this evening. The programme is as follows: Weber, overture to "Euryanthe;" Wagner, Elizabeth's Aria, Act II., "Tannhauser," Mme. Gadski; Brahms, Variations on a Theme by Haydn; Weber, aria, "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster," from "Oberon," Mme. Gadski; Beethoven, Symphony No. 5, in C-minor.

The "Euryanthe" overture seems to have a perpetual charm. All of Weber's overtures are unique, not only in their dramatic effects, but in their form, which is a happy combination of the classical overture and a string of tunes taken direct from the opera itself. The second orchestral selection, the Brahms variations on a theme by Haydn, gives the new members of the orchestra an opportunity to show their virtuosoship while the composer displays the most intricate devices known in the field of orchestration. It is hardly necessary to speak of the noble Fifth Symphony of Beethoven, which will always fill the Boston Music Hall without the further attraction of a great and brilliant soloist.

Mme. Gadski, who made, of all the soloists appearing in last season's concerts in this city, the most favorable impression, will sing the two selections given above, admirably adapted to display her wonderful technique and range of voice. Mme. Gadski's appearance with the orchestra at the Boston concerts last Friday and Saturday aroused the enthusiasm of both audiences and critics.

The entire series of concerts announced for this season compares most favorably with any of its predecessors, notably in the matter of solo talent.

Boston Transcript

MONDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1898

Music Hall: Boston Symphony Orchestra

The programme of the third symphony concert, given in the Music Hall last Saturday evening, was:

Goldmark: Overture, "Im Frühling," opus 36.
Weber: Scena and Aria, "Ozean! Du Ungeheuer!" from "Oberon."
Tchaikovsky: Symphony No. 6, in B minor, "Pathétique," opus 74.
Wagner: Elisabeth's Greeting, from "Tannhäuser."
Liszt: Rhapsodie hongroise No. 3 (scored for orchestra by Liszt and Doppler). (First time at these concerts.)

Mme. Johanna Gadski was the singer.

Goldmark's "Im Frühling" was beautifully, exquisitely played. The composition itself seems none of the strongest; at this second hearing—it was first given here, under Mr. Nikisch, in 1893—no new beauties unfolded themselves; it is bright, cheerful, well-sounding music, but one finds exceedingly little of the composer in it; it is not characteristic, and one feels that Goldmark wrote it in quite ordinary ink, not in his heart's blood.

Tchaikovsky's "Pathétique" was plainly the central point of interest and curiosity; what would Mr. Gericke do with it? how would he take it?—these were questions which had agitated the concert-going mind ever since the beginning of the season. It is credibly reported, by the way, that Mr. Gericke, asked some time ago about his conception of the symphony, had answered that he did not see how there could be two conceptions, as Tchaikovsky had been very copious and explicit in his directions in the score. Indeed, few scores have been so carefully annotated by the composer as this one; it almost looks as if it had been "edited" by an admiring commentator, it swarms so with expression-marks! Well! the performance was certainly a surprise, in some ways a delight—but not in every way. It was a superb piece of orchestral execution; in accuracy, faithfulness, finish and beauty of tone it was irreproachable, something to wonder at. And yet it undeniably lacked something, the presence of which would have made it convincing, overwhelming. The first two movements sounded rather lifeless, with all their perfection; the blows were accurately aimed and delivered with infinite skill; but there was no "vice" in them, they did not hurt! The third movement went with far more vigor, one felt more of the real Tchaikovsky in it. The tragic finale was played, to our thinking, utterly superbly, with overwhelming emotional force.

What was the trouble in the first half of the symphony? We cannot help suspecting that the real, fundamental trouble was a lack of sympathy between composer and conductor; we doubt if Mr. Gericke really likes the work. We felt that his exceedingly careful performance of it was a severe effort of honest loyalty, but essentially an effort. Every now and then one felt it in his bones that Mr. Gericke could not bring himself to give Tchaikovsky's expression, his musical dialect, its full swing, but found himself inexorably forced by his own nature, his innate sense of musical decency, as it were, to tone down the savage violence of this expression and civilize it. Unfortunate, but apparently unavoidable! One can hardly find fault with Mr. Gericke for it, even while lamenting it; it was not that he did not understand the work; it was too plainly a case of sheer incompatibility of musical temper. A man, not naturally addicted to the use of bad language, can hardly be expected to attune his tongue to profane swearing with effect—his profanity will help no mule-team through a slough.

And we cannot think our simile ill-chosen. The extramusical exegesis of a composition is always hazardous; but, in the case of this "Pathétique" of Tchaikovsky's, the extramusical, psychical suggestion is so vivid and compelling that one can hardly avoid it. To our mind—now that we have heard the work repeatedly, and studied the score—this symphony threads all the foul ditches and sewers of human despair; it is profoundly and convincingly human, but as unclean as music well can be. One might call the first movement, Zola's "Confession de Claude" set to music! That unspeakable second theme may tell of what Heine called "Die verschwundene, süsse, blöde Jugendeselei," if you please; the impotent senile remembrance of calf love. But of what a calf love! that of Hogarth's lazy apprentice. Indisputably there is power in it; who but Tchaikovsky could have made the vulgar, obscene phrase powerful? The second movement, with its strabismal rhythm, is hardly less ignoble; the third, full of the vigor of the genius though it be, is, after all, sheer billingsgate. In the finale, blear-eyed paresis meets us face to face; and that solemn closing epitaph of the trombones might begin with "Here continues to rot—" In what foul straw has genius here made its bed! But it is unmistakably genius, for all that; the expression fits the feeling with Shakspearian nicety; "tout se tient," it all hangs together!

Liszt's third rhapsody, which had not been heard here before, begins more promisingly than many of its brethren: with true Magyar rhythmic lilt and dash; but it soon becomes commonplace and zestless. It was, however, superbly played.

Mme. Gadski was hardly at her best. She seemed to be not in her best voice, and to sing with something of effort. Her singing could not veil the beauty and dramatic brilliancy of Weber's great scena, but it added little to it. In the Wagner selection she was more herself; but, upon the whole she has done far finer work here before. Nevertheless, she was very warmly applauded and recalled.

The next programme is: Brahms, symphony No. 3, in F major, opus 90; Xaver Scharwenka, concerto for pianoforte; Richard Strauss, tone-poem, "Don Juan," opus 20; Wagner, prelude and "Isolde's Love-Death," from "Tristan und Isolde." Mr. Moritz Rosenthal will be the pianist.

PROVIDENCE JOURNAL.
PUBLISHED BY THE
PROVIDENCE JOURNAL COMPANY,
Nos. 209 and 213 Westminster St.
DAILY JOURNAL (Morning), $6.00 per annum, $1.50 for three months, 50 cents one month.
SUNDAY JOURNAL $2.00 per annum.
MANUFACTURERS AND FARMERS JOURNAL (Mondays and Thursdays), $1.00 per annum in advance.
THE EVENING BULLETIN, $6.00 per annum.
☞ Postage free to mail subscribers whose payment of subscription is made in advance.

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 3, 1898.

SYMPHONY CONCERT.

Conductor Wilhelm Gericke Returns After Long Absence.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra opened its 17th season in Providence at Infantry Hall last evening. While the first concert of the symphony series is an event that is looked forward to each year with pleasure and expectation, that of last night was made an occasion of especial interest by the reappearance of Mr. Wilhelm Gericke as conductor, after an absence of nine years.

Upon the organization of the orchestra in 1881, the baton was entrusted to Mr. Georg Henschel, well known as a most versatile and accomplished musician. But Mr. Henschel, though he was a great singer, a fine pianist, and to some extent a composer of repute, had little or no experience as a conductor, and, so to speak, learned his trade as an orchestral leader through his three years service with the symphony orchestra. He showed fine taste as a programme maker, and the new organization prospered under his direction. It became evident after a time, however, that in order to carry out to the full the intention of the orchestra's founder, a man was needed with larger experience in handling orchestral forces and more intimate knowledge of technical details.

So Mr. Gericke, at that time one of the conductors of the Imperial Opera in Vienna, was engaged, and for five years remained at the head of the orchestra. But for the failure of his health his term would doubtless have been longer. To him has been given, and justly, the credit of making the orchestra what it is, one without a superior in the world. He reorganized the personnel to some extent, introducing several new and younger members from Vienna, among them the now famous violinist and concert master, Franz Kneisel. He drilled the players in the most thorough manner, laying the foundation so vital to every enduring organization, and so essential to his successors in accomplishing results well-nigh impossible under other conditions. As a conductor, while with an undoubted personal leaning toward the classics, he proved himself an eclectic, selecting the best music wherever it could be found and giving a proper recognition of all worthy composers regardless of nationality. While comparisons are odious, it is yet safe to say that for steadfast loyalty to a high ideal, to reach which he spared neither the orchestra nor himself, Mr. Gericke has never been excelled by any of his fellow-conductors.

It is therefore not strange that his return to this responsible post should be welcomed. A great reception was accorded him on the occasion of the opening concert in Boston two weeks ago, in which the members of the orchestra, no less than the large audience, joined. Last night, as he advanced to the conductor's desk in Infantry Hall, there was a round of hearty, long continued and unmistakably genuine applause.

The programme offered, with Mme. Johanna Gadski, the German prima-donna, as the soloist, was as follows:

Overture to "Euryanthe"....................Karl Maria von Weber.
Elizabeth's aria, act 2, "Tannhauser"..........................Richard Wagner.
Variations on a theme by Haydn (Chorale Sancti Antoni)...........Johannes Brahms.
Aria, "Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster," from "Oberon"..........Karl Maria von Weber.
Symphony No. 5, in C minor..................................Ludwig van Beethoven.
I. Allegro con brio (C minor).
II. Andante con moto (A-flat major).
III. Allegro (C minor). Trio (C major).
IV. Allegro (C major).

A fine, well-balanced programme in the main, though presenting no novelties. And its performance was spirited and thoroughly pleasing. The influence of the new—or old—conductor is already to be seen. There was no flagging at any point. From the first note to the last there was unwonted precision, unanimity of attack and balance of tone. It is in no spirit of criticism of those eminent and justly celebrated conductors, Messrs. Nikisch and Paur, that attention is called to the fact that Mr. Gericke does not believe in "painting with a large brush." He proceeds rather upon the theory that a perfect ensemble must spring from perfection in details. Hence the always crisp attack; the relegating of each instrument to its proper place in the orchestral mass; the adequate blending of brass, wood and strings; fortissimos that mark a musical exclamation point rather than the explosion of a volcano. And, after all, is not this the best way? Climax does not demand that the drums and brass should assassinate their weaker brethren. Music has boundaries no less than heights and depths.

There are several new faces in the ranks of the orchestra this year. Some of the best players, it will be remembered, went down to their death in that horrible shipwreck, last summer, of the French liner La Bourgogne. But though individual players go and come, the orchestra retains its unequalled ensemble. The programme was splendidly played, an especially fine performance being given of the symphony, which Mr. Gericke read in the traditional spirit. There was frequent and well-deserved applause.

Mme. Gadski was in excellent voice and sang in a most satisfactory way. She is entirely at home in the music of Wagner, and her rendering of the "Tannhauser" aria was broad and authoritative. Her singing of the great air from Weber's "Oberon" was brilliant in the extreme, displaying the agility of her voice as well as its unusual range. Some of her low notes are remarkably fine for a soprano, and she produced them with telling effects. The prima-donna was recalled several times after each number.

There was a fine audience, though hardly as large as that at the first concert last season. The second concert by the orchestra will be given on Wednesday evening, Nov. 30.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1898.

The third concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, last evening, presented this program:

Overture, In the Spring	Goldmark
Aria, Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster	Weber
Symphony, Pathetique	Tschaikowsky
Aria, Dich Theure Halle	Wagner
Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 3	Liszt

The performance of the symphony was, on the whole, disappointing. The reading was painstaking; every detail as indicated by the composer's markings was scrupulously observed, and the rendering was remarkable for its extreme finish; but something was wanting to make the work take as firm a hold on the interest and attention as it has taken before. For the first time it seemed labored and heavy—even dull. The passion and the sincerity had disappeared to make way for an academic propriety in which there was a suppression of emotionality, and precision, whose unblemished respectability, however excellent it may have been in one direction, was depressing in another. One might have imagined that Mr. Gericke's sympathies did not go out toward the work; that its whirl of passionate expression made no irresistible appeal to him; that in his eyes the warm and glowing coloring appeared pallid and frigid. In a purely technical aspect the rendering of the work was unimpeachable, the splendid orchestra did its work faultlessly, the conductor acquitted himself in a spirit in which artistic conscience was always convincingly active; the soul of the composer's inspiration had flown. In brief, where there should have been fiery vigor there was perfunctory elegance; the points where a certain roughness was left, evidently for the purpose of providing effective contrasts, were carefully rubbed down until they were as smooth as glass. The polish of the interpretation was as remarkable as its general ineffectiveness was absolute. The moral of all which is that it is a mistake to attempt to make the lion bleat like the lamb.

The Liszt Rhapsody scarcely deserved a place on a Symphony program. It is pretty enough when well played on the instrument for which it was written; but its innate vulgarity, which is not aggressive on the piano, becomes glaringly so in the orchestra. However, the performance was dazzlingly brilliant, the virtuosity of the orchestra being displayed to its fullest.

Madame Gadski was the soloist.

The program books of the Symphony concerts always have something to edify readers before the performances begin, or to engage their attention and keep them awake when the music proves nap-stimulating. In the latest book the subject is score-reading. In it we are informed that of all kinds of music-reading reading a complex orchestral score is the most difficult, a truth which doubtless surprised even those who had tried it and failed. There could have been few who learned from this kindly paper that "to read a score written on sixteen or twenty-four staves certainly requires a wider and quicker sweep of the eye than to read ordinary piano music written on two," who did not add something new and valuable to their stock of useful knowledge. What gives to the whole article its principal charm is the clearness with which it infers that those who can read an orchestral score can, and that those who can't, can't. It is simplicity itself.

* * *

The Boston Home Journal says:

Mr. Gericke is being welcomed as an old friend in many places. He has been entertained nowhere more uniquely than at the Tavern Club, when he was the guest of honor at a dinner, and afterward allowed to lead the Tavern Club Orchestra in a manner as eccentric as any of the burlesque imitations of Sousa. His own march was prominently placed on the program, and showed that the Symphony leader might be something of a "march king" himself, if he choose to reach for that variety of laurels

---

NEW YORK HERALD.

SATURDAY. NOVEMBER 5, 1898.

AT THE PHILHARMONIC.

Under the conductorship of Mr. Emil Paur the Philharmonic Society began its fifty-seventh season at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon.

The programme consisted of compositions by Berlioz, Brahms and Beethoven, and Miss Adele Aus der Ohe was the soloist.

Even so accomplished and circumspect a conductor cannot be expected to make virtuosi of each and every one of the members of the Philharmonic. He cannot prevent the horn from breaking on the tone, as was the case in the opening bars of the Brahms concerto, neither can he invest the strings with a smoother and a more mellifluous tone quality.

In a word, then, Mr. Paur played on an instrument yesterday afternoon that was inferior to the one on which he had formerly been heard. His mastery of that instrument, however, was quite amazing, and argues splendidly for the future.

His readings of the "Benvenuto Cellini" overture and the eight symphony were altogether satisfying, and his accompaniment of the second Brahms concerto remarkably discreet and effective. The man should learn to desist from using his head as if it were a metronome. Those gyrations of the cranium do not add to the listener's enjoyment.

Miss Aus der Ohe is no longer addicted to that famous braid, but now affects a coiffure a la Defregger. Perhaps this was a concession to Brahms the Severe, whose second concerto she plays better than she does the Schumann, and not so well as she performs the first one by Liszt. It was a virile, sweeping performance, but one that was lacking in delicacy of coloring and in rhythmic precision.

BOSTON DAILY ADVERTISER.

Established 1813.

The Official Paper of the State.

The Official Paper of the City.

MONDAY MORNING, NOV. 7, 1898.

Rosenthal—Straus's "Don Juan" —Brahms's Third Symphony.

A Varied Programme at the Symphony Concert.

The Symphony came first in the programme of Saturday, for Brahms' third symphony (which was given) does not suit to the end of a concert because of its gentle ending.

It is probably the least played of Brahms' four symphonies, yet it is as characteristic as any of the set. Hans Richter once called it the "Heroic Symphony" and it presents enough of strife and conflict to justify the title, yet it stops short of tragedy; Beethoven in his "Eroica," Tschaikowsky in his "Pathetique," both land their hero in the tomb; Brahms' is more phlegmatic and ends with a few sighs that by no means suggest an undertaker.

Yet the work is beautified even in its combats, and its "alarums and excursions" never interfere with its shapeliness; Brahms is certainly the tonic for these unhealthy musical times.

In the second movement the dialogue between strings and wind instruments was admirably played. The "Poco Allegretto" was full of tenderness, the violoncellos doing especially fine work. The simplicity of scoring in this is remarkable, yet the movement contains more than Richard Strauss could say with a brass cyclone, fine harps and a regiment of piccolos.

It is very far removed from the style of a Scherzo, which movement it replaces, but Schumann and Brahms were ever serious in their scherzo movements, the latter wisely leaving the name and form altogether.

The finale was virile and combative and its earnest contents lost nothing in the performance. Altogether it was a performance of Brahms that was thoroughly satisfying, full of dignity, contrast and power. The audience applauded heartily and it is evident that the Boston Brahmins are Brahmsites as well.

But it was not Brahms that had caused the audience to overflow into every available inch of standing room; it was the return of a wonderful pianist, or rather, not a pianist but a fortissimist; Rosenthal entirely purged of typhoid germs, in most muscular health, was to play Xaver Scharwenka's B flat minor piano concerto.

In choosing this work for his rentree Mr. Rosenthal deliberately calls attention to his technique rather than to his poetic feeling; the concerto is "Clavier-maessig," well suited to display the piano, but that is about all; it tells its tale of passion about as ably as Christian recites his devotion to Roxane in "Cyrano de Bergerac;" but it is full of difficulties and has bravura enough to daunt any one but such a second Tausig.

Viewed then from the standpoint of virtuosity one must pay great tribute to the pianist; if he did not charm he certainly astonished and overwhelmed, and, after all, such fiery power is at times a great relief from the sickly sentimentalism which is inundating the modern concert room.

There are no difficulties remaining for such an Alexander to conquer, he possesses a technique that throws other pianists in the shade. Yet one may well decline to give a verdict upon the hearing of this one-sided work; after Rosenthal has given his recitals here we can form a fairer estimate.

The bravura and force of the last movement of the concerto was phenomenal; it was no longer a matter of fingers and ivory, it was Jupiter Tonans playing with thunderbolts. The public naturally became excited and the recalls showed that virtuosity also has its reward.

Brahms' symphony had shown the auditor how well-balanced a composer could remain even in the expression of stress and storm; now Richard Strauss showed him how distorted and hysterical it was possible to become and still call the result "Music." After the Brahms work one could only regard Strauss's "Don Juan" as a warning example. The pain one feels at such an exhibition is only intensified by the constant evidence that the composer is a genius, as absolute in his way as Berlioz himself, a genius wandering in the pseudo-Wagnerian labyrinth!

There are moments of great beauty in "Don Juan," passages where the horn woos the oboe with the utmost tenderness and expression, nor is the portrayal of the vehement nature of the hero without its charm, but the work, even at a second hearing, is but an affair of shreds and patches, nothing is carried to a conclusion and even the beautiful phrases seem like "Sweet bells jangled out of tune."

Trombones and tuba thundered out their threatening passages with resolute power, a dissonant crash and a mysterious roll of kettledrums seemed to indicate that Don Juan had got into trouble of some kind, the violins plunged boldly into high positions that once were deemed impossible in orchestral playing (they scolded Beethoven royally for using four-lined C in the "Egmont Overture") the harp gave its glissando and other effects with tinkling sweetness and the battle of orchestral virtuosity was brilliantly won by Gen. Gericke and his brave men, but, like young Peterkin, anent the Battle of Blenheim, we feel like asking—"Now tell us what [illegible]

After th[illegible] there followed a [illegible] in the concert arrang[illegible] "Tristan and Isolde." By stitching the beginning and the end of this great opera together one obtains a very effective work for orchestral performance, although the suggestions of the leit-motiven do not tell a very clear story in this abridged version, for Tristan and Isolde are no sooner indicated by their intertwined motive than they are slaughtered in the figure portraying the "Love death."

Spite of a few slight aberrations in attack the performance seemed to us one of the most glorious that we have heard; there was a breadth and nobility in Mr. Gericke's reading that held one mightily and the orchestra seemed to catch the fire which animated the conductor.

In this concert Mr. Gericke showed very distinctly that he has not been standing still since he left Boston; one may doubt whether he possessed such abandon in former years; he has gained in this and yet has not lost an iota of his finished style and elegance. The concert was a triumph for him and for his men.

The crescendo beginning with the introduction of the "Love-death" motif, pianissimo, and ending with the triumphant figure of ecstasy, was given in a thrilling manner and brought the widely contrasted programme to a worthy end.

This week there will be no concert as our orchestra will be plucking at the laurel-bushes of New York, Philadelphia and other of our musical suburbs.

Louis C. Elson.

BOSTON SATURDAY EVENING Gazette

Nov

ESTABLISHED 1813.

The Symphony Concert.—Rosenthal, Soloist.—He is Welcomed With Enthusiasm.—Cambridge Concert.—Notes, Etc.

Symphony Concert.

The fourth symphony concert was heard by a large and enthusiastic audience. The programme was:

Symphony No. 3, F major, op. 90	Brahms
Concerto for Pianforte No. 1, B flat minor	Scharwenka
Lone Poem, "Don Juan," op. 90	R. Strauss
Vorspiel and Isoldes "Love-Death"	Wagner

Soloist, Mr. Moritz Rosenthal.

The Brahms symphony was given with elaborate care and finish, with exactitude and with the most pronounced indications of careful study. It made but little impression on the audience, however, that was eagerly waiting for the soloist and greeted him in the heartiest manner. The concerto is not very exhilerating on the high art side, and easily shows that its composer was more intent on bringing the piano into prominence than in writing a connected and enduring work of art. It is a brilliant piece of manufactured work, that already shows the corroding marks of time, and stands in the shadow of antiquity itself.

It was brilliantly and wonderfully played and demonstrated on the side of technique, at least, Mr. Rosenthal is a marvel. He has fingers of iron and of silk as occasion requires, they fall as light as down on the keys, or with the weight of granite. His beautiful work in pianissimo passages is a thing to be remembered, and he is less inclned to the habit of "pounding" than when he was last bered, and he is less inclined to the habit his caressing touch, or vibrates to the last molecule of its structure when the full strength of his fingers is felt. It was exquisite and most beautifully finished work throughout, large in style, massive in finish, and in the way of finger agility unsurpassed. There is no doubt that in the matter of technique Mr. Rosenthal stands alone among living pianists; the cleanness, clearness and equality of tone in the rapid passages that he plays, the wonderful gradations of tone that he produces, the magic of his touch, his dazzling brilliancy are things to be remembered. The concerto did not give him the opportunity to show his talents on the interpretative side, but it thoroughly settled the fact that on the side of technique he is a phenomenon. He roused his audience into the wildest enthusiasm and was called out again and again to bow his acknowledgements. There will be no rehearsal or concert next week: for the evening of November 19 the programme will be: Barber of Bagdad, Peter Cornelius; concerto for violincello in A minor, op. 33, Saint sky; symphony in D minor, Volkmann. Saens; Mozartina, rst time Tscharkou-The solist will be, Mr. Almin Schrveder.

[illegible]

ROSENTHAL

The Roumanian Pianist Thunders and Lightens at the Fourth Symphony Concert—Xaver Scharwenka's First Concerto the Stalking-Horse for His Technic.

The program of the fourth Symphony concert in Music Hall, last evening, Mr. Gericke conductor, was as follows:

Symphony No. 3, in F major	Brahms
Concerto for Pianoforte, No. 1, in B-flat minor	Scharwenka
Mr. Rosenthal.
Tone-Poem, "Don Juan"	Richard Strauss
Prelude and "Isolde's Love-Death," from "Tristan and Isolde"	Wagner

Scharwenka's concerto is not much over 20 years of age, and yet it has gray hair and the tiresome elegance of an old beau. When it was first played throughout Germany and in London, it made a sensation, and Von Bülow did not hesitate to say that it was equal to either of the concertos by Chopin in musical thought, and superior to either in orchestration; but Von Bülow was a mad wag, never to be taken seriously, not even in his commentaries on Beethoven, Mendelssohn and others.

The first movement suggests too plainly the E flat concerto of Liszt, which is, by the way, as fresh as though it had been written last spring; in the second movement, which is by far the best, we hear Liszt improvising on a Viennese waltz; and the last movement is a mixture of Chopin, Rubinstein and again Liszt. The elegance, the salon-elegance of this concerto is the only feature of the work that is tolerable and to be endured. Scharwenka's passion is swollen, turgid, unreal; and the pathos is like unto a conversation in which the lover, desiring to wring the heart of the adored one, says the wrong thing, steps on the pet dog and knocks over a vase of flowers.

I regret, therefore, that Mr. Rosenthal chose this concerto for his first appearance at a Symphony concert. In it he appeared frankly as a bravura-player, and while his bravura is wonderful, we have now all reached the age when we are no longer stunned by the athletic exhibition of a formidable pianist or dazzled to blindness by incredible and at the same time elegant velocity.

When you say that Mr. Rosenthal last night gave a remarkable exhibition of technical proficiency; when you add that in fortissimo he pounded—yes, pounded is the word, you have then said all that can be truly said, and thereby you do injustice to a pianist who is something more than a mere virtuoso. For outside of the opportunity for the display of strength, brilliance and velocity there is nothing in the concerto that appeals to either pianist or hearer; there is nothing that tests the mind or the soul of an interpreter. Mr. Rosenthal will give two recitals here this month. His performance then will show the true stuff of which he is made. It is enough now to add that his playing of the scherzo was marvelous for its ease and elegance, and that he was heartily applauded.

⁂

Nor is there much to be said about the orchestral numbers of the program. The third movement of the symphony was played delightfully, and the finale was unusually effective. It seemed to me that in the first movement continuity of thought was sometimes weakened by over-attention to detail. There was a brilliant performance of the Wagnerian excerpts, and Mr. Gericke prepared and gained his climaxes in masterly fashion.

And what will the future generations say concerning Richard Strauss's "Don Juan?" Is it the barren result of one-sided study of orchestration? Is it an attempt of a man with a fine ear for orchestral color to go beyond his masters, Berlioz, Liszt, Wagner? Is he a composer who thinks orchestrally rather than musically? A composer who prefers to put anything or everything into a musical frame except music itself? Or is he the inventor of a new art, the originator of a new scheme, in which literature and instruments are to be combined to move the hearer by other means than by music as it is now understood?

It is easy to ask these questions; it is not easy to answer them, when you remember how that which once was regarded as madness and ugliness in music is now accepted generally. Wagner's music last night had the simplicity of an old and respected composer with worked slippers and long pipe, after the "Don Juan" of the adventurous and neurotic Strauss.

⁂

The performance of the orchestra throughout the concert was often extremely impressive, both in brilliance, beauty in phrasing, strength in contrasts, tonal color, and individual display. On the other hand, there were one or two disturbing slips, and the attack of the wood-wind and brass was not always as precise as we expect under the stick held by Mr. Gericke.

⁂

There will be no concert Friday or Saturday. The program for Nov. 18-19 will be as follows:

Overture, "Barber of Bagdad"	Cornelius
Concerto for 'Cello in A minor	Saint-Saëns
Mr. Schroeder.
Mozartiana (First time.)	Tschaikowsky
Symphony in D minor	Volkmann

Philip Hale.

THE MUSICAL COURIER.

NEW YORK, WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1898.

The third concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, last evening, presented this program:

Overture, In the Spring	Goldmark
Aria, Ocean, Thou Mighty Monster	Weber
Symphony, Pathetique	Tschaikowsky
Aria, Dich Theure Halle	Wagner
Hungarian Rhapsody, No. 3	Liszt

The performance of the symphony was, on the whole, disappointing. The reading was painstaking; every detail as indicated by the composer's markings was scrupulously observed, and the rendering was remarkable for its extreme finish; but something was wanting to make the work take as firm a hold on the interest and attention as it has taken before. For the first time it seemed labored and heavy—even dull. The passion and the sincerity had disappeared to make way for an academic propriety in which there was a suppression of emotionality, and precision, whose unblemished respectability, however excellent it may have been in one direction, was depressing in another. One might have imagined that Mr. Gericke's sympathies did not go out toward the work; that its whirl of passionate expression made no irresistible appeal to him; that in his eyes the warm and glowing coloring appeared pallid and frigid. In a purely technical aspect the rendering of the work was unimpeachable, the splendid orchestra did its work faultlessly, the conductor acquitted himself in a spirit in which artistic conscience was always convincingly active; the soul of the composer's inspiration had flown. In brief, where there should have been fiery vigor there was perfunctory elegance; the points where a certain roughness was left, evidently for the purpose of providing effective contrasts, were carefully rubbed down until they were as smooth as glass. The polish of the interpretation was as remarkable as its general ineffectiveness was absolute. The moral of all which is that it is a mistake to attempt to make the lion bleat like the lamb.

The Liszt Rhapsody scarcely deserved a place on a Symphony program. It is pretty enough when well played on the instrument for which it was written; but its innate vulgarity, which is not aggressive on the piano, becomes glaringly so in the orchestra. However, the performance was dazzlingly brilliant, the virtuosity of the orchestra being displayed to its fullest.

Madame Gadski was the soloist.

The program books of the Symphony concerts always have something to edify readers before the performances begin, or to engage their attention and keep them awake when the music proves nap-stimulating. In the latest book the subject is score-reading. In it we are informed that of all kinds of music-reading reading a complex orchestral score is the most difficult, a truth which doubtless surprised even those who had tried it and failed. There could have been few who learned from this kindly paper that "to read a score written on sixteen or twenty-four staves certainly requires a wider and quicker sweep of the eye than to read ordinary piano music written on two," who did not add something new and valuable to their stock of useful knowledge. What gives to the whole article its principal charm is the clearness with which it infers that those who can read an orchestral score can, and that those who can't, can't. It is simplicity itself.

* * *

The Boston Home Journal says:

Mr. Gericke is being welcomed as an old friend in many places. He has been entertained nowhere more uniquely than at the Tavern Club, when he was the guest of honor at a dinner, and afterward allowed to lead the Tavern Club Orchestra in a manner as eccentric as any of the burlesque imitations of Sousa. His own march was prominently placed on the program, and showed that the Symphony leader might be something of a "march king" himself, if he choose to reach for that variety of laurels

---

NEW YORK HERALD.

SATURDAY, NOVEMBER 5, 1898.

AT THE PHILHARMONIC.

Under the conductorship of Mr. Emil Paur the Philharmonic Society began its fifty-seventh season at Carnegie Hall yesterday afternoon.

The programme consisted of compositions by Berlioz, Brahms and Beethoven, and Miss Adele Aus der Ohe was the soloist.

Even so accomplished and circumspect a conductor cannot be expected to make virtuosi of each and every one of the members of the Philharmonic. He cannot prevent the horn from breaking on the tone, as was the case in the opening bars of the Brahms concerto, neither can he invest the strings with a smoother and a more mellifluous tone quality.

